NAPERVILLE, a city of Du Page County, on the west branch of the Du Page River and on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 30 miles west-southwest of Chicago, and 9 miles east of Aurora. It has three banks, a weekly newspaper, stone quarries, couch factory, and nine churches; is also the seat of the Northwestern College, an institution founded in 1861 by the Evangelical Association; the college now has a normal school department. Population (1890), 2,216; (1900), 2,629

NAPLES, a town of Scott County, on the Illinois River and the Hannibal and Naples branch of the Wabash Railway, 21 miles west of Jacksonville. Population (1890), 452; (1900), 398.

NASHVILLE, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Washington County, on the Centralia & Chester and the Louisville & Nashville Railways; is 120 miles south of Springfield and 50 miles east by south from St. Louis. It stands in a coal-producing and rich agricultural region. There are two coal mines within the corporate limits, and two large flouring mills do a considerable business. There are numerous churches, public schools, including a high school, a State bank, and four weekly papers. Population (1880), 2,222; (1890), 2,084; (1900), 2,184.

NAUVOO, a city in Hancock County, at the head of the Lower Rapids on the Mississippi, between Fort Madison and Keokuk, Iowa. It was founded by the Mormons in 1840, and its early growth was rapid. After the expulsion of the "Saints" in 1846, it was settled by a colony of French Icarians, who introduced the culture of grapes on a large scale. They were a sort of communistic order, but their experiment did not prove a success, and in a few years they gave place to another class, the majority of the population now being of German extraction. The chief industries are agriculture and horticulture. Large quantities of grapes and strawberries are raised and shipped, and considerable native wine is produced. Population (1880), 1,402; (1890), 1,208; (per census 1900), 1,321. (See also Mormons.)

NAVIGABLE STREAMS (by Statute). Following the example of the French explorers, who chiefly followed the water-ways in their early explorations, the early permanent settlers of Illinois, not only settled, to a great extent, on the principal streams, but later took especial pains to maintain their navigable character by statute. This was, of course, partly due to the absence of improved highways, but also to the belief that, as the country developed, the streams would become extremely valuable, if not indispensable, especially in the transportation of heavy commodities. Accordingly, for the first quarter century after the organization of the State Government, one of the questions receiving the attention of the Legislature, at almost every session, was the enactment of laws affirming the navigability of certain streams now regarded as of little importance, or utterly insignificant, as channels of transportation. Legislation of this character began with the first General Assembly (1819), and continued, at intervals, with reference to one or two of the more important interior rivers of the State, as late as 1867. Besides the Illinois and Wabash, still recognized as navigable streams, the following were made the subject of legislation of this character: Beaucoup Creek, a branch of the Big Muddy, in Perry and Jackson Counties (law of 1819); Big Bay, a tributary of the Ohio in Pope County (Acts of 1833); Big Muddy, to the junction of the East and West Forks in Jefferson County (1835), with various subsequent amendments; Big Vermilion, declared navigable (1831); Bon Pas, a branch of the Wabash, between Wabash and Edwards Counties (1831); Cache River, to main fork in Johnson County (1819); Des Plaines, declared navigable (1839); Embarras (1831), with various subsequent acts in reference to improvement; Fox River, declared navigable to the Wisconsin line (1840), and Fox River Navigation Company, incorporated (1855); Kankakee and Iroquois Navigation & Manufacturing Company, incorporated (1847), with various changes and amendments (1851-65); Kaskaskia (or Okaw), declared navigable to a point in Fayette County north of Vandalia (1819), with various modifying acts (1823-67); Macoupin Creek, to Carrollton and Alton road (1837); Piasa, declared navigable in Jersey and Madison Counties (1861); Rock River Navigation Company, incorporated (1841), with subsequent acts (1845-67); Sangamon River, declared navigable to Third Principal Meridian—east line of Sangamon County—(1822), and the North Fork of same to Champaign County (1845); Sny-Carty (a bayou of the Mississippi), declared navigable in Pike and Adams Counties (1859); Spoon River, navigable to Cameron's mill in Fulton County (1835), with various modifying acts (1845-53); Little Wabash Navigation Company, incorporated and river declared navigable to McCawley's bridge—probably in Clay County—(1826), with various subsequent acts making appropriations for its improvement; Skillet Fork (a branch of the Little Wabash), declared navigable to Slocum's Mill in Marion County (1837), and to Ridgway Mills (1846). Other acts passed at various times declared a number of unimportant streams navigable, including Big Creek in Fulton County, Crooked Creek in Schuyler County, Lusk's Creek in Pope County, McKee's Creek in Pike County, Seven Mile Creek in Ogle County, besides a number of others of similar character.

NEALE, THOMAS M., pioneer lawyer, was born in Fauquier County, Va., 1796; while yet a child removed with his parents to Bowling Green, Ky., and became a common soldier in the War of 1812; came to Springfield, Ill., in 1824, and began the practice of law; served as Colonel of a regiment raised in Sangamon and Morgan Counties for the Winnebago War (1827), and afterwards as Surveyor of Sangamon County, appointing Abraham Lincoln as his deputy. He also served as a Justice of the Peace, for a number of years, at Springfield. Died, August 7, 1840.

NEECE, William H., ex-Congressman, was born, Feb. 26, 1831, in what is now a part of Logan County, Ill., but which was then within the limits of Sangamon; was reared on a farm and attended the public schools in McDonough County; studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1858, and has been ever since engaged in practice. His political career began in 1861, when he was chosen a member of the City Council of Macomb. In 1864 he was elected to the Legislature, and, in 1869, a member of the Constitutional Convention. In 1871 he was again elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1878, to the State Senate. From 1883 to 1887 he represented the Eleventh Illinois District in Congress, as a Democrat, but was defeated for re-election in 1890 by William H. Gest, Republican.

NEGROES. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

NEOGA, a village of Cumberland County, at the intersection of the Illinois Central and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railways, 20 miles southwest of Charleston; has a bank, two newspapers, some manufactories, and ships grain, hay, fruit and live-stock. Pop. (1890), 829; (1900), 1,126

NEPONSET, a village and station on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, in Bureau County, 4 miles southwest of Mendota. Population (1880), 652; (1890), 542; (1900), 516.

NEW ALBANY & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY. (See Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis (Consolidated) Railroad.)

NEW ATHENS, a village of St. Clair County, on the St. Louis & Cairo "Short Line" (now Illinois Central) Railroad, at the crossing of the Kaskaskia River, 31 miles southeast of St. Louis; has one newspaper and considerable grain trade. Population (1880), 603; (1890), 624; (1900), 856.

NEW BERLIN, a village of Sangamon County, on the Wabash Railway, 17 miles west of Springfield. Population (1880), 403; (1900), 533.

NEWBERRY LIBRARY, a large reference library, located in Chicago, endowed by Walter L.

The Newberry Library.

Chicago Academy of Sciences.

Chicago Historical Society.

Art Institute. Public Library. Court House.
Armour Institute.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Newberry, an early business man of Chicago, who left half of his estate (aggregating over $2,000,000) for the purpose. The property bequeathed was largely in real estate, which has since greatly increased in value. The library was established in temporary quarters in 1887, and the first section of a permanent building was opened in the autumn of 1893. By that time there had been accumulated about 160,000 books and pamphlets. A collection of nearly fifty portraits—chiefly of eminent Americans, including many citizens of Chicago—was presented to the library by G. P. A. Healy, a distinguished artist, since deceased. The site of the building occupies an entire block, and the original design contemplates a handsome front on each of the four streets, with a large rectangular court in the center. The section already completed is massive and imposing, and its interior is admirably adapted to the purposes of a library, and at the same time rich and beautiful. When completed, the building will have a capacity for four to six million volumes.

NEWBERRY, Walter C., ex-Congressman, was born at Sangerfield, Oneida County, N. Y., Dec. 23, 1835. Early in the Civil War he enlisted as a private, and rose, step by step, to a colonelcy, and was mustered out as Brevet Brigadier-General. In 1890 he was elected, as a Democrat, to represent the Fourth Illinois District in the Fifty-second Congress (1891-93). His home is in Chicago.

NEWBERRY, Walter L., merchant, banker and philanthropist, was born at East Windsor, Conn., Sept. 18, 1804, descended from English ancestry. He was President Jackson's personal appointee to the United States Military Academy at West Point, but was prevented from taking the examination by sickness. Subsequently he embarked in business at Buffalo, N. Y., going to Detroit in 1828, and settling at Chicago in 1833. After engaging in general merchandising for several years, he turned his attention to banking, in which he accumulated a large fortune. He was a prominent and influential citizen, serving several terms as President of the Board of Education, and being, for six years, the President of the Chicago Historical Society. He died at sea, Nov. 6, 1868, leaving a large estate, one-half of which he devoted, by will, to the founding of a free reference library in Chicago. (See Newberry Library.)

NEW BOSTON, a city of Mercer County, on the Mississippi River, at the western terminus of the Galva and New Boston Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway. Population (1890), 445; (1900), 703.

NEW BRIGHTON, a village of St. Clair County and suburb of East St. Louis. Population (1890), 868.

NEW BURNSIDE, a village of Johnson County, on the Cairo Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 53 miles northeast of Cairo. Population (1880), 650; (1890), 596; (1900), 468.

NEW DOUGLAS, a village in Madison County, on the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad; in farming and fruit-growing region; has coal mine, flour mill and newspaper. Population (1900), 469.

NEWELL, John, Railway President, was born at West Newbury, Mass., March 31, 1830, being directly descended from "Pilgrim" stock. At the age of 16 he entered the employment of the Cheshire Railroad in New Hampshire. Eighteen months later he was appointed an assistant engineer on the Vermont Central Railroad, and placed in charge of the construction of a 10-mile section of the line. His promotion was rapid, and, in 1850, he accepted a responsible position on the Champlain & St. Lawrence Railroad. From 1850 to 1856 he was engaged in making surveys for roads in Kentucky and New York, and, during the latter year, held the position of engineer of the Cairo City Company, of Cairo, Ill. In 1857 he entered the service of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, as Division Engineer, where his remarkable success attracted the attention of the owners of the old Winona & St. Peter Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern system), who tendered him the presidency. This he accepted, but, in 1864, was made President of the Cleveland & Toledo Railroad. Four years later, he accepted the position of General Superintendent and Chief Engineer of the New York Central Railroad, but resigned, in 1869, to become Vice-President of the Illinois Central Railroad. In 1871 he was elevated to the presidency, but retired in September, 1874, to accept the position of General Manager of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad, of which he was elected President, in May, 1883, and continued in office until the time of his death, which occurred at Youngstown, Ohio, August 25, 1894.

NEWHALL, (Dr.) Horatio, early physician and newspaper publisher, came from St. Louis, Mo., to Galena, Ill., in 1827, and engaged in mining and smelting, but abandoned this business, the following year, for the practice of his profession; soon afterward became interested in the publication of "The Miners' Journal," and still later in "The Galena Advertiser," with which Hooper Warren and Dr. Philleo were associated.

In 1830 he became a Surgeon in the United States Army, and was stationed at Fort Winnebago, but retired from the service, in 1832, and returned to Galena. When the Black Hawk War broke out he volunteered his services, and, by order of General Scott, was placed in charge of a military hospital at Galena, of which he had control until the close of the war. The difficulties of the position were increased by the appearance of the Asiatic cholera among the troops, but he seems to have discharged his duties with satisfaction to the military authorities. He enjoyed a wide reputation for professional ability, and had an extensive practice. Died, Sept. 19, 1870.

NEWMAN, a village of Douglas County, on the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railway, 52 miles east of Decatur; has a bank, a newspaper, canning factory, broom factory, electric lights, and large trade in agricultural products and livestock. Population (1890), 990; (1900), 1,166.

NEWSPAPERS, EARLY. The first newspaper published in the Northwest Territory, of which the present State of Illinois, at the time, composed a part, was "The Centinel of the Northwest Territory," established at Cincinnati by William Maxwell, the first issue appearing in November, 1793. This was also the first newspaper published west of the Allegheny Mountains. In 1796 it was sold to Edmund Freeman and assumed the name of "Freeman's Journal." Nathaniel Willis (grandfather of N. P. Willis, the poet) established "The Scioto Gazette," at Chillicothe, in 1796. "The Western Spy and Hamilton Gazette" was the third paper in Northwest Territory (also within the limits of Ohio), founded in 1799. Willis's paper became the organ of the Territorial Government on the removal of the capital to Chillicothe, in 1800.

The first newspaper in Indiana Territory (then including Illinois) was established by Elihu Stout at Vincennes, beginning publication, July 4, 1804. It took the name of "The Western Sun and General Advertiser," but is now known as "The Western Sun," having had a continuous existence for ninety-five years.

The first newspaper published in Illinois Territory was "The Illinois Herald," but, owing to the absence of early files and other specific records, the date of its establishment has been involved in some doubt. Its founder was Matthew Duncan (a brother of Joseph Duncan, who was afterwards a member of Congress and Governor of the State from 1834 to 1838), and its place of publication Kaskaskia, at that time the Territorial capital. Duncan, who was a native of Kentucky, brought a press and a primitive printer's outfit with him from that State. Gov. John Reynolds, who came as a boy to the "Illinois Country" in 1800, while it was still a part of the "Northwest Territory," in his "Pioneer History of Illinois," has fixed the date of the first issue of this paper in 1809, the same year in which Illinois was severed from Indiana Territory and placed under a separate Territorial Government. There is good reason, however, for believing that the Governor was mistaken in this statement. If Duncan brought his press to Illinois in 1809—which is probable—it does not seem to have been employed at once in the publication of a newspaper, as Hooper Warren (the founder of the third paper established in Illinois) says it "was for years only used for the public printing." The earliest issue of "The Illinois Herald" known to be in existence, is No. 32 of Vol. II, and bears date, April 18, 1816. Calculating from these data, if the paper was issued continuously from its establishment, the date of the first issue would have been Sept. 6, 1814. Corroborative evidence of this is found in the fact that "The Missouri Gazette," the original of the old "Missouri Republican" (now "The St. Louis Republic"), which was established in 1808, makes no mention of the Kaskaskia paper before 1814, although communication between Kaskaskia and St. Louis was most intimate, and these two were, for several years, the only papers published west of Vincennes, Ind.

In August, 1817, "The Herald" was sold to Daniel P. Cook and Robert Blackwell, and the name of the paper was changed to "The Illinois Intelligencer." Cook—who had previously been Auditor of Public Accounts for the Territory, and afterwards became a Territorial Circuit Judge, the first Attorney-General under the new State Government, and, for eight years, served as the only Representative in Congress from Illinois—for a time officiated as editor of "The Intelligencer," while Blackwell (who had succeeded to the Auditorship) had charge of the publication. The size of the paper, which had been four pages of three wide columns to the page, was increased, by the new publishers, to four columns to the page. On the removal of the State capital to Vandalia, in 1820, "The Intelligencer" was removed thither also, and continued under its later name, afterwards becoming, after a change of management, an opponent of the scheme for the calling of a State Convention to revise the State Constitution with a view to making Illinois a slave State. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

The second paper established on Illinois soil was "The Shawnee Chief," which began publication at Shawneetown, Sept. 5, 1818, with Henry Eddy—who afterwards became a prominent lawyer of Southern Illinois—as its editor. The name of "The Chief" was soon afterwards changed to "The Illinois Emigrant," and some years later, became "The Shawneetown Gazette." Among others who were associated with the Shawneetown paper, in early days, was James Hall, afterwards a Circuit Judge and State Treasurer, and, without doubt, the most prolific and popular writer of his day in Illinois. Later, he established "The Illinois Magazine" at Vandalia, subsequently removed to Cincinnati, and issued under the name of "The Western Monthly Magazine." He was also a frequent contributor to other magazines of that period, and author of several volumes, including "Legends of the West" and "Border Tales." During the contest over the slavery question, in 1823-24, "The Gazette" rendered valuable service to the anti-slavery party by the publication of articles in opposition to the Convention scheme, from the pen of Morris Birkbeck and others.

The third Illinois paper—and, in 1823-24, the strongest and most influential opponent of the scheme for establishing slavery in Illinois—was "The Edwardsville Spectator," which began publication at Edwardsville, Madison County, May 23, 1819. Hooper Warren was the publisher and responsible editor, though he received valuable aid from the pens of Governor Coles, George Churchill, Rev. Thomas Lippincott, Judge Samuel D. Lockwood, Morris Birkbeck and others. (See Warren, Hooper.) Warren sold "The Spectator" to Rev. Thomas Lippincott in 1825, and was afterwards associated with papers at Springfield, Galena, Chicago and elsewhere.

The agitation of the slavery question (in part, at least) led to the establishment of two new papers in 1822. The first of these was "The Republican Advocate," which began publication at Kaskaskia, in April of that year, under the management of Elias Kent Kane, then an aspirant to the United States Senatorship. After his election to that office in 1824, "The Advocate" passed into the hands of Robert K. Fleming, who, after a period of suspension, established "The Kaskaskia Recorder," but, a year or two later, removed to Vandalia. "The Star of the West" was established at Edwardsville, as an opponent of Warren's "Spectator," the first issue making its appearance, Sept. 14, 1822, with Theophilus W. Smith, afterwards a Justice of the Supreme Court, as its reputed editor. A few months later it passed into new hands, and, in August, 1823, assumed the name of "The Illinois Republican." Both "The Republican Advocate" and "The Illinois Republican" were zealous organs of the pro-slavery party.

With the settlement of the slavery question in Illinois, by the election of 1824, Illinois journalism may be said to have entered upon a new era. At the close of this first period there were only five papers published in the State—all established within a period of ten years; and one of these ("The Illinois Republican," at Edwardsville) promptly ceased publication on the settlement of the slavery question in opposition to the views which it had advocated. The next period of fifteen years (1825-40) was prolific in the establishment of new newspaper ventures, as might be expected from the rapid increase of the State in population, and the development in the art of printing during the same period. "The Western Sun," established at Belleville (according to one report, in December, 1825, and according to another, in the winter of 1827-28) by Dr. Joseph Green, appears to have been the first paper published in St. Clair County. This was followed by "The Pioneer," begun, April 25, 1829, at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, with the indomitable Dr. John M. Peck, author of "Peck's Gazetteer," as its editor. It was removed in 1836 to Upper Alton, when it took the name of "The Western Pioneer and Baptist Banner." Previous to this, however, Hooper Warren, having come into possession of the material upon which he had printed "The Edwardsville Spectator," removed it to Springfield, and, in the winter of 1826-27, began the publication of the first paper at the present State capital, which he named "The Sangamo Gazette." It had but a brief existence. During 1830, George Forquer, then Attorney-General of the State, in conjunction with his half-brother, Thomas Ford (afterwards Governor), was engaged in the publication of a paper called "The Courier," at Springfield, which was continued only a short time. The earliest paper north of Springfield appears to have been "The Hennepin Journal," which began publication, Sept. 15, 1827. "The Sangamo Journal"—now "The Illinois State Journal," and the oldest paper of continuous existence in the State—was established at Springfield by Simeon and Josiah Francis (cousins from Connecticut), the first issue bearing date, Nov. 10, 1831. Before the close of the same year James G. Edwards, afterwards the founder of "The Burlington (Iowa) Hawkeye," began the publication of "The Illinois Patriot" at Jacksonville. Another paper, established the same year, was "The Gazette" at Vandalia, then the State capital. (See Forquer, George; Ford, Thomas; Francis, Simeon.)

At this early date the development of the lead mines about Galena had made that place a center of great business activity. On July 8, 1828, James Jones commenced the issue of "The Miners' Journal," the first paper at Galena. Jones died of cholera in 1833, and his paper passed into other hands. July 20, 1829, "The Galena Advertiser and Upper Mississippi Herald" began publication, with Drs. Horatio Newhall and Addison Philleo as editors, and Hooper Warren as publisher, but appears to have been discontinued before the expiration of its first year. "The Galenian" was established as a Democratic paper by Philleo, in May, 1832, but ceased publication in September, 1836. "The Northwestern Gazette and Galena Advertiser," founded in November, 1834, by Loring and Bartlett (the last named afterwards one of the founders of "The Quincy Whig"), has had a continuous existence, being now known as "The Galena Advertiser." Benjamin Mills, one of the most brilliant lawyers of his time, was editor of this paper during a part of the first year of its publication.

Robert K. Fleming, who has already been mentioned as the successor of Elias Kent Kane in the publication of "The Republican Advocate," at Kaskaskia, later published a paper for a short time at Vandalia, but, in 1827, removed his establishment to Edwardsville, where he began the publication of "The Corrector." The latter was continued a little over a year, when it was suspended. He then resumed the publication of "The Recorder" at Kaskaskia. In December, 1833, he removed to Belleville and began the publication of "The St. Clair Gazette," which afterwards passed, through various changes of owners, under the names of "The St. Clair Mercury" and "Representative and Gazette." This was succeeded, in 1839, by "The Belleville Advocate," which has been published continuously to the present time.

Samuel S. Brooks (the father of Austin Brooks, afterwards of "The Quincy Herald") at different times published papers at various points in the State. His first enterprise was "The Crisis" at Edwardsville, which he changed to "The Illinois Advocate," and, at the close of his first year, sold out to Judge John York Sawyer, who united it with "The Western Plowboy," which he had established a few months previous. "The Advocate" was removed to Vandalia, and, on the death of the owner (who had been appointed State Printer), was consolidated with "The Illinois Register," which had been established in 1836. The new paper took the name of "The Illinois Register and People's Advocate," in 1839 was removed to Springfield, and is now known as "The Illinois State Register."

Other papers established between 1830 and 1840 include: "The Vandalia Whig" (1831); "The Alton Spectator," the first paper published in Alton (January, 1834); "The Chicago Democrat," by John Calhoun (Nov. 26, 1833); "The Beardstown Chronicle and Illinois Bounty Land Advertiser," by Francis A. Arenz (July 29, 1833); "The Alton American" (1833); "The White County News," at Carmi (1833); "The Danville Enquirer" (1833); "The Illinois Champion," at Peoria (1834); "The Mount Carmel Sentinel and Wabash Advocate" (1834); "The Illinois State Gazette and Jacksonville News," at Jacksonville (1835); "The Illinois Argus and Bounty Land Register," at Quincy (1835); "The Rushville Journal and Military Tract Advertiser" (1835); "The Alton Telegraph" (1836); "The Alton Observer" (1836); "The Carthaginian," at Carthage (1836); "The Bloomington Observer" (1837); "The Backwoodsman," founded by Prof. John Russell, at Grafton, and the first paper published in Greene County (1837); "The Quincy Whig" (1838); "The Illinois Statesman," at Paris, Edgar County (1838); "The Peoria Register" (1838). The second paper to be established in Chicago was "The Chicago American," whose initial number was issued, June 8, 1835, with Thomas O. Davis as proprietor and editor. In July, 1837, it passed into the hands of William Stuart & Co., and, on April 9, 1839, its publishers began the issue of the first daily ever published in Chicago. "The Chicago Express" succeeded "The American" in 1842, and, in 1844, became the forerunner of "The Chicago Journal." The third Chicago paper was "The Commercial Advertiser," founded by Hooper Warren, in 1836. It lived only about a year. Zebina Eastman, who was afterwards associated with Warren, and became one of the most influential journalistic opponents of slavery, arrived in the State in 1839, and, in the latter part of that year, was associated with the celebrated Abolitionist, Benjamin Lundy, in the preliminary steps for the issue of "The Genius of Universal Emancipation," projected by Lundy at Lowell, in La Salle County. Lundy's untimely death, in August, 1839, however, prevented him from seeing the consummation of his plan, although Eastman lived to carry it out in part. A paper whose career, although extending only a little over one year, marked an era in Illinois journalism, was "The Alton Observer," its history closing with the assassination of its editor, Rev. Elijah P. Lovejoy, on the night of Nov. 8, 1837, while unsuccessfully attempting to protect his press from destruction, for the fourth time, by a pro-slavery mob. Humiliating as was this crime to every law-abiding Illinoisan, it undoubtedly strengthened the cause of free speech and assisted in hastening the downfall of the institution in whose behalf it was committed.

That the development in the field of journalism, within the past sixty years, has more than kept pace with the growth in population, is shown by the fact that there is not a county in the State without its newspaper, while every town of a few hundred population has either one or more. According to statistics for 1898, there were 605 cities and towns in the State having periodical publications of some sort, making a total of 1,709, of which 174 were issued daily, 34 semi-weekly, 1,205 weekly, 28 semi-monthly, 238 monthly, and the remainder at various periods ranging from tri-weekly to eight times a year.

NEWTON, the county-seat of Jasper County, situated on the Embarras River, at the intersection of subsidiary lines of the Illinois Central Railroad from Peoria and Effingham; is an incorporated city, was settled in 1828, and made the county-seat in 1836. Agriculture, coal-mining and dairy farming are the principal pursuits in the surrounding region. The city has water-power, which is utilized to some extent in manufacturing, but most of its factories are operated by steam. Among these establishments are flour and saw mills, and grain elevators. There are a half-dozen churches, a good public school system, including parochial school and high school, besides two banks and three weekly papers. Population (1890), 1,428; (1900), 1,630.

NEW YORK, CHICAGO & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY (Nickel Plate), a line 522.47 miles in length, of which (1898) only 9.96 miles are operated in Illinois. It owns no track in Illinois, but uses the track of the Chicago & State Line Railroad (9.96 miles in length), of which it has financial control, to enter the city of Chicago. The total capitalization of the New York, Chicago & St. Louis, in 1898, is $50,222,568, of which $19,425,000 is in bonds.—(HISTORY.) The New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad was incorporated under the laws of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois in 1881, construction begun immediately, and the road put in operation in 1882. In 1885 it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1887, and reorganized by the consolidation of various eastern lines with the Fort Wayne & Illinois Railroad, forming the line under its present name. The road between Buffalo, N. Y., and the west line of Indiana is owned by the Company, but, for its line in Illinois, it uses the track of the Chicago & State Line Railroad, of which it is the lessee, as well as the owner of its capital stock. The main line of the "Nickel Plate" is controlled by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway, which owns more than half of both the preferred and common stock.

NIANTIC, a town in Macon County, on the Wabash Railway, 27 miles east of Springfield. Agriculture is the leading industry. The town has three elevators, three churches, school, coal mine, a newspaper and a bank. Pop. (1900), 654.

NICOLAY, John George, author, was born in Essingen, Bavaria, Feb. 26, 1832; at 6 years of age was brought to the United States, lived for a time in Cincinnati, attending the public schools there, and then came to Illinois; at 16 entered the office of "The Pike County Free Press" at Pittsfield, and, while still in his minority, became editor and proprietor of the paper. In 1857 he became Assistant Secretary of State under O. M. Hatch, the first Republican Secretary, but during Mr. Lincoln's candidacy for President, in 1860, aided him as private secretary, also acting as a correspondent of "The St. Louis Democrat." After the election he was formally selected by Mr. Lincoln as his private secretary, accompanying him to Washington and remaining until Mr. Lincoln's assassination. In 1865 he was appointed United States Consul at Paris, remaining until 1869; on his return for some time edited "The Chicago Republican"; was also Marshal of the United States Supreme Court in Washington from 1872 to 1887. Mr. Nicolay is author, in collaboration with John Hay, of "Abraham Lincoln: A History," first published serially in "The Century Magazine," and later issued in ten volumes; of "The Outbreak of the Rebellion" in "Campaigns of the Civil War," besides numerous magazine articles. He lives in Washington, D. C.

NICOLET, Jean, early French explorer, came from Cherbourg, France, in 1618, and, for several years, lived among the Algonquins, whose language he learned and for whom he acted as interpreter. On July 4, 1634, he discovered Lake Michigan, then called the "Lake of the Illinois," and visited the Chippewas, Menominees and Winnebagoes, in the region about Green Bay, among whom he was received kindly. From the Mascoutins, on the Fox River (of Wisconsin), he learned of the Illinois Indians, some of whose northern villages he also visited. He subsequently returned to Quebec, where he was drowned, in October, 1642. He was probably the first Caucasian to visit Wisconsin and Illinois.

NILES, Nathaniel, lawyer, editor and soldier, born at Plainfield, Otsego County, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1817; attended an academy at Albany, from 1830 to '34, was licensed to practice law and removed west in 1837, residing successively at Delphi and Frankfort, Ind., and at Owensburg, Ky., until 1842, when he settled in Belleville, Ill. In 1846 he was commissioned a First Lieutenant in the Second Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Colonel Bissell's) for the Mexican War, but, after the battle of Buena Vista, was promoted by General Wool to the captaincy of an independent company of Texas foot. He was elected Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives at the session of 1849, and the same year was chosen County Judge of St. Clair County, serving until 1861. With the exception of brief periods from 1851 to '59, he was editor and part owner of "The Belleville Advocate," a paper originally Democratic, but which became Republican on the organization of the Republican party. In 1861 he was appointed Colonel of the Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but the completion of its organization having been delayed, he resigned, and, the following year, was commissioned Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirtieth, serving until May, 1864, when he resigned—in March, 1865, receiving the compliment of a brevet Brigadier-Generalship. During the winter of 1862-63 he was in command at Memphis, but later took part in the Vicksburg campaign, and in the campaigns on Red River and Bayou Teche. After the war he served as Representative in the General Assembly from St. Clair County (1865-66); as Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Jacksonville; on the Commission for building the State Penitentiary at Joliet, and as Commissioner (by appointment of Governor Oglesby) for locating the Soldiers' Orphans' Home. His later years have been spent chiefly in the practice of his profession, with occasional excursions into journalism. Originally an anti-slavery Democrat, he became one of the founders of the Republican party in Southern Illinois.

NIXON, William Penn, journalist, Collector of Customs, was born in Wayne County, Ind., of North Carolina and Quaker ancestry, early in 1832. In 1853 he graduated from Farmers' (now Belmont) College, near Cincinnati, Ohio. After devoting two years to teaching, he entered the law department of the University of Pennsylvania (1855), graduating in 1859. For nine years thereafter he practiced law at Cincinnati, during which period he was thrice elected to the Ohio Legislature. In 1868 he embarked in journalism, he and his older brother, Dr. O. W. Nixon, with a few friends, founding "The Cincinnati Chronicle." A few years later "The Times" was purchased, and the two papers were consolidated under the name of "The Times-Chronicle." In May, 1872, having disposed of his interests in Cincinnati, he assumed the business management of "The Chicago Inter Ocean," then a new venture and struggling for a foothold. In 1875 he and his brother, Dr. O. W. Nixon, secured a controlling interest in the paper, when the former assumed the position of editor-in-chief, which he continued to occupy until 1897, when he was appointed Collector of Customs for the City of Chicago—a position which he now holds.

NOKOMIS, a city of Montgomery County, on the "Big Four" main line and "'Frisco" Railroads, 81 miles east by north from St. Louis and 52 miles west of Mattoon; in important grain-growing and hay-producing section; has water-works, electric lights, three flour mills, two machine shops, wagon factory, creamery, seven churches, high school, two banks and three papers; is noted for shipments of poultry, butter and eggs. Population (1890), 1,305; (1900), 1,371.

NORMAL, a city in McLean County, 2 miles north of Bloomington and 124 southwest of Chicago; at intersecting point of the Chicago & Alton and the Illinois Central Railroads. It lies in a rich coal and agricultural region, and has extensive fruit-tree nurseries, two canning factories, one bank, hospital, and four periodicals. It is the seat of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home, founded in 1869, and the Illinois State Normal University, founded in 1857; has city and rural mail delivery. Pop. (1890), 3,459; (1900), 3,795.

NORMAL UNIVERSITIES. (See Southern Illinois Normal University; State Normal University.)

NORTH ALTON, a village of Madison County and suburb of the city of Alton. Population (1880), 838; (1890), 762; (1900), 904.

NORTHCOTT, William A., Lieutenant-Governor, was born in Murfreesboro, Tenn., Jan. 28, 1854—the son of Gen. R. S. Northcott, whose loyalty to the Union, at the beginning of the Rebellion, compelled him to leave his Southern home and seek safety for himself and family in the North. He went to West Virginia, was commissioned Colonel of a regiment and served through the war, being for some nine months a prisoner in Libby Prison. After acquiring his literary education in the public schools, the younger Northcott spent some time in the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., after which he was engaged in teaching. Meanwhile, he was preparing for the practice of law and was admitted to the bar in 1877, two years later coming to Greenville, Bond County, Ill., which has since been his home. In 1880, by appointment of President Hayes, he served as Supervisor of the Census for the Seventh District; in 1882 was elected State's Attorney for Bond County and re-elected successively in '84 and '88; in 1890 was appointed on the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy, and, by selection of the Board, delivered the annual address to the graduating class of that year. In 1892 he was the Republican nominee for Congress for the Eighteenth District, but was defeated in the general landslide of that year. In 1896 he was more fortunate, being elected Lieutenant-Governor by the vote of the State, receiving a plurality of over 137,000 over his Democratic opponent.

NORTH PEORIA, formerly a suburban village in Peoria County, 2 miles north of the city of Peoria; annexed to the city of Peoria in 1900.

NORTHERN BOUNDARY QUESTION, THE. The Ordinance of 1787, making the first specific provision, by Congress, for the government of the country lying northwest of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi (known as the Northwest Territory), provided, among other things (Art. V., Ordinance 1787), that "there shall be formed in the said Territory not less than three nor more than five States." It then proceeds to fix the boundaries of the proposed States, on the assumption that there shall be three in number, adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided, however, and it is further understood and declared, that the boundaries of these three States shall be subject so far to be altered that, if Congress shall hereafter find it expedient, they shall have authority to form one or two States in that part of the said Territory which lies north of an east and west line drawn through the southerly bend or extreme of Lake Michigan." On the basis of this provision it has been claimed that the northern boundaries of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio should have been on the exact latitude of the southern limit of Lake Michigan, and that the failure to establish this boundary was a violation of the Ordinance, inasmuch as the fourteenth section of the preamble thereto declares that "the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact between the original States and the people and States in the said Territory, and forever remain unalterable, unless by common consent."—In the limited state of geographical knowledge, existing at the time of the adoption of the Ordinance, there seems to have been considerable difference of opinion as to the latitude of the southern limit of Lake Michigan. The map of Mitchell (1755) had placed it on the parallel of 42° 20′, while that of Thomas Hutchins (1778) fixed it at 41° 37′. It was officially established by Government survey, in 1835, at 41° 37′ 07.9″. As a matter of fact, the northern boundary of neither of the three States named was finally fixed on the line mentioned in the proviso above quoted from the Ordinance—that of Ohio, where it meets the shore of Lake Erie, being a little north of 41° 44′; that of Indiana at 41° 46′ (some 10 miles north of the southern bend of the lake), and that of Illinois at 42° 30′—about 61 miles north of the same line. The boundary line between Ohio and Michigan was settled after a bitter controversy, on the admission of the latter State into the Union, in 1837, in the acceptance by her of certain conditions proposed by Congress. These included the annexation to Michigan of what is known as the "Upper Peninsula," lying between Lakes Michigan and Superior, in lieu of a strip averaging six miles on her southern border, which she demanded from Ohio.—The establishment of the northern boundary of Illinois, in 1818, upon the line which now exists, is universally conceded to have been due to the action of Judge Nathaniel Pope, then the Delegate in Congress from Illinois Territory. While it was then acquiesced in without question, it has since been the subject of considerable controversy and has been followed by almost incalculable results. The "enabling act," as originally introduced early in 1818, empowering the people of Illinois Territory to form a State Government, fixed the northern boundary of the proposed State at 41° 39′, then the supposed latitude of the southern extremity of Lake Michigan. While the act was under consideration in Committee of the Whole, Mr. Pope offered an amendment advancing the northern boundary to 42° 30′. The object of his amendment (as he explained) was to gain for the new State a coast line on Lake Michigan, bringing it into political and commercial relations with the States east of it—Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York—thus "affording additional security to the perpetuity of the Union." He argued that the location of the State between the Mississippi, Wabash and Ohio Rivers—all flowing to the south—would bring it in intimate communication with the Southern States, and that, in the event of an attempted disruption of the Union, it was important that it should be identified with the commerce of the Lakes, instead of being left entirely to the waters of the south-flowing rivers. "Thus," said he, "a rival interest would be created to check the wish for a Western or Southern Confederacy. Her interests would thus be balanced and her inclinations turned to the North." He recognized Illinois as already "the key to the West," and he evidently foresaw that the time might come when it would be the Keystone of the Union. While this evinced wonderful foresight, scarcely less convincing was his argument that, in time, a commercial emporium would grow up upon Lake Michigan, which would demand an outlet by means of a canal to the Illinois River—a work which was realized in the completion of the Illinois & Michigan Canal thirty years later, but which would scarcely have been accomplished had the State been practically cut off from the Lake and its chief emporium left to grow up in another commonwealth, or not at all. Judge Pope's amendment was accepted without division, and, in this form, a few days later, the bill became a law.—The almost superhuman sagacity exhibited in Judge Pope's argument, has been repeatedly illustrated in the commercial and political history of the State since, but never more significantly than in the commanding position which Illinois occupied during the late Civil War, with one of its citizens in the Presidential chair and another leading its 250,000 citizen soldiery and the armies of the Union in battling for the perpetuity of the Republic—a position which more than fulfilled every prediction made for it. — The territory affected by this settlement of the northern boundary, includes all that part of the State north of the northern line of La Salle County, and embraces the greater portion of the fourteen counties of Cook, Dupage, Kane, Lake, McHenry, Boone, DeKalb, Lee, Ogle, Winnebago, Stephenson, Jo Daviess, Carroll and Whiteside, with portions of Kendall, Will and Rock Island—estimated at 8,500 square miles, or more than one-seventh of the present area of the State. It has been argued that this territory belonged to the State of Wisconsin under the provisions of the Ordinance of 1787, and there were repeated attempts made, on the part of the Wisconsin Legislature and its Territorial Governor (Doty), between 1839 and 1843, to induce the people of these counties to recognize this claim. These were, in a few instances, partially successful, although no official notice was taken of them by the authorities of Illinois. The reply made to the Wisconsin claim by Governor Ford—who wrote his "History of Illinois" when the subject was fresh in the public mind—was that, while the Ordinance of 1787 gave Congress power to organize a State north of the parallel running through the southern bend of Lake Michigan, "there is nothing in the Ordinance requiring such additional State to be organized of the territory north of that line." In other words, that, when Congress, in 1818, authorized the organization of an additional State north of and in (i. e., within) the line named, it did not violate the Ordinance of 1787, but acted in accordance with it—in practically assuming that the new State "need not necessarily include the whole of the region north of that line." The question was set at rest by Wisconsin herself in the action of her Constitutional Convention of 1847-48, in framing her first constitution, in form recognizing the northern boundary of Illinois as fixed by the enabling act of 1818.

NORTHERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, an institution for the treatment of the insane, created by Act of the Legislature, approved, April 16, 1869. The Commissioners appointed by Governor Palmer to fix its location consisted of August Adams, B. F. Shaw, W. R. Brown, M. L. Joslyn, D. S. Hammond and William Adams. After considering many offers and examining numerous sites, the Commissioners finally selected the Chisholm farm, consisting of about 155 acres, 1½ miles from Elgin, on the west side of Fox River, and overlooking that stream, as a site—this having been tendered as a donation by the citizens of Elgin. Plans were adopted in the latter part of 1869, the system of construction chosen conforming, in the main, to that of the United States Hospital for the Insane at Washington, D. C. By January, 1872, the north wing and rear building were so far advanced as to permit the reception of sixty patients. The center building was ready for occupancy in April, 1873, and the south wing before the end of the following year. The total expenditures previous to 1876 had exceeded $637,000, and since that date liberal appropriations have been made for additions, repairs and improvements, including the addition of between 300 and 400 acres to the lands connected with the institution The first Board of Trustees consisted of Charles N. Holden, Oliver Everett and Henry W. Sherman, with Dr. E. A. Kilbourne as the first Superintendent, and Dr. Richard A. Dewey (afterwards Superintendent of the Eastern Hospital at Kankakee) as his Assistant. Dr. Kilbourne remained at the head of the institution until his death, Feb. 27, 1890, covering a period of nineteen years. Dr. Kilbourne was succeeded by Dr. Henry J. Brooks, and he, by Dr. Loewy, in June, 1893, and the latter by Dr. John B. Hamilton (former Supervising Surgeon of the United States Marine Hospital Service) in 1897. Dr. Hamilton died in December, 1898. (See Hamilton, John B.) The total value of State property, June 30, 1894, was $882,745.66, of which $701,330 was in land and buildings. Under the terms of the law establishing the hospital, provision is made for the care therein of the incurably insane, so that it is both a hospital and an asylum. The whole number of patients under treatment, for the two years preceding June 30, 1894, was 1,797, the number of inmates, on Dec. 1, 1897, 1,054, and the average daily attendance for treatment, for the year 1896, 1,296. The following counties comprise the district dependent upon the Elgin Hospital: Boone, Carroll, Cook, DeKalb, Jo Daviess, Kane, Kendall, Lake, Stephenson, Whiteside and Winnebago.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS NORMAL SCHOOL, an institution, incorporated in 1884, at Dixon, Lee County, Ill., for the purpose of giving instruction in branches related to the art of teaching. Its last report claims a total of 1,639 pupils, of whom 885 were men and 744 women, receiving instruction from thirty-six teachers. The total value of property was estimated at more than $200,000, of which $160,000 was in real estate and $45,000 in apparatus. Attendance on the institution has been affected by the establishment, under act of the Legislature of 1895, of the Northern State Normal School at DeKalb (which see).

NORTHERN PENITENTIARY, THE, an institution for the confinement of criminals of the State, located at Joliet, Will County. The site was purchased by the State in 1857, and comprises some seventy-two acres. Its erection was found necessary because of the inadequacy of the first penitentiary, at Alton. (See Alton Penitentiary.) The original plan contemplated a cell-house containing 1,000 cells, which, it was thought, would meet the public necessities for many years to come. Its estimated cost was $550,000; but, within ten years, there had been expended upon the institution the sum of $934,000, and its capacity was taxed to the utmost. Subsequent enlargements have increased the cost to over $1,600,000, but by 1877, the institution had become so overcrowded that the erection of another State penal institution became positively necessary. (See Southern Penitentiary.) The prison has always been conducted on "the Auburn system," which contemplates associate labor in silence, silent meals in a common refectory, and (as nearly as practicable) isolation at night. The system of labor has varied at different times, the "lessee system," the "contract system" and the "State account plan" being successively in force. (See Convict Labor.) The whole number of convicts in the institution, at the date of the official report of 1895, was 1,566. The total assets of the institution, Sept. 30, 1894, were reported at $2,121,308.86, of which $1,644,601.11 was in real estate.

NORTH & SOUTH RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Peoria & Northern Railway.)

NORTHERN STATE NORMAL SCHOOL, an institution for the education of teachers of the common schools, authorized to be established by act of the Legislature passed at the session of 1895. The act made an appropriation of $50,000 for the erection of buildings and other improvements. The institution was located at DeKalb, DeKalb County, in the spring of 1896, and the erection of buildings commenced soon after—Isaac F. Ellwood, of DeKalb, contributing $20,000 in cash, and J. F. Glidden, a site of sixty-seven acres of land. Up to Dec. 1, 1897, the appropriations and contributions, in land and money, aggregated $175,000. The school was expected to be ready for the reception of pupils in the latter part of 1899, and, it is estimated, will accommodate 1,000 students.

NORTHWEST TERRITORY. The name formerly applied to that portion of the United States north and west of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi, comprising the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The claim of the Government to the land had been acquired partly through conquest, by the expedition of Col. George Rogers Clark (which see), under the auspices of the State of Virginia in 1778; partly through treaties with the Indians, and partly through cessions from those of the original States laying claim thereto. The first plan for the government of this vast region was devised and formulated by Thomas Jefferson, in his proposed Ordinance of 1784, which failed of ultimate passage. But three years later a broader scheme was evolved, and the famous Ordinance of 1787, with its clause prohibiting the extension of slavery beyond the Ohio River, passed the Continental Congress. This act has been sometimes termed "The American Magna Charta," because of its engrafting upon the organic law the principles of human freedom and equal rights. The plan for the establishment of a distinctive territorial civil government in a new Territory—the first of its kind in the new republic—was felt to be a tentative step, and too much power was not granted to the residents. All the officers were appointive, and each official was required to be a land-owner. The elective franchise (but only for members of the General Assembly) could first be exercised only after the population had reached 5,000. Even then, every elector must own fifty acres of land, and every Representative, 200 acres. More liberal provisions, however, were subsequently incorporated by amendment, in 1809. The first civil government in the Northwest Territory was established by act of the Virginia Legislature, in the organization of all the country west of the Ohio under the name "Illinois County," of which the Governor was authorized to appoint a "County Lieutenant" or "Commandant-in-Chief." The first "Commandant" appointed was Col. John Todd, of Kentucky, though he continued to discharge the duties for only a short period, being killed in the battle of Blue Licks, in 1782. After that the Illinois Country was almost without the semblance of an organized civil government, until 1788, when Gen. Arthur St. Clair was appointed the first Governor of Northwest Territory, under the Ordinance of 1787, serving until the separation of this region into the Territories of Ohio and Indiana in 1800, when William Henry Harrison became the Governor of the latter, embracing all that portion of the original Northwest Territory except the State of Ohio. During St. Clair's administration (1790) that part of the present State of Illinois between the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers on the west, and a line extending north from about the site of old Fort Massac, on the Ohio, to the mouth of the Mackinaw River, in the present county of Tazewell, on the east, was erected into a county under the name of St. Clair, with three county-seats, viz.: Cahokia, Kaskaskia and Prairie du Rocher. (See St. Clair County.) Between 1830 and 1834 the name Northwest Territory was applied to an unorganized region, embracing the present State of Wisconsin, attached to Michigan Territory for governmental purposes. (See Illinois County; St. Clair, Arthur; and Todd, John.)

NORTHWESTERN COLLEGE, located at Naperville, Du Page County, and founded in 1865, under the auspices of the Evangelical Association. It maintains business, preparatory and collegiate departments, besides a theological school. In 1898 it had a faculty of nineteen professors and assistants, with some 360 students, less than one-third of the latter being females, though both sexes are admitted to the college on an equal footing. The institution owns property to the value of $207,000, including an endowment of $85,000.

NORTHWESTERN GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY. (See Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway.)

NORTHWESTERN NORMAL, located at Geneseo, Henry County, Ill., incorporated in 1884; in 1894 had a faculty of twelve teachers with 171 pupils, of whom ninety were male and eighty-one female.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, an important educational institution, established at Evanston, in Cook County, in 1851. In 1898 it reported 2,599 students (1,980 male and 619 female), and a faculty of 234 instructors. It embraces the following departments, all of which confer degrees: A College of Liberal Arts; two Medical Schools (one for women exclusively); a Law School; a School of Pharmacy and a Dental College. The Garrett Biblical Institute, at which no degrees are conferred, constitutes the theological department of the University. The charter of the institution requires a majority of the Trustees to be members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the University is the largest and wealthiest of the schools controlled by that denomination. The College of Liberal Arts and the Garrett Biblical Institute are at Evanston; the other departments (all professional) are located in Chicago. In the academic department (Liberal Arts School), provision is made for both graduate and post-graduate courses. The Medical School was formerly known as the Chicago Medical College, and its Law Department was originally the Union College of Law, both of which have been absorbed by the University, as have also its schools of dentistry and pharmacy, which were formerly independent institutions. The property owned by the University is valued at $4,870,000, of which $1,100,000 is real estate, and $2,250,000 in endowment funds. Its income from fees paid by students in 1898 was $215,288, and total receipts from all sources, $482,389. Co-education of the sexes prevails in the College of Liberal Arts. Dr. Henry Wade Rogers is President.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY MEDICAL SCHOOL, located in Chicago; was organized in 1859 as Medical School of the Lind (now Lake Forest) University. Three annual terms, of five months each, at first constituted a course, although attendance at two only was compulsory. The institution first opened in temporary quarters, Oct. 9, 1859, with thirteen professors and thirty-three students. By 1863 more ample accommodations were needed, and the Trustees of the Lind University being unable to provide a building, one was erected by the faculty. In 1864 the University relinquished all claim to the institution, which was thereupon incorporated as the Chicago Medical College. In 1868 the length of the annual terms was increased to six months, and additional requirements were imposed on candidates for both matriculation and graduation. The same year, the college building was sold, and the erection of a new and more commodious edifice, on the grounds of the Mercy Hospital, was commenced. This was completed in 1870, and the college became the medical department of the Northwestern University. The number of professorships had been increased to eighteen, and that of undergraduates to 107. Since that date new laboratory and clinical buildings have been erected, and the growth of the institution has been steady and substantial. Mercy and St. Luke's Hospital, and the South Side Free Dispensary afford resources for clinical instruction. The teaching faculty, as constituted in 1898, consists of about fifty instructors, including professors, lecturers, demonstrators, and assistants.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY WOMAN'S MEDICAL SCHOOL, an institution for the professional education of women, located in Chicago. Its first corporate name was the "Woman's Hospital Medical College of Chicago," and it was in close connection with the Chicago Hospital for Women and Children. Later, it severed its connection with the hospital and took the name of the "Woman's Medical College of Chicago." Co-education of the sexes, in medicine and surgery, was experimentally tried from 1868 to 1870, but the experiment proved repugnant to the male students, who unanimously signed a protest against the continuance of the system. The result was the establishment of a separate school for women in 1870, with a faculty of sixteen professors. The requirements for graduation were fixed at four years of medical study, including three annual graded college terms of six months each. The first term opened in the autumn of 1870, with an attendance of twenty students. The original location of the school was in the "North Division" of Chicago, in temporary quarters. After the fire of 1871 a removal was effected to the "West Division," where (in 1878-79) a modest, but well arranged building was erected. A larger structure was built in 1884, and, in 1891, the institution became a part of the Northwestern University. The college, in all its departments, is organized along the lines of the best medical schools of the country. In 1896 there were twenty-four professorships, all capably filled, and among the faculty are some of the best known specialists in the country.

NORTON, Jesse O., lawyer, Congressman and Judge, was born at Bennington, Vt., April 25, 1812, and graduated from Williams College in 1835. He settled at Joliet in 1839, and soon became prominent in the affairs of Will County. His first public office was that of City Attorney, after which he served as County Judge (1846-50). Meanwhile, he was chosen a Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1847. In 1850 he was elected to the Legislature, and, in 1852, to Congress, as a Whig. His vigorous opposition to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise resulted in his re-election as a Representative in 1854. At the expiration of his second term (1857) he was chosen Judge of the eleventh circuit, to fill the unexpired term of Judge Randall, resigned. He was once more elected to Congress in 1862, but disagreed with his party as to the legal status of the States lately in rebellion. President Johnson appointed him United States Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois, which office he filled until 1869. Immediately upon his retirement he began private practice at Chicago, where he died, August 3, 1875.

NORWOOD PARK, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad (Wisconsin Division), 11 miles northwest of Chicago. Incorporated in City of Chicago, 1893.

NOYES, George Clement, clergyman, was born at Landaff, N. H., August 4, 1833, brought by his parents to Pike County, Ill., in 1844, and, at the age of 16, determined to devote his life to the ministry; in 1851, entered Illinois College at Jacksonville, graduating with first honors in the class of 1855. In the following autumn he entered Union Theological Seminary in New York, and, having graduated in 1858, was ordained the same year, and installed pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Laporte, Ind. Here he remained ten years, when he accepted a call to the First Presbyterian Church of Evanston, Ill., then a small organization which developed, during the twenty years of his pastorate, into one of the strongest and most influential churches in Evanston. For a number of years Dr. Noyes was an editorial writer and weekly correspondent of "The New York Evangelist," over the signature of "Clement." He was also, for several years, an active and very efficient member of the Board of Trustees of Knox College. The liberal bent of his mind was illustrated in the fact that he acted as counsel for Prof. David Swing, during the celebrated trial of the latter for heresy before the Chicago Presbytery — his argument on that occasion winning encomiums from all classes of people. His death took place at Evanston, Jan. 14, 1889, as the result of an attack of pneumonia, and was deeply deplored, not only by his own church and denomination, but by the whole community. Some two weeks after it occurred a union meeting was held in one of the churches at Evanston, at which addresses in commemoration of his services were delivered by some dozen ministers of that village and of Chicago, while various social and literary organizations and the press bore testimony to his high character. He was a member of the Literary Society of Chicago, and, during the last year of his life, served as its President. Dr. Noyes was married, in 1858, to a daughter of David A. Smith, Esq., an honored citizen and able lawyer of Jacksonville.

OAKLAND, a city of Coles County on the Vandalia Line and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad, 15 miles northeast of Charleston; is in grain center and broom-corn belt; the town has two banks and one daily and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 995;(1900), 1,198.

OAK PARK, a village of Cook County, and popular residence suburb of Chicago, 9 miles west of the initial station of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, on which it is located; is also upon the line of the Wisconsin Central Railroad. The place has numerous churches, prosperous schools, a public library, telegraph and express offices, banks and two local papers. Population (1880), 1,888; (1890), 4,771.

OBERLY, John H., journalist and Civil Service Commissioner, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, Dec. 6, 1837; spent part of his boyhood in Allegheny County, Pa., but, in 1853, began learning the printer's trade in the office of "The Wooster (Ohio) Republican," completing it at Memphis, Tenn., and becoming a journeyman printer in 1857. He worked in various offices, including the Wooster paper, where he also began the study of law, but, in 1860, became part proprietor of "The Bulletin" job office at Memphis, in which he had been employed as an apprentice, and, later, as foreman. Having been notified to leave Memphis on account of his Union principles after the beginning of the Civil War, he returned to Wooster, Ohio, and conducted various papers there during the next four years, but, in 1865, came to Cairo, Ill., where he served for a time as foreman of "The Cairo Democrat," three years later establishing "The Cairo Bulletin." Although the latter paper was burned out a few months later, it was immediately re-established. In 1872 he was elected Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly, and, in 1877, was appointed by Governor Cullom the Democratic member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, serving four years, meanwhile (in 1880) being the Democratic candidate for Secretary of State. Other positions held by him included Mayor of the city of Cairo (1869); President of the National Typographical Union at Chicago (1865), and at Memphis (1866); delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Baltimore (1872), and Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee (1882-84). After retiring from the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, he united in founding "The Bloomington (Ill.) Bulletin," of which he was editor some three years. During President Cleveland's administration he was appointed a member of the Civil Service Commission, being later transferred to the Commissionership of Indian Affairs. He was subsequently connected in an editorial capacity with "The Washington Post," "The Richmond (Va.) State," "The Concord (N. H.) People and Patriot" and "The Washington Times." While engaged in an attempt to reorganize "The People and Patriot," he died at Concord, N. H., April 15, 1899.

ODD FELLOWS. "Western Star" Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Alton, June 11, 1836. In 1838 the Grand Lodge of Illinois was instituted at the same place, and reorganized, at Springfield, in 1842. S. C. Pierce was the first Grand Master, and Samuel L. Miller, Grand Secretary. Wildey Encampment, No. 1, was organized at Alton in 1838, and the Grand Encampment, at Peoria, in 1850, with Charles H. Constable Grand Patriarch. In 1850 the subordinate branches of the Order numbered seventy-six, with 3,291 members, and $25,392.87 revenue. In 1895 the Lodges numbered 838, the membership 50,544, with $475,252.18 revenue, of which $135,018.40 was expended for relief. The Encampment branch, in 1895, embraced 179 organizations with a membership of 6,812 and $23,865.25 revenue, of which $6,781.40 was paid out for relief. The Rebekah branch, for the same year, comprised 422 Lodges, with 22,000 members and $43,215.65 revenue, of which $3,122.79 was for relief. The total sum distributed for relief by the several organizations (1895) was $144,972.59. The Order was especially liberal in its benefactions to the sufferers by the Chicago fire of 1871, an appeal to its members calling forth a generous response throughout the United States. (See Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home.)

ODD FELLOWS' ORPHANS' HOME, a benevolent institution, incorporated in 1889, erected at Lincoln, Ill., under the auspices of the Daughters of Rebekah (see Odd Fellows), and dedicated August 19, 1892. The building is four stories in height, has a capacity for the accommodation of fifty children, and cost $36,524.76, exclusive of forty acres of land valued at $8,000.

ODELL, a village of Livingston County, and station on the Chicago & Alton Railway, 82 miles south-southwest of Chicago. It is in a grain and stock-raising region. Population (1880), 908; (1890), 800; (1900), 1,000.

ODIN, a village of Marion County, at the crossing of the Chicago branch of the Illinois Central and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railways, 244 miles south by west from Chicago; in fruit belt; has coal-mine, two fruit evaporators, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,180.

O'FALLON, a village of St. Clair County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 18 miles east of St. Louis; has interurban railway, electric lights, water-works, factories, coal-mine, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,267.

OGDEN, William Butler, capitalist and Railway President, born at Walton, N. Y., June 15, 1805. He was a member of the New York Legislature in 1834, and, the following year, removed to Chicago, where he established a land and trust agency. He took an active part in the various enterprises centering around Chicago, and, on the incorporation of the city, was elected its first Mayor. He was prominently identified with the construction of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad, and, in 1847, became its President. While visiting Europe in 1853, he made a careful study of the canals of Holland, which convinced him of the desirability of widening and deepening the Illinois & Michigan Canal and of constructing a ship canal across the southern peninsula of Michigan. In 1855 he became President of the Chicago, St. Paul & Fond du Lac Railroad, and effected its consolidation with the Galena & Chicago Union. Out of this consolidation sprang the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, of which he was elected President. In 1850 he presided over the National Pacific Railroad Convention, and, upon the formation of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, he became its President. He was largely connected with the inception of the Northern Pacific line, in the success of which he was a firm believer. He also controlled various other interests of public importance, among them the great lumbering establishments at Peshtigo, Wis., and, at the time of his death, was the owner of what was probably the largest plant of that description in the world. His benefactions were numerous, among the recipients being the Rush Medical College, of which he was President; the Theological Seminary of the Northwest, the Chicago Historical Society, the Academy of Sciences, the University of Chicago, the Astronomical Society, and many other educational and benevolent institutions and organizations in the Northwest. Died, in New York City, August 3, 1877. (See Chicago & Northwestern Railroad.)

OGLE, Joseph, pioneer, was born in Virginia in 1741, came to Illinois in 1785, settling in the American Bottom within the present County of Monroe, but afterwards removed to St. Clair County, about the site of the present town of O'Fallon, 8 miles north of Belleville; was selected by his neighbors to serve as Captain in their skirmishes with the Indians. Died, at his home in St. Clair County, in February, 1821. Captain Ogle had the reputation of being the earliest convert to Methodism in Illinois. Ogle County, in Northern Illinois, was named in his honor.—Jacob (Ogle), son of the preceding, also a native of Virginia, was born about 1772, came to Illinois with his father in 1785, and was a "Ranger" in the War of 1812. He served as a Representative from St. Clair County in the Third General Assembly (1822), and again in the Seventh (1830), in the former being an opponent of the pro-slavery convention scheme. Beyond two terms in the Legislature he seems to have held no public office except that of Justice of the Peace. Like his father, he was a zealous Methodist and highly respected. Died, in 1844, aged 72 years.

OGLE COUNTY, next to the "northern tier" of counties of the State and originally a part of Jo Daviess. It was separately organized in 1837, and Lee County was carved from its territory in 1839. In 1900 its area was 780 square miles, and its population 29,129. Before the Black Hawk War immigration was slow, and life primitive. Peoria was the nearest food market. New grain was "ground" on a grater, and old pounded with an extemporized pestle in a wooden mortar. Rock River flows across the county from northeast to southwest. A little oak timber grows along its banks, but, generally speaking, the surface is undulating prairie, with soil of a rich loam. Sandstone is in ample supply, and all the limestones abound. An extensive peat-bed has been discovered on the Killbuck Creek. Oregon, the county-seat, has fine water-power. The other principal towns are Rochelle, Polo, Forreston and Mount Morris.

OGLESBY, Richard James, Governor and United States Senator, was born in Oldham County, Ky., July 25, 1824; left an orphan at the age of 8 years; in 1836 accompanied an uncle to Decatur, Ill., where, until 1844, he worked at farming, carpentering and rope-making, devoting his leisure hours to the study of law. In 1845 he was admitted to the bar and began practice at Sullivan, in Moultrie County. In 1846 he was commissioned a Lieutenant in the Fourth Regiment, Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's regiment), and served through the Mexican War, taking part in the siege of Vera Cruz and the battle of Cerro Gordo. In 1847 he pursued a course of study at the Louisville Law School, graduating in 1848. He was a "forty-niner" in California, but returned to Decatur in 1851. In 1858 he made an unsuccessful campaign for Congress in the Decatur District. In 1860 he was elected to the State Senate, but early in 1861 resigned his seat to accept the colonelcy of the Eighth Illinois Volunteers. Through gallantry (notably at Forts Henry and Donelson and at Corinth) he rose to be Major-General, being severely wounded in the last-named battle. He resigned his commission on account of disability, in May, 1864, and the following November was elected Governor, as a Republican. In 1872 he was re-elected Governor, but, two weeks after his inauguration, resigned to accept a seat in the United States Senate, to which he was elected by the Legislature of 1873. In 1884 he was elected Governor for the third time—being the only man in the history of the State who (up to the present time—1899) has been thus honored. After the expiration of his last term as Governor, he devoted his attention to his private affairs at his home at Elkhart, in Logan County, where he died, April 24, 1899, deeply mourned by personal and political friends in all parts of the Union, who admired his strict integrity and sterling patriotism.

OHIO, INDIANA & WESTERN RAILWAY. (See Peoria & Eastern Railroad.)

OHIO RIVER, an affluent of the Mississippi, formed by the union of the Monongahela and Allegheny Rivers, at Pittsburg, Pa. At this point it becomes a navigable stream about 400 yards wide, with an elevation of about 700 feet above sea-level. The beauty of the scenery along its banks secured for it, from the early French explorers (of whom La Salle was one), the name of "La Belle Riviere." Its general course is to the southwest, but with many sinuosities, forming the southern boundary of the States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and the western and northern boundary of West Virginia and Kentucky, until it enters the Mississippi at Cairo, in latitude 37° N., and about 1,200 miles above the mouth of the latter stream. The area which it drains is computed to be 214,000 square miles. Its mouth is 268 feet above the level of the sea. The current is remarkably gentle and uniform, except near Louisville, where there is a descent of twenty-two feet within two miles, which is evaded by means of a canal around the falls. Large steamboats can navigate its whole length, except in low stages of water and when closed by ice in winter. Its largest affluents are the Tennessee, the Cumberland, the Kentucky, the Great Kanawha and the Green Rivers, from the south, and the Wabash, the Miami, Scioto and Muskingum from the north. The principal cities on its banks are Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, Evansville, New Albany, Madison and Cairo. It is crossed by bridges at Wheeling, Cincinnati and Cairo. The surface of the Ohio is subject to a variation of forty-two to fifty-one feet between high and low water. Its length is 975 miles, and its width varies from 400 to 1,000 yards. (See Inundations, Remarkable.)

OHIO & MISSISSIPPI RAILWAY. (See Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad.)

OLNEY, an incorporated city and the county-seat of Richland County, 31 miles west of Vincennes, Ind., and 117 miles east of St. Louis, Mo., at the junction of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern and the Peoria Division of the Illinois Central and the Ohio River Division of the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroad; is in the center of the fruit belt and an important shipping point for farm produce and live-stock; has flour mills, a furniture factory and railroad repair shops, banks, a public library, churches and five newspapers, one issuing daily and another semi-weekly editions. Population (1890), 3,831; (1900), 4,260.

OMELVENY, John, pioneer and head of a numerous family which became prominent in Southern Illinois; was a native of Ireland who came to America about 1798 or 1799. After residing in Kentucky a few years, he removed to Illinois, locating in what afterwards became Pope County, whither his oldest son, Samuel, had preceded him about 1797 or 1798. The latter for a time followed the occupation of flat-boating, carrying produce to New Orleans. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1818 from Pope County, being the colleague of Hamlet Ferguson. A year later he removed to Randolph County, where he served as a member of the County Court, but, in 1820-22, we find him a member of the Second General Assembly from Union County, having successfully contested the seat of Samuel Alexander, who had received the certificate of election. He died in 1828.—Edward (Omelveny), another member of this family, and grandson of the elder John Omelveny, represented Monroe County in the Fifteenth General Assembly (1846-48), and was Presidential Elector in 1852, but died sometime during the Civil War.—Harvey K. S. (Omelveny), the fifth son of William Omelveny and grandson of John, was born in Todd County, Ky., in 1823, came to Southern Illinois, in 1852, and engaged in the practice of law, being for a time the partner of Senator Thomas E. Merritt, at Salem. Early in 1858 he was elected a Justice of the Circuit Court to succeed Judge Breese, who had been promoted to the Supreme Court, but resigned in 1861. He gained considerable notoriety by his intense hostility to the policy of the Government during the Civil War, was a Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and was named as a member of the Peace Commission proposed to be appointed by the General Assembly, in 1863, to secure terms of peace with the Southern Confederacy. He was also a leading spirit in the peace meeting held at Peoria, in August, 1863. In 1869 Mr. Omelveny removed to Los Angeles, Cal., which has since been his home, and where he has carried on a lucrative law practice.

ONARGA, a town in Iroquois County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 85 miles south by west from Chicago, and 43 miles north by east from Champaign. It is a manufacturing town, flour, wagons, wire-fencing, stoves and tile being among the products. It has a bank, eight churches, a graded school, a commercial college, and a weekly newspaper. Population (1880), 1,061; (1890), 994; (1900), 1,270.

ONEIDA, a city in Knox County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 12 miles northeast of Galesburg; has wagon, pump and furniture factories, two banks, electric lights, several churches, a graded school, and a weekly paper. The surrounding country is rich prairie, where coal is mined about twenty feet below the surface. Pop. (1890), 699; (1900), 785.

OQUAWKA, the county-seat of Henderson County, situated on the Mississippi River, about 15 miles above Burlington, Iowa, and 32 miles west of Galesburg. It is in a farming region, but has some manufactories. The town has five churches, a graded school, a bank and three newspapers. Population (1900), 1,010.

ORDINANCE OF 1787. This is the name given to the first organic act, passed by Congress, for the government of the territory northwest of the Ohio River, comprising the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The first step in this direction was taken in the appointment, by Congress, on March 1, 1784, of a committee, of which Thomas Jefferson was Chairman, to prepare a plan for the temporary government of the region which had been acquired, by the capture of Kaskaskia, by Col. George Rogers Clark, nearly six years previous. The necessity for some step of this sort had grown all the more urgent, in consequence of the recognition of the right of the United States to this region by the Treaty of Paris of 1783, and the surrender, by Virginia, of the title she had maintained thereto on account of Clark's conquest under her auspices—a right which she had exercised by furnishing whatever semblance of government so far existed northwest of the Ohio. The report submitted from Jefferson's committee proposed the division of the Territory into seven States, to which was added the proviso that, after the year 1800, "there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of said States, otherwise than in punishment of crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted." This report failed of adoption, however, Congress contenting itself with the passage of a resolution providing for future organization of this territory into States by the people—the measures necessary for temporary government being left to future Congressional action. While the postponement, in the resolution as introduced by Jefferson, of the inhibition of slavery to the year 1800, has been criticised, its introduction was significant, as coming from a representative from a slave State, and being the first proposition in Congress looking to restriction, of any character, on the subject of slavery. Congress having taken no further step under the resolution adopted in 1784, the condition of the country (thus left practically without a responsible government, while increasing in population) became constantly more deplorable. An appeal from the people about Kaskaskia for some better form of government, in 1786, aided by the influence of the newly organized "Ohio Company," who desired to encourage emigration to the lands which they were planning to secure from the General Government, at last brought about the desired result, in the passage of the famous "Ordinance," on the 13th day of July, 1787. While making provision for a mode of temporary self-government by the people, its most striking features are to be found in the six "articles"—a sort of "Bill of Rights"—with which the document closes. These assert: (1) the right of freedom of worship and religious opinion; (2) the right to the benefit of habeas corpus and trial by jury; to proportionate representation, and to protection in liberty and property; (3) that "religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged"; (4) that the States, formed within the territory referred to, "shall forever remain a part of this confederacy of the United States of America, subject to the Articles of Confederation and to such alterations therein as shall be constitutionally made"; (5) prescribe the boundaries of the States to be formed therein and the conditions of their admission into the Union; and (6—and most significant of all) repeat the prohibition regarding the introduction of slavery into the Northwest Territory, as proposed by Jefferson, but without any qualification as to time. There has been considerable controversy regarding the authorship of this portion of the Ordinance, into which it is not necessary to enter here. While it has been characterized as a second and advanced Declaration of Independence—and probably no single act of Congress was ever fraught with more important and far-reaching results—it seems remarkable that a majority of the States supporting it and securing its adoption, were then, and long continued to be, slave States.

OREGON, the county-seat of Ogle County, situated on Rock River and the Minneapolis Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 100 miles west from Chicago. The surrounding region is agricultural; the town has water power and manufactures flour, pianos, steel tanks, street sprinklers, and iron castings. It has two banks, water-works supplied by flowing artesian wells, cereal mill, and two weekly newspapers; has also obtained some repute as a summer resort. Pop. (1880), 1,088; (1890), 1,566; (1900), 1,577.

ORION, a village of Henry County, at the intersection of the Rock Island Division of the Chicago Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railways, 19 miles southeast of Rock Island. Pop. (1890), 624; (1900), 584.

OSBORN, William Henry, Railway President, was born at Salem, Mass., Dec. 21, 1820. After receiving a high school education in his native town, he entered the counting room of the East India house of Peele, Hubbell & Co.; was subsequently sent to represent the firm at Manila, finally engaging in business on his own account, during which he traveled extensively in Europe. Returning to the United States in 1853, he took up his residence in New York, and, having married the daughter of Jonathan Sturges, one of the original incorporators and promoters of the Illinois Central Railroad, he soon after became associated with that enterprise. In August, 1854, he was chosen a Director of the Company, and, on Dec. 1, 1855, became its third President, serving in the latter position nearly ten years (until July 11, 1865), and, as a Director, until 1877—in all, twenty-two years. After retiring from his connection with the Illinois Central Railroad, Mr. Osborn gave his attention largely to enterprises of an educational and benevolent character in aid of the unfortunate classes in the State of New York.

OSBORN, Thomas O., soldier and diplomatist, was born in Licking County, Ohio, August 11, 1832; graduated from the Ohio University at Athens, in 1854; studied law at Crawfordsville, Ind., with Gen. Lew Wallace, was admitted to the bar and began practice in Chicago. Early in the war for the Union he joined the "Yates Phalanx," which, after some delay on account of the quota being full, was mustered into the service, in August, 1861, as the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, the subject of this sketch being commissioned its Lieutenant-Colonel. His promotion to the colonelcy soon followed, the regiment being sent east to guard the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, where it met the celebrated Stonewall Jackson, and took part in many important engagements, including the battles of Winchester, Bermuda Hundreds, and Drury's Bluff, besides the sieges of Charleston and Petersburg. At Bermuda Hundreds Colonel Osborn was severely wounded, losing the use of his right arm. He bore a conspicuous part in the operations about Richmond which resulted in the capture of the rebel capital, his services being recognized by promotion to the brevet rank of Major-General. At the close of the war he returned to the practice of law in Chicago, but, in 1874, was appointed Consul-General and Minister-Resident to the Argentine Republic, remaining in that position until June, 1885, when he resigned, resuming his residence in Chicago.

OSWEGO, a village in Kendall County, on the Aurora and Streator branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 6 miles south of Aurora. Population (1890), 641; (1900), 618.

OTTAWA, the county-seat and principal city of La Salle County, being incorporated as a village in 1838, and, as a city, in 1853. It is located at the confluence of the Illinois and Fox Rivers and on the Illinois & Michigan Canal. It is the intersecting point of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway and the Streator branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, 98 miles east of Rock Island and 83 miles west-southwest of Chicago. The surrounding region abounds in coal. Sand of a superior quality for the manufacture of glass is found in the vicinity and the place has extensive glass works. Other manufactured products are brick, drain-tile, sewer-pipe, tile-roofing, pottery, pianos, organs, cigars, wagons and carriages, agricultural implements, hay carriers, hay presses, sash, doors, blinds, cabinet work, saddlery and harness and pumps. The city has some handsome public buildings including the Appellate (formerly Supreme) Court House for the Northern Division. It also has several public parks, one of which (South Park) contains a medicinal spring. There are a dozen churches and numerous public school buildings, including a high school. The city is lighted by gas and electricity, has electric street railways, good sewerage, and water-works supplied from over 150 artesian wells and numerous natural springs. It has one private and two national banks, five libraries, and eight weekly newspapers (three German), of which four issue daily editions. Pop. (1890), 9,985; (1900), 10,588.

OTTAWA, CHICAGO & FOX RIVER VALLEY RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

OUTAGAMIES, a name given, by the French, to the Indian tribe known as the Foxes. (See Sacs and Foxes.)

OWEN, Thomas J. V., early legislator and Indian Agent, was born in Kentucky, April 5, 1801; came to Illinois at an early day, and, in 1830, was elected to the Seventh General Assembly from Randolph County; the following year was appointed Indian Agent at Chicago, as successor to Dr. Alexander Wolcott, who had died in the latter part of 1830. Mr. Owen served as Indian Agent until 1833; was a member of the first Board of Town Trustees of the village of Chicago, Commissioner of School Lands, and one of the Government Commissioners who conducted the treaty with the Pottawatomie and other tribes of Indians at Chicago, in September, 1833. Died, in Chicago, Oct. 15, 1835.

PADDOCK, Gaius, pioneer, a native of Massachusetts, was born in 1758; at the age of 17 he entered the Colonial Army, serving until the close of the Revolutionary War, and being in Washington's command at the crossing of the Delaware. After the war he removed to Vermont; but, in 1815, went to Cincinnati, and, a year later, to St. Charles, Mo. Then, after having spent about a year at St. Louis, in 1818 he located in Madison County, Ill., at a point afterwards known as "Paddock's Grove," and which became one of the most prosperous agricultural sections of Southern Illinois. Died, in 1831.

PAINE, (Gen.) Eleazer A., soldier, was born in Parkman, Geauga County, Ohio, Sept. 10, 1815; graduated at West Point Military Academy, in 1839, and was assigned to the First Infantry, serving in the Florida War (1839-40), but resigned, Oct. 11, 1840. He then studied law and practiced at Painesville, Ohio, (1843-48), and at Monmouth, Ill., (1848-61), meanwhile serving in the lower branch of the Eighteenth General Assembly (1852-53). Before leaving Ohio, he had been Deputy United States Marshal and Lieutenant-Colonel of the State Militia, and, in Illinois, became Brigadier-General of Militia (1845-48). He was appointed Colonel of the Ninth Illinois in April, 1861, and served through the war, being promoted Brigadier-General in September, 1861. The first duty performed by his regiment, after this date, was the occupation of Paducah, Ky., where he was in command. Later, it took part in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, the battles of Shiloh, New Madrid and Corinth, and also in the various engagements in Northern Georgia and in the "march to the sea." From November, 1862, to May, 1864, General Paine was guarding railroad lines in Central Tennessee, and, during a part of 1864, in command of the Western District of Kentucky. He resigned, April 5, 1865, and died in Jersey City, Dec. 16, 1882. A sturdy Union man, he performed his duty as a soldier with great zeal and efficiency.

PALATINE, a village of Cook County, on the Wisconsin Division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, 26 miles northwest from Chicago. There are flour and planing mills here; dairying and farming are leading industries of the surrounding country. Population (1880), 731; (1890), 891; (1900), 1,020.

PALESTINE, a town in Crawford County, about 2 miles from the Wabash River, 7 miles east of Robinson, and 35 miles southwest of Terre Haute, on the Illinois Central Railway; has five churches, a graded school, a bank, weekly newspaper, flour mill, cold storage plant, canning factory, garment factory, and municipal light and power plant. Pop. (1890), 732; (1900), 979.

PALMER, Frank W., journalist, ex-Congressman and Public Printer, was born at Manchester, Dearborn County, Ind., Oct. 11, 1827; learned the printer's trade at Jamestown, N. Y., afterwards edited "The Jamestown Journal," and served two terms in the New York Legislature; in 1858 removed to Dubuque, Iowa, and edited "The Dubuque Times," was elected to Congress in 1860, and again in 1868 and 1872, meanwhile having purchased "The Des Moines Register," which he edited for several years. In 1873 he removed to Chicago and became editor of "The Inter Ocean," remaining two years; in 1877 was appointed Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving eight years. Shortly after the accession of President Harrison, in 1889, he was appointed Public Printer, continuing in office until the accession of President Cleveland in 1893, when he returned to newspaper work, but resumed his old place at the head of the Government Printing Bureau after the inauguration of President McKinley in 1897.

PALMER, John McAuley, lawyer, soldier and United States Senator, was born in Scott County, Ky., Sept. 13, 1817; removed with his father to Madison County, Ill., in 1831, and, four years later, entered Shurtleff College, at Upper Alton, as a student; later taught and studied law, being admitted to the bar in 1839. In 1843 he was elected Probate Judge of Macoupin County, also served in the State Constitutional Convention of 1847; after discharging the duties of Probate and County Judge, was elected to the State Senate, to fill a vacancy, in 1852, and re-elected in 1854, as an Anti-Nebraska Democrat, casting his vote for Lyman Trumbull for United States Senator in 1855, but resigned his seat in 1856; was President of the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington in the latter year, and appointed a delegate to the National Convention at Philadelphia; was an unsuccessful candidate for Congress in 1859, and chosen a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket in 1860; served as a member of the National Peace Conference of 1861; entered the army as Colonel of the Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; was promoted Brigadier General, in November, 1861, taking part in the campaign in Tennessee up to Chickamauga, assuming the command of the Fourteenth Army Corps with the rank of Major-General, but was relieved at his own request before Atlanta. In 1865 he was assigned, by President Lincoln, to command of the Military Department of Kentucky, but, in September, 1866, retired from the service, and, in 1867, became a citizen of Springfield. The following year he was elected Governor, as a Republican, but, in 1872, supported Horace Greeley for President, and has since cooperated with the Democratic party. He was three times the unsuccessful candidate of his party for United States Senator, and was their nominee for Governor in 1888, but defeated. In 1890 he was nominated for United States Senator by the Democratic State Convention and elected in joint session of the Legislature, March 11, 1891, receiving on the 154th ballot 101 Democratic and two Farmers' Mutual Alliance votes. He became an important factor in the campaign of 1896 as candidate of the "Sound Money" Democracy for President, although receiving no electoral votes, proving his devotion to principle. His last years were occupied in preparation of a volume of personal recollections, which was completed, under the title of "The Story of an Earnest Life," a few weeks before his death, which occurred at his home in Springfield, September 25, 1900.

PALMER, Potter, merchant and capitalist, was born in Albany County, N. Y., in 1825; received an English education and became a junior clerk in a country store at Durham, Greene County, in that State, three years later being placed in charge of the business, and finally engaging in business on his own account. Coming to Chicago in 1852, he embarked in the dry-goods business on Lake Street, establishing the house which afterwards became Field, Leiter & Co. (now Marshall Field & Co.), from which he retired, in 1865, with the basis of an ample fortune, which has since been immensely increased by fortunate operations in real estate. Mr. Palmer was Second Vice-President of the first Board of Local Directors of the World's Columbian Exposition in 1891.—Mrs. Bertha M. Honore (Palmer), wife of the preceding, is the daughter of H. H.

Honore, formerly a prominent real-estate owner and operator of Chicago. She is a native of Louisville, Ky., where her girlhood was chiefly spent, though she was educated at a convent near Baltimore, Md. Later she came with her family to Chicago, and, in 1870, was married to Potter Palmer. Mrs. Palmer has been a recognized leader in many social and benevolent movements, but won the highest praise by her ability and administrative skill, exhibited as President of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893.

PALMYRA, a village of Macoupin County, on the Springfield Division of the St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul Railway, 33 miles southwest from Springfield; has some local manufactories, a bank and a newspaper. Population (1900), 813.

PANA, an important railway center and principal city of Christian County, situated in the southeastern part of the County, and at the intersecting point of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, the Illinois Central and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroads, 35 miles south by west from Decatur, and 42 miles southeast of Springfield. It is an important shipping-point for grain and has two elevators. Its mechanical establishments include two flouring mills, a foundry, two machine shops and two planing mills. The surrounding region is rich in coal, which is extensively mined. Pana has banks, several churches, graded schools, and three papers issuing daily and weekly editions. Population (1890), 5,077; (1900), 5,530.

PANA, SPRINGFIELD & NORTHWESTERN RAILROAD. (See Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad.)

PARIS, a handsome and flourishing city, the county-seat of Edgar County. It is an important railway center, situated on the "Big Four" and the Vandalia Line, 160 miles south of Chicago, and 170 miles east-northeast of St. Louis; is in the heart of a wealthy and populous agricultural region, and has a prosperous trade. Its industries include foundries, three elevators, flour, saw and planing mills, glass, broom, and corn product factories. The city has three banks, three daily and four weekly newspapers, a court house, ten churches, and graded schools. Pop. (1890), 4,996; (1900), 6,105.

PARKS, Gavion D. A., lawyer, was born at Bristol, Ontario County, N. Y., Sept. 17, 1817; went to New York City in 1838, where he completed his legal studies and was admitted to the bar, removing to Lockport, Ill., in 1842. Here he successively edited a paper, served as Master in Chancery and in an engineering corps on the Illinois & Michigan Canal; was elected County Judge in 1849, removed to Joliet, and, for a time, acted as an attorney of the Chicago & Rock Island, the Michigan Central and the Chicago & Alton Railroads; was also a Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Jacksonville; was elected Representative in 1852, became a Republican and served on the first Republican State Central Committee (1856); the same year was elected to the State Senate, and was a Commissioner of the State Penitentiary in 1864. In 1872 Mr. Parks joined in the Liberal-Republican movement, was defeated for Congress, and afterwards acted with the Democratic party. Died, Dec. 28, 1895.

PARKS, Lawson A., journalist, was born at Mecklenburg, N. C., April 15, 1813; learned the printing trade at Charlotte, in that State; came to St. Louis in 1833, and, in 1836, assisted in establishing "The Alton Telegraph," but sold his interest a few years later. Then, having officiated as pastor of Presbyterian churches for some years, in 1854 he again became associated with "The Telegraph," acting as its editor. Died at Alton, March 31, 1875.

PARK RIDGE, a suburban village on the Wisconsin Division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, 13 miles northwest of Chicago. Population (1880), 457; (1890), 987; (1900), 1,340.

PARTRIDGE, Charles Addison, journalist and Assistant Adjutant-General of the Grand Army of the Republic, was born in Westford, Chittenden County, Vt., Dec. 8, 1843; came with his parents to Lake County, Ill., in 1844, and spent his boyhood on a farm, receiving his education in the district school, with four terms in a high school at Burlington, Wis. At 16 he taught a winter district school near his boyhood home, and at 18 enlisted in what became Company C of the Ninety-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, being mustered into the service as Eighth Corporal at Rockford. His regiment becoming attached to the Army of the Cumberland, he participated with it in the battles of Chickamauga and the Atlanta campaign, as well as those of Franklin and Nashville, and has taken a just pride in the fact that he never fell out on the march, took medicine from a doctor or was absent from his regiment during its term of service, except for four months while recovering from a gun-shot wound received at Chickamauga. He was promoted successively to Sergeant, Sergeant-Major, and commissioned Second Lieutenant of his old company, of which his father was First Lieutenant for six months and until forced to resign on account of impaired health. Receiving his final discharge, June 28, 1865, he returned to the farm, where he remained until 1869, in the meantime being married to Miss Jennie E. Earle, in 1866, and teaching school one winter. In 1869 he was elected County Treasurer of Lake County on the Republican ticket, and re-elected in 1871; in January of the latter year, purchased an interest in "The Waukegan Gazette," with which he remained associated some fifteen years, at first as the partner of Rev. A. K. Fox, and later of his younger brother, H. E. Partridge. In 1877 he was appointed, by President Hayes, Postmaster at Waukegan, serving four years; in 1886 was elected to the Legislature, serving (by successive elections) as Representative in the Thirty-fifth, Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh General Assemblies, being frequently called upon to occupy the Speaker's chair, and, especially during the long Senatorial contest of 1891, being recognized as a leader of the Republican minority. In 1888 he was called to the service of the Republican State Central Committee (of which he had previously been a member), as assistant to the veteran Secretary, the late Daniel Shepard, remaining until the death of his chief, when he succeeded to the secretaryship. During the Presidential campaign of 1892 he was associated with the late William J. Campbell, then the Illinois member of the Republican National Committee, and was entrusted by him with many important and confidential missions. Without solicitation on his part, in 1894 he was again called to assume the secretaryship of the Republican State Central Committee, and bore a conspicuous and influential part in winning the brilliant success achieved by the party in the campaign of that year. From 1893 to 1895 he served as Mayor of Waukegan; in 1896 became Assistant Adjutant-General of the Grand Army of the Republic for the Department of Illinois—a position which he held in 1889 under Commander James S. Martin, and to which he has been re-appointed by successive Department Commanders up to the present time. Mr. Partridge's service in the various public positions held by him, has given him an acquaintance extending to every county in the State.

PATOKA, a village of Marion County, on the Western branch of the Illinois Central Railway, 15 miles south of Vandalia. There are flour and saw mills here; the surrounding country is agricultural. Population (1890), 502; (1900), 640.

PATTERSON, Robert Wilson, D.D., LL.D., clergyman, was born in Blount County, Tenn., Jan. 21, 1814; came to Bond County, Ill., with his parents in 1822, his father dying two years later; at 18 had had only nine months' schooling, but graduated at Illinois College in 1837; spent a year at Lane Theological Seminary, another as tutor in Illinois College, and then, after two years more at Lane Seminary and preaching in Chicago and at Monroe, Mich., in 1842 established the Second Presbyterian Church of Chicago, of which he remained the pastor over thirty years. In 1850 he received a call to the chair of Didactic Theology at Lane Seminary, as successor to Dr. Lyman Beecher, but it was declined, as was a similar call ten years later. Resigning his pastorship in 1873, he was, for several years, Professor of Christian Evidences and Ethics in the Theological Seminary of the Northwest; in 1876-78 served as President of Lake Forest University (of which he was one of the founders), and, in 1880-83, as lecturer in Lane Theological Seminary. He received the degree of D.D. from Hamilton College, N. Y., in 1854, that of LL.D. from Lake Forest University, and was Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly (N. S.) at Wilmington, Del., in 1859. Died, at Evanston, Ill., Feb. 24, 1894.

PAVEY, Charles W., soldier and ex-State Auditor, was born in Highland County, Ohio, Nov. 8, 1835; removed to Illinois in 1859, settling in the vicinity of Mount Vernon, and, for a time, followed the occupation of a farmer and stock-raiser. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the Eightieth Illinois Volunteers for the Civil War, and became First Lieutenant of Company E. He was severely wounded at the battle of Sand Mountain, and, having been captured, was confined in Libby Prison, at Salisbury, N. C., and at Danville, Va., for a period of nearly two years, enduring great hardship and suffering. Having been exchanged, he served to the close of the war as Assistant Inspector-General on the Staff of General Rousseau, in Tennessee. He was a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1880, which nominated General Garfield for the Presidency, and was one of the famous "306" who stood by General Grant in that struggle. In 1882 he was appointed by President Arthur Collector of Internal Revenue for the Southern District, and, in 1888, was nominated and elected State Auditor on the Republican ticket, but was defeated for re-election in the "land-slide" of 1892. General Pavey has been prominent in "G. A. R." councils, and held the position of Junior Vice-Commander for the Department of Illinois in 1878, and that of Senior Vice-Commander in 1879. He also served as Brigadier-General of the National Guard, for Southern Illinois, during the railroad strike of 1877. In 1897 he received from President McKinley the appointment of Special Agent of the Treasury Department. His home is at Mount Vernon, Jefferson County.

PAWNEE, a village of Sangamon County, at the eastern terminus of the Auburn & Pawnee Railroad, 19 miles south of Springfield. The town has a bank and a weekly paper. Population (1900), 595; (1903, est.), 1,000.

PAWNEE RAILROAD, a short line in Sangamon County, extending from Pawnee to Auburn (9 miles), where it forms a junction with the Chicago & Alton Railroad. The company was organized and procured a charter in December, 1888, and the road completed the following year. The cost was $101,774. Capital stock authorized, $100,000; funded debt (1895), $50,000.

PAW PAW, a village of Lee County, at the junction of two branches of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 8 miles northwest of Earlville. The town is in a farming region, but has a bank and one weekly paper. Population (1890), 635; (1900), 765.

PAXTON, the county-seat of Ford County, is situated at the intersection of the Chicago Division of the Illinois Central and the Lake Erie & Western Railroads, 103 miles south by west from Chicago, and 49 miles east of Bloomington. It contains a court house, two schools, water-works, electric light and water-heating system, two banks, nine churches, and one daily newspaper. It is an important shipping-point for the farm products of the surrounding territory, which is a rich agricultural region. Besides brick and tile works and flour mills, factories for the manufacture of carriages, buggies, hardware, cigars, brooms, and plows are located here. Pop. (1890), 2,187; (1900), 3,036.

PAYSON, a village in Adams County, 15 miles southeast of Quincy; the nearest railroad station being Fall Creek, on the Quincy and Louisiana Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway; has one newspaper. Population (1900), 465.

PAYSON, Lewis E., lawyer and ex-Congressman, was born at Providence, R. I., Sept. 17, 1840; came to Illinois at the age of 12, and, after passing through the common schools, attended Lombard University, at Galesburg, for two years. He was admitted to the bar at Ottawa in 1862, and, in 1865, took up his residence at Pontiac. From 1869 to 1873 he was Judge of the Livingston County Court, and, from 1881 to 1891, represented his District in Congress, being elected as a Republican, but, in 1890, was defeated by his Democratic opponent, Herman W. Snow. Since retiring from Congress he has practiced his profession in Washington, D. C.

PEABODY, Selim Hobart, educator, was born in Rockingham County, Vt., August 20, 1829; after reaching 13 years of age, spent a year in a Boston Latin School, then engaged in various occupations, including teaching, until 1848, when he entered the University of Vermont, graduating third in his class in 1852; was appointed Professor of Mathematics and Engineering in the Polytechnic College at Philadelphia, in 1854, remaining three years, when he spent five years in Wisconsin, the last three as Superintendent of Schools at Racine. From 1865 to 1871 he was teacher of physical science in Chicago High School, also conducting night schools for working men; in 1871 became Professor of Physics and Engineering in Massachusetts Agricultural College, but returned to the Chicago High School in 1874; in 1876 took charge of the Chicago Academy of Sciences, and, in 1878, entered the Illinois Industrial University (now University of Illinois), at Champaign, first as Professor of Mechanical Engineering, in 1880 becoming President, but resigning in 1891. During the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, Professor Peabody was Chief of the Department of Liberal Arts, and, on the expiration of his service there, assumed the position of Curator of the newly organized Chicago Academy of Sciences, from which he retired some two years later.

PEARL, a village of Pike County, on the Kansas City branch of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, 14 miles west of Roodhouse. Population (1890), 928; (1900), 722.

PEARSON, Isaac N., ex-Secretary of State, was born at Centreville, Pa., July 27, 1842; removed to Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., in 1858, and has ever since resided there. In 1872 he was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, and re-elected in 1876. Later he engaged in real-estate and banking business. He was a member of the lower house in the Thirty-third, and of the Senate in the Thirty-fifth, General Assembly, but before the expiration of his term in the latter, was elected Secretary of State, on the Republican ticket, in 1888. In 1892 he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated, although, next to Governor Fifer, he received the largest vote cast for any candidate for a political office on the Republican State ticket.

PEARSON, John M., ex-Railway and Warehouse Commissioner, born at Newburyport, Mass., in 1832—the son of a ship-carpenter; was educated in his native State and came to Illinois in 1849, locating at the city of Alton, where he was afterwards engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements. In 1873 he was appointed a member of the first Railway and Warehouse Commission, serving four years; in 1878 was elected Representative in the Thirty-first General Assembly from Madison County, and was re-elected, successively, in 1880 and '82. He was appointed a member of the first Board of Live-Stock Commissioners in 1885, serving until 1893, for a considerable portion of the time as President of the Board. Mr. Pearson is a life-long Republican and prominent member of the Masonic fraternity. His present home is at Godfrey.

PEARSONS, Daniel K., M.D., real-estate operator and capitalist, was born at Bradfordton, Vt., April 14, 1820; began teaching at 16 years of age, and, at 21, entered Dartmouth College, taking a two years' course. He then studied medicine, and, after practicing a short time in his native State, removed to Chicopee, Mass., where he remained from 1843 to 1857. The latter year he came to Ogle County, Ill., and began operating in real estate, finally adding to this a loan business for Eastern parties, but discontinued this line in 1877. He owns extensive tracts of timber lands in Michigan, is a Director in the Chicago City Railway Company and American Exchange Bank, besides being interested in other financial institutions. He has been one of the most liberal supporters of the Chicago Historical Society, and a princely contributor to various benevolent and educational institutions, his gifts to colleges, in different parts of the country, aggregating over a million dollars.

PECATONICA, a town in Pecatonica Township, Winnebago County, on the Pecatonica River. It is on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, midway beween Freeport and Rockford, being 14 miles from each. It contains a carriage factory, machine shop, condensed milk factory, a bank, six churches, a graded school, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,059; (1900), 1,045.

PECATONICA RIVER, a stream formed by the confluence of two branches, both of which rise in Iowa County, Wis. They unite a little north of the Illinois State line, whence the river runs southeast to Freeport, then east and northeast, until it enters Rock River at Rockton. From the headwaters of either branch to the mouth of the river is about 50 miles.

PECK, Ebenezer, early lawyer, was born in Portland, Maine, May 22, 1805; received an academical education, studied law and was admitted to the bar in Canada in 1827. He was twice elected to the Provincial Parliament and made King's Counsel in 1833; came to Illinois in 1835, settling in Chicago; served in the State Senate (1838-40), and in the House (1840-42 and 1858-60); was also Clerk of the Supreme Court (1841-45), Reporter of Supreme Court decisions (1849-63), and member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Mr. Peck was an intimate personal friend of Abraham Lincoln, by whom he was appointed a member of the Court of Claims, at Washington, serving until 1875. Died, May 25, 1881.

PECK, Ferdinand Wythe, lawyer and financier, was born in Chicago, July 15, 1848—the son of Philip F. W. Peck, a pioneer and early merchant of the metropolis of Illinois; was educated in the public schools, the Chicago University and Union College of Law, graduating from both of the last named institutions, and being admitted to the bar in 1869. For a time he engaged in practice, but his father having died in 1871, the responsibility of caring for a large estate devolved upon him and has since occupied his time, though he has given much attention to the amelioration of the condition of the poor of his native city, and works of practical benevolence and public interest. He is one of the founders of the Illinois Humane Society, has been President and a member of the Board of Control of the Chicago Athenæum, member of the Board of Education, President of the Chicago Union League, and was an influential factor in securing the success of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, in 1893, serving as First Vice-President of the Chicago Board of Directors, Chairman of the Finance Committee, and member of the Board of Reference and Control. Of late years, Mr. Peck has been connected with several important building enterprises of a semi-public character, which have added to the reputation of Chicago, including the Auditorium, Stock Exchange Building and others in which he is a leading stockholder, and in the erection of which he has been a chief promoter. In 1898 he was appointed, by President McKinley, the United States Commissioner to the International Exposition at Paris of 1900, as successor to the late Maj. M. P. Handy, and the success which has followed his discharge of the duties of that position, has demonstrated the fitness of his selection.

PECK, George R., railway attorney, born in Steuben County, N. Y., in 1843; was early taken to Wisconsin, where he assisted in clearing his father's farm; at 16 became a country schoolteacher to aid in freeing the same farm from debt; enlisted at 19 in the First Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, later becoming a Captain in the Thirty-first Wisconsin Infantry, with which he joined in "Sherman's March to the Sea." Returning home at the close of the war, he began the study of law at Janesville, spending six years there as a student, Clerk of the Circuit Court and in practice. From there he went to Kansas and, between 1871 and '74, practiced his profession at Independence, when he was appointed by President Grant United States District Attorney for the Kansas District, but resigned this position, in 1879, to return to general practice. In 1881 he became General Solicitor of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, removing to Chicago in 1893. In 1895 he resigned his position with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad to accept a similar position with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company, which (1898) he still holds. Mr. Peck is recognized as one of the most gifted orators in the West, and, in 1897, was chosen to deliver the principal address at the unveiling of the Logan equestrian statue in Lake Front Park, Chicago; has also officiated as orator on a number of other important public occasions, always acquitting himself with distinction.

PECK, John Mason, D.D., clergyman and educator, was born in Litchfield, Conn., Oct. 31, 1789; removed to Greene County, N. Y., in 1811, where he united with the Baptist Church, the same year entering on pastoral work, while prosecuting his studies and supporting himself by teaching. In 1814 he became pastor of a church at Amenia, N. Y., and, in 1817, was sent west as a missionary, arriving in St. Louis in the latter part of the same year. During the next nine years he traveled extensively through Missouri and Illinois, as an itinerant preacher and teacher, finally locating at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, where, in 1826, he established the Rock Spring Seminary for the education of teachers and ministers. Out of this grew Shurtleff College, founded at Upper Alton in 1835, in securing the endowment of which Dr. Peck traveled many thousands of miles and collected $20,000, and of which he served as Trustee for many years. Up to 1843 he devoted much time to aiding in the establishment of a theological institution at Covington, Ky., and, for two years following, was Corresponding Secretary and Financial Agent of the American Baptist Publication Society, with headquarters in Philadelphia. Returning to the West, he served as pastor of several important churches in Missouri, Illinois and Kentucky. A man of indomitable will, unflagging industry and thoroughly upright in conduct, for a period of a quarter of a century, in the early history of the State, probably no man exerted a larger influence for good and the advancement of the cause of education, among the pioneer citizens of all classes, than Dr. Peck. Though giving his attention so constantly to preaching and teaching, he found time to write much, not only for the various publications with which he was, from time to time, connected, but also for other periodicals, besides publishing "A Guide for Emigrants" (1831), of which a new edition appeared in 1836, and a "Gazetteer of Illinois" (Jacksonville, 1834, and Boston, 1837), which continue to be valued for the information they contain of the condition of the country at that time. He was an industrious collector of historical records in the form of newspapers and pamphlets, which were unfortunately destroyed by fire a few years before his death. In 1852 he received the degree of D.D. from Harvard University. Died, at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, March 15, 1858.

PECK, Philip F. W., pioneer merchant, was born in Providence, R. I., in 1809, the son of a wholesale merchant who had lost his fortune by indorsing for a friend. After some years spent in a mercantile house in New York, he came to Chicago on a prospecting tour, in 1830; the following year brought a stock of goods to the embryo emporium of the Northwest—then a small backwoods hamlet—and, by trade and fortunate investments in real estate, laid the foundation of what afterwards became a large fortune. He died, Oct. 23, 1871, as the result of an accident occurring about the time of the great fire of two weeks previous, from which he was a heavy sufferer pecuniarily. Three of his sons, Walter L., Clarence I. and Ferdinand W. Peck, are among Chicago's most substantial citizens.

PEKIN, a flourishing city, the county-seat of Tazewell County, and an important railway center, located on the Illinois River, 10 miles south of Peoria and 56 miles north of Springfield. Agriculture and coal-mining are the chief occupations in the surrounding country, but the city itself is an important grain market with large general shipping interests. It has several distilleries, besides grain elevators, malt-houses, brick and tile works, lumber yards, planing mills, marble works, plow and wagon works, and a factory for corn products. Its banking facilities are adequate, and its religious and educational advantages are excellent. The city has a public library, park, steam-heating plant, three daily and four weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 6,347; (1900), 8,420.

PEKIN, LINCOLN & DECATUR RAILROAD. (See Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway.)

PELL, Gilbert T., Representative in the Third Illinois General Assembly (1822) from Edwards County, and an opponent of the resolution for a State Convention adopted by the Legislature at that session, designed to open the door for the admission of slavery. Mr. Pell was a son-in-law of Morris Birkbeck, who was one of the leaders in opposition to the Convention scheme, and very naturally sympathized with his father-in-law. He was elected to the Legislature, for a second term, in 1828, but subsequently left the State, dying elsewhere, when his widow removed to Australia.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. As to operations of this corporation in Illinois, see Calumet River; Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago; South Chicago & Southern, and Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways. The whole number of miles owned, leased and operated by the Pennsylvania System, in 1898, was 1,987.21, of which only 61.34 miles were in Illinois. It owns, however, a controlling interest in the stock of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway (which see).

PEORIA, the second largest city of the State and the county-seat of Peoria County, is 160 miles southwest of Chicago, and at the foot of an expansion of the Illinois River known as Peoria Lake. The site of the town occupies an elevated plateau, having a water frontage of four miles and extending back to a bluff, which rises 200 feet above the river level and about 120 feet above the highest point of the main site. It was settled in 1778 or '79, although, as generally believed, the French missionaries had a station there in 1711. There was certainly a settlement there as early as 1725, when Renault received a grant of lands at Pimiteoui, facing the lake then bearing the same name as the village. From that date until 1812, the place was continuously occupied as a French village, and is said to have been the most important point for trading in the Mississippi Valley. The original village was situated about a mile and a half above the foot of the lake; but later, the present site was occupied, at first receiving the name of "La Ville de Maillet," from a French Canadian who resided in Peoria, from 1765 to 1801 (the time of his death), and who commanded a company of volunteers in the Revolutionary War. The population of the old town removed to the new site, and the present name was given to the place by American settlers, from the Peoria Indians, who were the occupants of the country when it was first discovered, but who had followed their cognate tribes of the Illinois family to Cahokia and Kaskaskia, about a century before American occupation of this region. In 1812 the town is estimated to have contained about seventy dwellings, with a population of between 200 and 300, made up largely of French traders, hunters and voyageurs, with a considerable admixture of half-breeds and Indians, and a few Americans. Among the latter were Thomas Forsyth, Indian Agent and confidential adviser of Governor Edwards; Michael La Croix, son-in-law of Julian Dubuque, founder of the city of Dubuque; Antoine Le Claire, founder of Davenport, and for whom Le Claire, Iowa, is named; William Arundel, afterwards Recorder of St. Clair County, and Isaac Darnielle, the second lawyer in Illinois.—In November, 1812, about half the town was burned, by order of Capt. Thomas E. Craig, who had been directed, by Governor Edwards, to proceed up the river in boats with materials to build a fort at Peoria. At the same time, the Governor himself was at the head of a force marching against Black Partridge's village, which he destroyed. Edwards had no communication with Craig, who appears to have acted solely on his own responsibility. That the latter's action was utterly unjustifiable, there can now be little doubt. He alleged, by way of excuse, that his boats had been fired upon from the shore, at night, by Indians or others, who were harbored by the citizens. The testimony of the French, however, is to the effect that it was an unprovoked and cowardly assault, instigated by wine which the soldiers had stolen from the cellars of the inhabitants. The bulk of those who remained after the fire were taken by Craig to a point below Alton and put ashore. This occurred in the beginning of winter, and the people, being left in a destitute condition, were subjected to great suffering. A Congressional investigation followed, and the French, having satisfactorily established the fact that they were not hostile, were restored to their possessions.—In 1813 a fort, designed for permanent occupancy, was erected and named Fort Clark, in honor of Col. George Rogers Clark. It had one (if not two) block-houses, with magazines and quarters for officers and men. It was finally evacuated in 1818, and was soon afterwards burned by the Indians. Although a trading-post had been maintained here, at intervals, after the affair of 1812, there was no attempt made to rebuild the town until 1819, when Americans began to arrive.—In 1824 a post of the American Fur Company was established here by John Hamlin, the company having already had, for five years, a station at Wesley City, three miles farther down the river. Hamlin also traded in pork and other products, and was the first to introduce keel-boats on the Illinois River. By transferring his cargo to lighter draft boats, when necessary, he made the trip from Peoria to Chicago entirely by water, going from the Des Plaines to Mud Lake, and thence to the South Branch of the Chicago River, without unloading. In 1834 the town had but seven frame houses and twenty-one log cabins. It was incorporated as a town in 1835 (Rudolphus Rouse being the first President), and, as the City of Peoria, ten years later (Wm. Hale being the first Mayor).—Peoria is an important railway and business center, eleven railroad lines concentrating here. It presents many attractive features, such as handsome residences, fine views of river, bluff and valley scenery, with an elaborate system of parks and drives. An excellent school system is liberally supported, and its public buildings (national, county and city) are fine and costly. Its churches are elegant and well attended, the leading denominations being Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, Protestant and Reformed Episcopal, Lutheran, Evangelical and Roman Catholic. It is the seat of Bradley Polytechnic Institute, a young and flourishing scientific school affiliated with the University of Chicago, and richly endowed through the munificence of Mrs. Lydia Bradley, who devotes her whole estate, of at least a million dollars, to this object. Right Rev. John L. Spaulding, Bishop of the Roman Catholic diocese of Peoria, is erecting a handsome and costly building for the Spaulding Institute, a school for the higher education of young men.—At Bartonville, a suburb of Peoria, on an elevation commanding a magnificent view of the Illinois River valley for many miles, the State has located an asylum for the incurable insane. It is now in process of erection, and is intended to be one of the most complete of its kind in the world. Peoria lies in a corn and coal region, is noted for the number and extent of its distilleries, and, in 1890, ranked eighth among the grain markets of the country. It also has an extensive commerce with Chicago, St. Louis and other important cities; was credited, by the census of 1890, with 554 manufacturing establishments, representing 90 different branches of industry, with a capital of $15,072,567 and an estimated annual product of $55,504,523. Its leading industries are the manufacture of distilled and malt liquors, agricultural implements, glucose and machine-shop products. Its contributions to the internal revenue of the country are second only to those of the New York district. Population (1870), 22,849; (1880), 29,259; (1890), 41, 024; (1900), 56,100.

PEORIA COUNTY, originally a part of Fulton County, but cut off in 1825. It took its name from the Peoria Indians, who occupied that region when it was first discovered. As first organized, it included the present counties of Jo Daviess and Cook, with many others in the northern part of the State. At that time there were less than 1,500 inhabitants in the entire region; and John Hamlin, a Justice of the Peace, on his return from Green Bay (whither he had accompanied William S. Hamilton, a son of Alexander Hamilton, with a drove of cattle for the fort there), solemnized, at Chicago, the marriage of Alexander Wolcott, then Indian Agent, with a daughter of John Kinzie. The original Peoria County has been subdivided into thirty counties, among them being some of the largest and richest in the State. The first county officer was Norman Hyde, who was elected Judge of the Probate Court by the Legislature in January, 1825. His commission from Governor Coles was dated on the eighteenth of that month, but he did not qualify until June 4, following, when he took the oath of office before John Dixon, Circuit Clerk, who founded the city that bears his name. Meanwhile, Mr. Hyde had been appointed the first Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court, and served in that capacity until entering upon his duties as Probate Judge. The first election of county officers was held, March 7, 1825, at the house of William Eads. Nathan Dillon, Joseph Smith, and William Holland were chosen Commissioners; Samuel Fulton Sheriff, and William Phillips Coroner. The first County Treasurer was Aaron Hawley, and the first general election of officers took place in 1826. The first court house was a log cabin, and the first term of the Circuit Court began Nov. 14, 1825, John York Sawyer sitting on the bench, with John Dixon, Clerk; Samuel Fulton, Sheriff; and John Twiney, the Attorney-General, present. Peoria County is, at present, one of the wealthiest and most populous counties in the State. Its soil is fertile and its manufactures numerous, especially at Peoria, the county-seat and principal city (which see). The area of the county is 615 square miles, and its population (1880), 55,353; (1890), 70,378; (1900), 88,608.

PEORIA LAKE, an expansion of the Illinois River, forming the eastern boundary of Peoria County, which it separates from the counties of Woodford and Tazewell. It is about 20 miles long and 2½ miles broad at the widest part.

PEORIA, ATLANTA & DECATUR RAILROAD. (See Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad.)

PEORIA, DECATUR & EVANSVILLE RAILWAY. The total length of this line, extending from Peoria, Ill., to Evansville, Ind., is 330.87 miles, all owned by the company, of which 273 miles are in Illinois. It extends from Pekin, southeast to Grayville, on the Wabash River—is single track, unballasted, and of standard gauge. Between Pekin and Peoria the company uses the tracks of the Peoria & Pekin Union Railway, of which it is one-fourth owner. Between Hervey City and Midland Junction it has trackage privileges over the line owned jointly by the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville and the Terre Haute & Peoria Companies (7.5 miles). Between Midland Junction and Decatur (2.4 miles) the tracks of the Illinois Central are used, the two lines having terminal facilities at Decatur in common. The rails are of fifty-two and sixty-pound steel.—(HISTORY.) The main line of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway is the result of the consolidation of several lines built under separate charters. (1) The Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1867, built in 1869-71, and operated the latter year, was leased to the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railway, but sold to representatives of the bond-holders, on account of default on interest, in 1876, and reorganized as the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railway. (2) The Decatur, Sullivan & Mattoon Railroad, (projected from Decatur to Mattoon), was incorporated in 1871, completed from Mattoon to Hervey City, in 1872, and, the same year, consolidated with the Chicago & Great Southern; in January, 1874, the Decatur line passed into the hands of a receiver, and, in 1877, having been sold under foreclosure, was reorganized as the Decatur, Mattoon & Southern Railroad. In 1879 it was placed in the hands of trustees, but the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railway having acquired a controlling interest during the same year, the two lines were consolidated under the name of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway Company. (3) The Grayville & Mattoon Railroad, chartered in 1857, was consolidated in 1872 with the Mount Vernon & Grayville Railroad (projected), the new corporation taking the name of the Chicago & Illinois Southern (already mentioned). In 1872 the latter corporation was consolidated with the Decatur, Sullivan & Mattoon Railroad, under the name of the Chicago & Illinois Southern Railway. Both consolidations, however, were set aside by decree of the United States District Court, in 1876, and the partially graded road and franchises of the Grayville & Mattoon lines sold, under foreclosure, to the contractors for the construction; 20 miles of the line from Olney to Newton, were completed during the month of September of that year, and the entire line, from Grayville to Mattoon, in 1878. In 1880 this line was sold, under decree of foreclosure, to the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway Company, which had already acquired the Decatur & Mattoon Division—thus placing the entire line, from Peoria to Grayville, in the hands of one corporation. A line under the name of the Evansville & Peoria Railroad, chartered in Indiana in 1880, was consolidated, the same year, with the Illinois corporation under the name of the latter, and completed from Grayville to Evansville in 1882. (4) The Chicago & Ohio River Railroad—chartered, in 1869, as the Danville, Olney & Ohio River Railroad—was constructed, as a narrow-gauge line, from Kansas to West Liberty, in 1878-81; in the latter year was changed to standard gauge and completed, in 1883, from Sidell to Olney (86 miles). The same year it went into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure, in February, 1886, and reorganized, in May following, as the Chicago & Ohio River Railroad; was consolidated with the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway, in 1893, and used as the Chicago Division of that line. The property and franchises of the entire line passed into the hands of receivers in 1894, and are still (1898) under their management.

PEORIA, PEKIN & JACKSONVILLE RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad of Illinois.)

PEORIA & BUREAU VALLEY RAILROAD, a short line, 46.7 miles in length, operated by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, extending from Peoria to Bureau Junction, Ill. It was incorporated, Feb. 12, 1853, completed the following year, and leased to the Rock Island in perpetuity, April 14, 1854, the annual rental being $125,000. The par value of the capital stock is $1,500,000. Annual dividends of 8 per cent are guaranteed, payable semi-annually. (See Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway.)

PEORIA & EASTERN RAILROAD. Of this line the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Company is the lessee. Its total length is 350½ miles, 132 of which lie in Illinois —123 being owned by the Company. That portion within this State extends east from Pekin to the Indiana State line, in addition to which the Company has trackage facilities over the line of the Peoria & Pekin Union Railway (9 miles) to Peoria. The gauge is standard. The track is single, laid with sixty and sixty-seven-pound steel rails and ballasted almost wholly with gravel. The capital stock is $10,000,000. In 1895 it had a bonded debt of $13,603,000 and a floating debt of $1,261,130, making a total capitalization of $24,864,130.—(HISTORY.) The original of this corporation was the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington & Pekin Railroad, which was consolidated, in July, 1869, with the Indianapolis, Crawfordsville & Danville Railroad—the new corporation taking the name of the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western—and was opened to Pekin the same year. In 1874 it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1879, and reorganized as the Indiana, Bloomington & Western Railway Company. The next change occurred in 1881, when it was consolidated with an Ohio corporation (the Ohio, Indiana & Pacific Railroad), again undergoing a slight change of name in its reorganization as the Indiana, Bloomington & Western Railroad Company. In 1886 it again got into financial straits, was placed in charge of a receiver and sold to a reorganization committee, and, in January, 1887, took the name of the Ohio, Indiana & Western Railway Company. The final reorganization, under its present name, took place in February, 1890, when it was leased to the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, by which it is operated. (See Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway.)

PEORIA & HANNIBAL RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

PEORIA & OQUAWKA RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

PEORIA & PEKIN UNION RAILWAY. A line connecting the cities of Peoria and Pekin, which are only 8 miles apart. It was chartered in 1880, and acquired, by purchase, the tracks of the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville and the Peoria & Springfield Railroads, between the two cities named in its title, giving it control of two lines, which are used by nearly all the railroads entering both cities from the east side of the Illinois River. The mileage, including both divisions, is 18.14 miles, second tracks and sidings increasing the total to nearly 60 miles. The track is of standard gauge, about two-thirds being laid with steel rails. The total cost of construction was $4,350,987. Its total capitalization (1898) was $4,177,763, including $1,000,000 in stock, and a funded debt of $2,904,000. The capital stock is held in equal amounts (each 2,500 shares) by the Wabash, the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville, the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis and the Peoria & Eastern companies, with 1,000 shares by the Lake Erie & Western. Terminal charges and annual rentals are also paid by the Terre Haute & Peoria and the Iowa Central Railways.

PEORIA & SPRINGFIELD RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad of Illinois.)

PEOTONE, a village of Will County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 41 miles south-southwest from Chicago; has some manufactures, a bank and a newspaper. The surrounding country is agricultural. Population (1890), 717; (1900), 1,003.

PERCY, a village of Randolph County, at the intersection of the Wabash, Chesapeake & Western and the Mobile & Ohio Railways. Population (1890), 360; (1900), 660.

PERROT, Nicholas, a French explorer, who visited the valley of the Fox River (of Wisconsin) and the country around the great lakes, at various times between 1670 and 1690. He was present, as a guide and interpreter, at the celebrated conference held at Sault Ste. Marie, in 1671, which was attended by fifteen Frenchmen and representatives from seventeen Indian tribes, and at which the Sieur de Lusson took formal possession of Lakes Huron and Superior, with the surrounding region and "all the country southward to the sea," in the name of Louis XIV. of France. Perrot was the first to discover lead in the West, and, for several years, was Commandant in the Green Bay district. As a chronicler he was intelligent, interesting and accurate. His writings were not published until 1864, but have always been highly prized as authority.

PERRY, a town of Pike County; has a bank and a newspaper. Population (1880), 770; (1890), 705; (1900), 642.

PERRY COUNTY, lies in the southwest quarter of the State, with an area of 440 square miles and a population (1900) of 19,830. It was organized as a county in 1827, and named for Com. Oliver H. Perry. The general surface is rolling, although flat prairies occupy a considerable portion, interspersed with "post-oak flats." Limestone is found in the southern, and sandstone in the northern, sections, but the chief mineral wealth of the county is coal, which is abundant, and, at several points, easily mined, some of it being of a superior quality. Salt is manufactured, to some extent, and the chief agricultural output is wheat. Pinckneyville, the county-seat, has a central position and a population of about 1,300. Duquoin is the largest city. Beaucoup Creek is the principal stream, and the county is crossed by several lines of railroad.

PERU, a city in La Salle County, at the head of navigation on the Illinois River, which is here spanned by a handsome bridge. It is distant 100 miles southwest from Chicago, and the same distance north-northeast from Springfield. It is connected by street cars with La Salle, one mile distant, which is the terminus of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. It is situated in a rich coal-mining region, is an important trade center, and has several manufacturing establishments, including zinc smelting works, rolling mills, nickeloid factory, metal novelty works, gas engine factory, tile works, plow, scale and patent-pump factories, foundries and machine shops, flour and saw mills, clock factory, etc. Two national banks, with a combined capital of $200,000, are located at Peru, and one daily and one weekly paper. Population (1870), 3,650; (1880), 4,682; (1890), 5,550; (1900), 6,863.

PESOTUM, a village in Champaign County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 5 miles south of Tolono. Population (1890), 575.

PETERSBURG, a city of Menard County, and the county-seat, on the Sangamon River. at the intersection Chicago & Alton with the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railway; 23 miles northwest of Springfield and 28 miles northeast of Jacksonville. The town was surveyed and platted by Abraham Lincoln in 1837, and is the seat of the "Old Salem" Chautauqua. It has machine shops, two banks, two weekly papers and nine churches. The manufactures include woolen goods, brick and drain-tile, bed-springs, mattresses, and canned goods. Pop. (1890), 2,342, (1900), 2,807.

PETERS, Onslow, lawyer and jurist, was born in Massachusetts, graduated at Brown University, and was admitted to the bar and practiced law in his native State until 1837, when he settled at Peoria, Ill. He served in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, was elected to the bench of the Sixteenth Judicial Circuit in 1853, and re-elected in 1855. Died, Feb. 28, 1856.

PHILLIPS, David L., journalist and politician, was born where the town of Marion, Williamson County, Ill., now stands, Oct. 28, 1823; came to St. Clair County in childhood, his father settling near Belleville; began teaching at an early age, and, when about 18, joined the Baptist Church, and, after a brief course with the distinguished Dr. Peck, at his Rock Spring Seminary, two years later entered the ministry, serving churches in Washington and other Southern Illinois counties, finally taking charge of a church at Jonesboro. Though originally a Democrat, his advanced views on slavery led to a disagreement with his church, and he withdrew; then accepted a position as paymaster in the construction department of the Illinois Central Railroad, finally being transferred to that of Land Agent for the Southern section, in this capacity visiting different parts of the State from one end of the main line to the other. About 1854 he became associated with the management of "The Jonesboro Gazette," a Democratic paper, which, during his connection with it (some two years), he made an earnest opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. At the Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention (which see), held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, he was appointed a member of their State Central Committee, and, as such, joined in the call for the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington in May following, where he served as Vice-President for his District, and was nominated for Presidential Elector on the Fremont ticket. Two years later (1858) he was the unsuccessful Republican candidate for Congress in the Southern District, being defeated by John A. Logan; was again in the State Convention of 1860, and a delegate to the National Convention which nominated Abraham Lincoln for President the first time; was appointed by Mr. Lincoln United States Marshal for the Southern District in 1861, and re-appointed in 1865, but resigned after Andrew Johnson's defection in 1866. During 1862 Mr. Phillips became part proprietor of "The State Journal" at Springfield, retaining this relation until 1878, at intervals performing editorial service; also took a prominent part in organizing and equipping the One Hundred and Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (sometimes called the "Phillips Regiment"), and, in 1865, was one of the committee of citizens sent to escort the remains of President Lincoln to Springfield. He joined in the Liberal Republican movement at Cincinnati in 1872, but, in 1876, was in line with his former party associates, and served in that year as an unsuccessful candidate for Congress, in the Springfield District, in opposition to William M. Springer, early the following year receiving the appointment of Postmaster for the city of Springfield from President Hayes. Died, at Springfield, June 19, 1880.

PHILLIPS, George S., author, was born at Peterborough, England, in January, 1816; graduated at Cambridge, and came to the United States, engaging in journalism. In 1845 he returned to England, and, for a time, was editor of "The Leeds Times," still later being Principal of the People's College at Huddersfield. Returning to the United States, he came to Cook County, and, about 1866-68, was a writer of sketches over the nom de plume of "January Searle" for "The Chicago Republican"—later was literary editor of "The New York Sun" for several years. His mind becoming impaired, he was placed in an asylum at Trenton, N. J., finally dying at Morristown, N. J., Jan. 14, 1889. Mr. Phillips was the author of several volumes, chiefly sketches of travel and biography.

PHILLIPS, Jesse J., lawyer, soldier and jurist, was born in Montgomery County, Ill., May 22, 1837. Shortly after graduating from the Hillsboro Academy, he read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1860. In 1861 he organized a company of volunteers, of which he was chosen Captain, and which was attached to the Ninth Illinois Infantry. Captain Phillips was successively advanced to the rank of Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; resigned on account of disability, in August, 1864, but was brevetted Brigadier-General at the close of the war. His military record was exceptionally brilliant He was wounded three times at Shiloh, and was personally thanked and complimented by Generals Grant and Oglesby for gallantry and efficient service. At the termination of the struggle he returned to Hillsboro and engaged in practice. In 1866, and again in 1868, he was the Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, but was both times defeated. In 1879 he was elected to the bench of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, and re-elected in 1885. In 1890 he was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court of the Fourth District, and, in 1893, was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, to fill the vacancy created by the death of Justice John M. Scholfield, his term expiring in 1897, when he was re-elected to succeed himself. Judge Phillips' present term will expire in 1906.

PHILLIPS, Joseph, early jurist, was born in Tennessee, received a classical and legal education, and served as a Captain in the War of 1812; in 1816 was appointed Secretary of Illinois Territory, serving until the admission of Illinois as a State, when he became the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, serving until July, 1822, when he resigned, being succeeded on the bench by John Reynolds, afterwards Governor. In 1822 he was a candidate for Governor in the interest of the advocates of a pro-slavery amendment of the State Constitution, but was defeated by Edward Coles, the leader of the anti-slavery party. (See Coles, Edward, and Slavery and Slave Laws.) He appears from the "Edwards Papers" to have been in Illinois as late as 1832, but is said eventually to have returned to Tennessee. The date of his death is unknown.

PIANKESHAWS, THE, a branch of the Miami tribe of Indians. Their name, like those of their brethren, underwent many mutations of orthography, the tribe being referred to, variously, as the "Pou-an-ke-kiahs," the "Pi-an-gie-shaws," the "Pi-an-qui-shaws," and the "Py-an-ke-shaws." They were less numerous than the Weas, their numerical strength ranking lowest among the bands of the Miamis. At the time La Salle planted his colony around Starved Rock, their warriors numbered 150. Subsequent to the dispersion of this colony they (alone of the Miamis) occupied portions of the present territory of Illinois, having villages on the Vermilion and Wabash Rivers. Their earliest inclinations toward the whites were friendly, the French traders having intermarried with women of the tribe soon after the advent of the first explorers. Col. George Rogers Clark experienced little difficulty in securing their allegiance to the new government which he proclaimed. In the sanguinary raids (usually followed by reprisals), which marked Western history during the years immediately succeeding the Revolution, the Piankeshaws took no part; yet the outrages, perpetrated upon peaceable colonists, had so stirred the settlers' blood, that all Indians were included in the general thirst for vengeance, and each was unceremoniously dispatched as soon as seen. The Piankeshaws appealed to Washington for protection, and the President issued a special proclamation in their behalf. After the cession of the last remnant of the Miami territory to the United States, the tribe was removed to a Kansas reservation, and its last remnant finally found a home in Indian Territory. (See also Miamis; Weas.)

"PIASA BIRD," LEGEND OF THE. When the French explorers first descended the Upper Mississippi River, they found some remarkable figures depicted upon the face of the bluff, just above the site of the present city of Alton, which excited their wonder and continued to attract interest long after the country was occupied by the whites. The account given of the discovery by Marquette, who descended the river from the mouth of the Wisconsin, in June, 1673, is as follows: "As we coasted along" (after passing the mouth of the Illinois) "rocks frightful for their height and length, we saw two monsters painted on one of the rocks, which startled us at first, and upon which the boldest Indian dare not gaze long. They are as large as a calf, with horns on the head like a deer, a frightful look, red eyes, bearded like a tiger, the face somewhat like a man's, the body covered with scales, and the tail so long that it twice makes the turn of the body, passing over the head and down between the legs, ending at last in a fish's tail. Green, red and black are the colors employed. On the whole, these two monsters are so well painted that we could not believe any Indian to have been the designer, as good painters in France would find it hard to do as well. Besides this, they are painted so high upon the rock that it is hard to get conveniently at them to paint them." As the Indians could give no account of the origin of these figures, but had their terror even more excited at the sight of them than Marquette himself, they are supposed to have been the work of some prehistoric race occupying the country long before the arrival of the aborigines whom Marquette and his companions found in Illinois. There was a tradition that the figures were intended to represent a creature, part beast and part bird, which destroyed immense numbers of the inhabitants by swooping down upon them from its abode upon the rocks. At last a chief is said to have offered himself a victim for his people, and when the monster made its appearance, twenty of his warriors, concealed near by, discharged their arrows at it, killing it just before it reached its prey. In this manner the life of the chief was saved and his people were preserved from further depredations; and it was to commemorate this event that the figure of the bird was painted on the face of the cliff on whose summit the chief stood. This story, told in a paper by Mr. John Russell, a pioneer author of Illinois, obtained wide circulation in this country and in Europe, about the close of the first quarter of the present century, as the genuine "Legend of the Piasa Bird." It is said, however, that Mr. Russell, who was a popular writer of fiction, acknowledged that it was drawn largely from his imagination. Many prehistoric relics and human remains are said, by the late William McAdams, the antiquarian of Alton, to have been found in caves in the vicinity, and it seems a well authenticated fact that the Indians, when passing the spot, were accustomed to discharge their arrows—and, later, their firearms—at the figure on the face of the cliff. Traces of this celebrated pictograph were visible as late as 1840 to 1845, but have since been entirely quarried away.

PIATT COUNTY, organized in 1841, consisting of parts of Macon and Dewitt Counties. Its area is 440 square miles; population (1900), 17,706. The first Commissioners were John Hughes, W. Bailey and E. Peck. John Piatt, after whose family the county was named, was the first Sheriff. The North Fork of the Sangamon River flows centrally through the county from northeast to southwest, and several lines of railroad afford transportation for its products. Its resources and the occupation of the people are almost wholly agricultural, the surface being level prairie and the soil fertile. Monticello, the county-seat, has a population of about 1,700. Other leading towns are Cerro Gordo (939) and Bement (1,129).

PICKETT, Thomas Johnson, journalist, was born in Louisville, Ky., March 17, 1821; spent six years (1830-36) in St. Louis, when his family removed to Peoria; learned the printer's trade in the latter city, and, in 1840, began the publication of "The Peoria News," then sold out and established "The Republican" (afterwards "The Transcript"); was a member of the Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, serving on the Committee on Resolutions, and being appointed on the State Central Committee, which called the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington, in May following, and was there appointed a delegate to the National Convention at Philadelphia, which nominated General Fremont for President. Later, he published papers at Pekin and Rock Island, at the latter place being one of the first to name Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency; was elected State Senator in 1860, and, in 1862, commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Sixty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, being transferred, as Colonel, to the One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois (100-days' men), and serving at Camp Douglas during the "Conspiracy" excitement. After the war, Colonel Pickett removed to Paducah, Ky., published a paper there called "The Federal Union," was appointed Postmaster, and, later, Clerk of the United States District Court, and was the Republican nominee for Congress, in that District, in 1874. Removing to Nebraska in 1879, he at different times conducted several papers in that State, residing for the most part at Lincoln. Died, at Ashland, Neb., Dec. 24, 1891.

PIERSON, David, pioneer banker, was born at Cazenovia, N. Y., July 9, 1806; at the age of 13 removed west with his parents, arriving at St. Louis, June 3, 1820. The family soon after settled near Collinsville, Madison County, Ill., where the father having died, they removed to the vicinity of Carrollton, Greene County, in 1821. Here they opened a farm, but, in 1827, Mr. Pierson went to the lead mines at Galena, where he remained a year, then returning to Carrollton. In 1834, having sold his farm, he began merchandising, still later being engaged in the pork and grain trade at Alton. In 1854 he added the banking business to his dry-goods trade at Carrollton, also engaged in milling, and, in 1862-63, erected a woolen factory, which was destroyed by an incendiary fire in 1872. Originally an anti-slavery Clay Whig, Mr. Pierson became a Republican on the organization of that party in 1856, served for a time as Collector of Internal Revenue, was a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Philadelphia in 1872, and a prominent candidate for the Republican nomination for Lieutenant-Governor in 1876. Of high integrity and unswerving patriotism, Mr. Pierson was generous in his benefactions, being one of the most liberal contributors to the establishment of the Langston School for the Education of Freedmen at Holly Springs, Miss., soon after the war. He died at Carrollton, May 8, 1891.—Ornan (Pierson), a son of the subject of this sketch, was a member of the Thirty-second General Assembly (1881) from Greene County, and is present cashier of the Greene County National Bank at Carrollton.

PIGGOTT, Isaac N., early politician, was born about 1792; served as an itinerant Methodist preacher in Missouri and Illinois, between 1819 and 1824, but finally located southwest of Jerseyville and obtained a license to run a ferry between Grafton and Alton; in 1828 ran as a candidate for the State Senate against Thomas Carlin (afterwards Governor); removed to St. Louis, in 1858, and died there in 1874.

PIKE COUNTY, situated in the western portion of the State, lying between the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers, having an area of 795 square miles—named in honor of the explorer, Capt. Zebulon Pike. The first American settlers came about 1820, and, in 1821, the county was organized, at first embracing all the country north and west of the Illinois River, including the present county of Cook. Out of this territory were finally organized about one fourth of the counties of the State. Coles' Grove (now Gilead, in Calhoun County) was the first county-seat, but the seat of justice was removed, in 1824, to Atlas, and to Pittsfield in 1833. The surface is undulating, in some portions is hilly, and diversified with prairies and hardwood timber. Live-stock, cereals and hay are the staple products, while coal and Niagara limestone are found in abundance. Population (1890), 31,000; (1900), 31,595.

PILLSBURY, Nathaniel Joy, lawyer and judge, was born in York County, Maine, Oct. 21, 1834; in 1855 removed to Illinois, and, in 1858, began farming in Livingston County. He began the study of law in 1863, and, after admission to the bar, commenced practice at Pontiac. He represented La Salle and Livingston Counties in the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1873, was elected to the bench of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit. He was re-elected in 1879 and again in 1885. He was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court in 1877, and again in 1879 and '85. He was severely wounded by a shot received from strikers on the line of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, near Chicago, in 1886, resulting in his being permanently disabled physically, in consequence of which he declined a re-election to the bench in 1891.

PINCKNEYVILLE, a city and the county-seat of Perry County, situated at the intersection of the Paducah Division Illinois Central and the Wabash, Chester & Western Railways, 10 miles west-northwest of Duquoin. Coal-mining is carried on in the immediate vicinity, and flour, carriages, plows and dressed lumber are among the manufactured products. Pinckneyville has two banks—one of which is national—two weekly newspapers, seven churches, a graded and a high school. Population (1880), 964; (1890), 1,298; (1900), 2,357.

PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD, one of the Pennsylvania Company's lines, operating 1,403 miles of road, of which 1,090 miles are owned and the remainder leased—length of line in Illinois, 28 miles. The Company is the outgrowth of a consolidation, in 1890, of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway with the Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg, the Cincinnati & Richmond and the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroads. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company controls the entire line through ownership of stock. Capital stock outstanding, in 1898, $47,791,601; funded debt, $48,433,000; floating debt, $2,214,703 —total capital $98,500,584. — (HISTORY.) The Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg Railroad, embracing the Illinois division of this line, was made up of various corporations organized under the laws of Illinois and Indiana. One of its component parts was the Chicago & Great Eastern Railway, organized, in 1865, by consolidation of the Galena & Illinois River Railroad (chartered in 1857), the Chicago & Great Eastern Railway of Indiana, the Cincinnati & Chicago Air-Line (organized 1860), and the Cincinnati, Logansport & Chicago Railway. In 1869, the consolidated line was leased to the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway Company, and operated under the name of the Columbus, Chicago & Indiana Central between Bradford, Ohio, and Chicago, from 1869 until its consolidation, under the present name, in 1890. (See Pennsylvania Railroad.)

PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILROAD. (See Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railway.)

PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILWAY. The total length of this line is nearly 470 miles, but only a little over 16 miles are within Illinois. It was operated by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company as lessee. The entire capitalization in 1898 was $52,549,990; and the earnings in Illinois, $472,228.—(HISTORY.) The Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railway is the result of the consolidation, August 1, 1856, of the Ohio & Pennsylvania, the Ohio & Indiana and the Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad Companies, under the name of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad. The road was opened through its entire length, Jan. 1, 1859; was sold under foreclosure in 1861; reorganized under its present title, in 1862, and leased to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, for 999 years, from July 1, 1869. (See Pennsylvania Railroad.)

PITTSFIELD, the county-seat of Pike County, situated on the Hannibal & Naples branch of the Wabash Railway, about 40 miles southeast of Quincy, and about the same distance south of west from Jacksonville. Its public buildings include a handsome court house and graded and high school buildings. The city has an electric light plant, city water-works, a flour mill, a National and a State bank, nine churches, and four weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 2,295; (1900), 2,293.

PLAINFIELD, a village of Will County, on the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroad and an interurban electric line, 8 miles northwest of Joliet; is in a dairying section; has a bank and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 852; (1900), 920.

PLANO, a city in Kendall County, situated near the Fox River, and on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 14 miles west-southwest of Aurora. There are manufactories of agricultural implements and bedsteads. The city has banks, several churches, graded and high schools, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,825; (1900), 1,634; (1903, est.), 2,250.

PLEASANT PLAINS, a village of Sangamon County, on Springfield Division Baltimore & Ohio S. W. Railroad, 16 miles northwest of Springfield; in rich farming region; has coal-shaft, bank, five churches, college and two newspapers. Population (1890), 518; (1900), 575.

PLEASANTS, George Washington, jurist, was born in Harrodsburg, Ky., Nov. 24, 1823; received a classical education at Williams College, Mass., graduating in 1842; studied law in New York City, and was admitted to the bar at Rochester, N. Y., in 1845, establishing himself in practice at Williamstown, Mass., where he remained until 1849. In 1851 he removed to Washington, D. C., and, after residing there two years, came to Illinois, locating at Rock Island, which has since been his home. In 1861 he was elected, as a Republican, to the State Constitutional Convention which met at Springfield in January following, and, in 1867, was chosen Judge for the Sixth (now Tenth) Judicial Circuit, having served by successive re-elections until June, 1897, retiring at the close of his fifth term—a record for length of service seldom paralleled in the judicial history of the State. The last twenty years of this period were spent on the Appellate bench. For several years past Judge Pleasants has been a sufferer from failing eyesight, but has been faithful in attendance on his judicial duties. As a judicial officer and a man, his reputation stands among the highest.

PLUMB, Ralph, soldier and ex-Congressman, was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., March 29, 1816. After leaving school he became a merchant's clerk, and was himself a merchant for eighteen years. From New York he removed to Ohio, where he was elected a member of the Legislature in 1855, later coming to Illinois. During the Civil War he served four years in the Union army as Captain and Quartermaster, being brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel at its close. He made his home at Streator, where he was elected Mayor (1881-1883). There he engaged in coal-mining and has been connected with several important enterprises. From 1885 to 1889 he represented the Eighth Illinois District in Congress, after which he retired to private life.

PLYMOUTH, a village of Hancock County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 41 miles northeast of Quincy; is trade center of rich farming district; has two banks, electric lights, water-works, and one paper. Pop. (1900), 854.

POINTE DE SAIBLE, Jean Baptiste, a negro and Indian-trader, reputed to have been the first settler on the present site of the city of Chicago. He is said to have been a native of San Domingo, but is described by his contemporaries as "well educated and handsome," though dissipated. He appears to have been at the present site of Chicago as early as 1794, his house being located on the north side near the junction of the North and South branches of the Chicago River, where he carried on a considerable trade with the Indians. About 1796 he is said to have sold out to a French trader named Le Mai, and joined a countryman of his, named Glamorgan, at Peoria, where he died soon after. Glamorgan, who was the reputed owner of a large Spanish land-grant in the vicinity of St. Louis, is said to have been associated with Point de Saible in trade among the Peorias, before the latter came to Chicago.

POLO, a city in Ogle County, at intersection of the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Burlington & Northern Railways, 23 miles south of Freeport and 12 miles north of Dixon. The surrounding region is devoted to agriculture and stock-raising, and Polo is a shipping point for large quantities of cattle and hogs. Agricultural implements (including harvesters) and buggies are manufactured here. The city has banks, one weekly and one semi-weekly paper, seven churches, a graded public and high school, and a public library. Pop. (1890), 1,728; (1900), 1,869.

PONTIAC, an Ottawa chief, born on the Ottawa River, in Canada, about 1720. While yet a young man he became the principal Chief of the allied Ottawas, Ojibways and Pottawatomies. He was always a firm ally of the French, to whose interests he was devotedly attached, defending them at Detroit against an attack of the Northern tribes, and (it is generally believed) leading the Ottawas in the defeat of Braddock. He reluctantly acquiesced in the issue of the French and Indian War, although at first strongly disposed to dispute the progress of Major Rogers, the British officer sent to take possession of the western forts. In 1762 he dispatched emissaries to a large number of tribes, whom he desired to unite in a league for the extermination of the English. His proposals were favorably received, and thus was organized what is commonly spoken of as the "Conspiracy of Pontiac." He himself undertook to lead an assault upon Detroit. The garrison, however, was apprised of his intention, and made preparations accordingly. Pontiac thereupon laid siege to the fort, but was unable to prevent the ingress of provisions, the Canadian settlers furnishing supplies to both besieged and besiegers with absolute impartiality. Finally a boat-load of ammunition and supplies was landed at Detroit from Lake Erie, and the English made an unsuccessful sortie on July 31, 1763. After a desultory warfare, lasting for nearly three months, the Indians withdrew into Indiana, where Pontiac tried in vain to organize another movement. Although Detroit had not been taken, the Indians captured Forts Sandusky, St. Joseph, Miami, Ouiatanon, LeBoeuf and Venango, besides the posts of Mackinaw and Presque Isle. The garrisons at all these points were massacred and innumerable outrages perpetrated elsewhere. Additional British troops were sent west, and the Indians finally brought under control. Pontiac was present at Oswego when a treaty was signed with Sir William Johnson, but remained implacable. His end was tragic. Broken in heart, but still proud in spirit and relentless in purpose, he applied to the former (and last) French Governor of Illinois, the younger St. Ange, who was then at St. Louis, for co-operation and support in another raid against the British. Being refused aid or countenance, according to a story long popularly received, he returned to the vicinity of Cahokia, where, in 1769, he was murdered by a Kaskaskia Indian in consideration of a barrel of liquor. N. Matson, author of several volumes bearing on early history in Illinois, citing Col. Joseph N. Bourassa, an educated half-breed of Kansas, as authority for his statement, asserts that the Indian killed at Cahokia was an impostor, and that the true Pontiac was assassinated by Kineboo, the Head Chief of the Illinois, in a council held on the Des Plaines River, near the present site of Joliet. So well convinced, it is said, was Pierre Chouteau, the St. Louis Indian trader, of the truth of this last story, that he caused a monument, which he had erected over the grave of the false Pontiac, to be removed. Out of the murder of Pontiac, whether occurring at Cahokia or Joliet, it is generally agreed, resulted the extermination of the Illinois and the tragedy of "Starved Rock." (See Starved Rock.)

PONTIAC, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Livingston County. It stands on the bank of the Vemillion River, and is also a point of intersection of the Chicago & Alton, the Wabash and the Illinois Central Railroads. It is 33 miles north-northeast from Bloomington and 93 miles south-southwest of Chicago. The surrounding region is devoted to agriculture, stock-raising and coal-mining. Pontiac has four banks and four weekly newspapers (two issuing daily editions), numerous churches and good schools. Various kinds of manufacturing are conducted, among the principal establishments being flouring mills, three shoe factories, straw paper and candy factories and a foundry. The State Reformatory for Juvenile Offenders is located here. Pop. (1890), 2,784; (1900); 4,266.

POOL, Orval, merchant and banker, was born in Union County, Ky., near Shawneetown, Ill., Feb. 17, 1809, but lived in Shawneetown from seven years of age; in boyhood learned the saddler's trade, but, in 1843, engaged in the dry-goods business, J. McKee Peeples and Thomas S. Ridgway becoming his partners in 1846. In 1850 he retired from the dry-goods trade and became an extensive dealer in produce, pork and tobacco. In 1871 he established the Gallatin County National Bank, of which he was the first President. Died, June 30, 1871.

POOLE, William Frederick, bibliographer, librarian and historical writer, was born at Salem, Mass., Dec. 24, 1821, graduated from Yale College in 1849, and, at the close of his sophomore year, was appointed assistant librarian of his college society, which owned a library of 10,000 volumes. Here he prepared and published the first edition of his now famous "Index to Periodical Literature." A second and enlarged addition was published in 1853, and secured for its author wide fame, in both America and Europe. In 1852 he was made Librarian of the Boston Mercantile Library, and, from 1856 to 1869, had charge of the Boston Athenæum, then one of the largest libraries in the United States, which he relinquished to engage in expert library work. He organized libraries in several New England cities and towns, at the United States Naval Academy, and the Cincinnati Public Library, finally becoming Librarian of the latter institution. In October, 1873, he assumed charge of the Chicago Public Library, then being organized, and, in 1887, became Librarian of the Newberry Library, organizing this institution and remaining at its head until his death, which occurred, March 1, 1894. The degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the Northwestern University in 1882. Dr. Poole took a prominent part in the organization of library associations, and was one of the Vice-Presidents of the International Conference of Librarians, held in London in 1871. His advice was much sought in relation to library architecture and management. He wrote much on topics connected with his profession and on historical subjects, frequently contributing to "The North American Review." In 1874-75 he edited a literary paper at Chicago, called "The Owl," and was later a constant contributor to "The Dial." He was President of the American Historical Society and member of State Historical Societies and of other kindred associations.

POPE, Nathaniel, first Territorial Secretary of Illinois, Delegate in Congress and jurist, was born at Louisville, Ky., in 1774; graduated with high honor from Transylvania University, at Lexington, Ky., read law with his brother, Senator John Pope, and, in 1804, emigrated to New Orleans, later living, for a time, at Ste. Genevieve, Mo. In 1808 he became a resident of Kaskaskia and, the next year, was appointed the first Territorial Secretary of Illinois. His native judgment was strong and profound and his intellect quick and far-reaching, while both were thoroughly trained and disciplined by study. In 1816 he was elected a Territorial Delegate to Congress, and proved himself, not only devoted to the interests of his constituents, but also a shrewd tactician. He was largely instrumental in securing the passage of the act authorizing the formation of a State government, and it was mainly through his efforts that the northern boundary of Illinois was fixed at lat. 42° 30′ north, instead of the southern bend of Lake Michigan. Upon the admission of Illinois into the Union, he was made United States Judge of the District, which then embraced the entire State. This office he filled with dignity, impartiality and acceptability until his death, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Lucretia Yeatman, in St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 23, 1850. Pope County was named in his honor.—Gen. John (Pope), son of the preceding, was born in Louisville, Ky., March 16, 1822; graduated at the United States Military Academy, 1842, and appointed brevet Second Lieutenant of Topographical Engineers; served in Florida (1842-44), on the northeast boundary survey, and in the Mexican War (1846-47), being promoted First Lieutenant for bravery at Monterey and Captain at Buena Vista. In 1849 he conducted an exploring expedition in Minnesota, was in charge of topographical engineering service in New Mexico (1851-53), and of the survey of a route for the Union Pacific Railway (1853-59), meanwhile experimenting on the feasibility of artesian wells on the "Staked Plains" in Northwestern Texas. He was a zealous friend of Abraham Lincoln in the political campaign of 1860, and was court-martialed for criticising the policy of President Buchanan, in a paper read before a literary society in Cincinnati, the proceedings being finally dropped on the recommendation of the (then) Secretary of War, Joseph Holt. In 1861 he was one of the officers detailed by the War Department to conduct Mr. Lincoln to the capital, and, in May following, was made Brigadier-General of Volunteers and assigned to command in Missouri, where he performed valuable service in protecting railroad communications and driving out guerrillas, gaining an important victory over Sterling Price at Blackwater, in December of that year; in 1862 had command of the land forces co-operating with Admiral Foote, in the expedition against New Madrid and Island No. 10, resulting in the capture of that stronghold with 6,500 prisoners, 125 cannon and 7,000 small arms, thereby winning a Major-General's commission. Later, having participated in the operations against Corinth, he was transferred to command of the Army of Virginia, and soon after commissioned Brigadier-General in the regular army. Here, being forced to meet a greatly superior force under General Lee, he was subjected to reverses which led to his falling back on Washington and a request to be relieved of his command. For failure to give him proper support, Gen. Fitzjohn Porter was tried by court-martial, and, having been convicted, was cashiered and declared forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the United States Government—although this verdict was finally set aside and Porter restored to the army as Colonel, by act of Congress, in August, 1886. General Pope's subsequent service was performed chiefly against the Indians in the Northwest, until 1865, when he took command of the military division of Missouri, and, in June following, of the Department of the Missouri, including all the Northwestern States and Territories, from which he was relieved early in 1866. Later, he held command, under the Reconstruction Acts, in Georgia, Alabama and Florida (1867-68); the Department of the Lakes (1868-70); Department of the Missouri (1870-84); and Department of the Pacific, from 1884 to his retirement, March 16, 1886. General Pope published "Explorations from the Red River to the Rio Grande" and "Campaigns in Virginia" (1863). Died, at Sandusky, Ohio, Sept 23, 1892.

POPE COUNTY, lies on the southern border of the State, and contains an area of about 360 square miles—named in honor of Judge Nathaniel Pope. It was erected in 1816 (two years before the admission of Illinois as a State) from parts of Gallatin and Johnson Counties. The county-seat was first located at Sandsville, but later changed to Golconda. Robert Lacy, Benoni Lee and Thomas Ferguson were the first Commissioners; Hamlet Ferguson was chosen Sheriff; John Scott, Recorder; Thomas C. Browne, Prosecuting-Attorney, and Samuel Omelveney, Treasurer. The highest land in Southern Illinois is in the northeastern part of this county, reaching an elevation of 1,046 feet. The bluffs along the Ohio River are bold in outline, and the ridges are surmounted by a thick growth of timber, notably oak and hickory. Portions of the bottom lands are submerged, at times, during a part of the year and are covered with cypress timber. The remains of Indian mounds and fortifications are found, and some interesting relics have been exhumed. Sandstone is quarried in abundance, and coal is found here and there. Mineral springs (with copperas as the chief ingredient) are numerous. Iron is found in limited quantities, among the rocks toward the south, while spar and kaolin clay are found in the north. The chief agricultural products are potatoes, corn and tobacco. Population (1890), 14,016; (1900), 13,585.

PORT BYRON, a village of Rock Island County, on the Mississippi River and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, 16 miles above Rock Island; has lime kilns, grain elevator, two banks, academy, public schools, and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 732. The (Illinois) Western Hospital for the Insane is located at Watertown, twelve miles below Port Byron.

PORTER, (Rev.) Jeremiah, pioneer clergyman, was born at Hadley, Mass., in 1804; graduated from Williams College in 1825, and studied theology at both Andover and Princeton seminaries, graduating from the latter in 1831. The same year he made the (then) long and perilous journey to Fort Brady, a military post at the Sault Ste. Marie, where he began his work as a missionary. In 1833 he came to Chicago, where he remained for two years, organizing the First Presbyterian Church of Chicago, with a membership of twenty-six persons. Afterwards he had pastoral charge of churches at Peoria and Farmington. While in Chicago he was married to Miss Eliza Chappell, one of the earliest teachers in Chicago. From 1840 to '58 he was located at Green Bay, Wis., accepting a call from a Chicago Church in the year last named. In 1861 he was commissioned Chaplain in the volunteer service by Governor Yates, and mustered out in 1865. The next five years were divided between labors at Brownsville, Tex., in the service of the Sanitary Commission, and a pastorate at Prairie du Chien. In 1870 he was commissioned Chaplain in the regular army, remaining in the service (with occasional leaves of absence) until 1882, when he was retired from active service on account of advanced age. His closing years were spent at the homes of his children in Detroit and Beloit; died at the latter city, July 25, 1893, at the age of 89 years.

POSEY, (Gen.) Thomas, Continental and Revolutionary soldier, was born in Virginia, July 9, 1750; in 1774 took part in Lord Dunmore's expedition against the Indians, and, later, in various engagements of the Revolutionary War, being part of the time under the immediate command of Washington; was with General Wayne in the assault on Stony Point and present at Cornwallis' surrender at Yorktown; also served, after the war, with Wayne as a Brigadier-General in the Northwest Territory. Removing to Kentucky, he served in the State Senate, for a time being presiding officer and acting Lieutenant-Governor; later (1812), was elected United States Senator from Louisiana, and, from 1813 to '16, served as Territorial Governor of Indiana. Died, at the home of his son-in-law, Joseph M. Street, at Shawneetown, Ill., March 18, 1818, where he lies buried. At the time of his death General Posey was serving as Indian Agent.

POST, Joel S., lawyer and soldier of the Mexican War; was born in Ontario (now Wayne) County, N. Y., April 27, 1816; in 1828 removed with his father to Washtenaw County, Mich., remaining there until 1839, when he came to Macon County, Ill. The following year, he commenced the study of law with Judge Charles Emmerson, of Decatur, and was admitted to the bar in 1841. In 1846 he enlisted in the Mexican War, and served as Quartermaster of the Fourth Regiment (Col. E. D. Baker's); in 1856 was elected to the State Senate, and, at the following session, was a leading supporter of the measures which resulted in the establishment of the State Normal School at Bloomington. Capt. Post's later years were spent at Decatur, where he died, June 7, 1886.

POST, Philip Sidney, soldier and Congressman, was born at Florida, Orange County, N. Y., March 19, 1833; at the age of 22 graduated from Union College, studied law at Poughkeepsie Law School, and, removing to Illinois, was admitted to the bar in 1856. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted, and was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Fifty-ninth Illinois Volunteers. He was a gallant, fearless soldier, and was repeatedly promoted for bravery and meritorious service, until he attained the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. He participated in many important battles and was severely wounded at Pea Ridge and Nashville. In 1865 he was in command in Western Texas. After the close of the war he entered the diplomatic service, being appointed Consul-General to Austria-Hungary in 1874, but resigned in 1879, and returned to his home in Galesburg. From 1882 to 1886 he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee, and, during 1886, was Commander of the Department of Illinois, G. A. R. He was elected to Congress from the Tenth District on the Republican ticket in 1886, serving continuously by reelection until his death, which occurred in Washington, Jan. 6, 1895.

POST, Truman Marcellus, D.D., clergyman, was born at Middlebury, Vt., June 3, 1810; graduated at Middlebury College in 1829, was Principal of Castleton Academy for a year, and a tutor at Middlebury two years, meanwhile studying law. After a winter spent in Washington, listening to the orators of the time in Congress and before the Supreme Court, including Clay, Webster, Wirt and their contemporaries, he went west in 1833, first visiting St. Louis, but finally settling at Jacksonville, Ill., where he was admitted to the bar, but soon after accepted the Professorship of Classical Languages in Illinois College, and later that of History; then began the study of theology, was ordained in 1840, and assumed the pastorship of the Congregational Church in Jacksonville. In 1847 he was called to the pastorate of the Third Presbyterian Church of St. Louis, and, in 1851, to the First Congregational Church, of which the former furnished the nucleus. For a year or two after removing to St. Louis, he continued his lectures on history at Illinois College for a short period each year; also held the professorship of Ancient and Modern History in Washington University, in St. Louis; in 1873-75 was Southworth lecturer on Congregationalism in Andover Theological Seminary and, for several years, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in Chicago Theological Seminary. His splendid diction and his noble style of oratory caused him to be much sought after as a public lecturer or platform speaker at college commencements, while his purity of life and refinement of character attracted to him all with whom he came in personal contact. He received the degree of D.D. from Middlebury College in 1855; was a frequent contributor to "The Biblical Repository" and other religious publications, and, besides numerous addresses, sermons and pamphlets, he was the author of a volume entitled "The Skeptical Era in Modern History" (New York, 1856). He resigned his pastorate in January, 1882, but continued to be a frequent speaker, either in the pulpit or on the lecture platform, nearly to the period of his death, which occurred in St. Louis, Dec. 31, 1886. For a quarter of a century he was one of the Trustees of Monticello Female Seminary, at Godfrey, Ill., being, for a considerable portion of the time, President of the Board.

POTTAWATOMIES, THE, an Indian tribe, one of the three subdivisions of the Ojibwas (or Ojibbeways), who, in turn, constituted a numerous family of the Algonquins. The other branches were the Ottawa and the Chippewas. The latter, however, retained the family name, and hence some writers have regarded the "Ojibbeways" and the "Chippewas" as essentially identical. This interchanging of names has been a prolific source of error. Inherently, the distinction was analogous to that existing between genus and species, although a confusion of nomenclature has naturally resulted in errors more or less serious. These three tribes early separated, the Pottawatomies going south from Green Bay along the western shore of Lake Michigan. The meaning of the name is, "we are making a fire," and the word is a translation into the Pottawatomie language of the name first given to the tribe by the Miamis. These Indians were tall, fierce and haughty, and the tribe was divided into four branches, or clans, called by names which signify, respectively, the golden carp, the tortoise, the crab and the frog. According to the "Jesuit Relations," the Pottawatomies were first met by the French, on the north of Lake Huron, in 1639-40. More than a quarter of a century later (1666) Father Allouez speaks of them as dwellers on the shores of Lake Michigan. The same Father described them as idolatrous and polygamous, yet as possessing a rude civility and as being kindly disposed toward the French. This friendship continued unbroken until the expulsion of the latter from the Northwest. About 1678 they spread southward from Green Bay to the head of Lake Michigan, a portion of the tribe settling in Illinois as far south as the Kankakee and Illinois Rivers, crowding the Winnebagoes and the Sacs and Foxes on the west, and advancing, on the east, into the country of the Miamis as far as the Wabash and the Maumee. They fought on the side of the French in the French and Indian War, and later took part in the conspiracy of Pontiac to capture and reduce the British posts, and were so influenced by Tecumseh and the Prophet that a considerable number of their warriors fought against General Harrison at Tippecanoe. During the War of 1812 they actively supported the British. They were also prominent at the Chicago massacre. Schoolcraft says of them, "They were foremost at all treaties where lands were to be ceded, clamoring for the lion's share of all presents and annuities, particularly where these last were the price paid for the sale of other lands than their own." The Pottawatomies were parties to the treaties at Chicago in 1832 and 1833, and were among the last of the tribes to remove beyond the Mississippi, their final emigration not taking place until 1838. In 1846 the scattered fragments of this tribe coalesced with those of the Chippewas and Ottawas, and formed the Pottawatomie nation. They ceded all their lands, wherever located, to the United States, for $850,000, agreeing to accept 576,000 acres in Kansas in lieu of $87,000 of this amount. Through the rapacity and trespasses of white settlers, this reservation was soon dismembered, and the lands passed into other hands. In 1867, under an enabling act of Congress, 1,400 of the nation (then estimated at 2,500) became citizens. Their present location is in the southeastern part of Oklahoma.

POWELL, John Wesley, Ph.D., LL.D., geologist and anthropologist, was born at Mount Morris, N. Y., March 24, 1834, the son of a Methodist itinerant preacher, passing his early life at various places in Ohio, Wisconsin and Illinois; studied for a time in Illinois College (Jacksonville), and subsequently in Wheaton College, but, in 1854, began a special course at Oberlin, Ohio, teaching at intervals in public schools. Having a predilection for the natural sciences, he spent much time in making collections, which he placed in various Illinois institutions. Entering the army in 1861 as a private of the Twentieth Illinois Volunteers, he later became a Captain of the Second Illinois Artillery, being finally promoted Major. He lost his right arm at the battle of Shiloh, but returned to his regiment as soon as sufficiently recovered, and continued in active service to the close of the war. In 1865 he became Professor of Geology and Curator of the Museum in Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington, but resigned to accept a similar position in the State Normal University. In 1867 he began his greatest work in connection with science by leading a class of pupils to the mountains of Colorado for the study of geology, which he followed, a year later, by a more thorough survey of the cañon of the Colorado River than had ever before been attempted. This led to provision by Congress, in 1870, for a topographical and geological survey of the Colorado and its tributaries, which was appropriately placed under his direction. Later, he was placed in charge of the Bureau of Ethnology in connection with the Smithsonian Institute, and, again in 1881, was assigned to the directorship of the United States Geological Survey, later becoming Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, in connection with the Smithsonian Institute in Washington City, where (1899) he still remains. In 1886 Major Powell received the degree of Ph.D. from Heidelberg University, and that of LL.D. from Harvard the same year. He is also a member of the leading scientific associations of the country, while his reports and addresses fill numerous volumes issued by the Government.

POWELL, William Henry, soldier and manufacturer, was born in South Wales, May 10, 1825; came to America in 1830, was educated in the common schools of Tennessee, and (1856-61) was manager of a manufacturing company at Ironton, Ohio; in 1861, became Captain of a West Virginia cavalry company, and was advanced through the grades of Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; was wounded while leading a charge at Wytheville, Va., left on the field, captured and confined in Libby Prison six months. After exchange he led a cavalry division in the Army of the Shenandoah; was made Brigadier-General in October, 1864; after the war settled in West Virginia, and was a Republican Presidential Elector in 1868. He is now at the head of a nail mill and foundry in Belleville, and was Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for the Department of Illinois during 1895-96.

PRAIRIE CITY, a village in McDonough County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 23 miles southwest from Galesburg and 17 miles northeast of Macomb; has a carriage factory, flour mill, elevators, lumber and stock yards, a nursery, a bank, four churches and two weekly papers. Pop (1890), 812; (1900), 818.

PRAIRIE DU PONT, (in English, Bridge Prairie), an early French settlement, one mile south of Cahokia. It was commenced about 1760, located on the banks of a creek, on which was the first mill, operated by water-power, in that section, having been erected by missionaries from St. Sulpice, in 1754. In 1765 the village contained fourteen families. In 1844 it was inundated and nearly destroyed.

PRAIRIE du ROCHER, (in English, Prairie of the Rock), an early French village in what is now Monroe County, which began to spring up near Fort Chartres (see Fort Chartres), and by 1722 had grown to be a considerable settlement. It stood at the foot of the Mississippi bluffs, about four miles northeast of the fort. Like other French villages in Illinois, it had its church and priest, its common field and commons. Many of the houses were picturesque cottages built of limestone. The ancient village is now extinct; yet, near the outlet of a creek which runs through the bluff, may be seen the vestiges of a water mill, said to have been erected by the Jesuits during the days of French occupation.

PRENTICE, William S., Methodist Episcopal clergyman, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., in 1819; licensed as a Methodist preacher in 1849, and filled pastorates at Paris, Danville, Carlinville, Springfield, Jacksonville and other places—the latter part of his life, serving as Presiding Elder; was a delegate to the General Conference of 1860, and regularly re-elected from 1872 to the end of his life. During the latter part of his life his home was in Springfield. Died, June 28, 1887.

PRENTISS, Benjamin Mayberry, soldier, was born at Belleville, Wood County, Va., Nov. 23, 1819; in 1835 accompanied his parents to Missouri, and, in 1841, removed to Quincy, Ill., where he learned a trade, afterwards embarking in the commission business. In 1844-45 he was Lieutenant of a company sent against the Mormons at Nauvoo, later serving as Captain of Volunteers in the Mexican War. In 1860 he was an unsuccessful Republican candidate for Congress; at the outbreak of the Civil War tendered his services to Governor Yates, and was commissioned Colonel of the Tenth Illinois Volunteers, was almost immediately promoted to Brigadier-General and placed in command at Cairo, so continuing until relieved by General Grant, in September, 1861. At the battle of Shiloh, in April following, he was captured with most of his command, after a most vigorous fight with a superior rebel force, but, in 1862, was exchanged and brevetted Major-General of Volunteers. He was a member of the court-martial that tried Gen. Fitzjohn Porter, and, as commander at Helena, Ark., defeated the Confederate Generals Holmes and Price on July 3, 1863. He resigned his commission, Oct. 28, 1863. In 1869 he was appointed by President Grant Pension Agent at Quincy, serving four years. At present (1898) General Prentiss' residence is at Bethany, Mo., where he served as Postmaster, during the administration of President Benjamin Harrison, and was reappointed by President McKinley. Died Feb. 8, 1901.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS. (See Elections.)

PRESBYTERIAN HOSPITAL, located at Chicago, was organized in 1883 by a number of wealthy and liberal Presbyterians, "for the purpose of affording medical and surgical aid to sick and disabled persons, and to provide them, while inmates of the hospital, with the ministrations of the gospel, agreeably to the doctrines and forms of the Presbyterian Church." Rush Medical College offered a portion of its ground as a site (see Rush Medical College), and through generous subscriptions, a well-planned building was erected, capable of accommodating about 250 patients. A corridor connects the college and hospital buildings. The medical staff comprises eighteen of Chicago's best known physicians and surgeons.

PRESBYTERIANS, THE. The first Presbyterian society in Illinois was organized by Rev. James McGready, of Kentucky, in 1816, at Sharon, White County. Revs. Samuel J. Mills and Daniel Smith, also Presbyterians, had visited the State in 1814, as representatives of the Massachusetts Missionary Society, but had formed no society. The members of the Sharon church were almost all immigrants from the South, and were largely of Scotch-Irish extraction. Two other churches were established in 1819—one at Shoal Creek, Bond County, and the other at Edwardsville. In 1825 there were but three Presbyterian ministers in Illinois—Revs. Stephen Bliss, John Brich and B. F. Spilman. Ten years later there were 80 churches, with a membership of 2,500 and 60 ministers. In 1880 the number of churches had increased to 487; but, in 1890, (as shown by the United States census) there were less. In the latter year there were 405 ministers and 52,945 members. The Synod of Illinois is the highest ecclesiastical court of the denomination in the State, and, under its jurisdiction, the church maintains two seminaries: one (the McCormick) at Chicago, and the other (the Blackburn University) at Carlinville. The organ of the denomination is "The Interior," founded by Cyrus H. McCormick, and published weekly at Chicago, with William C. Gray as editor. The Illinois Synod embraced within its jurisdiction (1895) eleven Presbyteries, to which were attached 483 churches, 464 ministers and a membership of 63,247. (See also Religious Denominations.)

PRICKETT, Abraham, pioneer merchant, was born near Lexington, Ky., came to Madison County, Ill., in 1808; was employed for a time in the drug business in St. Louis, then opened a store at Edwardsville, where, in 1813, he received from the first County Court of Madison County, a license to retail merchandise. In 1818, he served as one of the three Delegates from Madison County to the Convention which framed the first State Constitution, and, the same year, was elected a Representative in the First General Assembly; was also Postmaster of the town of Edwardsville for a number of years. In 1825 he removed to Adams County and laid out an addition to the city of Quincy; was also engaged there in trade with the Indians. In 1836, while engaged on a Government contract for the removal of snags and other obstructions to the navigation of Red River, he died at Natchitoches, La. —George W. (Prickett) a son of the preceding, and afterwards a citizen of Chicago, is said to have been the first white child born in Edwardsville.—Isaac (Prickett), a brother of Abraham, came to St. Louis in 1815, and to Edwardsville in 1818, where he was engaged in mercantile business with his brother and, later, on his own account. He held the offices of Postmaster, Public Administrator, Quartermaster-General of State Militia, Inspector of the State Penitentiary, and, from 1838 to '42, was Receiver of Public Moneys at Edwardsville, dying in 1844.

PRICKETT, David, pioneer lawyer, was born in Franklin County, Ga., Sept. 21, 1800; in early childhood was taken by his parents to Kentucky and from there to Edwardsville, Ill. He graduated from Transylvania University, and, in 1821, began the practice of law; was the first Supreme Court Reporter of Illinois, Judge of the Madison County Probate Court, Representative in the General Assembly (1826-28), Aid-de-Camp to General Whiteside in the Black Hawk War, State's Attorney for Springfield Judicial Circuit (1837), Treasurer of the Board of Canal Commissioners (1840), Director of the State Bank of Illinois (1842), Clerk of the House of Representatives for ten sessions and Assistant Clerk of the same at the time of his death, March 1, 1847.

PRINCE, David, physician and surgeon, was born in Brooklyne, Windham County, Conn., June 21, 1816; removed with his parents to Canandaigua, N. Y., and was educated in the academy there; began the study of medicine in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, finishing at the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, where he was associated, for a year and a half, with the celebrated surgeon, Dr. Muzzy. In 1843 he came to Jacksonville, Ill., and, for two years, was Professor of Anatomy in the Medical Department of Illinois College; later, spent five years practicing in St. Louis, and lecturing on surgery in the St. Louis Medical College, when, returning to Jacksonville in 1852, he established himself in practice there, devoting special attention to surgery, in which he had already won a wide reputation. During the latter part of the Civil War he served, for fourteen months, as Brigade Surgeon in the Army of the Potomac, and, on the capture of a portion of his brigade, voluntarily surrendered himself that he might attend the captives of his command in Libby Prison. After the close of the war he was employed for some months, by the Sanitary Commission, in writing a medical history of the war. He visited Europe twice, first in 1881 as a delegate to the International Medical Congress in London, and again as a member of the Copenhagen Congress of 1884—at each visit making careful inspection of the hospitals in London, Paris, and Berlin. About 1867 he established a Sanitarium in Jacksonville for the treatment of surgical cases and chronic diseases, to which he gave the closing years of his life. Thoroughly devoted to his profession, liberal, public-spirited and sagacious in the adoption of new methods, he stood in the front rank of his profession, and his death was mourned by large numbers who had received the benefit of his ministrations without money and without price. He was member of a number of leading professional associations, besides local literary and social organizations. Died, at Jacksonville, Dec. 19, 1889.

PRINCE, Edward, lawyer, was born at West Bloomfield, Ontario County, N. Y., Dec. 8, 1832; attended school at Payson, Ill., and Illinois College, Jacksonville, graduating from the latter in 1852; studied law at Quincy, and after admission to the bar in 1853, began dealing in real estate. In 1861 he offered his services to Governor Yates, was made Captain and Drill-master of cavalry and, a few months later, commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Seventh Illinois Cavalry, taking part, as second in command, in the celebrated "Grierson raid" through Mississippi, in 1863, serving until discharged with the rank of Colonel of his regiment, in 1864. After the war he gave considerable attention to engineering and the construction of a system of water-works for the city of Quincy, where he now resides.

PRINCE, George W., lawyer and Congressman, born in Tazewell County, Ill., March 4, 1854; was educated in the public schools and at Knox College, graduating from the latter in 1878. He then studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1880; was elected City Attorney of Galesburg the following year; served as chairman of the Knox County Republican Central Committee in 1884, and, in 1888, was elected Representative in the General Assembly and re-elected two years later. In 1892 he was the Republican nominee for Attorney-General of the State of Illinois, but was defeated with the rest of the State ticket; at a special election, held in April, 1895, he was chosen Representative in Congress from the Tenth District to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Col. Philip Sidney Post, which had occurred in January preceding. In common with a majority of his colleagues, Mr. Prince was re-elected in 1896, receiving a plurality of nearly 16,000 votes, and was elected for a third term in November, 1898.

PRINCETON, a city and the county-seat of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 22 miles west-southwest of Mendota, and 104 miles west-southwest of Chicago; has a court house, gas-works, electric lights, graded and high schools, numerous churches, three newspapers and several banks. Coal is mined five miles east, and the manufactures include flour, carriages and farm implements. Pop. (1890), 3,396; (1900), 4,023. Princeton is populated with one of the most intelligent and progressive communities in the State. It was the home of Owen Lovejoy during the greater part of his life in Illinois.

PRINCETON & WESTERN RAILWAY. (See Chicago & Northwestern Railway.)

PRINCEVILLE, a village of Peoria County, on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe and the Rock Island & Peoria Railways, 22 miles northwest of Peoria; is a trade center for a prosperous agricultural region. Population (1890), 641; (1900), 735

PROPHETSTOWN, a town in Whiteside County, on Rock River and the Fulton Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 45 miles northwest of Mendota; has some manufactures, three banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 694; (1900), 1,143.

PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION. (See Minority Representation.)

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH. The pioneer Episcopal clergyman in this State was the Rt. Rev. Philander Chase, who was made Bishop of Illinois in 1835, and was the founder of Jubilee College. (See Chase, Rev. Philander.) The State at present is organized under the provincial system, the province comprising the dioceses of Chicago, Quincy and Springfield. At its head (1898) is the Rt. Rev. William E. McLaren, Bishop of Chicago. Rev. George F. Seymour of Springfield is Bishop of the Springfield Diocese, with C. R. Hale, Coadjutor at Cairo, and Rev. Alexander Burgess, Bishop of the Quincy Diocese, with residence at Peoria. The numerical strength of the church in Illinois is not great, although between 1880 and 1890 its membership was almost doubled. In 1840 there were but eighteen parishes, with thirteen clergymen and a membership of 267. By 1880 the number of parishes had increased to 89, there being 127 ministers and 9,842 communicants. The United States Census of 1890 showed the following figures: Parishes, 197; clergymen, 150, membership, 18,609. Total contributions (1890) for general church and mission work, $373,798. The chief educational institution of the denomination in the West is the Western Theological Seminary at Chicago. (See also Religious Denominations.)

PRYOR, Joseph Everett, pioneer and early steamboat captain, was born in Virginia, August 10, 1787—the son of a non-commissioned officer of the Revolution, who emigrated to Kentucky about 1790 and settled near Louisville, which was then a fort with some twenty log cabins. In 1813 the son located where Golconda, Pope County, now stands, and early in life adopted the calling of a boatman, which he pursued some forty years. At this time he held a commission as a "Falls Pilot," and piloted the first steamer that ascended the Ohio River from New Orleans. During his long service no accident happened to any steamer for which he was responsible, although the Mississippi then bristled with snags. He owned and commanded the steamer Telegraph, which was sunk, in 1835, by collision with the Duke of Orleans on the Mississippi, but, owing to his presence of mind and the good discipline of his crew, no lives were lost. The salient features of his character were a boundless benevolence manifested to others, and his dauntless courage, displayed not only in the face of dangers met in his career as a boatman, but in his encounters with robbers who then infested portions of Southern Illinois. He had a reputation as a skillful pilot and popular commander not excelled by any of his contemporaries. He died, at his home in Pope County, Oct. 5, 1851, leaving one daughter, now Mrs. Cornelia P. Bozman, of Cairo, Ill.

PUBLIC INSTRUCTION, SUPERINTENDENTS OF. (See Superintendents of Public Instruction.)

PUGH, Isaac C., soldier, was born in Christian County, Ky., Nov. 23, 1805; came to Illinois, in 1821, with his father, who first settled in Shelby County, but, in 1829, removed to Macon County, where the subject of this sketch resided until his death, at Decatur, Nov. 14, 1874. General Pugh served in three wars—first in the Black Hawk War of 1832; then, with the rank of Captain and Field Officer in the Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's) in the war with Mexico, and, during the Civil War, entering upon the latter as Colonel of the Forty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in September, 1861, and being mustered out with the rank of full Brigadier-General in August, 1864, when his regiment was consolidated with the Fifty-third. He took part with his regiment in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the operations around Vicksburg, being wounded at the latter. In the year of his retirement from the army (1864) he was elected a Representative in the Twenty-fourth General Assembly, and, the following year, was chosen County-Clerk of Macon County, serving four years.

PUGH, Jonathan H., pioneer lawyer, was born in Bath County, Ky., came to Bond County, Ill., finally locating at Springfield in 1823, and being the second lawyer to establish himself in practice in that city. He served in the Third, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh General Assemblies, and was defeated for Congress by Joseph Duncan (afterwards Governor), in 1831. Died, in 1833. Mr. Pugh is described by his contemporaries as a man of brilliant parts, an able lawyer and a great wit.

PULASKI COUNTY, an extreme southern county and one of the smallest in the State, bordering on the Ohio River and having an area of 190 square miles and a population (1900), of 14,554. It was cut off from Alexander County in 1843, and named in honor of a Polish patriot who had aided the Americans during the Revolution. The soil is generally rich, and the surface varied with much low land along the Cache and the Ohio Rivers. Wheat, corn and fruit are the principal crops, while considerable timber is cut upon the bottom lands. Mound City is the county-seat and was conceded a population, by the census of 1890, of 2,550. Only the lowest, barren portion of the carboniferous formation extends under the soil, the coal measures being absent. Traces of iron have been found and sulphur and copperas springs abound.

PULLMAN, a former suburb (now a part of the South Division) of the city of Chicago, 13.8 miles south of the initial station of the Illinois Central Railroad. The Pullman Palace Car Company began the erection of buildings here in 1880, and, on the 1st of January, 1881, the first family settled in the future manufacturing city. Within the next few years, it became the center of the largest manufacturing establishments in the country, including the Pullman Car Works, the Allen Paper Car Wheel Works and extensive steel forging works, employing thousands of mechanics. Large numbers of sleeping and dining cars, besides ordinary passenger coaches and freight cars, were manufactured here every year, not only for use on the railroads of the United States, but for foreign countries as well. The town was named for the late George M. Pullman, the founder of the car-works, and was regarded as a model city, made up of comfortable homes erected by the Palace Car Company for the use of its employés. It was well supplied with schoolhouses, and churches, and a public library was established there and opened to the public in 1883. The town was annexed to the city of Chicago in 1890.

PULLMAN, George Mortimer, founder of the Pullman Palace Car Company, was born at Brocton, N. Y., March 3, 1831, enjoyed ordinary educational advantages in his boyhood and, at fourteen years of age, obtained employment as a clerk, but a year later joined his brother in the cabinet-making business at Albion. His father, who was a house-builder and house-mover, having died in 1853, young Pullman assumed the responsibility of caring for the family and, having secured a contract for raising a number of buildings along the Erie Canal, made necessary by the enlargement of that thoroughfare, in this way acquired some capital and experience which was most valuable to him in after years. Coming to Chicago in 1859, when the work of raising the grade of the streets in the business portion of the city had been in progress for a year or two, he found a new field for the exercise of his inventive skill, achieving some marvelous transformations in a number of the principal business blocks in that part of the city. As early as 1858, Mr. Pullman had had his attention turned to devising some means for increasing the comforts of night-travel upon railways, and, in 1859, he remodeled two old day-coaches into a species of sleeping-cars, which were used upon the Alton Road. From 1860 to 1863 he spent in Colorado devoting his engineering skill to mining; but returning to Chicago the latter year, entered upon his great work of developing the idea of the sleeping-car into practical reality. The first car was completed and received the name of the "Pioneer." This car constituted a part of the funeral train which took the remains of Abraham Lincoln to Springfield, Ill., after his assassination in April, 1865. The development of the "Pullman palace sleeping-car," the invention of the dining-car, and of vestibule trains, and the building up of the great industrial town which bears his name, and is now a part of the city of Chicago, constituted a work of gradual development which resulted in some of the most remarkable achievements in the history of the nineteenth century, both in a business sense and in promoting the comfort and safety of the traveling public, as well as in bettering the conditions of workingmen. He lived to see the results of his inventive genius and manufacturing skill in use upon the principal railroads of the United States and introduced upon a number of important lines in Europe also. Mr. Pullman was identified with a number of other enterprises more or less closely related to the transportation business, but the Pullman Palace Car Company was the one with which he was most closely connected, and by which he will be longest remembered. He was also associated with some of the leading educational and benevolent enterprises about the city of Chicago, to which he contributed in a liberal manner during his life and in his will. His death occurred suddenly, from heart disease, at his home in Chicago, Oct. 19, 1897.

PURPLE, Norman H., lawyer and jurist, was born in Litchfield County, Conn., read law and was admitted to the bar in Tioga County, Pa., settled at Peoria, Ill., in 1836, and the following year was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for the Ninth Judicial District, which then embraced the greater portion of the State east of Peoria. In 1844 he was a Presidential Elector, and, in 1845, Governor Ford appointed him a Justice of the Supreme Court, vice Jesse B. Thomas, Jr., who had resigned. As required by law, he at the same time served as Circuit Judge, his district embracing all the counties west of Peoria, and his home being at Quincy. After the adoption of the Constitution of 1848 he returned to Peoria and resumed practice. He compiled the Illinois Statutes relating to real property, and, in 1857, made a compilation of the general laws, generally known to the legal profession as the "Purple Statutes." He subsequently undertook to compile and arrange the laws passed from 1857 to '63, and was engaged on this work when overtaken by death, at Chicago, Aug 9, 1863. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and, during the last ten years of his life, prominent at the Chicago bar.

PUTERBAUGH, Sabin D., judge and author, was born in Miami County, Ohio, Sept. 28, 1834; at 8 years of age removed with his parents to Tazewell County, Ill; settled in Pekin in 1853, where he read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1856. At the outbreak of the rebellion he was commissioned, by Governor Yates, Major of the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, and took part in numerous engagements in Western Tennessee and Mississippi, including the battles of Shiloh and Corinth. Resigning his commission in 1862, he took up his residence at Peoria, where he resumed practice and began the preparation of his first legal work —"Common Law Pleading and Practice." In 1864 he formed a partnership with Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, which continued until 1867, when Mr. Puterbaugh was elected Circuit Court Judge. He retired from the bench in 1873 to resume private practice and pursue his work as an author. His first work, having already run through three editions, was followed by "Puterbaugh's Chancery Pleading and Practice," the first edition of which appeared in 1874, and "Michigan Chancery Practice," which appeared in 1881. In 1880 he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. Died, Sept. 25, 1892. Leslie D. (Puterbaugh), a son of Judge Puterbaugh, is Judge of the Circuit Court of the Peoria Circuit.

PUTNAM COUNTY, the smallest county in the State, both as to area and population, containing only 170 square miles; population (1900), 4,746. It lies near the center of the north half of the State, and was named in honor of Gen. Israel Putnam. The first American to erect a cabin within its limits was Gurdon S. Hubbard, who was in business there, as a fur-trader, as early as 1825, but afterwards became a prominent citizen of Chicago. The county was created by act of the Legislature in 1825, although a local government was not organized until some years later. Since that date, Bureau, Marshall and Stark Counties have been erected therefrom. It is crossed and drained by the Illinois River. The surface is moderately undulating and the soil fertile. Corn is the chief staple, although wheat and oats are extensively cultivated. Coal is mined and exported. Hennepin is the county-seat.

QUINCY, the principal city of Western Illinois, and the county-seat of Adams County. It was founded in 1822—the late Gov. John Wood erecting the first log-cabin there—and was incorporated in 1839. The site is naturally one of the most beautiful in the State, the principal part of the city being built on a limestone bluff having an elevation of 125 to 150 feet, and overlooking the Mississippi for a long distance. Its location is 112 miles west of Springfield and 264 miles southwest of Chicago. Besides being a principal shipping point for the river trade north of St. Louis, it is the converging point of several important railway lines, including the Wabash, four branches of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and the Quincy, Omaha & Kansas City, giving east and west, as well as north and south, connections. At the present time (1904) several important lines, or extensions of railroads already constructed, are in contemplation, which, when completed, will add largely to the commercial importance of the city. The city is regularly laid out, the streets intersecting each other at right angles, and being lighted with gas and electricity. Water is obtained from the Mississippi. There are several electric railway lines, four public parks, a fine railway bridge across the Mississippi, to which a wagon bridge has been added within the past two years; two fine railway depots, and several elegant public buildings, including a handsome county court-house, a Government building for the use of the Post-office and the United States District Court. The Illinois Soldiers' and Sailors' Home is located here, embracing a large group of cottages occupied by veterans of the Civil War, besides hospital and administration buildings for the use of the officers. The city has more than thirty churches, three libraries (one free-public and two college), with excellent schools and other educational advantages. Among the higher institutions of learning are the Chaddock College (Methodist Episcopal) and the St. Francis Solanus College (Roman Catholic). There are two or three national banks, a State bank with a capital of $300,000, beside two private banks, four or five daily papers, with several weekly and one or two monthly publications. Its advantages as a shipping point by river and railroad have made it one of the most important manufacturing centers west of Chicago. The census of 1890 showed a total of 374 manufacturing establishments, having an aggregate capital of $6,187,845, employing 5,058 persons, and turning out an annual product valued at $10,160,492. The cost of material used was $5,597,990, and the wages paid $2,383,571. The number of different industries reported aggregated seventy-six, the more important being foundries, carriage and wagon factories, agricultural implement works, cigar and tobacco factories, flour-mills, breweries, brick-yards, lime works, saddle and harness shops, paper mills, furniture factories, organ works, and artificial-ice factories. Population (1880), 27,268; (1890), 31,494; (1900), 36,252.

RAAB, Henry, ex-State Superintendent of Public Instruction, was born in Wetzlar, Rhenish Prussia, June 20, 1837; learned the trade of a currier with his father and came to the United States in 1853, finally locating at Belleville, Ill., where, in 1857, he became a teacher in the public schools; in 1873 was made Superintendent of schools for that city, and, in 1882, was elected State Superintendent of Public Instruction on the Democratic ticket, declined a renomination in 1886; was nominated a second time in 1890, and re-elected, but defeated by S. M. Inglis in 1894. In the administration of his office, Professor Raab showed a commendable freedom from partisanship. After retiring from the office of State Superintendent, he resumed a position in connection with the public schools of Belleville.

RADISSON, Pierre Esprit, an early French traveler and trader, who is said to have reached the Upper Mississippi on his third voyage to the West in 1658-59. The period of his explorations extended from 1652 to 1684, of which he prepared a narrative which was published by the Prince Society of Boston in 1885, under the title of "Radisson's Voyages." He and his brother-in-law, Medard Chouart, first conceived the idea of planting a settlement at Hudson's Bay. (See Chouart, Medard.)

RAILROAD AND WAREHOUSE COMMISSION, a Board of three Commissioners, appointed by the executive (by and with the advice and consent of the Senate), under authority of an act approved, April 13, 1871, for the enforcement of the provisions of the Constitution and laws in relation to railroads and warehouses. The Commission's powers are partly judicial, partly executive. The following is a summary of its powers and duties: To establish a schedule of maximum rates, equitable to shipper and carrier alike; to require yearly reports from railroads and warehouses; to hear and pass upon complaints of extortion and unjust discrimination, and (if necessary) enforce prosecutions therefor; to secure the safe condition of railway road-beds, bridges and trestles; to hear and decide all manner of complaints relative to intersections and to protect grade-crossings; to insure the adoption of a safe interlocking system, to be approved by the Commission; to enforce proper rules for the inspection and registration of grain throughout the State. The principal offices of the Commission are at the State capital, where monthly sessions are held. For the purpose of properly conducting the grain inspection department, monthly meetings are also held at Chicago, where the offices of a Grain Inspector, appointed by the Board, are located. Here all business relating to this department is discussed and necessary special meetings are held. The inspection department has no revenue outside of fees, but the latter are ample for its maintenance. Fees for inspection on arrival ("inspection in") are twenty-five cents per car-load, ten cents per wagon-load, and forty cents per 1,000 bushels from canal-boat or vessels. For inspection from store ("inspected out") the fees are fifty cents per 1,000 bushels to vessels; thirty-five cents per car-load, and ten cents per wagon-load to teams. While there are never wanting some cases of friction between the transportation companies and warehousemen on the one hand, and the Commission on the other, there can be no question that the formation of the latter has been of great value to the receivers, shippers, forwarders and tax-payers of the State generally. Similar regulations in regard to the inspection of grain in warehouses, at East St. Louis and Peoria, are also in force. The first Board, created under the act of 1871, consisted of Gustavus Koerner, Richard P. Morgan and David S. Hammond, holding office until 1873. Other Boards have been as follows: 1873-77—Henry D. Cook (deceased 1873, and succeeded by James Steele), David A. Brown and John M. Pearson; 1877-83—William M. Smith, George M. Bogue and John H. Oberly (retired 1881 and succeeded by William H. Robinson); 1883-85—Wm. N. Brainard, E. C. Lewis and Charles T. Stratton; 1885-89—John I. Rinaker, Benjamin F. Marsh and Wm. T. Johnson (retired in 1887 and succeeded by Jason Rogers); 1889-93—John R. Wheeler, Isaac N. Phillips and W. S. Crim (succeeded, 1891, by John R. Tanner); 1893-97—W. S. Cantrell, Thomas F. Gahan and Charles F. Lape (succeeded, 1895, by George W. Fithian); 1897-99—Cicero J. Lindley, Charles S. Rannells and James E. Bidwell. (See also Grain Inspection.)

RAILROADS (IN GENERAL). The existing railroad system of Illinois had its inception in the mania for internal improvement which swept over the country in 1836-37, the basis of the plan adopted in Illinois (as in the Eastern States) being that the State should construct, maintain, own and operate an elaborate system. Lines were to be constructed from Cairo to Galena, from Alton to Mount Carmel, from Peoria to Warsaw, from Alton to the Central Railroad, from Belleville to Mount Carmel, from Bloomington to Mackinaw Town, and from Meredosia to Springfield. The experiment proved extremely unfortunate to the financial interests of the State, and laid the foundation of an immense debt under which it staggered for many years. The Northern Cross Railroad, extending from Meredosia to Springfield, was the only one so far completed as to be in operation. It was sold, in 1847, to Nicholas H. Ridgely, of Springfield for $21,100, he being the highest bidder. This line formed a nucleus of the existing Wabash system. The first road to be operated by private parties (outside of a primitive tramway in St. Clair County, designed for the transportation of coal to St. Louis) was the Galena & Chicago Union, chartered in 1836. This was the second line completed in the State, and the first to run from Chicago. The subsequent development of the railway system of Illinois was at first gradual, then steady and finally rapid. A succinct description of the various lines now in operation in the State may be found under appropriate headings. At present Illinois leads all the States of the Union in the extent of railways in operation, the total mileage (1897) of main track being 10,785.43—or 19 miles for each 100 square miles of territory and 25 miles for each 10,000 inhabitants—estimating the population (1898) at four and a quarter millions. Every one of the 102 counties of the State is traversed by at least one railroad except three—Calhoun, Hardin and Pope. The entire capitalization of the 111 companies doing business in the State in 1896, (including capital stock, funded debt and current liabilities), was $2,669,164,142—equal to $67,556 per mile. In 1894, fifteen owned and ten leased lines paid dividends of from four to eight per cent on common, and from four to ten per cent on preferred, stock—the total amount thus paid aggregating $25,321,752. The total earnings and income, in Illinois, of all lines operated in the State, aggregated $77,508,537, while the total expenditure within the State was $71,463,367. Of the 58,263,860 tons of freight carried, 11,611,798 were of agricultural products and 17,179,366 mineral products. The number of passengers (earning revenue) carried during the year, was 83,281,655. The total number of railroad employés (of all classes) was 61,200. The entire amount of taxes paid by railroad companies for the year was $3,846,379. From 1836, when the first special charter was granted for the construction of a railroad in Illinois, until 1869—after which all corporations of this character came under the general incorporation laws of the State in accordance with the Constitution of 1870—293 special charters for the construction of railroads were granted by the Legislature, besides numerous amendments of charters already in existence. (For the history of important individual lines see each road under its corporate name.)

RALSTON, Virgil Young, editor and soldier, was born, July 16, 1828, at Vanceburg, Ky.; was a student in Illinois College one year (1846-47), after which he studied law in Quincy and practiced for a time; also resided some time in California; 1855-57 was one of the editors of "The Quincy Whig," and represented that paper in the Editorial Convention at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) In 1861, he was commissioned a Captain in the Sixteenth Illinois Volunteers, but soon resigned on account of ill-health; later, enlisted in an Iowa regiment, but died in hospital at St. Louis, from wounds and exposure, April 19, 1864.

RAMSAY, Rufus N., State Treasurer, was born on a farm in Clinton County, Ill., May 20, 1838; received a collegiate education at Illinois and McKendree Colleges, and at Indiana State University; studied law with ex-Gov. A. C. French, and was admitted to the bar in 1865, but soon abandoned the law for banking, in which he was engaged both at Lebanon and Carlyle, limiting his business to the latter place about 1890. He served one term (from 1865) as County Clerk, and two terms (1889 and '91) as Representative in the General Assembly, and, in 1892, was nominated as a Democrat and elected State Treasurer. Died in office, at Carlyle, Nov. 11, 1894.

RAMSEY, a village of Fayette County, at the intersection of the Illinois Central and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroads, 12 miles north of Vandalia; the district is agricultural; has one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 598; (1900), 747.

RANDOLPH COUNTY, lies in the southwest section of the State, and borders on the Mississippi River; area 560 square miles; named for Beverly Randolph. It was set off from St. Clair County in 1795, being the second county organized in the territory which now constitutes the State of Illinois. From the earliest period of Illinois history, Randolph County has been a pivotal point. In the autumn of 1700 a French and Indian settlement was established at Kaskaskia, which subsequently became the center of French influence in the Mississippi Valley. In 1722 Prairie du Rocher was founded by the French. It was in Randolph County that Fort Chartres was built, in 1720, and it was here that Col. George Rogers Clark's expedition for the seizure of the "Illinois Country" met with success in the capture of Kaskaskia. American immigration began with the close of the Revolutionary War. Among the early settlers were the Cranes (Ichabod and George), Gen. John Edgar, the Dodge family, the Morrisons, and John Rice Jones. Toward the close of the century came Shadrach Bond (afterwards the first Governor of the State) with his uncle of the same name, and the Menards (Pierre and Hippolyte), the first of whom subsequently became Lieutenant-Governor. (See Bond, Shadrach; Menard, Pierre.) In outline, Randolph County is triangular, while its surface is diversified. Timber and building stone are abundant, and coal underlies a considerable area. Chester, the county-seat, a city of 3,000 inhabitants, is a place of considerable trade and the seat of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary. The county is crossed by several railroad lines, and transportation facilities are excellent. Population (1890), 25,049; (1900), 28,001.

RANSOM, (Gen.) Thomas Edward Greenfield, soldier, was born at Norwich, Vt., Nov. 29, 1834; educated at Norwich University, an institution under charge of his father, who was later an officer of the Mexican War and killed at Chapultepec. Having learned civil engineering, he entered on his profession at Peru, Ill., in 1851; in 1855 became a member of the real-estate firm of A. J. Galloway & Co., Chicago, soon after removing to Fayette County, where he acted as agent of the Illinois Central Railroad. Under the first call for volunteers, in April, 1861, he organized a company, which having been incorporated in the Eleventh Illinois, he was elected Major, and, on the reorganization of the regiment for the three-years' service, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, in this capacity having command of his regiment at Fort Donelson, where he was severely wounded and won deserved promotion to a colonelcy, as successor to Gen. W. H. L. Wallace, afterwards killed at Shiloh. Here Colonel Ransom again distinguished himself by his bravery, and though again wounded while leading his regiment, remained in command through the day. His service was recognized by promotion as Brigadier-General. He bore a prominent part in the siege of Vicksburg and in the Red River campaign, and, later, commanded the Seventh Army Corps in the operations about Atlanta, but finally fell a victim to disease and his numerous wounds, dying in Chicago, Oct. 29, 1864, having previously received the brevet rank of Major-General. General Ransom was confessedly one of the most brilliant officers contributed by Illinois to the War for the Union, and was pronounced, by both Grant and Sherman, one of the ablest volunteer generals in their commands.

RANTOUL, a city in Champaign County, at the junction of the main line of the Illinois Central Railroad, with its West Lebanon and Leroy branch, 14 miles north-northeast of Champaign and 114 miles south by west of Chicago. It has a national bank, seven churches, opera house, graded school, two weekly papers, machine shops, flouring and flax mills, tile factories, and many handsome residences. Pop. (1900), 1,207.

RASLE, Sebastian, a Jesuit missionary, born in France, in 1658; at his own request was attached to the French missions in Canada in 1689, and, about 1691 or '92, was sent to the Illinois Country, where he labored for two years, traveling much and making a careful study of the Indian dialects. He left many manuscripts descriptive of his journeyings and of the mode of life and character of the aborigines. From Illinois he was transferred to Norridgewock, Maine, where he prepared a dictionary of the Abenaki language in three volumes, which is now preserved in the library of Harvard College. His influence over his Indian parishioners was great, and his use of it, during the French and Indian War, so incensed the English colonists in Massachusetts that the Governor set a price upon his head. On August 12, 1724, he was slain, with seven Indian chiefs who were seeking to aid his escape, during a night attack upon Norridgewock by a force of English soldiers from Fort Richmond, his mutilated body being interred the next day by the Indians. In 1833, the citizens of Norridgewock erected a monument to his memory on the spot where he fell.

RASTER, Herman, journalist, was born in Germany in 1828; entered journalism and came to America in 1851, being employed on German papers in Buffalo and New York City; in 1867 accepted the position of editor-in-chief of "The Chicago Staats Zeitung," which he continued to fill until June, 1890, when he went to Europe for the benefit of his health, dying at Dresden, July 24, 1891. While employed on papers in this country during the Civil War, he acted as the American correspondent of papers at Berlin, Bremen, Vienna, and other cities of Central Europe. He served as delegate to both State and National Conventions of the Republican party, and, in 1869, received from President Grant the appointment of Collector of Internal Revenue for the Chicago District, but, during the later years of his life, coöperated with the Democratic party.

RAUCH, John Henry, physician and sanitary expert, born in Lebanon, Pa., Sept. 4, 1828, and graduated in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, in 1849. The following year he removed to Iowa, settling at Burlington. He was an active member of the Iowa State Medical Society, and, in 1851, prepared and published a "Report on the Medical and Economic Botany of Iowa," and, later, made a collection of ichthyologic remains of the Upper Mississippi and Missouri for Professor Agassiz. From 1857 to 1860 he filled the chair of Materia Medica and Medical Botany at Rush Medical College, Chicago, occupying the same position in 1859 in the Chicago College of Pharmacy, of which he was one of the organizers. During the Civil War he served, until 1864, as Assistant Medical Director, first in the Army of the Potomac, and later in Louisiana, being brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel at the close of the struggle. Returning to Chicago, he aided in reorganizing the city's health service, and, in 1867, was appointed a member of the new Board of Health and Sanitary Inspector, serving until 1876. The latter year he was chosen President of the American Public Health Association, and, in 1877, a member of the newly created State Board of Health of Illinois, and elected its first President. Later, he became Secretary, and continued in that office during his connection with the Board. In 1878-79 he devoted much attention to the yellow-fever epidemic, and was instrumental in the formation of the Sanitary Council of the Mississippi, and in securing the adoption of a system of river inspection by the National Board of Health. He was a member of many scientific bodies, and the author of numerous monographs and printed addresses, chiefly in the domain of sanitary science and preventive medicine. Among them may be noticed "Intramural Interments and Their Influence on Health and Epidemics," "Sanitary Problems of Chicago," "Prevention of Asiatic Cholera in North America," and a series of reports as Secretary of the State Board of Health. Died, at Lebanon, Pa., March 24, 1894.

RAUM, (Gen.) Green Berry, soldier and author, was born at Golconda, Pope County, Ill., Dec. 3, 1829, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1853, but, three years later, removed with his family to Kansas. His Free-State proclivities rendering him obnoxious to the pro-slavery party there, he returned to Illinois in 1857, settling at Harrisburg, Saline County. Early in the Civil War he was commissioned a Major in the Fifty-sixth Illinois Volunteers, was subsequently promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, and, later, advanced to a Brigadier-Generalship, resigning his commission at the close of the war (May 6, 1865). He was with Rosecrans in the Mississippi campaign of 1862, took a conspicuous part in the battle of Corinth, participated in the siege of Vicksburg and was wounded at Missionary Ridge. He also rendered valuable service during the Atlanta campaign, keeping lines of communication open, re-enforcing Resaca and repulsing an attack by General Hood. He was with Sherman in the "March to the Sea," and with Hancock, in the Shenandoah Valley, when the war closed. In 1866 General Raum became President of the projected Cairo & Vincennes Railroad, an enterprise of which he had been an active promoter. He was elected to Congress in 1866 from the Southern Illinois District (then the Thirteenth), serving one term, and the same year presided over the Republican State Convention, as he did again in 1876 and in 1880—was also a delegate to the National Conventions at Cincinnati and Chicago the last two years just mentioned. From August 2, 1876, to May 31, 1883, General Raum served as Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, in that time having superintended the collection of $800,000,000 of revenue, and the disbursement of $30,000,000. After retiring from the Commissionership, he resumed the practice of law in Washington. In 1889 he was appointed Commissioner of Pensions, remaining to the close of President Harrison's administration, when he removed to Chicago and again engaged in practice. During the various political campaigns of the past thirty years, his services have been in frequent request as a campaign speaker, and he has canvassed a number of States in the interest of the Republican party. Besides his official reports, he is author of "The Existing Conflict Between Republican Government and Southern Oligarchy" (Washington, 1884), and a number of magazine articles.

RAUM, John, pioneer and early legislator, was born in Hummelstown, Pa., July 14, 1793, and died at Golconda, Ill., March 14, 1869. Having received a liberal education in his native State, the subject of this sketch settled at Shawneetown, Ill., in 1823, but removed to Golconda, Pope County, in 1826. He had previously served three years in the War of 1812, as First Lieutenant of the Sixteenth Infantry, and, while a resident of Illinois, served in the Black Hawk War of 1832 as Brigade Major. He was also elected Senator from the District composed of Pope and Johnson Counties in the Eighth General Assembly (1833), as successor to Samuel Alexander, who had resigned. The following year he was appointed Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pope County, and was also elected Clerk of the County Court the same year, holding both offices for many years, and retaining the County Clerkship up to his death, a period of thirty-five years. He was married March 22, 1827, to Juliet C. Field, and was father of Brig.-Gen. Green B. Raum, and Maj. John M. Raum, both of whom served in the volunteer army from Illinois during the Civil War.

RAWLINS, John Aaron, soldier, Secretary of War, was born at East Galena, Feb. 13, 1831, the son of a small farmer, who was also a charcoal-burner. The son, after irregular attendance on the district schools and a year passed at Mount Morris Academy, began the study of law. He was admitted to the bar at Galena in 1854, and at once began practice. In 1857 he was elected City Attorney of Galena, and nominated on the Douglas electoral ticket in 1860. At the outbreak of the Civil War he favored, and publicly advocated, coercive measures, and it is said that it was partly through his influence that General Grant early tendered his services to the Government. He served on the staff of the latter from the time General Grant was given command of a brigade until the close of the war, most of the time being its chief, and rising in rank, step by step, until, in 1863, he became a Brigadier-General, and, in 1865, a Major-General. His long service on the staff of General Grant indicates the estimation in which he was held by his chief. Promptly on the assumption of the Presidency by General Grant, in March, 1869, he was appointed Secretary of War, but consumption had already obtained a hold upon his constitution, and he survived only six months, dying in office, Sept. 6, 1869.

RAY, Charles H., journalist, was born at Norwich, Chenango County, N. Y., March 12, 1821; came west in 1843, studied medicine and began practice at Muscatine, Iowa, afterwards locating in Tazewell County, Ill., also being associated, for a time, with the publication of a temperance paper at Springfield. In 1847 he removed to Galena, soon after becoming editor of "The Galena Jeffersonian," a Democratic paper, with which he remained until 1854. He took strong ground against the Kansas-Nebraska Bill, and, at the session of the Legislature of 1855, served as Secretary of the Senate, also acting as correspondent of "The New York Tribune"; a few months later became associated with Joseph Medill and John C. Vaughan in the purchase and management of "The Chicago Tribune," Dr. Ray assuming the position of editor-in-chief. Dr. Ray was one of the most trenchant and powerful writers ever connected with the Illinois press, and his articles exerted a wide influence during the period of the organization of the Republican party, in which he was an influential factor. He was a member of the Convention of Anti-Nebraska editors held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, and served as Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) At the State Republican Convention held at Bloomington, in May following, he was appointed a member of the State Central Committee for that year; was also Canal Trustee by appointment of Governor Bissell, serving from 1857 to 1861. In November, 1863, he severed his connection with "The Tribune" and engaged in oil speculations in Canada which proved financially disastrous. In 1865 he returned to the paper as an editorial writer, remaining only for a short time. In 1868 he assumed the management of "The Chicago Evening Post," with which he remained identified until his death, Sept. 23, 1870.

RAY, Lyman Beecher, ex-Lieutenant-Governor, was born in Crittenden County, Vt., August 17, 1831; removed to Illinois in 1852, and has since been engaged in mercantile business in this State. After filling several local offices he was elected to represent Grundy County in the lower house of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly (1872), and, ten years later, was chosen State Senator, serving from 1883 to 1887, and being one of the recognized party leaders on the floor. In 1888, he was elected Lieutenant-Governor on the Republican ticket, his term expiring in 1893. His home is at Morris, Grundy County.

RAY, William H., Congressman, was born in Dutchess County, N. Y., Dec. 14, 1812; grew to manhood in his native State, receiving a limited education; in 1834 removed to Rushville, Ill., engaging in business as a merchant and, later, as a banker; was a member of the first State Board of Equalization (1867-69), and, in 1872, was elected to Congress as a Republican, representing his District from 1873 to 1875. Died, Jan. 25, 1881.

RAYMOND, a village of Montgomery County, on the St. Louis Division of the Wabash Railway, 50 miles southwest of Decatur; has electric lights, some manufactures and a weekly paper. Considerable coal is mined here and grain and fruit grown in the surrounding country. Population (1880), 543; (1890), 841; (1900), 906.

RAYMOND, (Rev.) Miner, D.D., clergyman and educator, was born in New York City, August 29, 1811, being descended from a family of Huguenots (known by the name of "Raimonde"), who were expelled from France on account of their religion. In his youth he learned the trade of a shoemaker with his father, at Rensselaerville, N. Y. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at the age of 17, later taking a course in the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., where he afterwards became a teacher. In 1838 he joined the New England Conference and, three years later, began pastoral work at Worcester, subsequently occupying pulpits in Boston and Westfield. In 1848, on the resignation of Dr. Robert Allyn (afterwards President of McKendree College and of the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale), Dr. Raymond succeeded to the principalship of the Academy at Wilbraham, remaining there until 1864, when he was elected to the chair of systematic theology in the Garrett Biblical Institute at Evanston, Ill., his connection with the latter institution continuing until 1895, when he resigned. For some three years of this period he served as pastor of the First Methodist Church at Evanston. His death occurred, Nov. 25, 1897.

REAVIS, Logan Uriah, journalist, was born in the Sangamon Bottom, Mason County, Ill., March 26, 1831; in 1855 entered the office of "The Beardstown Gazette," later purchased an interest in the paper and continued its publication under the name of "The Central Illinoian," until 1857, when he sold out and went to Nebraska. Returning, in 1860, he repurchased his old paper and conducted it until 1866, when he sold out for the last time. The remainder of his life was devoted chiefly to advocating the removal of the National Capital to St. Louis, which he did by lectures and the publication of pamphlets and books on the subject; also published a "Life of Horace Greeley," another of General Harney, and two or three other volumes. Died in St. Louis, April 25, 1889.

RECTOR, the name of a prominent and influential family who lived at Kaskaskia in Territorial days. According to Governor Reynolds, who has left the most detailed account of them in his "Pioneer History of Illinois," they consisted of nine brothers and four daughters, all of whom were born in Fauquier County, Va., some of them emigrating to Ohio, while others came to Illinois, arriving at Kaskaskia in 1806. Reynolds describes them as passionate and impulsive, but possessed of a high standard of integrity and a chivalrous and patriotic spirit.—William, the oldest brother, and regarded as the head of the family, became a Deputy Surveyor soon after coming to Illinois, and took part in the Indian campaigns between 1812 and 1814. In 1816 he was appointed Surveyor-General of Illinois, Missouri and Arkansas, and afterwards removed to St. Louis.—Stephen, another of the brothers, was a Lieutenant in Captain Moore's Company of Rangers in the War of 1812, while Charles commanded one of the two regiments organized by Governor Edwards, in 1812, for the expedition against the Indians at the head of Peoria Lake. —Nelson, still another brother, served in the same expedition on the staff of Governor Edwards. Stephen, already mentioned, was a member of the expedition sent to strengthen Prairie du Chien in 1814, and showed great courage in a fight with the Indians at Rock Island. During the same year Nelson Rector and Captain Samuel Whiteside joined Col. Zachary Taylor (afterwards President) in an expedition on the Upper Mississippi, in which they came in conflict with the British and Indians at Rock Island, in which Captain Rector again displayed the courage so characteristic of his family. On the 1st of March, 1814, while in charge of a surveying party on Saline Creek, in Gallatin County, according to Reynolds, Nelson was ambushed by the Indians and, though severely wounded, was carried away by his horse, and recovered.—Elias, another member of the family, was Governor Edwards' first Adjutant-General, serving a few months in 1809, when he gave place to Robert Morrison, but was reappointed in 1810, serving for more than three years.—Thomas, one of the younger members, had a duel with Joshua Barton on "Bloody Island," sometime between 1812 and 1814, in which he killed his antagonist. (See Duels.) A portion of this historic family drifted into Arkansas, where they became prominent, one of their descendants serving as Governor of that State during the Civil War period.

RED BUD, a city in Randolph County, on the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, some 37 miles south-southeast of St. Louis, and 21 miles south of Belleville; has a carriage factory and two flouring mills, electric lights, a hospital, two banks, five churches, a graded school and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,176; (1900), 1,169.

REEVES, Owen T., lawyer and jurist, was born in Ross County, Ohio, Dec. 18, 1829; graduated at the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, in 1850, afterwards serving as a tutor in that institution and as Principal of a High School at Chillicothe. In 1854 he came to Bloomington, Ill., and, as a member of the School Board, assisted in reorganizing the school system of that city; also has served continuously, for over 40 years, as one of the Trustees of the Illinois Wesleyan University, being a part of the time President of the Board. In the meantime, he had begun the practice of law, served as City Attorney and member of the Board of Supervisors. July 1, 1862, he enlisted in the Seventieth Illinois Volunteers (a 100-days' emergency regiment), was elected Colonel and mustered out, with his command, in October, 1862. Colonel Reeves was subsequently connected with the construction of the Lafayette, Bloomington & Mississippi Railroad (now a part of the Illinois Central), and was also one of the founders of the Law Department of the Wesleyan University. In 1877 he was elected to the Circuit bench, serving continuously, by repeated re-elections, until 1891—during the latter part of his incumbency being upon the Appellate bench.

REEVES, Walter, Member of Congress and lawyer, was born near Brownsville, Pa., Sept. 25, 1848; removed to Illinois at 8 years of age and was reared on a farm; later became a teacher and lawyer, following his profession at Streator; in 1894 he was nominated by the Republicans of the Eleventh District for Congress, as successor to the Hon. Thomas J. Henderson, and was elected, receiving a majority over three competitors. Mr. Reeves was re-elected in 1896, and again in 1898.

REFORMATORY, ILLINOIS STATE, a prison for the incarceration of male offenders under 21 years of age, who are believed to be susceptible of reformation. It is the successor of the "State Reform School," which was created by act of the Legislature of 1867, but not opened for the admission of inmates until 1871. It is located at Pontiac. The number of inmates, in 1872, was 165, which was increased to 324 in 1890. The results, while moderately successful, were not altogether satisfactory. The appropriations made for construction, maintenance, etc., were not upon a scale adequate to accomplish what was desired, and, in 1891, a radical change was effected. Previous to that date the limit, as to age, was 16 years. The law establishing the present reformatory provides for a system of indeterminate sentences, and a release upon parole, of inmates who, in the opinion of the Board of Managers, may be safely granted conditional liberation. The inmates are divided into two classes. (1) those between the ages of 10 and 16, and (2) those between 16 and 21. The Board of Managers is composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be of the same party, their term of office to be for ten years. The course of treatment is educational (intellectually, morally and industrially), schools being conducted, trades taught, and the inmates constantly impressed with the conviction that, only through genuine and unmistakable evidence of improvement, can they regain their freedom. The reformatory influence of the institution may be best inferred from the results of one year's operation. Of 146 inmates paroled, 15 violated their parole and became fugitives, 6 were returned to the Reformatory, 1 died, and 124 remained in employment and regularly reporting. Among the industries carried on are painting and glazing, masonry and plastering, gardening, knitting, chair-caning, broom-making, carpentering, tailoring and blacksmithing. The grounds of the Reformatory contain a vein of excellent coal, which it is proposed to mine, utilizing the clay, thus obtained, in the manufacture of brick, which can be employed in the construction of additional needed buildings. The average number of inmates is about 800, and the crimes for which they are sentenced range, in gravity, from simple assault, or petit larceny, to the most serious offenses known to the criminal code, with the exception of homicide. The number of inmates, at the beginning of the year 1895, was 812. An institution of a similar character, for the confinement of juvenile female offenders, was established under an act of the Legislature passed at the session of 1893, and located at Geneva, Kane County. (See Home for Juvenile Female Offenders.)

RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS. The State constitution contains the familiar guaranty of absolute freedom of conscience. The chief denominations have grown in like ratio with the population, as may be seen from figures given below. The earliest Christian services held were conducted by Catholic missionaries, who attested the sincerity of their convictions (in many instances) by the sacrifice of their lives, either through violence or exposure. The aborigines, however, were not easily Christianized; and, shortly after the cession of Illinois by France to Great Britain, the Catholic missions, being generally withdrawn, ceased to exert much influence upon the red men, although the French, who remained in the ceded territory, continued to adhere to their ancient faith. (See Early Missionaries.) One of the first Protestant sects to hold service in Illinois, was the Methodist Episcopal; Rev. Joseph Lillard coming to Illinois in 1793, and Rev. Hosea Riggs settling in the American Bottom in 1796. (For history of Methodism in Illinois, see Methodist Episcopal Church.) The pioneer Protestant preacher, however, was a Baptist—Elder James Smith—who came to New Design in 1787. Revs. David Badgley and Joseph Chance followed him in 1796, and the first denominational association was formed in 1807. (As to inception and growth of this denomination in Illinois, see also Baptists.) In 1814 the Massachusetts Missionary Society sent two missionaries to Illinois—Revs. Samuel J. Mills and Daniel Smith. Two years later (1816), the First Presbyterian Church was organized at Sharon, by Rev. James McGready, of Kentucky. (See also Presbyterians.) The Congregationalists began to arrive with the tide of immigration that set in from the Eastern States, early in the '30's. Four churches were organized in 1833, and the subsequent growth of the denomination in the State, if gradual, has been steady. (See Congregationalists.) About the same time came the Disciples of Christ (sometimes called, from their founder, "Campbellites"). They encouraged free discussion, were liberal and warm hearted, and did not require belief in any particular creed as a condition of membership. The sect grew rapidly in numerical strength. (See Disciples of Christ.) The Protestant Episcopalians obtained their first foothold in Illinois, in 1835, when Rev. Philander Chase (afterward consecrated Bishop) immigrated to the State from the East. (See Protestant Episcopal Church.) The Lutherans in Illinois are chiefly of German or Scandinavian birth or descent, as may be inferred from the fact that, out of sixty-four churches in Chicago under care of the Missouri Synod, only four use the English language. They are the only Protestant sect maintaining (whenever possible) a system of parochial schools. (See Lutherans.) There are twenty-six other religious bodies in the State, exclusive of the Jews, who have twelve synagogues and nine rabbis. According to the census statistics of 1890, these twenty-six sects, with their numerical strength, number of buildings, ministers, etc., are as follows: Anti-Mission Baptists, 2,800 members, 78 churches and 63 ministers; Church of God, 1,200 members, 39 churches, 34 ministers; Dunkards, 121,000 members, 155 churches, 83 ministers; Friends ("Quakers") 2,655 members, 25 churches; Free Methodists, 1,805 members, 38 churches, 84 ministers; Free-Will Baptists, 4,694 members, 107 churches, 72 ministers; Evangelical Association, 15,904 members, 143 churches, 152 ministers; Cumberland Presbyterians, 11,804 members, 198 churches, 149 ministers; Methodist Episcopal (South) 3,927 members, 34 churches, 33 ministers; Moravians, 720 members, 3 churches, 3 ministers; New Jerusalem Church (Swedenborgians), 662 members, 14 churches, 8 ministers; Primitive Methodist, 230 members, 2 churches, 2 ministers; Protestant Methodist, 5,000 members, 91 churches, 106 ministers; Reformed Church in United States, 4,100 members, 34 churches, 19 ministers; Reformed Church of America, 2,200 members, 24 churches, 23 ministers; Reformed Episcopalians, 2,150 members, 13 churches, 11 ministers; Reformed Presbyterians, 1,400 members, 7 churches, 6 ministers; Salvation Army, 1,980 members; Second Adventists, 4,500 members, 64 churches, 35 ministers; Seventh Day Baptists, 320 members, 7 churches, 11 ministers; Universalists, 3,160 members, 45 churches, 37 ministers; Unitarians, 1,225 members, 19 churches, 14 ministers; United Evangelical, 30,000 members, 129 churches, 108 ministers; United Brethren, 16,500 members, 275 churches, 260 ministers; United Presbyterians, 11,250 members, 203 churches, 199 ministers; Wesleyan Methodists, 1,100 members, 16 churches, 33 ministers. (See various Churches under their proper names; also Roman Catholic Church.)

REND, William Patrick, soldier, capitalist, and coal-operator, was born in County Leitrim, Ireland, Feb. 10, 1840, brought to Lowell, Mass., in boyhood, and graduated from the high school there at 17; taught for a time near New York City and later in Maryland, where he began a course of classical study. The Civil War coming on, he enlisted in the Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteers, serving most of the time as a non-commissioned officer, and participating in the battles of the second Bull Run, Malvern Hill, Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. After the war he came to Chicago and secured employment in a railway surveyor's office, later acting as foreman of the Northwestern freight depot, and finally embarking in the coal business, which was conducted with such success that he became the owner of some of the most valuable mining properties in the country. Meanwhile he has taken a deep interest in the welfare of miners and other classes of laborers, and has sought to promote arbitration and conciliation between employers and employed, as a means of averting disastrous strikes. He was especially active during the long strike of 1897, in efforts to bring about an understanding between the miners and the operators. For several years he held a commission as Lieutenant-Colonel of the Illinois National Guard until compelled, by the demands of his private business, to tender his resignation.

REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS.

REYNOLDS, John, Justice of Supreme Court and fourth Governor of Illinois, was born of Irish ancestry, in Montgomery County, Pa., Feb. 26, 1789, and brought by his parents to Kaskaskia, Ill., in 1800, spending the first nine years of his life in Illinois on a farm. After receiving a common school education, and a two years' course of study in a college at Knoxville, Tenn., he studied law and began practice. In 1812-13 he served as a scout in the campaigns against the Indians, winning for himself the title, in after life, of "The Old Ranger." Afterwards he removed to Cahokia, where he began the practice of law, and, in 1818, became Associate Justice of the first Supreme Court of the new State. Retiring from the bench in 1825, he served two terms in the Legislature, and was elected Governor in 1830, in 1832 personally commanding the State volunteers called for service in the Black Hawk War. Two weeks before the expiration of his term (1834), he resigned to accept a seat in Congress, to which he had been elected as the successor of Charles Slade, who had died in office, and was again elected in 1838, always as a Democrat. He also served as Representative in the Fifteenth General Assembly, and again in the Eighteenth (1852-54), being chosen Speaker of the latter. In 1858 he was the administration (or Buchanan) Democratic candidate for State Superintendent of Public Instruction, as opposed to the Republican and regular (or Douglas) Democratic candidates. For some years he edited a daily paper called "The Eagle," which was published at Belleville. While Governor Reynolds acquired some reputation as a "classical scholar," from the time spent in a Tennessee College at that early day, this was not sustained by either his colloquial or written style. He was an ardent champion of slavery, and, in the early days of the Rebellion, gained unfavorable notoriety in consequence of a letter written to Jefferson Davis expressing sympathy with the cause of "secession." Nevertheless, in spite of intense prejudice and bitter partisanship on some questions, he possessed many amiable qualities, as shown by his devotion to temperance, and his popularity among persons of opposite political opinions. Although at times crude in style, and not always reliable in his statement of historical facts and events, Governor Reynolds has rendered a valuable service to posterity by his writings relating to the early history of the State, especially those connected with his own times. His best known works are: "Pioneer History of Illinois" (Belleville, 1848); "A Glance at the Crystal Palace, and Sketches of Travel" (1854); and "My Life and Times" (1855). His death occurred at Belleville, May 8, 1865.

REYNOLDS, John Parker, Secretary and President of State Board of Agriculture, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, March 1, 1820, and graduated from the Miami University at the age of 18. In 1840 he graduated from the Cincinnati Law School, and soon afterward began practice. He removed to Illinois in 1854, settling first in Winnebago County, later, successively in Marion County, in Springfield and in Chicago. From 1860 to 1870 he was Secretary of the State Agricultural Society, and, upon the creation of the State Board of Agriculture in 1871, was elected its President, filling that position until 1888, when he resigned. He has also occupied numerous other posts of honor and of trust of a public or semi-public character, having been President of the Illinois State Sanitary Commission during the War of the Rebellion, a Commissioner to the Paris Exposition of 1867, Chief Grain Inspector from 1878 to 1882, and Secretary of the Inter-State Industrial Exposition Company of Chicago, from the date of its organization (1873) until its final dissolution. His most important public service, in recent years, was rendered as Director-in-Chief of the Illinois exhibit in the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893.

REYNOLDS, Joseph Smith, soldier and legislator, was born at New Lenox, Ill., Dec. 3, 1839; at 17 years of age went to Chicago, was educated in the high school there, within a month after graduation enlisting as a private in the Sixty-fourth Illinois Volunteers. From the ranks he rose to a colonelcy through the gradations of Second-Lieutenant and Captain, and, in July, 1865, was brevetted Brigadier-General. He was a gallant soldier, and was thrice wounded. On his return home after nearly four years' service, he entered the law department of the Chicago University, graduating therefrom and beginning practice in 1866. General Reynolds has been prominent in public life, having served as a member of both branches of the General Assembly, and having been a State Commissioner to the Vienna Exposition of 1873. He is a member of the G. A. R., and, in 1875, was elected Senior Vice-Commander of the order for the United States.

REYNOLDS, William Morton, clergyman, was born in Fayette County, Pa., March 4, 1812; after graduating at Jefferson College, Pa., in 1832, was connected with various institutions in that State, as well as President of Capital University at Columbus, Ohio,; then, coming to Illinois, was President of the Illinois State University at Springfield, 1857-60, after which he became Principal of a female seminary in Chicago. Previously a Lutheran, he took orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1864, and served several parishes until his death. In his early life he founded, and, for a time, conducted several religious publications at Gettysburg, Pa., besides issuing a number of printed addresses and other published works. Died at Oak Park, near Chicago, Sept. 5, 1876.

RHOADS, (Col.) Franklin Lawrence, soldier and steamboat captain, was born in Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 11, 1824; brought to Pekin, Tazewell County, Ill., in 1836, where he learned the printer's trade, and, on the breaking out of the Mexican War, enlisted, serving to the close. Returning home he engaged in the river trade, and, for fifteen years, commanded steamboats on the Illinois, Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. In April, 1861, he was commissioned Captain of a company of three months' men attached to the Eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and, on the reorganization of the regiment for the three-years' service, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, soon after being promoted to the colonelcy, as successor to Col. Richard J. Oglesby, who had been promoted Brigadier-General. After serving through the spring campaign of 1862 in Western Kentucky and Tennessee, he was compelled by rapidly declining health to resign, when he located in Shawneetown, retiring in 1874 to his farm near that city. During the latter years of his life he was a confirmed invalid, dying at Shawneetown, Jan. 6, 1879.

RHOADS, Joshua, M.D., A.M., physician and educator, was born in Philadelphia, Sept. 14, 1806; studied medicine and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania with the degree of M.D., also receiving the degree of A.M., from Princeton; after several years spent in practice as a physician, and as Principal in some of the public schools of Philadelphia, in 1839 he was elected Principal of the Pennsylvania Institution for the Blind, and, in 1850, took charge of the State Institution for the Blind at Jacksonville, Ill., then in its infancy. Here he remained until 1874, when he retired. Died, February 1, 1876.

RICE, Edward Y., lawyer and jurist, born in Logan County, Ky., Feb. 8, 1820, was educated in the common schools and at Shurtleff College, after which he read law with John M. Palmer at Carlinville, and was admitted to practice, in 1845, at Hillsboro; in 1847 was elected County Recorder of Montgomery County, and, in 1848, to the Sixteenth General Assembly, serving one term. Later he was elected County Judge of Montgomery County, was Master in Chancery from 1853 to 1857, and the latter year was elected Judge of the Eighteenth Circuit, being re-elected in 1861 and again in 1867. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, at the election of the latter year, was chosen Representative in the Forty-second Congress as a Democrat. Died, April 16, 1883.

RICE, John B., theatrical manager, Mayor of Chicago, and Congressman, was born at Easton, Md., in 1809. By profession he was an actor, and, coming to Chicago in 1847, built and opened there the first theater. In 1857 he retired from the stage, and, in 1865, was elected Mayor of Chicago, the city of his adoption, and re-elected in 1867. He was also prominent in the early stages of the Civil War in the measures taken to raise troops in Chicago. In 1872 he was elected to the Forty-third Congress as a Republican, but, before the expiration of his term, died, at Norfolk, Va., on Dec. 6, 1874. At a special election to fill the vacancy, Bernard G. Caulfield was chosen to succeed him.

RICHARDSON, William A., lawyer and politician, born in Fayette County, Ky., Oct. 11, 1811, was educated at Transylvania University, came to the bar at 19, and settled in Schuyler County, Ill., becoming State's Attorney in 1835; was elected to the lower branch of the Legislature in 1836, to the Senate in 1838, and to the House again in 1844, from Adams County—the latter year being also chosen Presidential Elector on the Polk and Dallas ticket, and, at the succeeding session of the General Assembly, serving as Speaker of the House. He entered the Mexican War as Captain, and won a Majority through gallantry at Buena Vista. From 1847 to 1856 (when he resigned to become a candidate for Governor), he was a Democratic Representative in Congress from the Quincy District; re-entered Congress in 1861, and, in 1863, was chosen United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Stephen A. Douglas. He was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention of 1868, but after that retired to private life, acting, for a short time, as editor of "The Quincy Herald." Died, at Quincy, Dec. 27, 1875.

RICHLAND COUNTY, situated in the southeast quarter of the State, and has an area of 361 square miles. It was organized from Edwards County in 1841. Among the early pioneers may be mentioned the Evans brothers, Thaddeus Morehouse, Hugh Calhoun and son, Thomas Gardner, James Parker, Cornelius De Long, James Gilmore and Elijah Nelson. In 1820 there were but thirty families in the district. The first frame houses—the Nelson and Morehouse homesteads—were built in 1821, and, some years later, James Laws erected the first brick house. The pioneers traded at Vincennes, but, in 1825, a store was opened at Stringtown by Jacob May; and the same year the first school was opened at Watertown, taught by Isaac Chauncey. The first church was erected by the Baptists in 1822, and services were conducted by William Martin, a Kentuckian. For a long time the mails were carried on horseback by Louis and James Beard, but, in 1824, Mills and Whetsell established a line of four-horse stages. The principal road, known as the "trace road," leading from Louisville to Cahokia, followed a buffalo and Indian trail about where the main street of Olney now is. Olney was selected as the county-seat upon the organization of the county, and a Mr. Lilly built the first house there. The chief branches of industry followed by the inhabitants are agriculture and fruit-growing. Population (1880), 15,545; (1890), 15,019; (1900), 16,391.

RIDGE FARM, a village of Vermillion County, at junction of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroads, 174 miles northeast of St. Louis; has electric light plant, planing mill, elevators, bank and two papers. Pop. (1900), 933; (1904), 1,300.

RIDGELY, a manufacturing and mining suburb of the city of Springfield. An extensive rolling mill is located there, and there are several coal-shafts in the vicinity. Population(1900),1,169.

RIDGELY, Charles, manufacturer and capitalist, born in Springfield, Ill., Jan. 17, 1836; was educated in private schools and at Illinois College; after leaving college spent some time as a clerk in his father's bank at Springfield, finally becoming a member of the firm and successively Cashier and Vice-President. In 1870 he was Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, but later has affiliated with the Republican party. About 1872 he became identified with the Springfield Iron Company, of which he has been President for many years; has also been President of the Consolidated Coal Company of St. Louis and, for some time, was a Director of the Wabash Railroad. Mr. Ridgely is also one of the Trustees of Illinois College.

RIDGELY, Nicholas H., early banker, was born in Baltimore, Md., April 27, 1800; after leaving school was engaged, for a time, in the dry-goods trade, but, in 1829, came to St. Louis to assume a clerkship in the branch of the United States Bank just organized there. In 1835 a branch of the State Bank of Illinois was established at Springfield, and Mr. Ridgely became its cashier, and, when it went into liquidation, was appointed one of the trustees to wind up its affairs. He subsequently became President of the Clark's Exchange Bank in that city, but this having gone into liquidation a few years later, he went into the private banking business as head of the "Ridgely Bank," which, in 1866, became the "Ridgely National Bank," one of the strongest financial institutions in the State outside of Chicago. After the collapse of the internal improvement scheme, Mr. Ridgely became one of the purchasers of the "Northern Cross Railroad" (now that part of the Wabash system extending from the Illinois river to Springfield), when it was sold by the State in 1847, paying therefor $21,100. He was also one of the Springfield bankers to tender a loan to the State at the beginning of the war in 1861. He was one of the builders and principal owner of the Springfield gas-light system. His business career was an eminently successful one, leaving an estate at his death, Jan. 31, 1888, valued at over $2,000,000.

RIDGWAY, a village of Gallatin County, on the Shawneetown Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 12 miles northwest of Shawneetown; has a bank and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 523; (1900), 839; (1903, est.), 1,000.

RIDGWAY, Thomas S., merchant, banker and politician, was born at Carmi, Ill., August 30, 1826. His father having died when he was but 4 years old and his mother when he was 14, his education was largely acquired through contact with the world, apart from such as he received from his mother and during a year's attendance at a private school. When he was 6 years of age the family removed to Shawneetown, where he ever afterwards made his home. In 1845 he embarked in business as a merchant, and the firm of Peeples & Ridgway soon became one of the most prominent in Southern Illinois. In 1865 the partners closed out their business and organized the first National Bank of Shawneetown, of which, after the death of Mr. Peeples in 1875, Mr. Ridgway was President. He was one of the projectors of the Springfield & Illinois Southeastern Railway, now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern system, and, from 1867 to 1874, served as its President. He was an ardent and active Republican, and served as a delegate to every State and National Convention of his party from 1868 to 1896. In 1874 he was elected State Treasurer, the candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction on the same ticket being defeated. In 1876 and 1880 he was an unsuccessful candidate for his party's nomination for Governor. Three times he consented to lead the forlorn hope of the Republicans as a candidate for Congress from an impregnably Democratic stronghold. For several years he was a Director of the McCormick Theological Seminary, at Chicago, and, for nineteen years, was a Trustee of the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale, resigning in 1893. Died, at Shawneetown, Nov. 17, 1897.

RIGGS, James M., ex-Congressman, was born in Scott County, Ill., April 17, 1839, where he received a common school education, supplemented by a partial collegiate course. He is a practicing lawyer of Winchester. In 1864 he was elected Sheriff, serving two years. In 1871-72 he represented Scott County in the lower house of the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, and was State's Attorney from 1872 to 1876. In 1882, and again in 1884, he was the successful Democratic candidate for Congress in the Twelfth Illinois District.

RIGGS, Scott, pioneer, was born in North Carolina about 1790; removed to Crawford County, Ill, early in 1815, and represented that county in the First General Assembly (1818-20). In 1825 he removed to Scott County, where he continued to reside until his death, Feb. 24, 1872.

RINAKER, John I., lawyer and Congressman, born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 18, 1830. Left an orphan at an early age, he came to Illinois in 1836, and, for several years, lived on farms in Sangamon and Morgan Counties; was educated at Illinois and McKendree Colleges, graduating from the latter in 1851; in 1852 began reading law with John M. Palmer at Carlinville, and was admitted to the bar in 1854. In August, 1862, he recruited the One Hundred and Twenty-second Illinois Volunteers, of which he was commissioned Colonel. Four months later he was wounded in battle, but served with his regiment through the war, and was brevetted Brigadier-General at its close. Returning from the war he resumed the practice of his profession at Carlinville. Since 1858 he has been an active Republican; has twice (1872 and '76) served his party as a Presidential Elector—the latter year for the State-at-large—and, in 1874, accepted a nomination for Congress against William R. Morrison, largely reducing the normal Democratic majority. At the State Republican Convention of 1880 he was a prominent, but unsuccessful, candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor. In 1894 he made the race as the Republican candidate for Congress in the Sixteenth District and, although his opponent was awarded the certificate of election, on a bare majority of 60 votes on the face of the returns, a re-count, ordered by the Fifty-fourth Congress, showed a majority for General Rinaker, and he was seated near the close of the first session. He was a candidate for re-election in 1896, but defeated in a strongly Democratic District.

RIPLEY, Edward Payson, Railway President, was born in Dorchester (now a part of Boston), Mass., Oct. 30, 1845, being related, on his mother's side, to the distinguished author, Dr. Edward Payson. After receiving his education in the high school of his native place, at the age of 17 he entered upon a commercial life, as clerk in a wholesale dry-goods establishment in Boston. About the time he became of age, he entered into the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad as a clerk in the freight department in the Boston office, but, a few years later, assumed a responsible position in connection with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy line, finally becoming General Agent for the business of that road east of Buffalo, though retaining his headquarters at Boston. In 1878 he removed to Chicago to accept the position of General Freight Agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy System, with which he remained twelve years, serving successively as General Traffic Manager and General Manager, until June 1, 1890, when he resigned to become Third Vice-President of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul line. This relation was continued until Jan. 1, 1896, when Mr. Ripley accepted the Presidency of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, which (1899) he now holds. Mr. Ripley was a prominent factor in securing the location of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, and, in April, 1891, was chosen one of the Directors of the Exposition, serving on the Executive Committee and the Committee of Ways and Means and Transportation, being Chairman of the latter.

RIVERSIDE, a suburban town on the Des Plaines River and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 11 miles west of Chicago; has handsome parks, several churches, a bank, two local papers and numerous fine residences. Population (1890), 1,000; (1900), 1,551.

RIVERTON, a village in Clear Creek Township, Sangamon County, at the crossing of the Wabash Railroad over the Sangamon River, 6½ miles east-northeast of Springfield. It has four churches, a nursery, and two coal mines Population (1880), 705; (1890), 1,127, (1900), 1,511; (1903, est.), about 2,000.

RIVES, John Cook, early banker and journalist, was born in Franklin County, Va., May 24, 1795; in 1806 removed to Kentucky, where he grew up under care of an uncle, Samuel Casey. He received a good education and was a man of high character and attractive manners. In his early manhood he came to Illinois, and was connected, for a time, with the Branch State Bank at Edwardsville, but, about 1824, removed to Shawneetown and held a position in the bank there; also studied law and was admitted to practice. Finally, having accepted a clerkship in the Fourth Auditor's Office in Washington, he removed to that city, and, in 1830, became associated with Francis P. Blair, Sr., in the establishment of "The Congressional Globe" (the predecessor of "The Congressional Record"), of which he finally became sole proprietor, so remaining until 1864. Like his partner, Blair, although a native of Virginia and a life-long Democrat, he was intensely loyal, and contributed liberally of his means for the equipment of soldiers from the District of Columbia, and for the support of their families, during the Civil War. His expenditures for these objects have been estimated at some $30,000. Died, in Prince George's County, Md., April 10, 1864.

ROANOKE, a village of Woodford County, on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, 26 miles northeast of Peoria; is in a coal district; has two banks, a coal mine, and one newspaper. Population (1880), 355; (1890), 831; (1900), 966.

ROBB, Thomas Patten, Sanitary Agent, was born in Bath, Maine, in 1819; came to Cook County, Ill., in 1838, and, after arriving at manhood, established the first exclusive wholesale grocery house in Chicago, remaining in the business until 1850. He then went to California, establishing himself in mercantile business at Sacramento, where he remained seven years, meanwhile being elected Mayor of that city. Returning to Chicago on the breaking out of the war, he was appointed on the staff of Governor Yates with the rank of Major, and, while serving in this capacity, was instrumental in giving General Grant the first duty he performed in the office of the Adjutant-General after his arrival from Galena. Later, he was assigned to duty as Inspector-General of Illinois troops with the rank of Colonel, having general charge of sanitary affairs until the close of the war, when he was appointed Cotton Agent for the State of Georgia, and, still later, President of the Board of Tax Commissioners for that State. Other positions held by him were those of Postmaster and Collector of Customs at Savannah, Ga.; he was also one of the publishers of "The New Era," a Republican paper at Atlanta, and a prominent actor in reconstruction affairs. Resigning the Collectorship, he was appointed by the President United States Commissioner to investigate Mexican outrages on the Rio Grande border; was subsequently identified with Texas railroad interests as the President of the Corpus Christi & Rio Grande Railroad, and one of the projectors of the Chicago, Texas & Mexican Central Railway, being thus engaged until 1872. Later he returned to California, dying near Glenwood, in that State, April 10, 1895, aged 75 years and 10 months.

ROBERTS, William Charles, clergyman and educator, was born in a small village of Wales, England., Sept. 23, 1832; received his primary education in that country, but, removing to America during his minority, graduated from Princeton College in 1855, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1858. After filling various pastorates in Delaware, New Jersey and Ohio, in 1881 he was elected Corresponding Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, the next year being offered the Presidency of Rutgers College, which he declined. In 1887 he accepted the presidency of Lake Forest University, which he still retains. From 1859 to 1863 he was a Trustee of Lafayette College, and, in 1866, was elected to a trusteeship of his Alma Mater. He has traveled extensively in the Orient, and was a member of the first and third councils of the Reformed Churches, held at Edinburgh and Belfast. Besides occasional sermons and frequent contributions to English, American, German and Welsh periodicals, Dr. Roberts has published a Welsh translation of the Westminster shorter catechism and a collection of letters on the great preachers of Wales, which appeared in Utica, 1868. He received the degree of D.D., from Union College in 1872, and that of LL.D., from Princeton, in 1887.

ROBINSON, an incorporated city and the county-seat of Crawford County, 25 miles northwest of Vincennes, Ind., and 44 miles south of Paris, Ill.; is on two lines of railroad and in the heart of a fruit and agricultural region The city has water-works, electric lights, two banks and three weekly newspapers Population (1890) 1,387; (1900), 1,683; (1904), about 2,000.

ROBINSON, James C., lawyer and former Congressman, was born in Edgar County, Ill., in 1822, read law and was admitted to the bar in 1850. He served as a private during the Mexican War, and, in 1858, was elected to Congress as a Democrat, as he was again in 1860, '62, '70 and '72. In 1864 he was the Democratic nominee for Governor. He was a fluent speaker, and attained considerable distinction as an advocate in criminal practice. Died, at Springfield, Nov. 3, 1886.

ROBINSON, John M., United States Senator, born in Kentucky in 1793, was liberally educated and became a lawyer by profession. In early life he settled at Carmi, Ill., where he married. He was of fine physique, of engaging manners, and personally popular. Through his association with the State militia he earned the title of "General." In 1830 he was elected to the United States Senate, to fill the unexpired term of John McLean. His immediate predecessor was David Jewett Baker, appointed by Governor Edwards, who served one month but failed of election by the Legislature. In 1834 Mr. Robinson was re-elected for a full term, which expired in 1841. In 1843 he was elected to a seat upon the Illinois Supreme bench, but died at Ottawa, April 27, of the same year, within three months after his elevation.

ROCHELLE, a city of Ogle County and an intersecting point of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railways. It is 75 miles west of Chicago, 27 miles south of Rockford, and 23 miles east by north of Dixon. It is in a rich agricultural and stock-raising region, rendering Rochelle an important shipping point. Among its industrial establishments are water-works, electric lights, a flouring mill and silk-underwear factory. The city has three banks, five churches and three newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,789; (1900), 2,073; (1903), 2,500.

ROCHESTER, a village and early settlement in Sangamon County, laid out in 1819; in rich agricultural district, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 7½ miles southeast of Springfield; has a bank, two churches, one school, and a newspaper. Population (1900), 365

ROCK FALLS, a city in Whiteside County, on Rock River and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad; has excellent water-power, a good public school system with a high school, banks and a weekly newspaper. Agricultural implements, barbed wire, furniture, flour and paper are its chief manufactures. Water for the navigable feeder of the Hennepin Canal is taken from Rock River at this point. Pop. (1900), 2,176.

ROCKFORD, a flourishing manufacturing city, the county-seat of Winnebago County; lies on both sides of the Rock River, 92 miles west of Chicago. Four trunk lines of railroad—the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Chicago & Northwestern, the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul—intersect here. Excellent water-power is secured by a dam across the river, and communication between the two divisions of the city is facilitated by three railway and three highway bridges. Water is provided from five artesian wells, a reserve main leading to the river. The city is wealthy, prosperous and progressive. The assessed valuation of property, in 1893, was $6,531,235. Churches are numerous and schools, both public and private, are abundant and well conducted. The census of 1890 showed $7,715,069 capital invested in 246 manufacturing establishments, which employed 5,223 persons and turned out an annual product valued at $8,888,-904. The principal industries are the manufacture of agricultural implements and furniture, though watches, silver-plated ware, paper, flour and grape sugar are among the other products. Pop. (1880), 13,129; (1890), 23,584; (1900), 31,051.

ROCKFORD COLLEGE, located at Rockford, Ill., incorporated in 1847; in 1898 had a faculty of 21 instructors with 161 pupils. The branches taught include the classics, music and fine arts. It has a library of 6,150 volumes, funds and endowment aggregating $50,880 and property valued at $240,880, of which $150,000 is real estate.

ROCK ISLAND, the principal city and county-seat of Rock Island County, on the Mississippi River, 182 miles west by south from Chicago; is the converging point of five lines of railroad, and the western terminus of the Hennepin Canal. The name is derived from an island in the Mississippi River, opposite the city, 3 miles long, which belongs to the United States Government and contains an arsenal and armory. The river channel north of the island is navigable, the southern channel having been dammed by the Government, thereby giving great water power to Rock Island and Moline. A combined railway and highway bridge spans the river from Rock Island to Davenport, Iowa, crossing the island, while a railway bridge connects the cities a mile below. The island was the site of Fort Armstrong during the Black Hawk War, and was also a place for the confinement of Confederate prisoners during the Civil War. Rock Island is in a region of much picturesque scenery and has extensive manufactures of lumber, agricultural implements, iron, carriages and wagons and oilcloth; also five banks and three newspapers, two issuing daily editions. Pop. (1890), 13,634; (1900), 19,493.

ROCK ISLAND COUNTY, in the northwestern section of the State bordering upon the Mississippi River (which constitutes its northwestern boundary for more than 60 miles), and having an area of 440 square miles. In 1816 the Government erected a fort on Rock Island (an island in the Mississippi, 3 miles long and one-half to three-quarters of a mile wide), naming it Fort Armstrong. It has always remained a military post, and is now the seat of an extensive arsenal and work-shops. In the spring of 1828, settlements were made near Port Byron by John and Thomas Kinney, Archibald Allen and George Harlan. Other early settlers, near Rock Island and Rapids City, were J. W. Spencer, J. W. Barriels, Benjamin F. Pike and Conrad Leak; and among the pioneers were Wells and Michael Bartlett, Joel Thompson, the Simms brothers and George Davenport. The country was full of Indians, this being the headquarters of Black Hawk and the initial point of the Black Hawk War. (See Black Hawk, and Black Hawk War.) By 1829 settlers were increased in number and county organization was effected in 1835, Rock Island (then called Stephenson) being made the county-seat. Joseph Conway was the first County Clerk, and Joel Wells, Sr., the first Treasurer. The first court was held at the residence of John W. Barriels, in Farnhamsburg. The county is irregular in shape, and the soil and scenery greatly varied. Coal is abundant, the water-power inexhaustible, and the county's mining and manufacturing interests are very extensive. Several lines of railway cross the county, affording admirable transportation facilities to both eastern and western markets. Rock Island and Moline (which see) are the two principal cities in the county, though there are several other important points. Coal Valley is the center of large mining interests, and Milan is also a manufacturing center. Port Byron is one of the oldest towns in the county, and has considerable lime and lumber interests, while Watertown is the seat of the Western Hospital for the Insane. Population of the county (1880), 38,302; (1890), 41,917; (1900), 55,249.

ROCK ISLAND & PEORIA RAILWAY, a standard-guage road, laid with steel rails, extending from Rock Island to Peoria, 91 miles. It is lessee of the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad, running from Milan to Cable, Ill., giving it a total length of 118 miles—with Peoria Terminal, 121.10 miles.—(HISTORY.) The company is a reorganization (Oct. 9, 1877) of the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad Company, whose road was sold under foreclosure, April 4, 1877. The latter Road was the result of the consolidation, in 1869, of two corporations—the Rock Island & Peoria and the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad Companies—the new organization taking the latter name. The road was opened through its entire length, Jan. 1, 1872, its sale under foreclosure and reorganization under its present name taking place, as already stated, in 1877. The Cable Branch was organized in 1876, as the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad, and opened in December of the same year, sold under foreclosure in 1877, and leased to the Rock Island & Peoria Railroad, July 1, 1885, for 999 years, the rental for the entire period being commuted at $450,000.—(FINANCIAL.) The cost of the entire road and equipment was $2,654,487. The capital stock (1898) is $1,500,000; funded debt, $600,000; other forms of indebtedness increasing the total capital invested to $2,181,066.

ROCK RIVER, a stream which rises in Washington County, Wis., and flows generally in a southerly direction, a part of its course being very sinuous. After crossing the northern boundary of Illinois, it runs southwestward, intersecting the counties of Winnebago, Ogle, Lee, Whiteside and Rock Island, and entering the Mississippi three miles below the city of Rock Island. It is about 375 miles long, but its navigation is partly obstructed by rapids, which, however, furnish abundant water-power. The principal towns on its banks are Rockford, Dixon and Sterling. Its valley is wide, and noted for its beauty and fertility.

ROCKTON, a village in Winnebago County, at the junction of two branches of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, on Rock River, 13 miles north of Rockford; has manufactures of paper and agricultural implements, a feed mill, and local paper. Pop. (1890), 892; (1900), 936.

ROE, Edward Reynolds, A.B., M.D., physician, soldier and author, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, June 22, 1813; removed with his father, in 1819, to Cincinnati, and graduated at Louisville Medical Institute in 1842; began practice at Anderson, Ind., but soon removed to Shawneetown, Ill., where he gave much attention to geological research and made some extensive natural history collections. From 1848 to '52 he resided at Jacksonville, lectured extensively on his favorite science, wrote for the press and, for two years (1850-52), edited "The Jacksonville Journal," still later editing the newly established "Constitutionalist" for a few months. During a part of this period he was lecturer on natural science at Shurtleff College; also delivered a lecture before the State Legislature on the geology of Illinois, which was immediately followed by the passage of the act establishing the State Geological Department. A majority of both houses joined in a request for his appointment as State Geologist, but it was rejected on partisan grounds—he, then, being a Whig. Removing to Bloomington in 1852, Dr. Roe became prominent in educational matters, being the first Professor of Natural Science in the State Normal University, and also a Trustee of the Illinois Wesleyan University. Having identified himself with the Democratic party at this time, he became its nominee for State Superintendent of Public Instruction in 1860, but, on the inception of the war in 1861, he promptly espoused the cause of the Union, raised three companies (mostly Normal students) which were attached to the Thirty-third Illinois (Normal) Regiment; was elected Captain and successively promoted to Major and Lieutenant-Colonel. Having been dangerously wounded in the assault at Vicksburg, on May 22, 1863, and compelled to return home, he was elected Circuit Clerk by the combined vote of both parties, was re-elected four years later, became editor of "The Bloomington Pantagraph" and, in 1870, was elected to the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, where he won distinction by a somewhat notable humorous speech in opposition to removing the State Capital to Peoria. In 1871 he was appointed Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, serving nine years. Dr. Roe was a somewhat prolific author, having produced more than a dozen works which have appeared in book form. One of these, "Virginia Rose; a Tale of Illinois in Early Days," first appeared as a prize serial in "The Alton Courier" in 1852. Others of his more noteworthy productions are: "The Gray and the Blue"; "Brought to Bay"; "From the Beaten Path"; "G. A. R.; or How She Married His Double"; "Dr. Caldwell; or the Trail of the Serpent"; and "Prairie-Land and Other Poems." He died in Chicago, Nov. 6, 1893.

ROGERS, George Clarke, soldier, was born in Grafton County, N H., Nov. 22, 1838; but was educated in Vermont and Illinois, having removed to the latter State early in life. While teaching he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1860; was the first, in 1861, to raise a company in Lake County for the war, which was mustered into the Fifteenth Illinois Volunteers; was chosen Second-Lieutenant and later Captain; was wounded four times at Shiloh, but refused to leave the field, and led his regiment in the final charge; was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel and soon after commissioned Colonel for gallantry at Hatchie. At Champion Hills he received three wounds, from one of which he never fully recovered; took a prominent part in the operations at Allatoona and commanded a brigade nearly two years, including the Atlanta campaign, retiring with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. Since the war has practiced law in Illinois and in Kansas.

ROGERS, Henry Wade, educator, lawyer and author, was born in Central New York in 1853; entered Hamilton College, but the following year became a student in Michigan University, graduating there in 1874, also receiving the degree of A.M., from the same institution, in 1877. In 1883 he was elected to a professorship in the Ann Arbor Law School, and, in 1885, was made Dean of the Faculty, succeeding Judge Cooley, at the age of 32. Five years later he was tendered, and accepted, the Presidency of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, being the first layman chosen to the position, and succeeding a long line of Bishops and divines. The same year (1890), Wesleyan University conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. He is a member of the American Bar Association, has served for a number of years on its Committee on Legal Education and Admission to the Bar, and was the first Chairman of the Section on Legal Education. President Rogers was the General Chairman of the Conference on the Future Foreign Policy of the United States, held at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., in August, 1898. At the Congress held in 1893, as auxiliary to the Columbian Exposition, he was chosen Chairman of the Committee on Law Reform and Jurisprudence, and was for a time associate editor of "The American Law Register," of Philadelphia. He is also the author of a treatise on "Expert Testimony," which has passed through two editions, and has edited a work entitled "Illinois Citations," besides doing much other valuable literary work of a similar character.

ROGERS, John Gorin, jurist, was born at Glasgow, Ky., Dec. 28, 1818, of English and early Virginian ancestry; was educated at Center College, Danville, Ky., and at Transylvania University, graduating from the latter institution in 1841, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. For sixteen years he practiced in his native town, and, in 1857, removed to Chicago, where he soon attained professional prominence. In 1870 he was elected a Judge of the Cook County Circuit Court, continuing on the bench, through repeated re-elections, until his death, which occurred suddenly, Jan. 10, 1887, four years before the expiration of the term for which he had been elected.

ROGERS PARK, a village and suburb 9 miles north of Chicago, on Lake Michigan and the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; has a bank and two weekly newspapers; is reached by electric street-car line from Chicago, and is a popular residence suburb. Annexed to City of Chicago, 1893.

ROLL, John E., pioneer, was born in Green Village, N. J., June 4, 1814; came to Illinois in 1830, and settled in Sangamon County. He assisted Abraham Lincoln in the construction of the flat-boat with which the latter descended the Mississippi River to New Orleans, in 1831. Mr. Roll, who was a mechanic and contractor, built a number of houses in Springfield, where he has since continued to reside.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. The earliest Christians to establish places of worship in Illinois were priests of the Catholic faith. Early Catholic missionaries were explorers and historians as well as preachers. (See Allouez; Bergier; Early Missionaries; Gravier; Marquette.) The church went hand in hand with the representatives of the French Government, carrying in one hand the cross and in the other the flag of France, simultaneously disseminating the doctrines of Christianity and inculcating loyalty to the House of Bourbon. For nearly a hundred years, the self-sacrificing and devoted Catholic clergy of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries ministered to the spiritual wants of the early French settlers and the natives. They were not without factional jealousies, however, and a severe blow was dealt to a branch of them in the order for the banishment of the Jesuits and the confiscation of their property. (See Early Missionaries.) The subsequent occupation of the country by the English, with the contemporaneous emigration of a considerable portion of the French west of the Mississippi, dissipated many congregations. Up to 1830 Illinois was included in the diocese of Missouri; but at that time it was constituted a separate diocese, under the episcopal control of Rt. Rev. Joseph Rosatti. At that date there were few, if any, priests in Illinois. But Bishop Rosatti was a man of earnest purpose and rare administrative ability. New parishes were organized as rapidly as circumstances would permit, and the growth of the church has been steady. By 1840 there were thirty-one parishes and twenty priests. In 1896 there are reported 698 parishes, 764 clergymen and a Catholic population exceeding 850,000. (See also Religious Denominations.)

ROODHOUSE, a city in Greene County, 21 miles south of Jacksonville, and at junction of three divisions of the Chicago & Alton Railroad; is in fertile agricultural and coal-mining region; city contains a flouring mill, grain-elevator, stock-yards, railway shops, water-works, electric light plant, two private banks, fine opera house, good school buildings, one daily and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 2,360; (1900), 2,351.

ROODHOUSE, John, farmer and founder of the town of Roodhouse, in Greene County, Ill., was born in Yorkshire, England, brought to America in childhood, his father settling in Greene County, Ill., in 1831. In his early manhood he opened a farm in Tazewell County, but finally returned to the paternal home in Greene County, where, on the location of the Jacksonville Division of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, he laid out the town of Roodhouse, at the junction of the Louisiana and Kansas City branch with the main line.

ROOT, George Frederick, musical composer and author, was born at Sheffield, Mass., August 30, 1820. He was a natural musician, and, while employed on his father's farm, learned to play on various instruments. In 1838 he removed to Boston, where he began his life-work. Besides teaching music in the public schools, he was employed to direct the musical service in two churches. From Boston he removed to New York, and, in 1850, went to Paris for purposes of musical study. In 1853 he made his first public essay as a composer in the song, "Hazel Dell," which became popular at once. From this time forward his success as a song-writer was assured. His music, while not of a high artistic character, captivated the popular ear and appealed strongly to the heart. In 1860 he took up his residence in Chicago, where he conducted a musical journal and wrote those "war songs" which created and perpetuated his fame. Among the best known are "Rally Round the Flag"; "Just Before the Battle, Mother"; and "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp." Other popular songs by him are "Rosalie, the Prairie Flower"; "A Hundred Years Ago"; and "The Old Folks are Gone." Besides songs he composed several cantatas and much sacred music, also publishing many books of instruction and numerous collections of vocal and instrumental music. In 1872 the University of Chicago conferred on him the degree of Mus. Doc. Died, near Portland, Maine, August 6, 1895.

ROOTS, Benajah Guernsey, civil engineer, and educator, was born in Onondaga County N. Y., April 20, 1811, and educated in the schools and academies of Central New York; began teaching in 1827, and, after spending a year at sea for the benefit of his health, took a course in law and civil engineering. He was employed as a civil engineer on the Western Railroad of Massachusetts until 1838, when he came to Illinois and obtained employment on the railroad projected from Alton to Shawneetown, under the "internal improvement system" of 1837. When that was suspended in 1839, he settled on a farm near the present site of Tamaroa, Perry County, and soon after opened a boarding school, continuing its management until 1846, when he became Principal of a seminary at Sparta. In 1851 he went into the service of the Illinois Central Railroad, first as resident engineer in charge of surveys and construction, later as land agent and attorney. He was prominent in the introduction of the graded school system in Illinois and in the establishment of the State Normal School at Bloomington and the University of Illinois at Champaign; was a member of the State Board of Education from its organization, and served as delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1868. Died, at his home in Perry County, Ill., May 9, 1888.—Philander Keep (Roots), son of the preceding, born in Tolland County, Conn., June 4, 1838, brought to Illinois the same year and educated in his father's school, and in an academy at Carrollton and the Wesleyan University at Bloomington; at the age of 17 belonged to a corps of engineers employed on a Southern railroad, and, during the war, served as a civil engineer in the construction and repair of military roads. Later, he was Deputy Surveyor-General of Nebraska; in 1871 became Chief Engineer on the Cairo & Fulton (now a part of the Iron Mountain) Railway; then engaged in the banking business in Arkansas, first as cashier of a bank at Fort Smith and afterwards of the Merchants' National Bank at Little Rock, of which his brother, Logan H., was President.—Logan H. (Roots), another son, born near Tamaroa, Perry County, Ill., March 22, 1841, was educated at home and at the State Normal at Bloomington, meanwhile serving as principal of a high school at Duquoin; in 1862 enlisted in the Eighty-first Illinois Volunteers, serving through the war and acting as Chief Commissary for General Sherman on the "March to the Sea," and participating in the great review in Washington, in May, 1865. After the conclusion of the war he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the First Arkansas District, was elected from that State to the Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses (1868 and 1870)—being, at the time, the youngest member in that body—and was appointed United States Marshal by President Grant. He finally became President of the Merchants' National Bank at Little Rock, with which he remained nearly twenty years. Died, suddenly, of congestion of the brain, May 30, 1893, leaving an estate valued at nearly one and a half millions, of which he gave a large share to charitable purposes and to the city of Little Rock, for the benefit of its hospitals and the improvement of its parks.

ROSE, James A., Secretary of State, was born at Golconda, Pope County, Ill., Oct. 13, 1850. The foundation of his education was secured in the public schools of his native place, and, after a term in the Normal University at Normal, Ill., at the age of 18 he took charge of a country school. Soon he was chosen Principal of the Golconda graded schools, was later made County Superintendent of Schools, and re-elected for a second term. During his second term he was admitted to the bar, and, resigning the office of Superintendent, was elected State's Attorney without opposition, being re-elected for another term. In 1889, by appointment of Governor Fifer, he became one of the Trustees of the Pontiac Reformatory, serving until the next year, when he was transferred to the Board of Commissioners of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary at Chester, which position he continued to occupy until 1893. In 1896 he was elected Secretary of State on the Republican ticket, his term extending to January, 1901.

ROSEVILLE, a village in Warren County, on the Rock Island Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 17 miles northwest of Bushnell; has water and electric-light plants, two banks, public library and one newspaper Region agricultural and coal-mining. Pop. (1900), 1,014.

ROSS, Leonard Fulton, soldier, born in Fulton County, Ill., July 18, 1823; was educated in the common schools and at Illinois College, Jacksonville, studied law and admitted to the bar in 1845; the following year enlisted in the Fourth Illinois Volunteers for the Mexican War, became First Lieutenant and was commended for services at Vera Cruz and Cerro Gordo; also performed important service as bearer of dispatches for General Taylor. After the war he served six years as Probate Judge. In May, 1861, he enlisted in the war for the Union, and was chosen Colonel of the Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers, serving with it in Missouri and Kentucky; was commissioned Brigadier-General a few weeks after the capture of Fort Donelson, and, after the evacuation of Corinth, was assigned to the command of a division with headquarters at Bolivar, Tenn. He resigned in July, 1863, and, in 1867, was appointed by President Johnson Collector of Internal Revenue for the Ninth District; has been three times a delegate to National Republican Conventions and twice defeated as a candidate for Congress in a Democratic District. Since the war he has devoted his attention largely to stock-raising, having a large stock-farm in Iowa. In his later years was President of a bank at Lewistown, Ill. Died Jan. 17, 1901.

ROSS, (Col.) William, pioneer, was born at Monson, Hampden County, Mass., April 24, 1792; removed with his father's family, in 1805, to Pittsfield, Mass., where he remained until his twentieth year, when he was commissioned an Ensign in the Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, serving through the War of 1812-14, and participating in the battle of Sackett's Harbor. During the latter part of his service he acted as drill-master at various points. Then, returning to Pittsfield, he carried on the business of blacksmithing as an employer, meanwhile filling some local offices. In 1820, a company consisting of himself and four brothers, with their families and a few others, started for the West, intending to settle in Illinois. Reaching the head-waters of the Allegheny overland, they transferred their wagons, teams and other property to flat-boats, descending that stream and the Ohio to Shawneetown, Ill. Here they disembarked and, crossing the State, reached Upper Alton, where they found only one house, that of Maj. Charles W. Hunter. Leaving their families at Upper Alton, the brothers proceeded north, crossing the Illinois River near its mouth, until they reached a point in the western part of the present county of Pike, where the town of Atlas was afterwards located. Here they erected four rough log-cabins, on a beautiful prairie not far from the Mississippi, removing their families thither a few weeks later. They suffered the usual privations incident to life in a new country, not excepting sickness and death of some of their number. At the next session of the Legislature (1820-21) Pike County was established, embracing all that part of the State west and north of the Illinois, and including the present cities of Galena and Chicago. The Ross settlement became the nucleus of the town of Atlas, laid out by Colonel Ross and his associates in 1823, at an early day the rival of Quincy, and becoming the second county-seat of Pike County, so remaining from 1824 to 1833, when the seat of justice was removed to Pittsfield. During this period Colonel Ross was one of the most prominent citizens of the county, holding, simultaneously or successively, the offices of Probate Judge, Circuit and County Clerk, Justice of the Peace, and others of a subordinate character. As Colonel of Militia, in 1832, he was ordered by Governor Reynolds to raise a company for the Black Hawk War, and, in four days, reported at Beardstown with twice the number of men called for. In 1834 he was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly, also serving in the Senate during the three following sessions, a part of the time as President pro tem. of the last-named body. While in the General Assembly he was instrumental in securing legislation of great importance relating to Military Tract lands. The year following the establishment of the county-seat at Pittsfield (1834) he became a citizen of that place, which he had the privilege of naming for his early home. He was a member of the Republican State Convention of 1856, and a delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1860, which nominated Mr. Lincoln for President the first time. Beginning life poor he acquired considerable property; was liberal, public-spirited and patriotic, making a handsome donation to the first company organized in Pike County, for the suppression of the Rebellion. Died, at Pittsfield, May 31, 1873.

ROSSVILLE, a village of Vermillion County, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad, 19 miles north of Danville; has electric-light plant, water-works, tile and brick-works, two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 879; (1900), 1,435.

ROUNDS, Sterling Parker, public printer, was born in Berkshire, Vt., June 27, 1828; about 1840 began learning the printer's trade at Kenosha, Wis., and, in 1845, was foreman of the State printing office at Madison, afterward working in offices in Milwaukee, Racine and Buffalo, going to Chicago in 1851. Here he finally established a printer's warehouse, to which he later added an electrotype foundry and the manufacture of presses, also commencing the issue of "Round's Printers' Cabinet," a trade-paper, which was continued during his life. In 1881 he was appointed by President Garfield Public Printer at Washington, serving until 1885, when he removed to Omaha, Neb., and was identified with "The Republican," of that city, until his death, Dec. 17, 1887.

ROUNTREE, Hiram, County Judge, born in Rutherford County, N. C., Dec. 22, 1794; was brought to Kentucky in infancy, where he grew to manhood and served as an Ensign in the War of 1812 under General Shelby. In 1817 he removed to Illinois Territory, first locating in Madison County, where he taught school for two years near Edwardsville, but removed to Fayette County about the time of the removal of the State capital to Vandalia. On the organization of Montgomery County, in 1821, he was appointed to office there and ever afterwards resided at Hillsboro. For a number of years in the early history of the county, he held (at the same time) the offices of Clerk of the County Commissioners Court, Clerk of the Circuit Court, County Recorder, Justice of the Peace, Notary Public, Master in Chancery and Judge of Probate, besides that of Postmaster for the town of Hillsboro. In 1826 he was elected Enrolling and Engrossing Clerk of the Senate and re-elected in 1830; served as Delegate in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and the next year was elected to the State Senate, serving in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth General Assemblies. On retiring from the Senate (1852), he was elected County Judge without opposition, was re-elected to the same office in 1861, and again, in 1865, as the nominee of the Republicans. Judge Rountree was noted for his sound judgment and sterling integrity. Died, at Hillsboro, March 4, 1873.

ROUTT, John L., soldier and Governor, was born at Eddyville, Ky., April 25, 1826, brought to Illinois in infancy and educated in the common schools. Soon after coming of age he was elected and served one term as Sheriff of McLean County; in 1862 enlisted and became Captain of Company E, Ninety-fourth Illinois Volunteers. After the war he engaged in business in Bloomington, and was appointed by President Grant, successively, United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, Second Assistant Postmaster-General and Territorial Governor of Colorado. On the admission of Colorado as a State, he was elected the first Governor under the State Government, and re-elected in 1890—serving, in all, three years. His home is in Denver. He has been extensively and successfully identified with mining enterprises in Colorado.

ROWELL, Jonathan H., ex-Congressman, was born at Haverhill, N. H., Feb. 10, 1833. He is a graduate of Eureka College and of the Law Department of the Chicago University. During the War of the Rebellion he served three years as company officer in the Seventeenth Illinois Infantry. In 1868 he was elected State's Attorney for the Eighth Judicial Circuit, and, in 1880, was a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. In 1882 he was elected to Congress from the Fourteenth Illinois District and three times re-elected, serving until March, 1891. His home is at Bloomington.

ROWETT, Richard, soldier, was born in Cornwall, England, in 1830, came to the United States in 1851, finally settling on a farm near Carlinville, Ill., and becoming a breeder of thorough-bred horses. In 1861 he entered the service as a Captain in the Seventh Illinois Volunteers and was successively promoted Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; was wounded in the battles of Shiloh, Corinth and Allatoona, especially distinguishing himself at the latter and being brevetted Brigadier-General for gallantry. After the war he returned to his stock-farm, but later held the positions of Canal Commissioner, Penitentiary Commissioner, Representative in the Thirtieth General Assembly and Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fourth (Quincy) District, until its consolidation with the Eighth District by President Cleveland. Died, in Chicago, July 13, 1887.

RUSH MEDICAL COLLEGE, located in Chicago; incorporated by act of March 2, 1837, the charter having been prepared the previous year by Drs. Daniel Brainard and Josiah C. Goodhue. The extreme financial depression of the following year prevented the organization of a faculty until 1843. The institution was named in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, the eminent practitioner, medical author and teacher of Philadelphia in the latter half of the eighteenth century. The first faculty consisted of four professors, and the first term opened on Dec. 4, 1843, with a class of twenty-two students. Three years' study was required for graduation, but only two annual terms of sixteen weeks each need be attended at the college itself. Instruction was given in a few rooms temporarily opened for that purpose. The next year a small building, costing between $3,000 and $4,000, was erected. This was re-arranged and enlarged in 1855 at a cost of $15,000. The constant and rapid growth of the college necessitated the erection of a new building in 1867, the cost of which was $70,000. This was destroyed in the fire of 1871, and another, costing $54,000, was erected in 1876 and a free dispensary added. In 1844 the Presbyterian Hospital was located on a portion of the college lot, and the two institutions connected, thus insuring abundant and stable facilities for clinical instruction. Shortly afterwards, Rush College became the medical department of Lake Forest University. The present faculty (1898) consists of 95 professors, adjunct professors, lecturers and instructors of all grades, and over 600 students in attendance. The length of the annual terms is six months, and four years of study are required for graduation, attendance upon at least three college terms being compulsory.

RUSHVILLE, the county-seat of Schuyler County, 50 miles northeast of Quincy and 11 miles northwest of Beardstown; is the southern terminus of the Buda and Rushville branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. The town was selected as the county-seat in 1826, the seat of justice being removed from a place called Beardstown, about five miles eastward (not the present Beardstown in Cass County), where it had been located at the time of the organization of Schuyler County, a year previous. At first the new seat of justice was called Rushton, in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, but afterwards took its present name. It is a coal-mining, grain and fruit-growing region, and contains several manufactories, including flour-mills, brick and tile works; also has two banks (State and private) and a public library. Four periodicals (one daily) are published here. Population (1880), 1,662; (1890), 2,031; (1900), 2,292.

RUSSELL, John, pioneer teacher and author, was born at Cavendish, Vt., July 31, 1793, and educated in the common schools of his native State and at Middlebury College, where he graduated in 1818—having obtained means to support himself, during his college course, by teaching and by the publication, before he had reached his 20th year, of a volume entitled "The Authentic History of Vermont State Prison." After graduation he taught for a short time in Georgia; but, early in the following year, joined his father on the way to Missouri. The next five years he spent in teaching in the "Bonhommie Bottom" on the Missouri River. During this period he published, anonymously, in "The St. Charles Missourian," a temperance allegory entitled "The Venomous Worm" (or "The Worm of the Still"), which gained a wide popularity and was early recognized by the compilers of school-readers as a sort of classic. Leaving this locality he taught a year in St. Louis, when he removed to Vandalia (then the capital of Illinois), after which he spent two years teaching in the Seminary at Upper Alton, which afterwards became Shurtleff College. In 1828 he removed to Greene County, locating at a point near the Illinois River to which he gave the name of Bluffdale. Here he was licensed as a Baptist preacher, officiating in this capacity only occasionally, while pursuing his calling as a teacher or writer for the press, to which he was an almost constant contributor during the last twenty-five years of his life. About 1837 or 1838 he was editor of a paper called "The Backwoodsman" at Grafton—then a part of Greene County, but now in Jersey County—to which he afterwards continued to be a contributor some time longer, and, in 1841-42, was editor of "The Advertiser,' at Louisville, Ky. He was also, for several years, Principal of the Spring Hill Academy in East Feliciana Parish, La., meanwhile serving for a portion of the time as Superintendent of Public Schools. He was the author of a number of stories and sketches, some of which went through several editions, and, at the time of his death, had in preparation a history of "The Black Hawk War," "Evidences of Christianity" and a "History of Illinois." He was an accomplished linguist, being able to read with fluency Greek, Latin, French, Spanish and Italian, besides having considerable familiarity with several other modern languages. In 1862 he received from the University of Chicago the degree of LL.D. Died, Jan. 2, 1863, and was buried on the old homestead at Bluffdale.

RUSSELL, Martin J., politician and journalist, born in Chicago, Dec. 20, 1845. He was a nephew of Col. James A. Mulligan (see Mulligan, James A.) and served with credit as Adjutant-General on the staff of the latter in the Civil War. In 1870 he became a reporter on "The Chicago Evening Post," and was advanced to the position of city editor. Subsequently he was connected with "The Times," and "The Telegram"; was also a member of the Board of Education of Hyde Park before the annexation of that village to Chicago, and has been one of the South Park Commissioners of the city last named. After the purchase of "The Chicago Times" by Carter H. Harrison he remained for a time on the editorial staff. In 1894 President Cleveland appointed him Collector of the Port of Chicago. At the expiration of his term of office he resumed editorial work as editor-in-chief of "The Chronicle," the organ of the Democratic party in Chicago. Died June 25, 1900.

RUTHERFORD, Friend S., lawyer and soldier, was born in Schenectady, N. Y., Sept. 25, 1820; studied law in Troy and removed to Illinois, settling at Edwardsville, and finally at Alton; was a Republican candidate for Presidential Elector in 1856, and, in 1860, a member of the National Republican Convention at Chicago, which nominated Mr. Lincoln for the Presidency. In September, 1862, he was commissioned Colonel of the Ninety-seventh Illinois Volunteers, and participated in the capture of Port Gibson and in the operations about Vicksburg—also leading in the attack on Arkansas Post, and subsequently serving in Louisiana, but died as the result of fatigue and exposure in the service, June 20, 1864, one week before his promotion to the rank of Brigadier-General.—Reuben C. (Rutherford), brother of the preceding, was born at Troy, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1823, but grew up in Vermont and New Hampshire; received a degree in law when quite young, but afterwards fitted himself as a lecturer on physiology and hygiene, upon which he lectured extensively in Michigan, Illinois and other States after coming west in 1849. During 1854-55, in co-operation with Prof. J. B. Turner and others, he canvassed and lectured extensively throughout Illinois in support of the movement which resulted in the donation of public lands, by Congress, for the establishment of "Industrial Colleges" in the several States. The establishment of the University of Illinois, at Champaign, was the outgrowth of this movement. In 1856 he located at Quincy, where he resided some thirty years; in 1861, served for several months as the first Commissary of Subsistence at Cairo; was later associated with the State Quartermaster's Department, finally entering the secret service of the War Department, in which he remained until 1867, retiring with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. In 1886, General Rutherford removed to New York City, where he died, June 24, 1895.—George V. (Rutherford), another brother, was born at Rutland, Vt., 1830; was first admitted to the bar, but afterwards took charge of the construction of telegraph lines in some of the Southern States; at the beginning of the Civil War became Assistant Quartermaster-General of the State of Illinois, at Springfield, under ex-Gov. John Wood, but subsequently entered the Quartermaster's service of the General Government in Washington, retiring after the war with the rank of Brigadier-General. He then returned to Quincy, Ill., where he resided until 1872, when he engaged in manufacturing business at Northampton, Mass., but finally removed to California for the benefit of his failing health. Died, at St. Helena, Cal., August 28, 1872.

RUTLAND, a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 25 miles south of La Salle; has a bank, five churches, school, and a newspaper, with coal mines in the vicinity. Pop. (1890), 509; (1900), 893; (1903), 1,093.

RUTLEDGE, (Rev.) William J., clergyman, Army Chaplain, born in Augusta County, Va., June 24, 1820; was converted at the age of 12 years and, at 21, became a member of the Illinois Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, serving various churches in the central and western parts of the State—also acting, for a time, as Agent of the Illinois Conference Female College at Jacksonville. From 1861 to 1863 he was Chaplain of the Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers. Returning from the war, he served as pastor of churches at Jacksonville, Bloomington, Quincy, Rushville, Springfield, Griggsville and other points; from 1881 to '84 was Chaplain of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet. Mr. Rutledge was one of the founders of the Grand Army of the Republic, and served for many years as Chaplain of the order for the Department of Illinois. In connection with the ministry, he has occupied a supernumerary relation since 1885. Died in Jacksonville, April 14, 1900.

RUTZ, Edward, State Treasurer, was born in a village in the Duchy of Baden, Germany, May 5, 1829; came to America in 1848, locating on a farm in St. Clair County, Ill.; went to California in 1857, and, early in 1861, enlisted in the Third United States Artillery at San Francisco, serving with the Army of the Potomac until his discharge in 1864, and taking part in every battle in which his command was engaged. After his return in 1865, he located in St. Clair County, and was elected County Surveyor, served three consecutive terms as County Treasurer, and was elected State Treasurer three times—1872, '76 and '80. About 1892 he removed to California, where he now resides.

RYAN, Edward G., early editor and jurist, born at Newcastle House, County Meath, Ireland, Nov. 13, 1810; was educated for the priesthood, but turned his attention to law, and, in 1830, came to New York and engaged in teaching while prosecuting his legal studies; in 1836 removed to Chicago, where he was admitted to the bar and was, for a time, associated in practice with Hugh T. Dickey. In April, 1840, Mr. Ryan assumed the editorship of a weekly paper in Chicago called "The Illinois Tribune," which he conducted for over a year, and which is remembered chiefly on account of its bitter assaults on Judge John Pearson of Danville, who had aroused the hostility of some members of the Chicago bar by his rulings upon the bench. About 1842 Ryan removed to Milwaukee, Wis., where he was, for a time, a partner of Matthew H. Carpenter (afterwards United States Senator), and was connected with a number of celebrated trials before the courts of that State, including the Barstow-Bashford case, which ended with Bashford becoming the first Republican Governor of Wisconsin. In 1874 he was appointed Chief Justice of Wisconsin, serving until his death, which occurred at Madison, Oct. 19, 1880. He was a strong partisan, and, during the Civil War, was an intense opponent of the war policy of the Government. In spite of infirmities of temper, he appears to have been a man of much learning and recognized legal ability.

RYAN, James, Roman Catholic Bishop, born in Ireland in 1848 and emigrated to America in childhood; was educated for the priesthood in Kentucky, and, after ordination, was made a professor in St. Joseph's Seminary, at Bardstown, Ky. In 1878 he removed to Illinois, attaching himself to the diocese of Peoria, and having charge of parishes at Wataga and Danville. In 1881 he became rector of the Ottawa parish, within the episcopal jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Chicago. In 1888 he was made Bishop of the see of Alton, the prior incumbent (Bishop Baltes) having died in 1886.

SACS AND FOXES, two confederated Indian tribes, who were among the most warlike and powerful of the aborigines of the Illinois Country. The Foxes called themselves the Musk-wah-hakee, a name compounded of two words, signifying "those of red earth." The French called them Ou-ta-ga-mies, that being their spelling of the name given them by other tribes, the meaning of which was "Foxes," and which was bestowed upon them because their totem (or armorial device, as it may be called) was a fox. They seem to have been driven westward from the northern shore of Lake Ontario, by way of Niagara and Mackinac, to the region around Green Bay, Wis.—Concerning their allied brethren, the Sacs, less is known. The name is variously spelled in the Indian dialects—Ou-sa-kies, Sauks, etc.—and the term Sacs is unquestionably an abbreviated corruption. Black Hawk belonged to this tribe. The Foxes and Sacs formed a confederation according to aboriginal tradition, on what is now known as the Sac River, near Green Bay, but the date of the alliance cannot be determined. The origin of the Sacs is equally uncertain. Black Hawk claimed that his tribe originally dwelt around Quebec, but, as to the authenticity of this claim, historical authorities differ widely. Subsequent to 1670 the history of the allied tribes is tolerably well defined. Their characteristics, location and habits are described at some length by Father Allouez, who visited them in 1666-67. He says that they were numerous and warlike, but depicts them as "penurious, avaricious, thievish and quarrelsome." That they were cordially detested by their neighbors is certain, and Judge James Hall calls them "the Ishmaelites of the lakes." They were unfriendly to the French, who attached to themselves other tribes, and, through the aid of the latter, had well-nigh exterminated them, when the Sacs and Foxes sued for peace, which was granted on terms most humiliating to the vanquished. By 1718, however, they were virtually in possession of the region around Rock River in Illinois, and, four years later, through the aid of the Mascoutins and Kickapoos, they had expelled the Illinois, driving the last of that ill-fated tribe across the Illinois River. They abstained from taking part in the border wars that marked the close of the Revolutionary War, and therefore did not participate in the treaty of Greenville in 1795. At that date, according to Judge Hall, they claimed the country as far west as Council Bluffs, Iowa, and as far north as Prairie du Chien. They offered to co-operate with the United States Government in the War of 1812, but this offer was declined, and a portion of the tribe, under the leadership of Black Hawk, enlisted on the side of the British. The Black Hawk War proved their political ruin. By the treaty of Rock Island they ceded vast tracts of land, including a large part of the eastern half of Iowa and a large body of land east of the Mississippi. (See Black Hawk War; Indian Treaties.) In 1842 the Government divided the nation into two bands, removing both to reservations in the farther West. One was located on the Osage River and the other on the south side of the Nee-ma-ha River, near the northwest corner of Kansas. From these reservations, there is little doubt, many of them have silently emigrated toward the Rocky Mountains, where the hoe might be laid aside for the rifle, the net and the spear of the hunter. A few years ago a part of these confederated tribes were located in the eastern part of Oklahoma.

SAILOR SPRINGS, a village and health resort in Clay County, 5 miles north of Clay City, has an academy and a local paper. Population (1900), 419; (1903, est.), 550.

SALEM, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Marion County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Illinois Southern Railroads, 71 miles east of St. Louis, and 16 miles northeast of Centralia; in agricultural and coal district. A leading industry is the culture, evaporation and shipment of fruit. The city has flour-mills, two banks and three weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,493; (1900), 1,642.

SALINE COUNTY, a southeastern county, organized in 1847, having an area of 380 square miles. It derives its name from the salt springs which are found in every part of the county. The northern portion is rolling and yields an abundance of coal of a quality suitable for smithing. The bottoms are swampy, but heavily timbered, and saw-mills abound. Oak, hickory, sweet gum, mulberry, locust and sassafras are the prevailing varieties. Fruit and tobacco are extensively cultivated. The climate is mild and humid, and the vegetation varied. The soil of the low lands is rich, and, when drained, makes excellent farming lands. In some localities a good gray sandstone, soft enough to be worked, is quarried, and millstone grit is frequently found. In the southern half of the county are the Eagle Mountains, a line of hills having an altitude of some 450 to 500 feet above the level of the Mississippi at Cairo, and believed by geologists to have been a part of the upheaval that gave birth to the Ozark Mountains in Missouri and Arkansas. The highest land in the county is 864 feet above sea-level. Tradition says that these hills are rich in silver ore, but it has not been found in paying quantities. Springs strongly impregnated with sulphur are found on the slopes. The county-seat was originally located at Raleigh, which was platted in 1848, but it was subsequently removed to Harrisburg, which was laid out in 1859. Population of the county (1880), 15,940; (1890), 19,342; (1900), 21,685.

SALINE RIVER, a stream formed by the confluence of two branches, both of which flow through portions of Saline County, uniting in Gallatin County. The North Fork rises in Hamilton County and runs nearly south, while the South Fork drains part of Williamson County, and runs east through Saline. The river (which is little more than a creek), thus formed, runs southeast, entering the Ohio ten miles below Shawneetown.

SALT MANUFACTURE. There is evidence going to show that the saline springs, in Gallatin County, were utilized by the aboriginal inhabitants in the making of salt, long before the advent of white settlers. There have been discovered, at various points, what appear to be the remains of evaporating kettles, composed of hardened clay and pounded shells, varying in diameter from three to four feet. In 1812, with a view to encouraging the manufacture of salt from these springs, Congress granted to Illinois the use of 36 square miles, the fee still remaining in the United States. These lands were leased by the State to private parties, but the income derived from them was comparatively small and frequently difficult of collection. The workmen were mostly slaves from Kentucky and Tennessee, who are especially referred to in Article VI., Section 2, of the Constitution of 1818. The salt made brought $5 per 100 pounds, and was shipped in keel-boats to various points on the Ohio, Mississippi, Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers, while many purchasers came hundreds of miles on horseback and carried it away on pack animals. In 1827, the State treasury being empty and the General Assembly having decided to erect a penitentiary at Alton, Congress was petitioned to donate these lands to the State in fee, and permission was granted "to sell 30,000 acres of the Ohio Salines in Gallatin County, and apply the proceeds to such purposes as the Legislature might by law direct." The sale was made, one-half of the proceeds set apart for the building of the penitentiary, and one-half to the improvement of roads and rivers in the eastern part of the State. The manufacture of salt was carried on, however—for a time by lessees and subsequently by owners—until 1873, about which time it was abandoned, chiefly because it had ceased to be profitable on account of competition with other districts possessing superior facilities. Some salt was manufactured in Vermilion County about 1824. The manufacture has been successfully carried on in recent years, from the product of artesian wells, at St. John, in Perry County.

SANDOVAL, a village of Marion County, at the crossing of the western branch of the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, 6 miles north of Centralia. The town has coal mines and some manufactures, with banks and one newspaper. Population (1880), 564; (1890), 834; (1900), 1,258.

SANDSTONE. The quantity of sandstone quarried in Illinois is comparatively insignificant, its value being less than one-fifth of one per cent of the value of the output of the entire country. In 1890 the State ranked twenty-fifth in the list of States producing this mineral, the total value of the stone quarried being but $17,896, representing 141,605 cubic feet, taken from ten quarries, which employed forty-six hands, and had an aggregate capital invested of $49,400.

SANDWICH, a city in De Kalb County, incorporated in 1873, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 58 miles southwest of Chicago. The principal industries are the manufacture of agricultural implements, hay-presses, corn-shellers, pumps and wind-mills. Sandwich has two private banks, two weekly and one semi-weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 2,516; (1900), 2,520; (1903), 2,865.

SANGAMON COUNTY, a central county, organized under act of June 30, 1821, from parts of Bond and Madison Counties, and embracing the present counties of Sangamon, Cass, Menard, Mason, Tazewell, Logan, and parts of Morgan, McLean, Woodford, Marshall and Putnam. It was named for the river flowing through it. Though reduced in area somewhat, four years later, it extended to the Illinois River, but was reduced to its present limits by the setting apart of Menard, Logan and Dane (now Christian) Counties, in 1839. Henry Funderburk is believed to have been the first white settler, arriving there in 1817 and locating in what is now Cotton Hill Township, being followed, the next year, by William Drennan, Joseph Dodds, James McCoy, Robert Pulliam and others. John Kelly located on the present site of the city of Springfield in 1818, and was there at the time of the selection of that place as the temporary seat of justice in 1821. Other settlements were made at Auburn, Island Grove, and elsewhere, and population began to flow in rapidly. Remnants of the Pottawatomie and Kickapoo Indians were still there, but soon moved north or west. County organization was effected in 1821, the first Board of County Commissioners being composed of William Drennan, Zachariah Peter and Samuel Lee. John Reynolds (afterwards Governor) held the first term of Circuit Court, with John Taylor, Sheriff; Henry Starr, Prosecuting Attorney, and Charles R. Matheny, Circuit Clerk. A United States Land Office was established at Springfield in 1823, with Pascal P. Enos as Receiver, the first sale of lands taking place the same year. The soil of Sangamon County is exuberantly fertile, with rich underlying deposits of bituminous coal, which is mined in large quantities. The chief towns are Springfield, Auburn, Riverton, Illiopolis and Pleasant Plains. The area of the county is 860 square miles. Population (1880), 52,894; (1890), 61,195; (1900), 71,593.

SANGAMON RIVER, formed by the union of the North and South Forks, of which the former is the longer, or main branch. The North Fork rises in the northern part of Champaign County, whence it runs southwest to the city of Decatur, thence westward through Sangamon County, forming the north boundary of Christian County, and emptying into the Illinois River about 9 miles above Beardstown. The Sangamon is nearly 240 miles long, including the North Fork. The South Fork flows through Christian County, and joins the North Fork about 6 miles east of Springfield. In the early history of the State the Sangamon was regarded as a navigable stream, and its improvement was one of the measures advocated by Abraham Lincoln in 1832, when he was for the first time a candidate (though unsuccessfully) for the Legislature. In the spring of 1832 a small steamer from Cincinnati, called the "Talisman," ascended the river to a point near Springfield. The event was celebrated with great rejoicing by the people, but the vessel encountered so much difficulty in getting out of the river that the experiment was never repeated.

SANGAMON & MORGAN RAILROAD. (See Wabash Railroad.)

SANGER, Lorenzo P., railway and canal contractor, was born at Littleton, N. H., March 2, 1809; brought in childhood to Livingston County, N. Y., where his father became a contractor on the Erie Canal, the son also being employed upon the same work. The latter subsequently became a contractor on the Pennsylvania Canal on his own account, being known as "the boy contractor." Then, after a brief experience in mercantile business, and a year spent in the construction of a canal in Indiana, in 1836 he came to Illinois, and soon after became an extensive contractor on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, having charge of rock excavation at Lockport. He was also connected with the Rock River improvement scheme, and interested in a line of stages between Chicago and Galena, which, having been consolidated with the line managed by the firm of Fink & Walker, finally became the Northwestern Stage Company, extending its operations throughout Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri—Mr. Sanger having charge of the Western Division, for a time, with headquarters at St. Louis. In 1851 he became the head of the firm of Sanger, Camp & Co., contractors for the construction of the Western (or Illinois) Division of the Ohio & Mississippi (now the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern) Railway, upon which he was employed for several years. Other works with which he was connected were the North Missouri Railroad and the construction of the State Penitentiary at Joliet, as member of the firm of Sanger & Casey, for a time, also lessees of convict labor. In 1862 Mr. Sanger received from Governor Yates, by request of President Lincoln, a commission as Colonel, and was assigned to staff duty in Kentucky and Tennessee. After the war he became largely interested in stone quarries adjacent to Joliet; also had an extensive contract, from the City of Chicago, for deepening the Illinois & Michigan Canal. Died, at Oakland, Cal., March 23, 1875, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health.—James Young (Sanger), brother of the preceding, was born at Sutton, Vt., March 14, 1814; in boyhood spent some time in a large mercantile establishment at Pittsburg, Pa., later being associated with his father and elder brother in contracts on the Erie Canal and similar works in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana. At the age of 22 he came with his father's family to St. Joseph, Mich., where they established a large supply store, and engaged in bridge-building and similar enterprises. At a later period, in connection with his father and his brother, L. P. Sanger, he was prominently connected with the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal—the aqueduct at Ottawa and the locks at Peru being constructed by them. About 1850 the Construction Company, of which he and his brother, L. P. Sanger, were leading members, undertook the construction of the Ohio & Mississippi (now Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern) Railroad, from St. Louis to Vincennes, Ind., and were prominently identified with other railroad enterprises in Southern Illinois, Missouri and California. Died, July 3, 1867, when consummating arrangements for the performance of a large contract on the Union Pacific Railroad.

SAUGANASH, the Indian name of a half-breed known as Capt. Billy Caldwell, the son of a British officer and a Pottawatomie woman, born in Canada about 1780; received an education from the Jesuits at Detroit, and was able to speak and write English and French, besides several Indian dialects; was a friend of Tecumseh's and, during the latter part of his life, a devoted friend of the whites. He took up his residence in Chicago about 1820, and, in 1826, was a Justice of the Peace, while nominally a subject of Great Britain and a Chief of the Ottawas and Pottawatomies. In 1828 the Government, in consideration of his services, built for him the first frame house ever erected in Chicago, which he occupied until his departure with his tribe for Council Bluffs in 1836. By a treaty, made Jan. 2, 1830, reservations were granted by the Government to Sauganash, Shabona and other friendly Indians (see Shabona), and 1,240 acres on the North Branch of Chicago River set apart for Caldwell, which he sold before leaving the country. Died, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, Sept. 28, 1841.

SAVAGE, George S. F., D.D., clergyman, was born at Cromwell, Conn., Jan. 29, 1817; graduated at Yale College in 1844; studied theology at Andover and New Haven, graduating in 1847; was ordained a home missionary the same year and spent twelve years as pastor at St. Charles, Ill., for four years being corresponding editor of "The Prairie Herald" and "The Congregational Herald." For ten years he was in the service of the American Tract Society, and, during the Civil War, was engaged in sanitary and religious work in the army. In 1870 he was appointed Western Secretary of the Congregational Publishing Society, remaining two years, after which he became Financial Secretary of the Chicago Theological Seminary. He has also been a Director of the institution since 1854, a Trustee of Beloit College since 1850, and, for several years, editor and publisher of "The Congregational Review."

SAVANNA, a city in Carroll County, situated on the Mississippi River and the Chicago, Burlington & Northern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; is 10 miles west of Mount Carroll and about 20 miles north of Clinton, Iowa. It is an important shipping-point and contains several manufactories of machinery, lumber, flour, etc. It has two State banks, a public library, churches, two graded schools, township high school, and two daily and weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 3,097; (1900), 3,325.

SAYBROOK, a village of McLean County, on the Lake Erie & Western Railroad, 26 miles east of Bloomington; district agricultural; county fairs held here; the town has two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 851; (1900), 879.

SCATES, Walter Bennett, jurist and soldier, was born at South Boston, Halifax County, Va., Jan. 18, 1808; was taken in infancy to Hopkinsville, Ky., where he resided until 1831, having meanwhile learned the printer's trade at Nashville and studied law at Louisville. In 1831 he removed to Frankfort, Franklin County, Ill., where, for a time, he was County Surveyor. In 1836, having been appointed Attorney-General, he removed to Vandalia, then the seat of government, but resigned at the close of the same year to accept the judgeship of the Third Judicial Circuit, and took up his residence at Shawneetown. In 1841 he was one of five new Judges added to the Supreme Court bench, the others being Sidney Breese, Stephen A. Douglas, Thomas Ford and Samuel H. Treat. In that year he removed to Mount Vernon, Jefferson County, and, in January, 1847, resigned his seat upon the bench to resume practice. The same year he was a member of the Constitutional Convention and Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary. In June, 1854, he again took a seat upon the Supreme Court bench, being chosen to succeed Lyman Trumbull, but resigned in May, 1857, and resumed practice in Chicago. In 1862 he volunteered in defense of the Union, received a Major's commission and was assigned to duty on the staff of General McClernand; was made, Assistant Adjutant-General and mustered out in January, 1866. In July, 1866, President Johnson appointed him Collector of Customs at Chicago, which position he filled until July 1, 1869, when he was removed by President Grant, during the same period, being ex-officio custodian of United States funds, the office of Assistant Treasurer not having been then created. Died, at Evanston, Oct. 26, 1886.

SCAMMON, Jonathan Young, lawyer and banker, was born at Whitefield, Maine, July 27, 1812; after graduating at Waterville (now Colby) University in 1831, he studied law and was admitted to the bar at Hallowell, in 1835 removing to Chicago, where he spent the remainder of his life. After a year spent as deputy in the office of the Circuit Clerk of Cook County, during which he prepared a revision of the Illinois statutes, he was appointed attorney for the State Bank of Illinois in 1837, and, in 1839, became reporter of the Supreme Court, which office he held until 1845. In the meantime, he was associated with several prominent lawyers, his first legal firm being that of Scammon, McCagg & Fuller, which was continued up to the fire of 1871. A large operator in real estate and identified with many enterprises of a public or benevolent character, his most important financial venture was in connection with the Chicago Marine & Fire Insurance Company, which conducted an extensive banking business for many years, and of which he was the President and leading spirit. As a citizen he was progressive, public-spirited and liberal. He was one of the main promoters and organizers of the old Galena & Chicago Union Railway, the first railroad to run west from Lake Michigan; was also prominently identified with the founding of the Chicago public school system, a Trustee of the (old) Chicago University, and one of the founders of the Chicago Historical Society, of the Chicago Academy of Sciences and the Chicago Astronomical Society — being the first President of the latter body. He erected, at a cost of $30,000, the Fort Dearborn Observatory, in which he caused to be placed the most powerful telescope which had at that time been brought to the West. He also maintained the observatory at his own expense. He was the pioneer of Swedenborgianism in Chicago, and, in politics, a staunch Whig, and, later, an ardent Republican. In 1844 he was one of the founders of "The Chicago American," a paper designed to advance the candidacy of Henry Clay for the Presidency; and, in 1872, when "The Chicago Tribune" espoused the Liberal Republican cause, he started "The Inter-Ocean" as a Republican organ, being, for some time, its sole proprietor and editor-in-chief. He was one of the first to encourage the adoption of the homeopathic system of medicine in Chicago, and was prominently connected with the founding of the Hahnemann Medical College and the Hahnemann Hospital, being a Trustee in both for many years. As a member of the General Assembly he secured the passage of many important measures, among them being legislation looking toward the bettering of the currency and the banking system. He accumulated a large fortune, but lost most of it by the fire of 1871 and the panic of 1873. Died, in Chicago, March 17, 1890.

SCARRITT, Nathan, pioneer, was born in Connecticut, came to Edwardsville, Ill., in 1820, and, in 1821, located in Scarritt's Prairie, Madison County. His sons afterward became influential in business and Methodist church circles. Died, Dec. 12, 1847.

SCENERY, NATURAL. Notwithstanding the uniformity of surface which characterizes a country containing no mountain ranges, but which is made up largely of natural prairies, there are a number of localities in Illinois where scenery of a picturesque, and even bold and rugged character, may be found. One of the most striking of these features is produced by a spur or low range of hills from the Ozark Mountains of Missouri, projected across the southern part of the State from the vicinity of Grand Tower in Jackson County, through the northern part of Union, and through portions of Williamson, Johnson, Saline, Pope and Hardin Counties. Grand Tower, the initial point in the western part of the State, is an isolated cliff of limestone, standing out in the channel of the Mississippi, and forming an island nearly 100 feet above low-water level. It has been a conspicuous landmark for navigators ever since the discovery of the Mississippi. "Fountain Bluff," a few miles above Grand Tower, is another conspicuous point immediately on the river bank, formed by some isolated hills about three miles long by a mile and a half wide, which have withstood the forces that excavated the valley now occupied by the Mississippi. About half a mile from the lower end of this hill, with a low valley between them, is a smaller eminence known as the "Devil's Bake Oven." The main chain of bluffs, known as the "Back Bone," is about five miles from the river, and rises to a height of nearly 700 feet above low-tide in the Gulf of Mexico, or more than 400 feet above the level of the river at Cairo. "Bald Knob" is a very prominent inland bluff promontory near Alta Pass on the line of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, in the northern part of Union County, with an elevation above tide-water of 985 feet. The highest point in this range of hills is reached in the northeastern part of Pope County—the elevation at that point (as ascertained by Prof. Rolfe of the State University at Champaign) being 1,046 feet.—There is some striking scenery in the neighborhood of Grafton between Alton and the mouth of the Illinois, as well as some distance up the latter stream—though the landscape along the middle section of the Illinois is generally monotonous or only gently undulating, except at Peoria and a few other points, where bluffs rise to a considerable height. On the Upper Illinois, beginning at Peru, the scenery again becomes picturesque, including the celebrated "Starved Rock," the site of La Salle's Fort St. Louis (which see). This rock rises to a perpendicular height of about 125 feet from the surface of the river at the ordinary stage. On the opposite side of the river, about four miles below Ottawa, is "Buffalo Rock," an isolated ridge of rock about two miles long by forty to sixty rods wide, evidently once an island at a period when the Illinois River occupied the whole valley. Additional interest is given to both these localities by their association with early history. Deer Park, on the Vermilion River—some two miles from where it empties into the Illinois, just below "Starved Rock"—is a peculiar grotto-like formation, caused by a ravine which enters the Vermilion at this point. Ascending this ravine from its mouth, for a quarter of a mile, between almost perpendicular walls, the road terminates abruptly at a dome-like overhanging rock which widens at this point to about 150 feet in diameter at the base, with a height of about 75 feet. A clear spring of water gushes from the base of the cliff, and, at certain seasons of the year, a beautiul water-fall pours from the cliffs into a little lake at the bottom of the chasm. There is much other striking scenery higher up, on both the Illinois and Fox Rivers.—A point which arrested the attention of the earliest explorers in this region was Mount Joliet, near the city of that name. It is first mentioned by St. Cosme in 1698, and has been variously known as Monjolly, Mont Jolie, Mount Juliet, and Mount Joliet. It had an elevation, in early times, of about 30 feet with a level top 1,300 by 225 feet. Prof. O. H. Marshall, in "The American Antiquarian," expresses the opinion that, originally, it was an island in the river, which, at a remote period, swept down the valley of the Des Plaines. Mount Joliet was a favorite rallying point of Illinois Indians, who were accustomed to hold their councils at its base.—The scenery along Rock River is not striking from its boldness, but it attracted the attention of early explorers by the picturesque beauty of its groves, undulating plains and sheets of water. The highest and most abrupt elevations are met with in Jo Daviess County, near the Wisconsin State line. Pilot Knob, a natural mound about three miles south of Galena and two miles from the Mississippi, has been a landmark well known to tourists and river men ever since the Upper Mississippi began to be navigated. Towering above the surrounding bluffs, it reaches an altitude of some 430 feet above the ordinary level of Fever River. A chain of some half dozen of these mounds extends some four or five miles in a northeasterly direction from Pilot Knob, Waddel's and Jackson's Mounds being conspicuous among them. There are also some castellated rocks around the city of Galena which are very striking. Charles Mound, belonging to the system already referred to, is believed to be the highest elevation in the State. It stands near the Wisconsin State line, and, according to Prof. Rolfe, has an altitude of 314 feet above the Illinois Central Railroad at Scales' Mound Station, and, 1,257 feet above the Gulf of Mexico.

SCHAUMBERG, a village in Schaumberg Township, Cook County. Population, 573.

SCHNEIDER, George, journalist and banker, was born at Pirmasens, Bavaria, Dec. 13, 1823. Being sentenced to death for his participation in the attempted rebellion of 1848, he escaped to America in 1849, going from New York to Cleveland, and afterwards to St. Louis. There, in connection with his brother, he established a German daily—"The New Era"—which was intensely anti-slavery and exerted a decided political influence, especially among persons of German birth. In 1851 he removed to Chicago, where he became editor of "The Staats Zeitung," in which he vigorously opposed the Kansas-Nebraska bill on its introduction by Senator Douglas. His attitude and articles gave such offense to the partisan friends of this measure, that "The Zeitung" was threatened with destruction by a mob in 1855. He early took advanced ground in opposition to slavery, and was a member of the convention of Anti-Nebraska editors, held at Decatur in 1856, and of the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington the same year, as well as of the National Republican Conventions of 1856 and 1860, participating in the nomination of both John C. Fremont and Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency. In 1861 he was a member of the Chicago Union Defense Committee, and was appointed, by Mr. Lincoln, Consul-General at Elsinore, Denmark. Returning to America in 1862, he disposed of his interest in "The Staats Zeitung" and was appointed the first Collector of Internal Revenue for the Chicago District. On retiring from this office he engaged in banking, subsequently becoming President of the National Bank of Illinois, with which he was associated for a quarter of a century. In 1877 President Hayes tendered him the ministry to Switzerland, which he declined. In 1880 he was chosen Presidential Elector for the State-at-large, also serving for a number of years as a member of the Republican State Central Committee.

SCHOFIELD, John McAllister, Major-General, was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., Sept 29, 1831; brought to Bristol, Kendall County, Ill., in 1843, and, two years later, removed to Freeport; graduated from the United States Military Academy, in 1853, as classmate of Generals McPherson and Sheridan; was assigned to the artillery service and served two years in Florida, after which he spent five years (1855-60) as an instructor at West Point. At the beginning of the Civil War he was on leave of absence, acting as Professor of Physics in Washington University at St. Louis, but, waiving his leave, he at once returned to duty and was appointed mustering officer; then, by permission of the War Department, entered the First Missouri Volunteers as Major, serving as Chief of Staff to General Lyon in the early battles in Missouri, including Wilson's Creek. His subsequent career included the organization of the Missouri State Militia (1862), command of the Army of the Frontier in Southwest Missouri, command of the Department of the Missouri and Ohio, participation in the Atlanta campaign and co-operation with Sherman in the capture of the rebel Gen. Joseph E. Johnston in North Carolina—his army having been transferred for this purpose, from Tennessee by way of Washington. After the close of the war he went on a special mission to Mexico to investigate the French occupation of that country; was commander of the Department of the Potomac, and served as Secretary of War, by appointment of President Johnson, from June, 1868, to March, 1869. On retiring from the Cabinet he was commissioned a full Major-General and held various Division and Department commands until 1886, when, on the death of General Sherman, he succeeded to the command of the Army, with headquarters at Washington. He was retired under the age limit, Sept. 29, 1895. His present home is in Washington.

SCHOLFIELD, John, jurist, was born in Clark County, Ill., in 1834; acquired the rudiments of an education in the common schools during boyhood, meanwhile gaining some knowledge of the higher branches through toilsome application to text-books without a preceptor. At the age of 20 he entered the law school at Louisville, Ky., graduating two years later, and beginning practice at Marshall, Ill. He defrayed his expenses at the law school from the proceeds of the sale of a small piece of land to which he had fallen heir. In 1856 he was elected State's Attorney, and, in 1860, was chosen to represent his county in the Legislature. After serving one term he returned to his professional career and succeeded in building up a profitable practice. In 1869-70 he represented Clark and Cumberland Counties in the Constitutional Convention, and, in 1870, became Solicitor for the Vandalia Railroad. In 1873 he was elected to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court of the State for the Middle Grand Division, caused by the resignation of Judge Anthony Thornton, and re-elected without opposition in 1879 and 1888. Died, in office, Feb. 13, 1893. It has been claimed that President Cleveland would have tendered him the Chief Justiceship of the United States Supreme Court, had he not insistently declined to accept the honor.

SCHOOL-HOUSES, EARLY. The primitive school-houses of Illinois were built of logs, and were extremely rude, as regards both structure and furnishing. Indeed, the earliest pioneers rarely erected a special building to be used as a school-house. An old smoke-house, an abandoned dwelling, an old block-house, or the loft or one end of a settler's cabin not unfrequently answered the purpose, and the church and the court-house were often made to accommodate the school. When a school-house, as such, was to be built, the men of the district gathered at the site selected, bringing their axes and a few other tools, with their ox-teams, and devoted four or five days to constructing a house into which, perhaps, not a nail was driven. Trees were cut from the public lands, and, without hewing, fashioned into a cabin. Sixteen feet square was usually considered the proper dimensions. In the walls were cut two holes, one for a door to admit light and air, and the other for the open fireplace, from which rose a chimney, usually built of sticks and mud, on the outside. Danger of fire was averted by thickly lining the inside of the chimney with clay mortar. Sometimes, but only with great labor, stone was substituted for mortar made from the clay soil. The chimneys were always wide, seldom less than six feet, and sometimes extending across one entire end of the building. The fuel used was wood cut directly from the forest, frequently in its green state, dragged to the spot in the form of logs or entire trees to be cut by the older pupils in lengths suited to the width of the chimney. Occasionally there was no chimney, the fire, in some of the most primitive structures, being built on the earth and the smoke escaping through a hole in the roof. In such houses a long board was set up on the windward side, and shifted from side to side as the wind varied. Stones or logs answered for andirons, clapboards served as shovels, and no one complained of the lack of tongs. Roofs were made of roughly split clapboards, held in place by "weight poles" laid on the boards, and by supports starting from "eaves poles." The space between the logs, which constituted the walls of the building, was filled in with blocks of wood or "chinking," and the crevices, both exterior and interior, daubed over with clay mortar, in which straw was sometimes mixed to increase its adhesiveness. On one side of the structure one or two logs were sometimes cut out to allow the admission of light; and, as glass could not always be procured, rain and snow were excluded and light admitted by the use of greased paper. Over this space a board, attached to the outer wall by leather hinges, was sometimes suspended to keep out the storms. The placing of a glass window in a country school-house at Edwardsville, in 1824, was considered an important event. Ordinarily the floor was of the natural earth, although this was sometimes covered with a layer of clay, firmly packed down. Only the more pretentious school-houses had "puncheon floors"; i. e., floors made of split logs roughly hewn. Few had "ceilings" (so-called), the latter being usually made of clapboards, sometimes of bark, on which was spread earth, to keep out the cold. The seats were also of puncheons (without backs) supported on four legs made of pieces of poles inserted through augur holes. No one had a desk, except the advanced pupils who were learning to write. For their convenience a broader and smoother puncheon was fastened into the wall by wooden pins, in such a way that it would slope downward toward the pupil, the front being supported by a brace extending from the wall. When a pupil was writing he faced the wall. When he had finished this task, he "reversed himself" and faced the teacher and his schoolmates. These adjuncts completed the furnishings, with the exception of a split-bottomed chair for the teacher (who seldom had a desk) and a pail, or "piggin," of water, with a gourd for a drinking cup. Rough and uncouth as these structures were, they were evidences of public spirit and of appreciation of the advantages of education. They were built and maintained by mutual aid and sacrifice, and, in them, some of the great men of the State and Nation obtained that primary training which formed the foundation of their subsequent careers. (See Education.)

SCHUYLER COUNTY, located in the western portion of the State, has an area of 430 square miles, and was named for Gen. Philip Schuyler. The first American settlers arrived in 1823, and, among the earliest pioneers, were Calvin Hobart, William H. Taylor and Orris McCartney. The county was organized from a portion of Pike County, in 1825, the first Commissioners being Thomas Blair, Thomas McKee and Samuel Horney. The Commissioners appointed to locate the county-seat, selected a site in the eastern part of the county about one mile west of the present village of Pleasant View, to which the name of Beardstown was given, and where the earliest court was held, Judge John York Sawyer presiding, with Hart Fellows as Clerk, and Orris McCartney, Sheriff. This location, however, proving unsatisfactory, new Commissioners were appointed, who, in the early part of 1826, selected the present site of the city of Rushville, some five miles west of the point originally chosen. The new seat of justice was first called Rushton, in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, but the name was afterwards changed to Rushville. Ephraim Eggleston was the pioneer of Rushville. The surface of the county is rolling, and the region contains excellent farming land, which is well watered by the Illinois River and numerous creeks. Population (1890), 16,013; (1900), 16,129.

SCHWATKA, Frederick, Arctic explorer, was born at Galena, Ill., Sept. 29, 1849; graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1871, and was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Third Cavalry, serving on the frontier until 1877, meantime studying law and medicine, being admitted to the bar in 1875, and graduating in medicine in 1876. Having his interest excited by reports of traces of Sir John Franklin's expedition, found by the Esquimaux, he obtained leave of absence in 1878, and, with Wm. H. Gilder as second in command, sailed from New York in the "Eothen," June 19, for King William's Land. The party returned, Sept. 22, 1880, having found and buried the skeletons of many of Franklin's party, besides discovering relics which tended to clear up the mystery of their fate. During this period he made a sledge journey of 3,251 miles. Again, in 1883, he headed an exploring expedition up the Yukon River. After a brief return to army duty he tendered his resignation in 1885, and the next year led a special expedition to Alaska, under the auspices of "The New York Times," later making a voyage of discovery among the Aleutian Islands. In 1889 he conducted an expedition to Northern Mexico, where he found many interesting relics of Aztec civilization and of the cliff and cave-dwellers. He received the Roquette Arctic Medal from the Geographical Society of Paris, and a medal from the Imperial Geographical Society of Russia; also published several volumes relating to his researches, under the titles, "Along Alaska's Great River"; "The Franklin Search Under Lieutenant Schwatka"; "Nimrod of the North"; and "Children of the Cold." Died, at Portland, Ore., Nov. 2, 1892.

SCOTT, James W., journalist, was born in Walworth County, Wis., June 26, 1849, the son of a printer, editor and publisher. While a boy he accompanied his father to Galena, where the latter established a newspaper, and where he learned the printer's trade. After graduating from the Galena high school, he entered Beloit College, but left at the end of his sophomore year. Going to New York, he became interested in floriculture, at the same time contributing short articles to horticultural periodicals. Later he was a compositor in Washington. His first newspaper venture was the publication of a weekly newspaper in Maryland in 1872. Returning to Illinois, conjointly with his father he started "The Industrial Press" at Galena, but, in 1875, removed to Chicago. There he purchased "The Daily National Hotel Reporter," from which he withdrew a few years later. In May, 1881, in conjunction with others, he organized The Chicago Herald Company, in which he ultimately secured a controlling interest. His journalistic and executive capability soon brought additional responsibilities. He was chosen President of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, of the Chicago Press Club, and of the United Press —the latter being an organization for the collection and dissemination of telegraphic news to journals throughout the United States and Canada. He was also conspicuously connected with the preliminary organization of the World's Columbian Exposition, and Chairman of the Press Committee. In 1893 he started an evening paper at Chicago, which he named "The Post." Early in 1895 he purchased "The Chicago Times," intending to consolidate it with "The Herald," but before the final consummation of his plans, he died suddenly, while on a business visit in New York, April 14, 1895.

SCOTT, John M., lawyer and jurist, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., August 1, 1824; his father being of Scotch-Irish descent and his mother a Virginian. His attendance upon district schools was supplemented by private tuition, and his early education was the best that the comparatively new country afforded. He read law at Belleville, was admitted to the bar in 1848, removed to McLean County, which continued to be his home for nearly fifty years. He served as County School Commissioner from 1849 to 1852, and, in the latter year, was elected County Judge. In 1856 he was an unsuccessful Republican candidate for the State Senate, frequently speaking from the same platform with Abraham Lincoln. In 1862 he was elected Judge of the Circuit Court of the Eighth Judicial Circuit, to succeed David Davis on the elevation of the latter to the bench of the United States Supreme Court, and was re-elected in 1867. In 1870, a new judicial election being rendered necessary by the adoption of the new Constitution, Judge Scott was chosen Justice of the Supreme Court for a term of nine years; was re-elected in 1879, but declined a renomination in 1888. The latter years of his life were devoted to his private affairs. Died, at Bloomington, Jan. 21, 1898. Shortly before his death Judge Scott published a volume containing a History of the Illinois Supreme Court, including brief sketches of the early occupants of the Supreme Court bench and early lawyers of the State.

SCOTT, Matthew Thompson, agriculturist and real-estate operator, was born at Lexington, Ky., Feb. 24, 1828; graduated at Centre College in 1846, then spent several years looking after his father's landed interests in Ohio, when he came to Illinois and invested largely in lands for himself and others. He laid out the town of Chenoa in 1856; lived in Springfield in 1870-72, when he removed to Bloomington, where he organized the McLean County Coal Company, remaining as its head until his death; was also the founder of "The Bloomington Bulletin," in 1878. Died, at Bloomington, May 21, 1891.

SCOTT, Owen, journalist and ex-Congressman, was born in Jackson Township, Effingham County, Ill., July 6, 1848, reared on a farm, and, after receiving a thorough common-school education, became a teacher, and was, for eight years, Superintendent of Schools for his native county. In January, 1874, he was admitted to the bar, but abandoned practice, ten years later, to engage in newspaper work. His first publication was "The Effingham Democrat," which he left to become proprietor and manager of "The Bloomington Bulletin." He was also publisher of "The Illinois Freemason," a monthly periodical. Before removing to Bloomington he filled the offices of City Attorney and Mayor of Effingham, and also served as Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue. In 1890 he was elected as a Democrat from the Fourteenth Illinois District to the Fifty-second Congress. In 1892 he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Benjamin F. Funk. During the past few years, Mr. Scott has been editor of "The Bloomington Leader."

SCOTT COUNTY, lies in the western part of the State adjoining the Illinois River, and has an area of 248 square miles. The region was originally owned by the Kickapoo Indians, who ceded it to the Government by the treaty of Edwardsville, July 30, 1819. Six months later (in January, 1820) a party of Kentuckians settled near Lynnville (now in Morgan County), their names being Thomas Stevens, James Scott, Alfred Miller, Thomas Allen, John Scott and Adam Miller. Allen erected the first house in the county, John Scott the second and Adam Miller the third. About the same time came Stephen M. Umpstead, whose wife was the first white woman in the county. Other pioneers were Jedediah Webster, Stephen Pierce, Joseph Densmore, Jesse Roberts, and Samuel Bogard. The country was rough and the conveniences of civilization few and remote. Settlers took their corn to Edwardsville to be ground, and went to Alton for their mail. Turbulence early showed itself, and, in 1822, a band of "Regulators" was organized from the best citizens, who meted out a rough and ready sort of justice, until 1830, occasionally shooting a desperado at his cabin door. Scott County was cut off from Morgan and organized in 1839. It contains good farming land, much of it being originally timbered, and it is well watered by the Illinois River and numerous small streams. Winchester is the county-seat. Population of the county (1880), 10,741; (1890), 10,304; (1900), 10,455.

SCRIPPS, John L., journalist, was born near Cape Girardeau, Mo., Feb. 18, 1818; was taken to Rushville, Ill., in childhood, and educated at McKendree College; studied law and came to Chicago in 1847, with the intention of practicing, but, a year or so later, bought a third interest in "The Chicago Tribune," which had been established during the previous year. In 1852 he withdrew from "The Tribune," and, in conjunction with William Bross (afterwards Lieutenant-Governor), established "The Daily Democratic Press," which was consolidated with "The Tribune" in July, 1858, under the name of "The Press and Tribune," Mr. Scripps remaining one of the editors of the new concern. In 1861 he was appointed, by Mr. Lincoln, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving until 1865, when, having sold his interest in "The Tribune," he engaged in the banking business as a member of the firm of Scripps, Preston & Kean. His health, however, soon showed signs of failure, and he died, Sept. 21, 1866, at Minneapolis, Minn., whither he had gone in hopes of restoration. Mr. Scripps was a finished and able writer who did much to elevate the standard of Chicago journalism.

SCROGGS, George, journalist, was born at Wilmington, Clinton, County, Ohio, Oct. 7, 1842—the son of Dr. John W. Scroggs, who came to Champaign County, Ill., in 1851, and, in 1858, took charge of "The Central Illinois Gazette." In 1866-67 Dr. Scroggs was active in securing the location of the State University at Champaign, afterwards serving as a member of the first Board of Trustees of that institution. The son, at the age of 15, became an apprentice in his father's printing office, continuing until 1862, when he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being promoted through the positions of Sergeant-Major and Second Lieutenant, and finally serving on the staffs of Gen. Jeff. C. Davis and Gen. James D. Morgan, but declining a commission as Adjutant of the Sixtieth Illinois. He participated in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Mission Ridge and the march with Sherman to the sea, in the latter being severely wounded at Bentonville, N. C. He remained in the service until July, 1865, when he resigned; then entered the University at Champaign, later studied law, meanwhile writing for "The Champaign Gazette and Union," of which he finally became sole proprietor. In 1877 he was appointed an Aid-de-Camp on the staff of Governor Cullom, and, the following year, was elected to the Thirty-first General Assembly, but, before the close of the session (1879), received the appointment of United States Consul to Hamburg, Germany. He was compelled to surrender this position, a year later, on account of ill-health, and, returning home, died, Oct. 15, 1880.

SEATONVILLE, a village in Hall Township, Bureau County. Population (1900), 909.

SECRETARIES OF STATE. The following is a list of the Secretaries of State of Illinois from its admission into the Union down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each incumbent: Elias Kent Kane, 1818-22; Samuel D. Lockwood, 1822-23; David Blackwell, 1823-24; Morris Birkbeck, October, 1824 to January, 1825 (failed of confirmation by the Senate); George Forquer, 1825-28; Alexander Pope Field, 1828-40; Stephen A. Douglas, 1840-41 (served three months—resigned to take a seat on the Supreme bench); Lyman Trumbull, 1841-43; Thompson Campbell, 1843-46; Horace S. Cooley, 1846-50; David L. Gregg, 1850-53; Alexander Starne, 1853-57; Ozias M. Hatch, 1857-65; Sharon Tyndale, 1865-69; Edward Rummel, 1869-73; George H. Harlow, 1873-81; Henry D. Dement, 1881-89; Isaac N. Pearson, 1889-93; William H. Hinrichsen, 1893-97; James A. Rose, 1897——. Nathaniel Pope and Joseph Phillips were the only Secretaries of Illinois during the Territorial period, the former serving from 1809 to 1816, and the latter from 1816 to 1818. Under the first Constitution (1818) the office of the Secretary of State was filled by appointment by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but without limitation as to term of office. By the Constitution of 1848, and again by that of 1870, that officer was made elective by the people at the same time as the Governor, for a term of four years.

SECRET TREASONABLE SOCIETIES. Early in the War of the Rebellion there sprang up, at various points in the Northwest, organizations of persons disaffected toward the National Government. They were most numerous in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and Missouri. At first they were known by such titles as "Circles of Honor," "Mutual Protective Associations," etc. But they had kindred aims and their members were soon united in one organization, styled "Knights of the Golden Circle." Its secrets having been partially disclosed, this body ceased to exist—or, it would be more correct to say, changed its name—being soon succeeded (1863) by an organization of similar character, called the "American Knights." These societies, as first formed, were rather political than military. The "American Knights" had more forcible aims, but this, in turn, was also exposed, and the order was re-organized under the name of "Sons of Liberty." The last named order started in Indiana, and, owing to its more perfect organization, rapidly spread over the Northwest, acquiring much more strength and influence than its predecessors had done. The ultimate authority of the organization was vested in a Supreme Council, whose officers were a "supreme commander," "secretary of state," and "treasurer." Each State represented formed a division, under a "deputy grand commander." States were divided into military districts, under "major-generals." County lodges were termed "temples." The order was virtually an officered army, and its aims were aggressive. It had its commander-in-chief, its brigades and its regiments. Three degrees were recognized, and the oaths of secrecy taken at each initiation surpassed, in binding force, either the oath of allegiance or an oath taken in a court of justice. The maintenance of slavery, and forcible opposition to a coercive policy by the Government in dealing with secession, were the pivotal doctrines of the order. Its methods and purposes were to discourage enlistments and resist a draft; to aid and protect deserters; to disseminate treasonable literature; to aid the Confederates in destroying Government property. Clement L. Vallandigham, the expatriated traitor, was at its head, and, in 1864, claimed that it had a numerical strength of 400,000, of whom 65,000 were in Illinois. Many overt acts were committed, but the organization, having been exposed and defeated in its objects, disbanded in 1865. (See Camp Douglas Conspiracy.)

SELBY, Paul, editor, was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, July 20, 1825; removed with his parents, in 1837, to Van Buren County, Iowa, but, at the age of 19, went to Southern Illinois, where he spent four years teaching, chiefly in Madison County. In 1848 he entered the preparatory department of Illinois College at Jacksonville, but left the institution during his junior year to assume the editorship of "The Morgan Journal," at Jacksonville, with which he remained until the fall of 1858, covering the period of the organization of the Republican party, in which "The Journal" took an active part. He was a member of the Anti-Nebraska (afterwards known as Republican) State Convention, which met at Springfield, in October, 1854 (the first ever held in the State), and, on Feb. 22, 1856, attended and presided over a conference of Anti-Nebraska editors of the State at Decatur, called to devise a line of policy for the newly organizing Republican party. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) This body appointed the first Republican State Central Committee and designated the date of the Bloomington Convention of May 29, following, which put in nomination the first Republican State ticket ever named in Illinois, which ticket was elected in the following November. (See Bloomington Convention.) In 1859 he prepared a pamphlet giving a history of the celebrated Canal scrip fraud, which was widely circulated. (See Canal Scrip Fraud.) Going South in the fall of 1859, he was engaged in teaching in the State of Louisiana until the last of June, 1861. Just two weeks before the fall of Fort Sumter he was denounced to his Southern neighbors as an "abolitionist" and falsely charged with having been connected with the "underground railroad," in letters from secession sympathizers in the North, whose personal and political enmity he had incurred while conducting a Republican paper in Illinois, some of whom referred to Jefferson Davis, Senator Slidell, of Louisiana, and other Southern leaders as vouchers for their characters. He at once invited an investigation by the Board of Trustees of the institution, of which he was the Principal, when that body—although composed, for the most part, of Southern men—on the basis of testimonials from prominent citizens of Jacksonville, and other evidence, adopted resolutions declaring the charges prompted by personal hostility, and delivered the letters of his accusers into his hands. Returning North with his family in July, 1861, he spent some nine months in the commissary and transportation branches of the service at Cairo and at Paducah, Ky. In July, 1862, he became associate editor of "The Illinois State Journal" at Springfield, remaining until November, 1865. The next six months were spent as Assistant Deputy Collector in the Custom House at New Orleans, but, returning North in June, 1866, he soon after became identified with the Chicago press, serving, first upon the staff of "The Evening Journal" and, later, on "The Republican." In May, 1868, he assumed the editorship of "The Quincy Whig," ultimately becoming part proprietor of that paper, but, in January, 1874, resumed his old place on "The State Journal," four years later becoming one of its proprietors. In 1880 he was appointed by President Hayes Postmaster of Springfield, was reappointed by Arthur in 1884, but resigned in 1886. Meanwhile he had sold his interest in "The Journal," but the following year organized a new company for its purchase, when he resumed his former position as editor. In 1889 he disposed of his holding in "The Journal," finally removing to Chicago, where he has been employed in literary work. In all he has been engaged in editorial work over thirty-five years, of which eighteen were spent upon "The State Journal." In 1860 Mr. Selby was complimented by his Alma Mater with the honorary degree of A. M. He has been twice married, first to Miss Erra Post, of Springfield, who died in November, 1865, leaving two daughters, and, in 1870, to Mrs. Mary J. Hitchcock, of Quincy, by whom he had two children, both of whom died in infancy.

SEMPLE, James, United States Senator, was born in Green County, Ky., Jan. 5, 1798, of Scotch descent; after learning the tanner's trade, studied law and emigrated to Illinois in 1818, removing to Missouri four years later, where he was admitted to the bar. Returning to Illinois in 1828, he began practice at Edwardsville, but later became a citizen of Alton. During the Black Hawk War he served as Brigadier-General. He was thrice elected to the lower house of the Legislature (1832, '34 and '36), and was Speaker during the last two terms. In 1833 he was elected Attorney-General by the Legislature, but served only until the following year, and, in 1837, was appointed Minister to Granada, South America. In 1843 he was appointed, and afterwards elected, United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Samuel McRoberts, at the expiration of his term (1847) retiring to private life. He laid out the town of Elsah, in Jersey County, just south of which he owned a large estate on the Mississippi bluffs, where he died, Dec. 20, 1866.

SENECA (formerly Crotty), a village of La Salle County, situated on the Illinois River, the Illinois & Michigan Canal and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 13 miles east of Ottawa. It has a graded school, several churches, a bank, some manufactures, grain warehouses, coal mines, telephone system and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,190; (1900), 1,036.

SENN, (Dr.) Nicholas, physican and surgeon, was born in the Canton of St. Gaul, Switzerland, Oct. 31, 1844; was brought to America at 8 years of age, his parents settling at Washington, Wis. He received a grammar school education at Fond du Lac, and, in 1864, began the study of medicine, graduating at the Chicago Medical College in 1868. After some eighteen months spent as resident physician in the Cook County Hospital, he began practice at Ashford, Wis., but removed to Milwaukee in 1874, where he became attending physician of the Milwaukee Hospital. In 1877 he visited Europe, graduated the following year from the University of Munich, and, on his return, became Professor of the Principles of Surgery and Surgical Pathology in Rush Medical College in Chicago—also has held the chair of the Practice of Surgery in the same institution. Dr. Senn has achieved great success and won an international reputation in the treatment of difficult cases of abdominal surgery. He is the author of a number of volumes on different branches of surgery which are recognized as standard authorities. A few years ago he purchased the extensive library of the late Dr. William Baum, Professor of Surgery in the University of Gottingen, which he presented to the Newberry Library of Chicago. In 1893, Dr. Senn was appointed Surgeon-General of the Illinois National Guard, and has also been President of the Association of Military Surgeons of the National Guard of the United States, besides being identified with various other medical bodies. Soon after the beginning of the Spanish-American War, he was appointed, by President McKinley, a Surgeon of Volunteers with the rank of Colonel, and rendered most efficient aid in the military branch of the service at Camp Chickamauga and in the Santiago campaign.

SEXTON, (Col.) James A., Commander-in-Chief of Grand Army of the Republic, was born in the city of Chicago, Jan. 5, 1844; in April, 1861, being then only a little over 17, enlisted as a private soldier under the first call for troops issued by President Lincoln; at the close of his term was appointed a Sergeant, with authority to recruit a company which afterwards was attached to the Fifty-first Volunteer Infantry. Later, he was transferred to the Sixty-seventh with the rank of Lieutenant, and, a few months after, to the Seventy-second with a commission as Captain of Company D, which he had recruited. As commander of his regiment, then constituting a part of the Seventeenth Army Corps, he participated in the battles of Columbia, Duck Creek, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville, and in the Nashville campaign. Both at Nashville and Franklin he was wounded, and again, at Spanish Fort, by a piece of shell which broke his leg. His regiment took part in seven battles and eleven skirmishes, and, while it went out 967 strong in officers and men, it returned with only 332, all told, although it had been recruited by 234 men. He was known as "The boy Captain," being only 18 years old when he received his first commission, and 21 when, after participating in the Mobile campaign, he was mustered out with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. After the close of the war he engaged in planting in the South, purchasing a plantation in Lowndes County, Ala., but, in 1867, returned to Chicago, where he became a member of the firm of Cribben, Sexton & Co., stove manufacturers, from which he retired in 1898. In 1884 he served as Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket for the Fourth District, and, in 1889, was appointed, by President Harrison, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving over five years. In 1888 he was chosen Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for the State of Illinois, and, ten years later, to the position of Commander-in-Chief of the order, which he held at the time of his death. He had also been, for a number of years, one of the Trustees of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Quincy, and, during most of the time, President of the Board. Towards the close of the year 1898, he was appointed by President McKinley a member of the Commission to investigate the conduct of the Spanish-American War, but, before the Commission had concluded its labors, was taken with "the grip," which developed into pneumonia, from which he died in Washington, Feb. 5, 1899.

SEYMOUR, George Franklin, Protestant Episcopal Bishop, was born in New York City, Jan. 5, 1829; graduated from Columbia College in 1850, and from the General Theological Seminary (New York) in 1854. He received both minor and major orders at the hands of Bishop Potter, being made deacon in 1854 and ordained priest in 1855. For several years he was engaged in missionary work. During this period he was prominently identified with the founding of St. Stephen's College. After serving as rector in various parishes, in 1865 he was made Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the New York Seminary, and, ten years later, was chosen Dean of the institution, still retaining his professorship. Racine College conferred upon him the degree of S.T.D., in 1867, and Columbia that of LL.D. in 1878. In 1874 he was elected Bishop of Illinois, but failed of confirmation in the House of Deputies. Upon the erection of the new diocese of Springfield (1877) he accepted and was consecrated Bishop at Trinity Church, N. Y., June 11, 1878. He was a prominent member of the Third Pan-Anglican Council (London, 1885), and has done much to foster the growth and extend the influence of his church in his diocese.

SHABBONA, a village of De Kalb County, on the Iowa Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 25 miles west of Aurora. Population (1890), 502; (1900), 587.

SHABONA (or Shabbona), an Ottawa Chief, was born near the Maumee River, in Ohio, about 1775, and served under Tecumseh from 1807 to the battle of the Thames in 1813. In 1810 he accompanied Tecumseh and Capt. Billy Caldwell (see Sauganash) to the homes of the Pottawatomies and other tribes within the present limits of Illinois and Wisconsin, to secure their co-operation in driving the white settlers out of the country. At the battle of the Thames, he was by the side of Tecumseh when he fell, and both he and Caldwell, losing faith in their British allies, soon after submitted to the United States through General Cass at Detroit. Shabona was opposed to Black Hawk in 1832, and did much to thwart the plans of the latter and aid the whites. Having married a daughter of a Pottawatomie chief, who had a village on the Illinois River east of the present city of Ottawa, he lived there for some time, but finally removed 25 miles north to Shabona's Grove in De Kalb County. Here he remained till 1837, when he removed to Western Missouri. Black Hawk's followers having a reservation near by, hostilities began between them, in which a son and nephew of Shabona were killed. He finally returned to his old home in Illinois, but found it occupied by whites, who drove him from the grove that bore his name. Some friends then bought for him twenty acres of land on Mazon Creek, near Morris, where he died, July 27, 1859. He is described as a noble specimen of his race. A life of him has been published by N. Matson (Chicago, 1878).

SHANNON, a village of Carroll County, on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, 18 miles southwest of Freeport. It is an important trade center, has a bank and one newspaper. Population (1890), 591; (1900), 678.

SHAW, Aaron, former Congressman, born in Orange County, N. Y., in 1811; was educated at the Montgomery Academy, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Goshen in that State. In 1833 he removed to Lawrence County, Ill. He has held various important public offices. He was a member of the first Internal Improvement Convention of the State; was chosen State's Attorney by the Legislature, in which body he served two terms; served four years as Judge of the Twenty-fifth Judicial Circuit; was elected to the Thirty-fifth Congress in 1856, and to the Forty-eighth in 1882, as a Democrat.

SHAW, James, lawyer, jurist, was born in Ireland, May 3, 1832, brought to this country in infancy and grew up on a farm in Cass County, Ill.; graduated from Illinois College in 1857, and, after admission to the bar, began practice at Mount Carroll. In 1870 he was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, being re-elected in 1872, '76 and '78. He was Speaker of the House during the session of 1877, and one of the Republican leaders on the floor during the succeeding session. In 1872 he was chosen a Presidential Elector, and, in 1891, to a seat on the Circuit bench from the Thirteenth Circuit, and, in 1897 was re-elected for the Fifteenth Circuit.

SHAWNEETOWN, a city and the county-seat of Gallatin County, on the Ohio River 120 miles from its mouth and at the terminus of the Shawneetown Divisions of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern and the Louisville & Nashville Railroads; is one of the oldest towns in the State, having been laid out in 1808, and noted for the number of prominent men who resided there at an early day. Coal is extensively mined in that section, and Shawneetown is one of the largest shipping points for lumber, coal and farm products between Cairo and Louisville, navigation being open the year round. Some manufacturing is done here; the city has several mills, a foundry and machine shop, two or three banks, several churches, good schools and two weekly papers. Since the disastrous floods of 1884 and 1898, Shawneetown has reconstructed its levee system on a substantial scale, which is now believed to furnish ample protection against the recurrence of similar disaster. Pop. (1900), 1,698; (1903, est.), 2,200.

SHEAHAN, James W., journalist, was born in Baltimore, Md., spent his early life, after reaching manhood, in Washington City as a Congressional Reporter, and, in 1847, reported the proceedings of the Illinois State Constitutional Convention at Springfield. Through the influence of Senator Douglas he was induced, in 1854, to accept the editorship of "The Young America" newspaper at Chicago, which was soon after changed to "The Chicago Times." Here he remained until the fall of 1860, when, "The Times" having been sold and consolidated with "The Herald," a Buchanan-Breckenridge organ, he established a new paper called "The Morning Post." This he made representative of the views of the "War Democrats" as against "The Times," which was opposed to the war. In May, 1865, he sold the plant of "The Post" and it became "The Chicago Republican" — now "Inter Ocean." A few months later. Mr. Sheahan accepted a position as chief writer on the editorial staff of "The Chicago Tribune," which he retained until his death, June 17, 1883.

SHEFFIELD, a prosperous village of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, 44 miles east of Rock Island; has valuable coal mines, a bank and one newspaper. Population (1890), 993; (1900), 1,265.

SHELBY COUNTY, lies south of the center of the State, and contains an area of 776 square miles. The tide of immigration to this county was at first from Kentucky, Tennessee and North Carolina, although later it began to set in from the Northern States. The first cabin in the county was built by Simeon Wakefield on what is now the site of Williamsburg, first called Cold Spring. Joseph Daniel was the earliest settler in what is now Shelbyville, pre-empting ten acres, which he soon afterward sold to Joseph Oliver, the pioneer merchant of the county, and father of the first white child born within its limits. Other pioneers were Shimei Wakefield, Levi Casey and Samuel Hall. In lieu of hats the early settlers wore caps made of squirrel or coon skin, with the tails dangling at the backs, and he was regarded as well dressed who boasted a fringed buckskin shirt and trousers, with moccasins. The county was formed in 1827, and Shelbyville made the county-seat. Both county and town are named in honor of Governor Shelby, of Kentucky. County Judge Joseph Oliver held the first court in the cabin of Barnett Bone, and Judge Theophilus W. Smith presided over the first Circuit Court in 1828. Coal is abundant, and limestone and sandstone are also found. The surface is somewhat rolling and well wooded. The Little Wabash and Kaskaskia Rivers flow through the central and southeastern portions. The county lies in the very heart of the great corn belt of the State, and has excellent transportation facilities, being penetrated by four lines of railway. Population (1880), 30,270; (1890), 31,-191; (1900), 32,126.

SHELBYVILLE, the county-seat and an incorporated city of Shelby County, on the Kaskaskia River and two lines of railway, 32 miles southeast of Decatur. Agriculture is carried on extensively, and there is considerable coal mining in the immediate vicinity. The city has two flouring mills, a handle factory, a creamery, one National and one State bank, one daily and four weekly papers and one monthly periodical, an Orphans' Home, ten churches, two graded schools, and a public library. Population (1890), 3,162; (1900), 3,546.

SHELDON, a village of Iroquois County, at the intersection of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railways, 9 miles east of Watseka; has two banks and a newspaper. The region is agricultural. Pop. (1890), 910; (1900), 1,103.

SHELDON, Benjamin R., jurist, was born in Massachusetts in 1813, graduated from Williams College in 1831, studied law at the Yale Law School, and was admitted to practice in 1836. Emigrating to Illinois, he located temporarily at Hennepin, Putnam County, but soon removed to Galena, and finally to Rockford. In 1848 he was elected Circuit Judge of the Sixth Circuit, which afterwards being divided, he was assigned to the Fourteenth Circuit, remaining until 1870, when he was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, presiding as Chief Justice in 1877. He was re-elected in 1879, but retired in 1888, being succeeded by the late Justice Bailey. Died, April 13, 1897.

SHEPPARD, Nathan, author and lecturer, was born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 9, 1834; graduated at Rochester Theological Seminary in 1859; during the Civil War was special correspondent of "The New York World" and "The Chicago Journal" and "Tribune," and, during the Franco-German War, of "The Cincinnati Gazette;" also served as special American correspondent of "The London Times," and was a contributor to "Frazer's Magazine" and "Temple Bar." In 1873 he became a lecturer on Modern English Literature and Rhetoric in Chicago University and, four years later, accepted a similar position in Allegheny College; also spent four years in Europe, lecturing in the principal towns of Great Britain and Ireland. In 1884 he founded the "Athenaeum" at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., of which he was President until his death, early in 1888. "The Dickens Reader," "Character Readings from George Eliot" and "Essays of George Eliot" were among the volumes issued by him between 1881 and 1887. Died in New York City, Jan. 24, 1888.

SHERMAN, Alson Smith, early Chicago Mayor, was born at Barre, Vt., April 21, 1811, remaining there until 1836, when he came to Chicago and began business as a contractor and builder. Several years later he opened the first stone quarries at Lemont, Ill. Mr. Sherman spent many years in the service of Chicago as a public official. From 1840 to 1842 he was Captain of a company of militia; for two years served as Chief of the Fire Department, and was elected Alderman in 1842, serving again in 1846. In 1844, he was chosen Mayor, his administration being marked by the first extensive public improvements made in Chicago. After his term as Mayor he did much to secure a better water supply for the city. He was especially interested in promoting common school education, being for several years a member of the City School Board. He was Vice-President of the first Board of Trustees of Northwestern University. Retired from active pursuits, Mr. Sherman is now (1899) spending a serene old age at Waukegan, Ill.—Oren (Sherman) brother of the preceding and early Chicago merchant, was born at Barre, Vt., March 5, 1816. After spending several years in a mercantile house in Montpelier, Vt., at the age of twenty he came west, first to New Buffalo, Mich., and, in 1836, to Chicago, opening a dry-goods store there the next spring. With various partners Mr. Sherman continued in a general mercantile business until 1853, at the same time being extensively engaged in the provision trade, one-half the entire transactions in pork in the city passing through his hands. Next he engaged in developing stone quarries at Lemont, Ill.; also became extensively interested in the marble business, continuing in this until a few years after the panic of 1873, when he retired in consequence of a shock of paralysis. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 15, 1898.

SHERMAN, Elijah B., lawyer, was born at Fairfield, Vt., June 18, 1832—his family being distantly related to Roger Sherman, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and the late Gen. W. T. Sherman; gained his education in the common schools and at Middlebury College, where he graduated in 1860; began teaching, but soon after enlisted as a private in the war for the Union; received a Lieutenant's commission, and served until captured on the eve of the battle at Antietam, when he was paroled and sent to Camp Douglas, Chicago, awaiting exchange. During this period he commenced reading law and, having resigned his commission, graduated from the law department of Chicago University in 1864 In 1876 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Cook County, and re-elected in 1878, and the following year appointed Master in Chancery of the United States District Court, a position which he still occupies He has repeatedly been called upon to deliver addresses on political, literary and patriotic occasions, one of these being before the alumni of his alma mater, in 1884, when he was complimented with the degree of LL.D.

SHIELDS, James, soldier and United States Senator, was born in Ireland in 1810, emigrated to the United States at the age of sixteen, and began the practice of law at Kaskaskia in 1832. He was elected to the Legislature in 1836, and State Auditor in 1839. In 1843 he became a Judge of the Supreme Court of the State, and, in 1845, was made Commissioner of the General Land Office. In July, 1846, he was commissioned Brigadier-General in the Mexican War gaining the brevet of Major-General at Cerro-Gordo, where he was severely wounded. He was again wounded at Chapultepec, and mustered out in 1848. The same year he was appointed Governor of Oregon Territory. In 1849 the Democrats in the Illinois Legislature elected him Senator, and he resigned his office in Oregon. In 1856 he removed to Minnesota, and, in 1858, was chosen United States Senator from that State, his term expiring in 1859, when he established a residence in California. At the outbreak of the Civil War (1861) he was superintending a mine in Mexico, but at once hastened to Washington to tender his services to the Governmnet. He was commissioned Brigadier-General, and served with distinction until March, 1863, when the effect of numerous wounds caused him to resign. He subsequently removed to Missouri, practicing law at Carrollton and serving in the Legislature of that State in 1874 and 1879. In the latter year he was elected United States Senator to fill out the unexpired term of Senator Bogy, who had died in office—serving only six weeks, but being the only man in the history of the country who filled the office of United States Senator from three different States. Died, at Ottumwa, Iowa, June 1, 1879.

SHIPMAN, a town of Macoupin County, on the Chicago & Alton Railway, 19 miles north-northeast of Alton and 14 miles southwest of Carlinville. Population (1890), 410; (1900), 396.

SHIPMAN, George E., M.D., physician and philanthropist, born in New York City, March 4, 1820; graduated at the University of New York in 1839, and took a course in the College of Physicians and Surgeons; practiced for a time at Peoria, Ill., but, in 1846, located in Chicago, where he assisted in organizing the first Homeopathic Hospital in that city, and, in 1855, was one of the first Trustees of Hahnemann College. In 1871 he established, in Chicago, the Foundlings' Home at his own expense, giving to it the latter years of his life. Died, Jan. 20, 1893.

SHOREY, Daniel Lewis, lawyer and philanthropist, was born at Jonesborough, Washington County, Maine, Jan. 31, 1824; educated at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and at Dartmouth College, graduating from the latter in 1851; taught two years in Washington City, meanwhile reading law, afterwards taking a course at Dane Law School, Cambridge; was admitted to the bar in Boston in 1854, the next year locating at Davenport, Iowa, where he remained ten years. In 1865 he removed to Chicago, where he prosecuted his profession until 1890, when he retired. Mr. Shorey was prominent in the establishment of the Chicago Public Library, and a member of the first Library Board; was also a prominent member of the Chicago Literary Club, and was a Director in the new University of Chicago and deeply interested in its prosperity. Died, in Chicago, March 4, 1899.

SHORT, (Rev.) William F., clergyman and educator, was born in Ohio in 1829, brought to Morgan County, Ill., in childhood, and lived upon a farm until 20 years of age, when he entered McKendree College, spending his senior year, however, at Wesleyan University, Bloomington, where he graduated in 1854. He had meanwhile accepted a call to the Missouri Conference Seminary at Jackson, Mo.; where he remained three years, when he returned to Illinois, serving churches at Jacksonville and elsewhere, for a part of the time being Presiding Elder of the Jacksonville District. In 1875 he was elected President of Illinois Female College at Jacksonville, continuing in that position until 1893, when he was appointed Superintendent of the Illinois State Institution for the Blind at the same place, but resigned early in 1897. Dr. Short received the degree of D.D., conferred upon him by Ohio Wesleyan University.

SHOUP, George L., United States Senator, was born at Kittanning, Pa., June 15, 1836; came to Illinois in 1852, his father locating on a stock-farm near Galesburg; in 1859 removed to Colorado, where he engaged in mining and mercantile business until 1861, when he enlisted in a company of scouts, being advanced from the rank of First Lieutenant to the Colonelcy of the Third Colorado Cavalry, meanwhile serving as Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1864. Retiring to private life, he again engaged in mercantile and mining business, first in Nevada and then in Idaho; served two terms in the Territorial Legislature of the latter, was appointed Territorial Governor in 1889 and, in 1890, was chosen the first Governor of the State, in October of the same year being elected to the United States Senate, and re-elected in 1895 for a second term, which ends in 1901. Senator Shoup is one of the few Western Senators who remained faithful to the regular Republican organization, during the political campaign of 1896.

SHOWALTER, John W., jurist, was born in Mason County, Ky., Feb. 8, 1844; resided some years in Scott County in that State, and was educated in the local schools, at Maysville and Ohio University, finally graduating at Yale College in 1867; came to Chicago in 1869, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1870. He returned to Kentucky after the fire of 1871, but, in 1872, again came to Chicago and entered the employment of the firm of Moore & Caulfield, with whom he had been before the fire. In 1879 he became a member of the firm of Abbott, Oliver & Showalter (later, Oliver & Showalter), where he remained until his appointment as United States Circuit Judge, in March, 1895. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 12, 1898.

SHUMAN, Andrew, journalist and Lieutenant-Governor, was born at Manor, Lancaster County, Pa., Nov. 8, 1830. His father dying in 1837, he was reared by an uncle. At the age of 15 he became an apprentice in the office of "The Lancaster Union and Sentinel." A year later he accompanied his employer to Auburn, N.Y., working for two years on "The Daily Advertiser" of that city, then known as Governor Seward's "home organ." At the age of 18 he edited, published and distributed — during his leisure hours—a small weekly paper called "The Auburnian." At the conclusion of his apprenticeship he was employed, for a year or two, in editing and publishing "The Cayuga Chief," a temperance journal.

In 1851 he entered Hamilton College, but, before the completion of his junior year, consented, at the solicitation of friends of William H. Seward, to assume editorial control of "The Syracuse Daily Journal." In July, 1856, he came to Chicago, to accept an editorial position on "The Evening Journal" of that city, later becoming editor-in-chief and President of the Journal Company. From 1865 to 1870 (first by executive appointment and afterward by popular election) he was a Commissioner of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet, resigning the office four years before the expiration of his term. In 1876 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor on the Republican ticket. Owing to declining health, he abandoned active journalistic work in 1888, dying in Chicago, May 5, 1890. His home during the latter years of his life was at Evanston. Governor Shuman was author of a romance entitled "Loves of a Lawyer," besides numerous addresses before literary, commercial and scientific associations.

SHUMWAY, Dorice Dwight, merchant, was born at Williamsburg, Worcester County, Mass., Sept. 28, 1813, descended from French Huguenot ancestry; came to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1837, and to Montgomery County, Ill., in 1841; married a daughter of Hiram Rountree, an early resident of Hillsboro, and, in 1843, located in Christian County; was engaged for a time in merchandising at Taylorville, but retired in 1858, thereafter giving his attention to a large landed estate. In 1846 he was chosen Representative in the General Assembly, served in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and four years as County Judge of Christian County. Died, May 9, 1870.—Hiram P. (Shumway), eldest son of the preceding, was born in Montgomery County, Ill., June, 1842; spent his boyhood on a farm in Christian County and in his father's store at Taylorville; took an academy course and, in 1864, engaged in mercantile business; was Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly and Senator in the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh, afterwards removing to Springfield, where he engaged in the stone business.

SHURTLEFF COLLEGE, an institution located at Upper Alton, and the third established in Illinois. It was originally incorporated as the "Alton College" in 1831, under a special charter which was not accepted, but re-incorporated in 1835, in an "omnibus bill" with Illinois and McKendree Colleges. (See Early Colleges.) Its primal origin was a school at Rock Spring in St. Clair County, founded about 1824, by Rev. John M. Peck. This became the "Rock Spring Seminary" in 1827, and, about 1831, was united with an academy at Upper Alton. This was the nucleus of "Alton" (afterward "Shurtleff") College. As far as its denominational control is concerned, it has always been dominated by Baptist influence. Dr. Peck's original idea was to found a school for teaching theology and Biblical literature, but this project was at first inhibited by the State. Hubbard Loomis and John Russell were among the first instructors. Later, Dr. Benjamin Shurtleff donated the college $10,000, and the institution was named in his honor. College classes were not organized until 1840, and several years elapsed before a class graduated. Its endowment in 1898 was over $126,000, in addition to $125,000 worth of real and personal property. About 255 students were in attendance. Besides preparatory and collegiate departments, the college also maintains a theological school. It has a faculty of twenty instructors and is co-educational.

SIBLEY, a village of Ford County, on the Chicago Division of the Wabash Railway, 105 miles south-southwest of Chicago; has banks and a weekly newspaper. The district is agricultural. Population (1890), 404; (1900), 444.

SIBLEY, Joseph, lawyer and jurist, was born at Westfield, Mass., in 1818; learned the trade of a whip-maker and afterwards engaged in merchandising. In 1843 he began the study of law at Syracuse, N. Y., and, upon admission to the bar, came west, finally settling at Nauvoo, Hancock County. He maintained a neutral attitude during the Mormon troubles, thus giving offense to a section of the community. In 1847 he was an unsuccessful candidate for the Legislature, but was elected in 1850, and re-elected in 1852. In 1853 he removed to Warsaw, and, in 1855, was elected Judge of the Circuit Court, and re-elected in 1861, '67 and '73, being assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court of the Second District, in 1877. His residence, after 1865, was at Quincy, where he died, June 18, 1897.

SIDELL, a village of Vermillion County, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroads; has a bank, electric light plant and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 776.

SIDNEY, a village of Champaign County, on the main line of the Wabash Railway, at the junction of a branch to Champaign, 48 miles east-northeast of Decatur. It is in a farming district; has a bank and a newspaper. Population, (1900), 564.

SIM, (Dr.) William, pioneer physician, was born at Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1795, came to America in early manhood, and was the first physician to settle at Golconda, in Pope County, which he represented in the Fourth and Fifth General Assemblies (1824 and '28). He married a Miss Elizabeth Jack of Philadelphia, making the journey from Golconda to Philadelphia for that purpose on horseback. He had a family of five children, one son, Dr. Francis L. Sim, rising to distinction as a physician, and, for a time, being President of a Medical College at Memphis, Tenn. The elder Dr. Sim died at Golconda, in 1868.

SIMS, James, early legislator and Methodist preacher, was a native of South Carolina, but removed to Kentucky in early manhood, thence to St. Clair County, Ill., and, in 1820, to Sangamon County, where he was elected, in 1822, as the first Representative from that county in the Third General Assembly. At the succeeding session of the Legislature, he was one of those who voted against the Convention resolution designed to prepare the way for making Illinois a slave State. Mr. Sims resided for a time in Menard County, but finally removed to Morgan.

SINGER, Horace M., capitalist, was born in Schnectady, N. Y., Oct. 1, 1823; came to Chicago in 1836 and found employment on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, serving as superintendent of repairs upon the Canal until 1853. While thus employed he became one of the proprietors of the stone-quarries at Lemont, managed by the firm of Singer & Talcott until about 1890, when they became the property of the Western Stone Company. Originally a Democrat, he became a Republican during the Civil War, and served as a member of the Twenty-fifth General Assembly (1867) for Cook County, was elected County Commissioner in 1870, and was Chairman of the Republican County Central Committee in 1880. He was also associated with several financial institutions, being a director of the First National Bank and of the Auditorium Company of Chicago, and a member of the Union League and Calumet Clubs. Died, at Pasadena, Cal., Dec. 28, 1896.

SINGLETON, James W., Congressman, born at Paxton, Va., Nov. 23, 1811; was educated at the Winchester (Va.) Academy, and removed to Illinois in 1833, settling first at Mount Sterling, Brown County, and, some twenty years later, near Quincy. By profession he was a lawyer, and was prominent in political and commercial affairs. In his later years he devoted considerable attention to stock-raising. He was elected Brigadier-General of the Illinois militia in 1844, being identified to some extent with the "Mormon War"; was a member of the Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1862, served six terms in the Legislature, and was elected, on the Democratic ticket, to Congress in 1878, and again in 1880. In 1882 he ran as an independent Democrat, but was defeated by the regular nominee of his party, James M. Riggs. During the War of the Rebellion he was one of the most conspicuous leaders of the "peace party." He constructed the Quincy & Toledo (now part of the Wabash) and the Quincy, Alton & St. Louis (now part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy) Railways, being President of both companies. His death occurred at Baltimore, Md., April 4, 1892.

SINNET, John S., pioneer, was born at Lexington, Ky., March 10, 1796; at three years of age, taken by his parents to Missouri; enlisted in the War of 1812, but, soon after the war, came to Illinois, and, about 1818, settled in what is now Christian County, locating on land constituting a part of the present city of Taylorville. In 1840 he removed to Tazewell County, dying there, Jan. 13, 1872.

SKINNER, Mark, jurist, was born at Manchester, Vt., Sept. 13, 1813; graduated from Middlebury College in 1833, studied law, and, in 1836, came to Chicago; was admitted to the bar in 1839, became City Attorney in 1840, later Master in Chancery for Cook County, and finally United States District Attorney under President Tyler. As member of the House Finance Committee in the Fifteenth General Assembly (1846-48), he aided influentially in securing the adoption of measures for refunding and paying the State debt. In 1851 he was elected Judge of the Court of Common Pleas (now Superior Court) of Cook County, but declined a re-election in 1853. Originally a Democrat, Judge Skinner was an ardent opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill and a liberal supporter of the Government policy during the rebellion. He liberally aided the United States Sanitary Commission and was identified with all the leading charities of the city. Among the great business enterprises with which he was officially associated were the Galena & Chicago Union and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railways (in each of which he was a Director), the Chicago Marine & Fire Insurance Company, the Gas-Light and Coke Company and others. Died, Sept. 16, 1887. Judge Skinner's only surviving son was killed in the trenches before Petersburg, the last year of the Civil War.

SKINNER, Otis Ainsworth, clergyman and author, was born at Royalton, Vt., July 3, 1807; taught for some time, became a Universalist minister, serving churches in Baltimore, Boston and New York between 1831 and 1857; then came to Elgin, Ill., was elected President of Lombard University at Galesburg, but the following year took charge of a church at Joliet. Died, at Naperville, Sept. 18, 1861. He wrote several volumes on religious topics, and, at different times, edited religious periodicals at Baltimore, Haverhill, Mass., and Boston.

SKINNER, Ozias C., lawyer and jurist, was born at Floyd, Oneida County, N. Y., in 1817; in 1836, removed to Illinois, settling in Peoria County, where he engaged in farming. In 1838 he began the study of law at Greenville, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar of that State in 1840. Eighteen months later he returned to Illinois, and began practice at Carthage, Hancock County, removing to Quincy in 1844. During the "Mormon War" he served as Aid-de-camp to Governor Ford. In 1848 he was elected to the lower house of the Sixteenth General Assembly, and, for a short time, served as Prosecuting Attorney for the district including Adams and Brown Counties. In 1851 he was elected Judge of the (then) Fifteenth Judicial Circuit, and, in 1855, succeeded Judge S. H. Treat on the Supreme bench, resigning this position in April, 1858, two months before the expiration of his term. He was a large land owner and had extensive agricultural interests. He built, and was the first President of the Carthage & Quincy Railroad, now a part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy system. He was a prominent member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869, serving as Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary. Died in 1877.

SLADE, Charles, early Congressman; his early history, including date and place of birth, are unknown. In 1820 he was elected Representative from Washington County in the Second General Assembly, and, in 1826, was re-elected to the same body for Clinton and Washington. In 1832 he was elected one of the three Congressmen from Illinois, representing the First District. After attending the first session of the Twenty-third Congress, while on his way home, he was attacked with cholera, dying near Vincennes, Ind., July 11, 1834.

SLADE, James P., ex-State Superintendent of Public Instruction, was born at Westerlo, Albany County, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1837, and spent his boyhood with his parents on a farm, except while absent at school; in 1856 removed to Belleville, Ill., where he soon became connected with the public schools, serving for a number of years as Principal of the Belleville High School. While connected with the Belleville schools, he was elected County Superintendent, remaining in office some ten years; later had charge of Almira College at Greenville, Bond County, served six years as Superintendent of Schools at East St. Louis and, in 1878, was elected State Superintendent of Public Instruction as the nominee of the Republican party. On retirement from the office of State Superintendent, he resumed his place at the head of Almira College, but, for the past few years, has been Superintendent of Schools at East St. Louis.

SLAVERY AGITATION OF 1823-24. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

SLAVERY AND SLAVE LAWS. African slaves were first brought into the Illinois country by a Frenchman named Pierre F. Renault, about 1722. At that time the present State formed a part of Louisiana, and the traffic in slaves was regulated by French royal edicts. When Great Britain acquired the territory, at the close of the French and Indian War, the former subjects of France were guaranteed security for their persons "and effects," and no interference with slavery was attempted. Upon the conquest of Illinois by Virginia (see Clark, George Rogers), the French very generally professed allegiance to that commonwealth, and, in her deed of cession to the United States, Virginia expressly stipulated for the protection of the "rights and liberties" of the French citizens. This was construed as recognizing the right of property in negro slaves. Even the Ordinance of 1787, while prohibiting slavery in the Northwest Territory, preserved to the settlers (reference being especially made to the French and Canadians) "of the Kaskaskias, St. Vincents and neighboring villages, their laws and customs, now (then) in force, relative to the descent and conveyance of property." A conservative construction of this clause was, that while it prohibited the extension of slavery and the importation of slaves, the status of those who were at that time in involuntary servitude, and of their descendants, was left unchanged. There were those, however, who denied the constitutionality of the Ordinance in toto, on the ground that Congress had exceeded its powers in its passage. There was also a party which claimed that all children of slaves, born after 1787, were free from birth. In 1794 a convention was held at Vincennes, pursuant to a call from Governor Harrison, and a memorial to Congress was adopted, praying for the repeal—or, at least a modification—of the sixth clause of the Ordinance of 1787. The first Congressional Committee, to which this petition was referred, reported adversely upon it; but a second committee recommended the suspension of the operation of the clause in question for ten years. But no action was taken by the National Legislature, and, in 1807, a counter petition, extensively signed, was forwarded to that body, and Congress left the matter in statu quo. It is worthy of note that some of the most earnest opponents of the measure were Representatives from Southern Slave States, John Randolph, of Virginia, being one of them. The pro-slavery party in the State then prepared what is popularly known as the "Indenture Law," which was one of the first acts adopted by Governor Edwards and his Council, and was re-enacted by the first Territorial Legislature in 1812. It was entitled, "An Act relating to the Introduction of Negroes and Mulattoes into this Territory," and gave permission to bring slaves above 15 years of age into the State, when they might be registered and kept in servitude within certain limitations. Slaves under that age might also be brought in, registered, and held in bondage until they reached the age of 35, if males, and 30, if females. The issue of registered slaves were to serve their mother's master until the age of 30 or 28, according to sex. The effect of this legislation was rapidly to increase the number of slaves. The Constitution of 1818 prohibited the introduction of slavery thereafter—that is to say, after its adoption. In 1822 the slave-holding party, with their supporters, began to agitate the question of so amending the organic law as to make Illinois a slave State. To effect such a change the calling of a convention was necessary, and, for eighteen months, the struggle between "conventionists" and their opponents was bitter and fierce. The question was submitted to a popular vote on August 2, 1824, the result of the count showing 4,972 votes for such convention and 6,640 against. This decisive result settled the question of slave-holding in Illinois for all future time, though the existence of slavery in the State continued to be recognized by the National Census until 1840. The number, according to the census of 1810, was 168; in 1820 they had increased to 917. Then the number began to diminish, being reduced in 1830 to 747, and, in 1840 (the last census which shows any portion of the population held in bondage), it was 331.

Hooper Warren—who has been mentioned elsewhere as editor of "The Edwardsville Spectator," and a leading factor in securing the defeat of the scheme to make Illinois a slave State in 1822—in an article in the first number of "The Genius of Liberty" (January, 1841), speaking of that contest, says there were, at its beginning, only three papers in the State—"The Intelligencer" at Vandalia, "The Gazette" at Shawneetown, and "The Spectator" at Edwardsville. The first two of these, at the outset, favored the Convention scheme, while "The Spectator" opposed it. The management of the campaign on the part of the pro-slavery party was assigned to Emanuel J. West, Theophilus W. Smith and Oliver L. Kelly, and a paper was established by the name of "The Illinois Republican," with Smith as editor. Among the active opponents of the measure were George Churchill, Thomas Lippincott, Samuel D. Lockwood, Henry Starr (afterwards of Cincinnati), Rev. John M. Peck and Rev. James Lemen, of St. Clair County. Others who contributed to the cause were Daniel P. Cook, Morris Birkbeck, Dr. Hugh Steel and —— Burton of Jackson County, Dr. Henry Perrine of Bond; William Leggett of Edwardsville (afterwards editor of "The New York Evening Post"), Benjamin Lundy (then of Missouri), David Blackwell and Rev. John Dew, of St. Clair County. Still others were Nathaniel Pope (Judge of the United States District Court), William B. Archer, William H. Brown and Benjamin Mills (of Vandalia), John Tillson, Dr. Horatio Newhall, George Forquer, Col. Thomas Mather, Thomas Ford, Judge David J. Baker, Charles W. Hunter and Henry H. Snow (of Alton). This testimony is of interest as coming from one who probably had more to do with defeating the scheme, with the exception of Gov. Edward Coles. Outside of the more elaborate Histories of Illinois, the most accurate and detailed accounts of this particular period are to be found in "Sketch of Edward Coles" by the late E. B. Washburne, and "Early Movement in Illinois for the Legalization of Slavery," an address before the Chicago Historical Society (1864), by Hon. William H. Brown, of Chicago. (See also, Coles, Edward; Warren, Hooper; Brown, William H.; Churchill, George; Lippincott, Thomas; and Newspapers, Early, elsewhere in this volume.)

SLOAN, Wesley, legislator and jurist, was born in Dorchester County, Md., Feb. 20,, 1806. At the age of 17, having received a fair academic education, he accompanied his parents to Philadelphia, where, for a year, he was employed in a wholesale grocery. His father dying, he returned to Maryland and engaged in teaching, at the same time studying law, and being admitted to the bar in 1831. He came to Illinois in 1838, going first to Chicago, and afterward to Kaskaskia, finally settling at Golconda in 1839, which continued to be his home the remainder of his life. In 1848 he was elected to the Legislature, and re-elected in 1850, '52, and '56, serving three times as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He was one of the members of the first State Board of Education, created by Act of Feb. 18, 1857, and took a prominent part in the founding and organization of the State educational institutions. In 1857 he was elected to the bench of the Nineteenth Judicial Circuit, and re-elected in 1861, but declined a re-election for a third term. Died, Jan. 15, 1887.

SMITH, Abner, jurist, was born at Orange, Franklin County, Mass., August 4, 1843, of an old New England family, whose ancestors came to Massachusetts Colony about 1630; was educated in the public schools and at Middlebury College, Vt., graduating from the latter in 1866. After graduation he spent a year as a teacher in Newton Academy, at Shoreham, Vt., coming to Chicago in 1867, and entering upon the study of law, being admitted to the bar in 1868. The next twenty-five years were spent in the practice of his profession in Chicago, within that time serving as the attorney of several important corporations. In 1893 he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, and re-elected in 1897, his term of service continuing until 1903.

SMITH, (Dr.) Charles Gilman, physician, was born at Exeter, N. H., Jan. 4, 1828, received his early education at Phillips Academy, in his native place, finally graduating from Harvard University in 1847. He soon after commenced the study of medicine in the Harvard Medical School, but completed his course at the University of Pennsylvania in 1851. After two years spent as attending physician of the Alms House in South Boston, Mass., in 1853 he came to Chicago, where he soon acquired an extensive practice. During the Civil War he was one of six physicians employed by the Government for the treatment of prisoners of war in hospital at Camp Douglas. In 1868 he visited Europe for the purpose of observing the management of hospitals in Germany, France and England, on his return being invited to lecture in the Woman's Medical College in Chicago, and also becoming consulting physician in the Women's and Children's Hospital, as well as in the Presbyterian Hospital—a position which he continued to occupy for the remainder of his life, gaining a wide reputation in the treatment of women's and children's diseases. Died, Jan. 10, 1894.

SMITH, David Allen, lawyer, was born near Richmond, Va., June 18, 1809; removed with his father, at an early day, to Pulaski, Tenn.; at 17 went to Courtland, Lawrence County, Ala., where he studied law with Judge Bramlette and began practice. His father, dying about 1831, left him the owner of a number of slaves whom, in 1837, he brought to Carlinville, Ill., and emancipated, giving bond that they should not become a charge to the State. In 1839 he removed to Jacksonville, where he practiced law until his death. Col. John J. Hardin was his partner at the time of his death on the battle-field of Buena Vista. Mr. Smith was a Trustee and generous patron of Illinois College, for a quarter of a century, but never held any political office. As a lawyer he was conscientious and faithful to the interests of his clients; as a citizen, liberal, public-spirited and patriotic. He contributed liberally to the support of the Government during the war for the Union. Died, at Anoka, Minn., July 13, 1865, where he had gone to accompany an invalid son. — Thomas William (Smith), eldest son of the preceding, born at Courtland, Ala., Sept. 27, 1832; died at Clearwater, Minn., Oct. 29, 1865. He graduated at Illinois College in 1852, studied law and served as Captain in the Tenth Illinois Volunteers, until, broken in health, he returned home to die.

SMITH, Dietrich C., ex-Congressman, was born at Ostfriesland, Hanover, April 4, 1840, in boyhood came to the United States, and, since 1849, has been a resident of Pekin, Tazewell County. In 1861 he enlisted in the Eighth Illinois Volunteers, was promoted to a Lieutenancy, and, while so serving, was severely wounded at Shiloh. Later, he was attached to the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Infantry, and was mustered out of service as Captain of Company C of that regiment. His business is that of banker and manufacturer, besides which he has had considerable experience in the construction and management of railroads. He was a member of the Thirtieth General Assembly, and, in 1880, was elected Representative in Congress from what was then the Thirteenth District, on the Republican ticket, defeating Adlai E. Stevenson, afterwards Vice-President. In 1882, his county (Tazewell) having been attached to the district for many years represented by Wm. M. Springer, he was defeated by the latter as a candidate for re-election.

SMITH, George, one of Chicago's pioneers and early bankers, was born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, March 8, 1808. It was his early intention to study medicine, and he entered Aberdeen College with this end in view, but was forced to quit the institution at the end of two years, because of impaired vision. In 1833 he came to America, and, in 1834, settled in Chicago, where he resided until 1861, meanwhile spending one year in Scotland. He invested largely in real estate in Chicago and Wisconsin, at one time owning a considerable portion of the present site of Milwaukee. In 1837 he secured the charter for the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance Company, whose headquarters were at Milwaukee. He was really the owner of the company, although Alexander Mitchell, of Milwaukee, was its Secretary. Under this charter Mr. Smith was able to issue $1,500,000 in certificates, which circulated freely as currency. In 1839 he founded Chicago's first private banking house. About 1843 he was interested in a storage and commission business in Chicago, with a Mr. Webster as partner. He was a Director in the old Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern), and aided it, while in course of construction, by loans of money; was also a charter member of the Chicago Board of Trade, organized in 1848. In 1854, the State of Wisconsin having prohibited the circulation of the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance certificates above mentioned, Mr. Smith sold out the company to his partner, Mitchell, and bought two Georgia bank charters, which, together, empowered him to issue $3,000,000 in currency. The notes were duly issued in Georgia, and put into circulation in Illinois, over the counter of George Smith & Co.'s Chicago bank. About 1856 Mr. Smith began winding up his affairs in Chicago, meanwhile spending most of his time in Scotland, but, returning in 1860, made extensive investments in railroad and other American securities, which netted him large profits. The amount of capital which he is reputed to have taken with him to his native land has been estimated at $10,000,000, though he retained considerable tracts of valuable lands in Wisconsin and about Chicago. Among those who were associated with him in business, either as employés or otherwise, and who have since been prominently identified with Chicago business affairs, were Hon. Charles B. Farwell, E. I. Tinkham (afterwards a prominent banker of Chicago), E. W. Willard, now of Newport, R. I., and others. Mr. Smith made several visits, during the last forty years, to the United States, but divided his time chiefly between Scotland (where he was the owner of a castle) and London. Died Oct. 7, 1899.

SMITH, George W., soldier, lawyer and State Treasurer, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 8, 1837. It was his intention to acquire a collegiate education, but his father's business embarrassments having compelled the abandonment of his studies, at 17 of years age he went to Arkansas and taught school for two years. In 1856 he returned to Albany and began the study of law, graduating from the law school in 1858. In October of that year he removed to Chicago, where he remained continuously in practice, with the exception of the years 1862-65, when he was serving in the Union army, and 1867-68, when he filled the office of State Treasurer. He was mustered into service, August 27, 1862, as a Captain in the Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry—the second Board of Trade regiment. At Stone River, he was seriously wounded and captured. After four days' confinement, he was aided by a negro to escape. He made his way to the Union lines, but was granted leave of absence, being incapacitated for service. On his return to duty he joined his regiment in the Chattanooga campaign, and was officially complimented for his bravery at Gordon's Mills. At Mission Ridge he was again severely wounded, and was once more personally complimented in the official report. At Kenesaw Mountain (June 27, 1864), Capt. Smith commanded the regiment after the killing of Lieutenant-Colonel Chandler, and was promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy for bravery on the field. He led the charge at Franklin, and was brevetted Colonel, and thanked by the commander for his gallant service. In the spring of 1865 he was brevetted Brigadier-General, and, in June following, was mustered out. Returning to Chicago, he resumed the practice of his profession, and gained a prominent position at the bar. In 1866 he was elected State Treasurer, and, after the expiration of his term, in January, 1869, held no public office. General Smith was, for many years, a Trustee of the Chicago Historical Society, and Vice-President of the Board. Died, in Chicago, Sept. 16, 1898.

SMITH, George W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Putnam County, Ohio, August 18, 1846. When he was four years old, his father removed to Wayne County, Ill., settling on a farm. He attended the common schools and graduated from the literary department of McKendree College, at Lebanon, in 1868. In his youth he learned the trade of a blacksmith, but later determined to study law. After reading for a time at Fairfield, Ill., he entered the Law Department of the Bloomington (Ind.) University, graduating there in 1870. The same year he was admitted to the bar in Illinois, and has since practiced at Murphysboro. In 1880 he was a Republican Presidential Elector, and, in 1888, was elected a Republican Representative to Congress from the Twentieth Illinois District, and has been continuously re-elected, now (1899) serving his sixth consecutive term as Representative from the Twenty-second District.

SMITH, Giles Alexander, soldier, and Assistant Postmaster-General, was born in Jefferson County, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1829; engaged in dry-goods business in Cincinnati and Bloomington, Ill., in 1861 being proprietor of a hotel in the latter place; became a Captain in the Eighth Missouri Volunteers, was engaged at Forts Henry and Donelson, Shiloh and Corinth, and promoted Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel in 1862; led his regiment on the first attack on Vicksburg, and was severely wounded at Arkansas Post; was promoted Brigadier-General in August, 1863, for gallant and meritorious conduct; led a brigade of the Fifteenth Army Corps at Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge, as also in the Atlanta campaign, and a division of the Seventeenth Corps in the "March to the Sea." After the surrender of Lee he was transferred to the Twenty-fifth Army Corps, became Major-General in 1865, and resigned in 1866, having declined a commission as Colonel in the regular army; about 1869 was appointed, by President Grant, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, but resigned on account of failing health in 1872. Died, at Bloomington, Nov. 8, 1876. General Smith was one of the founders of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee.

SMITH, Gustavus Adolphus, soldier, was born in Philadelphia, Dec. 26, 1820; at 16 joined two brothers who had located at Springfield, Ohio, where he learned the trade of a carriage-maker. In December, 1837, he arrived at Decatur, Ill., but soon after located at Springfield, where he resided some six years. Then, returning to Decatur, he devoted his attention to carriage manufacture, doing a large business with the South, but losing heavily as the result of the war. An original Whig, he became a Democrat on the dissolution of the Whig party, but early took ground in favor of the Union after the firing on Fort Sumter; was offered and accepted the colonelcy of the Thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at the same time assisting Governor Yates in the selection of Camp Butler as a camp of recruiting and instruction. Having been assigned to duty in Missouri, in the summer of 1861, he proceeded to Jefferson City, joined Fremont at Carthage in that State, and made a forced march to Springfield, afterwards taking part in the campaign in Arkansas and in the battle of Pea Ridge, where he had a horse shot under him and was severely (and, it was supposed, fatally) wounded, not recovering until 1868. Being compelled to return home, he received authority to raise an independent brigade, but was unable to accompany it to the field. In September, 1862, he was commissioned a Brigadier-General by President Lincoln, "for meritorious conduct," but was unable to enter into active service on account of his wound. Later, he was assigned to the command of a convalescent camp at Murfreesboro, Tenn., under Gen. George H. Thomas. In 1864 he took part in securing the second election of President Lincoln, and, in the early part of 1865, was commissioned by Governor Oglesby Colonel of a new regiment (the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois), but, on account of his wounds, was assigned to court-martial duty, remaining in the service until January, 1866, when he was mustered out with the brevet rank of Brigadier-General. During the second year of his service he was presented with a magnificent sword by the rank and file of his regiment (the Thirty-fifth), for brave and gallant conduct at Pea Ridge. After retiring from the army, he engaged in cotton planting in Alabama, but was not successful; in 1868, canvassed Alabama for General Grant for President, but declined a nomination in his own favor for Congress. In 1870 he was appointed, by General Grant, United States Collection and Disbursing Agent for the District of New Mexico, where he continued to reside.

SMITH, John Corson, soldier, ex-Lieutenant-Governor and ex-State Treasurer, was born in Philadelphia, Feb. 13, 1832. At the age of 16 he was apprenticed to a carpenter and builder. In 1854 he came to Chicago, and worked at his trade, for a time, but soon removed to Galena, where he finally engaged in business as a contractor. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in the Seventy-fourth Illinois Volunteers, but, having received authority from Governor Yates, raised a company, of which he was chosen Captain, and which was incorporated in the Ninety-sixth Illinois Infantry. Of this regiment he was soon elected Major. After a short service about Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington and Newport, Ky., the Ninety-sixth was sent to the front, and took part (among other battles) in the second engagement at Fort Donelson and in the bloody fight at Franklin, Tenn. Later, Major Smith was assigned to staff duty under Generals Baird and Steedman, serving through the Tullahoma campaign, and participating in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. Being promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, he rejoined his regiment, and was given command of a brigade. In the Atlanta campaign he served gallantly, taking a conspicuous part in its long series of bloody engagements, and being severely wounded at Kenesaw Mountain. In February, 1865, he was brevetted Colonel, and, in June, 1865, Brigadier-General. Soon after his return to Galena he was appointed Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue, but was legislated out of office in 1872. In 1873 he removed to Chicago and embarked in business. In 1874-76 he was a member (and Secretary) of the Illinois Board of Commissioners to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. In 1875 he was appointed Chief Grain-Inspector at Chicago, and held the office for several years. In 1872 and '76 he was a delegate to the National Republican Conventions of those years, and, in 1878, was elected State Treasurer, as he was again in 1882. In 1884 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor, serving until 1889. He is a prominent Mason, Knight Templar and Odd Fellow, as well as a distinguished member of the Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and was prominently connected with the erection of the "Masonic Temple Building" in Chicago.

SMITH, John Eugene, soldier, was born in Switzerland, August 3, 1816, the son of an officer who had served under Napoleon, and after the downfall of the latter, emigrated to Philadelphia. The subject of this sketch received an academic education and became a jeweler; in 1861 entered the volunteer service as Colonel of the Forty-fifth Illinois Infantry; took part in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, in the battle of Shiloh and siege of Corinth; was promoted a Brigadier-General in November, 1862, and placed in command of a division in the Sixteenth Army Corps; led the Third Division of the Seventeenth Army Corps in the Vicksburg campaign, later being transferred to the Fifteenth, and taking part in the battle of Missionary Ridge and the Atlanta and Carolina campaigns of 1864-65. He received the brevet rank of Major-General of Volunteers in January, 1865, and, on his muster-out from the volunteer service, became Colonel of the Twenty-seventh United States Infantry, being transferred, in 1870, to the Fourteenth. In 1867 his services at Vicksburg and Savannah were further recognized by conferring upon him the brevets of Brigadier and Major-General in the regular army. In May, 1881, he was retired, afterwards residing in Chicago, where he died, Jan. 29, 1897.

SMITH, Joseph, the founder of the Mormon sect, was born at Sharon, Vt., Dec. 23, 1805. In 1815 his parents removed to Palmyra, N. Y., and still later to Manchester. He early showed a dreamy mental cast, and claimed to be able to locate stolen articles by means of a magic stone. In 1820 he claimed to have seen a vision, but his pretensions were ridiculed by his acquaintances. His story of the revelation of the golden plates by the angel Moroni, and of the latter's instructions to him, is well known. With the aid of Martin Harris and Oliver Cowdery he prepared the "Book of Mormon," alleging that he had deciphered it from heaven-sent characters, through the aid of miraculous spectacles. This was published in 1830. In later years Smith claimed to have received supplementary revelations, which so taxed the credulity of his followers that some of them apostatized. He also claimed supernatural power, such as exorcism, etc. He soon gained followers in considerable numbers, whom, in 1832, he led west, a part settling at Kirtland, Ohio, and the remainder in Jackson County, Mo. Driven out of Ohio five years later, the bulk of the sect found the way to their friends in Missouri, whence they were finally expelled after many conflicts with the authorities. Smith, with the other refugees, fled to Hancock County, Ill., founding the city of Nauvoo, which was incorporated in 1840. Here was begun, in the following year, the erection of a great temple, but again he aroused the hostility of the authorities, although soon wielding considerable political power. After various unsuccessful attempts to arrest him in 1844, Smith and a number of his followers were induced to surrender themselves under the promise of protection from violence and a fair trial. Having been taken to Carthage, the county-seat, all were discharged under recognizance to appear at court except Smith and his brother Hyrum, who were held under the new charge of "treason," and were placed in jail. So intense had been the feeling against the Mormons, that Governor Ford called out the militia to preserve the peace; but it is evident that the feeling among the latter was in sympathy with that of the populace. Most of the militia were disbanded after Smith's arrest, one company being left on duty at Carthage, from whom only eight men were detailed to guard the jail. In this condition of affairs a mob of 150 disguised men, alleged to be from Warsaw, appeared before the jail on the evening of June 27, and, forcing the guards—who made only a feeble resistance,—Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were both shot down, while a friend, who had remained with them, was wounded. The fate of Smith undoubtedly went far to win for him the reputation of martyr, and give a new impulse to the Mormon faith. (See Mormons; Nauvoo.)

SMITH, Justin Almerin, D.D., clergyman and editor, was born at Ticonderoga, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1819, educated at New Hampton Literary and Theological Institute and Union College, graduating from the latter in 1843; served a year as Principal of the Union Academy at Bennington, Vt., followed by four years of pastoral work, when he assumed the pastorate of the First Baptist church at Rochester, N. Y., where he remained five years. Then (1853) he removed to Chicago to assume the editorship of "The Christian Times" (now "The Standard"), with which he was associated for the remainder of his life. Meanwhile he assisted in organizing three Baptist churches in Chicago, serving two of them as pastor for a considerable period; made an extended tour of Europe in 1869, attending the Vatican Council at Rome; was a Trustee and one of the founders of the old Chicago University, and Trustee and Lecturer of the Baptist Theological Seminary; was also the author of several religious works. Died, at Morgan Park, near Chicago, Feb. 4, 1896.

SMITH, Perry H., lawyer and politician, was born in Augusta, Oneida County, N. Y., March 18, 1828; entered Hamilton College at the age of 14 and graduated, second in his class, at 18; began reading law and was admitted to the bar on coming of age in 1849. Then, removing to Appleton, Wis., when 23 years of age he was elected a Judge, served later in both branches of the Legislature, and, in 1857, became Vice-President of the Chicago, St. Paul & Fond du Lac Railway, retaining the same position in the reorganized corporation when it became the Chicago & Northwestern. In 1856 Mr. Smith came to Chicago and resided there till his death, on Palm Sunday of 1885. He was prominent in railway circles and in the councils of the Democratic party, being the recognized representative of Mr. Tilden's interests in the Northwest in the campaign of 1876.

SMITH, Robert, Congressman and lawyer, was born at Petersborough, N. H., June 12, 1802; was educated and admitted to the bar in his native town, settled at Alton, Ill., in 1832, and engaged in practice. In 1836 he was elected to the General Assembly from Madison County, and re-elected in 1838. In 1842 he was elected to the Twenty-eighth Congress, and twice re-elected, serving three successive terms. During the Civil War he was commissioned Paymaster, with the rank of Major, and was stationed at St. Louis. He was largely interested in the construction of water power at Minneapolis, Minn., and also in railroad enterprises in Illinois. He was a prominent Mason and a public-spirited citizen. Died, at Alton, Dec. 20, 1867.

SMITH, Samuel Lisle, lawyer, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1817, and, belonging to a wealthy family, enjoyed superior educational advantages, taking a course in the Yale Law School at an age too early to admit of his receiving a degree. In 1836 he came to Illinois, to look after some landed interests of his father's in the vicinity of Peru. Returning east within the next two years, he obtained his diploma, and, again coming west, located in Chicago in 1838, and, for a time, occupied an office with the well-known law firm of Butterfield & Collins. In 1839 he was elected City Attorney and, at the great Whig meeting at Springfield, in June, 1840, was one of the principal speakers, establishing a reputation as one of the most brilliant campaign orators in the West. As an admirer of Henry Clay, he was active in the Presidential campaign of 1844, and was also a prominent speaker at the River and Harbor Convention at Chicago, in 1847. With a keen sense of humor, brilliant, witty and a master of repartee and invective, he achieved popularity, both at the bar and on the lecture platform, and had the promise of future success, which was unfortunately marred by his convivial habits. Died of cholera, in Chicago, July 30, 1854. Mr. Smith married the daughter of Dr. Potts, of Philadelphia, an eminent clergyman of the Episcopal Church.

SMITH, Sidney, jurist, was born in Washington County, N. Y., May 12, 1829; studied law and was admitted to the bar at Albion, in that State, in 1851; came to Chicago in 1856 and entered into partnership with Grant Goodrich and William W. Farwell, both of whom were afterwards elected to places on the bench—the first in the Superior, and the latter in the Circuit Court. In 1879 Judge Smith was elected to the Superior Court of Cook County, serving until 1885, when he became the attorney of the Chicago Board of Trade. He was the Republican candidate for Mayor, in opposition to Carter H. Harrison, in 1885, and is believed by many to have been honestly elected, though defeated on the face of the returns. A recount was ordered by the court, but so much delay was incurred and so many obstacles placed in the way of carrying the order into effect, that Judge Smith abandoned the contest in disgust, although making material gains as far as it had gone. During his professional career he was connected, as counsel, with some of the most important trials before the Chicago courts; was also one of the Directors of the Chicago Public Library, on its organization in 1871. Died suddenly, in Chicago, Oct. 6, 1898.

SMITH, Theophilus Washington, Judge and politician, was born in New York City, Sept. 28, 1784, served for a time in the United States navy, was a law student in the office of Aaron Burr, was admitted to the bar in his native State in 1805, and, in 1816, came west, finally locating at Edwardsville, where he soon became a prominent figure in early State history. In 1820 he was an unsuccessful candidate before the Legislature for the office of Attorney-General, being defeated by Samuel D. Lockwood, but was elected to the State Senate in 1822, serving four years. In 1823 he was one of the leaders of the "Conventionist" party, whose aim was to adopt a new Constitution which would legalize slavery in Illinois, during this period being the editor of the leading organ of the pro-slavery party. In 1825 he was elected one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, but resigned, Dec. 26, 1842. He was impeached in 1832 on charges alleging oppressive conduct, corruption, and other high misdemeanors in office, but secured a negative acquittal, a two-thirds vote being necessary to conviction. The vote in the Senate stood twelve for conviction (on a part of the charges) to ten for acquittal, four being excused from voting. During the Black Hawk War he served as Quartermaster-General on the Governor's staff. As a jurist, he was charged by his political opponents with being unable to divest himself of his partisan bias, and even with privately advising counsel, in political causes, of defects in the record, which they (the counsel) had not discovered. He was also a member of the first Board of Commissioners of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, appointed in 1823. Died, in Chicago, May 6, 1846.

SMITH, William Henry, journalist, Associated Press Manager, was born in Columbia County, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1833; at three years of age was taken by his parents to Ohio, where he enjoyed the best educational advantages that State at the time afforded. After completing his school course he began teaching, and, for a time, served as tutor in a Western college, but soon turned his attention to journalism, at first as assistant editor of a weekly publication at Cincinnati, still later becoming its editor, and, in 1855, city editor of "The Cincinnati Gazette," with which he was connected in a more responsible position at the beginning of the war, incidentally doing work upon "The Literary Review." His connection with a leading paper enabled him to exert a strong influence in support of the Government. This he used most faithfully in assisting to raise troops in the first years of the war, and, in 1863, in bringing forward and securing the election of John Brough as a Union candidate for Governor in opposition to Clement L. Vallandigham, the Democratic candidate. In 1864 he was nominated and elected Secretary of State, being re-elected two years later. After retiring from office he returned to journalism at Cincinnati, as editor of "The Evening Chronicle," from which he retired in 1870 to become Agent of the Western Associated Press, with headquarters, at first at Cleveland, but later at Chicago. His success in this line was demonstrated by the final union of the New York and Western Associated Press organizations under his management, continuing until 1893, when he retired. Mr. Smith was a strong personal friend of President Hayes, by whom he was appointed Collector of the Port of Chicago in 1877. While engaged in official duties he found time to do considerable literary work, having published, several years ago, "The St. Clair Papers," in two volumes, and a life of Charles Hammond, besides contributions to periodicals. After retiring from the management of the Associated Press, he was engaged upon a "History of American Politics" and a "Life of Rutherford B. Hayes," which are said to have been well advanced at the time of his death, which took place at his home, at Lake Forest, Ill., July 27, 1896.

SMITH, William M., merchant, stock-breeder and politician, was born near Frankfort, Ky., May 23, 1827; in 1846 accompanied his father's family to Lexington, McLean County, Ill., where they settled. A few years later he bought forty acres of government land, finally increasing his holdings to 800 acres, and becoming a breeder of fine stock. Still later he added to his agricultural pursuits the business of a merchant. Having early identified himself with the Republican party, he remained a firm adherent of its principles during the Civil War, and, while declining a commission tendered him by Governor Yates, devoted his time and means liberally to the recruiting and organization of regiments for service in the field, and procuring supplies for the sick and wounded. In 1866 he was elected to the lower house of the Legislature, and was re-elected in 1868 and '70, serving, during his last term, as Speaker. In 1877 he was appointed by Governor Cullom a member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, of which body he served as President until 1883. He was a man of remarkably genial temperament, liberal impulses, and wide popularity. Died, March 25, 1886.

SMITH, William Sooy, soldier and civil engineer, was born at Tarlton, Pickaway County, Ohio, July 22, 1830; graduated at Ohio University in 1849, and, at the United States Military Academy, in 1853, having among his classmates, at the latter, Generals McPherson, Schofield and Sheridan. Coming to Chicago the following year, he first found employment as an engineer on the Illinois Central Railroad, but later became assistant of Lieutenant-Colonel Graham in engineer service on the lakes; a year later took charge of a select school in Buffalo; in 1857 made the first surveys for the International Bridge at Niagara Falls, then went into the service of extensive locomotive and bridge-works at Trenton, N. J., in their interest making a visit to Cuba, and also superintending the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River. The war intervening, he returned North and was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel and assigned to duty as Assistant Adjutant-General at Camp Denison, Ohio, but, in June, 1862, was commissioned Colonel of the Thirteenth Ohio Volunteers, participating in the West Virginia campaigns, and later, at Shiloh and Perryville. In April, 1862, he was promoted Brigadier-General of volunteers, commanding divisions in the Army of the Ohio until the fall of 1862, when he joined Grant and took part in the Vicksburg campaign, as commander of the First Division of the Sixteenth Army Corps. Subsequently he was made Chief of the Cavalry Department, serving on the staffs of Grant and Sherman, until compelled to resign, in 1864, on account of impaired health. During the war General Smith rendered valuable service to the Union cause in great emergencies, by his knowledge of engineering. On retiring to private life he resumed his profession at Chicago, and since has been employed by the Government on some of its most stupendous works on the lakes, and has also planned several of the most important railroad bridges across the Missouri and other streams. He has been much consulted in reference to municipal engineering, and his name is connected with a number of the gigantic edifices in Chicago.

SMITHBORO, a village and railroad junction in Bond County, 3 miles east of Greenville. Population, 393; (1900), 314.

SNAPP, Henry, Congressman, born in Livingston County, N. Y., June 30, 1822, came to Illinois with his father when 11 years old, and, having read law at Joliet, was admitted to the bar in 1847. He practiced in Will County for twenty years before entering public life. In 1868 he was elected to the State Senate and occupied a seat in that body until his election, in 1871, to the Forty-second Congress, by the Republicans of the (then) Sixth Illinois District, as successor to B. C. Cook, who had resigned. Died, at Joliet, Nov. 23, 1895.

SNOW, Herman W., ex-Congressman, was born in La Porte County, Ind., July 3, 1836, but was reared in Kentucky, working upon a farm for five years, while yet in his minority becoming a resident of Illinois. For several years he was a school teacher, meanwhile studying law and being admitted to the bar. Early in the war he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, rising to the rank of Captain. His term of service having expired, he re-enlisted in the One Hundred and Fifty-first Illinois, and was mustered out with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. After the close of the war he resumed teaching at the Chicago High School, and later served in the General Assembly (1873-74) as Representative from Woodford County. In 1890 he was elected, as a Democrat, to represent the Ninth Illinois District in Congress, but was defeated by his Republican opponent in 1892.

SNOWHOOK, William B., first Collector of Customs at Chicago, was born in Ireland in 1804; at the age of eight years was brought to New York, where he learned the printer's trade, and worked for some time in the same office with Horace Greeley. At 16 he went back to Ireland, remaining two years, but, returning to the United States, began the study of law; was also employed on the Passaic Canal; in 1836, came to Chicago, and was soon after associated with William B. Ogden in a contract on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, which lasted until 1841. As early as 1840 he became prominent as a leader in the Democratic party, and, in 1846, received from President Polk an appointment as first Collector of Customs for Chicago (having previously served as Special Surveyor of the Port, while attached to the District of Detroit); in 1853, was re-appointed to the Collectorship by President Pierce, serving two years. During the "Mormon War" (1844) he organized and equipped, at his own expense, the Montgomery Guards, and was commissioned Colonel, but the disturbances were brought to an end before the order to march. From 1856 he devoted his attention chiefly to his practice, but, in 1862, was one of the Democrats of Chicago who took part in a movement to sustain the Government by stimulating enlistments; was also a member of the Convention which nominated Mr. Greeley for President in 1872. Died, in Chicago, May 5, 1882.

SNYDER, Adam Wilson, pioneer lawyer, and early Congressman, was born at Connellsville, Pa., Oct. 6, 1799. In early life he followed the occupation of wool-curling for a livelihood, attending school in the winter. In 1815, he emigrated to Columbus, Ohio, and afterwards settled in Ridge Prairie, St. Clair County, Ill. Being offered a situation in a wool-curling and fulling mill at Cahokia, he removed thither in 1817. He formed the friendship of Judge Jesse B. Thomas, and, through the latter's encouragement and aid, studied law and gained a solid professional, political, social and financial position. In 1830 he was elected State Senator from St. Clair County, and re-elected for two successive terms. He served through the Black Hawk War as private, Adjutant and Captain. In 1833 he removed to Belleville, and, in 1834, was defeated for Congress by Governor Reynolds, whom he, in turn, defeated in 1836. Two years later Reynolds again defeated him for the same position, and, in 1840, he was elected State Senator. In 1841 he was the Democratic nominee for Governor. The election was held in August, 1842, but, in May preceding, he died at his home in Belleville. His place on the ticket was filled by Thomas Ford, who was elected.—William H. (Snyder), son of the preceding, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., July 12, 1825; educated at McKendree College, studied law with Lieutenant-Governor Koerner, and was admitted to practice in 1845; also served for a time as Postmaster of the city of Belleville, and, during the Mexican War, as First-Lieutenant and Adjutant of the Fifth Illinois Volunteers. From 1850 to '54 he represented his county in the Legislature; in 1855 was appointed, by Governor Matteson, State's Attorney, which position he filled for two years. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the office of Secretary of State in 1856, and, in 1857, was elected a Judge of the Twenty-fourth Circuit, was re-elected for the Third Circuit in '73, '79 and '85. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Died, at Belleville, Dec. 24, 1892.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME, a State charitable institution, founded by act of the Legislature in 1885, and located at Quincy, Adams County. The object of its establishment was to provide a comfortable home for such disabled or dependent veterans of the United States land or naval forces as had honorably served during the Civil War. It was opened for the reception of veterans on March 3, 1887, the first cost of site and buildings having been about $350,000. The total number of inmates admitted up to June 30, 1894, was 2,813; the number in attendance during the two previous years 988, and the whole number present on Nov. 10, 1894, 1,088. The value of property at that time was $393,636.08. Considerable appropriations have been made for additions to the buildings at subsequent sessions of the Legislature. The General Government pays to the State $100 per year for each veteran supported at the Home.

SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOME, ILLINOIS, an institution, created by act of 1865, for the maintenance and education of children of deceased soldiers of the Civil War. An eighty-acre tract, one mile north of Normal, was selected as the site, and the first principal building was completed and opened for the admission of beneficiaries on June 1, 1869. Its first cost was $135,000, the site having been donated. Repairs and the construction of new buildings, from time to time, have considerably increased this sum. In 1875 the benefits of the institution were extended, by legislative enactment, to the children of soldiers who had died after the close of the war. The aggregate number of inmates, in 1894, was 572, of whom 323 were males and 249 females.

SOLDIERS' WIDOWS' HOME. Provision was made for the establishment of this institution by the Thirty-ninth General Assembly, in an act, approved, June 13, 1895, appropriating $20,000 for the purchase of a site, the erection of buildings and furnishing the same. It is designed for the reception and care of the mothers, wives, widows and daughters of such honorably discharged soldiers or sailors, in the United States service, as may have died, or may be physically or mentally unable to provide for the families naturally dependent on them, provided that such persons have been residents of the State for at least one year previous to admission, and are without means or ability for self-support.

The affairs of the Home are managed by a board of five trustees, of whom two are men and three women, the former to be members of the Grand Army of the Republic and of different political parties, and the latter members of the Women's Relief Corps of this State. The institution was located at Wilmington, occupying a site of seventeen acres, where it was formally opened in a house of eighteen rooms, March 11, 1896, with twenty-six applications for admittance. The plan contemplates an early enlargement by the erection of additional cottages.

SORENTO, a village of Bond County, at the intersection of the Jacksonville & St. Louis and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railways, 14 miles southeast of Litchfield; has a bank and a newspaper. Its interests are agricultural and mining. Pop. (1890), 538; (1900), 1,000.

SOULARD, James Gaston, pioneer, born of French ancestry in St. Louis, Mo., July 15, 1798; resided there until 1821, when, having married the daughter of a soldier of the Revolution, he received an appointment at Fort Snelling, near the present city of St. Paul, then under command of Col. Snelling, who was his wife's brother-in-law. The Fort was reached after a tedious journey by flat-boat and overland, late in the fall of 1821, his wife accompanying him. Three years later they returned to St. Louis, where, being an engineer, he was engaged for several years in surveying. In 1827 he removed with his family to Galena, for the next six years had charge of a store of the Gratiot Brothers, early business men of that locality. Towards the close of this period he received the appointment of County Recorder, also holding the position of County Surveyor and Postmaster of Galena at the same time. His later years were devoted to farming and horticulture, his death taking place, Sept. 17, 1878. Mr. Soulard was probably the first man to engage in freighting between Galena and Chicago. "The Galena Advertiser" of Sept. 14, 1829, makes mention of a wagon-load of lead sent by him to Chicago, his team taking back a load of salt, the paper remarking: "This is the first wagon that has ever passed from the Mississippi River to Chicago." Great results were predicted from the exchange of commodities between the lake and the lead mine district. — Mrs. Eliza M. Hunt (Soulard), wife of the preceding, was born at Detroit, Dec. 18, 1804, her father being Col. Thomas A. Hunt, who had taken part in the Battle of Bunker Hill and remained in the army until his death, at St. Louis, in 1807. His descendants have maintained their connection with the army ever since, a son being a prominent artillery officer at the Battle of Gettysburg. Mrs. Soulard was married at St. Louis, in 1820, and survived her husband some sixteen years, dying at Galena, August 11, 1894. She had resided in Galena nearly seventy years, and at the date of her death, in the 90th year of her age, she was that city's oldest resident.

SOUTH CHICAGO & WESTERN INDIANA RAILROAD. (See Chicago & Western Indiana Railroad.)

SOUTH DANVILLE, a suburb of the city of Danville, Vermilion County. Population (1890), 799; (1900), 898.

SOUTHEAST & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY. (See Louisville & Nashville Railroad.)

SOUTH ELGIN, a village of Kane County, near the city of Elgin. Population (1900), 515.

SOUTHERN COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, located at Albion, Edwards County, incorporated in 1891; had a faculty of ten teachers with 219 pupils (1897-98)—about equally male and female. Besides classical, scientific, normal, music and fine arts departments, instruction is given in preparatory studies and business education. Its property is valued at $16,500.

SOUTHERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, located at Anna, Union County, founded by act of the Legislature in 1869. The original site comprised 290 acres and cost a little more than $22,000, of which one-fourth was donated by citizens of the county. The construction of buildings was begun in 1869, but it was not until March, 1875, that the north wing (the first completed) was ready for occupancy. Other portions were completed a year later. The Trustees purchased 160 additional acres in 1883. The first cost (up to September, 1876) was nearly $635,000. In 1881 one wing of the main building was destroyed by fire, and was subsequently rebuilt; the patients being, meanwhile, cared for in temporary wooden barracks. The total value of lands and buildings belonging to the State, June 30, 1894, was estimated at $738,580, and, of property of all sorts, at $833,700. The wooden barracks were later converted into a permanent ward, additions made to the main buildings, a detached building for the accommodation of 300 patients erected, numerous outbuildings put up and general improvements made. A second fire on the night of Jan. 3, 1895, destroyed a large part of the main building, inflicting a loss upon the State of $175,000. Provision was made for rebuilding by the Legislature of that year. The institution has capacity for about 750 patients.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS NORMAL UNIVERSITY, established in 1869, and located, after competitive bidding, at Carbondale, which offered lands and bonds at first estimated to be of the value of $229,000, but which later depreciated, through shrinkage, to $75,000. Construction was commenced in May, 1870, and the first or main building was completed and appropriately dedicated in July, 1874. Its cost was $265,000, but it was destroyed by fire, Nov. 26, 1883. In February, 1887, a new structure was completed at a cost of $150,000. Two normal courses of instruction are given—classical and scientific—each extending over a period of four years. The conditions of admission require that the pupil shall be 16 years of age, and shall possess the qualifications enabling him to pass examination for a second-grade teacher's certificate. Those unable to do so may enter a preparatory department for six months. Pupils who pledge themselves to teach in the public schools, not less than half the time of their attendance at the University, receive free tuition with a small charge for incidentals, while others pay a tuition fee. The number of students in attendance for the year 1897-98 was 720, coming from forty-seven counties, chiefly in the southern half of the State, with representatives from eight other States. The teaching faculty for the same year consisted, besides the President, of sixteen instructors in the various departments, of whom five were ladies and eleven gentlemen.

SOUTHERN PENITENTIARY, THE, located near Chester, on the Mississippi River. Its erection was rendered necessary by the overcrowding of the Northern Penitentiary. (See Northern Penitentiary.) The law providing for its establishment required the Commissioners to select a site convenient of access, adjacent to stone and timber, and having a high elevation, with a never failing supply of water. In 1877, 122 acres were purchased at Chester, and the erection of buildings commenced. The first appropriation was of $200,000, and $300,000 was added in 1879. By March, 1878, 200 convicts were received, and their labor was utilized in the completion of the buildings, which are constructed upon approved modern principles. The prison receives convicts sent from the southern portion of the State, and has accommodation for some 1,200 prisoners. In connection with this penitentiary is an asylum for insane convicts, the erection of which was provided for by the Legislature in 1889.

SOUTH GROVE, a village of De Kalb County. Population (1890), 730.

SPALDING, Jesse, manufacturer. Collector of Customs and Street Railway President, was born at Athens, Bradford County, Pa., April 15, 1833; early commenced lumbering on the Susquehanna, and, at 23, began dealing on his own account. In 1857 he removed to Chicago, and soon after bought the property of the New York Lumber Company at the mouth of the Menominee River in Wisconsin, where, with different partners, and finally practically alone, he has carried on the business of lumber manufacture on a large scale ever since. In 1881 he was appointed, by President Arthur, Collector of the Port of Chicago, and, in 1889, received from President Harrison an appointment as one of the Government Directors of the Union Pacific Railway. Mr. Spalding was a zealous supporter of the Government during the War of the Rebellion and rendered valuable aid in the construction and equipment of Camp Douglas and the barracks at Chicago for the returning soldiers, receiving Auditor's warrants in payment, when no funds in the State treasury were available for the purpose. He was associated with William B. Ogden and others in the project for connecting Green Bay and Sturgeon Bay by a ship canal, which was completed in 1882, and, on the death of Mr. Ogden, succeeded to the Presidency of the Canal Company, serving until 1893, when the canal was turned over to the General Government. He has also been identified with many other public enterprises intimately connected with the development and prosperity of Chicago, and, in July, 1899, became President of the Chicago Union Traction Company, having control of the North and West Chicago Street Railway Systems.

SPALDING, John Lancaster, Catholic Bishop, was born in Lebanon, Ky., June 2, 1840; educated in the United States and in Europe, ordained a priest in the Catholic Church in 1863, and thereupon attached to the cathedral at Louisville, as assistant. In 1869 he organized a congregation of colored people, and built for their use the Church of St. Augustine, having been assigned to that parish as pastor. Soon afterwards he was appointed Secretary to the Bishop and made Chancellor of the Diocese. In 1873 he was transferred from Louisville to New York, where he was attached to the missionary parish of St. Michael's. He had, by this time, achieved no little fame as a pulpit orator and lecturer. When the diocese of Peoria, Ill., was created, in 1877, the choice of the Pope fell upon him for the new see, and he was consecrated Bishop, on May 1 of that year, by Cardinal McCloskey at New York. His administration has been characterized by both energy and success. He has devoted much attention to the subject of emigration, and has brought about the founding of many new settlements in the far West. He was also largely instrumental in bringing about the founding of the Catholic University at Washington. He is a frequent contributor to the reviews, and the author of a number of religious works.

SPANISH INVASION OF ILLINOIS. In the month of June, 1779, soon after the declaration of war between Spain and Great Britain, an expedition was organized in Canada, to attack the Spanish posts along the Mississippi. Simultaneously, a force was to be dispatched from Pensacola against New Orleans, then commanded by a young Spanish Colonel, Don Bernardo de Galvez. Secret instructions had been sent to British Commandants, all through the Western country, to co-operate with both expeditions. De Galvez, having learned of the scheme through intercepted letters, resolved to forestall the attack by becoming the assailant. At the head of a force of 670 men, he set out and captured Baton Rouge, Fort Manchac and Natchez, almost without opposition. The British in Canada, being ignorant of what had been going on in the South, in February following dispatched a force from Mackinac to support the expedition from Pensacola, and, incidentally, to subdue the American rebels while en route. Cahokia and Kaskaskia were contemplated points of attack, as well as the Spanish forts at St. Louis and St. Genevieve. This movement was planned by Capt. Patrick Sinclair, commandant at Mackinac, but Captain Hesse was placed in charge of the expedition, which numbered some 750 men, including a force of Indians led by a chief named Wabasha. The British arrived before St. Louis, early on the morning of May 26, 1780, taking the Spaniards by surprise. Meanwhile Col. George Rogers Clark, having been apprised of the project, arrived at Cahokia from the falls of the Ohio, twenty-four hours in advance of the attack, his presence and readiness to co-operate with the Spanish, no doubt, contributing to the defeat of the expedition. The accounts of what followed are conflicting, the number of killed on the St. Louis shore being variously estimated from seven or eight to sixty-eight—the last being the estimate of Capt. Sinclair in his official report. All agree, however, that the invading party was forced to retreat in great haste. Colonel Montgomery, who had been in command at Cahokia, with a force of 350 and a party of Spanish allies, pursued the retreating invaders as far as the Rock River, destroying many Indian villages on the way. This movement on the part of the British served as a pretext for an attempted reprisal, undertaken by the Spaniards, with the aid of a number of Cahokians, early in 1781. Starting early in January, this latter expedition crossed Illinois, with the design of attacking Fort St. Joseph, at the head of Lake Michigan, which had been captured from the English by Thomas Brady and afterwards retaken. The Spaniards were commanded by Don Eugenio Pourre, and supported by a force of Cahokians and Indians. The fort was easily taken and the British flag replaced by the ensign of Spain. The affair was regarded as of but little moment, at the time, the post being evacuated in a few days, and the Spaniards returning to St. Louis. Yet it led to serious international complications, and the "conquest" was seriously urged by the Spanish ministry as giving that country a right to the territory traversed. This claim was supported by France before the signing of the Treaty of Paris, but was defeated, through the combined efforts of Messrs. Jay, Franklin and Adams, the American Commissioners in charge of the peace negotiations with England.

SPARKS, (Capt.) David R., manufacturer and legislator, was born near Lanesville, Ind., in 1823; in 1836, removed with his parents to Macoupin County, Ill.; in 1847, enlisted for the Mexican War, crossing the plains to Santa Fe, New Mexico. In 1850 he made the overland trip to California, returning the next year by the Isthmus of Panama. In 1855 he engaged in the milling business at Staunton, Macoupin County, but, in 1860, made a third trip across the plains in search of gold, taking a quartz-mill which was erected near where Central City, Colo., now is, and which was the second steam-engine in that region. He returned home in time to vote for Stephen A. Douglas for President, the same year, but became a stalwart Republican, two weeks later, when the advocates of secession began to develop their policy after the election of Lincoln. In 1861 he enlisted, under the call for 500,000 volunteers following the first battle of Bull Run, and was commissioned a Captain in the Third Illinois Cavalry (Col. Eugene A. Carr), serving two and a half years, during which time he took part in several hard-fought battles, and being present at the fall of Vicksburg. At the end of his service he became associated with his former partner in the erection of a large flouring mill at Litchfield, but, in 1869, the firm bought an extensive flouring mill at Alton, of which he became the principal owner in 1881, and which has since been greatly enlarged and improved, until it is now one of the most extensive establishments of its kind in the State. Capt. Sparks was elected to the House of Representatives in 1888, and to the State Senate in 1894, serving in the sessions of 1895 and '97; was also strongly supported as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress in 1896.

SPARKS, William A. J., ex-Congressman, was born near New Albany, Ind., Nov. 19, 1828, at 8 years of age was brought by his parents to Illinois, and shortly afterwards left an orphan. Thrown on his own resources, he found work upon a farm, his attendance at the district schools being limited to the winter months. Later, he passed through McKendree College, supporting himself, meanwhile, by teaching, graduating in 1850. He read law with Judge Sidney Breese, and was admitted to the bar in 1851. His first public office was that of Receiver of the Land Office at Edwardsville, to which he was appointed by President Pierce in 1853, remaining until 1856, when he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket. The same year he was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1863-64, served in the State Senate for the unexpired term of James M. Rodgers, deceased. He was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in 1868, and a Democratic Representative in Congress from 1875 to 1883. In 1885 he was appointed, by President Cleveland, Commissioner of the General Land Office in Washington, retiring, by resignation, in 1887. His home is at Carlyle.

SPEED, Joshua Fry, merchant, and intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln; was educated in the local schools and at St. Joseph's College, Bardstown, Ky., after which he spent some time in a wholesale mercantile establishment in Louisville. About 1835 he came to Springfield, Ill., where he engaged in the mercantile business, later becoming the intimate friend and associate of Abraham Lincoln, to whom he offered the privilege of sharing a room over his store, when Mr. Lincoln removed from New Salem to Springfield, in 1836. Mr. Speed returned to Kentucky in 1842, but the friendship with Mr. Lincoln, which was of a most devoted character, continued until the death of the latter. Having located in Jefferson County, Ky., Mr. Speed was elected to the Legislature in 1848, but was never again willing to accept office, though often solicited to do so. In 1851 he removed to Louisville, where he acquired a handsome fortune in the real-estate business. On the breaking out of the rebellion in 1861, he heartily embraced the cause of the Union, and, during the war, was entrusted with many delicate and important duties in the interest of the Government, by Mr. Lincoln, whom he frequently visited in Washington. His death occurred at Louisville, May 29, 1882.—James (Speed), an older brother of the preceding, was a prominent Unionist of Kentucky, and, after the war, a leading Republican of that State, serving as delegate to the National Republican Conventions of 1872 and 1876. In 1864 he was appointed Attorney-General by Mr. Lincoln and served until 1866, when he resigned on account of disagreement with President Johnson. He died in 1887, at the age of 75 years.

SPOON RIVER, rises in Bureau County, flows southward through Stark County into Peoria, thence southwest through Knox, and to the south and southeast, through Fulton County, entering the Illinois River opposite Havana. It is about 150 miles long.

SPRINGER, (Rev.) Francis, D.D., educator and Army Chaplain, born in Franklin County, Pa., March 19, 1810; was left an orphan at an early age, and educated at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg; entered the Lutheran ministry in 1836, and, in 1839, removed to Springfield, Ill., where he preached and taught school; in 1847 became President of Hillsboro College, which, in 1852, was removed to Springfield and became Illinois State University, now known as Concordia Seminary. Later, he served for a time as Superintendent of Schools for the city of Springfield, but, in September, 1861, resigned to accept the Chaplaincy of the Tenth Illinois Cavalry; by successive resignations and appointments, held the positions of Chaplain of the First Arkansas Infantry (1863-64) and Post Chaplain at Fort Smith, Ark., serving in the latter position until April, 1867, when he was commissioned Chaplain of the United States Army. This position he resigned while stationed at Fort Harker, Kan., August 23, 1867. During a considerable part of his incumbency as Chaplain at Fort Smith, he acted as Agent of the Bureau of Refugees and Freedmen, performing important service in caring for noncombatants rendered homeless by the vicissitudes of war. After the war he served, for a time, as Superintendent of Schools for Montgomery County, Ill.; was instrumental in the founding of Carthage (Ill.) College, and was a member of its Board of Control at the time of his death. He was elected Chaplain of the Illinois House of Representatives at the session of the Thirty-fifth General Assembly (1887), and Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Illinois for two consecutive terms (1890-'92). He was also member of the Stephenson Post, No. 30, G. A. R., at Springfield, and served as its Chaplain from January, 1884, to his death, which occurred at Springfield, Oct. 21, 1892.

SPRINGER, William McKendree, ex-Congressman, Justice of United States Court, was born in Sullivan County, Ind., May 30, 1836. In 1848 he removed with his parents to Jacksonville, Ill., was fitted for college in the public high school at Jacksonville, under the tuition of the late Dr. Bateman, entered Illinois College, remaining three years, when he removed to the Indiana State University, graduating there in 1858. The following year he was admitted to the bar and commenced practice in Logan County, but soon after removed to Springfield. He entered public life as Secretary of the Constitutional Convention of 1862. In 1871-72 he represented Sangamon County in the Legislature, and, in 1874, was elected to Congress from the Thirteenth Illinois District as a Democrat. From that time until the close of the Fifty-third Congress (1895), he served in Congress continuously, and was recognized as one of the leaders of his party on the floor, being at the head of many important committees when that party was in the ascendancy, and a candidate for the Democratic caucus nomination for Speaker, in 1893. In 1894 he was the candidate of his party for Congress for the eleventh time, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, James A. Connolly. In 1895 President Cleveland appointed him United States District Judge for Indian Territory.

SPRINGFIELD, the State capital, and the county-seat of Sangamon County, situated five miles south of the Sangamon River and 185 miles southwest of Chicago; is an important railway center. The first settlement on the site of the present city was made by John Kelly in 1819. On April 10, 1821, it was selected, by the first Board of County Commissioners, as the temporary county-seat of Sangamon County, the organization of which had been authorized by act of the Legislature in January previous, and the name Springfield was given to it. In 1823 the selection was made permanent. The latter year the first sale of lands took place, the original site being entered by Pascal P. Enos, Elijah Iles and Thomas Cox. The town was platted about the same time, and the name "Calhoun" was given to a section in the northwest quarter of the present city—this being the "hey-day" of the South Carolina statesman's greatest popularity—but the change was not popularly accepted, and the new name was soon dropped. It was incorporated as a town, April 2, 1832, and as a city, April 6, 1840; and re-incorporated, under the general, law in 1882. It was made the State capital by act of the Legislature, passed at the session of 1837, which went into effect, July 4, 1839, and the Legislature first convened there in December of the latter year. The general surface is flat, though there is rolling ground to the west. The city has excellent water-works, a paid fire-department, six banks, electric street railways, gas and electric lighting, commodious hotels, fine churches, numerous handsome residences, beautiful parks, thorough sewerage, and is one of the best paved and handsomest cities in the State. The city proper, in 1890, contained an area of four square miles, but has since been enlarged by the annexation of the following suburbs: North Springfield, April 7, 1891; West Springfield, Jan. 4, 1898; and South Springfield and the village of Laurel, April 5, 1898. These additions give to the present city an area of 5.84 square miles. The population of the original city, according to the census of 1880, was 19,743, and, in 1890, 24,963, while that of the annexed suburbs, at the last census, was 2,109—making a total of 29,072. The latest school census (1898) showed a total population of 33,375—population by census (1900), 34,159. Besides the State House, the city has a handsome United States Government Building for United States Court and post-office purposes, a county courthouse (the former State capitol), a city hall and (State) Executive Mansion. Springfield was the home of Abraham Lincoln. His former residence has been donated to the State, and his tomb and monument are in the beautiful Oak Ridge cemetery, adjoining the city. Springfield is an important coal-mining center, and has many important industries, notably a watch factory, rolling mills, and extensive manufactories of agricultural implements and furniture. It is also the permanent location of the State Fairs, for which extensive buildings have been erected on the Fair Grounds north of the city. There are three daily papers—two morning and one evening—published here, besides various other publications. Pop. (1900), 34,159.

SPRING VALLEY, an incorporated city in Bureau County, at intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and the Toluca, Marquette & Northern Railways, 100 miles southwest of Chicago. It lies in a coal-mining region and has important manufacturing interests as well. It has two banks, electric street and interurban railways, and two newspapers. Population (1890), 3,837; (1900), 6,214.

ST. AGATHA'S SCHOOL, an institution for young ladies, at Springfield, under the patronage of the Bishop of the Episcopal Church, incorporated in 1889. It has a faculty of eight teachers giving instruction in the preparatory and higher branches, including music and fine arts. It reported fifty-five pupils in 1894, and real estate valued at $15,000.

ST. ALBAN'S ACADEMY, a boys' and young men's school at Knoxville, Ill., incorporated in 1896 under the auspices of the Episcopal Church; in 1898 had a faculty of seven teachers, with forty-five pupils, and property valued at $61,100, of which $54,000 was real estate. Instruction is given in the classical and scientific branches, besides music and preparatory studies.

ST. ANNE, a village of Kankakee County, at the crossing of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 60 miles south of Chicago. The town has two banks, tile and brick factory, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,000.

ST. CHARLES, a city in Kane County, on both sides of Fox River, at intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago Great Western Railways; 38 miles west of Chicago and 10 miles south of Elgin. The river furnishes excellent water-power, which is being utilized by a number of important manufacturing enterprises. The city is connected with Chicago and many towns in the Fox River valley by interurban electric trolley lines; is also the seat of the State Home for Boys. Pop. (1890), 1,690; (1900), 2,675.

ST. CLAIR, Arthur, first Governor of the Northwest Territory, was born of titled ancestry at Thurso, Scotland, in 1734; came to America in 1757 as an ensign, having purchased his commission, participated in the capture of Louisburg, Canada, in 1758, and fought under Wolfe at Quebec. In 1764 he settled in Pennsylvania, where he amassed a moderate fortune, and became prominent in public affairs. He served with distinction during the Revolutionary War, rising to the rank of Major-General, and succeeding General Gates in command at Ticonderoga, but, later, was censured by Washington for his hasty evacuation of the post, though finally vindicated by a military court. His Revolutionary record, however, was generally good, and even distinguished. He represented Pennsylvania in the Continental Congress, and presided over that body in 1787. He served as Governor of the Northwest Territory (including the present State of Illinois) from 1789 to 1802. As an executive he was not successful, being unpopular because of his arbitrariness. In November, 1791, he suffered a serious defeat by the Indians in the valley between the Miami and the Wabash. In this campaign he was badly crippled by the gout, and had to be carried on a litter; he was again vindicated by a Congressional investigation. His first visit to the Illinois Country was made in 1790, when he organized St. Clair County, which was named in his honor. In 1802 President Jefferson removed him from the governorship of Ohio Territory, of which he had continued to be the Governor after its separation from Indiana and Illinois. The remainder of his life was spent in comparative penury. Shortly before his decease, he was granted an annuity by the Pennsylvania Legislature and by Congress. Died, at Greensburg, Pa., August 31, 1818.

ST. CLAIR COUNTY, the first county organized within the territory comprised in the present State of Illinois — the whole region west of the Ohio River having been first placed under civil jurisdiction, under the name of "Illinois County," by an act of the Virginia House of Delegates, passed in October, 1778, a few months after the capture of Kaskaskia by Col. George Rogers Clark. (See Illinois; also Clark, George Rogers.) St. Clair County was finally set off by an order of Gov. Arthur St Clair, on occasion of his first visit to the "Illinois Country," in April, 1790—more than two years after his assumption of the duties of Governor of the Northwest Territory, which then comprehended the "Illinois Country" as well as the whole region within the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin. Governor St. Clair's order, which bears date, April 27, 1790, defines the boundaries of the new county—which took his own name—as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of the Little Michillimackanack River, running thence southerly in a direct line to the mouth of the little river above Fort Massac upon the Ohio River; thence with the said river to its junction with the Mississippi; thence up the Mississippi to the mouth of the Illinois, and so up the Illinois River to the place of beginning, with all the adjacent islands of said rivers, Illinois and Mississippi." The "Little Michillimackanack," the initial point mentioned in this description—also variously spelled "Makina" and "Mackinaw," the latter being the name by which the stream is now known—empties into the Illinois River on the south side a few miles below Pekin, in Tazewell County. The boundaries of St. Clair County, as given by Gov. St. Clair, indicate the imperfect knowledge of the topography of the "Illinois Country" existing in that day, as a line drawn south from the mouth of the Mackinaw River, instead of reaching the Ohio "above Fort Massac," would have followed the longitude of the present city of Springfield, striking the Mississippi about the northwestern corner of Jackson County, twenty-five miles west of the mouth of the Ohio. The object of Governor St. Clair's order was, of course, to include the settled portions of the Illinois Country in the new county; and, if it had had the effect intended, the eastern border of the county would have followed a line some fifty miles farther eastward, along the eastern border of Marion, Jefferson, Franklin, Williamson and Johnson Counties, reaching the Ohio River about the present site of Metropolis City in Massac County, and embracing about one-half of the area of the present State of Illinois. For all practical purposes it embraced all the Illinois Country, as it included that portion in which the white settlements were located. (See St. Clair, Arthur; also Illinois Country.) The early records of St. Clair County are in the French language; its first settlers and its early civilization were French, and the first church to inculcate the doctrine of Christianity was the Roman Catholic. The first proceedings in court under the common law were had in 1796. The first Justices of the Peace were appointed in 1807, and, as there was no penitentiary, the whipping-post and pillory played an important part in the code of penalties, these punishments being impartially meted out as late as the time of Judge (afterwards Governor) Reynolds, to "the lame, the halt and the blind," for such offenses as the larceny of a silk handkerchief. At first three places—Cahokia, Prairie du Rocher and Kaskaskia—were named as county-seats by Governor St. Clair; but Randolph County having been set off in 1895, Cahokia became the county-seat of the older county, so remaining until 1813, when Belleville was selected as the seat of justice. At that time it was a mere cornfield owned by George Blair, although settlements had previously been established in Ridge Prairie and at Badgley. Judge Jesse B. Thomas held his first court in a log-cabin, but a rude court house was erected in 1814, and, the same year, George E. Blair established a hostelry, Joseph Kerr opened a store, and, in 1817, additional improvements were inaugurated by Daniel Murray and others, from Baltimore. John H. Dennis and the Mitchells and Wests (from Virginia) settled soon afterward, becoming farmers and mechanics. Belleville was incorporated in 1819. In 1825 Governor Edwards bought the large landed interests of Etienne Personeau, a large French land-owner, ordered a new survey of the town and infused fresh life into its development. Settlers began to arrive in large numbers, mainly Virginians, who brought with them their slaves, the right to hold which was, for many years, a fruitful and perennial source of strife. Emigrants from Germany began to arrive at an early day, and now a large proportion of the population of Belleville and St. Clair County is made up of that nationality. The county, as at present organized, lies on the western border of the south half of the State, immediately opposite St. Louis, and comprises some 680 square miles. Three-fourths of it are underlaid by a vein of coal, six to eight feet thick, and about one hundred feet below the surface. Considerable wheat is raised. The principal towns are Belleville, East St. Louis, Lebanon and Mascoutah. Population of the county (1880), 61,806; (1890), 66,571; (1900), 86,685.

ST. JOHN, an incorporated village of Perry County, on the Illinois Central Railway, one mile north of Duquoin. Coal is mined and salt manufactured here. Population about 500.

ST. JOSEPH, a village of Champaign County, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 10 miles east of Champaign; has interurban railroad connection. Pop. (1900), 637.

ST. JOSEPH'S HOSPITAL, (Chicago), founded in 1860, by the Sisters of Charity. Having been destroyed in the fire of 1871, it was rebuilt in the following year. In 1892 it was reconstructed, enlarged and made thoroughly modern in its appointments. It can accommodate about 250 patients. The Sisters attend to the nursing, and conduct the domestic and financial affairs. The medical staff comprises ten physicans and surgeons, among whom are some of the most eminent in Chicago.

ST. LOUIS, ALTON & TERRE HAUTE RAILOAD, a corporation formerly operating an extensive system of railroads in Illinois. The Terre Haute & Alton Railroad Company (the original corporation) was chartered in January, 1851, work begun in 1852, and the main line from Terre Haute to Alton (172.5 miles) completed, March 1, 1856. The Belleville & Illinoistown branch (from Belleville to East St. Louis) was chartered in 1852, and completed between the points named in the title, in the fall of 1854. This corporation secured authority to construct an extension from Illinoistown (now East St. Louis) to Alton, which was completed in October, 1856, giving the first railroad connection between Alton & St. Louis. Simultaneously with this, these two roads (the Terre Haute & Alton and the Belleville & Illinoistown) were consolidated under a single charter by special act of the Legislature in February, 1854, the consolidated line taking the name of the Terre Haute, Alton & St. Louis Railroad. Subsequently the road became financially embarassed, was sold under foreclosure and reorganized, in 1862, under the name of the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad. June 1, 1867, the main line (from Terre Haute to St. Louis) was leased for niety-nine years to the Indianapolis & St. Louis Railway Company (an Indiana corporation) guaranteed by certain other lines, but the lease was subsequently broken by the insolvency of the lessee and some of the guarantors. The Indianapolis & St. Louis went into the hands of a receiver in 1882, and was sold under foreclosure, in July of the same year, its interest being absorbed by the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, by which the main line is now operated. The properties officially reported as remaining in the hands of the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad, June 30, 1895, beside the Belleville Branch (14.40 miles), included the following leased and subsidiary lines: Belleville & Southern Illinois—"Cairo Short Line" (56.40 miles); Belleville & Eldorado, (50.20 miles); Belleville & Carondelet (17.30 miles); St. Louis Southern and branches (47.27 miles), and Chicago, St. Louis & Paducah Railway (53.50 miles). All these have been leased, since the close of the fiscal year 1895, to the Illinois Central. (For sketches of these several roads see headings of each.)

ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO & ST. PAUL RAILROAD, (Bluff Line), a line running from Springfield to Granite City, Ill., (opposite St. Louis), 102.1 miles, with a branch from Lock Haven to Grafton, Ill., 8.4 miles—total length of line in Illinois, 110.5 miles. The track is of standard gauge, laid with 56 to 70-pound steel rails.—(HISTORY.) The road was originally incorporated under the name of the St. Louis, Jerseyville & Springfield Railroad, built from Bates to Grafton in 1882, and absorbed by the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company; was surrendered by the receivers of the latter in 1886, and passed under the control of the bond-holders, by whom it was transferred to a corporation known as the St. Louis & Central Illinois Railroad Company. In June, 1887, the St. Louis, Alton & Springfield Railroad Company was organized, with power to build extensions from Newbern to Alton, and from Bates to Springfield, which was done. In October, 1890, a receiver was appointed, followed by a reorganization under the present name (St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul). Default was made on the interest and, in June following, it was again placed in the hands of receivers, by whom it was operated until 1898. The total earnings and income for the fiscal year 1897-98 were $318,815, operating expenses, $373,270; total capitalization, $4,853,526, of which, $1,500,000 was in the form of stock and $1,235 000 in income bonds.

ST. LOUIS, INDIANAPOLIS & EASTERN RAILROAD, a railroad line 90 miles in length, extending from Switz City, Ind., to Effingham, Ill.—56 miles being within the State of Illinois. It is of standard gauge and the track laid chiefly with iron rails.—(HISTORY.) The orginal corporation was chartered in 1869 as the Springfield, Effingham & Quincy Railway Company. It was built as a narrow-gauge line by the Cincinnati, Effingham & Quincy Construction Company, which went into the hands of a receiver in 1878. The road was completed by the receiver in 1880, and, in 1885, restored to the Construction Company by the discharge of the receiver. For a short time it was operated in connection with the Bloomfield Railroad of Indiana, but was reorganized in 1886 as the Indiana & Illinois Southern Railroad, and the gauge changed to standard in 1887. Having made default in the payment of interest, it was sold under foreclosure in 1890 and purchased in the interest of the bond-holders, by whom it was conveyed to the St. Louis, Indianapolis & Eastern Railroad Company, in whose name the line is operated. Its business is limited, and chiefly local. The total earnings in 1898 were $65,583 and the expenditures $69,112. Its capital stock was $740,900; bonded debt, $978,000, other indebtedness increasing the total capital investment to $1,816,736.

ST. LOUIS, PEORIA & NORTHERN RAILWAY, known as "Peoria Short Line," a corporation organized, Feb. 29, 1896, to take over and unite the properties of the St. Louis & Eastern, the St. Louis & Peoria and the North and South Railways, and to extend the same due north from Springfield to Peoria (60 miles), and thence to Fulton or East Clinton, Ill., on the Upper Mississippi. The line extends from Springfield to Glen Carbon (84.46 miles), with trackage facilities over the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad and the Merchants' Terminal Bridge (18 miles) to St. Louis.—(HISTORY.) This road has been made up of three sections or divisions. (1) The initial section of the line was constructed under the name of the St. Louis & Chicago Railroad of Illinois, incorporated in 1885, and opened from Mount Olive to Alhambra in 1887. It passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1889, and reorganized, in 1890, as the St. Louis & Peoria Railroad. The St. Louis & Eastern, chartered in 1889, built the line from Glen Carbon to Marine, which was opened in 1893; the following year, bought the St. Louis & Peoria line, and, in 1895, constructed the link (8 miles) between Alhambra and Marine. (3) The North & South Railroad Company of Illinois, organized in 1890, as successor to the St. Louis & Chicago Railway Company, proceeded in the construction of the line (50.46 miles) from Mt. Olive to Springfield, which was subsequently leased to the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis, then under the management of the Jacksonville, Louisville & St. Louis Railway. The latter corporation having defaulted, the property passed into the hands of a receiver. By expiration of the lease in December, 1896, the property reverted to the proprietary Company, which took possession, Jan. 1, 1896. The St. Louis & Southeastern then bought the line outright, and it was incorporated as a part of the new organization under the name of the St. Louis, Peoria & Northern Railway, the North & South Railroad going out of existence. In May, 1899, the St. Louis, Peoria & Northern was sold to the reorganized Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, to be operated as a short line between Peoria & St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, ROCK ISLAND & CHICAGO RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

ST. LOUIS SOUTHERN RAILROAD, a line running from Pinckneyville, Ill., via Murphysboro, to Carbondale. The company is also the lessee of the Carbondale & Shawneetown Railroad, extending from Carbondale to Marion, 17.5 miles—total, 50.5 miles. The track is of standard gauge and laid with 56 and 60-pound steel rails. The company was organized in August, 1886, to succeed to the property of the St. Louis Coal Railroad (organized in 1879) and the St. Louis Central Railway; and was leased for 980 years from Dec. 1, 1886, to the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad Company, at an annual rental equal to thirty per cent of the gross earnings, with a minimum guarantee of $32,000, which is sufficient to pay the interest on the first mortgage bonds. During the year 1896 this line passed under lease from the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad Company, into the hands of the Illinois Central Railroad Company.

ST. LOUIS, SPRINGFIELD & VINCENNES RAILROAD COMPANY, a corporation organized in July, 1899, to take over the property of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway in the State of Illinois, known as the Ohio & Mississippi and the Springfield & Illinois Southeastern Railways — the former extending from Vincennes, Ind., to East St. Louis, and the latter from Beardstown to Shawneetown. The property was sold under foreclosure, at Cincinnati, July 10, 1899, and transferred, for purposes of reorganization, into the hands of the new corporation, July 28, 1899. (For history of the several lines see Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway.)

ST. LOUIS, VANDALIA & TERRE HAUTE RAILROAD. This line extends from East St. Louis eastward across the State, to the Indiana State line, a distance of 158.3 miles. The Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company is the lessee. The track is single, of standard gauge, and laid with steel rails. The outstanding capital stock, in 1898, was $3,924,058, the bonded debt, $4,496,000, and the floating debt, $218.480.—(HISTORY ) The St. Louis, Vandalia & Terre Haute Railroad was chartered in 1865, opened in 1870 and leased to the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, for itself and the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad.

ST. LOUIS & CAIRO RAILROAD, extends from East St. Louis to Cairo, Ill., 151.6 miles, with a branch from Millstadt Junction to High Prairie, 9 miles. The track is of standard gauge and laid mainly with steel rails.—(HISTORY.) The original charter was granted to the Cairo & St. Louis Railroad Company, Feb. 16, 1865, and the road opened, March 1, 1875. Subsequently it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure, July 14, 1881, and was taken charge of by a new company under its present name, Feb. 1, 1882. On Feb. 1, 1886, it was leased to the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company for forty-five years, and now constitutes the Illinois Division of that line, giving it a connection with St. Louis. ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, located in Chicago. It was chartered in 1865, its incorporators, in their initial statement, substantially declaring their object to be the establishment of a free hospital under the control of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which should be open to the afflicted poor, without distinction of race or creed. The hospital was opened on a small scale, but steadily increased until 1879, when re-incorporation was effected under the general law. In 1885 a new building was erected on land donated for that purpose, at a cost exceeding $150,000, exclusive of $20,000 for furnishing. While its primary object has been to afford accommodation, with medical and surgical care, gratuitously, to the needy poor, the institution also provides a considerable number of comfortable, well-furnished private rooms for patients who are able and willing to pay for the same. It contains an amphitheater for surgical operations and clinics, and has a free dispensary for out-patients. During the past few years important additions have been made, the number of beds increased, and provision made for a training school for nurses. The medical staff (1896) consists of thirteen physicians and surgeons and two pathologists.

ST. MARY'S SCHOOL, a young ladies' seminary, under the patronage of the Episcopal Church, at Knoxville, Knox County, Ill.; was incorporated in 1858, in 1898 had a faculty of fourteen teachers, giving instruction to 113 pupils. The branches taught include the classics, the sciences, fine arts, music and preparatory studies. The institution has a library of 2,200 volumes, and owns property valued at $130,500, of which $100,000 is real estate.

STAGER, Anson, soldier and Telegraph Superintendent, was born in Ontario County, N. Y., April 20, 1825; at 16 years of age entered the service of Henry O'Reilly, a printer who afterwards became a pioneer in building telegraph lines, and with whom he became associated in various enterprises of this character. Having introduced several improvements in the construction of batteries and the arrangement of wires, he was, in 1852, made General Superintendent of the principal lines in the West, and, on the organization of the Western Union Company, was retained in this position. Early in the Civil War he was entrusted with the management of telegraph lines in Southern Ohio and along the Virginia border, and, in October following, was appointed General Superintendent of Government telegraphs, remaining in this position until September, 1868, his services being recognized in his promotion to a brevet Brigadier-Generalship of Volunteers. In 1869 General Stager returned to Chicago and, in addition to his duties as General Superintendent, engaged in the promotion of a number of enterprises connected with the manufacture of electrical appliances and other branches of the business. One of these was the consolidation of the telephone companies, of which he became President, as also of the Western Edison Electric Light Company, besides being a Director in several other corporations. Died, in Chicago, March 26, 1885.

STANDISH, John Van Ness, a lineal descendant of Capt. Miles Standish, the Pilgrim leader, was born at Woodstock, Vt., Feb. 26, 1825. His early years were spent on a farm, but a love of knowledge and books became his ruling passion, and he devoted several years to study, in the "Liberal Institute" at Lebanon, N. H., finally graduating, with the degree of A. B., at Norwich University in the class of 1847. Later, he received the degree of A.M., in due course, from his Alma Mater in 1855; that of Ph.D. from Knox College, in 1883, of LL.D from St. Lawrence University in 1893, and from Norwich, in 1898. Dr. Standish chose the profession of a teacher, and has spent over fifty years in its pursuit in connection with private and public schools and the College, of which more than forty years were as Professor and President of Lombard University at Galesburg. He has also lectured and conducted Teachers' Institutes all over the State, and, in 1859, was elected President of the State Teachers' Association. He made three visits to the Old World—in 1879, '82-83, and '91-92—and, during his second trip, traveled over 40,000 miles, visiting nearly every country of Europe, including the "Land of the Midnight Sun," besides Northern Africa from the Mediterranean to the Desert of Sahara, Egypt, Palestine, Syria and Asia Minor. A lover of art, he has visited nearly all the principal museums and picture galleries of the world. In politics he is a Republican, and, in opposition to many college men, a firm believer in the doctrine of protection. In religion, he is a Universalist.

STAPP, James T. B., State Auditor, was born in Woodford County, Ky., April 13, 1804; at the age of 12 accompanied his widowed mother to Kaskaskia, Ill., where she settled; before he was 20 years old, was employed as a clerk in the office of the State Auditor, and, upon the resignation of that officer, was appointed his successor, being twice thereafter elected by the Legislature, serving nearly five years. He resigned the auditorship to accept the Presidency of the State Bank at Vandalia, which post he filled for thirteen years; acted as Aid-de-camp on Governor Reynolds staff in the Black Hawk War, and served as Adjutant of the Third Illinois Volunteers during the war with Mexico. President Taylor appointed Mr. Stapp Receiver of the United States Land Office at Vandalia, which office he held during the Fillmore administration, resigning in 1855. Two years later he removed to Decatur, where he continued to reside until his death in 1876. A handsome Methodist chapel, erected by him in that city, bears his name.

STARK COUNTY, an interior county in the northern half of the State, lying west of the Illinois River; has an area of 290 square miles. It has a rich, alluvial soil, well watered by numerous small streams. The principal industries are agriculture and stock-raising, and the chief towns are Toulon and Wyoming. The county was erected from Putnam and Knox in 1839, and named in honor of General Stark, of Revolutionary fame. The earliest settler was Isaac B. Essex, who built a cabin on Spoon River, in 1828, and gave his name to a township. Of other pioneer families, the Buswells, Smiths, Spencers and Eastmans came from New England; the Thomases, Moores, Holgates, Fullers and Whittakers from Pennsylvania; the Coxes from Ohio; the Perrys and Parkers from Virginia; the McClanahans from Kentucky; the Hendersons from Tennessee; the Lees and Hazens from New Jersey; the Halls from England, and the Turnbulls and Olivers from Scotland. The pioneer church was the Congregational at Toulon. Population (1880), 11,207; (1890), 9,982; (1900), 10,186.

STARVED ROCK, a celebrated rock or cliff on the south side of Illinois River, in La Salle County, upon which the French explorer, La Salle, and his lieutenant, Tonty, erected a fort in 1682, which they named Fort St. Louis. It was one mile north of the supposed location of the Indian village of La Vantum, the metropolis, so to speak, of the Illinois Indians about the time of the arrival of the first French explorers. The population of this village, in 1680, according to Father Membre, was some seven or eight thousand. Both La Vantum and Fort St. Louis were repeatedly attacked by the Iroquois. The Illinois were temporarily driven from La Vantum, but the French, for the time being, successfully defended their fortification. In 1702 the fort was abandoned as a military post, but continued to be used as a French trading-post until 1718, when it was burned by Indians. The Illinois were not again molested until 1722, when the Foxes made an unsuccessful attack upon them. The larger portion of the tribe, however, resolved to cast in their fortunes with other tribes on the Mississippi River. Those who remained fell an easy prey to the foes by whom they were surrounded. In 1769 they were attacked from the north by tribes who desired to avenge the murder of Pontiac. Finding themselves hard pressed, they betook themselves to the bluff where Fort St. Louis had formerly stood. Here they were besieged for twelve days, when, destitute of food or water, they made a gallant but hopeless sortie. According to a tradition handed down among the Indians, all were massacred by the besiegers in an attempt to escape by night, except one half-breed, who succeeded in evading his pursuers. This sanguinary catastrophe has given the rock its popular name. Elmer Baldwin, in his History of La Salle County (1877), says: "The bones of the victims lay scattered about the cliff in profusion after the settlement by the whites, and are still found mingled plentifully with the soil." (See La Salle, Robert Cavelier; Tonty; Fort St. Louis.)

STARNE, Alexander, Secretary of State and State Treasurer, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 21, 1813; in the spring of 1836 removed to Illinois, settling at Griggsville, Pike County, where he opened a general store. From 1839 to '42 he served as Commissioner of Pike County, and, in the latter year, was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and re-elected in 1844. Having, in the meanwhile, disposed of his store at Griggsville and removed to Pittsfield, he was appointed, by Judge Purple, Clerk of the Circuit Court, and elected to the same office for four years, when it was made elective. In 1852 he was elected Secretary of State, when he removed to Springfield, returning to Griggsville at the expiration of his term in 1857, to assume the Presidency of the old Hannibal and Naples Railroad (now a part of the Wabash system). He represented Pike and Brown Counties in the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and the same year was elected State Treasurer. He thereupon again removed to Springfield, where he resided until his death, being, with his sons, extensively engaged in coal mining. In 1870, and again in 1872, he was elected State Senator from Sangamon County. He died at Springfield, March 31, 1886.

STATE BANK OF ILLINOIS. The first legislation. having for its object the establishment of a bank within the territory which now constitutes the State of Illinois, was the passage, by the Territorial Legislature of 1816, of an act incorporating the "Bank of Illinois at Shawneetown, with branches at Edwardsville and Kaskaskia." In the Second General Assembly of the State (1820) an act was passed, over the Governor's veto and in defiance of the adverse judgment of the Council of Revision, establishing a State Bank at Vandalia with branches at Shawneetown, Edwardsville, and Brownsville in Jackson County. This was, in effect, a rechartering of the banks at Shawneetown and Edwardsville. So far as the former is concerned, it seems to have been well managed; but the official conduct of the officers of the latter, on the basis of charges made by Governor Edwards in 1826, was made the subject of a legislative investigation, which (although it resulted in nothing) seems to have had some basis of fact, in view of the losses finally sustained in winding up its affairs—that of the General Government amounting to $54,000. Grave charges were made in this connection against men who were then, or afterwards became, prominent in State affairs, including one Justice of the Supreme Court and one (still later) a United States Senator. The experiment was disastrous, as, ten years later (1831), it was found necessary for the State to incur a debt of $100,000 to redeem the outstanding circulation. Influenced, however, by the popular demand for an increase in the "circulating medium," the State continued its experiment of becoming a stockholder in banks managed by its citizens, and accordingly we find it, in 1835, legislating in the same direction for the establishing of a central "Bank of Illinois" at Springfield, with branches at other points as might be required, not to exceed six in number. One of these branches was established at Vandalia and another at Chicago, furnishing the first banking institution of the latter city. Two years later, when the State was entering upon its scheme of internal improvement, laws were enacted increasing the capital stock of these banks to $4,000,000 in the aggregate. Following the example of similar institutions elsewhere, they suspended specie payments a few months later, but were protected by "stay laws" and other devices until 1842, when the internal improvement scheme having been finally abandoned, they fell in general collapse. The State ceased to be a stock-holder in 1843, and the banks were put in course of liquidation, though it required several years to complete the work.

STATE CAPITALS. The first State capital of Illinois was Kaskaskia, where the first Territorial Legislature convened, Nov. 25, 1812. At that time there were but five counties in the State—St. Clair and Randolph being the most important, and Kaskaskia being the county-seat of the latter. Illinois was admitted into the Union as a State in 1818, and the first Constitution provided that the seat of government should remain at Kaskaskia until removed by legislative enactment. That instrument, however, made it obligatory upon the Legislature, at its first session, to petition Congress for a grant of not more than four sections of land, on which should be erected a town, which should remain the seat of government for twenty years. The petition was duly presented and granted; and, in accordance with the power granted by the Constitution, a Board of five Commissioners selected the site of the present city of Vandalia, then a point in the wilderness twenty miles north of any settlement. But so great was the faith of speculators in the future of the proposed city, that town lots were soon selling at $100 to $780 each. The Commissioners, in obedience to law, erected a plain two-story frame building—scarcely more than a commodious shanty—to which the State offices were removed in December, 1820. This building was burned, Dec. 9, 1823, and a brick structure erected in its place. Later, when the question of a second removal of the capital began to be agitated, the citizens of Vandalia assumed the risk of erecting a new, brick State House, costing $16,000. Of this amount $6,000 was reimbursed by the Governor from the contingent fund, and the balance ($10,000) was appropriated in 1837, when the seat of government was removed to Springfield, by vote of the Tenth General Assembly on the fourth ballot. The other places receiving the principal vote at the time of the removal to Springfield, were Jacksonville, Vandalia, Peoria, Alton and Illiopolis—Springfield receiving the largest vote at each ballot. The law removing the capital appropriated $50,000 from the State Treasury, provided that a like amount should be raised by private subscription and guaranteed by bond, and that at least two acres of land should be donated as a site. Two State Houses have been erected at Springfield, the first cost of the present one (including furnishing) having been a little in excess of $4,000,000. Abraham Lincoln, who was a member of the Legislature from Sangamon County at the time, was an influential factor in securing the removal of the capital to Springfield.

STATE DEBT. The State debt, which proved so formidable a burden upon the State of Illinois for a generation, and, for a part of that period, seriously checked its prosperity, was the direct outgrowth of the internal improvement scheme entered upon in 1837. (See Internal Improvement Policy.) At the time this enterprise was undertaken the aggregate debt of the State was less than $400,000—accumulated within the preceding six years. Two years later (1838) it had increased to over $6,500,000, while the total valuation of real and personal property, for the purposes of taxation, was less than $60,000,000, and the aggregate receipts of the State treasury, for the same year, amounted to less than $150,000. At the same time, the disbursements, for the support of the State Government alone, had grown to more than twice the receipts. This disparity continued until the declining credit of the State forced upon the managers of public affairs an involuntary economy, when the means could no longer be secured for more lavish expenditures. The first bonds issued at the inception of the internal improvement scheme sold at a premium of 5 per cent, but rapidly declined until they were hawked in the markets of New York and London at a discount, in some cases falling into the hands of brokers who failed before completing their contracts, thus causing a direct loss to the State. If the internal improvement scheme was ill-advised, the time chosen to carry it into effect was most unfortunate, as it came simultaneously with the panic of 1837, rendering the disaster all the more complete. Of the various works undertaken by the State, only the Illinois & Michigan Canal brought a return, all the others resulting in more or less complete loss. The internal improvement scheme was abandoned in 1839-40, but not until State bonds exceeding $13,000,000 had been issued. For two years longer the State struggled with its embarrassments, increased by the failure of the State Bank in February, 1842, and, by that of the Bank of Illinois at Shawneetown, a few months later, with the proceeds of more than two and a half millions of the State's bonds in their possession. Thus left without credit, or means even of paying the accruing interest, there were those who regarded the State as hopelessly bankrupt, and advocated repudiation as the only means of escape. Better counsels prevailed, however; the Constitution of 1848 put the State on a basis of strict economy in the matter of salaries and general expenditures, with restrictions upon the Legislature in reference to incurring indebtedness, while the beneficent "two-mill tax" gave assurance to its creditors that its debts would be paid. While the growth of the State, in wealth and population, had previously been checked by the fear of excessive taxation, it now entered upon a new career of prosperity, in spite of its burdens—its increase in population, between 1850 and 1860, amounting to over 100 per cent. The movement of the State debt after 1840 —when the internal improvement scheme was abandoned—chiefly by accretions of unpaid interest, has been estimated as follows: 1842, $15,637,950; 1844, $14,633,969; 1846, $16,389,817; 1848, $16,661,795. It reached its maximum in 1853—the first year of Governor Matteson's administration—when it was officially reported at $16,724,177. At this time the work of extinguishment began, and was prosecuted under successive administrations, except during the war, when the vast expense incurred in sending troops to the field caused an increase. During Governor Bissell's administration, the reduction amounted to over $3,000,000; during Oglesby's, to over five and a quarter million, besides two and a quarter million paid on interest. In 1880 the debt had been reduced to $281,059.11, and, before the close of 1882, it had been entirely extinguished, except a balance of $18,500 in bonds, which, having been called in years previously and never presented for

STATE GUARDIANS FOR GIRLS, a bureau organized for the care of female juvenile delinquents, by act of June 2, 1893. The Board consists of seven members, nominated by the Executive and confirmed by the Senate, and who constitute a body politic and corporate. Not more than two of the members may reside in the same Congressional District and, of the seven members, four must be women. (See also Home for Female Juvenile Offenders.) The term of office is six years.

STATE HOUSE, located at Springfield. Its construction was begun under an act passed by the Legislature in February, 1867, and completed in 1887. It stands in a park of about eight acres, donated to the State by the citizens of Springfield. A provision of the State Constitution of 1870 prohibited the expenditure of any sum in excess of $3,500,000 in the erection and furnishing of the building, without previous approval of such additional expenditure by the people. This amount proving insufficient, the Legislature, at its session of 1885, passed an act making an additional appropriation of $531,712, which having been approved by popular vote at the general election of 1886, the expenditure was made and the capitol completed during the following year, thus raising the total cost of construction and furnishing to a little in excess of $4,000,000. The building is cruciform as to its ground plan, and classic in its style of architecture; its extreme dimensions (including porticoes), from north to south, being 379 feet, and, from east to west, 286 feet. The walls are of dressed Joliet limestone, while the porticoes, which are spacious and lofty, are of sandstone, supported by polished columns of gray granite. The three stories of the building are surmounted by a Mansard roof, with two turrets and a central dome of stately dimensions. Its extreme height, to the top of the iron flag-staff, which rises from a lantern springing from the dome, is 364 feet.

STATE NORMAL UNIVERSITY, an institution for the education of teachers, organized under an act of the General Assembly, passed Feb. 18, 1857. This act placed the work of organization in the hands of a board of fifteen persons, which was styled "The Board of Education of the State of Illinois," and was constituted as follows: C. B. Denio of Jo Daviess County; Simeon Wright of Lee; Daniel Wilkins of McLean; Charles E. Hovey of Peoria; George P. Rex of Pike; Samuel W. Moulton of Shelby; John Gillespie of Jasper; George Bunsen of St. Clair; Wesley Sloan of Pope; Ninian W. Edwards of Sangamon; John R. Eden of Moultrie; Flavel Moseley and William Wells of Cook; Albert R. Shannon of White; and the Superintendent of Public Instruction, ex-officio. The object of the University, as defined in the organizing law, is to qualify teachers for the public schools of the State, and the course of instruction to be given embraces "the art of teaching, and all branches which pertain to a common-school education; in the elements of the natural sciences, including agricultural chemistry, animal and vegetable physiology; in the fundamental laws of the United States and of the State of Illinois in regard to the rights and duties of citizens, and such other studies as the Board of Education may, from time to time, prescribe." Various cities competed for the location of the institution, Bloomington being finally selected, its bid, including 160 acres of land, being estimated as equivalent to $141,725. The corner-stone was laid on September 29, 1857, and the first building was ready for permanent occupancy in September, 1860. Previously, however, it had been sufficiently advanced to permit of its being used, and the first commencement exercises were held on June 29 of the latter year. Three years earlier, the academic department had been organized under the charge of Charles E. Hovey. The first cost, including furniture, etc., was not far from $200,000. Gratuitous instruction is given to two pupils from each county, and to three from each Senatorial District. The departments are: Grammar school, high school, normal department and model school, all of which are overcrowded. The whole number of students in attendance on the institution during the school year, 1897-98, was 1,197, of whom 891 were in the normal department and 306 in the practice school department, including representatives from 86 counties of the State, with a few pupils from other States on the payment of tuition. The teaching faculty (including the President and Librarian) for the same year, was made up of twenty-six members—twelve ladies and fourteen gentlemen. The expenditures for the year 1897-98 aggregated $47,626.92, against $66,528.69 for 1896-97. Nearly $22,000 of the amount expended during the latter year was on account of the construction of a gymnasium building.

STATE PROPERTY. The United States Census of 1890 gave the value of real and personal property belonging to the State as follows: Public lands, $328,000; buildings, $22,164,000; miscellaneous property, $2,650,000—total, $25,142,000. The land may be subdivided thus: Camp-grounds of the Illinois National Guard near Springfield (donated), $40,000; Illinois and Michigan Canal, $168,000; Illinois University lands, in Illinois (donated by the General Government), $41,000, in Minnesota (similarly donated), $79,000. The buildings comprise those connected with the charitable, penal and educational institutions of the State, besides the State Arsenal, two buildings for the use of the Appellate Courts (at Ottawa and Mount Vernon), the State House, the Executive Mansion, and locks and dams erected at Henry and Copperas Creek. Of the miscellaneous property, $120,000 represents the equipment of the Illinois National Guard; $1,959,000 the value of the movable property of public buildings; $550,000 the endowment fund of the University of Illinois; and $21,000 the movable property of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. The figures given relative to the value of the public buildings include only the first appropriations for their erection. Considerable sums have since been expended upon some of them in repairs, enlargements and improvements.

STATE TREASURERS. The only Treasurer of Illinois during the Territorial period was John Thomas, who served from 1812 to 1818, and became the first incumbent under the State Government. Under the Constitution of 1818 the Treasurer was elected, biennially, by joint vote of the two Houses of the General Assembly; by the Constitution of 1848, this officer was made elective by the people for the same period, without limitations as to number of terms; under the Constitution of 1870, the manner of election and duration of term are unchanged, but the incumbent is ineligible to re-election, for two years from expiration of the term for which he may have been chosen. The following is a list of the State Treasurers, from the date of the admission of the State into the Union down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each: John Thomas, 1818-19; Robert K. McLaughlin, 1819-23; Abner Field, 1823-27; James Hall, 1827-31; John Dement, 1831-36; Charles Gregory, 1836-37; John D. Whiteside, 1837-41; Milton Carpenter, 1841-48; John Moore, 1848-57; James Miller, 1857-59; William Butler, 1859-63; Alexander Starne, 1863-65; James H. Beveridge, 1865-67; George W. Smith, 1867-69; Erastus N. Bates, 1869-73; Edward Rutz, 1873-75; Thomas S. Ridgway, 1875-77; Edward Rutz, 1877-79; John C. Smith, 1879-81; Edward Rutz, 1881-83; John C. Smith, 1883-85; Jacob Gross, 1885-87; John R. Tanner, 1887-89; Charles Becker, 1889-91; Edward S. Wilson, 1891-93; Rufus N. Ramsay, 1893-95; Henry Wulff, 1895-97; Henry L. Hertz, 1897-99; Floyd K. Whittemore, 1899—.

STAUNTON, a village in the southeast corner of Macoupin County, on the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis and the Wabash Railways; is 36 miles northeast of St. Louis, and 14 miles southwest of Litchfield. Agriculture and coal-mining are the industries of the surrounding region. Staunton has two banks, eight churches and a weekly newspaper. Population (1880), 1,358; (1890), 2,209; (1900), 2,786.

STEEL PRODUCTION. In the manufacture of steel, Illinois has long ranked as the second State in the Union in the amount of its output, and, during the period between 1880 and 1890, the increase in production was 241 per cent. In 1880 there were but six steel works in the State; in 1890 these had increased to fourteen; and the production of steel of all kinds (in tons of 2,000 pounds) had risen from 254,569 tons to 868,250. Of the 3,837,039 tons of Bessemer steel ingots, or direct castings, produced in the United States in 1890, 22 per cent were turned out in Illinois, nearly all the steel produced in the State being made by that process. From the tonnage of ingots, as given above, Illinois produced 622,260 pounds of steel rails,—more than 30 per cent of the aggregate for the entire country. This fact is noteworthy, inasmuch as the competition in the manufacture of Bessemer steel rails, since 1880, has been so great that many rail mills have converted their steel into forms other than rails, experience having proved their production to any considerable extent, during the past few years, unprofitable except in works favorably located for obtaining cheap raw material, or operated under the latest and most approved methods of manufacture. Open-hearth steel is no longer made in Illinois, but the manufacture of crucible steel is slightly increasing, the output in 1890 being 445 tons, as against 130 in 1880. For purposes requiring special grades of steel the product of the crucible process will be always in demand, but the high cost of manufacture prevents it, in a majority of instances, from successfully competing in price with the other processes mentioned.

STEPHENSON, Benjamin, pioneer and early politician, came to Illinois from Kentucky in 1809, and was appointed the first Sheriff of Randolph County by Governor Edwards under the Territorial Government; afterwards served as a Colonel of Illinois militia during the War of 1812; represented Illinois Territory as Delegate in Congress, 1814-16, and, on his retirement from Congress, became Register of the Land Office at Edwardsville, finally dying at Edwardsville—Col. James W. (Stephenson), a son of the preceding, was a soldier during the Black Hawk War, afterwards became a prominent politician in the northwestern part of the State, served as Register of the Land Office at Galena and, in 1838, received the Democratic nomination for Governor, but withdrew before the election.

STEPHENSON, (Dr.) Benjamin Franklin, physician and soldier, was born in Wayne County, Ill., Oct. 30, 1822, and accompanied his parents, in 1825, to Sangamon County, where the family settled. His early educational advantages were meager, and he did not study his profession (medicine) until after reaching his majority, graduating from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1850. He began practice at Petersburg, but, in April, 1862, was mustered into the volunteer army as Surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry. After a little over two years service he was mustered out in June, 1864, when he took up his residence in Springfield, and, for a year, was engaged in the drug business there. In 1865 he resumed professional practice. He lacked tenacity of purpose, however, was indifferent to money, and always willing to give his own services and orders for medicine to the poor. Hence, his practice was not lucrative. He was one of the leaders in the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic (which see), in connection with which he is most widely known; but his services in its cause failed to receive, during his lifetime, the recognition which they deserved, nor did the organization promptly flourish, as he had hoped. He finally returned with his family to Petersburg. Died, at Rock Creek, Menard, County, Ill., August 30, 1871.

STEPHENSON COUNTY, a northwestern county, with an area of 560 square miles. The soil is rich, productive and well timbered. Fruit-culture and stock-raising are among the chief industries. Not until 1827 did the aborigines quit the locality, and the county was organized, ten years later, and named for Gen. Benjamin Stephenson. A man named Kirker, who had been in the employment of Colonel Gratiot as a lead-miner, near Galena, is said to have built the first cabin within the present limits of what was called Burr Oak Grove, and set himself up as an Indian-trader in 1826, but only remained a short time. He was followed, the next year, by Oliver W. Kellogg, who took Kirker's place, built a more pretentious dwelling and became the first permanent settler. Later came William Waddams, the Montagues, Baker, Kilpatrick, Preston, the Goddards, and others whose names are linked with the county's early history. The first house in Freeport was built by William Baker. Organization was effected in 1837, the total poll being eighty-four votes. The earliest teacher was Nelson Martin, who is said to have taught a school of some twelve pupils, in a house which stood on the site of the present city of Freeport. Population (1880), 31,963; (1890), 31,338; (1900), 34,933.

STERLING, a flourishing city on the north bank of Rock River, in Whiteside County, 109 miles west of Chicago, 29 miles east of Clinton, Iowa, and 52 miles east-northeast of Rock Island. It has ample railway facilities, furnished by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Sterling & Peoria, and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroads. It contains fourteen churches, an opera house, high and grade schools, Carnegie library, Government postoffice building, three banks, electric street and interurban car lines, electric and gas lighting, water-works, paved streets and sidewalks, fire department and four newspaper offices, two issuing daily editions. It has fine water-power, and is an important manufacturing center, its works turning out agricultural implements, carriages, paper, barbed-wire, school furniture, burial caskets, pumps, sash, doors, etc. It also has the Sterling Iron Works, besides foundries and machine shops. The river here flows through charming scenery. Pop. (1890), 5,824; (1900) 6,309.

STEVENS, Bradford A., ex-Congressman, was born at Boscawen (afterwards Webster), N. H., Jan. 3, 1813. After attending schools in New Hampshire and at Montreal, he entered Dartmouth College, graduating therefrom in 1835. During the six years following, he devoted himself to teaching, at Hopkinsville, Ky., and New York City. In 1843 he removed to Bureau County, Ill., where he became a merchant and farmer. In 1868 he was chairman of the Board of Supervisors, and, in 1870, was elected to Congress, as an Independent Democrat, for the Fifth District.

STEVENSON, Adlai E., ex-Vice-President of the United States, was born in Christian County, Ky., Oct. 23, 1835. In 1852 he removed with his parents to Bloomington, McLean County, Ill., where the family settled; was educated at the Illinois Wesleyan University and at Centre College, Ky., was admitted to the bar in 1858 and began practice at Metamora, Woodford County, where he was Master in Chancery, 1861-65, and State's Attorney, 1865-69. In 1864 he was candidate for Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket. In 1869 he returned to Bloomington, where he has since resided. In 1874, and again in 1876, he was an unsuccessful candidate of his party for Congress, but was elected as a Greenback Democrat in 1878, though defeated in 1880 and 1882. In 1877 he was appointed by President Hayes a member of the Board of Visitors to West Point. During the first administration of President Cleveland (1885-89) he was First Assistant Postmaster General; was a member of the National Democratic Conventions of 1884 and 1892, being Chairman of the Illinois delegation the latter year. In 1892 he received his party's nomination for the Vice-Presidency, and was elected to that office, serving until 1897. Since retiring from office he has resumed his residence at Bloomington.

STEWARD, Lewis, manufacturer and former Congressman, was born in Wayne County, Pa., Nov. 20, 1824, and received a common school education. At the age of 14 he accompanied his parents to Kendall County, Ill., where he afterwards resided, being engaged in farming and the manufacture of agricultural implements at Plano. He studied law but never practiced. In 1876 he was an unsuccessful candidate for Governor on the Democratic ticket, being defeated by Shelby M. Cullom. In 1890 the Democrats of the Eighth Illinois District elected him to Congress. In 1892 he was again a candidate, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Robert A. Childs, by the narrow margin of 27 votes, and, in 1894, was again defeated, this time being pitted against Albert J. Hopkins. Mr. Steward died at his home at Plano, August 26, 1896.

STEWARDSON, a town of Shelby County, at the intersection of the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railway with the Altamont branch of the Wabash, 12 miles southeast of Shelbyville; is in a grain and lumber region; has a bank and a weekly paper. Population, (1900), 677.

STICKNEY, William H., pioneer lawyer, was born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 9, 1809, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Cincinnati in 1831, and, in Illinois in 1834, being at that time a resident of Shawneetown; was elected State's Attorney by the Legislature, in 1839, for the circuit embracing some fourteen counties in the southern and southeastern part of the State; for a time also, about 1835-36, officiated as editor of "The Gallatin Democrat," and "The Illinois Advertiser," published at Shawneetown. In 1846 Mr. Stickney was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly from Gallatin County, and, twenty-eight years later—having come to Chicago in 1848—to the same body from Cook County, serving in the somewhat famous Twenty-ninth Assembly. He also held the office of Police Justice for some thirteen years, from 1860 onward. He lived to an advanced age, dying in Chicago, Feb. 14, 1898, being at the time the oldest surviving member of the Chicago bar.

STILES, Isaac Newton, lawyer and soldier, born at Suffield, Conn., July 16, 1833; was admitted to the bar at Lafayette, Ind., in 1855, became Prosecuting Attorney, a member of the Legislature and an effective speaker in the Fremont campaign of 1856; enlisted as a private soldier at the beginning of the war, went to the field as Adjutant, was captured at Malvern Hill, and, after six weeks' confinement in Libby prison, exchanged and returned to duty; was promoted Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel, and brevetted Brigadier-General for meritorious service. After the war he practiced his profession in Chicago, though almost totally blind. Died, Jan. 18, 1895.

STILLMAN, Stephen, first State Senator from Sangamon County, Ill., was a native of Massachusetts who came, with his widowed mother, to Sangamon County in 1820, and settled near Williamsville, where he became the first Postmaster in the first postoffice in the State north of the Sangamon River. In 1822, Mr. Stillman was elected as the first State Senator from Sangamon County, serving four years, and, at his first session, being one of the opponents of the pro-slavery Convention resolution. He died, in Peoria, somewhere between 1835 and 1840.

STILLMAN VALLEY, village in Ogle County, on Chicago Great Western and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; site of first battle Black Hawk War; has graded schools, four churches, a bank and a newspaper. Pop., 475.

STITES, Samuel, pioneer, was born near Mount Bethel, Somerset County, N. J., Oct. 31, 1776; died, August 16, 1839, on his farm, which subsequently became the site of the city of Trenton, in Clinton County, Ill. He was descended from John Stites, M.D., who was born in England in 1595, emigrated to America, and died at Hempstead, L. I., in 1717, at the age of 122 years. The family removed to New Jersey in the latter part of the seventeenth century. Samuel was a cousin of Benjamin Stites, the first white man to settle within the present limits of Cincinnati, and various members of the family were prominent in the settlement of the upper Ohio Valley as early as 1788. Samuel Stites married, Sept. 14, 1794, Martha Martin, daughter of Ephraim Martin, and grand-daughter of Col. Ephraim Martin, both soldiers of the New Jersey line during the Revolutionary War—with the last named of whom he had (in connection with John Cleves Symmes) been intimately associated in the purchase and settlement of the Miami Valley. In 1800 he removed to Hamilton County, Ohio, in 1803 to Greene County, and, in 1818, in company with his son-in-law, Anthony Wayne Casad, to St. Clair County, Ill., settling near Union Grove. Later, he removed to O'Fallon, and, still later, to Clinton County. He left a large family, several members of which became prominent pioneers in the movements toward Minnesota and Kansas.

STOLBRAND, Carlos John Mueller, soldier, was born in Sweden, May 11, 1821; at the age of 18, enlisted in the Royal Artillery of his native land, serving through the campaign of Schleswig-Holstein (1848); came to the United States soon after, and, in 1861, enlisted in the first battalion of Illinois Light Artillery, finally becoming Chief of Artillery under Gen. John A. Logan. When the latter became commander of the Fifteenth Army Corps, Col. Stolbrand was placed at the head of the artillery brigade; in February, 1865, was made Brigadier-General, and mustered out in January, 1866. After the war he went South, and was Secretary of the South Carolina Constitutional Convention of 1868. The same year he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, and a Presidential Elector. He was an inventor and patented various improvements in steam engines and boilers; was also Superintendent of Public Buildings at Charleston, S. C., under President Harrison. Died, at Charleston, Feb. 3, 1894.

STONE, Daniel, early lawyer and legislator, was a native of Vermont and graduate of Middlebury College; became a member of the Springfield (Ill.) bar in 1833, and, in 1836, was elected to the General Assembly—being one of the celebrated "Long Nine" from Sangamon County, and joining Abraham Lincoln in his protest against a series of pro-slavery resolutions which had been adopted by the House. In 1837 he was a Circuit Court Judge and, being assigned to the northwestern part of the State, removed to Galena, but was legislated out of office, when he left the State, dying a few years later, in Essex County, N. J.

STONE, Horatio O., pioneer, was born in Ontario (now Monroe) County, N. Y., Jan. 2, 1811; in boyhood learned the trade of shoemaker, and later acted as overseer of laborers on the Lackawanna Canal. In 1831, having located in Wayne County, Mich., he was drafted for the Black Hawk War, serving twenty-two days under Gen. Jacob Brown. In January, 1835, he came to Chicago and, having made a fortunate speculation in real estate in that early day, a few months later entered upon the grocery and provision trade, which he afterwards extended to grain; finally giving his chief attention to real estate, in which he was remarkably successful, leaving a large fortune at his death, which occurred in Chicago, June 20, 1877.

STONE, (Rev.) Luther, Baptist clergyman, was born in the town of Oxford, Worcester County, Mass., Sept. 26, 1815, and spent his boyhood on a farm. After acquiring a common school education, he prepared for college at Leicester Academy, and, in 1835, entered Brown University, graduating in the class of 1839. He then spent three years at the Theological Institute at Newton, Mass.; was ordained to the ministry at Oxford, in 1843, but, coming west the next year, entered upon evangelical work in Rock Island, Davenport, Burlington and neighboring towns. Later, he was pastor of the First Baptist Church at Rockford, Ill. In 1847 Mr. Stone came to Chicago and established "The Watchman of the Prairies," which survives today under the name of "The Standard," and has become the leading Baptist organ in the West. After six years of editorial work, he took up evangelistic work in Chicago, among the poor and criminal classes. During the Civil War he conducted religious services at Camp Douglas, Soldiers' Rest and the Marine Hospital. He was associated in the conduct and promotion of many educational and charitable institutions. He did much for the First Baptist Church of Chicago, and, during the latter years of his life, was attached to the Immanuel Baptist Church, which he labored to establish. Died, in July, 1890.

STONE, Melville E., journalist, banker, Manager of Associated Press, born at Hudson, Ill., August 18, 1848. Coming to Chicago in 1860, he graduated from the local high school in 1867, and, in 1870, acquired the sole proprietorship of a foundry and machine shop. Finding himself without resources after the great fire of 1871, he embarked in journalism, rising, through the successive grades of reporter, city editor, assistant editor and Washington correspondent, to the position of editor-in-chief of his own journal.

He was connected with various Chicago dailies between 1871 and 1875, and, on Christmas Day of the latter year, issued the first number of "The Chicago Daily News." He gradually disposed of his interest in this journal, entirely severing his connection therewith in 1888. Since that date he has been engaged in banking in the city of Chicago, and is also General Manager of the Associated Press.

STONE, Samuel, philanthropist, was born at Chesterfield, Mass., Dec. 6, 1798; left an orphan at seven years of age, after a short term in Leicester Academy, and several years in a wholesale store in Boston, at the age of 19 removed to Rochester, N. Y., to take charge of interests in the "Holland Purchase," belonging to his father's estate; in 1843-49, was a resident of Detroit and interested in some of the early railroad enterprises centering there, but the latter year removed to Milwaukee, being there associated with Ezra Cornell in telegraph construction. In 1859 he became a citizen of Chicago, where he was one of the founders of the Chicago Historical Society, and a liberal patron of many enterprises of a public and benevolent character. Died, May 4, 1876.

STONE FORT, a village in the counties of Saline and Williamson. It is situated on the Cairo Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 57 miles northeast of Cairo. Population (1900), 479.

STOREY, Wilbur F., journalist and newspaper publisher, was born at Salisbury, Vt., Dec. 19, 1819. He began to learn the printer's trade at 12, and, before he was 19, was part owner of a Democratic paper called "The Herald," published at La Porte, Ind. Later, he either edited or controlled journals published at Mishawaka, Ind., and Jackson and Detroit, Mich. In January, 1861, he became the principal owner of "The Chicago Times," then the leading Democratic organ of Chicago. His paper soon came to be regarded as the organ of the anti-war party throughout the Northwest, and, in June, 1863, was suppressed by a military order issued by General Burnside, which was subsequently revoked by President Lincoln. The net result was an increase in "The Times'" notoriety and circulation. Other charges, of an equally grave nature, relating to its sources of income, its character as a family newspaper, etc., were repeatedly made, but to all these Mr. Storey turned a deaf ear. He lost heavily in the fire of 1871, but, in 1872, appeared as the editor of "The Times," then destitute of political ties. About 1876 his health began to decline. Medical aid failed to afford relief, and, in August, 1884, he was adjudged to be of unsound mind, and his estate was placed in the hands of a conservator. On the 27th of the following October (1884), he died at his home in Chicago.

STORRS, Emery Alexander, lawyer, was born at Hinsdale, Cattaraugus County, N. Y., August 12, 1835; began the study of law with his father, later pursued a legal course at Buffalo, and, in 1853, was admitted to the bar; spent two years (1857-59) in New York City, the latter year removing to Chicago, where he attained great prominence as an advocate at the bar, as well as an orator on other occasions. Politically a Republican, he took an active part in Presidential campaigns, being a delegate-at-large from Illinois to the National Republican Conventions of 1868, '72, and '80, and serving as one of the Vice-Presidents in 1872. Erratic in habits and a master of epigram and repartee, many of his speeches are quoted with relish and appreciation by those who were his contemporaries at the Chicago bar. Died suddenly, while in attendance on the Supreme Court at Ottawa, Sept. 12, 1885.

STRAWN, Jacob, agriculturist and stock-dealer, born in Somerset County, Pa., May 30, 1800; removed to Licking County, Ohio, in 1817, and to Illinois, in 1831, settling four miles southwest of Jacksonville. He was one of the first to demonstrate the possibilities of Illinois as a live-stock state. Unpretentious and despising mere show, he illustrated the virtues of industry, frugality and honesty. At his death—which occurred August 23, 1865—he left an estate estimated in value at about $1,000,000, acquired by industry and business enterprise. He was a zealous Unionist during the war, at one time contributing $10,000 to the Christian Commission.

STREATOR, a city (laid out in 1868 and incorporated in 1882) in the southern part of La Salle County, 93 miles southwest of Chicago; situated on the Vermilion River and a central point for five railroads. It is surrounded by a rich agricultural country, and is underlaid by coal seams (two of which are worked) and by shale and various clay products of value, adapted to the manufacture of fire and building-brick, drain-pipe, etc. The city is thoroughly modern, having gas, electric lighting, street railways, water-works, a good fire-department, and a large, improved public park. Churches and schools are numerous, as are also fine public and private buildings. One of the chief industries is the manufacture of glass, including rolled-plate, window-glass, flint and Bohemian ware and glass bottles. Other successful industries are foundries and machine shops, flour mills, and clay working establishments. There are several banks, and three daily and weekly papers are published here. The estimated property valuation, in 1884, was $12,000,000. Streator boasts some handsome public buildings, especially the Government post-office and the Carnegie public library building, both of which have been erected within the past few years. Pop. (1890), 11,414; (1900), 14,079.

STREET, Joseph M., pioneer and early politician, settled at Shawneetown about 1812, coming from Kentucky, though believed to have been a native of Eastern Virginia. In 1827 he was a Brigadier-General of militia, and appears to have been prominent in the affairs of that section of the State. His correspondence with Governor Edwards, about this time, shows him to have been a man of far more than ordinary education, with a good opinion of his merits and capabilities. He was a most persistent applicant for office, making urgent appeals to Governor Edwards, Henry Clay and other politicians in Kentucky, Virginia and Washington, on the ground of his poverty and large family. In 1827 he received the offer of the clerkship of the new county of Peoria, but, on visiting that region, was disgusted with the prospect; returning to Shawneetown, bought a farm in Sangamon County, but, before the close of the year, was appointed Indian Agent at Prairie du Chien. This was during the difficulties with the Winnebago Indians, upon which he made voluminous reports to the Secretary of War. Mr. Street was a son-in-law of Gen. Thomas Posey, a Revolutionary soldier, who was prominent in the early history of Indiana and its last Territorial Governor. (See Posey, (Gen.) Thomas.)

STREETER, Alson J., farmer and politician, was born in Rensselaer County, N. Y., in 1823; at the age of two years accompanied his father to Illinois, the family settling at Dixon, Lee County, He attended Knox College for three years, and, in 1849, went to California, where he spent two years in gold mining. Returning to Illinois, he purchased a farm of 240 acres near New Windsor, Mercer County, to which he has since added several thousand acres. In 1872 he was elected to the lower house of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly as a Democrat, but, in 1873, allied himself with the Greenback party, whose candidate for Congress he was in 1878, and for Governor in 1880, when he received nearly 3,000 votes more than his party's Presidential nominee, in Illinois. In 1884 he was elected State Senator by a coalition of Greenbackers and Democrats in the Twenty-fourth Senatorial District, but acted as an independent throughout his entire term.

STRONG, William Emerson, soldier, was born at Granville, N. Y., in 1840; from 13 years of age, spent his early life in Wisconsin, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Racine in 1861. The same year he enlisted under the first call for troops, took part, as Captain of a Wisconsin Company, in the first battle of Bull Run; was afterwards promoted and assigned to duty as Inspector-General in the West, participated in the Vicksburg and Atlanta campaigns, being finally advanced to the rank of Brigadier-General. After some fifteen months spent in the position of Inspector-General of the Freedmen's Bureau (1865-66), he located in Chicago, and became connected with several important business enterprises, besides assisting, as an officer on the staff of Governor Cullom, in the organization of the Illinois National Guard. He was elected on the first Board of Directors of the World's Columbian Exposition, and, while making a tour of Europe in the interest of that enterprise, died, at Florence, Italy, April 10, 1891.

STUART, John Todd, lawyer and Congressman, born near Lexington, Ky., Nov. 10, 1807—the son of Robert Stuart, a Presbyterian minister and Professor of Languages in Transylvania University, and related, on the maternal side, to the Todd family, of whom Mrs. Abraham Lincoln was a member. He graduated at Centre College, Danville, in 1826, and, after studying law, removed to Springfield, Ill., in 1828, and began practice. In 1832 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly, re-elected in 1834, and, in 1836, defeated, as the Whig candidate for Congress, by Wm. L. May, though elected, two years later, over Stephen A. Douglas, and again in 1840. In 1837, Abraham Lincoln, who had been studying law under Mr. Stuart's advice and instruction, became his partner, the relationship continuing until 1841. He served in the State Senate, 1849-53, was the Bell-Everett candidate for Governor in 1860, and was elected to Congress, as a Democrat, for a third time, in 1862, but, in 1864, was defeated by Shelby M. Cullom, his former pupil. During the latter years of his life, Mr. Stuart was head of the law firm of Stuart, Edwards & Brown. Died, at Springfield, Nov. 28, 1885.

STURGES, Solomon, merchant and banker, was born at Fairfield, Conn., April 21, 1796, early manifested a passion for the sea and, in 1810, made a voyage, on a vessel of which his brother was captain, from New York to Georgetown, D. C., intending to continue it to Lisbon. At Georgetown he was induced to accept a position as clerk with a Mr. Williams, where he was associated with two other youths, as fellow-employés, who became eminent bankers and capitalists—W. W. Corcoran, afterwards the well-known banker of Washington, and George W. Peabody, who had a successful banking career in England, and won a name as one of the most liberal and public-spirited of philanthropists. During the War of 1812 young Sturges joined a volunteer infantry company, where he had, for comrades, George W. Peabody and Francis S. Key, the latter author of the popular national song, "The Star Spangled Banner." In 1814 Mr. Sturges accepted a clerkship in the store of his brother-in-law, Ebenezer Buckingham, at Putnam, Muskingum County, Ohio, two years later becoming a partner in the concern, where he developed that business capacity which laid the foundation for his future wealth. Before steamers navigated the waters of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, he piloted flat-boats, loaded with produce and merchandise, to New Orleans, returning overland. During one of his visits to that city, he witnessed the arrival of the "Washington," the first steamer to descend the Mississippi, as, in 1817, he saw the arrival of the "Walk-in-the-Water" at Detroit, the first steamer to arrive from Buffalo—the occasion of his visit to Detroit being to carry funds to General Cass to pay off the United States troops. About 1849 he was associated with the construction of the Wabash & Erie Canal, from the Ohio River to Terre Haute, Ind., advancing money for the prosecution of the work, for which was reimbursed by the State. In 1854 he came to Chicago, and, in partnership with his brothers-in-law, C. P. and Alvah Buckingham, erected the first large grain-elevator in that city, on land leased from the Illinois Central Railroad Company, following it, two years later, by another of equal capacity. For a time, substantially all the grain coming into Chicago, by railroad, passed into these elevators. In 1857 he established the private banking house of Solomon Sturges & Sons, which, shortly after his death, under the management of his son, George Sturges, became the Northwestern National Bank of Chicago. He was intensely patriotic and, on the breaking out of the War of the Rebellion, used of his means freely in support of the Government, equipping the Sturges Rifles, an independent company, at a cost of $20,000. He was also a subscriber to the first loan made by the Government, during this period, taking $100,000 in Government bonds. While devoted to his business, he was a hater of shams and corruption, and contributed freely to Christian and benevolent enterprises. Died, at the home of a daughter, at Zanesville, Ohio, Oct. 14, 1864, leaving a large fortune acquired by legitimate trade.

STURTEVANT, Julian Munson, D.D., LL.D., clergyman and educator, was born at Warren, Litchfield County, Conn., July 26, 1805; spent his youth in Summit County, Ohio, meanwhile preparing for college; in 1822, entered Yale College as the classmate of the celebrated Elizur Wright, graduating in 1826. After two years as Principal of an academy at Canaan, Conn., he entered Yale Divinity School, graduating there in 1829; then came west, and, after spending a year in superintending the erection of buildings, in December, 1830, as sole tutor, began instruction to a class of nine pupils in what is now Illinois College, at Jacksonville. Having been joined, the following year, by Dr. Edward Beecher as President, Mr. Sturtevant assumed the chair of Mathematics, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy, which he retained until 1844, when, by the retirement of Dr. Beecher, he succeeded to the offices of President and Professor of Intellectual and Moral Philosophy. Here he labored, incessantly and unselfishly, as a teacher during term time, and, as financial agent during vacations, in the interest of the institution of which he had been one of the chief founders, serving until 1876, when he resigned the Presidency, giving his attention, for the next ten years, to the duties of Professor of Mental Science and Science of Government, which he had discharged from 1870. In 1886 he retired from the institution entirely, having given to its service fifty-six years of his life. In 1863, Dr. Sturtevant visited Europe in the interest of the Union cause, delivering effective addresses at a number of points in England. He was a frequent contributor to the weekly religious and periodical press, and was the author of "Economics, or the Science of Wealth" (1876) —a text-book on political economy, and "Keys of Sect, or the Church of the New Testament" (1879), besides frequently occupying the pulpits of local and distant churches—having been early ordained a Congregational minister. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of Missouri and that of LL.D. from Iowa University. Died, in Jacksonville, Feb. 11, 1886.—Julian M. (Sturtevant), Jr., son of the preceding, was born at Jacksonville, Ill., Feb. 2, 1834; fitted for college in the preparatory department of Illinois College and graduated from the college (proper) in 1854. After leaving college he served as teacher in the Jacksonville public schools one year, then spent a year as tutor in Illinois College, when he began the study of theology at Andover Theological Seminary, graduating there in 1859, meanwhile having discharged the duties of Chaplain of the Connecticut State's prison in 1858. He was ordained a minister of the Congregational Church at Hannibal, Mo., in 1860, remaining as pastor in that city nine years. He has since been engaged in pastoral work in New York City (1869-70), Ottawa, Ill., (1870-73); Denver, Colo., (1873-77); Grinnell, Iowa, (1877-84); Cleveland, Ohio, (1884-90); Galesburg, Ill., (1890-93), and Aurora, (1893-97). Since leaving the Congregational church at Aurora, Dr. Sturtevant has been engaged in pastoral work in Chicago. He was also editor of "The Congregationalist" of Iowa (1881-84), and, at different periods, has served as Trustee of Colorado, Marietta and Knox Colleges; being still an honored member of the Knox College Board. He received the degree of D.D. from Illinois College, in 1879.

SUBLETTE, a station and village on the Illinois Central Railroad, in Lee County, 8 miles northwest of Mendota. Population, (1900), 306.

SUFFRAGE, in general, the right or privilege of voting. The qualifications of electors (or voters), in the choice of public officers in Illinois, are fixed by the State Constitution (Art. VII.), except as to school officers, which are prescribed by law. Under the State Constitution the exercise of the right to vote is limited to persons who were electors at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1848, or who are native or naturalized male citizens of the United States, of the age of 21 years or over, who have been residents of the State one year, of the county ninety days, and of the district (or precinct) in which they offer to vote, 30 days. Under an act passed in 1891, women, of 21 years of age and upwards, are entitled to vote for school officers, and are also eligible to such offices under the same conditions, as to age and residence, as male citizens. (See Elections; Australian Ballot.)

SULLIVAN, a city and county-seat of Moultrie County, 25 miles southeast of Decatur and 14 miles northwest of Mattoon; is on three lines of railway. It is in an agricultural and stock-raising region; contains two State banks and four weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 1,305; (1890), 1,468; (1900), 2,399; (1900, est.), 3,100.

SULLIVAN, William K., journalist, was born at Waterford, Ireland, Nov. 10, 1843; educated at the Waterford Model School and in Dublin; came to the United States in 1863, and, after teaching for a time in Kane County, in 1864 enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers. Then, after a brief season spent in teaching and on a visit to his native land, he began work as a reporter on New York papers, later being employed on "The Chicago Tribune" and "The Evening Journal," on the latter, at different times, holding the position of city editor, managing editor and correspondent. He was also a Representative from Cook County in the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, for three years a member of the Chicago Board of Education, and appointed United States Consul to the Bermudas by President Harrison, resigning in 1892. Died, in Chicago, January 17, 1899.

SULLIVANT, Michael Lucas, agriculturist, was born at Franklinton (a suburb of Columbus, Ohio), August 6, 1807; was educated at Ohio University and Centre College, Ky., and—after being engaged in the improvement of an immense tract of land inherited from his father near his birth-place, devoting much attention, meanwhile, to the raising of improved stock—in 1854 sold his Ohio lands and bought 80,000 acres, chiefly in Champaign and Piatt Counties, Ill., where he began farming on a larger scale than before. The enterprise proved a financial failure, and he was finally compelled to sell a considerable portion of his estate in Champaign County, known as Broad Lands, to John T. Alexander (see Alexander, John T.), retiring to a farm of 40,000 acres at Burr Oaks, Ill. He died, at Henderson, Ky., Jan. 29, 1879.

SUMMERFIELD, a village of St. Clair County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 27 miles east of St. Louis; was the home of Gen. Fred. Hecker. Population (1900), 360.

SUMNER, a city of Lawrence County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 19 miles west of Vincennes, Ind.; has a fine school house, four churches, two banks, two flour mills, telephones, and one weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,037; (1900), 1,268.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION. The office of State Superintendent of Public Instruction was created by act of the Legislature, at a special session held in 1854, its duties previous to that time, from 1845, having been discharged by the Secretary of State as Superintendent, ex-officio. The following is a list of the incumbents from the date of the formal creation of the office down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each. Ninian W. Edwards (by appointment of the Governor), 1854-57; William H. Powell (by election), 1857-59; Newton Bateman, 1859-63; John P. Brooks, 1863-65; Newton Bateman, 1865-75; Samuel W. Etter, 1875-79; James P. Slade, 1879-83; Henry Raab, 1883-87; Richard Edwards, 1887-91; Henry Raab, 1891-95; Samuel M. Inglis, 1895-98; James H. Freeman, June, 1898, to January, 1899 (by appointment of the Governor, to fill the unexpired term of Prof. Inglis, who died in office, June 1, 1898); Alfred Baylis, 1899—.

Previous to 1870 the tenure of the office was two years, but, by the Constitution adopted that year, it was extended to four years, the elections occurring on the even years between those for Governor and other State officers except State Treasurer.

SUPREME COURT, JUDGES OF THE. The following is a list of Justices of the Supreme Court of Illinois who have held office since the organization of the State Government, with the period of their respective incumbencies: Joseph Phillips, 1818-22 (resigned); Thomas C. Browne, 1818 48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); William P. Foster, Oct. 9, 1818, to July 7, 1819 (resigned), John Reynolds, 1818-25; Thomas Reynolds (vice Phillips), 1822-25; William Wilson (vice Foster) 1819-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); Samuel D Lockwood, 1825-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); Theophilus W. Baker (appointed, vice Breese), July 9, 1878, to June 2, 1879—also, 1888-97; John H. Mulkey, 1879-88; Damon G. Tunnicliffe (appointed, vice Walker), Feb. 15, 1885, to June 1, 1885; Simeon P. Shope, 1885-94; Joseph M. Bailey, 1888-95 (died in office). The Supreme Court, as at present constituted (1899), is as follows: Carroll C. Boggs, elected, 1897; Jesse J. Phillips (vice Scholfield, deceased) elected, 1893, and re-elected, 1897; Jacob W. Wilkin, elected, 1888, and re-elected, 1897; Joseph N. Carter, elected, 1894; Alfred M. Craig, elected, 1873, and re-elected, 1882 and '91; James H. Cartwright (vice Bailey), elected, 1895, and re-elected, 1897; Benjamin D. Magruder (vice Dickey), elected, 1885, '88 and '97. The terms of Justices Boggs, Phillips, Wilkin, Cartwright and Magruder expire in 1906; that of Justice Carter on 1903; and Justice Craig's, in 1900. Under the Constitution of 1818, the Justices of the Supreme Court were chosen by joint ballot of the Legislature, but, under the Constitutions of 1848 and 1870, by popular vote for terms of nine years each. (See Judicial System; also sketches of individual members of the Supreme Court under their proper names.)

SURVEYS, EARLY GOVERNMENT. The first United States law passed on the subject of Government surveys was dated, May 20, 1785. After reserving certain lands to be allotted by way of pensions and to be donated for school purposes, it provided for the division of the remaining public lands among the original thirteen States. This, however, was, in effect, repealed by the Ordinance of 1788. The latter provided for a rectangular system of surveys which, with but little modification, has remained in force ever since. Briefly outlined, the system is as follows: Townships, six miles square, are laid out from principal bases, each township containing thirty-six sections of one square mile, numbered consecutively, the numeration to commence at the upper right hand corner of the township. The first principal meridian (84° 51′ west of Greenwich), coincided with the line dividing Indiana and Ohio. The second (1° 37′ farther west) had direct relation to surveys in Eastern Illinois. The third (89° 10′ 30″ west of Greenwich) and the fourth (90° 29′ 56″ west) governed the remainder of Illinois surveys. The first Public Surveyor was Thomas Hutchins, who was called "the geographer." (See Hutchins, Thomas.)

SWEET, (Gen.) Benjamin J., soldier, was born at Kirkland, Oneida County, N. Y., April 24, 1832; came with his father, in 1848, to Sheboygan, Wis., studied law, was elected to the State Senate in 1859, and, in 1861, enlisted in the Sixth Wisconsin Volunteers, being commissioned Major in 1862. Later, he resigned and, returning home, assisted in the organization of the Twenty-first and Twenty-second regiments, being elected Colonel of the former; and with it taking part in the campaign in Western Kentucky and Tennessee. In 1863 he was assigned to command at Camp Douglas, and was there on the exposure, in November, 1864, of the conspiracy to release the rebel prisoners. (See Camp Douglas Conspiracy.) The service which he rendered in the defeat of this bold and dangerous conspiracy evinced his courage and sagacity, and was of inestimable value to the country. After the war, General Sweet located at Lombard, near Chicago, was appointed Pension Agent at Chicago, afterwards served as Supervisor of Internal Revenue, and, in 1872, became Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington. Died, in Washington, Jan. 1, 1874. — Miss Ada C. (Sweet), for eight years (1874-82) the efficient Pension Agent at Chicago, is General Sweet's daughter.

SWEETSER, A. C., soldier and Department Commander G. A. R., was born in Oxford County, Maine, in 1839; came to Bloomington, Ill., in 1857; enlisted at the beginning of the Civil War in the Eighth Illinois Volunteers and, later, in the Thirty-ninth; at the battle of Wierbottom Church, Va., in June, 1864, was shot through both legs, necessitating the amputation of one of them. After the war he held several offices of trust, including those of City Collector of Bloomington and Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue for the Springfield District; in 1887 was elected Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for Illinois. Died, at Bloomington, March 23, 1896.

SWETT, Leonard, lawyer, was born near Turner, Maine, August 11, 1825; was educated at Waterville College (now Colby University), but left before graduation; read law in Portland, and, while seeking a location in the West, enlisted in an Indiana regiment for the Mexican War, being attacked by climatic fever, was discharged before completing his term of enlistment. He soon after came to Bloomington, Ill., where he became the intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln and David Davis, traveling the circuit with them for a number of years. He early became active in State politics, was a member of the Republican State Convention of 1856, was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly in 1858, and, in 1860, was a zealous supporter of Mr. Lincoln as a Presidential Elector for the State-at-large. In 1862 he received the Republican nomination for Congress in his District, but was defeated. Removing to Chicago in 1865, he gained increased distinction as a lawyer, especially in the management of criminal cases. In 1872 he was a supporter of Horace Greeley for President, but later returned to the Republican party, and, in the National Republican Convention of 1888, presented the name of Judge Gresham for nomination for the Presidency. Died, June 8, 1889.

SWIGERT, Charles Philip, ex-Auditor of Public Accounts, was born in the Province of Baden, Germany, Nov. 27, 1843, brought by his parents to Chicago, Ill., in childhood, and, in his boyhood, attended the Scammon School in that city. In 1854 his family removed to a farm in Kankakee County, where, between the ages of 12 and 18, he assisted his father in "breaking" between 400 and 500 acres of prairie land. On the breaking out of the war, in 1861, although scarcely 18 years of age, he enlisted as a private in the Forty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and, in April, 1862, was one of twenty heroic volunteers who ran the blockade, on the gunboat Carondelet, at Island No. 10, assisting materially in the reduction of that rebel stronghold, which resulted in the capture of 7,000 prisoners. At the battle of Farmington, Miss., during the siege of Corinth, in May, 1862, he had his right arm torn from its socket by a six-pound cannon-ball, compelling his retirement from the army. Returning home, after many weeks spent in hospital at Jefferson Barracks and Quincy, Ill., he received his final discharge, Dec. 21, 1862, spent a year in school, also took a course in Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College in Chicago, and having learned to write with his left hand, taught for a time in Kankakee County; served as letter-carrier in Chicago, and for a year as Deputy County Clerk of Kankakee County, followed by two terms (1867-69) as a student in the Soldiers' College at Fulton.

Ill. The latter year he entered upon the duties of Treasurer of Kankakee County, serving, by successive re-elections, until 1880, when he resigned to take the position of State Auditor, to which he was elected a second time in 1884. In all these positions Mr. Swigert has proved himself an upright, capable and high-minded public official. Of late years his residence has been in Chicago.

SWING, (Rev.) David, clergyman and pulpit orator, was born of German ancestry, at Cincinnati, Ohio, August 23, 1836. After 1837 (his father dying about this time), the family resided for a time at Reedsburgh, and, later, on a farm near Williamsburgh, in Clermont County, in the same State. In 1852, having graduated from the Miami (Ohio) University, he commenced the study of theology, but, in 1854, accepted the position of Professor of Languages in his Alma Mater, which he continued to fill for thirteen years. His first pastorate was in connection with the Westminster Presbyterian Church of Chicago, which he assumed in 1866. His church edifice was destroyed in the great Chicago fire, but was later rebuilt. As a preacher he was popular; but, in April, 1874, he was placed on trial, before an ecclesiastical court of his own denomination, on charges of heresy. He was acquitted by the trial court, but, before the appeal taken by the prosecution could be heard, he personally withdrew from affiliation with the denomination. Shortly afterward he became pastor of an independent religious organization known as the "Central Church," preaching, first at McVicker's Theatre and, afterward, at Central Music Hall, Chicago. He was a fluent and popular speaker on all themes, a frequent and valued contributor to numerous magazines, as well as the author of several volumes. Among his best known books are "Motives of Life," "Truths for To-day," and "Club Essays." Died, in Chicago, Oct. 3, 1894.

SYCAMORE, the county-seat of De Kalb County (founded in 1836), 56 miles west of Chicago, at the intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago Great Western Railroads; lies in a region devoted to agriculture, dairying and stock-raising. The city itself contains several factories, the principal products being agricultural implements, flour, insulated wire, brick, tile, varnish, furniture, soap and carriages and wagons. There are also works for canning vegetables and fruit, besides two creameries. The town is lighted by electricity, and has high-pressure water-works. There are eleven churches, three graded public schools and a young ladies' seminary. Population (1880), 3,028; (1890), 2,987; (1900), 3,653.

TAFT, Lorado, sculptor, was born at Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill., April 29, 1860; at an early age evinced a predilection for sculpture and began modeling; graduated at the University of Illinois in 1880, then went to Paris and studied sculpture in the famous Ecole des Beaux Arts until 1885. The following year he settled in Chicago, finally becoming associated with the Chicago Art Institute. He has been a lecturer on art in the Chicago University. Mr. Taft furnished the decorations of the Horticultural Building on the World's Fair Grounds, in 1893.

TALCOTT, Mancel, business man, was born in Rome, N. Y., Oct. 12, 1817; attended the common schools until 17 years of age, when he set out for the West, traveling on foot from Detroit to Chicago, and thence to Park Ridge, where he worked at farming until 1850. Then, having followed the occupation of a miner for some time, in California, with some success, he united with Horace M. Singer in establishing the firm of Singer & Talcott, stone-dealers, which lasted during most of his life. He served as a member of the Chicago City Council, on the Board of County Commissioners, as a member of the Police Board, and was one of the founders of the First National Bank, and President, for several years, of the Stock Yards National Bank. Liberal and public-spirited, he contributed freely to works of charity. Died, June 5, 1878.

TALCOTT, (Capt.) William, soldier of the War of 1812 and pioneer, was born in Gilead, Conn., March 6, 1774; emigrated to Rome, Oneida County, N. Y., in 1810, and engaged in farming; served as a Lieutenant in the Oneida County militia during the War of 1812-14, being stationed at Sackett's Harbor under the command of Gen. Winfield Scott. In 1835, in company with his eldest son, Thomas B. Talcott, he made an extended tour through the West, finally selecting a location in Illinois at the junction of Rock River and the Pecatonica, where the town of Rockton now stands—there being only two white families, at that time, within the present limits of Winnebago County. Two years later (1837), he brought his family to this point, with his sons took up a considerable body of Government land and erected two mills, to which customers came from a long distance. In 1838 Captain Talcott took part in the organization of the first Congregational Church in that section of the State. A zealous anti-slavery man, he supported James G.

Birney (the Liberty candidate for President) in 1844, continuing to act with that party until the organization of the Republican party in 1856; was deeply interested in the War for the Union, but died before its conclusion, Sept. 2, 1864.—Maj. Thomas B. (Talcott), oldest son of the preceding, was born at Hebron, Conn , April 17, 1806; was taken to Rome, N. Y., by his father in infancy, and, after reaching maturity, engaged in mercantile business with his brother in Chemung County; in 1835 accompanied his father in a tour through the West, finally locating at Rockton, where he engaged in agriculture. On the organization of Winnebago County, in 1836, he was elected one of the first County Commissioners, and, in 1850, to the State Senate, serving four years. He also held various local offices. Died, Sept. 30, 1894.—Hon. Wait (Talcott), second son of Capt. William Talcott, was born at Hebron, Conn., Oct. 17, 1807, and taken to Rome, N. Y., where he remained until his 19th year, when he engaged in business at Booneville and, still later, in Utica; in 1838, removed to Illinois and joined his father at Rockton, finally becoming a citizen of Rockford, where, in his later years, he was extensively engaged in manufacturing, having become, in 1854, with his brother Sylvester, a partner of the firm of J. H. Manny & Co., in the manufacture of the Manny reaper and mower. He was an original anti-slavery man and, at one time, a Free-Soil candidate for Congress, but became a zealous Republican and ardent friend of Abraham Lincoln, whom he employed as an attorney in the famous suit of McCormick vs. the Manny Reaper Company for infringement of patent. In 1854 he was elected to the State Senate, succeeding his brother, Thomas B., and was the first Collector of Internal Revenue in the Second District, appointed by Mr. Lincoln in 1862, and continuing in office some five years. Though too old for active service in the field, during the Civil War, he voluntarily hired a substitute to take his place. Mr. Talcott was one of the original incorporators and Trustees of Beloit College, and a founder of Rockford Female Seminary, remaining a trustee of each for many years. Died, June 7, 1890.—Sylvester (Talcott), third son of William Talcott, born at Rome, N. Y., Oct. 14, 1810; when of age, engaged in mercantile business in Chemung County; in 1837 removed, with other members of the family, to Winnebago County, Ill., where he joined his father in the entry of Government lands and the erection of mills, as already detailed. He became one of the first Justices of the Peace in Winnebago County, also served as Supervisor for a number of years and, although a farmer, became interested, in 1854, with his brother Wait, in the Manny Reaper Company at Rockford. He also followed the example of his brother, just named, in furnishing a substitute for the War of the Rebellion, though too old for service himself. Died, June 19, 1885.—Henry Walter (Talcott), fourth son of William Talcott, was born at Rome, N. Y., Feb. 13, 1814; came with his father to Winnebago County, Ill., in 1835, and was connected with his father and brothers in business. Died, Dec. 9, 1870.—Dwight Lewis (Talcott), oldest son of Henry Walter Talcott, born in Winnebago County; at the age of 17 years enlisted at Belvidere, in January, 1864, as a soldier in the Ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; served as provost guard some two months at Fort Pickering, near Memphis, and later took part in many of the important battles of that year in Mississippi and Tennessee. Having been captured at Campbellsville, Tenn., he was taken to Andersonville, Ga., where he suffered all the horrors of that famous prison-pen, until March, 1865, when he was released, arriving at home a helpless skeleton, the day after Abraham Lincoln's assassination. Mr. Talcott subsequently settled in Muscatine County, Iowa.

TALLULA, a prosperous village of Menard County, on the Jacksonville branch of the Chicago & Alton Railway, 24 miles northeast of Jacksonville; is in the midst of a grain, coal-mining, and stock-growing region; has a local bank and newspaper. Pop. (1890), 445; (1900), 639.

TAMAROA, a village in Perry County, situated at the junction of the Illinois Central with the Wabash, Chester & Western Railroad, 8 miles north of Duquoin, and 57 miles east-southeast of Belleville. It has a bank, a newspaper office, a large public school, five churches and two flouring mills. Coal is mined here and exported in large quantities. Pop. (1900), 853.

TAMAROA & MOUNT VERNON RAILROAD. (See Wabash, Chester & Western Railroad.)

TANNER, Edward Allen, clergyman and educator, was born of New England ancestry, at Waverly, Ill., Nov. 29, 1837—being the first child who could claim nativity there; was educated in the local schools and at Illinois College, graduating from the latter in 1857; spent four years teaching in his native place and at Jacksonville; then accepted the Professorship of Latin in Pacific University at Portland, Oregon, remaining four years, when he returned to his Alma Mater (1865), assuming there the chair of Latin and Rhetoric. In 1881 he was appointed financial agent of the latter institution, and, in 1882, its President. While in Oregon he had been ordained a minister of the Congregational Church, and, for a considerable period during his connection with Illinois College, officiated as Chaplain of the Central Hospital for the Insane at Jacksonville, besides supplying local and other pulpits. He labored earnestly for the benefit of the institution under his charge, and, during his incumbency, added materially to its endowment and resources. Died, at Jacksonville, Feb. 8, 1892.

TANNER, John R., Governor, was born in Warrick County, Ind., April 4, 1844, and brought to Southern Illinois in boyhood, where he grew up on a farm in the vicinity of Carbondale, enjoying only such educational advantages as were afforded by the common school; in 1863, at the age of 19, enlisted in the Ninety-eighth Illinois Volunteers, serving until June, 1865, when he was transferred to the Sixty-first, and finally mustered out in September following. All the male members of Governor Tanner's family were soldiers of the late war, his father dying in a rebel prison at Columbus, Miss., one of his brothers suffering the same fate from wounds at Nashville, Tenn., and another brother dying in hospital at Pine Bluff, Ark. Only one of this patriotic family, besides Governor Tanner, still survives—Mr. J. M. Tanner of Clay County, who left the service with the rank of Lieutenant of the Thirteenth Illinois Cavalry. Returning from the war, Mr. Tanner established himself in business as a farmer in Clay County, later engaging successfully in the milling and lumber business as the partner of his brother. The public positions held by him, since the war, include those of Sheriff of Clay County (1870-72), Clerk of the Circuit Court (1872-76), and State Senator (1880-83). During the latter year he received the appointment of United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, serving until after the accession of President Cleveland in 1885. In 1886, he was the Republican nominee for State Treasurer and was elected by an unusually large majority; in 1891 was appointed, by Governor Fifer, a member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, but, in 1892, received the appointment of Assistant United States Treasurer at Chicago, continuing in the latter office until December, 1893. For ten years (1874-84) he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee, returning to that body in 1894, when he was chosen Chairman and conducted the campaign which resulted in the unprecedented Republican successes of that year. In 1896 he received the nomination of his party for Governor, and was elected over Gov. John P. Altgeld, his Democratic opponent, by a plurality of over 113,000, and a majority, over all, of nearly 90,000 votes.

TANNER, Tazewell B., jurist, was born in Henry County, Va., and came to Jefferson County, Ill., about 1846 or '47, at first taking a position as teacher and Superintendent of Public Schools. Later, he was connected with "The Jeffersonian," a Democratic paper at Mount Vernon, and, in 1849, went to the gold regions of California, meeting with reasonable success as a miner. Returning in a year or two, he was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, and, while in the discharge of his duties, prosecuted the study of law, finally, on admission to the bar, entering into partnership with the late Col. Thomas S. Casey. In 1854 he was elected Representative in the Nineteenth General Assembly, and was instrumental in securing the appropriation for the erection of a Supreme Court building at Mount Vernon. In 1862 he served as a Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of that year; was elected Circuit Judge in 1873, and, in 1877, was assigned to duty on the Appellate bench, but, at the expiration of his term, declined a re-election and resumed the practice of his profession at Mount Vernon. Died, March 25, 1880.

TAXATION, in its legal sense, the mode of raising revenue. In its general sense its purposes are the support of the State and local governments, the promotion of the public good by fostering education and works of public improvement, the protection of society by the preservation of order and the punishment of crime, and the support of the helpless and destitute. In practice, and as prescribed by the Constitution, the raising of revenue is required to be done "by levying a tax by valuation, so that every person and corporation shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his, her or its property—such value to be ascertained by some person or persons, to be elected or appointed in such manner as the General Assembly shall direct, and not otherwise." (State Constitution, 1870—Art. Revenue, Sec. 1.) The person selected under the law to make this valuation is the Assessor of the county or the township (in counties under township organization), and he is required to make a return to the County Board at its July meeting each year—the latter having authority to hear complaints of taxpayers and adjust inequalities when found to exist. It is made the duty of the Assessor to include in his return, as real-estate, all lands and the buildings or other improvements erected thereon; and, under the head of personal property, all tangible effects, besides moneys, credits, bonds or stocks, shares of stock of companies or corporations, investments, annuities, franchises, royalties, etc. Property used for school, church or cemetery purposes, as well as public buildings and other property belonging to the State and General Government, municipalities, public charities, public libraries, agricultural and scientific societies, are declared exempt. Nominally, all property subject to taxation is required to be assessed at its cash valuation; but, in reality, the valuation, of late years, has been on a basis of twenty-five to thirty-three per cent of its estimated cash value. In the larger cities, however, the valuation is often much lower than this, while very large amounts escape assessment altogether. The Revenue Act, passed at the special session of the Fortieth General Assembly (1898), requires the Assessor to make a return of all property subject to taxation in his district, at its cash valuation, upon which a Board of Review fixes a tax on the basis of twenty per cent of such cash valuation. An abstract of the property assessment of each county goes before the State Board of Equalization, at its annual meeting in August, for the purpose of comparison and equalizing valuations between counties, but the Board has no power to modify the assessments of individual tax-payers. (See State Board of Equalization.) This Board has exclusive power to fix the valuation for purposes of taxation of the capital stock or franchises of companies (except certain specified manufacturing corporations), incorporated under the State laws, together with the "railroad track" and "rolling stock" of railroads, and the capital stock of railroads and telegraph lines, and to fix the distribution of the latter between counties in which they lie.—The Constitution of 1848 empowered the Legislature to impose a capitation tax, of not less than fifty cents nor more than one dollar, upon each free white male citizen entitled to the right of suffrage, between the ages of 21 and 60 years, but the Constitution of 1870 grants no such power, though it authorizes the extension of the "objects and subjects of taxation" in accordance with the principle contained in the first section of the Revenue Article.—Special assessments in cities, for the construction of sewers, pavements, etc., being local and in the form of benefits, cannot be said to come under the head of general taxation. The same is to be said of revenue derived from fines and penalties, which are forms of punishment for specific offenses, and go to the benefit of certain specified funds.

TAYLOR, Abner, ex-Congressman, is a native of Maine, and a resident of Chicago. He has been in active business all his life as contractor, builder and merchant, and, for some time, a member of the wholesale dry-goods firm of J. V. Farwell & Co., of Chicago. He was a member of the Thirty-fourth General Assembly, a delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1884, and represented the First Illinois District in the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses, 1889 to 1893. Mr. Taylor was one of the contractors for the erection of the new State Capitol of Texas.

TAYLOR, Benjamin Franklin, journalist, poet and lecturer, was born at Lowville, N. Y., July 19, 1819; graduated at Madison University in 1839, the next year becoming literary and dramatic critic of "The Chicago Evening Journal." Here, in a few years, he acquired a wide reputation as a journalist and poet, and was much in demand as a lecturer on literary topics. His letters from the field during the Rebellion, as war correspondent of "The Evening Journal," won for him even a greater popularity, and were complimented by translation into more than one European language. After the war, he gave his attention more unreservedly to literature, his principal works appearing after that date. His publications in book form, including both prose and poetry, comprise the following: "Attractions of Language" (1845); "January and June" (1853); "Pictures in Camp and Field" (1871); "The World on Wheels" (1873); "Old Time Pictures and Sheaves of Rhyme" (1874); "Songs of Yesterday" (1877); "Summer Savory Gleaned from Rural Nooks" (1879); "Between the Gates" —pictures of California life—(1881); "Dulce Domum, the Burden of Song" (1884), and "Theophilus Trent, or Old Times in the Oak Openings," a novel (1887). The last was in the hands of the publishers at his death, Feb. 27, 1887. Among his most popular poems are "The Isle of the Long Ago," "The Old Village Choir," and "Rhymes of the River." "The London Times" complimented Mr. Taylor with the title of "The Oliver Goldsmith of America."

TAYLOR, Edmund Dick, early Indian-trader and legislator, was born at Fairfield C. H., Va., Oct. 18, 1802—the son of a commissary in the army of the Revolution, under General Greene, and a cousin of General (later, President) Zachary Taylor; left his native State in his youth and, at an early day, came to Springfield, Ill., where he opened an Indian-trading post and general store; was elected from Sangamon County to the lower branch of the Seventh General Assembly (1830) and re-elected in 1832—the latter year being a competitor of Abraham Lincoln, whom he defeated. In 1834 he was elected to the State Senate and, at the next session of the Legislature, was one of the celebrated "Long Nine" who secured the removal of the State Capital to Springfield. He resigned before the close of his term to accept, from President Jackson, the appointment of Receiver of Public Moneys at Chicago. Here he became one of the promoters of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (1837), serving as one of the Commissioners to secure subscriptions of stock, and was also active in advocating the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. The title of "Colonel," by which he was known during most of his life, was acquired by service, with that rank, on the staff of Gov. John Reynolds, during the Black Hawk War of 1832. After coming to Chicago, Colonel Taylor became one of the Trustees of the Chicago branch of the State Bank, and was later identified with various banking enterprises, as also a somewhat extensive operator in real estate. An active Democrat in the early part of his career in Illinois, Colonel Taylor was one of the members of his party to take ground against the Kansas-Nebraska bill in 1854, and advocated the election of General Bissell to the governorship in 1856. In 1860 he was again in line with his party in support of Senator Douglas for the Presidency, and was an opponent of the war policy of the Government still later, as shown by his participation in the celebrated "Peace Convention" at Springfield, of June 17, 1863. In the latter years of his life he became extensively interested in coal lands in La Salle and adjoining counties, and, for a considerable time, served as President of the Northern Illinois Coal & Mining Company, his home, during a part of this period, being at Mendota. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 4, 1891.

TAYLORVILLE, a city and county-seat of Christian County, on the South Fork of the Sangamon River and on the Wabash Railway at its point of intersection with the Springfield Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern. It is about 27 miles southeast of Springfield, and 28 miles southwest of Decatur. It has several banks, flour mills, paper mill, electric light and gas plants, water-works, two coal mines, carriage and wagon shops, a manufactory of farming implements, two daily and weekly papers, nine churches and five graded and township high schools. Much coal is mined in this vicinity. Pop. (1890), 2,839; (1900), 4,248.

TAZEWELL COUNTY, a central county on the Illinois River; was first settled in 1823 and organized in 1827; has an area of 650 square miles —was named for Governor Tazewell of Virginia. It is drained by the Illinois and Mackinaw Rivers and traversed by several lines of railway. The surface is generally level, the soil alluvial and rich, but, requiring drainage, especially on the river bottoms. Gravel, coal and sandstone are found, but, generally speaking, Tazewell is an agricultural county. The cereals are extensively cultivated; wool is also clipped, and there are dairy interests of some importance. Distilling is extensively conducted at Pekin, the county-seat, which is also the seat of other mechanical industries. (See also Pekin.) Population of the county (1880), 29,666; (1890), 29,556; (1900), 33,221.

TEMPLE, John Taylor, M.D., early Chicago physician, born in Virginia in 1804, graduated in medicine at Middlebury College, Vt., in 1830, and, in 1833, arrived in Chicago. At this time he had a contract for carrying the United States mail from Chicago to Fort Howard, near Green Bay, and the following year undertook a similar contract between Chicago and Ottawa. Having sold these out three years later, he devoted his attention to the practice of his profession, though interested, for a time, in contracts for the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. Dr. Temple was instrumental in erecting the first house (after Rev. Jesse Walker's missionary station at Wolf Point), for public religious worship in Chicago, and, although himself a Baptist, it was used in common by Protestant denominations. He was a member of the first Board of Trustees of Rush Medical College, though he later became a convert to homeopathy, and finally, removing to St. Louis, assisted in founding the St. Louis School of Homeopathy, dying there, Feb. 24, 1877.

TENURE OF OFFICE. (See Elections.)

TERRE HAUTE, ALTON & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad.)

TERRE HAUTE & ALTON RAILROAD (See St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad.)

TERRE HAUTE & INDIANAPOLIS RAILROAD, a corporation operating no line of its own within the State, but the lessee and operator of the following lines (which see): St. Louis, Vandalia & Terre Haute, 158.3 miles; Terre Haute & Peoria, 145.12 miles; East St. Louis & Carondelet, 12.74 miles—total length of leased lines in Illinois, 316.16 miles. The Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad was incorporated in Indiana in 1847, as the Terre Haute & Richmond, completed a line between the points named in the title, in 1852, and took its present name in 1866. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company purchased a controlling interest in its stock in 1893.

TERRE HAUTE & PEORIA RAILROAD, (Vandalia Line), a line of road extending from Terre Haute, Ind., to Peoria, Ill., 145.12 miles, with 28.78 miles of trackage, making in all 173.9 miles in operation, all being in Illinois—operated by the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company. The gauge is standard, and the rails are steel. (HISTORY.) It was organized Feb. 7, 1887, successor to the Illinois Midland Railroad. The latter was made up by the consolidation (Nov. 4, 1874) of three lines: (1) The Peoria, Atlanta & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1869 and opened in 1874; (2) the Paris & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1861 and opened in December, 1872; and (3) the Paris & Terre Haute Railroad, chartered in 1873 and opened in 1874 — the consolidated lines assuming the name of the Illinois Midland Railroad. In 1886 the Illinois Midland was sold under foreclosure and, in February, 1887, reorganized as the Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad. In 1892 it was leased for ninety-nine years to the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company, and is operated as a part of the "Vandalia System." The capital stock (1898) was $3,764,200; funded debt, $2,230,000,—total capital invested, $6,227,481.

TEUTOPOLIS, a village of Effingham County, on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, 4 miles east of Effingham; was originally settled by a colony of Germans from Cincinnati. Population (1900), 498.

THOMAS, Horace H., lawyer and legislator, was born in Vermont, Dec. 18, 1831, graduated at Middlebury College, and, after admission to the bar, removed to Chicago, where he commenced practice. At the outbreak of the rebellion he enlisted and was commissioned Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army of the Ohio. At the close of the war he took up his residence in Tennessee, serving as Quartermaster upon the staff of Governor Brownlow. In 1867 he returned to Chicago and resumed practice. He was elected a Representative in the Legislature in 1878 and re-elected in 1880, being chosen Speaker of the House during his latter term. In 1888 he was elected State Senator from the Sixth District, serving during the sessions of the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh General Assemblies. In 1897, General Thomas was appointed United States Appraiser in connection with the Custom House in Chicago.

THOMAS, Jesse Burgess, jurist and United States Senator, was born at Hagerstown, Md., claiming direct descent from Lord Baltimore. Taken west in childhood, he grew to manhood and settled at Lawrenceburg, Indiana Territory, in 1803; in 1805 was Speaker of the Territorial Legislature and, later, represented the Territory as Delegate in Congress. On the organization of Illinois Territory (which he had favored), he removed to Kaskaskia, was appointed one of the first Judges for the new Territory, and, in 1818, as Delegate from St. Clair County, presided over the first State Constitutional Convention, and, on the admission of the State, became one of the first United States Senators—Governor Edwards being his colleague. Though an avowed advocate of slavery, he gained no little prominence as the author of the celebrated "Missouri Compromise," adopted in 1820. He was re-elected to the Senate in 1823, serving until 1829. He subsequently removed to Mount Vernon, Ohio, where he died by suicide, May 4, 1853.—Jesse Burgess (Thomas), Jr., nephew of the United States Senator of the same name, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, July 31, 1806, was educated at Transylvania University, and, being admitted to the bar, located at Edwardsville, Ill. He first appeared in connection with public affairs as Secretary of the State Senate in 1830, being re-elected in 1832; in 1834 was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Madison County, but, in February following, was appointed Attorney-General, serving only one year. He afterwards held the position of Circuit Judge (1837-39), his home being then in Springfield; in 1843 he became Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, by appointment of the Governor, as successor to Stephen A. Douglas, and was afterwards elected to the same office by the Legislature, remaining until 1848. During a part of his professional career he was the partner of David Prickett and William L. May, at Springfield, and afterwards a member of the Galena bar, finally removing to Chicago, where he died, Feb. 21, 1850.—Jesse B. (Thomas) third, clergyman and son of the last named; born at Edwardsville, Ill., July 29, 1832; educated at Kenyon College, Ohio, and Rochester (N. Y.) Theological Seminary; practiced law for a time in Chicago, but finally entered the Baptist ministry, serving churches at Waukegan, Ill., Brooklyn, N. Y., and San Francisco (1862-69). He then became pastor of the Michigan Avenue Baptist Church, in Chicago, remaining until 1874, when he returned to Brooklyn. In 1887 he became Professor of Biblical History in the Theological Seminary at Newton, Mass., where he has since resided. He is the author of several volumes, and, in 1866, received the degree of D.D. from the old University of Chicago.

THOMAS, John, pioneer and soldier of the Black Hawk War, was born in Wythe County, Va., Jan. 11, 1800. At the age of 18 he accompanied his parents to St. Clair County, Ill., where the family located in what was then called the Alexander settlement, near the present site of Shiloh. When he was 22 he rented a farm (although he had not enough money to buy a horse) and married. Six years later he bought and stocked a farm, and, from that time forward, rapidly accumulated real property, until he became one of the most extensive owners of farming land in St. Clair County. In early life he was fond of military exercise, holding various offices in local organizations and serving as a Colonel in the Black Hawk War. In 1824 he was one of the leaders of the party opposed to the amendment of the State Constitution to sanction slavery, was a zealous opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska bill in 1854, and a firm supporter of the Republican party from the date of its formation. He was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly in 1838, '62, '64, '72 and '74; and to the State Senate in 1878, serving four years in the latter body. Died, at Belleville, Dec. 16, 1894, in the 95th year of his age.

THOMAS, John R., ex-Congressman, was born at Mount Vernon, Ill., Oct. 11, 1846. He served in the Union Army during the War of the Rebellion, rising from the ranks to a captaincy. After his return home he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1869. From 1872 to 1876 he was State's Attorney, and, from 1879 to 1889, represented his District in Congress. In 1897, Mr. Thomas was appointed by President McKinley an additional United States District Judge for Indian Territory. His home is now at Vanita, in that Territory.

THOMAS, William, pioneer lawyer and legislator, was born in what is now Allen County, Ky., Nov. 22, 1802; received a rudimentary education, and served as deputy of his father (who was Sheriff), and afterwards of the County Clerk; studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1823; in 1826 removed to Jacksonville, Ill., where he taught school, served as a private in the Winnebago War (1827), and at the session of 1828-29, reported the proceedings of the General Assembly for "The Vandalia Intelligencer"; was State's Attorney and School Commissioner of Morgan County; served as Quartermaster and Commissary in the Black Hawk War (1831-32), first under Gen. Joseph Duncan and, a year later, under General Whiteside; in 1839 was appointed Circuit Judge, but legislated out of office two years later. It was as a member of the Legislature, however, that he gained the greatest prominence, first as State Senator in 1834-40, and Representative in 1846-48 and 1850-52, when he was especially influential in the legislation which resulted in establishing the institutions for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind, and the Hospital for the Insane (the first in the State) at Jacksonville—serving, for a time, as a member of the Board of Trustees of the latter. He was also prominent in connection with many enterprises of a local character, including the establishment of the Illinois Female College, to which, although without children of his own, he was a liberal contributor. During the first year of the war he was a member of the Board of Army Auditors by appointment of Governor Yates. Died, at Jacksonville, August 22, 1889.

THORNTON, Anthony, jurist, was born in Bourbon County, Ky., Nov. 9, 1814—being descended from a Virginia family. After the usual primary instruction in the common schools, he spent two years in a high school at Gallatin, Tenn., when he entered Centre College at Danville, Ky., afterwards continuing his studies at Miami University, Ohio, where he graduated in 1834. Having studied law with an uncle at Paris, Ky., he was licensed to practice in 1836, when he left his native State with a view to settling in Missouri, but, visiting his uncle, Gen. William F. Thornton, at Shelbyville, Ill., was induced to establish himself in practice there. He served as a member of the State Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1862, and as Representative in the Seventeenth General Assembly (1850-52) for Shelby County. In 1864 he was elected to the Thirty-ninth Congress, and, in 1870, to the Illinois Supreme Court, but served only until 1873, when he resigned. In 1879 Judge Thornton removed to Decatur, Ill., but subsequently returned to Shelbyville, where (1898) he now resides.

THORNTON, William Fitzhugh, Commissioner of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, was born in Hanover County, Va., Oct. 4, 1789; in 1806, went to Alexandria, Va., where he conducted a drug business for a time, also acting as associate editor of "The Alexandria Gazette." Subsequently removing to Washington City, he conducted a paper there in the interest of John Quincy Adams for the Presidency. During the War of 1812-14 he served as a Captain of cavalry, and, for a time, as staff-officer of General Winder. On occasion of the visit of Marquis La Fayette to America (1824-25) he accompanied the distinguished Frenchman from Baltimore to Richmond. In 1829 he removed to Kentucky, and, in 1833, to Shelbyville, Ill., where he soon after engaged in mercantile business, to which he added a banking and brokerage business in 1859, with which he was actively associated until his death. In 1836, he was appointed, by Governor Duncan, one of the Commissioners of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, serving as President of the Board until 1842. In 1840, he made a visit to London, as financial agent of the State, in the interest of the Canal, and succeeded in making a sale of bonds to the amount of $1,000,000 on what were then considered favorable terms. General Thornton was an ardent Whig until the organization of the Republican party, when he became a Democrat. Died, at Shelbyville, Oct. 21, 1873.

TILLSON, John, pioneer, was born at Halifax, Mass., March 13, 1796; came to Illinois in 1819, locating at Hillsboro, Montgomery County, where he became a prominent and enterprising operator in real estate, doing a large business for eastern parties; was one of the founders of Hillsboro Academy and an influential and liberal friend of Illinois College, being a Trustee of the latter from its establishment until his death; was supported in the Legislature of 1827 for State Treasurer, but defeated by James Hall. Died, at Peoria, May 11, 1853.—Christiana Holmes (Tillson), wife of the preceding, was born at Kingston, Mass., Oct. 10, 1798; married to John Tillson in 1822, and immediately came to Illinois to reside; was a woman of rare culture and refinement, and deeply interested in benevolent enterprises. Died, in New York City, May 29, 1872.—Charles Holmes (Tillson), son of John and Christiana Holmes Tillson, was born at Hillsboro, Ill., Sept. 15, 1823; educated at Hillsboro Academy and Illinois College, graduating from the latter in 1844; studied law in St. Louis and at Transylvania University, was admitted to the bar in St. Louis and practiced there some years—also served several terms in the City Council, and was a member of the National Guard of Missouri in the War of the Rebellion. Died, Nov. 25, 1865.—John (Tillson), Jr., another son, was born at Hillsboro, Ill., Oct. 12, 1825; educated at Hillsboro Academy and Illinois College, but did not graduate from the latter; graduated from Transylvania Law School, Ky., in 1847, and was admitted to the bar at Quincy, Ill., the same year; practiced two years at Galena, when he returned to Quincy. In 1861 he enlisted in the Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, became its Lieutenant-Colonel, on the promotion of Col. J. D. Morgan to Brigadier-General, was advanced to the colonelcy, and, in July, 1865, was mustered out with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General; for two years later held a commission as Captain in the regular army. During a portion of 1869-70 he was editor of "The Quincy Whig"; in 1873 was elected Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly to succeed Nehemiah Bushnell, who had died in office, and, during the same year, was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Quincy District, serving until 1881. Died, August 6, 1892.

TILLSON, Robert, pioneer, was born in Halifax County, Mass., August 12, 1800; came to Illinois in 1822, and was employed, for several years, as a clerk in the land agency of his brother, John Tillson, at Hillsboro. In 1826 he engaged in the mercantile business with Charles Holmes, Jr., in St. Louis, but, in 1828, removed to Quincy, Ill., where he opened the first general store in that city; also served as Postmaster for some ten years. During this period he built the first two-story frame building erected in Quincy, up to that date. Retiring from the mercantile business in 1840 he engaged in real estate, ultimately becoming the proprietor of considerable property of this character; was also a contractor for furnishing cavalry accouterments to the Government during the war. Soon after the war he erected one of the handsomest business blocks existing in the city at that time. Died, in Quincy, Dec. 27, 1892.

TINCHER, John L., banker, was born in Kentucky in 1821; brought by his parents to Vermilion County, Ind., in 1829, and left an orphan at 17; attended school in Coles County, Ill., and was employed as clerk in a store at Danville, 1843-53. He then became a member of the firm of Tincher & English, merchants, later establishing a bank, which became the First National Bank of Danville. In 1864 Mr. Tincher was elected Representative in the Twenty-fourth General Assembly and, two years later, to the Senate, being re-elected in 1870. He was also a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Died, in Springfield, Dec. 17, 1871, while in attendance on the adjourned session of that year.

TIPTON, Thomas F., lawyer and jurist, was born in Franklin County, Ohio, August 29, 1833; has been a resident of McLean County, Ill., from the age of 10 years, his present home being at Bloomington. He was admitted to the bar in 1857, and, from January, 1867, to December, 1868, was State's Attorney for the Eighth Judicial Circuit. In 1870 he was elected Judge of the same circuit, and under the new Constitution, was chosen Judge of the new Fourteenth Circuit. From 1877 to 1879 he represented the (then) Thirteenth Illinois District in Congress, but, in 1878, was defeated by Adlai E. Stevenson, the Democratic nominee. In 1891 he was re-elected to a seat on the Circuit bench for the Bloomington Circuit, but resumed practice at the expiration of his term in 1897.

TISKILWA, a village of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, 7 miles southwest of Princeton; has creameries and cheese factories, churches, school, library, waterworks, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 965.

TODD, (Col.) John, soldier, was born in Montgomery County, Pa., in 1750; took part in the battle of Point Pleasant, Va., in 1774, as Adjutant-General of General Lewis; settled as a lawyer at Fincastle, Va., and, in 1775, removed to Fayette County, Ky., the next year locating near Lexington. He was one of the first two Delegates from Kentucky County to the Virginia House of Burgesses, and, in 1778, accompanied Col. George Rogers Clark on his expedition against Kaskaskia and Vincennes. In December, 1778, he was appointed by Gov. Patrick Henry, Lieutenant-Commandant of Illinois County, embracing the region northwest of the Ohio River, serving two years; in 1780, was again a member of the Virginia Legislature, where he procured grants of land for public schools and introduced a bill for negro-emancipation. He was killed by Indians, at the battle of Blue Licks, Ky., August 19, 1782.

TODD, (Dr.) John, physician, born near Lexington, Ky., April 27, 1787, was one of the earliest graduates of Transylvania University, also graduating at the Medical University of Philadelphia; was appointed Surgeon-General of Kentucky troops in the War of 1812, and captured at the battle of River Raisin. Returning to Lexington after his release, he practiced there and at Bardstown, removed to Edwardsville, Ill., in 1817, and, in 1827, to Springfield, where he had been appointed Register of the Land Office by President John Quincy Adams, but was removed by Jackson in 1829. Dr. Todd continued to reside at Springfield until his death, which occurred, Jan. 9, 1865. He was a grandson of John Todd, who was appointed Commandant of Illinois County by Gov. Patrick Henry in 1778, and an uncle of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln.—John Blair Smith (Todd), son of the preceding, was born at Lexington, Ky., April 4, 1814; came with his father to Illinois in 1817; graduated at the United States Military Academy in 1837, serving afterwards in the Florida and Mexican wars and on the frontier; resigned, and was an Indian-trader in Dakota, 1856-61; the latter year, took his seat as a Delegate in Congress from Dakota, then served as Brigadier-General of Volunteers, 1861-62; was again Delegate in Congress in 1863-65, Speaker of the Dakota Legislature in 1867, and Governor of the Territory, 1869-71. Died, at Yankton City, Jan. 5, 1872.

TOLEDO, a village and the county-seat of Cumberland County, on the Illinois Central Railroad; founded in 1854; has five churches, a graded school, two banks, creamery, flour mill, elevator, and two weekly newspapers. There are no manufactories, the leading industry in the surrounding country being agriculture. Pop. (1890), 676; (1900), 818.

TOLEDO, CINCINNATI & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD. (See Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WARSAW RAILROAD. (See Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WESTERN RAILROAD. (See Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WESTERN RAILWAY, a line of railroad wholly within the State of Illinois, extending from Effner, at the Indiana State line, west to the Mississippi River at Warsaw. The length of the whole line is 230.7 miles, owned entirely by the company. It is made up of a division from Effner to Peoria (110.9 miles)—which is practically an air-line throughout nearly its entire length—and the Peoria and Warsaw Division (108.8 miles) with branches from La Harpe to Iowa Junction (10.4 miles) and 0.6 of a mile connecting with the Keokuk bridge at Hamilton.—(HISTORY.) The original charter for this line was granted, in 1863, under the name of the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railroad; the main line was completed in 1868, and the La Harpe & Iowa Junction branch in 1873. Default was made in 1873, the road sold under foreclosure, in 1880, and reorganized as the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, and the line leased for 49¼ years to the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company. The latter defaulted in July, 1884, and, a year later, the Toledo, Peoria & Western was transferred to trustees for the first mortgage bond-holders, was sold under foreclosure in October, 1886, and, in March, 1887, the present company, under the name of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway Company, was organized for the purpose of taking over the property. In 1893 the Pennsylvania Railroad Company obtained a controlling interest in the stock, and, in 1894, an agreement, for joint ownership and management, was entered into between that corporation and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. The total capitalization, in 1898, was $9,712,433, of which $4,076,900 was in stock and $4,895,000 in bonds.

TOLEDO, ST. LOUIS & KANSAS CITY RAILROAD. This line crosses the State in a northeast direction from East St. Louis to Humrick, near the Indiana State line, with Toledo as its eastern terminus. The length of the entire line is 450.72 miles, of which 179½ miles are operated in Illinois.—(HISTORY.) The Illinois portion of the line grew out of the union of charters granted to the Tuscola, Charleston & Vincennes and the Charleston, Neoga & St. Louis Railroad Companies, which were consolidated in 1881 with certain Indiana lines under the name of the Toledo, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railroad. During 1882 a narrow-gauge road was constructed from Ridge Farm, in Vermilion County, to East St. Louis (172 miles). In 1885 this was sold under foreclosure and, in June, 1886, consolidated with the main line under the name of the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad. The whole line was changed to standard gauge in 1887-89, and otherwise materially improved, but, in 1893, went into the hands of receivers. Plans of reorganization have been under consideration, but the receivers were still in control in 1898.

TOLEDO, WABASH & WESTERN RAILROAD. (See Wabash Railroad.)

TOLONO, a city in Champaign County, situated at the intersection of the Wabash and the Illinois Central Railroads, 9 miles south of Champaign and 37 miles east-northeast of Decatur. It is the business center of a prosperous agricultural region. The town has five churches, a graded school, a bank, a button factory, and a weekly newspaper. Population (1880), 905; (1890), 902; (1900), 845.

TONICA, a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois Central Railway, 9 miles south of La Salle; the district is agricultural, but the place has some manufactures and a newspaper. Population (1890), 473; (1900), 497.

TONTY, Chevalier Henry de, explorer and soldier, born at Gaeta, Italy, about 1650 What is now known as the Tontine system of insurance undoubtedly originated with his father. The younger Tonty was adventurous, and, even as a youth, took part in numerous land and naval encounters. In the course of his experience he lost a hand, which was replaced by an iron or copper substitute. He embarked with La Salle in 1678, and aided in the construction of a fort at Niagara. He advanced into the country of the Illinois and established friendly relations with them, only to witness the defeat of his putative savage allies by the Iroquois. After various encounters (chiefly under the direction of La Salle) with the Indians in Illinois, he returned to Green Bay in 1681. The same year—under La Salle's orders—he began the erection of Fort St. Louis, on what is now called "Starved Rock" in La Salle County. In 1682 he descended the Mississippi to its mouth, with La Salle, but was ordered back to Mackinaw for assistance. In 1684 he returned to Illinois and successfully repulsed the Iroquois from Fort St. Louis. In 1686 he again descended the Mississippi in search of La Salle. Disheartened by the death of his commander and the loss of his early comrades, he took up his residence with the Illinois Indians. Among them he was found by Iberville in 1700, as a hunter and fur-trader. He died, in Mobile, in September, 1704. He was La Salle's most efficient coadjutor, and next to his ill-fated leader, did more than any other of the early French explorers to make Illinois known to the civilized world.

TOPOGRAPHY. Illinois is, generally speaking, an elevated table-land. If low water at Cairo be adopted as the maximum depression, and the summits of the two ridges hereinafter mentioned as the highest points of elevation, the altitude of this table land above the sea-level varies from 300 to 850 feet, the mean elevation being about 600 feet. The State has no mountain chains, and its few hills are probably the result of unequal denudation during the drift epoch. In some localities, particularly in the valley of the upper Mississippi, the streams have cut channels from 200 to 300 feet deep through the nearly horizontal strata, and here are found precipitous scarps, but, for the most part, the fundamental rocks are covered by a thick layer of detrital material. In the northwest there is a broken tract of uneven ground; the central portion of the State is almost wholly flat prairie, and, in the alluvial lands in the State, there are many deep valleys, eroded by the action of streams. The surface generally slopes toward the south and southwest, but the uniformity is broken by two ridges, which cross the State, one in either extremity. The northern ridge crosses the Rock River at Grand Detour and the Illinois at Split Rock, with an extreme altitude of 800 to 850 feet above sea-level, though the altitude of Mount Morris, in Ogle County, exceeds 900 feet. That in the south consists of a range of hills in the latitude of Jonesboro, and extending from Shawneetown to Grand Tower. These hills are also about 800 feet above the level of the ocean. The highest point in the State is in Jo Daviess County, just south of the Wisconsin State line (near Scale's Mound) reaching an elevation of 1,257 feet above sea-level, while the highest in the south is in the northeast corner of Pope County—1,046 feet—a spur of the Ozark mountains. The following statistics regarding elevations are taken from a report of Prof. C. W. Rolfe, of the University of Illinois, based on observations made under the auspices of the Illinois Board of World's Fair Commissioners: The lowest gauge of the Ohio river, at its mouth (above sea-level), is 268.58 feet, and the mean level of Lake Michigan at Chicago 581.28 feet. The altitudes of a few prominent points are as follows: Highest point in Jackson County, 695 feet; "Bald Knob" in Union County, 985; highest point in Cook County (Barrington), 818; in La Salle County (Mendota), 747; in Livingston (Strawn), 770; in Will (Monee), 804; in Pike (Arden), 790; in Lake (Lake Zurich), 880; in Bureau, 910; in Boone, 1,010; in Lee (Carnahan), 1,017; in Stephenson (Waddam's Grove), 1,018; in Kane (Briar Hill), 974; in Winnebago, 985. The elevations of important towns are: Peoria, 465; Jacksonville, 602; Springfield, 596; Galesburg, 755; Joliet, 537; Rockford, 728; Bloomington, 821. Outside of the immediate valleys of the streams, and a few isolated groves or copses, little timber is found in the northern and central portions of the State, and such growth as there is, lacks the thriftiness characteristic of the forests in the Ohio valley. These forests cover a belt extending some sixty miles north of Cairo, and, while they generally include few coniferous trees, they abound in various species of oak, black and white walnut, white and yellow poplar, ash, elm, sugar-maple, linden, honey locust, cottonwood, mulberry, sycamore, pecan, persimmon, and (in the immediate valley of the Ohio) the cypress. From a commercial point of view, Illinois loses nothing through the lack of timber over three-fourths of the State's area. Chicago is an accessible market for the product of the forests of the upper lakes, so that the supply of lumber is ample, while extensive coal-fields supply abundant fuel. The rich soil of the prairies, with its abundance of organic matter (see Geological Formations), more than compensates for the want of pine forests, whose soil is ill adapted to agriculture. About two-thirds of the entire boundary of the State consists of navigable waters. These, with their tributary streams, ensure sufficient drainage.

TORRENS LAND TITLE SYSTEM. A system for the registration of titles to, and incumbrances upon, land, as well as transfers thereof, intended to remove all unnecessary obstructions to the cheap, simple and safe sale, acquisition and transfer of realty. The system has been in successful operation in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and British Columbia for many years, and it is also in force in some States in the American Union. An act providing for its introduction into Illinois was first passed by the Twenty-ninth General Assembly, and approved, June 13, 1895. The final legislation in reference thereto was enacted by the succeeding Legislature, and was approved, May 1, 1897. It is far more elaborate in its consideration of details, and is believed to be, in many respects, much better adapted to accomplish the ends in view, than was the original act of 1895. The law is applicable only to counties of the first and second class, and can be adopted in no county except by a vote of a majority of the qualified voters of the same—the vote "for" or "against" to be taken at either the November or April elections, or at an election for the choice of Judges. Thus far the only county to adopt the system has been Cook, and there it encountered strong opposition on the part of certain parties of influence and wealth. After its adoption, a test case was brought, raising the question of the constitutionality of the act. The issue was taken to the Supreme Court, which tribunal finally upheld the law.—The Torrens system substitutes a certificate of registration and of transfer for the more elaborate deeds and mortgages in use for centuries. Under it there can be no actual transfer of a title until the same is entered upon the public land register, kept in the office of the Registrar, in which case the deed or mortgage becomes a mere power of attorney to authorize the transfer to be made, upon the principle of an ordinary stock transfer, or of the registration of a United States bond, the actual transfer and public notice thereof being simultaneous. A brief synopsis of the provisions of the Illinois statute is given below: Recorders of deeds are made Registrars, and required to give bonds of either $50,000 or $200,000, according to the population of the county. Any person or corporation, having an interest in land, may make application to any court having chancery jurisdiction, to have his title thereto registered. Such application must be in writing, signed and verified by oath, and must conform, in matters of specification and detail, with the requirements of the act. The court may refer the application to one of the standing examiners appointed by the Registrar, who are required to be competent attorneys and to give bond to examine into the title, as well as the truth of the applicant's statements. Immediately upon the filing of the application, notice thereof is given by the clerk, through publication and the issuance of a summons to be served, as in other proceedings in chancery, against all persons mentioned in the petition as having or claiming any interest in the property described. Any person interested, whether named as a defendant or not, may enter an appearance within the time allowed. A failure to enter an appearance is regarded as a confession by default. The court, in passing upon the application, is in no case bound by the examiner's report, but may require other and further proof; and, in its final adjudication, passes upon all questions of title and incumbrance, directing the Registrar to register the title in the party in whom it is to be vested, and making provision as to the manner and order in which incumbrances thereon shall appear upon the certificate to be issued. An appeal may be allowed to the Supreme Court, if prayed at the time of entering the decree, upon like terms as in other cases in chancery; and a writ of error may be sued out from that tribunal within two years after the entry of the order or decree. The period last mentioned may be said to be the statutory period of limitation, after which the decree of the court must be regarded as final, although safeguards are provided for those who may have been defrauded, and for a few other classes of persons. Upon the filing of the order or decree of the court, it becomes the duty of the Registrar to issue a certificate of title, the form of which is prescribed by the act, making such notations at the end as shall show and preserve the priorities of all estates, mortgages, incumbrances and changes to which the owner's title is subject. For the purpose of preserving evidence of the owner's handwriting, a receipt for the certificate, duly witnessed or acknowledged, is required of him, which is preserved in the Registrar's office. In case any registered owner should desire to transfer the whole or any part of his estate, or any interest therein, he is required to execute a conveyance to the transferee, which, together with the certificate of title last issued, must be surrendered to the Registrar. That official thereupon issues a new certificate, stamping the word "cancelled" across the surrendered certificate, as well as upon the corresponding entry in his books of record. When land is first brought within the operation of the act, the receiver of the certificate of title is required to pay to the Registrar one-tenth of one per cent of the value of the land, the aggregate so received to be deposited with and invested by the County Treasurer, and reserved as an indemnity fund for the reimbursement of persons sustaining any loss through any omission, mistake or malfeasance of the Registrar or his subordinates. The advantage claimed for the Torrens system is, chiefly, that titles registered thereunder can be dealt with more safely, quickly and inexpensively than under the old system; it being possible to close the entire transaction within an hour or two, without the need of an abstract of title, while (as the law is administered in Cook County) the cost of transfer is only $3. It is asserted that a title, once registered, can be dealt with almost as quickly and cheaply, and quite as safely, as shares of stock or registered bonds.

TOULON, the county-seat of Stark County, on the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad, 37 miles north-northwest of Peoria, and 11 miles southeast of Galva. Besides the county court-house, the town has five churches and a high school, an academy, steam granite works, two banks, and two weekly papers. Population (1880), 967; (1890), 945; (1900), 1,057.

TOWER HILL, a village of Shelby County, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroads, 7 miles east of Pana; has bank, grain elevators, and coal mine. Pop. (1900), 615.

TOWNSHEND, Richard W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Prince George's County, Md., April 30, 1840. Between the ages of 10 and 18 he attended public and private schools at Washington, D. C. In 1858 he came to Illinois, where he began teaching, at the same time reading law with S. S. Marshall, at McLeansboro, where he was admitted to the bar in 1862, and where he began practice. From 1863 to 1868 he was Circuit Clerk of Hamilton County, and, from 1868 to 1872, Prosecuting Attorney for the Twelfth Judicial Circuit. In 1873 he removed to Shawneetown, where he became an officer of the Gallatin National Bank. From 1864 to 1875 he was a member of the Democratic State Central Committee, and a delegate to the National Democratic Convention at Baltimore, in 1872. For twelve years (1877 to 1889) he represented his District in Congress; was re-elected in 1888, but died, March 9, 1889, a few days after the beginning of his seventh term.

TRACY, John M., artist, was born in Illinois about 1842; served in an Illinois regiment during the Civil War; studied painting in Paris in 1866-76; established himself as a portrait painter in St. Louis and, later, won a high reputation as a painter of animals, being regarded as an authority on the anatomy of the horse and the dog. Died, at Ocean Springs, Miss., March 20, 1893.

TREASURERS. (See State Treasurers.)

TREAT, Samuel Hubbel, lawyer and jurist, was born at Plainfield, Otsego County, N. Y., June 21, 1811, worked on his father's farm and studied law at Richfield, where he was admitted to practice. In 1834 he came to Springfield, Ill., traveling most of the way on foot. Here he formed a partnership with George Forquer, who had held the offices of Secretary of State and Attorney-General. In 1839 he was appointed a Circuit Judge, and, on the reorganization of the Supreme Court in 1841, was elevated to the Supreme bench, being acting Chief Justice at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1848. Having been elected to the Supreme bench under the new Constitution, he remained in office until March, 1855, when he resigned to take the position of Judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois, to which he had been appointed by President Pierce. This position he continued to occupy until his death, which occurred at Springfield, March 27, 1887. Judge Treat's judicial career was one of the longest in the history of the State, covering a period of forty-eight years, of which fourteen were spent upon the Supreme bench, and thirty-two in the position of Judge of the United States District Court.

TREATIES. (See Greenville, Treaty of; Indian Treaties.)

TREE, Lambert, jurist, diplomat and ex-Congressman, was born in Washington, D. C., Nov. 29, 1832, of an ancestry distinguished in the War of the Revolution. He received a superior classical and professional education, and was admitted to the bar, at Washington, in October, 1855. Removing to Chicago soon afterward, his professional career has been chiefly connected with that city. In 1864 he was chosen President of the Law Institute, and served as Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, from 1870 to 1875, when he resigned. The three following years he spent in foreign travel, returning to Chicago in 1878. In that year, and again in 1880, he was the Democratic candidate for Congress from the Fourth Illinois District, but was defeated by his Republican opponent. In 1885 he was the candidate of his party for United States Senator, but was defeated by John A. Logan, by one vote. In 1884 he was a member of the National Democratic Convention which first nominated Grover Cleveland, and, in July, 1885, President Cleveland appointed him Minister to Belgium, conferring the Russian mission upon him in September, 1888. On March 3, 1889, he resigned this post and returned home. In 1890 he was appointed by President Harrison a Commissioner to the International Monetary Conference at Washington. The year before he had attended (although not as a delegate) the International Conference, at Brussels, looking to the suppression of the slave-trade, where he exerted all his influence on the side of humanity. In 1892 Belgium conferred upon him the distinction of "Councillor of Honor" upon its commission to the World's Columbian Exposition. In 1896 Judge Tree was one of the most earnest opponents of the free-silver policy, and, after the Spanish-American War, a zealous advocate of the policy of retaining the territory acquired from Spain.

TREMONT, a town of Tazewell County, on the Peoria Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 9 miles southeast of Pekin; has two banks, two telephone exchanges, and one newspaper. Pop. (1900), 768.

TRENTON, a town of Clinton County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 31 miles east of St. Louis; in agricultural district; has creamery, milk condensery, two coal mines, six churches, a public school and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,384; (1900), 1,706; (1904), about 2,000.

TROY, a village of Madison County, on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis railroad, 21 miles northeast of St. Louis; has churches, a bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,080.

TRUITT, James Madison, lawyer and soldier, a native of Trimble County, Ky., was born Feb. 12, 1842, but lived in Illinois since 1843, his father having settled near Carrollton that year; was educated at Hillsboro and at McKendree College; enlisted in the One Hundred and Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers in 1862, and was promoted from the ranks to Lieutenant. After the war he studied law with Jesse J. Phillips, now of the Supreme Court, and, in 1872, was elected to the Twenty-eighth General Assembly, and, in 1888, a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. Mr. Truitt has been twice a prominent but unsuccessful candidate for the Republican nomination for Attorney-General. His home is at Hillsboro, where he is engaged in the practice of his profession. Died July 26, 1900.

TRUMBULL, Lyman, statesman, was born at Colchester, Conn., Oct. 12, 1813, descended from a historical family, being a grand-nephew of Gov. Jonathan Trumbull, of Connecticut, from whom the name "Brother Jonathan" was derived as an appellation for Americans. Having received an academic education in his native town, at the age of 16 he began teaching a district school near his home, went South four years later, and engaged in teaching at Greenville, Ga. Here he studied law with Judge Hiram Warner, afterwards of the Supreme Court, and was admitted to the bar in 1837. Leaving Georgia the same year, he came to Illinois on horseback, visiting Vandalia, Belleville, Jacksonville, Springfield, Tremont and La Salle, and finally reaching Chicago, then a village of four or five thousand inhabitants. At Jacksonville he obtained a license to practice from Judge Lockwood, and, after visiting Michigan and his native State, he settled at Belleville, which continued to be his home for twenty years. His entrance into public life began with his election as Representative in the General Assembly in 1840. This was followed, in February, 1841, by his appointment by Governor Carlin, Secretary of State, as the successor of Stephen A. Douglas, who, after holding the position only two months, had resigned to accept a seat on the Supreme bench. Here he remained two years, when he was removed by Governor Ford, March 4, 1843, but, five years later (1848), was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, was re-elected in 1852, but resigned in 1853 on account of impaired health. A year later (1854) he was elected to Congress from the Belleville District as an anti-Nebraska Democrat, but, before taking his seat, was promoted to the United States Senate, as the successor of General Shields in the memorable contest of 1855, which resulted in the defeat of Abraham Lincoln. Senator Trumbull's career of eighteen years in the United States Senate (being re-elected in 1861 and 1867) is one of the most memorable in the history of that body, covering, as it does, the whole history of the war for the Union, and the period of reconstruction which followed it. During this period, as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Judiciary, he had more to do in shaping legislation on war and reconstruction measures than any other single member of that body. While he disagreed with a large majority of his Republican associates on the question of Andrew Johnson's impeachment, he was always found in sympathy with them on the vital questions affecting the war and restoration of the Union. The Civil Rights Bill and Freedmen's Bureau Bills were shaped by his hand. In 1872 he joined in the "Liberal Republican" movement and afterwards co-operated with the Democratic party, being their candidate for Governor in 1880. From 1863 his home was in Chicago, where, after retiring from the Senate, he continued in the practice of his profession until his death, which occurred in that city, June 25, 1896.

TUG MILLS. These were a sort of primitive machine used in grinding corn in Territorial and early State days. The mechanism consisted of an upright shaft, into the upper end of which were fastened bars, resembling those in the capstan of a ship. Into the outer end of each of these bars was driven a pin. A belt, made of a broad strip of ox-hide, twisted into a sort of rope, was stretched around these pins and wrapped twice around a circular piece of wood called a trundle head, through which passed a perpendicular flat bar of iron, which turned the mill-stone, usually about eighteen inches in diameter. From the upright shaft projected a beam, to which were hitched one or two horses, which furnished the motive power. Oxen were sometimes employed as motive power in lieu of horses. These rudimentary contrivances were capable of grinding about twelve bushels of corn, each, per day.

TULEY, Murray Floyd, lawyer and jurist, was born at Louisville, Ky., March 4, 1827, of English extraction and descended from the early settlers of Virginia. His father died in 1832, and, eleven years later, his mother, having married Col. Richard J. Hamilton, for many years a prominent lawyer of Chicago, removed with her family to that city. Young Tuley began reading law with his step-father and completed his studies at the Louisville Law Institute in 1847, the same year being admitted to the bar in Chicago. About the same time he enlisted in the Fifth Illinois Volunteers for service in the Mexican War, and was commissioned First Lieutenant. The war having ended, he settled at Santa Fe, N. M., where he practiced law, also served as Attorney-General and in the Territorial Legislature. Returning to Chicago in 1854, he was associated in practice, successively, with Andrew Harvie, Judge Gary and J. N. Barker, and finally as head of the firm of Tuley, Stiles & Lewis. From 1869 to 1873 he was Corporation Counsel, and during this time framed the General Incorporation Act for Cities, under which the City of Chicago was reincorporated. In 1879 he was elevated to the bench of the Circuit Court of Cook County, and re-elected every six years thereafter, his last election being in 1897. He is now serving his fourth term, some ten years of his incumbency having been spent in the capacity of Chief Justice.

TUNNICLIFFE, Damon G., lawyer and jurist, was born in Herkimer County, N. Y., August 20, 1829; at the age of 20, emigrated to Illinois, settling in Vermont, Fulton County, where, for a time, he was engaged in mercantile pursuits. He subsequently studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1853. In 1854 he established himself at Macomb, McDonough County, where he built up a large and lucrative practice. In 1868 he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket, and, from February to June, 1885, by appointment of Governor Oglesby, occupied a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court, vice Pinkney H. Walker, deceased, who had been one of his first professional preceptors.

TURCHIN, John Basil (Ivan Vasilevitch Turchinoff), soldier, engineer and author, was born in Russia, Jan. 30, 1822. He graduated from the artillery school at St. Petersburg, in 1841, and was commissioned ensign; participated in the Hungarian campaign of 1849, and, in 1852, was assigned to the staff of the Imperial Guards; served through the Crimean War, rising to the rank of Colonel, and being made senior staff officer of the active corps. In 1856 he came to this country, settling in Chicago, and, for five years, was in the service of the Illinois Central Railway Company as topographical engineer. In 1861 he was commissioned Colonel of the Nineteenth Illinois Volunteers, and, after leading his regiment in Missouri, Kentucky and Alabama, was, on July 7, 1862, promoted to a Brigadier-Generalship, being attached to the Army of the Cumberland until 1864, when he resigned. After the war he was, for six years, solicitor of patents at Chicago, but, in 1873, returned to engineering. In 1879 he established a Polish colony at Radom, in Washington County, in this State, and settled as a farmer. He is an occasional contributor to the press, writing usually on military or scientific subjects, and is the author of the "Campaign and Battle of Chickamauga" (Chicago, 1888).

TURNER (now WEST CHICAGO), a town and manufacturing center in Winfield Township, Du Page County, 30 miles west of Chicago, at the junction of two divisions of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroads. The town has a rolling-mill, manufactories of wagons and pumps, and railroad repair shops. It also has five churches, a graded school, and two newspapers. Pop. (1900), 1,877; with suburb, 2,270.

TURNER, (Col.) Henry L., soldier and real-estate operator, was born at Oberlin, Ohio, August 26, 1845, and received a part of his education in the college there. During the Civil War he served as First Lieutenant in the One Hundred and Fiftieth Ohio Volunteers, and later, with the same rank in a colored regiment, taking part in the operations about Richmond, the capture of Fort Fisher, of Wilmington and of Gen. Joe Johnston's army. Coming to Chicago after the close of the war, he became connected with the business office of "The Advance," but later was employed in the banking house of Jay Cooke & Co., in Philadelphia. On the failure of that concern, in 1872, he returned to Chicago and bought "The Advance," which he conducted some two years, when he sold out and engaged in the real estate business, with which he has since been identified—being President of the Chicago Real Estate Board in 1888. He has also been President of the Western Publishing Company and a Trustee of Oberlin College. Colonel Turner is an enthusiastic member of the Illinois National Guard and, on the declaration of war between the United States and Spain, in April, 1898, promptly resumed his connection with the First Regiment of the Guard, and finally led it to Santiago de Cuba during the fighting there—his regiment being the only one from Illinois to see actual service in the field during the progress of the war. Colonel Turner won the admiration of his command and the entire nation by the manner in which he discharged his duty. The regiment was mustered out at Chicago, Nov. 17, 1898, when he retired to private life.

TURNER, John Bice, Railway President, was born at Colchester, Delaware County, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1799; after a brief business career in his native State, he became identified with the construction and operation of railroads. Among the works with which he was thus connected, were the Delaware Division of the New York & Erie and the Troy & Schenectady Roads. In 1843 he came to Chicago, having previously purchased a large body of land at Blue Island. In 1847 he joined with W. B. Ogden and others, in resuscitating the Galena & Chicago Union Railway, which had been incorporated in 1836. He became President of the Company in 1850, and assisted in constructing various sections of road in Northern Illinois and Wisconsin, which have since become portions of the Chicago & Northwestern system. He was also one of the original Directors of the North Side Street Railway Company, organized in 1859. Died, Feb. 26, 1871.

TURNER, Jonathan Baldwin, educator and agriculturist, was born in Templeton, Mass., Dec. 7, 1805; grew up on a farm and, before reaching his majority, began teaching in a country school. After spending a short time in an academy at Salem, in 1827 he entered the preparatory department of Yale College, supporting himself, in part, by manual labor and teaching in a gymnasium. In 1829 he matriculated in the classical department at Yale, graduated in 1833, and the same year accepted a position as tutor in Illinois College at Jacksonville, Ill., which had been opened, three years previous, by the late Dr. J. M. Sturtevant. In the next fourteen years he gave instruction in nearly every branch embraced in the college curriculum, though holding, during most of this period, the chair of Rhetoric and English Literature. In 1847 he retired from college duties to give attention to scientific agriculture, in which he had always manifested a deep interest. The cultivation and sale of the Osage orange as a hedge-plant now occupied his attention for many years, and its successful introduction in Illinois and other Western States—where the absence of timber rendered some substitute a necessity for fencing purposes—was largely due to his efforts. At the same time he took a deep interest in the cause of practical scientific education for the industrial classes, and, about 1850, began formulating that system of industrial education which, after twelve years of labor and agitation, he had the satisfaction of seeing recognized in the act adopted by Congress, and approved by President Lincoln, in July, 1862, making liberal donations of public lands for the establishment of "Industrial Colleges" in the several States, out of which grew the University of Illinois at Champaign. While Professor Turner had zealous colaborers in this field, in Illinois and elsewhere, to him, more than to any other single man in the Nation, belongs the credit for this magnificent achievement. (See Education, and University of Illinois.) He was also one of the chief factors in founding and building up the Illinois State Teachers' Association, and the State Agricultural and Horticultural Societies. His address on "The Millennium of Labor," delivered at the first State Agricultural Fair at Springfield, in 1853, is still remembered as marking an era in industrial progress in Illinois. A zealous champion of free thought, in both political and religious affairs, he long bore the reproach which attached to the radical Abolitionist, only to enjoy, in later years, the respect universally accorded to those who had the courage and independence to avow their honest convictions. Prof. Turner was twice an unsuccessful candidate for Congress—once as a Republican and once as an "Independent"—and wrote much on political, religious and educational topics. The evening of an honored and useful life was spent among friends in Jacksonville, which was his home for more than sixty years, his death taking place in that city, Jan. 10, 1899, at the advanced age of 93 years.—Mrs. Mary Turner Carriel, at the present time (1899) one of the Trustees of the University of Illinois, is Prof. Turner's only daughter.

TURNER, Thomas J., lawyer and Congressman, born in Trumbull County, Ohio, April 5, 1815. Leaving home at the age of 18, he spent three years in Indiana and in the mining districts about Galena and in Southern Wisconsin, locating in Stephenson County, in 1836, where he was admitted to the bar in 1840, and elected Probate Judge in 1841. Soon afterwards Governor Ford appointed him Prosecuting Attorney, in which capacity he secured the conviction and punishment of the murderers of Colonel Davenport. In 1846 he was elected to Congress as a Democrat, and, the following year, founded "The Prairie Democrat" (afterward "The Freeport Bulletin"), the first newspaper published in the county. Elected to the Legislature in 1854, he was chosen Speaker of the House, the next year becoming the first Mayor of Freeport. He was a member of the Peace Conference of 1861, and, in May of that year, was commissioned, by Governor Yates, Colonel of the Fifteenth Illinois Volunteers, but resigned in 1862. He served as a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1871, was again elected to the Legislature, where he received the Democratic caucus nomination for United States Senator against General Logan. In 1871 he removed to Chicago, and was twice an unsuccessful candidate for the office of State's Attorney. In February, 1874, he went to Hot Springs, Ark., for medical treatment, and died there, April 3 following.

TUSCOLA, a city and the county-seat of Douglas County, located at the intersection of the Illinois Central and two other trunk lines of railway, 22 miles south of Champaign, and 36 miles east of Decatur. Besides a brick court-house it has five churches, a graded school, a national bank, two weekly newspapers and two establishments for the manufacture of carriages and wagons. Population (1880), 1,457; (1890), 1,897; (1900), 2,569.

TUSCOLA, CHARLESTON & VINCENNES RAILROAD. (See Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad.)

TUTHILL, Richard Stanley, jurist, was born at Vergennes, Jackson County, Ill., Nov. 10, 1841. After passing through the common schools of his native county, he took a preparatory course in a high school at St. Louis and in Illinois College, Jacksonville, when he entered Middlebury College, Vt., graduating there in 1863. Immediately thereafter he joined the Federal army at Vicksburg, and, after serving for some time in a company of scouts attached to General Logan's command, was commissioned a Lieutenant in the First Michigan Light Artillery, with which he served until the close of the war, meanwhile being twice promoted. During this time he was with General Sherman in the march to Meridian, and in the Atlanta campaign, also took part with General Thomas in the operations against the rebel General Hood in Tennessee, and in the battle of Nashville. Having resigned his commission in May, 1865, he took up the study of law, which he had prosecuted as he had opportunity while in the army, and was admitted to the bar at Nashville in 1866, afterwards serving for a time as Prosecuting Attorney on the Nashville circuit. In 1873 he removed to Chicago, two years later was elected City Attorney and re-elected in 1877; was a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1880 and, in 1884, was appointed United States District Attorney for the Northern District, serving until 1886. In 1887 he was elected Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Rogers, was re-elected for a full term in 1891, and again in 1897.

TYNDALE, Sharon, Secretary of State, born in Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 19, 1816; at the age of 17 came to Belleville, Ill., and was engaged for a time in mercantile business, later being employed in a surveyor's corps under the internal improvement system of 1837. Having married in 1839, he returned soon after to Philadelphia, where he engaged in mercantile business with his father; then came to Illinois, a second time, in 1845, spending a year or two in business at Peoria. About 1847 he returned to Belleville and entered upon a course of mathematical study, with a view to fitting himself more thoroughly for the profession of a civil engineer. In 1851 he graduated in engineering at Cambridge, Mass., after which he was employed for a time on the Sunbury & Erie Railroad, and later on certain Illinois railroads. In 1857 he was elected County Surveyor of St. Clair County, and, in 1861, by appointment of President Lincoln, became Postmaster of the city of Belleville. He held this position until 1864, when he received the Republican nomination for Secretary of State and was elected, remaining in office four years. He was an earnest advocate, and virtually author, of the first act for the registration of voters in Illinois, passed at the session of 1865. After retiring from office in 1869, he continued to reside in Springfield, and was employed for a time in the survey of the Gilman, Clinton & Springfield Railway—now the Springfield Division of the Illinois Central. At an early hour on the morning of April 29, 1871, while going from his home to the railroad station at Springfield, to take the train for St. Louis, he was assassinated upon the street by shooting, as supposed for the purpose of robbery—his dead body being found a few hours later at the scene of the tragedy. Mr. Tyndale was a brother of Gen. Hector Tyndale of Pennsylvania, who won a high reputation by his services during the war. His second wife, who survived him, was a daughter of Shadrach Penn, an editor of considerable reputation who was the contemporary and rival of George D. Prentice at Louisville, for some years.

"UNDERGROUND RAILROAD," THE. A history of Illinois would be incomplete without reference to the unique system which existed there, as in other Northern States, from forty to seventy years ago, known by the somewhat mysterious title of "The Underground Railroad." The origin of the term has been traced (probably in a spirit of facetiousness) to the expression of a Kentucky planter who, having pursued a fugitive slave across the Ohio River, was so surprised by his sudden disappearance, as soon as he had reached the opposite shore, that he was led to remark, "The nigger must have gone off on an underground road." From "underground road" to "underground railroad," the transition would appear to have been easy, especially in view of the increased facility with which the work was performed when railroads came into use. For readers of the present generation, it may be well to explain what "The Underground Railroad" really was. It may be defined as the figurative appellation for a spontaneous movement in the free States—extending, sometimes, into the slave States themselves—to assist slaves in their efforts to escape from bondage to freedom. The movement dates back to a period close to the Revolutionary War, long before it received a definite name. Assistance given to fugitives from one State by citizens of another, became a cause of complaint almost as soon as the Government was organized. In fact, the first President himself lost a slave who took refuge at Portsmouth, N. H., where the public sentiment was so strong against his return, that the patriotic and philosophic "Father of his Country" chose to let him remain unmolested, rather than "excite a mob or riot, or even uneasy sensations, in the minds of well-disposed citizens." That the matter was already one of concern in the minds of slaveholders, is shown by the fact that a provision was inserted in the Constitution for their conciliation, guaranteeing the return of fugitives from labor, as well as from justice, from one State to another.

In 1793 Congress passed the first Fugitive Slave Law, which was signed by President Washington. This law provided that the owner, his agent or attorney, might follow the slave into any State or Territory, and, upon oath or affidavit before a court or magistrate, be entitled to a warrant for his return. Any person who should hinder the arrest of the fugitive, or who should harbor, aid or assist him, knowing him to be such, was subject to a fine of $500 for each offense.—In 1850, fifty-seven years later, the first act having proved inefficacious, or conditions having changed, a second and more stringent law was enacted. This is the one usually referred to in discussions of the subject. It provided for an increased fine, not to exceed $1,000, and imprisonment not exceeding six months, with liability for civil damages to the party injured. No proof of ownership was required beyond the statement of a claimant, and the accused was not permitted to testify for himself. The fee of the United States Commissioner, before whom the case was tried, was ten dollars if he found for the claimant; if not, five dollars. This seemed to many an indirect form of bribery; clearly, it made it to the Judge's pecuniary advantage to decide in favor of the claimant. The law made it possible and easy for a white man to arrest, and carry into slavery, any free negro who could not immediately prove, by other witnesses, that he was born free, or had purchased his freedom.

Instead of discouraging the disposition, on the part of the opponents of slavery, to aid fugitives in their efforts to reach a region where they would be secure in their freedom, the effect of the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850 (as that of 1793 had been in a smaller degree) was the very opposite of that intended by its authors—unless, indeed, they meant to make matters worse. The provisions of the act seemed, to many people, so unfair, so one-sided, that they rebelled in spirit and refused to be made parties to its enforcement. The law aroused the anti-slavery sentiment of the North, and stimulated the active friends of the fugitives to take greater risks in their behalf. New efforts on the part of the slaveholders were met by a determination to evade, hinder and nullify the law.

And here a strange anomaly is presented. The slaveholder, in attempting to recover his slave, was acting within his constitutional and legal rights. The slave was his property in law. He had purchased or inherited his bondman on the same plane with his horse or his land, and, apart from the right to hold a human being in bondage, regarded his legal rights to the one as good as the other. From a legal standpoint his position was impregnable. The slave was his, representing so much of money value, and whoever was instrumental in the loss of that slave was, both theoretically and technically, a partner in robbery. Therefore he looked on "The Underground Railway" as the work of thieves, and entertained bitter hatred toward all concerned in its operation. On the other hand, men who were, in all other respects, good citizens—often religiously devout and pillars of the church—became bold and flagrant violators of the law in relation to this sort of property. They set at nought a plain provision of the Constitution and the act of Congress for its enforcement. Without hope of personal gain or reward, at the risk of fine and imprisonment, with the certainty of social ostracism and bitter opposition, they harbored the fugitive and helped him forward on every occasion. And why? Because they saw in him a man, with the same inherent right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" that they themselves possessed. To them this was a higher law than any Legislature, State or National, could enact. They denied that there could be truly such a thing as property in man. Believing that the law violated human rights, they justified themselves in rendering it null and void.

For the most part, the "Underground Railroad" operators and promoters were plain, obscure men, without hope of fame or desire for notoriety. Yet there were some whose names are conspicuous in history, such as Wendell Phillips, Thomas Wentworth Higginson and Theodore Parker of Massachusetts; Gerrit Smith and Thurlow Weed of New York; Joshua R. Giddings of Ohio, and Owen Lovejoy of Illinois. These had their followers and sympathizers in all the Northern States, and even in some portions of the South. It is a curious fact, that some of the most active spirits connected with the "Underground Railroad" were natives of the South, or had resided there long enough to become thoroughly acquainted with the "institution." Levi Coffin, who had the reputation of being the "President of the Underground Railroad"—at least so far as the region west of the Ohio was concerned—was an active operator on the line in North Carolina before his removal from that State to Indiana in 1826. Indeed, as a system, it is claimed to have had its origin at Guilford College, in the "Old North State" in 1819, though the evidence of this may not be conclusive.

Owing to the peculiar nature of their business, no official reports were made, no lists of officers, conductors, station agents or operators preserved, and few records kept which are now accessible. Consequently, we are dependent chiefly upon the personal recollection of individual operators for a history of their transactions. Each station on the road was the house of a "friend" and it is significant, in this connection, that in every settlement of Friends, or Quakers, there was sure to be a house of refuge for the slave. For this reason it was, perhaps, that one of the most frequently traveled lines extended from Virginia and Maryland through Eastern Pennsylvania, and then on towards New York or directly to Canada. From the proximity of Ohio to Virginia and Kentucky, and the fact that it offered the shortest route through free soil to Canada, it was traversed by more lines than any other State, although Indiana was pretty thoroughly "grid-ironed" by roads to freedom. In all, however, the routes were irregular, often zigzag, for purposes of security, and the "conductor" was any one who conveyed fugitives from one station to another The "train" was sometimes a farm-wagon, loaded with produce for market at some town (or depot) on the line, frequently a closed carriage, and it is related that once, in Ohio, a number of carriages conveying a large party, were made to represent a funeral procession. Occasionally the train ran on foot, for convenience of side-tracking into the woods or a cornfield, in case of pursuit by a wild locomotive.

Then, again, there were not wanting lawyers who, in case the operator, conductor or station agent got into trouble, were ready, without fee or reward, to defend either him or his human freight in the courts. These included such names of national repute as Salmon P. Chase, Thaddeus Stevens, Charles Sumner, William H. Seward, Rutherford B. Hayes, Richard H. Dana, and Isaac N. Arnold, while, taking the whole country over, their "name was legion." And there were a few men of wealth, like Thomas Garrett of Delaware, willing to contribute money by thousands to their assistance. Although technically acting in violation of law—or, as claimed by themselves, in obedience to a "higher law"—the time has already come when there is a disposition to look upon the actors as, in a certain sense, heroes, and their deeds as fitly belonging to the field of romance.

The most comprehensive collection of material relating to the history of this movement has been furnished in a recent volume entitled, "The Underground Railroad from Slavery to Freedom," by Prof. Wilbur H. Siebert, of Ohio State University; and, while it is not wholly free from errors, both as to individual names and facts, it will probably remain as the best compilation of history bearing on this subject—especially as the principal actors are fast passing away. One of the interesting features of Prof. Siebert's book is a map purporting to give the principal routes and stations in the States northwest of the Ohio, yet the accuracy of this, as well as the correctness of personal names given, has been questioned by some best informed on the subject. As might be expected from its geographical position between two slave States—Kentucky and Missouri—on the one hand, and the lakes offering a highway to Canada on the other, it is naturally to be assumed that Illinois would be an attractive field, both for the fugitive and his sympathizer.

The period of greatest activity of the system in this State was between 1840 and 1861—the latter being the year when the pro-slavery party in the South, by their attempt forcibly to dissolve the Union, took the business out of the hands of the secret agents of the "Underground Railroad," and—in a certain sense—placed it in the hands of the Union armies. It was in 1841 that Abraham Lincoln—then a conservative opponent of the extension of slavery—on an appeal from a judgment, rendered by the Circuit Court in Tazewell County, in favor of the holder of a note given for the service of the indentured slave-girl "Nance," obtained a decision from the Supreme Court of Illinois upholding the doctrine that the girl was free under the Ordinance of 1787 and the State Constitution, and that the note, given to the person who claimed to be her owner, was void. And it is a somewhat curious coincidence that the same Abraham Lincoln, as President of the United States, in the second year of the War of the Rebellion, issued the Proclamation of Emancipation which finally resulted in striking the shackles from the limbs of every slave in the Union.

In the practical operation of aiding fugitives in Illinois, it was natural that the towns along the border upon the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, should have served as a sort of entrepots, or initial stations, for the reception of this class of freight—especially if adjacent to some anti-slavery community. This was the case at Chester, from which access was easy to Sparta, where a colony of Covenanters, or Seceders, was located, and whence a route extended, by way of Oakdale, Nashville and Centralia, in the direction of Chicago. Alton offered convenient access to Bond County, where there was a community of anti-slavery people at an early day, or the fugitives could be forwarded northward by way of Jerseyville, Waverly and Jacksonville, about each of which there was a strong anti-slavery sentiment. Quincy, in spite of an intense hostility among the mass of the community to anything savoring of abolitionism, became the theater of great activity on the part of the opponents of the institution, especially after the advent there of Dr. David Nelson and Dr. Richard Eells, both of whom had rendered themselves obnoxious to the people of Missouri by extending aid to fugitives. The former was a practical abolitionist who, having freed his slaves in his native State of Virginia, removed to Missouri and attempted to establish Marion College, a few miles from Palmyra, but was soon driven to Illinois. Locating near Quincy, he founded the "Mission Institute" there, at which he continued to disseminate his anti-slavery views, while educating young men for missionary work. The "Institute" was finally burned by emissaries from Missouri, while three young men who had been connected with it, having been caught in Missouri, were condemned to twelve years' confinement in the penitentiary of that State—partly on the testimony of a negro, although a negro was not then a legal witness in the courts against a white man. Dr. Eells was prosecuted before Stephen A. Douglas (then a Judge of the Circuit Court), and fined for aiding a fugitive to escape, and the judgment against him was finally confirmed by the Supreme Court after his death, in 1852, ten years after the original indictment.

A map in Professor Siebert's book, showing the routes and principal stations of the "Undergound Railroad," makes mention of the following places in Illinois, in addition to those already referred to: Carlinville, in Macoupin County; Payson and Mendon, in Adams; Washington, in Tazewell; Metamora, in Woodford; Magnolia, in Putnam; Galesburg, in Knox; Princeton (the home of Owen Lovejoy and the Bryants), in Bureau; and many more. Ottawa appears to have been the meeting point of a number of lines, as well as the home of a strong colony of practical abolitionists. Cairo also became an important transfer station for fugitives arriving by river, after the completion of the Illinois Central Railroad, especially as it offered the speediest way of reaching Chicago, towards which nearly all the lines converged. It was here that the fugitives could be most safely disposed of by placing them upon vessels, which, without stopping at intermediate ports, could soon land them on Canadian soil.

As to methods, these differed according to circumstances, the emergencies of the occasion, or the taste, convenience or resources of the operator. Deacon Levi Morse, of Woodford County, near Metamora, had a route towards Magnolia, Putnam County; and his favorite "car" was a farm wagon in which there was a double bottom. The passengers were snugly placed below, and grain sacks, filled with bran or other light material, were laid over, so that the whole presented the appearance of an ordinary load of grain on its way to market. The same was true as to stations and routes. One, who was an operator, says: "Wherever an abolitionist happened on a fugitive, or the converse, there was a station, for the time, and the route was to the next anti-slavery man to the east or the north. As a general rule, the agent preferred not to know anything beyond the operation of his own immediate section of the road. If he knew nothing about the operations of another, and the other knew nothing of his, they could not be witnesses in court.

We have it on the authority of Judge Harvey B. Hurd, of Chicago, that runaways were usually forwarded from that city to Canada by way of the Lakes, there being several steamers available for that purpose. On one occasion thirteen were put aboard a vessel under the eyes of a United States Marshal and his deputies. The fugitives, secreted in a woodshed, one by one took the places of colored stevedores carrying wood aboard the ship. Possibly the term, "There's a nigger in the woodpile," may have originated in this incident. Thirteen was an "unlucky number" in this instance—for the masters.

Among the notable trials for assisting runaways in violation of the Fugitive Slave Law, in addition to the case of Dr. Eells, already mentioned, were those of Owen Lovejoy of Princeton, and Deacon Cushing of Will County, both of whom were defended by Judge James Collins of Chicago. John Hossack and Dr. Joseph Stout of Ottawa, with some half-dozen of their neighbors and friends, were tried at Ottawa, in 1859, for assisting a fugitive and acquitted on a technicality. A strong array of attorneys, afterwards widely known through the northern part of the State, appeared for the defense, including Isaac N. Arnold, Joseph Knox, B. C. Cook, J. V. Eustace, Edward S. Leland and E. C. Larned. Joseph T. Morse, of Woodford County, was also arrested, taken to Peoria and committed to jail, but acquitted on trial.

Another noteworthy case was that of Dr. Samuel Willard (now of Chicago) and his father, Julius A. Willard, charged with assisting in the escape of a fugitive at Jacksonville, in 1843, when the Doctor was a student in Illinois College. "The National Corporation Reporter," a few years ago, gave an account of this affair, together with a letter from Dr. Willard, in which he states that, after protracted litigation, during which the case was carried to the Supreme Court, it was ended by his pleading guilty before Judge Samuel D. Lockwood, when he was fined one dollar and costs—the latter amounting to twenty dollars. The Doctor frankly adds: "My father, as well as myself, helped many fugitives afterwards." It did not always happen, however, that offenders escaped so easily.

Judge Harvey B. Hurd, already referred to, and an active anti-slavery man in the days of the Fugitive Slave Law, relates the following: Once, when the trial of a fugitive was going on before Justice Kercheval, in a room on the second floor of a two-story frame building on Clark Street in the city of Chicago, the crowd in attendance filled the room, the stairway and the adjoining sidewalk. In some way the prisoner got mixed in with the audience, and passed down over the heads of those on the stairs, where the officers were unable to follow.

In another case, tried before United States Commissioner Geo. W. Meeker, the result was made to hinge upon a point in the indictment to the effect that the fugitive was "copper-colored." The Commissioner, as the story goes, being inclined to favor public sentiment, called for a large copper cent, that he might make comparison. The decision was, that the prisoner was "off color," so to speak, and he was hustled out of the room before the officers could re-arrest him, as they had been instructed to do.

Dr. Samuel Willard, in a review of Professor Siebert's book, published in "The Dial" of Chicago, makes mention of Henry Irving and William Chauncey Carter as among his active allies at Jacksonville, with Rev. Bilious Pond and Deacon Lyman of Farmington (near the present village of Farmingdale in Sangamon County), Luther Ransom of Springfield, Andrew Borders of Randolph County, Joseph Gerrish of Jersey and William T. Allan of Henry, as their coadjutors in other parts of the State. Other active agents or promoters, in the same field, included such names as Dr. Charles V. Dyer, Philo Carpenter, Calvin De Wolf, L. C. P. Freer, Zebina Eastman, James H. Collins, Harvey B. Hurd, J. Young Scammon, Col. J. F. Farnsworth and others of Chicago, whose names have already been mentioned; Rev. Asa Turner, Deacon Ballard, J. K. Van Dorn and Erastus Benton, of Quincy and Adams County; President Rufus Blanchard of Knox College, Galesburg; John Leeper of Bond; the late Prof. J. B. Turner and Elihu Wolcott of Jacksonville; Capt. Parker Morse and his four sons—Joseph T., Levi P., Parker, Jr., and Mark —of Woodford County; Rev. William Sloane of Randolph; William Strawn of La Salle, besides a host who were willing to aid their fellow men in their aspirations to freedom, without advertising their own exploits.

Among the incidents of "Underground Railroad" in Illinois is one which had some importance politically, having for its climax a dramatic scene in Congress, but of which, so far as known, no full account has ever been written. About 1855, Ephraim Lombard, a Mississippi planter, but a New Englander by birth, purchased a large body of prairie land in the northeastern part of Stark County, and, taking up his residence temporarily in the village of Bradford, began its improvement. He had brought with him from Mississippi a negro, gray-haired and bent with age, a slave of probably no great value. "Old Mose," as he was called, soon came to be well known and a favorite in the neighborhood. Lombard boldly stated that he had brought him there as a slave; that, by virtue of the Dred Scott decision (then of recent date), he had a constitutional right to take his slaves wherever he pleased, and that "Old Mose" was just as much his property in Illinois as in Mississippi. It soon became evident to some, that his bringing of the negro to Illinois was an experiment to test the law and the feelings of the Northern people. This being the case, a shrewd play would have been to let him have his way till other slaves should have been brought to stock the new plantation. But this was too slow a process for the abolitionists, to whom the holding of a slave in the free State of Illinois appeared an unbearable outrage. It was feared that he might take the old negro back to Mississippi and fail to bring any others. It was reported, also, that "Old Mose" was ill-treated; that he was given only the coarsest food in a back shed, as if he were a horse or a dog, instead of being permitted to eat at table with the family. The prairie citizen of that time was very particular upon this point of etiquette. The hired man or woman, debarred from the table of his or her employer, would not have remained a day. A quiet consultation with "Old Mose" revealed the fact that he would hail the gift of freedom joyously. Accordingly, one Peter Risedorf, and another equally daring, met him by the light of the stars and, before morning, he was placed in the care of Owen Lovejoy, at Princeton, twenty miles away. From there he was speedily "franked" by the member of Congress to friends in Canada.

There was a great commotion in Bradford over the "stealing" of "Old Mose." Lombard and his friends denounced the act in terms bitter and profane, and threatened vengeance upon the perpetrators. The conductors were known only to a few, and they kept their secret well. Lovejoy's part in the affair, however, soon leaked out. Lombard returned to Mississippi, where he related his experiences to Mr. Singleton, the Representative in Congress from his district. During the next session of Congress, Singleton took occasion, in a speech, to sneer at Lovejoy as a "nigger-stealer," citing the case of "Old Mose." Mr. Lovejoy replied in his usual fervid and dramatic style, making a speech which ensured his election to Congress for life—"Is it desired to call attention to this fact of my assisting fugitive slaves?" he said. "Owen Lovejoy lives at Princeton, Ill., three-quarters of a mile east of the village, and he aids every slave that comes to his door and asks it. Thou invisible Demon of Slavery, dost thou think to cross my humble threshold and forbid me to give bread to the hungry and shelter to the homeless? I bid you defiance, in the name of my God!"

With another incident of an amusing character this article may be closed: Hon. J. Young Scammon, of Chicago, being accused of conniving at the escape of a slave from officers of the law, was asked by the court what he would do if summoned as one of a posse to pursue and capture a fugitive. "I would certainly obey the summons," he replied, "but—I should probably stub my toe and fall down before I reached him."

NOTE.—Those who wish to pursue the subject of the "Underground Railroad" in Illinois further, are referred to the work of Dr. Siebert, already mentioned, and to the various County Histories which have been issued and may be found in the public libraries; also for interesting incidents, to "Reminiscences of Levi Coffin," Johnson's "From Dixie to Canada," Petit's Sketches, "Still, Underground Railroad," and a pamphlet of the same title by James H. Fairchild, ex-President of Oberlin College.

UNDERWOOD, William H., lawyer, legislator and jurist, was born at Schoharie Court House, N. Y., Feb. 21, 1818, and, after admission to the bar, removed to Belleville, Ill., where he began practice in 1840. The following year he was elected State's Attorney, and re-elected in 1843. In 1846 he was chosen a member of the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1848-54, sat as Judge of the Second Circuit. During this period he declined a nomination to Congress, although equivalent to an election. In 1856 he was elected State Senator, and re-elected in 1860. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1870, was again elected to the Senate, retiring to private life in 1872. Died, Sept. 23, 1875.

UNION COUNTY, one of the fifteen counties into which Illinois was divided at the time of its admission as a State—having been organized, under the Territorial Government, in January, 1818. It is situated in the southern division of the State, bounded on the west by the Mississippi River, and has an area of 400 square miles. The eastern and interior portions are drained by the Cache River and Clear Creek. The western part of the county comprises the broad, rich bottom lands lying along the Mississippi, but is subject to frequent overflow, while the eastern portion is hilly, and most of its area originally heavily timbered. The county is especially rich in minerals. Iron-ore, lead, bituminous coal, chalk, alum and potter's clay are found in considerable abundance. Several lines of railway (the most important being the Illinois Central) either cross or tap the county. The chief occupation is agriculture, although manufacturing is carried on to a limited extent. Fruit is extensively cultivated. Jonesboro is the county-seat, and Cobden and Anna important shipping stations. The latter is the location of the Southern Hospital for the Insane. The population of the county, in 1890, was 21,529. Being next to St. Clair, Randolph and Gallatin, one of the earliest settled counties in the State, many prominent men found their first home, on coming into the State, at Jonesboro, and this region, for a time, exerted a strong influence in public affairs. Pop. (1900), 22,610.

UNION LEAGUE OF AMERICA, a secret political and patriotic order which had its origin early in the late Civil War, for the avowed purpose of sustaining the cause of the Union and counteracting the machinations of the secret organizations designed to promote the success of the Rebellion. The first regular Council of the order was organized at Pekin, Tazewell County, June 25, 1862, consisting of eleven members, as follows: John W. Glasgow, Dr. D. A. Cheever, Hart Montgomery, Maj. Richard N. Cullom (father of Senator Cullom), Alexander Small, Rev. J. W. M. Vernon, George H. Harlow (afterward Secretary of State), Charles Turner, Col. Jonathan Merriam, Henry Pratt and L. F. Garrett. One of the number was a Union refugee from Tennessee, who dictated the first oath from memory, as administered to members of a somewhat similar order which had been organized among the Unionists of his own State. It solemnly pledged the taker, (1) to preserve inviolate the secrets and business of the order; (2) to "support, maintain, protect and defend the civil liberties of the Union of these United States against all enemies, either domestic or foreign, at all times and under all circumstances," even "if necessary, to the sacrifice of life"; (3) to aid in electing only true Union men to offices of trust in the town, county, State and General Government; (4) to assist, protect and defend any member of the order who might be in peril from his connection with the order, and (5) to obey all laws, rules or regulations of any Council to which the taker of the oath might be attached. The oath was taken upon the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States, the taker pledging his sacred honor to its fulfillment. A special reason for the organization existed in the activity, about this time, of the "Knights of the Golden Circle," a disloyal organization which had been introduced from the South, and which afterwards took the name, in the North, of "American Knights" and "Sons of Liberty." (See Secret Treasonable Societies.) Three months later, the organization had extended to a number of other counties of the State and, on the 25th of September following, the first State Council met at Bloomington—twelve counties being represented—and a State organization was effected. At this meeting the following general officers were chosen: Grand President — Judge Mark Bangs, of Marshall County (now of Chicago); Grand Vice-President —Prof. Daniel Wilkin, of McLean; Grand Secretary—George H. Harlow, of Tazewell; Grand Treasurer—H. S. Austin, of Peoria, Grand Marshal—J. R. Gorin, of Macon; Grand Herald—A. Gould, of Henry; Grand Sentinel—John E. Rosette, of Sangamon. An Executive Committee was also appointed, consisting of Joseph Medill of "The Chicago Tribune"; Dr. A. J. McFarland, of Morgan County; J. K. Warren, of Macon; Rev. J. C. Rybolt, of La Salle; the President, Judge Bangs; Enoch Emery, of Peoria; and John E. Rosette. Under the direction of this Committee, with Mr. Medill as its Chairman, the constitution and by-laws were thoroughly revised and a new ritual adopted, which materially changed the phraseology and removed some of the crudities of the original obligation, as well as increased the beauty and impressiveness of the initiatory ceremonies. New signs, grips and pass-words were also adopted, which were finally accepted by the various organizations of the order throughout the Union, which, by this time, included many soldiers in the army, as well as civilians. The second Grand (or State) Council was held at Springfield, January 14, 1863, with only seven counties represented. The limited representation was discouraging, but the members took heart from the inspiring words of Governor Yates, addressed to a committee of the order who waited upon him. At a special session of the Executive Committee, held at Peoria, six days later, a vigorous campaign was mapped out, under which agents were sent into nearly every county in the State. In October, 1862, the strength of the order in Illinois was estimated at three to five thousand; a few months later, the number of enrolled members had increased to 50,000 — so rapid had been the growth of the order. On March 25, 1863, a Grand Council met in Chicago—404 Councils in Illinois being represented, with a number from Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota. At this meeting a Committee was appointed to prepare a plan of organization for a National Grand Council, which was carried out at Cleveland, Ohio, on the 20th of May following—the constitution, ritual and signs of the Illinois organization being adopted with slight modifications. The revised obligation —taken upon the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States—bound members of the League to "support, protect and defend the Government of the United States and the flag thereof, against all enemies, foreign and domestic," and to "bear true faith and allegiance to the same"; to "defend the State against invasion or insurrection"; to support only "true and reliable men" for offices of trust and profit; to protect and defend worthy members, and to preserve inviolate the secrets of the order. The address to new members was a model of impressiveness and a powerful appeal to their patriotism. The organization extended rapidly, not only throughout the Northwest, but in the South also, especially in the army. In 1864 the number of Councils in Illinois was estimated at 1,300, with a membership of 175,000; and it is estimated that the total membership, throughout the Union, was 2,000,000. The influence of the silent, but zealous and effective, operations of the organization, was shown, not only in the stimulus given to enlistments and support of the war policy of the Government, but in the raising of supplies for the sick and wounded soldiers in the field. Within a few weeks before the fall of Vicksburg, over $25,000 in cash, besides large quantities of stores, were sent to Col. John Williams (then in charge of the Sanitary Bureau at Springfield), as the direct result of appeals made through circulars sent out by the officers of the "League." Large contributions of money and supplies also reached the sick and wounded in hospital through the medium of the Sanitary Commission in Chicago. Zealous efforts were made by the opposition to get at the secrets of the order, and, in one case, a complete copy of the ritual was published by one of their organs; but the effect was so far the reverse of what was anticipated, that this line of attack was not continued. During the stormy session of the Legislature in 1863, the League is said to have rendered effective service in protecting Governor Yates from threatened assassination. It continued its silent but effective operations until the complete overthrow of the rebellion, when it ceased to exist as a political organization.

UNITED STATES SENATORS. The following is a list of United States senators from Illinois, from the date of the admission of the State into the Union until 1899, with the date and duration of the term of each: Ninian Edwards, 1818-24; Jesse B. Thomas, Sr., 1818-29; John McLean, 1824-25 and 1829-30; Elias Kent Kane, 1825-35; David Jewett Baker, Nov. 12 to Dec. 11, 1830; John M. Robinson, 1830-41; William L. D. Ewing, 1835-37; Richard M. Young, 1837-43; Samuel McRoberts, 1841-43; Sidney Breese, 1843-49; James Semple, 1843-47; Stephen A. Douglas, 1847-61; James Shields, 1849-55; Lyman Trumbull, 1855-73; Orville H. Browning, 1861-63; William A. Richardson, 1863-65; Richard Yates, 1865-71; John A. Logan, 1871-77 and 1879-86; Richard J. Oglesby, 1873-79; David Davis, 1877-83; Shelby M. Cullom, first elected in 1883, and re-elected in '89 and '95, his third term expiring in 1901; Charles B. Farwell, 1887-91; John McAuley Palmer, 1891-97; William E. Mason, elected in 1897, for the term expiring, March 4, 1903.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO (The New). One of the leading educational institutions of the country, located at Chicago. It is the outgrowth of an attempt, put forth by the American Educational Society (organized at Washington in 1888), to supply the place which the original institution of the same name had been designed to fill. (See University of Chicago—The Old.) The following year, Mr. John D. Rockefeller of New York tendered a contribution of $600,000 toward the endowment of the enterprise, conditioned upon securing additional pledges to the amount of $400,000 by June 1, 1890. The offer was accepted, and the sum promptly raised. In addition, a site, covering four blocks of land in the city of Chicago, was secured—two and one-half blocks being acquired by purchase for $282,500, and one and one-half (valued at $125,000) donated by Mr. Marshall Field. A charter was secured and an organization effected, Sept. 10, 1890. The Presidency of the institution was tendered to, and accepted by, Dr. William R. Harper. Since that time the University has been the recipient of other generous benefactions by Mr. Rockefeller and others, until the aggregate donations (1898) exceed $10,000,000. Of this amount over one-half has been contributed by Mr. Rockefeller, while he has pledged himself to make additional contributions of $2,000,000, conditioned upon the raising of a like sum, from other donors, by Jan. 1, 1900. The buildings erected on the campus, prior to 1896, include a chemical laboratory costing $182,000; a lecture hall, $150,000; a physical laboratory $150,000; a museum, $100,000; an academy dormitory, $30,000; three dormitories for women, $150,000; two dormitories for men, $100,000, to which several important additions were made during 1896 and '97. The faculty embraces over 150 instructors, selected with reference to their fitness for their respective departments from among the most eminent scholars in America and Europe. Women are admitted as students and graduated upon an equality with men. The work of practical instruction began in October, 1892, with 589 registered students, coming from nearly every Northern State, and including 250 graduates from other institutions, to which accessions were made, during the year, raising the aggregate to over 900. The second year the number exceeded 1,100; the third, it rose to 1,750, and the fourth (1895-96), to some 2,000, including representatives from every State of the Union, besides many from foreign countries. Special features of the institution include the admission of graduates from other institutions to a post-graduate course, and the University Extension Division, which is conducted largely by means of lecture courses, in other cities, or through lecture centers in the vicinity of the University, non-resident students having the privilege of written examinations. The various libraries embrace over 300,000 volumes, of which nearly 60,000 belong to what are called the "Departmental Libraries," besides a large and valuable collection of maps and pamphlets.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO (The Old), an educational institution at Chicago, under the care of the Baptist denomination, for some years known as the Douglas University. Senator Stephen A. Douglas offered, in 1854, to donate ten acres of land, in what was then near the southern border of the city of Chicago, as a site for an institution of learning, provided buildings costing $100,000, be erected thereon within a stipulated time. The corner-stone of the main building was laid, July 4, 1857, but the financial panic of that year prevented its completion, and Mr. Douglas extended the time, and finally deeded the land to the trustees without reserve. For eighteen years the institution led a precarious existence, struggling under a heavy debt. By 1885, mortgages to the amount of $320,000 having accumulated, the trustees abandoned further effort, and acquiesced in the sale of the property under foreclosure proceedings. The original plan of the institution contemplated preparatory and collegiate departments, together with a college of law and a theological school.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS, the leading educational institution under control of the State, located at Urbana and adjoining the city of Champaign. The Legislature at the session of 1863 accepted a grant of 480,000 acres of land under Act of Congress, approved July 2, 1862, making an appropriation of public lands to States—30,000 acres for each Senator and each Representative in Congress—establishing colleges for teaching agriculture and the mechanic arts, though not to the exclusion of classical and scientific studies. Landscrip under this grant was issued and placed in the hands of Governor Yates, and a Board of Trustees appointed under the State law was organized in March, 1867, the institution being located the same year. Departments and courses of study were established, and Dr. John M. Gregory, of Michigan, was chosen Regent (President).—The landscrip issued to Illinois was sold at an early day for what it would bring in open market, except 25,000 acres, which was located in Nebraska and Minnesota. This has recently been sold, realizing a larger sum than was received for all the scrip otherwise disposed of. The entire sum thus secured for permanent endowment aggregates $613,026. The University revenues were further increased by donations from Congress to each institution organized under the Act of 1862, of $15,000 per annum for the maintenance of an Agricultural Experiment Station, and, in 1890, of a similar amount for instruction—the latter to be increased $1,000 annually until it should reach $25,000.—A mechanical building was erected in 1871, and this is claimed to have been the first of its kind in America intended for strictly educational purposes. What was called "the main building" was formally opened in December, 1873. Other buildings embrace a "Science Hall," opened in 1892; a new "Engineering Hall," 1894; a fine Library Building, 1897. Eleven other principal structures and a number of smaller ones have been erected as conditions required. The value of property aggregates nearly $2,500,000, and appropriations from the State, for all purposes, previous to 1904, foot up $5,123,517.90.—Since 1871 the institution has been open to women. The courses of study embrace agriculture, chemistry, polytechnics, military tactics, natural and general sciences, languages and literature, economics, household science, trade and commerce. The Graduate School dates from 1891. In 1896 the Chicago College of Pharmacy was connected with the University: a College of Law and a Library School were opened in 1897, and the same year the Chicago College of Physicians and Surgeons was affiliated as the College of Medicine—a School of Dentistry being added to the latter in 1901. In 1885 the State Laboratory of Natural History was transferred from Normal, Ill., and an Agricultural Experiment Station entablished in 1888, from which bulletins are sent to farmers throughout the State who may desire them.—The first name of the Institution was "Illinois Industrial University," but, in 1885, this was changed to "University of Illinois." In 1887 the Trustees, (of whom there are nine) were made elective by popular vote—three being elected every two years, each holding office six years. Dr. Gregory, having resigned the office of Regent in 1880, was succeeded by Dr. Selim H. Peabody, who had been Professor of Mechanical and Civil Engineering. Dr. Peabody resigned in 1891. The duties of Regent were then discharged by Prof. Thomas J. Burrill until August, 1894, when Dr. Andrew Sloan Draper, former State Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of New York, was installed as President, serving until 1904.—The corps of instruction (1904) includes over 100 Professors, 60 Associate and Assistant Professors and 200 Instructors and Assistants, besides special lecturers, demonstrators and clerks. The number of students has increased rapidly in recent years, as shown by the following totals for successive years from 1890-91 to 1903-04, inclusive: 519; 583; 714; 743; 810; 852; 1,075; 1,582; 1,824; 2,234; 2,505; 2,932; 3,289; 3,589. Of the last number, 2,271 were men and 718 women. During 1903-04 there were in all departments at Urbana, 2,547 students (256 being in the Preparatory Academy); and in the three Professional Departments in Chicago, 1,042, of whom 694 were in the College of Medicine, 185 in the School of Pharmacy, and 163 in the School of Dentistry. The University Library contains 63,700 volumes and 14,500 pamphlets, not including 5,350 volumes and 15,850 pamphlets in the State Laboratory of Natural History.—The University occupies a conspicuous and attractive site, embracing 220 acres adjacent to the line between Urbana and Champaign, and near the residence portion of the two cities. The athletic field of 11 acres, on which stand the gymnasium and armory, is enclosed with an ornamental iron fence. The campus, otherwise, is an open and beautiful park with fine landscape effects.

UNORGANIZED COUNTIES. In addition to the 102 counties into which Illinois is divided, acts were passed by the General Assembly, at different times, providing for the organization of a number of others, a few of which were subsequently organized under different names, but the majority of which were never organized at all—the proposition for such organization being rejected by vote of the people within the proposed boundaries, or allowed to lapse by non-action. These unorganized counties, with the date of the several acts authorizing them, and the territory which they were intended to include, were as follows: Allen County (1841) — comprising portions of Sangamon, Morgan and Macoupin Counties; Audobon (Audubon) County (1843)—from portions of Montgomery, Fayette and Shelby; Benton County (1843)—from Morgan, Greene and Macoupin; Coffee County (1837)—with substantially the same territory now comprised within the boundaries of Stark County, authorized two years later; Dane County (1839)—name changed to Christian in 1840; Harrison County (1855)—from McLean, Champaign and Vermilion, comprising territory since partially incorporated in Ford County; Holmes County (1857)—from Champaign and Vermilion; Marquette County (1843), changed (1847) to Highland—comprising the northern portion of Adams, (this act was accepted, with Columbus as the county-seat, but organization finally vacated); Michigan County (1837)—from a part of Cook; Milton County (1843)—from the south part of Vermilion; Okaw County (1841)—comprising substantially the same territory as Moultrie, organized under act of 1843; Oregon County (1851)—from parts of Sangamon, Morgan and Macoupin Counties, and covering substantially the same territory as proposed to be incorporated in Allen County ten years earlier. The last act of this character was passed in 1867, when an attempt was made to organize Lincoln County out of parts of Champaign and Vermilion, but which failed for want of an affirmative vote.

UPPER ALTON, a city of Madison County, situated on the Chicago & Alton Railroad, about 1½ miles northeast of Alton—laid out in 1816. It has several churches, and is the seat of Shurtleff College and the Western Military Academy, the former founded about 1831, and controlled by the Baptist denomination. Beds of excellent clay are found in the vicinity and utilized in pottery manufacture. Pop. (1890), 1,803; (1900), 2,373.

UPTON, George Putnam, journalist, was born at Roxbury, Mass., Oct. 25, 1834; graduated from Brown University in 1854, removed to Chicago in 1855, and began newspaper work on "The Native American," the following year taking the place of city editor of "The Evening Journal." In 1862, Mr. Upton became musical critic on "The Chicago Tribune," serving for a time also as its war correspondent in the field, later (about 1881) taking a place on the general editorial staff, which he still retains. He is regarded as an authority on musical and dramatic topics. Mr. Upton is also a stockholder in, and, for several years, has been Vice-President of the "Tribune" Company. Besides numerous contributions to magazines, his works include: "Letters of Peregrine Pickle" (1869); "Memories, a Story of German Love," translated from the German of Max Muller (1879); "Woman in Music" (1880); "Lives of German Composers" (3 vols.—1883-84); besides four volumes of standard operas, oratorios, cantatas, and symphonies (1885-88).

URBANA, a flourishing city, the county-seat of Champaign County, on the "Big Four," the Illinois Central and the Wabash Railways: 130 miles south of Chicago and 31 miles west of Danville; in agricultural and coal-mining region. The mechanical industries include extensive railroad shops, manufacture of brick, suspenders and lawn-mowers. The Cunningham Deaconesses' Home and Orphanage is located here. The city has water-works, gas and electric light plants, electric car-lines (local and interurban), superior schools, nine churches, three banks and three newspapers. Urbana is the seat of the University of Illinois. Pop. (1890), 3,511; (1900), 5,728.

USREY, William J., editor and soldier, was born at Washington (near Natchez), Miss., May 16, 1827; was educated at Natchez, and, before reaching manhood, came to Macon County, Ill., where he engaged in teaching until 1846, when he enlisted as a private in Company C, Fourth Illinois Volunteers, for the Mexican War. In 1855, he joined with a Mr. Wingate in the establishment, at Decatur, of "The Illinois State Chronicle," of which he soon after took sole charge, conducting the paper until 1861, when he enlisted in the Thirty-fifth Illinois Volunteers and was appointed Adjutant. Although born and educated in a slave State, Mr. Usrey was an earnest opponent of slavery, as proved by the attitude of his paper in opposition to the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. He was one of the most zealous endorsers of the proposition for a conference of the Anti-Nebraska editors of the State of Illinois, to agree upon a line of policy in opposition to the further extension of slavery, and, when that body met at Decatur, on Feb. 22, 1856, he served as its Secretary, thus taking a prominent part in the initial steps which resulted in the organization of the Republican party in Illinois. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) After returning from the war he resumed his place as editor of "The Chronicle," but finally retired from newspaper work in 1871. He was twice Postmaster of the city of Decatur, first previous to 1850, and again under the administration of President Grant; served also as a member of the City Council and was a member of the local Post of the G. A. R., and Secretary of the Macon County Association of Mexican War Veterans. Died, at Decatur, Jan. 20, 1894.

UTICA, (also called North Utica), a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois & Michigan Canal and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, 10 miles west of Ottawa, situated on the Illinois River opposite "Starved Rock," also believed to stand on the site of the Kaskaskia village found by the French Explorer, La Salle, when he first visited Illinois. "Utica cement" is produced here; it also has several factories or mills, besides banks and a weekly paper. Population (1880), 767; (1890), 1,094; (1900), 1,150.

VAN ARNAM, John, lawyer and soldier, was born at Plattsburg, N. Y., March 3, 1820. Having lost his father at five years of age, he went to live with a farmer, but ran away in his boyhood; later, began teaching, studied law, and was admitted to the bar in New York City, beginning practice at Marshall, Mich. In 1858 he removed to Chicago, and, as a member of the firm of Walker, Van Arnam & Dexter, became prominent as a criminal lawyer and railroad attorney, being for a time Solicitor of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. In 1862 he assisted in organizing the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry and was commissioned its Colonel, but was compelled to resign on account of illness. After spending some time in California, he resumed practice in Chicago in 1865. His later years were spent in California, dying at San Diego, in that State, April 6, 1890.

VANDALIA, the principal city and county-seat of Fayette County. It is situated on the Kaskaskia River, 30 miles north of Centralia, 62 miles south by west of Decatur, and 68 miles east-northeast of St. Louis. It is an intersecting point for the Illinois Central and the St. Louis, Vandalia and Terre Haute Railroads. It was the capital of the State from 1820 to 1839, the seat of government being removed to Springfield, the latter year, in accordance with act of the General Assembly passed at the session of 1837. It contains a court house (old State Capitol building), six churches, two banks, three weekly papers, a graded school, flour, saw and paper mills, foundry, stave and heading mill, carriage and wagon and brick works. Pop. (1890), 2,144; (1900), 2,665.

VANDEVEER, Horatio M., pioneer lawyer, was born in Washington County, Ind., March 1, 1816; came with his family to Illinois at an early age, settling on Clear Creek, now in Christian County; taught school and studied law, using books borrowed from the late Hon. John T. Stuart of Springfield; was elected first County Recorder of Christian County and, soon after, appointed Circuit Clerk, filling both offices three years. He also held the office of County Judge from 1848 to 1857; was twice chosen Representative in the General Assembly (1842 and 1850) and once to the State Senate (1862); in 1846, enlisted and was chosen Captain of a company for the Mexican War, but, having been rejected on account of the quota being full, was appointed Assistant-Quartermaster, in this capacity serving on the staff of General Taylor at the battle of Buena Vista. Among other offices held by Mr. Vandeveer, were those of Postmaster of Taylorville, Master in Chancery, Presidential Elector (1848), Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and Judge of the Circuit Court (1870-79). In 1868 Judge Vandeveer established the private banking firm of H. M. Vandeveer & Co., at Taylorville, which, in conjunction with his sons, he continued successfully during the remainder of his life. Died, March 12, 1894.

VAN HORNE, William C., Railway Manager and President, was born in Will County, Ill., February, 1843; began his career as a telegraph operator on the Illinois Central Railroad in 1856, was attached to the Michigan Central and Chicago & Alton Railroads (1858-72), later being General Manager or General Superintendent of various other lines (1872-79). He next served as General Superintendent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, but soon after became General Manager of the Canadian Pacific, which he assisted to construct to the Pacific Coast; was elected Vice-President of the line in 1884, and its President in 1888. His services have been recognized by conferring upon him the order of knighthood by the British Government.

VASSEUR, Noel C., pioneer Indian-trader, was born of French parentage in Canada, Dec. 25, 1799; at the age of 17 made a trip with a trading party to the West, crossing Wisconsin by way of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, the route pursued by Joliet and Marquette in 1673; later, was associated with Gurdon S. Hubbard in the service of the American Fur Company, in 1820 visiting the region now embraced in Iroquois County, where he and Hubbard subsequently established a trading post among the Pottawatomie Indians, believed to have been the site of the present town of Iroquois. The way of reaching their station from Chicago was by the Chicago and Des Plaines Rivers to the Kankakee, and ascending the latter and the Iroquois. Here Vasseur remained in trade until the removal of the Indians west of the Mississippi, in which he served as agent of the Government. While in the Iroquois region he married Watseka, a somewhat famous Pottawatomie woman, for whom the town of Watseka was named, and who had previously been the Indian wife of a fellow-trader. His later years were spent at Bourbonnais Grove, in Kankakee County, where he died, Dec. 12, 1879.

VENICE, a city of Madison County, on the Mississippi River opposite St. Louis and 2 miles north of East St. Louis; is touched by six trunk lines of railroad, and at the eastern approach to the new "Merchants' Bridge," with its roundhouse, has two ferries to St. Louis, street car line, electric lights, water-works, some manufactures and a newspaper. Pop. (1890), 932; (1900), 2,450.

VENICE & CARONDELET RAILROAD. (See Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis (Consolidated) Railroad.)

VERMILION COUNTY, an eastern county, bordering on the Indiana State line, and drained by the Vermilion and Little Vermilion Rivers, from which it takes its name. It was originally organized in 1826, when it extended north to Lake Michigan. Its present area is 926 square miles. The discovery of salt springs, in 1819, aided in attracting immigration to this region, but the manufacture of salt was abandoned many years ago. Early settlers were Seymour Treat, James Butler, Henry Johnston, Harvey Lidington, Gurdon S. Hubbard and Daniel W. Beckwith. James Butler and Achilles Morgan were the first County Commissioners. Many interesting fossil remains have been found, among them the skeleton of a mastodon (1868). Fire clay is found in large quantities, and two coal seams cross the county. The surface is level and the soil fertile. Corn is the chief agricultural product, although oats, wheat, rye, and potatoes are extensively cultivated. Stock-raising and wool-growing are important industries. There are also several manufactories, chiefly at Danville, which is the county-seat. Coal mining is carried on extensively, especially in the vicinity of Danville. Population (1880), 41,588; (1890), 49,905; (1900), 65,635.

VERMILION RIVER, a tributary of the Illinois; rises in Ford and the northern part of McLean County, and, running northwestward through Livingston and the southern part of La Salle Counties, enters the Illinois River nearly opposite the city of La Salle; has a length of about 80 miles.

VERMILION RIVER, an affluent of the Wabash, formed by the union of the North, Middle and South Forks, which rise in Illinois, and come together near Danville in this State. It flows southeastward, and enters the Wabash in Vermilion County, Ind. The main stream is about 28 miles long. The South Fork, however, which rises in Champaign County and runs eastward, has a length of nearly 75 miles. The Little Vermilion River enters the Wabash about 7 or 8 miles below the Vermilion, which is sometimes called the Big Vermilion, by way of distinction.

VERMONT, a village in Fulton County, at junction of Galesburg and St. Louis Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 24 miles north of Beardstown; has a carriage manufactory, flour and saw-mills, brick and tile works, electric light plant, besides two banks, four churches, two graded schools, and one weekly newspaper. An artesian well has been sunk here to the depth of 2,600 feet. Pop. (1900), 1,195.

VERSAILLES, a town of Brown County, on the Wabash Railway, 48 miles east of Quincy; is in a timber and agricultural district; has a bank and weekly newspaper. Population (1900), 524.

VIENNA, the county-seat of Johnson County, situated on the Cairo and Vincennes branch of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad, 36 miles north-northwest of Cairo. It has a court house, several churches, a graded school, banks and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 494; (1890), 828; (1900), 1,217.

VIGO, Francois, pioneer and early Indian-trader, was born at Mondovi, Sardinia (Western Italy), in 1747, served as a private soldier, first at Havana and afterwards at New Orleans. When he left the Spanish army he came to St. Louis, then the military headquarters of Spain for Upper Louisiana, where he became a partner of Commandant de Leba, and was extensively engaged in the fur-trade among the Indians on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. On the occupation of Kaskaskia by Col. George Rogers Clark in 1778, he rendered valuable aid to the Americans, turning out supplies to feed Clark's destitute soldiers, and accepting Virginia Continental money, at par, in payment, incurring liabilities in excess of $20,000. This, followed by the confiscation policy of the British Colonel Hamilton, at Vincennes, where Vigo had considerable property, reduced him to extreme penury. H. W. Beckwith says that, towards the close of his life, he lived on his little homestead near Vincennes, in great poverty but cheerful to the last He was never recompensed during his life for his sacrifices in behalf of the American cause, though a tardy restitution was attempted, after his death, by the United States Government, for the benefit of his heirs. He died, at a ripe old age, at Vincennes, Ind., March 22, 1835.

VILLA RIDGE, a village of Pulaski County, on the Illinois Central Railway, 10 miles north of Cairo. Population, 500.

VINCENNES, Jean Baptiste Bissot, a Canadian explorer, born at Quebec, January, 1688, of aristocratic and wealthy ancestry. He was closely connected with Louis Joliet — probably his brother-in-law, although some historians say that he was the latter's nephew. He entered the Canadian army as ensign in 1701, and had a long and varied experience as an Indian fighter. About 1725 he took up his residence on what is now the site of the present city of Vincennes, Ind., which is named in his honor. Here he erected an earth fort and established a trading-post. In 1726, under orders, he co-operated with D'Artaguiette (then the French Governor of Illinois) in an expedition against the Chickasaws. The expedition resulted disastrously. Vincennes and D'Artaguiette were captured and burned at the stake, together with Father Senat (a Jesuit priest) and others of the command. (See also D'Artaguiette; French Governors of Illinois.)

VIRDEN, a city of Macoupin County, on the Chicago & Alton and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroads, 21 miles south by west from Springfield, and 31 miles east-southeast of Jacksonville. It has five churches, two banks, two newspapers, telephone service, electric lights, grain elevators, machine shop, and extensive coal mines. Pop. (1900), 2,280; (school census 1903), 3,651.

VIRGINIA, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Cass County, situated at the intersection of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis, with the Springfield Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 15 miles north of Jacksonville, and 33 miles west-northwest of Springfield. It lies in the heart of a rich agricultural region. There is a flouring mill here, besides manufactories of wagons and cigars. The city has two National and one State bank, five churches, a high school, and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 1,602; (1900), 1,600.

VOCKE, William, lawyer, was born at Minden, Westphalia (Germany), in 1839, the son of a Government Secretary in the Prussian service. Having lost his father at an early age, he emigrated to America in 1856, and, after a short stay in New York, came to Chicago, where he found employment as a paper-carrier for "The Staats-Zeitung," meanwhile giving his attention to the study of law. Later, he became associated with a real-estate firm; on the commencement of the Civil War, enlisted as a private in a three-months' regiment, and, finally, in the Twenty-fourth Illinois (the first Hecker regiment), in which he rose to the rank of Captain. Returning from the army, he was employed as city editor of "The Staats-Zeitung," but, in 1865, became Clerk of the Chicago Police Court, serving until 1869. Meanwhile he had been admitted to the bar, and, on retirement from office, began practice, but, in 1870, was elected Representative in the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, in which he bore a leading part in framing "the burnt record act" made necessary by the fire of 1871. He has since been engaged in the practice of his profession, having been, for a number of years, attorney for the German Consulate at Chicago, also serving, for several years, on the Chicago Board of Education. Mr. Vocke is a man of high literary tastes, as shown by his publication, in 1869, of a volume of poems translated from the German, which has been highly commended, besides a legal work on "The Administration of Justice in the United States, and a Synopsis of the Mode of Procedure in our Federal and State Courts and All Federal and State Laws relating to Subjects of Interest to Aliens," which has been published in the German Language, and is highly valued by German lawyers and business men. Mr. Vocke was a member of the Republican National Convention of 1872 at Philadelphia, which nominated General Grant for the Presidency a second time.

VOLK, Leonard Wells, a distinguished Illinois sculptor, born at Wellstown (afterwards Wells), N. Y., Nov. 7, 1828. Later, his father, who was a marble cutter, removed to Pittsfield, Mass., and, at the age of 16, Leonard began work in his shop. In 1848 he came west and began modeling in clay and drawing at St. Louis, being only self-taught. He married a cousin of Stephen A. Douglas, and the latter, in 1855, aided him in the prosecution of his art studies in Italy. Two years afterward he settled in Chicago, where he modeled the first portrait bust ever made in the city, having for his subject his first patron—the "Little Giant." The next year (1858) he made a life-size marble statue of Douglas. In 1860 he made a portrait bust of Abraham Lincoln, which passed into the possession of the Chicago Historical Society and was destroyed in the great fire of 1871. In 1868-69, and again in 1871-72, he revisited Italy for purposes of study. In 1867 he was elected academician of the Chicago Academy, and was its President for eight years. He was genial, companionable and charitable, and always ready to assist his younger and less fortunate professional brethren. His best known works are the Douglas Monument, in Chicago, several soldiers' monuments in different parts of the country, the statuary for the Henry Keep mausoleum at Watertown, N. Y., life-size statues of Lincoln and Douglas, in the State House at Springfield, and numerous portrait busts of men eminent in political, ecclesiastical and commercial life. Died, at Osceola, Wis., August 18, 1895.

VOSS, Arno, journalist, lawyer and soldier, born in Prussia, April 16, 1821; emigrated to the United States and was admitted to the bar in Chicago, in 1848, the same year becoming editor of "The Staats-Zeitung"; was elected City Attorney in 1852, and again in 1853; in 1861 became Major of the Sixth Illinois Cavalry, but afterwards assisted in organizing the Twelfth Cavalry, of which he was commissioned Colonel, still later serving with his command in Virginia. He was at Harper's Ferry at the time of the capture of that place in September, 1862, but succeeded in cutting his way, with his command, through the rebel lines, escaping into Pennsylvania. Compelled by ill-health to leave the service in 1863, he retired to a farm in Will County, but, in 1869, returned to Chicago, where he served as Master in Chancery and was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly in 1876, but declined a re-election in 1878. Died, in Chicago, March 23, 1888.

WABASH, CHESTER & WESTERN RAILROAD, a railway running from Chester to Mount Vernon, Ill., 63.33 miles, with a branch extending from Chester to Menard, 1.5 miles; total mileage, 64.83. It is of standard gauge, and almost entirely laid with 60-pound steel rails.—(HISTORY.) It was organized, Feb. 20, 1878, as successor to the Iron Mountain, Chester & Eastern Railroad. During the fiscal year 1893-94 the Company purchased the Tamaroa & Mount Vernon Railroad, extending from Mount Vernon to Tamaroa, 22.5 miles. Capital stock (1898), $1,250,000; bonded indebtedness, $690,000; total capitalization, $2,028,573.

WABASH COUNTY, situated in the southeast corner of the State; area 220 square miles. The county was carved out from Edwards in 1824, and the first court house built at Centerville, in May, 1826. Later, Mount Carmel was made the county-seat. (See Mount Carmel.) The Wabash River drains the county on the east; other streams are the Bon Pas, Coffee and Crawfish Creeks. The surface is undulating with a fair growth of timber. The chief industries are the raising of live-stock and the cultivation of cereals. The wool-crop is likewise valuable. The county is crossed by the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis and the Cairo and Vincennes Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroads. Population (1880), 4,945; (1890), 11,866; (1900), 12,583.

WABASH RAILROAD, an extensive railroad system connecting the cities of Detroit and Toledo, on the east, with Kansas City and Council Bluffs, on the west, with branches to Chicago, St. Louis, Quincy and Altamont, Ill., and to Keokuk and Des Moines, Iowa. The total mileage (1898) is 1,874.96 miles, of which 677.4 miles are in Illinois—all of the latter being the property of the company, besides 176.7 miles of yard-tracks, sidings and spurs. The company has trackage privileges over the Toledo, Peoria & Western (6.5 miles) between Elvaston and Keokuk bridge, and over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy (21.8 miles) between Camp Point and Quincy.—(HISTORY.) A considerable portion of this road in Illinois is constructed on the line upon which the Northern Cross Railroad was projected, in the "internal improvement" scheme adopted in 1837, and embraces the only section of road completed under that scheme—that between the Illinois River and Springfield. (1) The construction of this section was begun by the State, May 11, 1837, the first rail laid, May 9, 1838, the road completed to Jacksonville, Jan. 1, 1840, and to Springfield, May 13, 1842. It was operated for a time by "mule power," but the income was insufficient to keep the line in repair and it was finally abandoned. In 1847 the line was sold for $21,100 to N. H. Ridgely and Thomas Mather of Springfield, and by them transferred to New York capitalists, who organized the Sangamon & Morgan Railroad Company, reconstructed the road from Springfield to Naples and opened it for business in 1849. (2) In 1853 two corporations were organized in Ohio and Indiana, respectively, under the name of the Toledo & Illinois Railroad and the Lake Erie, Wabash & St. Louis Railroad, which were consolidated as the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railroad, June 25, 1856. In 1858 these lines were sold separately under foreclosure, and finally reorganized, under a special charter granted by the Illinois Legislature, under the name of the Great Western Railroad Company. (3) The Quincy & Toledo Railroad, extending from Camp Point to the Illinois River opposite Meredosia, was constructed in 1858-59, and that, with the Illinois & Southern Iowa (from Clayton to Keokuk), was united, July 1, 1865, with the eastern divisions extending to Toledo, the new organization taking the name of the main line, (Toledo, Wabash & Western). (4) The Hannibal & Naples Division (49.6 miles), from Bluffs to Hannibal, Mo., was chartered in 1863, opened for business in 1870 and leased to the Toledo, Wabash & Western. The latter defaulted on its interest in 1875, was placed in the hands of a receiver and, in 1877, was turned over to a new company under the name of the Wabash Railway Company. (5) In 1868 the company, as it then existed, promoted and secured the construction, and afterwards acquired the ownership, of a line extending from Decatur to East St. Louis (110.5 miles) under the name of the Decatur & East St. Louis Railroad. (6) The Eel River Railroad, from Butler to Logansport, Ind., was acquired in 1877, and afterwards extended to Detroit under the name of the Detroit, Butler & St. Louis Railroad, completing the connection from Logansport to Detroit.—In November, 1879, the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company was organized, took the property and consolidated it with certain lines west of the Mississippi, of which the chief was the St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern. A line had been projected from Decatur to Chicago as early as 1870, but, not having been constructed in 1881, the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific purchased what was known as the Chicago & Paducah Railroad, uniting with the main line at Bement, and (by way of the Decatur and St. Louis Division) giving a direct line between Chicago and St. Louis. At this time the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific was operating the following additional leased lines: Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur (67.2 miles); Hannibal & Central Missouri (70.2 miles); Lafayette, Muncie & Bloomington (36.7 miles), and the Lafayette Bloomington & Muncie (80 miles). A connection between Chicago on the west and Toledo and Detroit on the east was established over the Grand Trunk road in 1882, but, in 1890, the company constructed a line from Montpelier, Ohio, to Clark, Ind. (149.7 miles), thence by track lease to Chicago (17.5 miles), giving an independent line between Chicago and Detroit by what is known to investors as the Detroit & Chicago Division.

The total mileage of the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific system, in 1884, amounted to over 3,600 miles; but, in May of that year, default having been made in the payment of interest, the work of disintegration began. The main line east of the Mississippi and that on the west were separated, the latter taking the name of the "Wabash Western." The Eastern Division was placed in the hands of a receiver, so remaining until May, 1889, when the two divisions, having been bought in by a purchasing committee, were consolidated under the present name. The total earnings and income of the road in Illinois, for the fiscal year 1898, were $4,402,621, and the expenses $4,836,110. The total capital invested (1898) was $139,889,643, including capital stock of $52,000,000 and bonds to the amount of $81,-534,000.

WABASH RIVER, rises in northwestern Ohio, passes into Indiana, and runs northwest to Huntington. It then flows nearly due west to Logansport, thence southwest to Covington, finally turning southward to Terre Haute, a few miles below which it strikes the western boundary of Indiana. It forms the boundary between Illinois and Indiana (taking into account its numerous windings) for some 200 miles. Below Vincennes it runs in a south-southwesterly direction, and enters the Ohio at the south-west extremity of Indiana, near latitude 37° 49′ north. Its length is estimated at 557 miles.

WAIT, William Smith, pioneer, and original suggestor of the Illinois Central Railroad, was born in Portland, Maine, March 5, 1789, and educated in the public schools of his native place. In his youth he entered a book-publishing house in which his father was a partner, and was for a time associated with the publication of a weekly paper. Later the business was conducted at Boston, and extended over the Eastern, Middle, and Southern States, the subject of this sketch making extensive tours in the interest of the firm. In 1817 he made a tour to the West, reaching St. Louis, and, early in the following year, visited Bond County, Ill., where he made his first entry of land from the Government. Returning to Boston a few months later, he continued in the service of the publishing firm until 1820, when he again came to Illinois, and, in 1821, began farming in Ripley Township, Bond County. Returning East in 1824, he spent the next ten years in the employment of the publishing firm, with occasional visits to Illinois. In 1835 he located permanently near Greenville, Bond County, and engaged extensively in farming and fruit-raising, planting one of the largest apple orchards in the State at that early day. In 1845 he presided as chairman over the National Industrial Convention in New York, and, in 1848, was nominated as the candidate of the National Reform Association for Vice-President on the ticket with Gerrit Smith of New York, but declined. He was also prominent in County and State Agricultural Societies. Mr Wait has been credited with being one of the first (if not the very first) to suggest the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad, which he did as early as 1835; was also one of the prime movers in the construction of the Mississippi & Atlantic Railroad—now the "Vandalia Line"—giving much time to the latter enterprise from 1846 for many years, and was one of the original incorporators of the St. Louis & Illinois Bridge Company. Died, July 17, 1865.

WALKER, Cyrus, pioneer, lawyer, born in Rockbridge County, Va., May 14, 1791; was taken while an infant to Adair County, Ky., and came to Macomb, Ill., in 1833, being the second lawyer to locate in McDonough County. He had a wide reputation as a successful advocate, especially in criminal cases, and practiced extensively in the courts of Western Illinois and also in Iowa. Died, Dec. 1, 1875. Mr. Walker was uncle of the late Pinkney H. Walker of the Supreme Court, who studied law with him. He was Whig candidate for Presidential Elector for the State-at-large in 1840.

WALKER, James Barr, clergyman, was born in Philadelphia, July 29, 1805; in his youth served as errand-boy in a country store near Pittsburg and spent four years in a printing office; then became clerk in the office of Mordecai M. Noah, in New York, studied law and graduated from Western Reserve College, Ohio; edited various religious papers, including "The Watchman of the Prairies" (now "The Advance") of Chicago, was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Chicago, and for some time was lecturer on "Harmony between Science and Revealed Religion" at Oberlin College and Chicago Theological Seminary. He was author of several volumes, one of which—"The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," published anonymously under the editorship of Prof. Calvin E. Stowe (1855)—ran through several editions and was translated into five different languages, including Hindustanee. Died, at Wheaton, Ill., March 6, 1887.

WALKER, James Monroe, corporation lawyer and Railway President, was born at Claremont, N. H., Feb. 14, 1820. At fifteen he removed with his parents to a farm in Michigan; was educated at Oberlin, Ohio, and at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, graduating from the latter in 1849. He then entered a law office as clerk and student, was admitted to the bar the next year, and soon after elected Prosecuting Attorney of Washtenaw County; was also local attorney for the Michigan Central Railway, for which, after his removal to Chicago in 1853, he became General Solicitor. Two years later the firm of Sedgwick & Walker, which had been organized in Michigan, became attorneys for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and, until his death, Mr. Walker was associated with this company, either as General Solicitor, General Counsel or President, filling the latter position from 1870 to 1875. Mr. Walker organized both the Chicago and Kansas City stock-yards, and was President of these corporations, as also of the Wilmington Coal Company, down to the time of his death, which occurred on Jan. 22, 1881, as a result of heart disease.

WALKER, (Rev.) Jesse, Methodist Episcopal missionary, was born in Rockingham County, Va., June 9, 1766; in 1800 removed to Tennessee, became a traveling preacher in 1802, and, in 1806, came to Illinois under the presiding-eldership of Rev. William McKendree (afterwards Bishop), locating first at Turkey Hill, St. Clair County. In 1807 he held a camp meeting near Edwardsville—the first on Illinois soil. Later, he transferred his labors to Northern Illinois; was at Peoria in 1824; at Ottawa in 1825, and devoted much time to missionary work among the Pottawatomies, maintaining a school among them for a time. He visited Chicago in 1826, and there is evidence that he was a prominent resident there for several years, occupying a log house, which he used as a church and living-room, on "Wolf Point" at the junction of the North and South Branches of the Chicago River. While acting as superintendent of the Fox River mission, his residence appears to have been at Plainfield, in the northern part of Will County. Died, Oct. 5, 1835.

WALKER, Pinkney H., lawyer and jurist, was born in Adair County, Ky., June 18, 1815. His boyhood was chiefly passed in farm work and as clerk in a general store; in 1834 he came to Illinois, settling at Rushville, where he worked in a store for four years. In 1838 he removed to Macomb, where he began attendance at an academy and the study of law with his uncle, Cyrus Walker, a leading lawyer of his time. He was admitted to the bar in 1839, practicing at Macomb until 1848, when he returned to Rushville. In 1853 he was elected Judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, to fill a vacancy, and re-elected in 1855. This position he resigned in 1858, having been appointed, by Governor Bissell, to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court occasioned by the resignation of Judge Skinner. Two months later he was elected to the same position, and re-elected in 1867 and '76. He presided as Chief Justice from January, 1864, to June, '67, and again from June, 1874, to June, '75. Before the expiration of his last term he died, Feb. 7, 1885.

WALL, George Willard, lawyer, politician and Judge, was born at Chillicothe, Ohio, April 22, 1839; brought to Perry County, Ill., in infancy, and received his preparatory education at McKendree College, finally graduating from the University of Michigan in 1858, and from the Cincinnati Law School in 1859, when he began practice at Duquoin, Ill. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and, from 1864 to '68, served as State's Attorney for the Third Judicial District; was also a Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. In 1872 he was an unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Congress, although running ahead of his ticket. In 1877 he was elected to the bench of the Third Circuit, and re-elected in '79, '85 and '91, much of the time since 1877 being on duty upon the Appellate bench. His home is at Duquoin.

WALLACE, (Rev.) Peter, D.D., clergyman and soldier; was born in Mason County, Ky., April 11, 1813; taken in infancy to Brown County, Ohio, where he grew up on a farm until 15 years of age, when he was apprenticed to a carpenter; at the age of 20 came to Illinois, where he became a contractor and builder, following this occupation for a number of years. He was converted in 1835 at Springfield, Ill., and, some years later, having decided to enter the ministry, was admitted to the Illinois Conference as a deacon by Bishop E. S. Janes in 1855, and placed in charge of the Danville Circuit. Two years later he was ordained by Bishop Scott, and, in the next few years, held pastorates at various places in the central and eastern parts of the State. From 1867 to 1874 he was Presiding Elder of the Mattoon and Quincy Districts, and, for six years, held the position of President of the Board of Trustees of Chaddock College at Quincy, from which he received the degree of D.D. in 1881. In the second year of the Civil War he raised a company in Sangamon County, was chosen its Captain and assigned to the Seventy-third Illinois Volunteers, known as the "preachers' regiment"—all of its officers being ministers. In 1864 he was compelled by ill-health to resign his commission. While pastor of the church at Saybrook, Ill., he was offered the position of Postmaster of that place, which he decided to accept, and was allowed to retire from the active ministry. On retirement from office, in 1884, he removed to Chicago. In 1889 he was appointed by Governor Fifer the first Chaplain of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Quincy, but retired some four years afterward, when he returned to Chicago. Dr. Wallace was an eloquent and effective preacher and continued to preach, at intervals, until within a short time of his decease, which occurred in Chicago, Feb. 21, 1897, in his 84th year. A zealous patriot, he frequently spoke very effectively upon the political rostrum. Originally a Whig, he became a Republican on the organization of that party, and took pride in the fact that the first vote he ever cast was for Abraham Lincoln, for Representative in the Legislature, in 1834. He was a Knight Templar, Vice-President of the Tippecanoe Club of Chicago, and, at his death, Chaplain of America Post, No. 708, G. A. R.

WALLACE, William Henry Lamb, lawyer and soldier, was born at Urbana, Ohio, July 8, 1821; brought to Illinois in 1833, his father settling near La Salle and, afterwards, at Mount Morris, Ogle County, where young Wallace attended the Rock River Seminary; was admitted to the bar in 1845; in 1846 enlisted as a private in the First Illinois Volunteers (Col. John J. Hardin's regiment), for the Mexican War, rising to the rank of Adjutant and participting in the battle of Buena Vista (where his commander was killed), and in other engagements. Returning to his profession at Ottawa, he served as District Attorney (1852-56), then became partner of his father-in-law, Col. T. Lyle Dickey, afterwards of the Supreme Court. In April, 1861, he was one of the first to answer the call for troops by enlisting, and became Colonel of the Eleventh Illinois (three-months' men), afterwards re-enlisting for three years. As commander of a brigade he participated in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, in February, 1862, receiving promotion as Brigadier-General for gallantry. At Pittsburg Landing (Shiloh), as commander of Gen. C. F. Smith's Division, devolving on him on account of the illness of his superior officer, he showed great courage, but fell mortally wounded, dying at Charleston, Tenn., April 10, 1862. His career promised great brilliancy and his loss was greatly deplored.—Martin R. M. (Wallace), brother of the preceding, was born at Urbana, Ohio, Sept. 29, 1829, came to La Salle County, Ill., with his father's family and was educated in the local schools and at Rock River Seminary; studied law at Ottawa, and was admitted to the bar in 1856, soon after locating in Chicago. In 1861 he assisted in organizing the Fourth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, of which he became Lieutenant-Colonel, and was complimented, in 1865, with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. After the war he served as Assessor of Internal Revenue (1866-69); County Judge (1869-77); Prosecuting Attorney (1884); and, for many years past, has been one of the Justices of the Peace of the city of Chicago.

WALNUT, a town of Bureau County, on the Mendota and Fulton branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 26 miles west of Mendota; is in a farming and stock-raising district; has two banks and two newspapers. Population (1890), 605; (1900), 791.

WAR OF 1812. Upon the declaration of war by Congress, in June, 1812, the Pottawatomies, and most of the other tribes of Indians in the Territory of Illinois, strongly sympathized with the British. The savages had been hostile and restless for some time previous, and blockhouses and family forts had been erected at a number of points, especially in the settlements most exposed to the incursions of the savages. Governor Edwards, becoming apprehensive of an outbreak, constructed Fort Russell, a few miles from Edwardsville. Taking the field in person, he made this his headquarters, and collected a force of 250 mounted volunteers, who were later reinforced by two companies of rangers, under Col. William Russell, numbering about 100 men. An independent company of twenty-one spies, of which John Reynolds—afterwards Governor—was a member, was also formed and led by Capt. Samuel Judy. The Governor organized his little army into two regiments under Colonels Rector and Stephenson, Colonel Russell serving as second to the commander-in-chief, other members of his staff being Secretary Nathaniel Pope and Robert K. McLaughlin. On Oct. 18, 1812, Governor Edwards, with his men, set out for Peoria, where it was expected that their force would meet that of General Hopkins, who had been sent from Kentucky with a force of 2,000 men. En route, two Kickapoo villages were burned, and a number of Indians unnecessarily slain by Edwards' party. Hopkins had orders to disperse the Indians on the Illinois and Wabash Rivers, and destroy their villages. He determined, however, on reaching the headwaters of the Vermilion to proceed no farther. Governor Edwards reached the head of Peoria Lake, but, failing to meet Hopkins, returned to Fort Russell. About the same time Capt. Thomas E. Craig led a party, in two boats, up the Illinois River to Peoria. His boats, as he alleged, having been fired upon in the night by Indians, who were harbored and protected by the French citizens of Peoria, he burned the greater part of the village, and capturing the population, carried them down the river, putting them on shore, in the early part of the winter, just below Alton. Other desultory expeditions marked the campaigns of 1813 and 1814. The Indians meanwhile gaining courage, remote settlements were continually harassed by marauding bands. Later in 1814, an expedition, led by Major (afterwards President) Zachary Taylor, ascended the Mississippi as far as Rock Island, where he found a large force of Indians, supported by British regulars with artillery. Finding himself unable to cope with so formidable a foe, Major Taylor retreated down the river. On the site of the present town of Warsaw he threw up fortifications, which he named Fort Edwards, from which point he was subsequently compelled to retreat. The same year the British, with their Indian allies, descended from Mackinac, captured Prairie du Chien, and burned Forts Madison and Johnston, after which they retired to Cap au Gris. The treaty of Ghent, signed Dec. 24, 1814, closed the war, although no formal treaties were made with the tribes until the year following.

WAR OF THE REBELLION. At the outbreak of the Civil War, the executive chair, in Illinois, was occupied by Gov. Richard Yates. Immediately upon the issuance of President Lincoln's first call for troops (April 15, 1861), the Governor issued his proclamation summoning the Legislature together in special session and, the same day, issued a call for "six regiments of militia," the quota assigned to the State under call of the President. Public excitement was at fever heat, and dormant patriotism in both sexes was aroused as never before. Party lines were broken down and, with comparatively few exceptions, the mass of the people were actuated by a common sentiment of patriotism. On April 19, Governor Yates was instructed, by the Secretary of War, to take possession of Cairo as an important strategic point. At that time, the State militia organizations were few in number and poorly equipped, consisting chiefly of independent companies in the larger cities. The Governor acted with great promptitude, and, on April 21, seven companies, numbering 595 men, commanded by Gen. Richard K. Swift of Chicago, were en route to Cairo. The first volunteer company to tender its services, in response to Governor Yates' proclamation, on April 16, was the Zouave Grays of Springfield. Eleven other companies were tendered the same day, and, by the evening of the 18th, the number had been increased to fifty. Simultaneously with these proceedings, Chicago bankers tendered to the Governor a war loan of $500,000, and those of Springfield, $100,000. The Legislature, at its special session, passed acts increasing the efficiency of the militia law, and provided for the creation of a war fund of $2,000,000. Besides the six regiments already called for, the raising of ten additional volunteer regiments and one battery of light artillery was authorized. The last of the six regiments, apportioned to Illinois under the first presidential call, was dispatched to Cairo early in May. The six regiments were numbered the Seventh to Twelfth, inclusive—the earlier numbers, First to Sixth, being conceded to the six regiments which had served in the war with Mexico. The regiments were commanded, respectively, by Colonels John Cook, Richard J. Oglesby, Eleazer A. Paine, James D. Morgan, William H. L. Wallace, and John McArthur, constituting the "First Brigade of Illinois Volunteers." Benjamin M. Prentiss, having been chosen Brigadier-General on arrival at Cairo, assumed command, relieving General Swift. The quota under the second call, consisting of ten regiments, was mustered into service within sixty days, 200 companies being tendered immediately. Many more volunteered than could be accepted, and large numbers crossed to Missouri and enlisted in regiments forming in that State. During June and July the Secretary of War authorized Governor Yates to recruit twenty-two additional regiments (seventeen infantry and five cavalry), which were promptly raised. On July 22, the day following the defeat of the Union army at Bull Run, President Lincoln called for 500,000 more volunteers. Governor Yates immediately responded with an offer to the War Department of sixteen more regiments (thirteen of infantry and three of cavalry), and a battalion of artillery, adding, that the State claimed it as her right, to do her full share toward the preservation of the Union. Under supplemental authority, received from the Secretary of War in August, 1861, twelve additional regiments of infantry and five of cavalry were raised, and, by December, 1861, the State had 43,000 volunteers in the field and 17,000 in camps of instruction. Other calls were made in July and August, 1862, each for 300,000 men. Illinois' quota, under both calls, was over 52,000 men, no regard being paid to the fact that the State had already furnished 16,000 troops in excess of its quotas under previous calls. Unless this number of volunteers was raised by September 1, a draft would be ordered. The tax was a severe one, inasmuch as it would fall chiefly upon the prosperous citizens, the floating population, the idle and the extremely poor having already followed the army's march, either as soldiers or as camp-followers. But recruiting was actively carried on, and, aided by liberal bounties in many of the counties, in less than a fortnight the 52,000 new troops were secured, the volunteers coming largely from the substantial classes — agricultural, mercantile, artisan and professional. By the end of December, fifty-nine regiments and four batteries had been dispatched to the front, besides a considerable number to fill up regiments already in the field, which had suffered severely from battle, exposure and disease. At this time, Illinois had an aggregate of over 135,000 enlisted men in the field. The issue of President Lincoln's preliminary proclamation of emancipation, in September, 1862, was met by a storm of hostile criticism from his political opponents, who—aided by the absence of so large a proportion of the loyal population of the State in the field—were able to carry the elections of that year. Consequently, when the Twenty-third General Assembly convened in regular session at Springfield, on Jan. 5, 1863, a large majority of that body was not only opposed to both the National and State administrations, but avowedly opposed to the further prosecution of the war under the existing policy. The Legislature reconvened in June, but was prorogued by Governor Yates. Between Oct. 1, 1863, and July 1, 1864, 16,000 veterans re-enlisted and 37,000 new volunteers were enrolled; and, by the date last mentioned, Illinois had furnished to the Union army 244,496 men, being 14,596 in excess of the allotted quotas, constituting fifteen per cent of the entire population. These were comprised in 151 regiments of infantry, 17 of cavalry and two complete regiments of artillery, besides twelve independent batteries. The total losses of Illinois organizations, during the war, has been reported at 34,834, of which 5,874 were killed in battle, 4,020 died from wounds, 22,786 from disease and 2,154 from other causes—being a total of thirteen per cent of the entire force of the State in the service. The part which Illinois played in the contest was conspicuous for patriotism, promptness in response to every call, and the bravery and efficiency of its troops in the field—reflecting honor upon the State and its history. Nor were its loyal citizens—who, while staying at home, furnished moral and material support to the men at the front—less worthy of praise than those who volunteered. By upholding the Government—National and State—and by their zeal and energy in collecting and sending forward immense quantities of supplies—surgical, medical and other—often at no little sacrifice, they contributed much to the success of the Union arms. WAR OF THE REBELLION (HISTORY OF ILLINOIS REGIMENTS). The following is a list of the various military organizations mustered into the service during the Civil War (1861-65), with the terms of service and a summary of the more important events in the history of each, while in the field:

SEVENTH INFANTRY. Illinois having sent six regiments to the Mexican War, by courtesy the numbering of the regiments which took part in the war for the Union began with number Seven. A number of regiments which responded to the first call of the President, claimed the right to be recognized as the first regiment in the field, but the honor was finally accorded to that organized at Springfield by Col. John Cook, and hence his regiment was numbered Seventh. It was mustered into the service, April 25, 1861, and remained at Mound City during the three months' service, the period of its first enlistment. It was subsequently reorganized and mustered for the three years' service, July 25, 1861, and was engaged in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Cherokee, Allatoona Pass, Salkahatchie Swamp, Bentonville and Columbia. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans at Pulaski, Tenn., Dec. 22, 1863; was mustered out at Louisville, July 9, 1865, and paid off and discharged at Springfield, July 11.

EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, and mustered in for three months' service, April 26, 1861, Richard J. Oglesby of Decatur, being appointed Colonel. It remained at Cairo during its term of service, when it was mustered out. July 25, 1861, it was reorganized and mustered in for three years' service. It participated in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Port Gibson, Thompson Hill, Raymond, Champion Hill, Vicksburg, Brownsville, and Spanish Fort; re-enlisted as veterans, March 24, 1864; was mustered out at Baton Rouge, May 4, 1866, paid off and discharged, May 13, having served five years.

NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service at Springfield, April 26, 1861, for the term of three months, under Col. Eleazer A. Paine. It was reorganized at Cairo, in August, for three years, being composed of companies from St. Clair, Madison, Montgomery, Pulaski, Alexander and Mercer Counties; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Jackson (Tenn.), Meed Creek Swamps, Salem, Wyatt, Florence, Montezuma, Athens and Grenada. The regiment was mounted, March 15, 1863, and so continued during the remainder of its service. Mustered out at Louisville, July 9, 1865.

TENTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into the service for three months, on April 29, 1861, at Cairo, and on July 29, 1861, was mustered into the service for three years, with Col. James D. Morgan in command. It was engaged at Sykeston, New Madrid, Corinth, Missionary Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Rome, Kenesaw, Chattahoochie, Savannah and Bentonville. Re-enlisted as veterans, Jan. 1, 1864, and mustered out of service, July 4, 1865, at Louisville, and received final discharge and pay, July 11, 1865, at Chicago.

ELEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, April 30, 1861, for three months. July 30, the regiment was mustered out, and re-enlisted for three years' service. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Tallahatchie, Vicksburg, Liverpool Heights, Yazoo City, Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely. W. H. L. Wallace, afterwards Brigadier-General and killed at Shiloh, was its first Colonel. Mustered out of service, at Baton Rouge, July 14, 1865; paid off and discharged at Springfield.

TWELFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service for three years, August 1, 1861; was engaged at Columbus, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Lay's Ferry, Rome Cross Roads, Dallas, Kenesaw, Nickajack Creek, Bald Knob, Decatur, Ezra Church, Atlanta, Allatoona and Goldsboro. On Jan. 16, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. John McArthur was its first Colonel, succeeded by Augustus L. Chetlain, both being promoted to Brigadier-Generalships. Mustered out of service at Louisville, Ky., July 10, 1865, and received final pay and discharge, at Springfield, July 18.

THIRTEENTH INFANTRY. One of the regiments organized under the act known as the "Ten Regiment Bill"; was mustered into service on May 24, 1861, for three years, at Dixon, with John B. Wyman as Colonel; was engaged at Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, Vicksburg, Jackson, Missionary Ridge, Rossville and Ringgold Gap. Mustered out at Springfield, June 18, 1864, having served three years and two months.

FOURTEENTH INFANTRY. One of the regiments raised under the "Ten Regiment Bill," which anticipated the requirements of the General Government by organizing, equipping and drilling a regiment in each Congressional District in the State for thirty days, unless sooner required for service by the United States. It was mustered in at Jacksonville for three years, May 25, 1861, under command of John M. Palmer as its first Colonel; was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Metamora, Vicksburg, Jackson, Fort Beauregard and Meridian; consolidated with the Fifteenth Infantry, as a veteran battalion (both regiments having enlisted as veterans), on July 1, 1864. In October, 1864, the major part of the battalion was captured by General Hood and sent to Andersonville. The remainder participated in the "March to the Sea," and through the campaign in the Carolinas. In the spring of 1865 the battalion organization was discontinued, both regiments having been filled up by recruits. The regiment was mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., Sept. 16, 1865; and arrived at Springfield, Ill., Sept. 22, 2865, where it received final payment and discharge. The aggregate number of men who belonged to this organization was 1,980, and the aggregate mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, 480. During its four years and four months of service, the regiment marched 4,490 miles, traveled by rail, 2,330 miles, and, by river, 4,490 miles—making an aggregate of 11,670 miles.

FIFTEENTH INFANTRY. Raised under the "Ten Regiment Act," in the (then) First Congressional District; was organized at Freeport, and mustered into service, May 24, 1861. It was engaged at Sedalia, Shiloh, Corinth, Metamora Hill, Vicksburg, Fort Beauregard, Champion Hill, Allatoona and Bentonville. In March, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, in July, 1864, was consolidated with the Fourteenth Infantry as a Veteran Battalion. At Big Shanty and Ackworth a large portion of the battalion was captured by General Hood. At Raleigh the Veteran Battalion was discontinued and the Fifteenth reorganized. From July 1, to Sept. 1, 1865, the regiment was stationed at Forts Leavenworth and Kearney. Having been mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, it was sent to Springfield for final payment and discharge—having served four years and four months. Miles marched, 4,299; miles by rail, 2,403, miles by steamer, 4,310; men enlisted from date of organization, 1,963; strength at date of muster-out, 640.

SIXTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into service at Quincy under the "Ten-Regiment Act," May 24, 1861. The regiment was engaged at New Madrid, Tiptonville, Corinth, Buzzards' Roost, Resaca, Rome, Kenesaw Mountain, Chattahoochie River, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Savannah, Columbia, Fayetteville, Averysboro and Bentonville. In December, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans; was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., July 8, 1865, after a term of service of four years and three months, and, a week later, arrived at Springfield, where it received its final pay and discharge papers.

SEVENTEENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service at Peoria, Ill., on May 24, 1861; was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Greenfield (Ark.), Shiloh, Corinth, Hatchie and Vicksburg. In May, 1864, the term of enlistment having expired, the regiment was ordered to Springfield for pay and discharge. Those men and officers who re-enlisted, and those whose term had not expired, were consolidated with the Eighth Infantry, which was mustered out in the spring of 1866.

EIGHTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized under the provisions of the "Ten Regiment Bill," at Anna, and mustered into the service on May 28, 1861, the term of enlistment being for three years. The regiment participated in the capture of Fort McHenry, and was actively engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh and Corinth. It was mustered out at Little Rock, Dec. 16, 1865, and Dec. 31, thereafter, arrived at Springfield, Ill., for payment and discharge. The aggregate enlistments in the regiment, from its organization to date of discharge (rank and file), numbered 2,043.

NINETEENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the United States service for three years, June 17, 1861, at Chicago, embracing four companies which had been accepted under the call for three months' men; participated in the battle of Stone River and in the Tullahoma and Chattanooga campaigns; was also engaged at Davis' Cross Roads, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and Resaca. It was mustered out of service on July 9, 1864, at Chicago. Originally consisting of nearly 1,000 men, besides a large number of recruits received during the war, its strength at the final muster-out was less than 350.

TWENTIETH INFANTRY. Organized, May 14, 1861, at Joliet, and June 13, 1861, and mustered into the service for a term of three years. It participated in the following engagements, battles, sieges, etc.: Fredericktown (Mo.), Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Thompson's Plantation, Champion Hills, Big Black River, Vicksburg, Kenesaw Mountain and Atlanta. After marching through the Carolinas, the regiment was finally ordered to Louisville, where it was mustered out, July 16, 1865, receiving its final discharge at Chicago, on July 24.

TWENTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized under the "Ten Regiment Bill," from the (then) Seventh Congressional District, at Mattoon, and mustered into service for three years, June 28, 1861. Its first Colonel was U. S. Grant, who was in command until August 7, when he was commissioned Brigadier-General. It was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Corinth, Perryville, Murfreesboro, Liberty Gap, Chickamauga, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Chattanooga, in February, 1864. From June, 1864, to December, 1865, it was on duty in Texas. Mustered out at San Antonio, Dec. 16, 1865, and paid off and discharged at Springfield, Jan. 18, 1866.

TWENTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Belleville, and mustered into service, for three years, at Caseyville, Ill., June 25, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Charleston (Mo.), Sikestown, Tiptonville, Farmington, Corinth, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, New Hope Church, and all the battles of the Atlanta campaign, except Rocky Face Ridge. It was mustered out at Springfield, July 7, 1864, the veterans and recruits, whose term of service had not expired, being consolidated with the Forty-second Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

TWENTY-THIRD INFANTRY. The organization of the Twenty-third Infantry Volunteers commenced, at Chicago, under the popular name of the "Irish Brigade," immediately upon the opening of hostilities at Sumter. The formal muster of the regiment, under the command of Col. James A. Mulligan, was made, June 15, 1861, at Chicago, when it was occupying barracks known as Kane's brewery near the river on West Polk Street. It was early ordered to Northern Missouri, and was doing garrison duty at Lexington, when, in September, 1861, it surrendered with the rest of the garrison, to the forces under the rebel General Price, and was paroled. From Oct. 8, 1861, to June 14, 1862, it was detailed to guard prisoners at Camp Douglas. Thereafter it participated in engagements in the Virginias, as follows: at South Fork, Greenland Gap, Philippi, Hedgeville, Leetown, Maryland Heights, Snicker's Gap, Kernstown, Cedar Creek, Winchester, Charlestown, Berryville, Opequan Creek, Fisher's Hill, Harrisonburg, Hatcher's Run and Petersburg. It also took part in the siege of Richmond and the pursuit of Lee, being present at the surrender at Appomattox. In January and February, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Greenland Gap, W. Va. In August, 1864, the ten companies of the Regiment, then numbering 440, were consolidated into five companies and designated, "Battalion, Twenty-third Regiment, Illinois Veteran Volunteer Infantry." The regiment was thanked by Congress for its part at Lexington, and was authorized to inscribe Lexington upon its colors. (See also Mulligan, James A.)

TWENTY-FOURTH INFANTRY, (known as the First Hecker Regiment). Organized at Chicago, with two companies—to-wit: the Union Cadets and the Lincoln Rifles—from the three months' service, in June, 1861, and mustered in, July 8, 1861. It participated in the battles of Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain and other engagements in the Atlanta campaign. It was mustered out of service at Chicago, August 6, 1864. A fraction of the regiment, which had been recruited in the field, and whose term of service had not expired at the date of muster-out, was organized into one company and attached to the Third Brigade, First Division, Fourteenth Army Corps, and mustered out at Camp Butler, August 1, 1865.

TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized from the counties of Kankakee, Iroquois, Ford, Vermilion, Douglas, Coles, Champaign and Edgar, and mustered into service at St. Louis, August 4, 1861. It participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, in the siege of Corinth, the battle of Kenesaw Mountain, the siege of Atlanta, and innumerable skirmishes; was mustered out at Springfield, Sept. 5, 1864. During its three years' service the regiment traveled 4,962 miles, of which 3,252 were on foot, the remainder by steamboat and railroad.

TWENTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service, consisting of seven companies, at Springfield, August 31, 1861. On Jan. 1, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. It was authorized by the commanding General to inscribe upon its banners "New Madrid"; "Island No. 10;" "Farmington;" "Siege of Corinth;" "Iuka;" "Corinth—3d and 4th, 1862;" "Resaca;" "Kenesaw;" "Ezra Church;" "Atlanta;" "Jonesboro;" "Griswoldville;" "McAllister;" "Savannah;" "Columbia," and "Bentonville." It was mustered out at Louisville, July 20, 1865, and paid off and discharged, at Springfield, July 28—the regiment having marched, during its four years of service, 6,931 miles, and fought twenty-eight hard battles, besides innumerable skirmishes.

TWENTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. First organized, with only seven companies, at Springfield, August 10, 1861, and organization completed by the addition of three more companies, at Cairo, on September 1. It took part in the battle of Belmont, the siege of Island No. 10, and the battles of Farmington, Nashville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Calhoun, Adairsville, Dallas, Pine Top Mountain and Kenesaw Mountain, as well as in the investment of Atlanta; was relieved from duty, August 25, 1864, while at the front, and mustered out at Springfield, September 20. Its veterans, with the recruits whose term of service had not expired, were consolidated with the Ninth Infantry.

TWENTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Composed of companies from Pike, Fulton, Schuyler, Mason, Scott and Menard Counties; was organized at Springfield, August 15, 1861, and mustered into service for three years. It participated in the battles of Shiloh and Metamora, the siege of Vicksburg and the battles of Jackson, Mississippi, and Fort Beauregard, and in the capture of Spanish Fort, Fort Blakely and Mobile. From June, 1864, to March, 1866, it was stationed in Texas, and was mustered out at Brownsville, in that State, March 15, 1866, having served four years and seven months. It was discharged, at Springfield, May 13, 1866.

TWENTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Springfield, August 19, 1861, and was engaged at Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the sieges of Corinth, Vicksburg and Mobile. Eight companies were detailed for duty at Holly Springs, and were there captured by General Van Dorn, in December, 1862, but were exchanged, six months later. In January, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, from June, 1864, to November, 1865, was on duty in Texas. It was mustered out of service in that State, Nov. 6, 1865, and received final discharge on November 28.

THIRTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Familiarly known as "Fremont Rifles"; organized in August, 1861, and mustered into service, Sept. 18. The regiment was presented with battle-flags by the Chicago Board of Trade. It participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Neosho, Prairie Grove and Chalk Bluffs, the siege of Vicksburg, and in the battles of Yazoo City and Morgan's Bend. In October, 1863, it was ordered to the defense of the frontier along the Rio Grande; re-enlisted as veterans in February, 1864; took part in the siege and storming of Fort Blakely and the capture of Mobile; from July, 1865, to May, 1866, was again on duty in Texas; was mustered out at Houston, May 15, 1866, and finally discharged at Springfield, May 31, having traveled some 17,000 miles, of which nearly 3,300 were by marching.

THIRTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, in September, 1861. The regiment was engaged in the battles of Fredericktown, Perryville, Knob Gap, Stone River, Liberty Gap, Chickamauga, Pine Top, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville; re-enlisted as veterans in February, 1864; from June to December, 1865, was on duty in Louisiana and Texas; was mustered out at Victoria, Texas, Dec. 31, 1865, and received final discharge at Springfield.

THIRTY-NINTH INFANTRY. The organization of this Regiment was commenced as soon as the news of the firing on Fort Sumter reached Chicago. General Thomas O. Osborne was one of its contemplated field officers, and labored zealously to get it accepted under the first call for troops, but did not accomplish his object. The regiment had already assumed the name of the "Yates Phalanx" in honor of Governor Yates. It was accepted by the War Department on the day succeeding the first Bull Run disaster (July 22, 1861), and Austin Light, of Chicago, was appointed Colonel. Under his direction the organization was completed, and the regiment left Camp Mather, Chicago, on the morning of Oct. 13, 1861. It participated in the battles of Winchester, Malvern Hill (the second), Morris Island, Fort Wagner, Drury's Bluff, and in numerous engagements before Petersburg and Richmond, including the capture of Fort Gregg, and was present at Lee's surrender at Appomattox. In the meantime the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Hilton Head, S. C., in September, 1863. It was mustered out at Norfolk, Dec. 6, 1865, and received final discharge at Chicago, December 16.

FORTIETH INFANTRY. Enlisted from the counties of Franklin, Hamilton, Wayne, White, Wabash, Marion, Clay and Fayette, and mustered into service for three years at Springfield, August 10, 1861. It was engaged at Shiloh, in the siege of Corinth, at Jackson (Miss.), in the siege of Vicksburg, at Missionary Ridge, New Hope Church, Black Jack Knob, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Ezra Chapel, Griswoldville, siege of Savannah, Columbia (S. C.), and Bentonville. It re-enlisted, as veterans, at Scottsboro, Ala., Jan. 1, 1864, and was mustered out at Louisville, July 24, 1865, receiving final discharge at Springfield.

FORTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized at Decatur during July and August, 1861, and was mustered into service, August 5. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, the siege of Corinth, the second battle of Corinth, the siege of Vicksburg and Jackson, in the Red River campaign, at Guntown, Kenesaw Mountain and Allatoona, and participated in the "March to the Sea." It re-enlisted, as veterans, March 17, 1864, at Vicksburg, and was consolidated with the Fifty-third Infantry, Jan. 4, 1865, forming Companies G and H.

FORTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago, July 22, 1861; was engaged at Island No. 10, the siege of Corinth, battles of Farmington, Columbia (Tenn.), was besieged at Nashville, engaged at Stone River, in the Tullahoma campaign, at Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Adairsville, New Hope Church, Pine and Kenesaw Mountains, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Lovejoy Station, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville. It re-enlisted, as veterans, Jan. 1, 1864; was stationed in Texas from July to December, 1865; was mustered out at Indianola, in that State, Dec. 16, 1865, and finally discharged, at Springfield, Jan. 12, 1866.

FORTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield in September, 1861, and mustered into service on Oct. 12. The regiment took part in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh and in the campaigns in West Tennessee, Mississippi and Arkansas; was mustered out at Little Rock, Nov. 30, 1865, and returned to Springfield for final pay and discharge, Dec. 14, 1865.

FORTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized in August, 1861, at Chicago, and mustered into service, Sept. 13, 1861; was engaged at Pea Ridge, Perryville, Stone River, Hoover's Gap, Shelbyville, Tullahoma, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Rocky Face Ridge, Adairsville, Dallas, New Hope Church, Kenesaw Mountain, Gulp's Farm, Chattahoochie River, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans in Tennessee, in January, 1864. From June to September, 1865, it was stationed in Louisiana and Texas, was mustered out at Port Lavaca, Sept. 25, 1865, and received final discharge, at Springfield, three weeks later.

The regiment was engaged in guarding railroads between Memphis and Holly Springs, and in garrison duty at Memphis. After the term of enlistment had expired and the regiment had been mustered out, it aided in the pursuit of General Price through Missouri; was finally discharged at Chicago, after serving about five months

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Mustered into service as a 100-days' regiment, at Elgin, June 16, 1864—strength, 842 men; departed for the field, June 27, 1864; was mustered out at Chicago, Oct. 10, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Freeport as a battalion of eight companies, and sent to Camp Butler, where two companies were added and the regiment mustered into service for 100 days, June 18, 1864. It was ordered to Memphis, Tenn., five days later, and assigned to duty at White's Station, eleven miles from that city, where it was employed in guarding the Memphis & Charleston railroad. It was mustered out at Chicago, on Oct, 27, 1864, the men having voluntarily served one month beyond their term of enlistment.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized at Mattoon, and mustered in, June 11, 1864, for 100 days. It was assigned to garrison duty, and mustered out at Mattoon, Sept. 26, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Alton, in 1864, as a one-year regiment; was mustered into the service, Oct. 21, its strength being 1,159 men. It was mustered out, July 14, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Springfield, June 9, 1864; strength, 880 men. It departed for the field, June 12, 1864; was mustered out, Sept. 23, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Sept. 18, 1864, for one year. Was assigned to the duty of guarding drafted men at Brighton, Quincy, Jacksonville and Springfield, and mustered out at Springfield, July 5, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago, and mustered into service for one year, Feb. 18 and 19, 1865; was engaged chiefly on guard or garrison duty, in scouting and in skirmishing with guerrillas. Mustered out at Nashville, Jan. 22, 1866, and received final discharge at Springfield, Feb. 4.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 21, 1865, for the term of one year; was assigned to garrison and guard duty and mustered out, Sept. 5, 1865, at Nashville, Tenn; arrived at Springfield, Sept. 9, 1865, where it was paid off and discharged.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 11, 1865, and mustered in for one year; was engaged in garrison and guard duty; mustered out, Jan. 27, 1866, at Dalton, Ga., and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, and mustered in, Feb. 14, 1865, for one year; was on duty in Tennessee and Georgia, guarding railroads and garrisoning towns. It was mustered out, Jan. 16, 1866, at Atlanta, Ga., and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIRST INFANTRY. This regiment was organized at Quincy, Ill., and mustered into the United States service, Feb. 23, 1865, and was composed of companies from various parts of the State, recruited, under the call of Dec. 19, 1864. It was engaged in guard duty, with a few guerrilla skirmishes, and was present at the surrender of General Warford's army, at Kingston, Ga.; was mustered out at Columbus, Ga., Jan. 24, 1866, and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge, Feb. 8, 1866.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered in, Feb. 18, 1865, for one year; was mustered out of service, to date Sept. 11, at Memphis, Tenn., and arrived at Camp Butler, Sept. 9, 1865, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago, and mustered in, Feb. 27, 1865, for one year; was not engaged in any battles. It was mustered out, Sept. 15, 1865, and moved to Springfield, Ill., and, Sept. 24, received final pay and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 21, 1865, for one year. Sept. 18, 1865, the regiment was mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., and ordered to Springfield for final payment and discharge, where it arrived, Sept. 22; was paid off and discharged at Camp Butler, Sept. 29.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered in Feb. 28, 1865, for one year, 904 strong. On Sept. 4, 1865, it was mustered out of service, and moved to Camp Butler, where it received final pay and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered in during the months of February and March, 1865, from the northern counties of the State, for the term of one year. The officers of the regiment have left no written record of its history, but its service seems to have been rendered chiefly in Tennessee in the neighborhood of Memphis, Nashville and Chattanooga. Judging by the muster-rolls of the Adjutant-General, the regiment would appear to have been greatly depleted by desertions and otherwise, the remnant being finally mustered out, Sept. 20, 1865.

FIRST CAVALRY. Organized — consisting of seven companies, A, B, C, D, E, F and G—at Alton, in 1861, and mustered into the United States service, July 3. After some service in Missouri, the regiment participated in the battle of Lexington, in that State, and was surrendered, with the remainder of the garrison, Sept. 20, 1861. The officers were paroled, and the men sworn not to take up arms again until discharged. No exchange having been effected in November, the non-commissioned officers and privates were ordered to Springfield and discharged. In June, 1862, the regiment was reorganized at Benton Barracks, Mo., being afterwards employed in guarding supply trains and supply depots at various points. Mustered out, at Benton Barracks, July 14, 1862.

SECOND CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, August 12, 1861, with Company M (which joined the regiment some months later), numbering 47 commissioned officers and 1,040 enlisted men. This number was increased by recruits and re-enlistments, during its four and a half year's term of service, to 2,236 enlisted men and 145 commissioned officers. It was engaged at Belmont; a portion of the regiment took part in the battles at Fort Henry, Fort Donelson and Shiloh, another portion at Merriweather's Ferry, Bolivar and Holly Springs, and participated in the investment of Vicksburg. In January, 1864, the major part of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, later, participating in the Red River expedition and the investment of Fort Blakely. It was mustered out at San Antonio, Tex., Nov. 22, 1865, and finally paid and discharged at Springfield, Jan. 3, 1866.

THIRD CAVALRY. Composed of twelve companies, from various localities in the State, the grand total of company officers and enlisted men, under the first organization, being 1,433. It was organized at Springfield. in August, 1861; participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Haines' Bluff, Arkansas Post, Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, and the siege of Vicksburg. In July, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. The remainder were mustered out, Sept. 5, 1864. The veterans participated in the repulse of Forrest, at Memphis, and in the battles of Lawrenceburg, Spring Hill, Campbellsville and Franklin. From May to October, 1865, engaged in service against the Indians in the Northwest The regiment was mustered out at Springfield, Oct. 18, 1865.

FOURTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service, Sept. 26, 1861, and participated in the battles of Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, and Shiloh; in the siege of Corinth, and in many engagements of less historic note; was mustered out at Springfield in November, 1864. By order of the War Department, of June 18, 1865, the members of the regiment whose terms had not expired, were consolidated with the Twelfth Illinois Cavalry.

FIFTH CAVALRY. Organized at Camp Butler, in November, 1861; took part in the Meridian raid and the expedition against Jackson, Miss., and in numerous minor expeditions, doing effective work at Canton, Grenada, Woodville, and other points. On Jan. 1, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. Its final muster-out took place, Oct. 27, 1865, and it received final payment and discharge, October 30.

SIXTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, Nov. 19, 1861; participated in Sherman's advance upon Grenada; in the Grierson raid through Mississippi and Louisiana, the siege of Port Hudson, the battles of Moscow (Tenn), West Point (Miss.), Franklin and Nashville; re-enlisted as veterans, March 30, 1864; was mustered out at Selma, Ala., Nov. 5, 1865, and received discharge, November 20, at Springfield.

SEVENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, and was mustered into service, Oct. 13, 1861. It participated in the battles of Farmington, Iuka, Corinth (second battle); in Grierson's raid through Mississippi and Louisiana; in the engagement at Plain's Store (La.), and the investment of Port Hudson. In March, 1864, 288 officers and men re-enlisted as veterans. The non-veterans were engaged at Guntown, and the entire regiment took part in the battle of Franklin. After the close of hostilities, it was stationed in Alabama and Mississippi, until the latter part of October, 1865; was mustered out at Nashville, and finally discharged at Springfield, Nov. 17, 1865.

EIGHTH CAVALRY. Organized at St. Charles, Ill., and mustered in, Sept. 18, 1861. The regiment was ordered to Virginia, and participated in the general advance on Manassas in March, 1862; was engaged at Mechanicsville, Gaines' Hill, Malvern Hill, Sugar Loaf Mountain, Middletown, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Sulphur Springs, Warrenton, Rapidan Station, Northern Neck, Gettysburg, Williamsburg, Funkstown, Falling Water, Chester Gap Sandy Hook, Culpepper, Brandy Station, and in many raids and skirmishes. It was mustered out of service at Benton Barracks, Mo., July 17, 1865, and ordered to Chicago, where it received final payment and discharge.

NINTH CAVALRY. Organized at Chicago, in the autumn of 1861, and mustered in, November 30; was engaged at Coldwater, Grenada, Wyatt, Saulsbury, Moscow, Guntown, Pontotoc, Tupelo, Old Town Creek, Hurricane Creek, Lawrenceburg, Campellsville, Franklin and Nashville. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans, March 16, 1864; was mustered out of service at Selma, Ala., Oct. 31, 1865, and ordered to Springfield, where the men received final payment and discharge.

TENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield in the latter part of September, 1861, and mustered into service, Nov. 25, 1861; was engaged at Prairie Grove, Cotton Plant, Arkansas Post, in the Yazoo Pass expedition, at Richmond (La.), Brownsville, Bayou Metoe, Bayou La Fourche and Little Rock. In February, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, the non-veterans accompanying General Banks in his Red River expedition. On Jan. 27, 1865, the veterans, and recruits were consolidated with the Fifteenth Cavalry, and all reorganized under the name of the Tenth Illinois Veteran Volunteer Cavalry. Mustered out of service at San Antonio, Texas, Nov. 22, 1865, and received final discharge at Springfield, Jan. 6, 1866.

ELEVENTH CAVALRY. Robert G. Ingersoll of Peoria, and Basil D. Meeks, of Woodford County, obtained permission to raise a regiment of cavalry, and recruiting commenced in October, 1861. The regiment was recruited from the counties of Peoria, Fulton, Tazewell, Woodford, Marshall, Stark, Knox, Henderson and Warren; was mustered into the service at Peoria, Dec. 20, 1861, and was first under fire at Shiloh. It also took part in the raid in the rear of Corinth, and in the battles of Bolivar, Corinth (second battle), Iuka, Lexington and Jackson (Tenn.); in McPherson's expedition to Canton and Sherman's Meridian raid, in the relief of Yazoo City, and in numerous less important raids and skirmishes. Most of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans in December, 1863; the non-veterans being mustered out at Memphis, in the autumn of 1864. The veterans were mustered out at the same place, Sept. 30, 1865, and discharged at Springfield, October 20.

TWELFTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, in February, 1862, and remained there guarding rebel prisoners until June 25, when it was mounted and sent to Martinsburg, Va. It was engaged at Fredericksburg, Williamsport, Falling Waters, the Rapidan and Stevensburg. On Nov. 26, 1863, the regiment was relieved from service and ordered home to reorganize as veterans. Subsequently it joined Banks in the Red River expedition and in Davidson's expedition against Mobile. While at Memphis the Twelfth Cavalry was consolidated into an eight-company organization, and the Fourth Cavalry, having previously been consolidated into a battalion of five companies, was consolidated with the Twelfth. The consolidated regiment was mustered out at Houston, Texas, May 29, 1866, and, on June 18, received final pay and discharge at Springfield.

THIRTEENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Chicago, in December, 1861; moved to the front from Benton Barracks, Mo., in February, 1862, and was engaged in the following battles and skirmishes (all in Missouri and Arkansas): Putnam's Ferry, Cotton Plant, Union City (twice), Camp Pillow, Bloomfield (first and second battles), Van Buren, Allen, Eleven Point River, Jackson, White River, Chalk Bluff, Bushy Creek, near Helena, Grand Prairie, White River, Deadman's Lake, Brownsville, Bayou Metoe, Austin, Little Rock, Benton, Batesville, Pine Bluff, Arkadelphia, Okolona, Little Missouri River, Prairie du Anne, Camden, Jenkins' Ferry, Cross Roads, Mount Elba, Douglas Landing and Monticello. The regiment was mustered out, August 31, 1865, and received final pay and discharge at Springfield, Sept. 13, 1865.

FOURTEENTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service at Peoria, in January and February, 1863; participated in the battle of Cumberland Gap, in the defense of Knoxville and the pursuit of Longstreet, in the engagements at Bean Station and Dandridge, in the Macon raid, and in the cavalry battle at Sunshine Church. In the latter General Stoneman surrendered, but the Fourteenth cut its way out. On their retreat the men were betrayed by a guide and the regiment badly cut up and scattered, those escaping being hunted by soldiers with bloodhounds. Later, it was engaged at Waynesboro and in the battles of Franklin and Nashville, and was mustered out at Nashville, July 31, 1865, having marched over 10,000 miles, exclusive of duty done by detachments.

FIFTEENTH CAVALRY. Composed of companies originally independent, attached to infantry regiments and acting as such; participated in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the siege and capture of Corinth. Regimental organization was effected in the spring of 1863, and thereafter it was engaged chiefly in scouting and post duty. It was mustered out at Springfield, August 25, 1864, the recruits (whose term of service had not expired) being consolidated with the Tenth Cavalry.

SIXTEENTH CAVALRY. Composed principally of Chicago men—Thieleman's and Schambeck's Cavalry Companies, raised at the outset of the war, forming the nucleus of the regiment. The former served as General Sherman's body-guard for some time. Captain Thieleman was made a Major and authorized to raise a battalion, the two companies named thenceforth being known as Thieleman's Battalion. In September, 1862, the War Department authorized the extension of the battalion to a regiment, and, on the 11th of June, 1863, the regimental organization was completed. It took part in the East Tennessee campaign, a portion of the regiment aiding in the defense of Knoxville, a part garrisoning Cumberand Gap, and one battalion being captured by Longstreet. The regiment also participated in the battles of Rocky Face Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Kingston, Cassville, Carterville, Allatoona, Kenesaw, Lost Mountain, Mines Ridge, Powder Springs, Chattahoochie, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. It arrived in Chicago, August 23, 1865, for final payment and discharge, having marched about 5,000 miles and engaged in thirty-one battles, besides numerous skirmishes.

SEVENTEENTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service in January and February, 1864; aided in the repulse of Price at Jefferson City, Mo., and was engaged at Booneville, Independence, Mine Creek, and Fort Scott, besides doing garrison duty, scouting and raiding. It was mustered out in November and December, 1865, at Leavenworth, Kan. Gov. John L. Beveridge, who had previously been a Captain and Major of the Eighth Cavalry, was the Colonel of this regiment.

First Light Artillery. Consisted of ten batteries. Battery A was organized under the first call for State troops, April 21, 1861, but not mustered into the three years' service until July 16; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, and in the Atlanta campaign; was in reserve at Champion Hills and Nashville, and mustered out July 3, 1865, at Chicago.

It participated in the advance on Corinth, the siege of Vicksburg, the battle of Missionary Ridge, and the capture of Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely, near Mobile. The regiment was mustered out at Springfield, August 14, 1865, having served three years and nine months, marched over 7,500 miles, and participated in seven sieges and battles.

STURGES RIFLES. An independent company, organized at Chicago, armed, equipped and subsisted for nearly two months, by the patriotic generosity of Mr. Solomon Sturges; was mustered into service, May 6, 1861; in June following, was ordered to West Virginia, serving as bodyguard of General McClellan; was engaged at Rich Mountain, in the siege of Yorktown, and in the seven days' battle of the Chickahominy. A portion of the company was at Antietam, the remainder having been detached as foragers, scouts, etc. It was mustered out at Washington, Nov. 25, 1862.

WAR, THE SPANISH-AMERICAN. The oppressions and misrule which had characterized the administration of affairs by the Spanish Government and its agents for generations, in the Island of Cuba, culminated, in April, 1898, in mutual declarations of war between Spain and the United States. The causes leading up to this result were the injurious effects upon American commerce and the interests of American citizens owning property in Cuba, as well as the constant expense imposed upon the Government of the United States in the maintenance of a large navy along the South Atlantic coast to suppress filibustering, superadded to the friction and unrest produced among the people of this country by the long continuance of disorders and abuses so near to our own shores, which aroused the sympathy and indignation of the entire civilized world. For three years a large proportion of the Cuban population had been in open rebellion against the Spanish Government, and, while the latter had imported a large army to the island and subjected the insurgents and their families and sympathizers to the grossest cruelties, not even excepting torture and starvation itself, their policy had failed to bring the insurgents into subjection or to restore order. In this condition of affairs the United States Government had endeavored, through negotiation, to secure a mitigation of the evils complained of, by a modification of the Spanish policy of government in the island; but all suggestions in this direction had either been resented by Spain as unwarrantable interference in her affairs, or promises of reform, when made, had been as invariably broken.

In the meantime an increasing sentiment had been growing up in the United States in favor of conceding belligerent rights to the Cuban insurgents, or the recognition of their independence, which found expression in measures proposed in Congress—all offers of friendly intervention by the United States having been rejected by Spain with evidences of indignation. Compelled, at last, to recognize its inability to subdue the insurrection, the Spanish Government, in November, 1897, made a pretense of tendering autonomy to the Cuban people, with the privilege of amnesty to the insurgents on laying down their arms. The long duration of the war and the outrages perpetrated upon the helpless "reconcentrados," coupled with the increased confidence of the insurgents in the final triumph of their cause, rendered this movement—even if intended to be carried out to the letter—of no avail. The proffer came too late, and was promptly rejected.

In this condition of affairs and with a view to greater security for American interests, the American battleship Maine was ordered to Havana, on Jan. 24, 1898. It arrived in Havana Harbor the following day, and was anchored at a point designated by the Spanish commander. On the night of February 15, following, it was blown up and destroyed by some force, as shown by after investigation, applied from without. Of a crew of 354 men belonging to the vessel at the time, 266 were either killed outright by the explosion, or died from their wounds. Not only the American people, but the entire civilized world, was shocked by the catastrophe. An act of horrible treachery had been perpetrated against an American vessel and its crew on a peaceful mission in the harbor of a professedly friendly nation.

The successive steps leading to actual hostilities were rapid and eventful. One of the earliest and most significant of these was the passage, by a unanimous vote of both houses of Congress, on March 9, of an appropriation placing $50,000,000 in the hands of the President as an emergency fund for purposes of national defense. This was followed, two days later, by an order for the mobilization of the army. The more important events following this step were: An order, under date of April 5, withdrawing American consuls from Spanish stations; the departure, on April 9, of Consul-General Fitzhugh Lee from Havana; April 19, the adoption by Congress of concurrent resolutions declaring Cuba independent and directing the President to use the land and naval forces of the United States to put an end to Spanish authority in the island; April 20, the sending to the Spanish Government, by the President, of an ultimatum in accordance with this act; April 21, the delivery to Minister Woodford, at Madrid, of his passports without waiting for the presentation of the ultimatum, with the departure of the Spanish Minister from Washington; April 23, the issue of a call by the President for 125,000 volunters; April 24, the final declaration of war by Spain; April 25, the adoption by Congress of a resolution declaring that war had existed from April 21; on the same date an order to Admiral Dewey, in command of the Asiatic Squadron at Hongkong, to sail for Manila with a view to investing that city and blockading Philippine ports.

The chief events subsequent to the declaration of war embraced the following: May 1, the destruction by Admiral Dewey's squadron of the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila; May 19, the arrival of the Spanish Admiral Cervera's fleet at Santiago de Cuba; May 25, a second call by the President for 75,000 volunteers; July 3, the attempt of Cervera's fleet to escape, and its destruction off Santiago; July 17, the surrender of Santiago to the forces under General Shafter; July 30, the statement by the President, through the French Ambassador at Washington, of the terms on which the United States would consent to make peace; August 9, acceptance of the peace terms by Spain, followed, three days later, by the signing of the peace protocol; September 9, the appointment by the President of Peace Commissioners on the part of the United States; Sept. 18, the announcement of the Peace Commissioners selected by Spain; October 1, the beginning of the Peace Conference by the representatives of the two powers, at Paris, and the formal signing, on December 10, of the peace treaty, including the recognition by Spain of the freedom of Cuba, with the transfer to the United States of Porto Rico and her other West India islands, together with the surrender of the Philippines for a consideration of $20,000,000.

Seldom, if ever, in the history of nations have such vast and far-reaching results been accomplished within so short a period. The war, which practically began with the destruction of the Spanish fleet in Manila Harbor—an event which aroused the enthusiasm of the whole American people, and won the respect and admiration of other nations—was practically ended by the surrender of Santiago and the declaration by the President of the conditions of peace just three months later. Succeeding events, up to the formal signing of the peace treaty, were merely the recognition of results previously determined.

HISTORY OF ILLINOIS REGIMENTS.—The part played by Illinois in connection with these events may be briefly summarized in the history of Illinois regiments and other organizations. Under the first call of the President for 125,000 volunteers, eight regiments—seven of infantry and one of cavalry—were assigned to Illinois, to which was subsequently added, on application through Governor Tanner, one battery of light artillery. The infantry regiments were made up of the Illinois National Guard, numbered consecutively from one to seven, and were practically mobilized at their home stations within forty-eight hours from the receipt of the call, and began to arrive at Camp Tanner, near Springfield, the place of rendezvous, on April 26, the day after the issue of the Governor's call. The record of Illinois troops is conspicuous for the promptness of their response and the completeness of their organization—in this respect being unsurpassed by those of any other State. Under the call of May 25 for an additional force of 75,000 men, the quota assigned to Illinois was two regiments, which were promptly furnished, taking the names of the Eighth and Ninth. The first of these belonged to the Illinois National Guard, as the regiments mustered in under the first call had done, while the Ninth was one of a number of "Provisional Regiments" which had tendered their services to the Government. Some twenty-five other regiments of this class, more or less complete, stood ready to perfect their organizations should there be occasion for their services. The aggregate strength of Illinois organizations at date of muster out from the United States service was 12,280—11,789 men and 491 officers.

FIRST REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEERS (originally Illinois National Guard) was organized at Chicago, and mustered into the United States service at Camp Tanner (Springfield), under the command of Col. Henry L. Turner, May 13, 1898; left Springfield for Camp Thomas (Chickamauga) May 17; assigned to First Brigade, Third Division, of the First Army Corps; started for Tampa, Fla., June 2, but soon after arrival there was transferred to Picnic Island, and assigned to provost duty in place of the First United States Infantry. On June 30 the bulk of the regiment embarked for Cuba, but was detained in the harbor at Key West until July 5, when the vessel sailed for Santiago, arriving in Guantanamo Bay on the evening of the 8th. Disembarking on the 10th, the whole regiment arrived on the firing line on the 11th, spent several days and nights in the trenches before Santiago, and were present at the surrender of that city on the 17th. Two companies had previously been detached for the scarcely less perilous duty of service in the fever hospitals and in caring for their wounded comrades. The next month was spent on guard duty in the captured city, until August 25, when, depleted in numbers and weakened by fever, the bulk of the regiment was transferred by hospital boats to Camp Wikoff, on Montauk Point, L. I. The members of the regiment able to travel left Camp Wikoff, September 8, for Chicago, arriving two days later, where they met an enthusiastic reception and were mustered out, November 17, 1,235 strong (rank and file)—a considerable number of recruits having joined the regiment just before leaving Tampa. The record of the First was conspicuous by the fact that it was the only Illinois regiment to see service in Cuba during the progress of actual hostilities. Before leaving Tampa some eighty members of the regiment were detailed for engineering duty in Porto Rico, sailed for that island on July 12, and were among the first to perform service there. The First suffered severely from yellow fever while in Cuba, but, as a regiment, while in the service, made a brilliant record, which was highly complimented in the official reports of its commanding officers.

SECOND REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (originally Second I. N. G.). This regiment, also from Chicago, began to arrive at Springfield, April 27, 1898—at that time numbering 1,202 men and 47 officers, under command of Col. George M. Moulton; was mustered in between May 4 and May 15; on May 17 started for Tampa, Fla., but en route its destination was changed to Jacksonville, where, as a part of the Seventh Army Corps, under command of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, it assisted in the dedication of Camp Cuba Libre. October 25 it was transferred to Savannah, Ga., remaining at "Camp Lee" until December 8, when two battalions embarked for Havana, landing on the 15th, being followed, a few days later, by the Third Battalion, and stationed at Camp Columbia. From Dec. 17 to Jan. 11, 1899, Colonel Moulton served as Chief of Police for the city of Havana. On March 28 to 30 the regiment left Camp Columbia in detachments for Augusta, Ga., where it arrived April 5, and was mustered out, April 26, 1,051 strong (rank and file), and returned to Chicago. During its stay in Cuba the regiment did not lose a man. A history of this regiment has been written by Rev. H. W. Bolton, its late Chaplain.

THIRD REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, composed of companies of the Illinois National Guard from the counties of La Salle, Livingston, Kane, Kankakee, McHenry, Ogle, Will, and Winnebago, under command of Col. Fred Bennitt, reported at Springfield, with 1,170 men and 50 officers, on April 27; was mustered in May 7, 1898; transferred from Springfield to Camp Thomas (Chickamauga), May 14; on July 22 left Chickamauga for Porto Rico; on the 28th sailed from Newport News, on the liner St. Louis, arriving at Ponce, Porto Rico, on July 31; soon after disembarking captured Arroyo, and assisted in the capture of Guayama, which was the beginning of General Brooke's advance across the island to San Juan, when intelligence was received of the signing of the peace protocol by Spain. From August 13 to October 1 the Third continued in the performance of guard duty in Porto Rico; on October 22, 986 men and 39 officers took transport for home by way of New York, arriving in Chicago, November 11, the several companies being mustered out at their respective home stations. Its strength at final muster-out was 1,273 men and officers. This regiment had the distinction of being one of the first to see service in Porto Rico, but suffered severely from fever and other diseases during the three months of its stay in the island.

FOURTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, composed of companies from Champaign, Coles, Douglas, Edgar, Effingham, Fayette, Jackson, Jefferson, Montgomery, Richland, and St. Clair counties; mustered into the service at Springfield, May 20, under command of Col. Casimer Andel; started immediately for Tampa, Fla., but en route its destination was changed to Jacksonville, where it was stationed at Camp Cuba Libre as a part of the Seventh Corps under command of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee; in October was transferred to Savannah, Ga., remaining at Camp Onward until about the first of January, when the regiment took ship for Havana. Here the regiment was stationed at Camp Columbia until April 4, 1899, when it returned to Augusta, Ga., and was mustered out at Camp Mackenzie (Augusta), May 2, the companies returning to their respective home stations. During a part of its stay at Jacksonville, and again at Savannah, the regiment was employed on guard duty. While at Jacksonville Colonel Andel was suspended by court-martial, and finally tendered his resignation, his place being supplied by Lieut.-Col. Eben Swift, of the Ninth.

FIFTH REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY was the first regiment to report, and was mustered in at Springfield, May 7, 1898, under command of Col. James S. Culver, being finally composed of twelve companies from Pike, Christian, Sangamon, McLean, Montgomery, Adams, Tazewell, Macon, Morgan, Peoria, and Fulton counties; on May 14 left Springfield for Camp Thomas (Chickamauga, Ga.), being assigned to the command of General Brooke; August 3 left Chickamauga for Newport News, Va., with the expectation of embarking for Porto Rico—a previous order of July 26 to the same purport having been countermanded; at Newport News embarked on the transport Obdam, but again the order was rescinded, and, after remaining on board thirty-six hours, the regiment was disembarked. The next move was made to Lexington, Ky., where the regiment—having lost hope of reaching "the front"—remained until Sept. 5, when it returned to Springfield for final muster-out. This regiment was composed of some of the best material in the State, and anxious for active service, but after a succession of disappointments, was compelled to return to its home station without meeting the enemy. After its arrival at Springfield the regiment was furloughed for thirty days and finally mustered out, October 16, numbering 1,213 men and 47 officers.

SIXTH REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, consisting of twelve companies from the counties of Rock Island, Knox, Whiteside, Lee, Carroll, Stephenson, Henry, Warren, Bureau, and Jo Daviess, was mustered in May 11, 1898, under command of Col. D. Jack Foster; on May 17 left Springfield for Camp Alger, Va.; July 5 the regiment moved to Charleston, S. C., where a part embarked for Siboney, Cuba, but the whole regiment was soon after united in General Miles' expedition for the invasion of Porto Rico, landing at Guanico on July 25, and advancing into the interior as far as Adjunta and Utuado. After several weeks' service in the interior, the regiment returned to Ponce, and on September 7 took transport for the return home, arrived at Springfield a week later, and was mustered out November 25, the regiment at that time consisting of 1,239 men and 49 officers.

SEVENTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (known as the "Hibernian Rifles"). Two battalions of this regiment reported at Springfield, April 27, with 33 officers and 765 enlisted men, being afterwards increased to the maximum; was mustered into the United States service, under command of Col. Marcus Kavanagh, May 18, 1898; on May 28 started for Camp Alger, Va.; was afterwards encamped at Thoroughfare Gap and Camp Meade; on September 9 returned to Springfield, was furloughed for thirty days, and mustered out, October 20, numbering 1,260 men and 49 officers. Like the Fifth, the Seventh saw no actual service in the field.

EIGHTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (colored regiment), mustered into the service at Springfield under the second call of the President, July 23, 1898, being composed wholly of Afro-Americans under officers of their own race, with Col. John R. Marshall in command, the muster-roll showing 1,195 men and 76 officers. The six companies, from A to F, were from Chicago, the other five being, respectively, from Bloomington, Springfield, Quincy, Litchfield, Mound City and Metropolis, and Cairo. The regiment having tendered their services to relieve the First Illinois on duty at Santiago de Cuba, it started for Cuba, August 8, by way of New York; immediately on arrival at Santiago, a week later, was assigned to duty, but subsequently transferred to San Luis, where Colone, Marshall was made military governor. The major part of the regiment remained here until ordered home early in March, 1899, arrived at Chicago, March 15, and was mustered out, April 3, 1,226 strong, rank and file, having been in service nine months and six days.

NINTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY was organized from the counties of Southern Illinois, and mustered in at Springfield under the second call of the President, July 4-11, 1898, under command of Col. James R. Campbell; arrived at Camp Cuba Libre (Jacksonville, Fla.), August 9; two months later was transferred to Savannah, Ga.; was moved to Havana in December, where it remained until May, 1899, when it returned to Augusta, Ga., and was mustered out there, May 20, 1899, at that time consisting of 1,095 men and 46 officers. From Augusta the several companies returned to their respective home stations. The Ninth was the only "Provisional Regiment" from Illinois mustered into the service during the war, the other regiments all belonging to the National Guard.

FIRST ILLINOIS CAVALRY was organized at Chicago immediately after the President's first call, seven companies being recruited from Chicago, two from Bloomington, and one each from Springfield, Elkhart, and Lacon; was mustered in at Springfield, May 21, 1898, under command of Col. Edward C. Young; left Springfield for Camp Thomas, Ga., May 30, remaining there until August 24, when it returned to Fort Sheridan, near Chicago, where it was stationed until October 11, when it was mustered out, at that time consisting of 1,158 men and 50 officers. Although the regiment saw no active service in the field, it established an excellent record for itself in respect to discipline.

FIRST ENGINEERING CORPS, consisting of 80 men detailed from the First Illinois Volunteers, were among the first Illinois soldiers to see service in Porto Rico, accompanying General Miles' expedition in the latter part of July, and being engaged for a time in the construction of bridges in aid of the intended advance across the island. On September 8 they embarked for the return home, arrived at Chicago, September 17, and were mustered out November 20.

BATTERY A (I. N. G.), from Danville, Ill., was mustered in under a special order of the War Department, May 12, 1898, under command of Capt. Oscar P. Yaeger, consisting of 118 men; left Springfield for Camp Thomas, Ga., May 19, and, two months later, joined in General Miles' Porto Rico expedition, landing at Guanico on August 3, and taking part in the affair at Guayama on the 12th. News of peace having been received, the Battery returned to Ponce, where it remained until September 7, when it started on the return home by way of New York, arrived at Danville, September 17, was furloughed for sixty days, and mustered out November 25. The Battery was equipped with modern breech-loading rapid-firing guns, operated by practical artillerists and prepared for effective service.

NAVAL RESERVES.—One of the earliest steps taken by the Government after it became apparent that hostilities could not be averted, was to begin preparation for strengthening the naval arm of the service. The existence of the "Naval Militia," first organized in 1893, placed Illinois in an exceptionally favorable position for making a prompt response to the call of the Government, as well as furnishing a superior class of men for service—a fact evidenced during the operations in the West Indies. Gen. John McNulta, as head of the local committee, was active in calling the attention of the Navy Department to the value of the service to be rendered by this organization, which resulted in its being enlisted practically as a body, taking the name of "Naval Reserves"—all but eighty-eight of the number passing the physical examination, the places of these being promptly filled by new recruits. The first detachment of over 200 left Chicago May 2, under the command of Lieut.-Com. John M. Hawley, followed soon after by the remainder of the First Battalion, making the whole number from Chicago 400, with 267, constituting the Second Battalion, from other towns of the State. The latter was made up of 147 men from Moline, 58 from Quincy, and 62 from Alton—making a total from the State of 667. This does not include others, not belonging to this organization, who enlisted for service in the navy during the war, which raised the whole number for the State over 1,000. The Reserves enlisted from Illinois occupied a different relation to the Government from that of the "naval militia" of other States, which retained their State organizations, while those from Illinois were regularly mustered into the United States service. The recruits from Illinois were embarked at Key West, Norfolk and New York, and distributed among fifty-two different vessels, including nearly every vessel belonging to the North Atlantic Squadron. They saw service in nearly every department from the position of stokers in the hold to that of gunners in the turrets of the big battleships, the largest number (60) being assigned to the famous battleship Oregon, while the cruiser Yale followed with 47; the Harvard with 35; Cincinnati, 27; Yankton, 19; Franklin, 18; Montgomery and Indiana, each, 17; Hector, 14; Marietta, 11; Wilmington and Lancaster, 10 each, and others down to one each. Illinois sailors thus had the privilege of participating in the brilliant affair of July 3, which resulted in the destruction of Cervera's fleet off Santiago, as also in nearly every other event in the West Indies of less importance, without the loss of a man while in the service, although among the most exposed. They were mustered out at different times, as they could be spared from the service, or the vessels to which they were attached went out of commission, a portion serving out their full term of one year. The Reserves from Chicago retain their organization under the name of "Naval Reserve Veterans," with headquarters in the Masonic Temple Building, Chicago.

WARD, James H., ex-Congressman, was born in Chicago, Nov. 30, 1853, and educated in the Chicago public schools and at the University of Notre Dame, graduating from the latter in 1873. Three years later he graduated from the Union College of Law, Chicago, and was admitted to the bar. Since then he has continued to practice his profession in his native city. In 1879 he was elected Supervisor of the town of West Chicago, and, in 1884, was a candidate for Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket, and the same year, was the successful candidate of his party for Congress in the Third Illinois District, serving one term.

WINNEBAGO INDIANS, a tribe of the Dacota, or Sioux, stock, which at one time occupied a part of Northern Illinois. The word Winnebago is a corruption of the French Ouinebegoutz, Ouimbegouc, etc., the diphthong "ou" taking the place of the consonant "w," which is wanting in the French alphabet. These were, in turn, French misspellings of an Algonquin term meaning "fetid," which the latter tribe applied to the Winnebagoes because they had come from the western ocean—the salt (or "fetid") water. In their advance towards the East the Winnebagoes early invaded the country of the Illinois, but were finally driven northward by the latter, who surpassed them in numbers rather than in bravery. The invaders settled in Wisconsin, near the Fox River, and here they were first visited by the Jesuit Fathers in the seventeenth century. (See Jesuit Relations.) The Winnebagoes are commonly regarded as a Wisconsin tribe; yet, that they claimed territorial rights in Illinois is shown by the fact that the treaty of Prairie du Chien (August 1, 1829), alludes to a Winnebago village located in what is now Jo Daviess County, near the mouth of the Pecatonica River. While, as a rule, the tribe, if left to itself, was disposed to live in amity with the whites, it was carried away by the eloquence and diplomacy of Tecumseh and the cajoleries of "The Prophet." General Harrison especially alludes to the bravery of the Winnebago warriors at Tippecanoe' which he attributees in part, however, to a superstitious faith in "The Prophet." In June or July, 1827, an unprovoked and brutal outrage by the whites upon an unoffending and practically defenseless party of Winnebagoes, near Prairie du Chien brought on what is known as the 'Winnebago War." (See Winnebago War.) The tribe took no part in the Black Hawk War, largely because of the great influence and shrewd tactic of their chief, Naw-caw. By treaties executed in 1832 and 1837 the Winnebagoes ceded to the United States all their lands lying east of the Mississippi. They were finally removed west of that river, and, after many shiftings of location, were placed upon the Omaha Reservation in Eastern Nebraska, where their industry, thrift and peaceable disposition elicited high praise from Government officials.

WARNER, Vespasian, lawyer and Member of Congress, was born in De Witt County, Ill., April 23, 1842, and has lived all his life in his native county—his present residence being Clinton. After a short course in Lombard University, while studying law in the office of Hon. Lawrence Weldon, at Clinton, he enlisted as a private soldier of the Twentieth Illinois Volunteers, in June, 1861, serving until July, 1866, when he was mustered out with the rank of Captain and brevet Major. He received a gunshot wound at Shiloh, but continued to serve in the Army of the Tennessee until the evacuation of Atlanta, when he was ordered North on account of disability. His last service was in fighting Indians on the plains. After the war he completed his law studies at Harvard University, graduating in 1868, when he entered into a law partnership with Clifton H. Moore of Clinton. He served as Judge-Advocate General of the Illinois National Guard for several years, with the rank of Colonel, under the administrations of Governors Hamilton, Oglesby and Fifer, and, in 1894, was nominated and elected, as a Republican, to the Fifty-fourth Congress for the Thirteenth District, being re-elected in 1896, and again in 1898. In the Fifty-fifth Congress, Mr. Warner was a member of the Committees on Agriculture and Invalid Pensions, and Chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

WARREN, a village in Jo Daviess County, at intersection of the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways, 26 miles west-northwest of Freeport and 27 miles east by north of Galena. The surrounding region is agricultural and stock-raising; there are also lead mines in the vicinity. Tobacco is grown to some extent. Warren has a flouring mill, tin factory, creamery and stone quarries, a State bank, water supply from artesian wells, fire department, gas plant, two weekly newspapers, five churches, a high school, an academy and a public library. Pop. (1890), 1,172; (1900), 1,327.

WARREN, Calvin A., lawyer, was born in Essex County, N. Y., June 3, 1807; in his youth, worked for a time, as a typographer, in the office of "The Northern Spectator," at Poultney, Vt., side by side with Horace Greeley, afterwards the founder of "The New York Tribune." Later, he became one of the publishers of "The Palladium" at Ballston, N. Y., but, in 1832, removed to Hamilton County, Ohio, where he began the study of law, completing his course at Transylvania University, Ky., in 1834, and beginning practice at Batavia, Ohio, as the partner of Thomas Morris, then a United States Senator from Ohio, whose daughter he married, thereby becoming the brother-in-law of the late Isaac N. Morris, of Quincy, Ill. In 1836, Mr. Warren came to Quincy, Adams County, Ill., but soon after removed to Warsaw in Hancock County, where he resided until 1839, when he returned to Quincy. Here he continued in practice, either alone or as a partner, at different times, of several of the leading attorneys of that city. Although he held no office except that of Master in Chancery, which he occupied for some sixteen years, the possession of an inexhaustible fund of humor, with strong practical sense and decided ability as a speaker, gave him great popularity at the bar and upon the stump, and made him a recognized leader in the ranks of the Democratic party, of which he was a life-long member. He served as Presidential Elector on the Pierce ticket in 1852, and was the nominee of his party for the same position on one or two other occasions. Died, at Quincy, Feb. 22, 1881.

WARREN, Hooper, pioneer journalist, was born at Walpole, N. H., in 1790; learned the printer's trade on the Rutland (Vt.) "Herald"; in 1814 went to Delaware, whence, three years later, he emigrated to Kentucky, working for a time on a paper at Frankfort. In 1818 he came to St. Louis and worked in the office of the old "Missouri Gazette" (the predecessor of "The Republican"), and also acted as the agent of a lumber company at Cairo, Ill., when the whole population of that place consisted of one family domiciled on a grounded flat-boat. In March, 1819, he established, at Edwardsville, the third paper in Illinois, its predecessors being "The Illinois Intelligencer," at Kaskaskia, and "The Illinois Emigrant," at Shawneetown. The name given to the new paper was "The Spectator," and the contest over the effort to introduce a pro-slavery clause in the State Constitution soon brought it into prominence. Backed by Governor Coles, Congressman Daniel P. Cook, Judge S. D. Lockwood, Rev. Thomas Lippincott, Judge Wm. H. Brown (afterwards of Chicago), George Churchill and other opponents of slavery, "The Spectator" made a sturdy fight in opposition to the scheme, which ended in defeat of the measure by the rejection at the polls, in 1824, of the proposition for a Constitutional Convention. Warren left the Edwardsville paper in 1825, and was, for a time, associated with "The National Crisis," an anti-slavery paper at Cincinnati, but soon returned to Illinois and established "The Sangamon Spectator"—the first paper ever published at the present State capital. This he sold out in 1829, and, for the next three years, was connected with "The Advertiser and Upper Mississippi Herald," at Galena. Abandoning this field in 1832, he removed to Hennepin, where, within the next five years, he held the offices of Clerk of the Circuit and County Commissioners' Courts and ex-officio Recorder of Deeds. In 1836 he began the publication of the third paper in Chicago—"The Commercial Advertiser" (a weekly)—which was continued a little more than a year, when it was abandoned, and he settled on a farm at Henry, Marshall County. His further newspaper ventures were, as the associate of Zebina Eastman, in the publication of "The Genius of Liberty," at Lowell, La Salle County, and "The Western Citizen"—afterwards "The Free West"—in Chicago. (See Eastman, Zebina, and Lundy, Benjamin.) On the discontinuance of "The Free West" in 1856, he again retired to his farm at Henry, where he spent the remainder of his days. While returning home from a visit to Chicago, in August, 1864, he was taken ill at Mendota, dying there on the 22d of the month.

WARREN, John Esaias, diplomatist and real-estate operator, was born in Troy, N. Y., in 1826, graduated at Union College and was connected with the American Legation to Spain during the administration of President Pierce; in 1859-60 was a member of the Minnesota Legislature and, in 1861-62, Mayor of St. Paul; in 1867, came to Chicago, where, while engaged in real-estate business, he became known to the press as the author of a series of articles entitled "Topics of the Time." In 1886 he took up his residence in Brussels, Belgium, where he died, July 6, 1896. Mr. Warren was author of several volumes of travel, of which "An Attache in Spain" and "Para" are most important.

WARREN COUNTY. A western county, created by act of the Legislature, in 1825, but not fully organized until 1830, having at that time about 350 inhabitants; has an area of 540 square miles, and was named for Gen. Joseph Warren. It is drained by the Henderson River and its affluents, and is traversed by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy (two divisions), the Iowa Central and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroads. Bituminous coal is mined and limestone is quarried in large quantities. The county's early development was retarded in consequence of having become the "seat of war," during the Black Hawk War. The principal products are grain and live-stock, although manufacturing is carried on to some extent. The county-seat and chief city is Monmouth (which see). Roseville is a shipping point. Population (1880), 22,933. (1890), 21,281; (1900), 23,163.

WARRENSBURG, a town of Macon County, on Peoria Division Ill. Cent. Railway, 9 miles northwest of Decatur; has elevators, canning factory, a bank and newspaper. Pop. (1900), 503.

WARSAW, the largest town in Hancock County, and admirably situated for trade. It stands on a bluff on the Mississippi River, some three miles below Keokuk, and about 40 miles above Quincy. It is the western terminus of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway, and lies 116 miles west-southwest of Peoria. Old Fort Edwards, established by Gen. Zachary Taylor, during the War of 1812, was located within the limits of the present city of Warsaw, opposite the mouth of the Des Moines River. An iron foundry, a large woolen mill, a plow factory and cooperage works are its principal manufacturing establishments. The channel of the Mississippi admits of the passage of the largest steamers up to this point. Warsaw has eight churches, a system of common schools comprising one high and three grammar schools, a National bank and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 3,105; (1890), 2,721; (1900), 2,335.

WASHBURN, a village of Woodford County, on a branch of the Chicago & Alton Railway 25 miles northeast of Peoria; has banks and a weekly paper; the district is agricultural. Population (1890), 598; (1900), 703.

WASHBURNE, Elihu Benjamin, Congressman and diplomatist, was born at Livermore, Maine, Sept. 23, 1816; in early life learned the trade of a printer, but graduated from Harvard Law School and was admitted to the bar in 1840. Coming west, he settled at Galena, forming a partnership with Charles S. Hempstead, for the practice of law, in 1841. He was a stalwart Whig, and, as such, was elected to Congress in 1852. He continued to represent his District until 1869, taking a prominent position, as a Republican, on the organization of that party. On account of his long service he was known as the "Father of the House," administering the Speaker's oath three times to Schuyler Colfax and once to James G. Blaine. He was appointed Secretary of State by General Grant in 1869, but surrendered his portfolio to become Envoy to France, in which capacity he achieved great distinction. He was the only official representative of a foreign government who remained in Paris, during the siege of that city by the Germans (1870-71) and the reign of the "Commune." For his conduct he was honored by the Governments of France and Germany alike. On his return to the United States, he made his home in Chicago, where he devoted his latter years chiefly to literary labor, and where he died, Oct. 22, 1887. He was strongly favored as a candidate for the Presidency in 1880.

WASHINGTON, a city in Tazewell County, situated at the intersection of the Chicago & Alton, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroads. It is 21 miles west of El Paso, and 12 miles east of Peoria. Carriages, plows and farming implements constitute the manufactured output. It is also an important shipping-point for farm products. It has electric light and water-works plants, eight churches, a graded school, two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,301; (1900), 1,451.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, an interior county of Southern Illinois, east of St. Louis; is drained by the Kaskaskia River and the Elkhorn, Beaucoup and Muddy Creeks; was organized in 1818, and has an area of 540 square miles. The surface is diversified, well watered and timbered. The soil is of variable fertility. Corn, wheat and oats are the chief agricultural products. Manufacturing is carried on to some extent, among the products being agricultural implements, flour, carriages and wagons. The most important town is Nashville, which is also the county-seat. Population (1890), 19,262; (1900), 19,526. Washington was one of the fifteen counties into which Illinois was divided at the organization of the State Government, being one of the last three created during the Territorial period—the other two being Franklin and Union.

WASHINGTON HEIGHTS, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 12 miles southwest of Chicago; has a graded school, female seminary, military school, a car factory, several churches and a newspaper. Annexed to City of Chicago, 1890.

WATAGA, a village of Knox County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 8 miles northeast of Galesburg. Population (1900), 545.

WATERLOO, the county-seat and chief town of Monroe County, on the Illinois Division of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, 24 miles east of south from St. Louis. The region is chiefly agricultural, but underlaid with coal. Its industries embrace two flour mills, a plow factory, distillery, creamery, two ice plants, and some minor concerns. The city has municipal water and electric light plants, four churches, a graded school and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,860; (1900) 2,114.

WATERMAN, Arba Nelson, lawyer and jurist, was born at Greensboro, Orleans County, Vt., Feb. 3, 1836. After receiving an academic education and teaching for a time, he read law at Montpelier and, later, passed through the Albany Law School. In 1861 he was admitted to the bar, removed to Joliet, Ill., and opened an office. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in the One Hundredth Illinois Volunteers, serving with the Army of the Cumberland for two years, and being mustered out in August, 1864, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. On leaving the army, Colonel Waterman commenced practice in Chicago. In 1873-74 he represented the Eleventh Ward in the City Council. In 1887 he was elected to the bench of the Cook County Circuit Court, and was re-elected in 1891 and, again, in 1897. In 1890 he was assigned as one of the Judges of the Appellate Court.

WATSEKA, the county-seat of Iroquois County, situated on the Iroquois River, at the mouth of Sugar Creek, and at the intersection of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroads, 77 miles south of Chicago, 46 miles north of Danville and 14 miles east of Gilman. It has flour-mills, brick and tile works and foundries, besides several churches, banks, a graded school and three weekly newspapers. Artesian well water is obtained by boring to the depth of 100 to 160 feet, and some forty flowing streams from these shafts are in the place. Population (1890), 2,017; (1900), 2,505.

WATTS, Amos, jurist, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., Oct. 25, 1821, but removed to Washington County in boyhood, and was elected County Clerk in 1847, '49 and '53, and State's Attorney for the Second Judicial District in 1856 and '60; then became editor and proprietor of a newspaper, later resuming the practice of law, and, in 1873, was elected Circuit Judge, remaining in office until his death, at Nashville, Ill., Dec. 6, 1888.

WAUKEGAN, the county-seat and principal city of Lake County, situated on the shore of Lake Michigan and on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, about 36 miles north by west from Chicago, and 50 miles south of Milwaukee; is also the northern terminus of the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroad and connected by electric lines with Chicago and Fox Lake. Lake Michigan is about 80 miles wide opposite this point. Waukegan was first known as "Little Fort," from the remains of an old fort that stood on its site. The principal part of the city is built on a bluff, which rises abruptly to the height of about fifty feet. Between the bluff and the shore is a flat tract about 400 yards wide which is occupied by gardens, dwellings, warehouses and manufactories. The manufactures include steel-wire, refined sugar, scales, agricultural implements, brass and iron products, sash, doors and blinds, leather, beer, etc.; the city has paved streets, gas and electric light plants, three banks, eight or ten churches, graded and high schools and two newspapers. A large trade in grain, lumber, coal and dairy products is carried on. Pop. (1890), 4,915; (1900), 9,426.

WAUKEGAN & SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY. (See Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railway.)

WAVERLY, a city in Morgan County, 18 miles southeast of Jacksonville, on the Jacksonville & St. Louis and the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroads. It was originally settled by enterprising emigrants from New England, whose descendants constitute a large proportion of the population. It is the center of a rich agricultural region, has a fine graded school, six or seven churches, two banks, two newspapers and tile works. Population (1880), 1,124; (1890), 1,337; (1900), 1,573.

WAYNE, (Gen.) Anthony, soldier, was born in Chester County, Pa., Jan. 1, 1745, of Anglo-Irish descent, graduated as a Surveyor, and first practiced his profession in Nova Scotia. During the years immediately antecedent to the Revolution he was prominent in the colonial councils of his native State, to which he had returned in 1767, where he became a member of the "Committee of Safety." On June 3, 1776, he was commissioned Colonel of the Fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania troops in the Continental army, and, during the War of the Revolution, was conspicuous for his courage and ability as a leader. One of his most daring and successful achievements was the capture of Stony Point, in 1779, when—the works having been carried and Wayne having received, what was supposed to be, his death-wound—he entered the fort, supported by his aids. For this service he was awarded a gold medal by Congress. He also took a conspicuous part in the investiture and capture of Yorktown. In October, 1783, he was brevetted Major-General. In 1784 he was elected to the Pennsylvania Legislature. A few years later he settled in Georgia, which State he represented in Congress for seven months, when his seat was declared vacant after contest. In April, 1792, he was confirmed as General-in-Chief of the United States Army, on nomination of President Washington. His connection with Illinois history began shortly after St. Clair's defeat, when he led a force into Ohio (1783) and erected a stockade at Greenville, which he named Fort Recovery; his object being to subdue the hostile savage tribes. In this he was eminently successful and, on August 3, 1793, after a victorious campaign, negotiated the Treaty of Greenville, as broad in its provisions as it was far-reaching in its influence. He was a daring fighter, and although Washington called him "prudent," his dauntlessness earned for him the sobriquet of "Mad Anthony." In matters of dress he was punctilious, and, on this account, he was sometimes dubbed "Dandy Wayne." He was one of the few white officers whom all the Western Indian tribes at once feared and respected. They named him "Black Snake" and "Tornado." He died at Presque Isle near Erie, Dec. 15, 1796. Thirteen years afterward his remains were removed by one of his sons, and interred in Badnor churchyard, in his native county. The Pennsylvania Historical Society erected a marble monument over his grave, and appropriately dedicated it on July 4 of the same year.

WAYNE COUNTY, in the southeast quarter of the State; has an area of 720 square miles; was organized in 1819, and named for Gen. Anthony Wayne. The county is watered and drained by the Little Wabash and its branches, notably the Skillet Fork. At the first election held in the county, only fifteen votes were cast. Early life was exceedingly primitive, the first settlers pounding corn into meal with a wooden pestle, a hollowed stump being used as a mortar. The first mill erected (of the antique South Carolina pattern) charged 25 cents per bushel for grinding. Prairie and woodland make up the surface, and the soil is fertile. Railroad facilities are furnished by the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis and the Baltimore & Ohio (Southwestern) Railroads. Corn, oats, tobacco, wheat, hay and wool are the chief agricultural products. Saw mills are numerous and there are also carriage and wagon factories. Fairfield is the county-seat. Population (1880), 21,291; (1890), 23,806; (1900), 27,626.

WEAS, THE, a branch of the Miami tribe of Indians. They called themselves "We-wee-hahs," and were spoken of by the French as "Oui-at-a-nons" and "Oui-as." Other corruptions of the name were common among the British and American colonists. In 1718 they had a village at Chicago, but abandoned it through fear of their hostile neighbors, the Chippewas and Pottawatomies. The Weas were, at one time, brave and warlike; but their numbers were reduced by constant warfare and disease, and, in the end, debauchery enervated and demoralized them. They were removed west of the Mississippi and given a reservation in Miami County, Kan. This they ultimately sold, and, under the leadership of Baptiste Peoria, united with their few remaining brethren of the Miamis and with the remnant of the Ill-i-ni under the title of the "confederated tribes," and settled in Indian Territory. (See also Miamis; Piankeshaws.)

WEBB, Edwin B., early lawyer and politician, was born about 1802, came to the vicinity of Carmi, White County, Ill., about 1828 to 1830, and, still later, studied law at Transylvania University. He held the office of Prosecuting Attorney of White County, and, in 1834, was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly, serving, by successive re-elections, until 1842, and, in the Senate, from 1842 to '46. During his service in the House he was a colleague and political and personal friend of Abraham Lincoln. He opposed the internal improvement scheme of 1837, predicting many of the disasters which were actually realized a few years later. He was a candidate for Presidential Elector on the Whig ticket, in 1844 and '48, and, in 1852, received the nomination for Governor as the opponent of Joel A. Matteson, two years later, being an unsuccessful candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court in opposition to Judge W. B. Scates. While practicing law at Carmi, he was also a partner of his brother in the mercantile business. Died, Oct. 14, 1858, in the 56th year of his age.

WEBB, Henry Livingston, soldier and pioneer (an elder brother of James Watson Webb, a noted New York journalist), was born at Claverack, N. Y., Feb. 6, 1795; served as a soldier in the War of 1812, came to Southern Illinois in 1817, and became one of the founders of the town of America near the mouth of the Ohio; was Representative in the Fourth and Eleventh General Assemblies, a Major in the Black Hawk War and Captain of volunteers and, afterwards, Colonel of regulars, in the Mexican War. In 1860 he went to Texas and served, for a time, in a semi-military capacity under the Confederate Government; returned to Illinois in 1869, and died, at Makanda, Oct. 5, 1876.

WEBSTER, Fletcher, lawyer and soldier, was born at Portsmouth, N. H., July 23, 1813; graduated at Harvard in 1833, and studied law with his father (Daniel Webster); in 1837, located at Peru, Ill., where he practiced three years. His father having been appointed Secretary of State in 1841, the son became his private secretary, was also Secretary of Legation to Caleb Cushing (Minister to China) in 1843, a member of the Massachusetts Legislature in 1847, and Surveyor of the Port of Boston, 1850-61; the latter year became Colonel of the Twelfth Massachusetts Volunteers, and was killed in the second battle of Bull Run, August 30, 1862.

WEBSTER, Joseph Dana, civil engineer and soldier, was born at Old Hampton, N. H., August 25, 1811. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1832, and afterwards read law at Newburyport, Mass. His natural inclination was for engineering, and, after serving for a time in the Engineer and War offices, at Washington, was made a United States civil engineer (1835) and, on July 7, 1838, entered the army as Second Lieutenant of Topographical Engineers. He served through the Mexican War, was made First Lieutenant in 1849, and promoted to a captaincy, in March, 1853. Thirteen months later he resigned, removing to Chicago, where he made his permanent home, and soon after was identified, for a time, with the proprietorship of "The Chicago Tribune." He was President of the commission that perfected the Chicago sewerage system, and designed and executed the raising of the grade of a large portion of the city from two to eight feet, whole blocks of buildings being raised by jack screws, while new foundations were inserted. At the outbreak of the Civil War he tendered his services to the Government and superintended the erection of the fortifications at Cairo, Ill., and Paducah, Ky. On April 7, 1861, he was commissioned Paymaster of Volunteers, with the rank of Major, and, in February, 1862, Colonel of the First Illinois Artillery. For several months he was chief of General Grant's staff, participating in the capture of Forts Donelson and Henry, and in the battle of Shiloh, in the latter as Chief of Artillery. In October, 1862, the War Department detailed him to make a survey of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, and, the following month, he was commissioned Brigadier-General of Volunteers, serving as Military Governor of Memphis and Superintendent of military railroads. He was again chief of staff to General Grant during the Vicksburg campaign, and, from 1864 until the close of the war, occupied the same relation to General Sherman. He was brevetted Major-General of Volunteers, March 13, 1865, but, resigning Nov. 6, following, returned to Chicago, where he spent the remainder of his life. From 1869 to 1872 he was Assessor of Internal Revenue there, and, later, Assistant United States Treasurer, and, in July, 1872, was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue. Died, at Chicago, March 12, 1876.

WELCH, William R., lawyer and jurist, was born in Jessamine County, Ky., Jan. 22, 1828, educated at Transylvania University, Lexington, graduating from the academic department in 1847, and, from the law school, in 1851. In 1864 he removed to Carlinville, Macoupin County, Ill., which place he made his permanent home. In 1877 he was elected to the bench of the Fifth Circuit, and re-elected in 1879 and '85. In 1884 he was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court for the Second District. Died, Sept. 1, 1888.

WELDON, Lawrence, one of the Judges of the United States Court of Claims, Washington, D. C., was born in Muskingum County, Ohio, in 1829; while a child, removed with his parents to Madison County, and was educated in the common schools, the local academy and at Wittenberg College, Springfield, in the same State; read law with Hon. R. A. Harrison, a prominent member of the Ohio bar, and was admitted to practice in 1854, meanwhile, in 1852-53, having served as a clerk in the office of the Secretary of State at Columbus. In 1854 he removed to Illinois, locating at Clinton, DeWitt County, where he engaged in practice; in 1860 was elected a Representative in the Twenty-second General Assembly, was also chosen a Presidential Elector the same year, and assisted in the first election of Abraham Lincoln to the Presidency. Early in 1861 he resigned his seat in the Legislature to accept the position of United States District Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, tendered him by President Lincoln, but resigned the latter office in 1866 and, the following year, removed to Bloomington, where he continued the practice of his profession until 1883, when he was appointed, by President Arthur, an Associate Justice of the United States Court of Claims at Washington—a position which he still (1899) continues to fill. Judge Weldon is among the remaining few who rode the circuit and practiced law with Mr. Lincoln. From the time of coming to the State in 1854 to 1860, he was one of Mr. Lincoln's most intimate traveling companions in the old Eighth Circuit, which extended from Sangamon County on the west to Vermilion on the east, and of which Judge David Davis, afterwards of the Supreme Court of the United States and United States Senator, was the presiding Justice. The Judge holds in his memory many pleasant reminiscences of that day, especially of the eastern portion of the District, where he was accustomed to meet the late Senator Voorhees, Senator McDonald and other leading lawyers of Indiana, as well as the historic men whom he met at the State capital.

WELLS, Albert W., lawyer and legislator, was born at Woodstock, Conn., May 9, 1839, and enjoyed only such educational and other advantages as belonged to the average New England boy of that period. During his boyhood his family removed to New Jersey, where he attended an academy, later, graduating from Columbia College and Law School in New York City, and began practice with State Senator Robert Allen at Red Bank, N. J. During the Civil War he enlisted in a New Jersey regiment and took part in the battle of Gettysburg, resuming his profession at the close of the war. Coming west in 1870, he settled in Quincy, Ill., where he continued practice. In 1886 he was elected to the House of Representatives from Adams County, as a Democrat, and re-elected two years later. In 1890 he was advanced to the Senate, where, by re-election in 1894, he served continuously until his death in office, March 5, 1897. His abilities and long service—covering the sessions of the Thirty-fifth to the Fortieth General Assemblies—placed him at the head of the Democratic side of the Senate during the latter part of his legislative career.

WELLS, William, soldier and victim of the Fort Dearborn massacre, was born in Kentucky, about 1770. When a boy of 12, he was captured by the Miami Indians, whose chief, Little Turtle, adopted him, giving him his daughter in marriage when he grew to manhood. He was highly esteemed by the tribe as a warrior, and, in 1790, was present at the battle where Gen. Arthur St. Clair was defeated. He then realized that he was fighting against his own race, and informed his father-in-law that he intended to ally himself with the whites. Leaving the Miamis, he made his way to General Wayne, who made him Captain of a company of scouts. After the treaty of Greenville (1795) he settled on a farm near Fort Wayne, where he was joined by his Indian wife. Here he acted as Indian Agent and Justice of the Peace. In 1812 he learned of the contemplated evacuation of Fort Dearborn, and, at the head of thirty Miamis, he set out for the post, his intention being to furnish a body-guard to the noncombatants on their proposed march to Fort Wayne. On August 13, he marched out of the fort with fifteen of his dusky warriors behind him, the remainder bringing up the rear. Before a mile and a half had been traveled, the party fell into an Indian ambuscade, and an indiscriminate massacre followed. (See Fort Dearborn.) The Miamis fled, and Captain Wells' body was riddled with bullets, his head cut off and his heart taken out. He was an uncle of Mrs. Heald, wife of the commander of Fort Dearborn.

WELLS, William Harvey, educator, was born in Tolland, Conn., Feb. 27, 1812; lived on a farm until 17 years old, attending school irregularly, but made such progress that he became successively a teacher in the Teachers' Seminary at Andover and Newburyport, and, finally, Principal of the State Normal School at Westfield, Mass. In 1856 he accepted the position of Superintendent of Public Schools for the city of Chicago, serving till 1864, when he resigned. He was an organizer of the Massachusetts State Teachers' Association, one of the first editors of "The Massachusetts Teacher" and prominently connected with various benevolent, educational and learned societies; was also author of several textbooks, and assisted in the revision of "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary." Died, Jan. 21, 1885.

WENONA, city on the eastern border of Marshall County, 20 miles south of La Salle, has zinc works, public and parochial schools, a weekly paper, two banks, and five churches. A good quality of soft coal is mined here. Population (1880), 911; (1890), 1,053; (1900), 1,486.

WENTWORTH, John, early journalist and Congressman, was born at Sandwich, N. H., March 5, 1815, graduated from Dartmouth College in 1836, and came to Chicago the same year, where he became editor of "The Chicago Democrat," which had been established by John Calhoun three years previous. He soon after became proprietor of "The Democrat," of which he continued to be the publisher until it was merged into "The Chicago Tribune," July 24, 1864. He also studied law, and was admitted to the Illinois bar in 1841. He served in Congress as a Democrat from 1843 to 1851, and again from 1853 to 1855, but left the Democratic party on the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. He was elected Mayor of Chicago in 1857, and again in 1860, during his incumbency introducing a number of important municipal reforms; was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and twice served on the Board of Education. He again represented Illinois in Congress as a Republican from 1865 to 1867—making fourteen years of service in that body. In 1872 he joined in the Greeley movement, but later renewed his allegiance to the Republican party. In 1878 Mr. Wentworth published an elaborate genealogical work in three volumes, entitled "History of the Wentworth Family." A volume of "Congressional Reminiscences" and two by him on "Early Chicago," published in connection with the Fergus Historical Series, contain some valuable information on early local and national history. On account of his extraordinary height he received the sobriquet of "Long John," by which he was familiarly known throughout the State. Died, in Chicago, Oct. 16, 1888.

WEST, Edward M., merchant and banker, was born in Virginia, May 2, 1814; came with his father to Illinois in 1818; in 1829 became a clerk in the Recorder's office at Edwardsville, also served as deputy postmaster, and, in 1833, took a position in the United States Land Office there. Two years later he engaged in mercantile business, which he prosecuted over thirty years—meanwhile filling the office of County Treasurer, ex-officio Superintendent of Schools, and Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1847. In 1867, in conjunction with W. R. Prickett, he established a bank at Edwardsville, with which he was connected until his death, Oct. 31, 1887. Mr. West officiated frequently as a "local preacher" of the Methodist Church, in which capacity he showed much ability as a public speaker.

WEST, Mary Allen, educator and philanthropist, was born at Galesburg, Ill., July 31, 1837; graduated at Knox Seminary in 1854 and taught until 1873, when she was elected County Superintendent of Schools, serving nine years. She took an active and influential interest in educational and reformatory movements, was for two years editor of "Our Home Monthly," in Philadelphia, and also a contributor to other journals, besides being editor-in-chief of "The Union Signal," Chicago, the organ of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—in which she held the position of President; was also President, in the latter days of her life, of the Illinois Woman's Press Association of Chicago, that city having become her home in 1885. In 1892, Miss West started on a tour of the world for the benefit of her health, but died at Tokio, Japan, Dec. 1, 1892.

WESTERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, an institution for the treatment of the insane, located at Watertown, Rock Island County, in accordance with an act of the General Assembly, approved, May 22, 1895. The Thirty-ninth General Assembly made an appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of fire-proof buildings, while Rock Island County donated a tract of 400 acres of land valued at $40,000. The site selected by the Commissioners, is a commanding one overlooking the Mississippi River, eight miles above Rock Island, and five and a half miles from Moline, and the buildings are of the most modern style of construction. Watertown is reached by two lines of railroad—the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy—besides the Mississippi River. The erection of buildings was begun in 1896, and they were opened for the reception of patients in 1898. They have a capacity for 800 patients.

WESTERN MILITARY ACADEMY, an institution located at Upper Alton, Madison County, incorporated in 1892; has a faculty of eight members and reports eighty pupils for 1897-98, with property valued at $70,000. The institution gives instruction in literary and scientific branches, besides preparatory and business courses.

WESTERN NORMAL COLLEGE, located at Bushnell, McDonough County; incorporated in 1888. It is co-educational, has a corps of twelve instructors and reported 500 pupils for 1897-98, 300 males and 200 females.

WESTERN SPRINGS, a village of Cook County, and residence suburb of the city of Chicago, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 15 miles west of the initial station. Population (1890), 451; (1900), 662.

WESTERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, located in Chicago and controlled by the Protestant Episcopal Church. It was founded in 1883 through the munificence of Dr. Tolman Wheeler, and was opened for students two years later. It has two buildings, of a superior order of architecture—one including the school and lecture rooms and the other a dormitory. A hospital and gymnasium are attached to the latter, and a school for boys is conducted on the first floor of the main building, which is known as Wheeler Hall. The institution is under the general supervision of Rt. Rev. William E. McLaren, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Illinois.

WESTFIELD, village of Clark County, on Cin., Ham. & Dayton R. R., 10 m. s -e. of Charleston; seat of Westfield College; has a bank, five churches and two newspapers. Pop. (1900), 820.

WEST SALEM, a town of Edwards County, on the Peoria-Evansville Div. Ill. Cent. R. R., 12 miles northeast of Albion; has a bank and a weekly paper. Pop. (1890), 476; (1900), 700.

WETHERELL, Emma Abbott, vocalist, was born in Chicago, Dec. 9, 1849; in her childhood attracted attention while singing with her father (a poor musician) in hotels and on the streets in Chicago, Peoria and elsewhere; at 18 years of age, went to New York to study, earning her way by giving concerts en route, and receiving aid and encouragement from Clara Louisa Kellogg; in New York was patronized by Henry Ward Beecher and others, and aided in securing the training of European masters. Compelled to surmount many obstacles from poverty and other causes, her after success in her profession was phenomenal. Died, during a professional tour, at Salt Lake City, Jan. 5, 1891. Miss Abbott married her manager, Eugene Wetherell, who died before her.

WHEATON, a city and the county-seat of Du Page County, situated on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, 25 miles west of Chicago. Agriculture and stock-raising are the chief industries in the surrounding region. The city owns a new water-works plant (costing $60,000) and has a public library valued at $75,000, the gift of a resident, Mr. John Quincy Adams; has a court house, electric light plant, sewerage and drainage system, seven churches, three graded schools, four weekly newspapers and a State bank. Wheaton is the seat of Wheaton College (which see). Population (1880), 1,160; (1890), 1,622; (1900), 2,345.

WHEATON COLLEGE, an educational institution located at Wheaton, Du Page County, and under Congregational control. It was founded in 1853, as the Illinois Institute, and was chartered under its present name in 1860. Its early existence was one of struggle, but of late years it has been established on a better foundation, in 1898 having $54,000 invested in productive funds, and property aggregating $136,000. The faculty comprises fifteen professors, and, in 1898, there were 321 students in attendance. It is co-educational and instruction is given in business and preparatory studies, as well as the fine arts, music and classical literature.

WHEELER, David Hilton, D.D., LL.D., clergyman, was born at Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 19, 1829; graduated at Rock River Seminary, Mount Morris, in 1851; edited "The Carroll County Republican" and held a professorship in Cornell College, Iowa, (1857-61); was United States Consul at Geneva, Switzerland, (1861-66); Professor of English Literature in Northwestern University (1867-75); edited "The Methodist" in New York, seven years, and was President of Allegheny College (1883-87); received the degree of D.D. from Cornell College in 1867, and that of LL.D. from the Northwestern University in 1881. He is the author of "Brigandage in South Italy"

(two volumes, 1864) and "By-Ways of Literature" (1883), besides some translations.

WHEELER, Hamilton K., ex-Congressman, was born at Ballston, N. Y., August 5, 1848, but emigrated with his parents to Illinois in 1852; remained on a farm until 19 years of age, his educational advantages being limited to three months' attendance upon a district school each year. In 1871, he was admitted to the bar at Kankakee, where he has since continued to practice. In 1884 he was elected to represent the Sixteenth District in the State Senate, where he served on many important committees, being Chairman of that on the Judicial Department. In 1892 he was elected Representative in Congress from the Ninth Illinois District, on the Republican ticket.

WHEELING, a town on the northern border of Cook County, on the Wisconsin Central Railway. Population (1890), 811; (1900), 331.

WHISTLER, (Maj.) John, soldier and builder of the first Fort Dearborn, was born in Ulster, Ireland, about 1756; served under Burgoyne in the Revolution, and was with the force surrendered by that officer at Saratoga, in 1777. After the peace he returned to the United States, settled at Hagerstown, Md., and entered the United States Army, serving at first in the ranks and being severely wounded in the disastrous Indian campaigns of 1791. Later, he was promoted to a captaincy and, in the summer of 1803, sent with his company, to the head of Lake Michigan, where he constructed the first Fort Dearborn within the limits of the present city of Chicago, remaining in command until 1811, when he was succeeded by Captain Heald. He received the brevet rank of Major, in 1815 was appointed military store-keeper at Newport, Ky., and afterwards at Jefferson Barracks, near St. Louis, where he died, Sept. 3, 1829. Lieut. William Whistler, his son, who was with his father, for a time, in old Fort Dearborn—but transferred, in 1809, to Fort Wayne—was of the force included in Hull's surrender at Detroit in 1812. After his exchange he was promoted to a captaincy, to the rank of Major in 1826 and to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy in 1845, dying at Newport, Ky., in 1863. James Abbott McNiel Whistler, the celebrated, but eccentric artist of that name, is a grandson of the first Major Whistler.

WHITE, George E., ex-Congressman, was born in Massachusetts in 1848; after graduating, at the age of 16, he enlisted as a private in the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, serving under General Grant in the campaign against Richmond from the battle of the Wilderness until the surrender of Lee. Having taken a course in a commercial college at Worcester, Mass., in 1867 he came to Chicago, securing employment in a lumber yard, but a year later began business on his own account, which he has successfully conducted. In 1878 he was elected to the State Senate, as a Republican, from one of the Chicago Districts, and re-elected four years later, serving in that body eight years. He declined a nomination for Congress in 1884, but accepted in 1894, and was elected for the Fifth District, as he was again in 1896, but was defeated, in 1898, by Edward T. Noonan, Democrat.

WHITE, Horace, journalist, was born at Colebrook, N. H., August 10, 1834; in 1853 graduated at Beloit College, Wis., whither his father had removed in 1837; engaged in journalism as city editor of "The Chicago Evening Journal," later becoming agent of the Associated Press, and, in 1857, an editorial writer on "The Chicago Tribune," during a part of the war acting as its Washington correspondent. He also served, in 1856, as Assistant Secretary of the Kansas National Committee, and, later, as Secretary of the Republican State Central Committee. In 1864 he purchased an interest in "The Tribune," a year or so later becoming editor-in-chief, but retired in October, 1874. After a protracted European tour, he united with Carl Schurz and E. L. Godkin of "The Nation," in the purchase and reorganization of "The New York Evening Post," of which he is now editor-in-chief.

WHITE, Julius, soldier, was born in Cazenovia, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1816; removed to Illinois in 1836, residing there and in Wisconsin, where he was a member of the Legislature of 1849; in 1861 was made Collector of Customs at Chicago, but resigned to assume the colonelcy of the Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers, which he commanded on the Fremont expedition to Southwest Missouri. He afterwards served with General Curtiss in Arkansas, participated in the battle of Pea Ridge and was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General. He was subsequently assigned to the Department of the Shenandoah, but finding his position at Martinsburg, W. Va., untenable, retired to Harper's Ferry, voluntarily serving under Colonel Miles, his inferior in command. When this post was surrendered (Sept. 15, 1862), he was made a prisoner, but released under parole; was tried by a court of inquiry at his own request, and acquitted, the court finding that he had acted with courage and capability.

He resigned in 1864, and, in March, 1865, was brevetted Major-General of Volunteers. Died, at Evanston, May 12, 1890.

WHITE COUNTY, situated in the southeastern quarter of the State, and bounded on the east by the Wabash River; was organized in 1816, being the tenth county organized during the Territorial period: area, 500 square miles. The county is crossed by three railroads and drained by the Wabash and Little Wabash Rivers. The surface consists of prairie and woodland, and the soil is, for the most part, highly productive. The principal agricultural products are corn, wheat, oats, potatoes, tobacco, fruit, butter, sorghum and wool. The principal industrial establishments are carriage factories, saw mills and flour mills. Carmi is the county-seat. Other towns are Enfield, Grayville and Norris City. Population (1880), 23,087; (1890), 25,005; (1900), 25,386.

WHITEHALL, a city in Greene County, at the intersection of the Chicago & Alton and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroads, 65 miles north of St. Louis and 24 miles south-southwest of Jacksonville; in rich farming region; has stoneware and sewer-pipe factories, foundry and machine shop, flour mill, elevators, wagon shops, creamery, water system, sanitarium, heating, electric light and power system, nurseries and fruit-supply houses, and two poultry packing houses; also has five churches, a graded school, two banks and three newspapers—one daily. Population (1890), 1,961; (1900), 2,030.

WHITEHOUSE, Henry John, Protestant Episcopal Bishop, was born in New York City, August 19, 1803; graduated from Columbia College in 1821, and from the (New York) General Theological Seminary in 1824. After ordination he was rector of various parishes in Pennsylvania and New York until 1851, when he was chosen Assistant Bishop of Illinois, succeeding Bishop Chase in 1852. In 1867, by invitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury, he delivered the opening sermon before the Pan-Anglican Conference held in England. During this visit he received the degree of D.D. from Oxford University, and that of LL.D. from Cambridge. His rigid views as a churchman and a disciplinarian, were illustrated in his prosecution of Rev. Charles Edward Cheney, which resulted in the formation of the Reformed Episcopal Church. He was a brilliant orator and a trenchant and unyielding controversialist. Died, in Chicago, August 10, 1874.

WHITESIDE COUNTY, in the northwestern portion of the State bordering on the Mississippi River; created by act of the Legislature passed in 1836, and named for Capt. Samuel Whiteside, a noted Indian fighter; area, 700 square miles. The surface is level, diversified by prairies and woodland, and the soil is extremely fertile. The county-seat was first fixed at Lyndon, then at Sterling, and finally at Morrison, its present location. The Rock River crosses the county and furnishes abundant water power for numerous factories, turning out agricultural implements, carriages and wagons, furniture, woolen goods, flour and wrapping paper. There are also distilling and brewing interests, besides saw and planing mills. Corn is the staple agricultural product, although all the leading cereals are extensively grown. The principal towns are Morrison, Sterling, Fulton and Rock Falls. Population (1880), 30,885; (1890), 30,854; (1900), 34,710.

WHITESIDE, William, pioneer and soldier of the Revolution, emigrated from the frontier of North Carolina to Kentucky, and thence, in 1793, to the present limits of Monroe County, Ill., erecting a fort between Cahokia and Kaskaskia, which became widely known as "Whiteside Station." He served as a Justice of the Peace, and was active in organizing the militia during the War of 1812-14, dying at the old Station in 1815.—John (Whiteside), a brother of the preceding, and also a Revolutionary soldier, came to Illinois at the same time, as also did William B. and Samuel, sons of the two brothers, respectively. All of them became famous as Indian fighters. The two latter served as Captains of companies of "Rangers" in the War of 1812, Samuel taking part in the battle of Rock Island in 1814, and contributing greatly to the success of the day. During the Black Hawk War (1832) he attained the rank of Brigadier-General. Whiteside County was named in his honor. He made one of the earliest improvements in Ridge Prairie, a rich section of Madison County, and represented that county in the First General Assembly. William B. served as Sheriff of Madison County for a number of years. — John D. (Whiteside), another member of this historic family, became very prominent, serving in the lower House of the Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Fourteenth General Assemblies, and in the Senate of the Tenth, from Monroe County; was a Presidential Elector in 1836, State Treasurer (1837-41) and a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1847. General Whiteside, as he was known, was the second of James Shields in the famous Shields and Lincoln duel (so-called) in 1842, and, as such, carried the challenge of the former to Mr. Lincoln. (See Duels.)

WHITING, Lorenzo D., legislator, was born in Wayne County, N. Y., Nov. 17, 1819; came to Illinois in 1838, but did not settle there permanently until 1849, when he located in Bureau County. He was a Representative from that county in the Twenty-sixth General Assembly (1869), and a member of the Senate continuously from 1871 to 1887, serving in the latter through eight General Assemblies. Died at his home near Tiskilwa, Bureau County, Ill., Oct. 10, 1889.

WHITING, Richard H., Congressman, was born at West Hartford, Conn., June 17, 1826, and received a common school education. In 1862 he was commissioned Paymaster in the Volunteer Army of the Union, and resigned in 1866. Having removed to Illinois, he was appointed Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue for the Fifth Illinois District, in February, 1870, and so continued until the abolition of the office in 1873. On retiring from the Assessorship he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue, and served until March 4, 1875, when he resigned to take his seat as Republican Representative in Congress from the Peoria District, to which he had been elected in November, 1874. After the expiration of his term he held no public office, but was a member of the Republican National Convention of 1884. Died, at the Continental Hotel, in New York City, May 24, 1888.

WHITNEY, James W., pioneer lawyer and early teacher, known by the nickname of "Lord Coke"; came to Illinois in Territorial days (believed to have been about 1800); resided for some time at or near Edwardsville, then became a teacher at Atlas, Pike County, and, still later, the first Circuit and County Clerk of that county. Though nominally a lawyer, he had little if any practice. He acquired the title, by which he was popularly known for a quarter of a century, by his custom of visiting the State Capital, during the sessions of the General Assembly, when he would organize the lobbyists and visitors about the capital—of which there were an unusual number in those days—into what was called the "Third House." Having been regularly chosen to preside under the name of "Speaker of the Lobby," he would deliver a message full of practical hits and jokes, aimed at members of the two houses and others, which would be received with cheers and laughter. The meetings of the "Third House," being held in the evening, were attended by many members and visitors in lieu of other forms of entertainment. Mr. Whitney's home, in his latter years, was at Pittsfield. He resided for a time at Quincy. Died, Dec. 13, 1860, aged over 80 years.

WHITTEMORE, Floyd K., State Treasurer, is a native of New York, came at an early age, with his parents, to Sycamore, Ill., where he was educated in the high school there. He purposed becoming a lawyer, but, on the election of the late James H. Beveridge State Treasurer, in 1864, accepted the position of clerk in the office. Later, he was employed as a clerk in the banking house of Jacob Bunn in Springfield, and, on the organization of the State National Bank, was chosen cashier of that Institution, retaining the position some twenty years. After the appointment of Hon. John R. Tanner to the position of Assistant Treasurer of the United States, at Chicago, in 1892, Mr. Whittemore became cashier in that office, and, in 1865, Assistant State Treasrure under the administration of State Treasurer Henry Wulff. In 1898 he was elected State Treasurer, receiving a plurality of 43,450 over his Democratic opponent.

WICKERSHAM, (Col.) Dudley, soldier and merchant, was born in Woodford County, Ky., Nov. 22, 1819; came to Springfield, Ill., in 1843, and served as a member of the Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's) through the Mexican War. On the return of peace he engaged in the dry-goods trade in Springfield, until 1861, when he enlisted in the Tenth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, serving, first as Lieutenant-Colonel and then as Colonel, until May, 1864, when, his regiment having been consolidated with the Fifteenth Cavalry, he resigned. After the war, he held the office of Assessor of Internal Revenue for several years, after which he engaged in the grocery trade. Died, in Springfield, August 8, 1898.

WIDEN, Raphael, pioneer and early legislator, was a native of Sweden, who, having been taken to France at eight years of age, was educated for a Catholic priest. Coming to the United States in 1815, he was at Cahokia, Ill., in 1818, where, during the same year, he married into a French family of that place. He served in the House of Representatives from Randolph County, in the Second and Third General Assemblies (1820-24), and as Senator in the Fourth and Fifth (1824-28). During his last term in the House, he was one of those who voted against the pro-slavery Convention resolution. He died of cholera, at Kaskaskia, in 1833.

WIKE, Scott, lawyer and ex-Congressman, was born at Meadville, Pa., April 6, 1834; at 4 years of age removed with his parents to Quincy, Ill., and, in 1844, to Pike County. Having graduated from Lombard University, Galesburg, in 1857, he began reading law with Judge O. C. Skinner of Quincy. He was admitted to the bar in 1858, but, before commencing practice, spent a year at Harvard Law School, graduating there in 1859. Immediately thereafter he opened an office at Pittsfield, Ill., and has resided there ever since. In politics he has always been a strong Democrat. He served two terms in the Legislature (1863-67) and, in 1874, was chosen Representative from his District in Congress, being re-elected in 1888 and, again, in 1890. In 1893 he was appointed by President Cleveland Third Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, which position he continued to fill until March, 1897, when he resumed the practice of law at Pittsfield. Died Jan. 15, 1901.

WILEY, (Col.) Benjamin Ladd, soldier, was born in Smithfield, Jefferson County, Ohio, March 25, 1821, came to Illinois in 1845 and began life at Vienna, Johnson County, as a teacher. In 1846 he enlisted for the Mexican War, as a member of the Fifth (Colonel Newby's) Regiment Illinois Volunteers, serving chiefly in New Mexico until mustered out in 1848. A year later he removed to Jonesboro, where he spent some time at the carpenter's trade, after which he became clerk in a store, meanwhile assisting to edit "The Jonesboro Gazette" until 1853; then became traveling salesman for a St. Louis firm, but later engaged in the hardware trade at Jonesboro, in which he continued for several years. In 1856 he was the Republican candidate for Congress for the Ninth District, receiving 4,000 votes, while Fremont, the Republican candidate for President, received only 825 in the same district. In 1857 he opened a real estate office in Jonesboro in conjunction with David L. Phillips and Col. J. W. Ashley, with which he was connected until 1860, when he removed to Makanda, Jackson County. In September, 1861, he was mustered in as Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fifth Illinois Cavalry, later serving in Missouri and Arkansas under Generals Steele and Curtiss, being, a part of the time, in command of the First Brigade of Cavalry, and, in the advance on Vicksburg, having command of the right wing of General Grant's cavalry. Being disabled by rheumatism at the end of the siege, he tendered his resignation, and was immediately appointed Enrolling Officer at Cairo, serving in this capacity until May, 1865, when he was mustered out. In 1869 he was appointed by Governor Palmer one of the Commissioners to locate the Southern Illinois Hospital for the Insane, and served as Secretary of the Board until the institution was opened at Anna, in May, 1871. In 1869 he was defeated as a candidate for County Judge of Jackson County, and, in 1872, for the State Senate, by a small majority in a strongly Democratic District; in 1876 was the Republican candidate for Congress, in the Eighteenth District, against William Hartzell, but was defeated by only twenty votes, while carrying six out of the ten counties comprising the District. In the latter years of his life, Colonel Wiley was engaged quite extensively in fruit-growing at Makanda, Jackson County, where he died, March 22, 1890.

WILKIE, Franc Bangs, journalist, was born in Saratoga County, N. Y., July 2, 1830; took a partial course at Union College, after which he edited papers at Schenectady, N. Y., Elgin, Ill., and Davenport and Dubuque, Iowa; also serving, during a part of the Civil War, as the western war correspondent of "The New York Times." In 1863 he became an editorial writer on "The Chicago Times," remaining with that paper, with the exception of a brief interval, until 1888 —a part of the time as its European correspondent. He was the author of a series of sketches over the nom de plume of "Poliuto," and of a volume of reminiscences under the title, "Thirty-five Years of Journalism," published shortly before his death, which took place, April 12, 1892.

WILKIN, Jacob W., Justice of the Supreme Court, was born in Licking County, Ohio, June 7, 1837; removed with his parents to Illinois, at 12 years of age, and was educated at McKendree College; served three years in the War for the Union; studied law with Judge Scholfield and was admitted to the bar in 1866. In 1872, he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket, and, in 1879, elected Judge of the Circuit Court and re-elected in 1885—the latter year being assigned to the Appellate bench for the Fourth District, where he remained until his election to the Supreme bench in 1888, being re-elected to the latter office in 1897. His home is at Danville.

WILKINSON, Ira O., lawyer and Judge, was born in Virginia in 1822, and accompanied his father to Jacksonville (1835), where he was educated. During a short service as Deputy Clerk of Morgan County, he conceived a fondness for the profession of the law, and, after a course of study under Judge William Thomas, was admitted to practice in 1847. Richard Yates (afterwards Governor and Senator) was his first partner. In 1845 he removed to Rock Island, and, six years later, was elected a Circuit Judge, being again closen to the same position in 1861. At the expiration of his second term he removed to Chicago. Died, at Jacksonville, August 24, 1894.

WILKINSON, John P., early merchant, was born, Dec. 14, 1790, in New Kent County, Va., emigrated first to Kentucky, and, in 1828, settled in Jacksonville, Ill., where he engaged in mercantile business. Mr. Wilkinson was a liberal friend of Illinois College and Jacksonville Female Academy, of each of which he was a Trustee from their origin until his death, which occurred, during a business visit to St. Louis, in December, 1841.

WILL, Conrad, pioneer physician and early legislator, was born in Philadelphia, June 4, 1778; about 1804 removed to Somerset County Pa., and, in 1813, to Kaskaskia, Ill. He was a physician by profession, but having leased the saline lands on the Big Muddy, in the vicinity of what afterwards became the town of Brownsville, he engaged in the manufacture of salt, removing thither in 1815, and becoming one of the founders of Brownsville, afterwards the first county-seat of Jackson County. On the organization of Jackson County, in 1816, he became a member of the first Board of County Commissioners, and, in 1818, served as Delegate from that county in the Convention which framed the first State Constitution. Thereafter he served continuously as a member of the Legislature from 1818 to '34—first as Senator in the First General Assembly, then as Representative in the Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth, and again as Senator in the Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth—his career being conspicuous for long service. He died in office, June 11, 1834. Dr. Will was short of stature, fleshy, of jovial disposition and fond of playing practical jokes upon his associates, but very popular, as shown by his successive elections to the Legislature. He has been called "The Father of Jackson County." Will County, organized by act of the Legislature two years after his death, was named in his honor.

WILL COUNTY, a northeastern county, embracing 850 square miles, named in honor of Dr. Conrad Will, an early politician and legislator. Early explorations of the territory were made in 1829, when white settlers were few. The bluff west of Joliet is said to have been first occupied by David and Benjamin Maggard. Joseph Smith, the Mormon "apostle," expounded his peculiar doctrines at "the Point" in 1831. Several of the early settlers fled from the country during (or after) a raid by the Sac Indians. There is a legend, seemingly well supported, to the effect that the first lumber, sawed to build the first frame house in Chicago (that of P. F. W. Peck), was sawed at Plainfield. Will County, originally a part of Cook, was separately erected in 1836, Joliet being made the county-seat. Agriculture, quarrying and manufacturing are the chief industries. Joliet, Lockport and Wilmington are the principal towns. Population (1880), 53,422; (1890), 62,007; (1900), 74,764.

WILLARD, Frances Elizabeth, teacher and reformer, was born at Churchville, N. Y., Sept. 28, 1839, graduated from the Northwestern Female College at Evanston, Ill., in 1859, and, in 1862, accepted the Professorship of Natural Sciences in that institution. During 1866-67 she was the Principal of the Genessee Wesleyan Seminary. The next two years she devoted to travel and study abroad, meanwhile contributing to various periodicals. From 1871 to 1874 she was Professor of Æsthetics in the Northwestern University and dean of the Woman's College. She was always an enthusiastic champion of temperance, and, in 1874, abandoned her profession to identify herself with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. For five years she was Corresponding Secretary of the national body, and, from 1879, its President. While Secretary she organized the Home Protective Association, and prepared a petition to the Illinois Legislature, to which nearly 200,000 names were attached, asking for the granting to women of the right to vote on the license question. In 1878 she succeeded her brother, Oliver A. Willard (who had died), as editor of "The Chicago Evening Post," but, a few months later, withdrew, and, in 1882, was elected as a member of the executive committee of the National Prohibition party. In 1886 she became leader of the White Cross Movement for the protection of women, and succeeded in securing favorable legislation, in this direction, in twelve States. In 1883 she founded the World's Christian Temperance Union, and, in 1888, was chosen its President, as also President of the International Council of Women. The latter years of her life were spent chiefly abroad, much of the time as the guest and co-worker of Lady Henry Somerset, of England, during which she devoted much attention to investigating the condition of women in the Orient. Miss Willard was a prolific and highly valued contributor to the magazines, and (besides numerous pamphlets) published several volumes, including "Nineteen Beautiful Years" (a tribute to her sister); "Woman in Temperance"; "How to Win," and "Woman in the Pulpit." Died, in New York, Feb. 18, 1898.

WILLARD, Samuel, A.M., M.D., LL.D., physician and educator, was born in Lunenberg, Vt., Dec. 30, 1821—the lineal descendant of Maj. Simon Willard, one of the founders of Concord, Mass., and prominent in "King Philip's War," and of his son, Rev. Dr. Samuel Willard, of the Old South Church, Boston, and seventh President of Harvard College. The subject of this sketch was taken in his infancy to Boston, and, in 1831, to Carrollton, Ill., where his father pursued the avocation of a druggist. After a preparatory course at Shurtleff College, Upper Alton, in 1836 he entered the freshman class in Illinois College at Jacksonville, but withdrew the following year, re-entering college in 1840 and graduating in the class of 1843, as a classmate of Dr. Newton Bateman, afterwards State Superintendent of Public Instruction and President of Knox College, and Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, now of Elmira, N. Y. The next year he spent as Tutor in Illinois College, when he began the study of medicine at Quincy, graduating from the Medical Department of Illinois College in 1848. During a part of the latter year he edited a Free-Soil campaign paper ("The Tribune") at Quincy, and, later, "The Western Temperance Magazine" at the same place. In 1849 he began the practice of his profession at St. Louis, but the next year removed to Collinsville, Ill., remaining until 1857, when he took charge of the Department of Languages in the newly organized State Normal University at Normal. The second year of the Civil War (1862) he enlisted as a private in the Ninety-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but was soon after commissioned as Surgeon with the rank of Major, participating in the campaigns in Tennessee and in the first attack upon Vicksburg. Being disabled by an attack of paralysis, in February, 1863, he was compelled to resign, when he had sufficiently recovered accepting a position in the office of Provost Marshal General Oakes, at Springfield, where he remained until the close of the war. He then became Grand Secretary of the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows for the State of Illinois—a position which he had held from 1856 to 1862—remaining under his second appointment from 1865 to '69. The next year he served as Superintendent of Schools at Springfield, meanwhile assisting in founding the Springfield public library, and serving as its first librarian. In 1870 he accepted the professorship of History in the West Side High School of Chicago, which, with the exception of two years (1884-86), he continued to occupy for more than twenty-five years, retiring in 1898. In the meantime, Dr. Willard has been a laborious literary worker, having been, for a considerable period, editor, or assistant-editor, of "The Illinois Teacher," a contributor to "The Century Magazine" and "The Dial" of Chicago, besides having published a "Digest of the Laws of Odd Fellowship" in sixteen volumes, begun while he was Grand Secretary of the Order in 1864, and continued in 1872 and '82; a "Synopsis of History and Historical Chart," covering the period from B. C. 800 to A. D. 1876—of which he has had a second edition in course of preparation. Of late years he has been engaged upon a "Historical Dictionary of Names and Places," which will include some 12,000 topics, and which promises to be the most important work of his life. Previous to the war he was an avowed Abolitionist and operator on the "Underground Railroad," who made no concealment of his opinions, and, on one or two occasions, was called to answer for them in prosecutions under the "Fugitive Slave Act." (See "Underground Railroad.") His friend and classmate, the late Dr. Bateman, says of him: "Dr. Willard is a sound thinker; a clear and forcible writer; of broad and accurate scholarship; conscientious, genial and kindly, and a most estimable gentleman."

WILLIAMS, Archibald, lawyer and jurist, was born in Montgomery County, Ky., June 10, 1801; with moderate advantages but natural fondness for study, he chose the profession of law, and was admitted to the bar in Tennessee in 1828, coming to Quincy, Ill., the following year. He was elected to the General Assembly three times—serving in the Senate in 1832-36, and in the House, 1836-40; was United States District Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, by appointment of President Taylor, 1849-53; was twice the candidate of his party (the Whig) for United States Senator, and appointed by President Lincoln, in 1861, United States District Judge for the State of Kansas. His abilities and high character were widely recognized. Died, in Quincy, Sept. 21, 1863—His son, John H., an attorney at Quincy, served as Judge of the Circuit Court 1879-85.—Another son, Abraham Lincoln, was twice elected Attorney-General of Kansas.

WILLIAMS, Erastus Smith, lawyer and jurist, was born at Salem, N. Y., May 22, 1821. In 1842 he removed to Chicago, where, after reading law, he was admitted to the bar in 1844. In 1854 he was appointed Master in Chancery, which office he filled until 1863, when he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County. After re-election in 1870 he became Chief Justice, and, at the same time, heard most of the cases on the equity side of the court. In 1879 he was a candidate for re-election as a Republican, but was defeated with the party ticket. After his retirement from the bench he resumed private practice. Died, Feb. 24, 1884.

WILLIAMS, James R., Congressman, was born in White County, Ill., Dec. 27, 1850, at the age of 25 graduated from the Indiana State University, at Bloomington, and, in 1876, from the Union College of Law, Chicago, since then being an active and successful practitioner at Carmi. In 1880 he was appointed Master in Chancery and served two years. From 1882 to 1886 he was County Judge. In 1892 he was a nominee on the Democratic ticket for Presidential Elector. He was elected to represent the Nineteenth Illinois District in the Fifty-first Congress at a special election held to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of R. W. Townshend, was re-elected in 1890 and 1892, but defeated by Orlando Burrell (Republican) for re-election in the newly organized Twentieth District in 1894. In 1898 he was again a candidate and elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress.

WILLIAMS, John, pioneer merchant, was born in Bath County, Ky., Sept. 11, 1808; between 14 and 16 years of age was clerk in a store in his native State; then, joining his parents, who had settled on a tract of land in a part of Sangamon (now Menard) County, Ill., he found employment as clerk in the store of Major Elijah Iles, at Springfield, whom he succeeded in business at the age of 22, continuing it without interruption until 1880. In 1856 Mr. Williams was the Republican candidate for Congress in the Springfield District, and, in 1861, was appointed Commissary-General for the State, rendering valuable service in furnishing supplies for State troops, in camps of instruction and while proceeding to the field, in the first years of the war; was also chief officer of the Illinois Sanitary Commission for two years, and, as one of the intimate personal friends of Mr. Lincoln, was chosen to accompany the remains of the martyred President, from Washington to Springfield, for burial. Liberal, enterprising and public-spirited, his name was associated with nearly every public enterprise of importance in Springfield during his business career—being one of the founders, and, for eleven years President, of the First National Bank; a chief promoter in the construction of what is now the Springfield Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Springfield and Peoria line; a Director of the Springfield Iron Company; one of the Commissioners who constructed the Springfield water-works, and an officer of the Lincoln Monument Association, from 1865 to his death, May 29, 1890.

WILLIAMS, Norman, lawyer, was born at Woodstock, Vt., Feb. 1, 1833, being related, on both the paternal and maternal sides, to some of the most prominent families of New England. He fitted for college at Union Academy, Meriden, and graduated from the University of Vermont in the class of 1855. After taking a course in the Albany Law School and with a law firm in his native town, he was admitted to practice in both New York and Vermont, removed to Chicago in 1858, and, in 1860, became a member of the firm of King, Kales & Williams, still later forming a partnership with Gen. John L. Thompson, which ended with the death of the latter in 1888. In a professional capacity he assisted in the organization of the Pullman Palace Car Company, and was a member of its Board of Directors; also assisted in organizing the Western Electric Company, and was prominently identified with the Chicago Telephone Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company. In 1881 he served as the United States Commissioner to the Electrical Exposition at Paris. In conjunction with his brother (Edward H. Williams) he assisted in founding the public library at Woodstock, Vt., which, in honor of his father, received the name of "The Norman Williams Public Library." With Col. Huntington W. Jackson and J. McGregor Adams, Mr. Williams was named, in the will of the late John Crerar, as an executor of the Crerar estate and one of the Trustees of the Crerar Public Library, and became its first President; was also a Director of the Chicago Public Library, and trustee of a number of large estates. Mr. Williams was a son-in-law of the late Judge John D. Caton, and his oldest daughter became the wife of Major-General Wesley Merritt, a few months before his death, which occurred at Hampton Beach, N. H., June 19, 1899—his remains being interred in his native town of Woodstock, Vt.

WILLIAMS, Robert Ebenezer, lawyer, born Dec. 3, 1825, at Clarksville, Pa., his grandfathers on both sides being soldiers of the Revolutionary War. In 1830 his parents removed to Washington in the same State, where in boyhood he worked as a mechanic in his father's shop, attending a common school in the winter until he reached the age of 17 years, when he entered Washington College, remaining for more than a year. He then began teaching, and, in 1845 went to Kentucky, where he pursued the business of a teacher for four years. Then he entered Bethany College in West Virginia, at the same time prosecuting his law studies, but left at the close of his junior year, when, having been licensed to practice, he removed to Clinton, Texas. Here he accepted, from a retired lawyer, the loan of a law library, which he afterwards purchased; served for two years as State's Attorney, and, in 1856, came to Bloomington, Ill., where he spent the remainder of his life in the practice of his profession. Much of his time was devoted to practice as a railroad attorney, especially in connection with the Chicago & Alton and the Illinois Central Railroads, in which he acquired prominence and wealth. He was a life-long Democrat and, in 1868, was the unsuccessful candidate of his party for Attorney-General of the State. The last three years of his life he had been in bad health, dying at Bloomington, Feb. 15, 1899.

WILLIAMS, Samuel, Bank President, was born in Adams County, Ohio, July 11, 1820; came to Winnebago County, Ill., in 1835, and, in 1842, removed to Iroquois County, where he held various local offices, including that of County Judge, to which he was elected in 1861. During his later years he had been President of the Watseka Citizens' Bank. Died, June 16, 1896.

WILLIAMSON, Rollin Samuel, legislator and jurist, was born at Cornwall, Vt., May 23, 1839. At the age of 14 he went to Boston, where he began life as a telegraph messenger boy. In two years he had become a skillful operator, and, as such, was employed in various offices in New England and New York. In 1857 he came to Chicago seeking employment and, through the fortunate correction of an error on the part of the receiver of a message, secured the position of operator and station agent at Palatine, Cook County. Here he read law during his leisure time without a preceptor, and, in 1870, was admitted to the bar. The same year he was elected to the lower House of the General Assembly and, in 1872, to the Senate. In 1880 he was elected to the bench of the Superior Court of Cook County, and, in 1887, was chosen a Judge of the Cook County Circuit Court. Died, August 10, 1889.

WILLIAMSON COUNTY, in the southern part of the State, originally set off from Franklin and organized in 1839. The county is well watered, the principal streams being the Big Muddy and the South Fork of the Saline. The surface is undulating and the soil fertile. The region was originally well covered with forests. All the cereals (as well as potatoes) are cultivated, and rich meadows encourage stock-raising. Coal and sandstone underlie the entire county. Area, 440 square miles; population (1880), 19,324: (1890) 22,226; (1900), 27,796.

WILLIAMSVILLE, village of Sangamon County, on Chicago & Alton Railroad, 12 miles north of Springfield; has a bank, elevator, 3 churches, a newspaper and coal-mines. Pop. (1900), 573.

WILLIS, Jonathan Clay, soldier and former Railroad and Warehouse Commissioner, was born in Sumner County, Tenn., June 27, 1826; brought to Gallatin County, Ill., in 1834, and settled at Golconda in 1843; was elected Sheriff of Pope County in 1856, removed to Metropolis in 1859, and engaged in the wharf-boat and commission business. He entered the service as Quartermaster of the Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteers in 1861, but was compelled to resign on account of injuries, in 1863; was elected Representative in the Twenty-sixth General Assembly (1868), appointed Collector of Internal Revenue in 1869, and Railway and Warehouse Commissioner in 1892, as the successor of John R. Tanner, serving until 1893.

WILMETTE, a village in Cook County, 14 miles north of Chicago, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, a handsome suburb of Chicago on the shore of Lake Michigan; principal streets paved and shaded with fine forest trees; has public library and good schools. Pop. (1900), 2,300.

WILMINGTON, a city of Will County, on the Kankakee River and the Chicago & Alton Railroad, 53 miles from Chicago and 15 south-southwest of Joliet; has considerable manufactures, two National banks, a graded school, churches and one newspaper. Wilmington is the location of the Illinois Soldiers' Widows' Home. Population (1890), 1,576; (1900), 1,420.

WILSON, Charles Lush, journalist, was born in Fairfield County, Conn., Oct. 10, 1818, educated in the common schools and at an academy in his native State, and, in 1835, removed to Chicago, entering the employment of his older brothers, who were connected with the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal at Joliet. His brother, Richard L., having assumed charge of "The Chicago Daily Journal" (the successor of "The Chicago American"), in 1844, Charles L. took a position in the office, ultimately securing a partnership, which continued until the death of his brother in 1856, when he succeeded to the ownership of the paper. Mr. Wilson was an ardent friend and supporter of Abraham Lincoln for the United States Senate in 1858, but, in 1860, favored the nomination of Mr. Seward for the Presidency, though earnestly supporting Mr. Lincoln after his nomination. In 1861 he was appointed Secretary of the American Legation at London, serving with the late Minister Charles Francis Adams, until 1864, when he resigned and resumed his connection with "The Journal." In 1875 his health began to fail, and three years later, having gone to San Antonio, Tex., in the hope of receiving benefit from a change of climate, he died in that city, March 9, 1878.—Richard Lush (Wilson), an older brother of the preceding, the first editor and publisher of "The Chicago Evening Journal," the oldest paper of consecutive publication in Chicago, was a native of New York. Coming to Chicago with his brother John L., in 1834, they soon after established themselves in business on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, then in course of construction. In 1844 he took charge of "The Chicago Daily Journal" for a publishing committee which had purchased the material of "The Chicago American," but soon after became principal proprietor. In April, 1847, while firing a salute in honor of the victory of Buena Vista, he lost an arm and was otherwise injured by the explosion of the cannon. Early in 1849, he was appointed, by President Taylor, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, but, having failed of confirmation, was compelled to retire in favor of a successor appointed by Millard Fillmore, eleven months later. Mr. Wilson published a little volume in 1842 entitled "A Trip to Santa Fe," and, a few years later, a story of travel under the title, "Short Ravellings from a Long Yarn." Died, December, 1856. —John Lush (Wilson), another brother, also a native of New York, came to Illinois in 1834, was afterwards associated with his brothers in business, being for a time business manager of "The Chicago Journal;" also served one term as Sheriff of Cook County. Died, in Chicago, April 13, 1888.

WILSON, Isaac Grant, jurist, was born at Middlebury, N. Y., April 26, 1817, graduated from Brown University in 1838, and the same year came to Chicago, whither his father's family had preceded him in 1835. After reading law for two years, he entered the senior class at Cambridge (Mass.) Law School, graduating in 1841. In August of that year he opened an office at Elgin, and, for ten years "rode the circuit." In 1851 he was elected to the bench of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit to fill a vacancy, and re-elected for a full term in 1855, and again in '61. In November of the latter year he was commissioned the first Colonel of the Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but resigned, a few weeks later, and resumed his place upon the bench. From 1867 to 1879 he devoted himself to private practice, which was largely in the Federal Courts. In 1879 he resumed his seat upon the bench (this time for the Twelfth Circuit), and was at once designated as one of the Judges of the Appellate Court at Chicago, of which tribunal he became Chief Justice in 1881. In 1885 he was re-elected Circuit Judge, but died, about the close of his term, at Geneva, June 8, 1891.

WILSON, James Grant, soldier and author, was born at Edinburgh, Scotland, April 28, 1832, and, when only a year old, was brought by his father, William Wilson, to America. The family settled at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where James Grant was educated at College Hill and under private teachers. After finishing his studies he became his father's partner in business, but, in 1855, went abroad, and, shortly after his return, removed to Chicago, where he founded the first literary paper established in the Northwest. At the outbreak of the Civil War, he disposed of his journal to enlist in the Fifteenth Illinois Cavalry, of which he was commissioned Major and afterwards promoted to the colonelcy. In August, 1863, while at New Orleans, by advice of General Grant, he accepted a commission as Colonel of the Fourth Regiment United States Colored Cavalry, and was assigned, as Aid-de-camp, to the staff of the Commander of the Department of the Gulf, filling this post until April, 1865. When General Banks was relieved, Colonel Wilson was brevetted Brigadier-General and placed in command at Port Hudson, resigning in July, 1865, since which time his home has been in New York. He is best known as an author, having published numerous addresses, and being a frequent contributor to American and European magazines. Among larger works which he has written or edited are "Biographical Sketches of Illinois Officers"; "Love in Letters"; "Life of General U. S. Grant"; "Life and Letters of Fitz Greene Halleck"; "Poets and Poetry of Scotland"; "Bryant and His Friends", and "Appleton's Cyclopedia of American Biography."

WILSON, James Harrison, soldier and military engineer, was born near Shawneetown, Ill., Sept. 2, 1837. His grandfather, Alexander Wilson, was one of the pioneers of Illinois, and his father (Harrison Wilson) was an ensign during the War of 1812 and a Captain in the Black Hawk War. His brother (Bluford Wilson) served as Assistant Adjutant-General of Volunteers during the Civil War, and as Solicitor of the United States Treasury during the "whisky ring" prosecutions. James H. was educated in the common schools, at McKendree College, and the United States Military Academy at West Point, graduating from the latter in 1860, and being assigned to the Topographical Engineer Corps. In September, 1861, he was promoted to a First Lieutenancy, then served as Chief Topographical Engineer of the Port Royal expedition until March, 1862; was afterwards attached to the Department of the South, being present at the bombardment of Fort Pulaski; was Aid-de-camp to McClellan, and participated in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam; was made Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers in November, 1862; was Chief Topographical Engineer and Inspector-General of the Army of the Tennessee until October, 1863, being actively engaged in the operations around Vicksburg; was made Captain of Engineers in May, 1863, and Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Oct. 31, following. He also conducted operations preliminary to the battle of Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge, and for the relief of Knoxville. Later, he was placed in command of the Third Division of the cavalry corps of the Army of the Potomac, serving from May to August, 1864, under General Sheridan. Subsequently he was transferred to the Department of the Mississippi, where he so distinguished himself that, on April 20, 1865, he was made Major-General of Volunteers. In twenty-eight days he captured five fortified cities, twenty-three stands of colors, 288 guns and 6,820 prisoners—among the latter being Jefferson Davis. He was mustered out of the volunteer service in January, 1866, and, on July 28, following, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Thirty-fifth United States Infantry, being also brevetted Major-General in the regular army. On Dec. 31, 1870, he returned to civil life, and was afterwards largely engaged in railroad and engineering operations, especially in West Virginia. Promptly after the declaration of war with Spain (1898) General Wilson was appointed, by the President, Major-General of Volunteers, serving until its close. He is the author of "China: Travels and Investigations in the Middle Kingdom"; "Life of Andrew J. Alexander"; and the "Life of Gen. U. S. Grant," in conjunction with Charles A. Dana. His home, in recent years, has been in New York.

WILSON, John M., lawyer and jurist, was born in New Hampshire in 1802, graduated at Bowdoin College in 1824—the classmate of Franklin Pierce and Nathaniel Hawthorne; studied law in New Hampshire and came to Illinois in 1835, locating at Joliet; removed to Chicago in 1841, where he was the partner of Norman B. Judd, serving, at different periods, as attorney of the Chicago & Rock Island, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern and the Chicago & Northwestern Railways; was Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Cook County, 1853-59, when he became Presiding Judge of the Superior Court of Chicago, serving until 1868. Died, Dec. 7, 1883.

WILSON, John P., lawyer, was born in Whiteside County, Ill., July 3, 1844; educated in the common schools and at Knox College, Galesburg, graduating from the latter in 1865; two years later was admitted to the bar in Chicago, and speedily attained prominence in his profession. During the World's Fair period he was retained as counsel by the Committee on Grounds and Buildings, and was prominently connected, as counsel for the city, with the Lake Front litigation.

WILSON, Robert L., early legislator, was born in Washington County, Pa., Sept. 11, 1805, taken to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1810, graduated at Franklin College in 1831, studied law and, in 1833, removed to Athens (now in Menard County), Ill.; was elected Representative in 1836, and was one of the members from Sangamon County, known as the "Long Nine," who assisted in securing the removal of the State Capital to Springfield. Mr. Wilson removed to Sterling, Whiteside County, in 1840, was elected five times Circuit Clerk and served eight years as Probate Judge. Immediately after the fall of Fort Sumter, he enlisted as private in a battalion in Washington City under command of Cassius M. Clay, for guard duty until the arrival of the Seventh New York Regiment. He subsequently assisted in raising troops in Illinois, was appointed Paymaster by Lincoln, serving at Washington, St. Louis, and, after the fall of Vicksburg, at Springfield—being mustered out in November, 1865. Died, in Whiteside County, 1880.

WILSON, Robert S., lawyer and jurist, was born at Montrose, Susquehanna County, Pa., Nov. 6, 1812; learned the printer's art, then studied law and was admitted to the bar in Allegheny County, about 1833; in 1836 removed to Ann Arbor, Mich., where he served as Probate Judge and State Senator; in 1850 came to Chicago, was elected Judge of the Recorder's Court in 1853, and re-elected in 1858, serving ten years, and proving "a terror to evil-doers." Died, at Lawrence, Mich., Dec. 23, 1882.

WILSON, William, early jurist, was born in Loudoun County, Va., April 27, 1794; studied law with Hon. John Cook, a distinguished lawyer, and minister to France in the early part of the century; in 1817 removed to Kentucky, soon after came to Illinois, two years later locating in White County, near Carmi, which continued to be his home during the remainder of his life. In 1819 he was appointed Associate Justice of the Supreme Court as successor to William P. Foster, who is described by Governor Ford as "a great rascal and no lawyer," and who held office only about nine months. Judge Wilson was re-elected to the Supreme bench, as Chief-Justice, in 1825, being then only a little over 30 years old, and held office until the reorganization of the Supreme Court under the Constitution of 1848—a period of over twenty-nine years, and, with the exception of Judge Browne's, the longest term of service in the history of the court. He died at his home in White County, April 29, 1857. A Whig in early life, he allied himself with the Democratic party on the dissolution of the former. Hon. James C. Conkling, of Springfield, says of him, "as a writer, his style was clear and distinct; as a lawyer, his judgment was sound and discriminating."

WINCHESTER, a city and county-seat of Scott County, founded in 1839, situated on Big Sandy Creek and on the line of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 29 miles south of Beardstown and 84 miles north by west of St. Louis. While the surrounding region is agricultural and largely devoted to wheat growing, there is some coal mining. Winchester is an important shipping-point, having three grain elevators, two flouring mills, and a coal mine employing fifty miners. There are four Protestant and one Catholic church, a court house, a high school, a graded school building, two banks and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 1,626; (1890), 1,542; (1900), 1,711.

WINDSOR, a city of Shelby County at the crossing of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Wabash Railways, 11 miles northeast of Shelbyville. Population (1880), 768; (1890), 888; (1900), 866.

WINES, Frederick Howard, clergyman and sociologist, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., April 9, 1838, graduated at Washington (Pa.) College in 1857, and, after serving as tutor there for a short time, entered Princeton Theological Seminary, but was compelled temporarily to discontinue his studies on account of a weakness of the eyes. The Presbytery of St. Louis licensed him to preach in 1860, and, in 1862, he was commissioned Hospital Chaplain in the Union army. During 1862-64 he was stationed at Springfield, Mo., participating in the battle of Springfield on Jan. 8, 1863, and being personally mentioned for bravery on the field in the official report. Re-entering the seminary at Princeton in 1864, he graduated in 1865, and at once accepted a call to the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, Ill., which he filled for four years. In 1869 he was appointed Secretary of the newly created Board of Commissioners of Public Charities of Illinois, in which capacity he continued until 1893, when he resigned. For the next four years he was chiefly engaged in literary work, in lecturing before universities on topics connected with social science, in aiding in the organization of charitable work, and in the conduct of a thorough investigation into the relations between liquor legislation and crime. At an early period he took a prominent part in organizing the various Boards of Public Charities of the United States into an organization known as the National Conference of Charities and Corrections, and, at the Louisville meeting (1883), was elected its President. At the International Penitentiary Congress at Stockholm (1878) he was the official delegate from Illinois. On his return, as a result of his observations while abroad, he submitted to the Legislature a report strongly advocating the construction of the Kankakee Hospital for the Insane, then about to be built, upon the "detached ward" or "village" plan, a departure from then existing methods, which marks an era in the treatment of insane in the United States. Mr. Wines conducted the investigation into the condition and number of the defective, dependent and delinquent classes throughout the country, his report constituting a separate volume under the "Tenth Census," and rendered a similar service in connection with the eleventh census (1890). In 1887 he was elected Secretary of the National Prison Association, succeeding to the post formerly held by his father, Enoch Cobb Wines, D.D., LL.D. After the inauguration of Governor Tanner in 1897, he resumed his former position of Secretary of the Board of Public Charities, remaining until 1899, when he again tendered his resignation, having received the appointment to the position of Assistant Director of the Twelfth Census, which he now holds. He is the author of "Crime and Reformation" (1895); of a voluminous series of reports; also of numerous pamphlets and brochures, among which may be mentioned "The County Jail System; An Argument for its Abolition" (1878); "The Kankakee Hospital" (1882); "Provision for the Insane in the United States" (1885); "Conditional Liberation, or the Paroling of Prisoners" (1886), and "American Prisons in the Tenth Census" (1888).

WINES, Walter B., lawyer (brother of Frederick H. Wines), was born in Boston, Mass., Oct. 10, 1848, received his primary education at Williston Academy, East Hampton, Mass., after which he entered Middlebury College, Vt., taking a classical course and graduating there. He afterwards became a student in the law department of Columbia College, N. Y., graduating in 1871, being admitted to the bar the same year and commencing practice in New York City. In 1879 he came to Springfield, Ill., and was, for a time, identified with the bar of that city. Later, he removed to Chicago, where he has been engaged in literary and journalistic work.

WINNEBAGO COUNTY, situated in the "northern tier," bordering on the Wisconsin State line; was organized, under an act passed in 1836, from La Salle and Jo Daviess Counties, and has an area of 552 square miles. The county is drained by the Rock and Pecatonica Rivers. The surface is rolling prairie and the soil fertile. The geology is simple, the quaternary deposits being underlaid by the Galena blue and buff limestone, adapted for building purposes. All the cereals are raised in abundance, the chief product being corn. The Winnebago Indians (who gave name to the county) formerly lived on the west side of the Rock River, and the Pottawatomies on the east, but both tribes removed westward in 1835. (As to manufacturing interests, see Rockford.) Population (1880), 30,505; (1890), 39,938; (1900), 47,845

WINNEBAGO WAR. The name given to an Indian disturbance which had its origin in 1827, during the administration of Gov. Ninian Edwards. The Indians had been quiet since the conclusion of the War of 1812, but a few isolated outrages were sufficient to start terrified "runners" in all directions. In the northern portion of the State, from Galena to Chicago (then Fort Dearborn) the alarm was intense. The meagre militia force of the State was summoned and volunteers were called for. Meanwhile, 600 United States Regular Infantry, under command of Gen. Henry Atkinson, put in an appearance. Besides the infantry, Atkinson had at his disposal some 130 mounted sharpshooters. The origin of the disturbance was as follows: The Winnebagoes attacked a band of Chippewas, who were (by treaty) under Government potection, several of the latter being killed. For participation in this offense, four Winnebago Indians were summarily apprehended, surrendered to the Chippewas and shot. Meanwhile, some dispute had arisen as to the title of the lands, claimed by the Winnebagoes in the vicinity of Galena, which had been occupied by white miners. Repeated acts of hostility and of reprisal, along the Upper Mississippi, intensified mutual distrust. A gathering of the Indians around two keel-boats, laden with supplies for Fort Snelling, which had anchored near Prairie du Chien and opposite a Winnebago camp, was regarded by the whites as a hostile act. Liquor was freely distributed, and there is historical evidence that a half-dozen drunken squaws were carried off and shamefully maltreated. Several hundred warriors assembled to avenge the deception which had been practiced upon them. They laid in ambush for the boats on their return trip. The first passed too rapidly to be successfully assailed, but the second grounded and was savagely, yet unsuccessfully, attacked. The presence of General Atkinson's forces prevented an actual outbreak, and, on his demand, the great Winnebago Chief, Red Bird, with six other leading men of the tribe, surrendered themselves as hostages to save their nation from extermination. A majority of these were, after trial, acquitted. Red Bird, however, unable to endure confinement, literally pined to death in prison, dying on Feb. 16, 1828. He is described as having been a savage of superior intelligence and noble character. A treaty of peace was concluded with the Winnebagoes in a council held at Prairie du Chien, a few months later, but the affair seems to have produced as much alarm among the Indians as it did among the whites. (For Winnebago Indians see page 576.)

WINNETKA, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, 16½ miles north of Chicago. It stands eighty feet above the level of Lake Michigan, has good schools (being the seat of the Winnetka Institute), several churches, and is a popular residence town. Population (1880), 584; (1890), 1,079; (1900), 1,833.

WINSTON, Frederick Hampton, lawyer, was born in Liberty County, Ga., Nov. 20, 1830, was brought to Woodford County, Ky., in 1835, left an orphan at 12, and attended the common schools until 18, when, returning to Georgia, he engaged in cotton manufacture. He finally began the study of law with United States Senator W. C. Dawson, and graduated from Harvard Law School in 1852; spent some time in the office of W. M. Evarts in New York, was admitted to the bar and came to Chicago in 1853, where he formed a partnership with Norman B. Judd, afterwards being associated with Judge Henry W. Blodgett; served as general solicitor of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railways—remaining with the latter twenty years. In 1885 he was appointed, by President Cleveland, Minister to Persia, but resigned the following year, and traveled extensively in Russia, Scandinavia and other foreign countries. Mr. Winston was a delegate to the Democratic National Conventions of 1868, '76 and '84; first President of the Stock Yards at Jersey City, for twelve years President of the Lincoln Park Commission, and a Director of the Lincoln National Bank.

WISCONSIN CENTRAL LINES. The Wisconsin Central Company was organized, June 17, 1887, and subsequently acquired the Minnesota, St. Croix & Wisconsin, the Wisconsin & Minnesota, the Chippewa Falls & Western, the St. Paul & St. Croix Falls, the Wisconsin Central, the Penokee, and the Packwaukee & Montebello Railroads, and assumed the leases of the Milwaukee & Lake Winnebago and the Wisconsin & Minnesota Roads. On July 1, 1888, the company began to operate the entire Wisconsin Central system, with the exception of the Wisconsin Central Railroad and the leased Milwaukee & Lake Winnebago, which remained in charge of the Wisconsin Central Railroad mortgage trustees until Nov. 1, 1889, when these, too, passed under the control of the Wisconsin Central Company. The Wisconsin Central Railroad Company is a reorganization (Oct. 1, 1879) of a company formed Jan. 1, 1871. The Wisconsin Central and the Wisconsin Central Railroad Companies, though differing in name, are a financial unit; the former holding most of the first mortgage bonds of the latter, and substantially all its notes, stocks and income bonds, but, for legal reasons (such as the protection of land titles), it is necessary that separate corporations be maintained. On April 1, 1890, the Wisconsin Central Company executed a lease to the Northern Pacific Railroad, but this was set aside by the courts, on Sept. 27, 1893, for non-payment of rent, and was finally canceled. On the same day receivers were appointed to insure the protection of all interests. The total mileage is 415.46 miles, of which the Company owns 258.90—only .10 of a mile in Illinois. A line, 58.10 miles in length, with 8.44 miles of side-track (total, 66.54 miles), lying wholly within the State of Illinois, is operated by the Chicago & Wisconsin and furnishes the allied line an entrance into Chicago.

WITHROW, Thomas F., lawyer, was born in Virginia in March, 1833, removed with his parents to Ohio in childhood, attended the Western Reserve College, and, after the death of his father, taught school and worked as a printer, later, editing a paper at Mount Vernon. In 1855 he removed to Janesville, Wis., where he again engaged in journalistic work, studied law, was admitted to the bar in Iowa in 1857, settled at Des Moines and served as private secretary of Governors Lowe and Kirkwood. In 1860 he became Supreme Court Reporter; served as Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee in 1863 and, in 1866, became associated with the Rock Island Railroad in the capacity of local attorney, was made chief law officer of the Company in 1873, and removed to Chicago, and, in 1890, was promoted to the position of General Counsel. Died, in Chicago, Feb. 3, 1893.

WOLCOTT, (Dr.) Alexander, early Indian Agent, was born at East Windsor, Conn., Feb. 14, 1790; graduated from Yale College in 1809, and, after a course in medicine, was commissioned, in 1812, Surgeon's Mate in the United States Army. In 1820 he was appointed Indian Agent at Fort Dearborn (now Chicago), as successor to Charles Jouett—the first Agent—who had been appointed a United States Judge in Arkansas. The same year he accompanied General Lewis Cass and Henry Schoolcraft on their tour among the Indians of the Northwest; was married in 1823 to Ellen Marion Kinzie, a daughter of Col. John Kinzie, the first permanent settler of Chicago; in 1825 was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Peoria County, which then included Cook County; was a Judge of Election in 1830, and one of the purchasers of a block of ground in the heart of the present city of Chicago, at the first sale of lots, held Sept. 27, 1830, but died before the close of the year. Dr. Wolcott appears to have been a high-minded and honorable man, as well as far in advance of the mass of pioneers in point of education and intelligence.

WOOD, Benson, lawyer and Congressman, was born in Susquehanna County, Pa., in 1839; received a common school and academic education; at the age of 20 came to Illinois, and, for two years, taught school in Lee County. He then enlisted as a soldier in an Illinois regiment, attaining the rank of Captain of Infantry; after the war, graduated from the Law Department of the old Chicago University, and has since been engaged in the practice of his profession. He was elected a member of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly (1872) and was a delegate to the Republican National Conventions of 1876 and 1888; also served as Mayor of the city of Effingham, where he now resides. In 1894 he was elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress by the Republicans of the Nineteenth District, which has uniformly returned a Democrat, and, in office, proved himself a most industrious and efficient member. Mr. Wood was defeated as a candidate for re-election in 1896.

WOOD, John, pioneer, Lieutenant-Governor and Governor, was born at Moravia, N. Y., Dec. 20, 1798—his father being a Revolutionary soldier who had served as Surgeon and Captain in the army. At the age of 21 years young Wood removed to Illinois, settling in what is now Adams County, and building the first log-cabin on the site of the present city of Quincy. He was a member of the upper house of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth General Assemblies, and was elected Lieutenant-Governor in 1859 on the same ticket with Governor Bissell, and served out the unexpired term of the latter, who died in office. (See Bissell, William H.) He was succeeded by Richard Yates in 1861. In February of that year he was appointed one of the five Commissioners from Illinois to the "Peace Conference" at Washington, to consider methods for averting civil war. The following May he was appointed Quartermaster-General for the State by Governor Yates, and assisted most efficiently in fitting out the troops for the field. In June, 1864, he was commissioned Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers (100-days' men) and mustered out of service the following September. Died, at Quincy, June 11, 1880. He was liberal, patriotic and public-spirited. His fellow-citizens of Quincy erected a monument to his memory, which was appropriately dedicated, July 4, 1883.

WOODFORD COUNTY, situated a little north of the center of the State, bounded on the west by the Illinois River; organized in 1841; area, 540 square miles. The surface is generally level, except along the Illinois River, the soil fertile and well watered. The county lies in the northern section of the great coal field of the State. Eureka is the county-seat. Other thriving cities and towns are Metamora, Minonk, El Paso and Roanoke. Corn, oats, wheat, potatoes and barley are the principal crops. The chief mechanical industries are flour manufacture, carriage and wagon-making, and saddlery and harness work. Population (1890), 21,429; (1900), 21,822.

WOODHULL, a village of Henry County, on Keithsburg branch Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 15 miles west of Galva; has a bank, electric lights, water works, brick and tile works, six churches and weekly paper. Pop. (1900), 774.

WOODMAN, Charles W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Aalborg, Denmark, March 11, 1844; received his early education in the schools of his native country, but took to the sea in 1860, following the life of a sailor until 1863, when, coming to Philadelphia, he enlisted in the Gulf Squadron of the United States. After the war, he came to Chicago, and, after reading law for some time in the office of James L. High, graduated from the Law Department of the Chicago University in 1871. Some years later he was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for some of the lower courts, and, in 1881, was nominated by the Judges of Cook County as one of the Justices of the Peace for the city of Chicago. In 1894 he became the Republican candidate for Congress from the Fourth District and was elected, but failed to secure a renomination in 1896. Died, in Elgin Asylum for the Insane, March 18, 1898.

WOODS, Robert Mann, was born at Greenville, Pa., April 17, 1840; came with his parents to Illinois in 1842, the family settling at Barry, Pike County, but subsequently residing at Pittsfield, Canton and Galesburg. He was educated at Knox College in the latter place, which was his home from 1849 to '58; later, taught school in Iowa and Missouri until 1861, when he went to Springfield and began the study of law with Milton Hay and Shelby M. Cullom. His law studies having been interrupted by the Civil War, after spending some time in the mustering and disbursing office, he was promoted by Governor Yates to a place in the executive office, from which he went to the field as Adjutant of the Sixty-fourth Illinois Infantry, known as the "Yates Sharp-Shooters." After participating, with the Army of the Tennessee, in the Atlanta campaign, he took part in the "March to the Sea," and the campaign in the Carolinas, including the siege of Savannah and the forcing of the Salkahatchie, where he distinguished himself, as also in the taking of Columbia, Fayetteville, Cheraw, Raleigh and Bentonville. At the latter place he had a horse shot under him and won the brevet rank of Major for gallantry in the field, having previously been commissioned Captain of Company A of his regiment. He also served on the staffs of Gens. Giles A. Smith, Benjamin F. Potts, and William W. Belknap, and was the last mustering officer in General Sherman's army. In 1867 Major Woods removed to Chicago, where he was in business for a number of years, serving as chief clerk of Custom House construction from 1872 to 1877. In 1879 he purchased "The Daily Republican" at Joliet, which he conducted successfully for fifteen years. While connected with "The Republican," he served as Secretary of the Illinois Republican Press Association and in various other positions.

Major Woods was one of the founders of the Grand Army of the Republic, whose birth-place was in Illinois. (See Grand Army of the Republic; also Stephenson, Dr. B. F.) When Dr. Stephenson (who had been Surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry), conceived the idea of founding such an order, he called to his assistance Major Woods, who was then engaged in writing the histories of Illinois regiments for the Adjutant-General's Report. The Major wrote the Constitution and By-laws of the Order, the charter blanks for all the reports, etc. The first official order bears his name as the first Adjutant-General of the Order, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF ILLINOIS
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.
SPRINGFIELD, ILL., APRIL 1, 1866.

GENERAL ORDERS } The following named officers are hereby
No. 1. } appointed and assigned to duty at these headquarters. They will be obeyed and respected accordingly:

Colonel Jules C. Webber, A.D.C. and Chief of Staff.
Colonel John M. Snyder, Quartermaster-General.
Major Robert M. Woods, Adjutant-General.
Captain John A. Lightfoot, Assistant Adjutant-General.
Captain John S. Phelps, Aid-de-Camp.

By order of B. F. Stephenson, Department Commander.

ROBERT M. WOODS,
Adjutant-General.

Major Woods afterwards organized the various Departments in the West, and it has been conceded that he furnished the money necessary to carry on the work during the first six months of the existence of the Order. He has never accepted a nomination or run for any political office, but is now engaged in financial business in Joliet and Chicago, with his residence in the former place.

WOODSON, David Meade, lawyer and jurist, was born in Jessamine County, Ky., May 18, 1806; was educated in private schools and at Transylvania University, and read law with his father. He served a term in the Kentucky Legislature in 1832, and, in 1834, removed to Illinois, settling at Carrollton, Greene County. In 1839 he was elected State's Attorney and, in 1840, a member of the lower house of the Legislature, being elected a second time in 1868. In 1843 he was the Whig candidate for Congress in the Fifth District, but was defeated by Stephen A. Douglas. He was a member of the Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1869-70. In 1848 he was elected a Judge of the First Judicial Circuit, remaining in office until 1867. Died, in 1877.

WOODSTOCK, the county-seat of McHenry County, situated on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, about 51 miles northwest of Chicago and 32 miles east of Rockford. It contains a court house, eight churches, four banks, three newspaper offices, foundry and machine shops, planing mills, canning works, pickle, cheese and butter factories. The Oliver Typewriter Factory is located here; the town is also the seat of the Todd Seminary for boys. Population (1890), 1,683; (1900), 2,502.

WORCESTER, Linus E., State Senator, was born in Windsor, Vt., Dec. 5, 1811, was educated in the common schools of his native State and at Chester Academy, came to Illinois in 1836, and, after teaching three years, entered a dry-goods store at Whitehall as clerk, later becoming a partner. He was also engaged in various other branches of business at different times, including the drug, hardware, grocery, agricultural implement and lumber business. In 1843 he was appointed Postmaster at Whitehall, serving twelve years; was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1847, served as County Judge for six years from 1853, and as Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, at Jacksonville, from 1859, by successive reappointments, for twelve years. In 1856 he was elected, as a Democrat, to the State Senate, to succeed John M. Palmer, resigned; was re-elected in 1860, and, at the session of 1865, was one of the five Democratic members of that body who voted for the ratification of the Emancipation Amendment of the National Constitution. He was elected County Judge a second time, in 1863, and re-elected in 1867, served as delegate to the Democratic National Convention of 1876, and, for more than thirty years, was one of the Directors of the Jacksonville branch of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, serving from the organization of the corporation until his death, which occurred Oct. 19, 1891.

WORDEN, a village of Madison County, on the Wabash and the Jacksonville, Louisville & St. Louis Railways, 32 miles northeast of St. Louis. Population (1890), 522; (1900), 544

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION. An exhibition of the scientific, liberal and mechanical arts of all nations, held at Chicago, between May 1 and Oct. 31, 1893. The project had its inception in November, 1885, in a resolution adopted by the directorate of the Chicago Inter-State Exposition Company. On July 6, 1888, the first well defined action was taken, the Iroquois Club, of Chicago, inviting the co-operation of six other leading clubs of that city in "securing the location of an international celebration at Chicago of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus." In July, 1889, a decisive step was taken in the appointment by Mayor Cregier, under resolution of the City Council, of a committee of 100 (afterwards increased to 256) citizens, who were charged with the duty of promoting the selection of Chicago as the site for the Exposition. New York, Washington and St. Louis were competing points, but the choice of Congress fell upon Chicago, and the act establishing the World's Fair at that city was signed by President Harrison on April 25, 1890. Under the requirements of the law, the President appointed eight Commissioners-at-large, with two Commissioners and two alternates from each State and Territory and the District of Columbia. Col. George R. Davis, of Chicago, was elected Director-General by the body thus constituted. Ex-Senator Thomas M. Palmer, of Michigan, was chosen President of the Commission and John T. Dickinson, of Texas, Secretary. This Commission delegated much of its power to a Board of Reference and Control, who were instructed to act with a similar number appointed by the World's Columbian Exposition. The latter organization was an incorporation, with a directorate of forty-five members, elected annually by the stockholders. Lyman J. Gage, of Chicago, was the first President of the corporation, and was succeeded by W. T. Baker and Harlow N. Higinbotham.

In addition to these bodies, certain powers were vested in a Board of Lady Managers, composed of two members, with alternates, from each State and Territory, besides nine from the city of Chicago. Mrs. Potter Palmer was chosen President of the latter. This Board was particularly charged with supervision of women's participation in the Exposition, and of the exhibits of women's work.

The supreme executive power was vested in the Joint Board of Control. The site selected was Jackson Park, in the South Division of Chicago, with a strip connecting Jackson and Washington Parks, known as the "Midway Plaisance," which was surrendered to "concessionaires" who purchased the privilege of giving exhibitions, or conducting restaurants or selling-booths thereon. The total area of the site was 633 acres, and that of the buildings—not reckoning those erected by States other than Illinois, and by foreign governments—was about 200 acres. When to this is added the acreage of the foreign and State buildings, the total space under roof approximated 250 acres. These figures do not include the buildings erected by private exhibitors, caterers and venders, which would add a small percentage to the grand total. Forty-seven foreign Governments made appropriations for the erection of their own buildings and other expenses connected with official representation, and there were exhibitors from eighty-six nations. The United States Government erected its own building, and appropriated $500,000 to defray the expenses of a national exhibit, besides $2,500,000 toward the general cost of the Exposition. The appropriations by foreign Governments aggregated about $6,500,000, and those by the States and Territories, $6,120,000—that of Illinois being $800,000. The entire outlay of the World's Columbian Exposition Company, up to March 31, 1894, including the cost of preliminary organization, construction, operating and post-Exposition expenses, was $27,151,800. This is, of course, exclusive of foreign and State expenditures, which would swell the aggregate cost to nearly $45,000,000. Citizens of Chicago subscribed $5,608,206 toward the capital stock of the Exposition Company, and the municipality, $5,000,000, which was raised by the sale of bonds. (See Thirty-sixth General Assembly.)

The site, while admirably adapted to the purpose, was, when chosen, a marshy flat, crossed by low sand ridges, upon which stood occasional clumps of stunted scrub oaks. Before the gates of the great fair were opened to the public, the entire area had been transformed into a dream of beauty. Marshes had been drained, filled in and sodded; driveways and broad walks constructed; artificial ponds and lagoons dug and embanked, and all the highest skill of the landscape gardener's art had been called into play to produce varied and striking effects. But the task had been a Herculean one. There were seventeen principal (or, as they may be called, departmental) buildings, all of beautiful and ornate design, and all of vast size. They were known as the Manufacturers' and Liberal Arts, the Machinery, Electrical, Transportation, Woman's, Horticultural, Mines and Mining, Anthropological, Administration, Art Galleries, Agricultural, Art Institute, Fisheries, Live Stock, Dairy and Forestry buildings, and the Music Hall and Casino. Several of these had large annexes. The Manufacturers' Building was the largest. It was rectangular (1687x787 feet), having a ground area of 31 acres and a floor and gallery area of 44 acres. Its central chamber was 1280x380 feet, with a nave 107 feet wide, both hall and nave being surrounded by a gallery 50 feet wide. It was four times as large as the Roman Coliseum and three times as large as St. Peter's at Rome; 17,000,000 feet of lumber, 13,000,000 pounds of steel, and 2,000,000 pounds of iron had been used in its construction, involving a cost of $1,800,000.

It was originally intended to open the Exposition, formally, on Oct. 21, 1892, the quadri-centennial of Columbus' discovery of land on the Western Hemisphere, but the magnitude of the undertaking rendered this impracticable. Consequently, while dedicatory ceremonies were held on that day, preceded by a monster procession and followed by elaborate pyrotechnic displays at night, May 1, 1893, was fixed as the opening day —the machinery and fountains being put in operation, at the touch of an electric button by President Cleveland, at the close of a short address. The total number of admissions from that date to Oct. 31, was 27,530,460—the largest for any single day being on Oct. 9 (Chicago Day) amounting to 761,944. The total receipts from all sources (including National and State appropriations, subscriptions, etc.), amounted to $28,151,168.75, of which $10,626,330.76 was from the sale of tickets, and $3,699,581.43 from concessions. The aggregate attendance fell short of that at the Paris Exposition of 1889 by about 500,000, while the receipts from the sale of tickets and concessions exceeded the latter by nearly $5,800,000. Subscribers to the Exposition stock received a return of ten per cent on the same.

The Illinois building was the first of the State buildings to be completed. It was also the largest and most costly, but was severely criticised from an architectural standpoint. The exhibits showed the internal resources of the State, as well as the development of its governmental system, and its progress in civilization from the days of the first pioneers. The entire Illinois exhibit in the State building was under charge of the State Board of Agriculture, who devoted one-tenth of the appropriation, and a like proportion of floor space, to the exhibition of the work of Illinois women as scientists, authors, artists, decorators, etc. Among special features of the Illinois exhibit were: State trophies and relics, kept in a fire-proof memorial hall; the display of grains and minerals, and an immense topographical map (prepared at a cost of $15,000), drafted on a scale of two miles to the inch, showing the character and resources of the State, and correcting many serious cartographical errors previously undiscovered.

WORTHEN, Amos Henry, scientist and State Geologist, was born at Bradford, Vt., Oct. 31, 1813, emigrated to Kentucky in 1834, and, in 1836, removed to Illinois, locating at Warsaw. Teaching, surveying and mercantile business were his pursuits until 1842, when he returned to the East, spending two years in Boston, but returning to Warsaw in 1844. His natural predilections were toward the natural sciences, and, after coming west, he devoted most of his leisure time to the collection and study of specimens of mineralogy, geology and conchology. On the organization of the geological survey of Illinois in 1851, he was appointed assistant to Dr. J. G. Norwood, then State Geologist, and, in 1858, succeeded to the office, having meanwhile spent three years as Assistant Geologist in the first Iowa survey. As State Geologist he published seven volumes of reports, and was engaged upon the eighth when overtaken by death, May 6, 1888. These reports, which are as comprehensive as they are voluminous, have been reviewed and warmly commended by the leading scientific periodicals of this country and Europe. In 1877 field work was discontinued, and the State Historical Library and Natural History Museum were established, Professor Worthen being placed in charge as curator. He was the author of various valuable scientific papers and member of numerous scientific societies in this country and in Europe.

WORTHINGTON, Nicholas Ellsworth, ex-Congressman, was born in Brooke County, W. Va., March 30, 1836, and completed his education at Allegheny College, Pa., studied Law at Morgantown, Va., and was admitted to the bar in 1860. He is a resident of Peoria, and, by profession, a lawyer; was County Superintendent of Schools of Peoria County from 1868 to 1872, and a member of the State Board of Education from 1869 to 1872. In 1882 he was elected to Congress, as a Democrat, from the Tenth Congressional District, and re-elected in 1884. In 1886 he was again a candidate, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Philip Sidney Post. He was elected Circuit Judge of the Tenth Judicial District in 1891, and re-elected in 1897. In 1894 he served upon a commission appointed by President Cleveland, to investigate the labor strikes of that year at Chicago.

WRIGHT, John Stephen, manufacturer, was born at Sheffield, Mass., July 16, 1815; came to Chicago in 1832, with his father, who opened a store in that city; in 1837, at his own expense, built the first school building in Chicago; in 1840 established "The Prairie Farmer," which he conducted for many years in the interest of popular education and progressive agriculture. In 1852 he engaged in the manufacture of Atkins' self-raking reaper and mower, was one of the promoters of the Galena & Chicago Union and the Illinois Central Railways, and wrote a volume entitled, "Chicago: Past, Present and Future," published in 1870. Died, in Chicago, Sept. 26, 1874.

WULFF, Henry, ex-State Treasurer, was born in Meldorf, Germany, August 24, 1854; came to Chicago in 1863, and began his political career as a Trustee of the town of Jefferson. In 1866 he was elected County Clerk of Cook County, and re-elected in 1890; in 1894 became the Republican nominee for State Treasurer, receiving, at the November election of that year, the unprecedented plurality of 133,427 votes over his Democratic opponent.

WYANET, a town of Bureau County, at the intersection of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railways, 7 miles southwest of Princeton. Population (1890), 670; (1900), 902.

WYLIE, (Rev.) Samuel, domestic missionary, born in Ireland and came to America in boyhood; was educated at the University of Pennsylvania and the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, and ordained in 1818. Soon after this he came west as a domestic missionary and, in 1820, became pastor of a church at Sparta, Ill., where he remained until his death, March 20, 1872, after a pastorate of 52 years. During his pastorate the church sent out a dozen colonies to form new church organizations elsewhere. He is described as able, eloquent and scholarly.

WYMAN, (Col.) John B., soldier, was born in Massachusetts, July 12, 1817, and educated in the schools of that State until 14 years of age, when he became a clerk in a clothing store in his native town of Shrewsbury, later being associated with mercantile establishments in Cincinnati, and again in his native State. From 1846 to 1850 he was employed successively as a clerk in the car and machine shops at Springfield, Mass., then as Superintendent of Construction, and, later, as conductor on the New York & New Haven Railroad, finally, in 1850, becoming Superintendent of the Connecticut River Railroad. In 1852 he entered the service of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, assisting in the survey and construction of the line under Col. R. B. Mason, the Chief Engineer, and finally becoming Assistant Superintendent of the Northern Division. He was one of the original proprietors of the town of Amboy, in Lee County, and its first Mayor, also serving a second term. Having a fondness for military affairs, he was usually connected with some military organization—while in Cincinnati being attached to a company, of which Prof. O. M. Mitchell, the celebrated astronomer (afterwards Major-General Mitchell), was Captain. After coming to Illinois he became Captain of the Chicago Light Guards. Having left the employ of the Railroad in 1858, he was in private business at Amboy at the beginning of the Civil War in 1861. As Assistant-Adjutant General, by appointment of Governor Yates, he rendered valuable service in the early weeks of the war in securing arms from Jefferson Barracks and in the organization of the three-months' regiments. Then, having organized the Thirteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry—the first organized in the State for the three years' service—he was commissioned its Colonel, and, in July following, entered upon the duty of guarding the railroad lines in Southwest Missouri and Arkansas. The following year his regiment was attached to General Sherman's command in the first campaign against Vicksburg. On the second day of the Battle of Chickasaw Bayou, he fell mortally wounded, dying on the field, Dec. 28, 1862. Colonel Wyman was one of the most accomplished and promising of the volunteer soldiers sent to the field from Illinois, of whom so many were former employés of the Illinois Central Railroad.

WYOMING, a town of Stark County, 31 miles north-northwest from Peoria, at the junction of the Peoria branch Rock Island & Pacific and the Rushville branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway; has two high schools, churches, two banks, flour mills, water-works, machine shop, and two weekly newspapers. Coal is mined here. Pop. (1890), 1,116; (1900), 1,277.

XENIA, a village of Clay County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 87 miles east of St. Louis. Population (1900), 800.

YATES CITY, a village of Knox County, at the junction of the Peoria Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, with the Rushville branch, 23 miles southeast of Galesburg. The town has banks, a coal mine, telephone exchange, school, churches and a newspaper. Pop. (1890), 687; (1900), 650.

YATES, Henry, pioneer, was born in Caroline County, Va., Oct. 29, 1786—being a grand-nephew of Chief Justice John Marshall; removed to Fayette County, Ky., where he located and laid out the town of Warsaw, which afterwards became the county-seat of Gallatin County. In 1831 he removed to Sangamon County, Ill., and, in 1832, settled at the site of the present town of Berlin, which he laid out the following year, also laying out the town of New Berlin, a few years later, on the line of the Wabash Railway. He was father of Gov. Richard Yates. Died, Sept. 13, 1865.—Henry (Yates), Jr., son of the preceding, was born at Berlin, Ill., March 7, 1835; engaged in merchandising at New Berlin; in 1862, raised a company of volunteers for the One Hundred and Sixth Regiment Illinois Infantry, was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel and brevetted Colonel and Brigadier-General. He was accidentally shot in 1863, and suffered sun-stroke at Little Rock, from which he never fully recovered. Died, August 3, 1871.

YATES, Richard, former Governor and United States Senator, was born at Warsaw, Ky., Jan. 18, 1815, of English descent. In 1831 he accompanied his father to Illinois, the family settling first at Springfield and later at Berlin, Sangamon County. He soon after entered Illinois College, from which he graduated in 1835, and subsequently read law with Col. John J. Hardin, at Jacksonville, which thereafter became his home. In 1842 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Morgan County, and was re-elected in 1844, and again in 1848. In 1850 he was a candidate for Congress from the Seventh District and elected over Maj. Thomas L. Harris, the previous incumbent, being the only Whig Representative in the Thirty-second Congress from Illinois. Two years later he was re-elected over John Calhoun, but was defeated, in 1854, by his old opponent, Harris. He was one of the most vigorous opponents of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill in the Thirty-third Congress, and an early participant in the movement for the organization of the Republican party to resist the further extension of slavery, being a prominent speaker, on the same platform with Lincoln, before the first Republican State Convention held at Bloomington, in May, 1856, and serving as one of the Vice-Presidents of that body. In 1860 he was elected to the executive chair on the ticket headed by Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency, and, by his energetic support of the National administration in its measures for the suppression of the Rebellion, won the sobriquet of "the Illinois War-Governor." In 1865 he was elected United States Senator, serving until 1871. He died suddenly, at St. Louis, Nov. 27, 1873, while returning from Arkansas, whither he had gone, as a United States Commissioner, by appointment of President Grant, to inspect a land-subsidy railroad. He was a man of rare ability, earnestness of purpose and extraordinary personal magnetism, as well as of a lofty order of patriotism. His faults were those of a nature generous, impulsive and warm-hearted.

YORKVILLE, the county-seat of Kendall County, on Fox River and Streator Division of Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 12 miles southwest of Aurora; on interurban electric line; has water-power, electric lights, a bank, churches and weekly newspaper. Pop.(1890) 375; (1900),413.

YOUNG, Brigham, Mormon leader, was born at Whittingham, Vt., June 1, 1801, joined the Mormons in 1831 and, the next year, became associated with Joseph Smith, at Kirtland, Ohio, and, in 1835, an "apostle." He accompanied a considerable body of that sect to Independence, Mo., but was driven out with them in 1837, settling for a short time at Quincy, Ill., but later removing to Nauvoo, of which he was one of the founders. On the assassination of Smith, in 1844, he became the successor of the latter, as head of the Mormon Church, and, the following year, headed the exodus from Illinois, which finally resulted in the Mormon settlement in Utah. His subsequent career there, where he was appointed Governor by President Fillmore, and, for a time, successfully defied national authority, is a matter of national rather than State history. He remained at the head of the Mormon Church until his death at Salt Lake City, August 29, 1877.

YOUNG, Richard Montgomery, United States Senator, was born in Kentucky in 1796, studied law and removed to Jonesboro, Ill., where he was admitted to the bar in 1817; served in the Second

General Assembly (1820-22) as Representative from Union County; was a Circuit Judge, 1825-27; Presidential Elector in 1828; Circuit Judge again, 1829-37; elected United States Senator in 1837 as successor to W. L. D. Ewing, serving until 1843, when he was commissioned Justice of the Supreme Court, but resigned in 1847 to become Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington. During the session of 1850-51, he served as Clerk of the National House of Representatives. Died, in an insane asylum, in Washington, in 1853.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, first permanently organized at Chicago, in 1858, although desultory movements of a kindred character had previously been started at Peoria, Quincy, Chicago and Springfield, some as early as 1854. From 1858 to 1872, various associations were formed at different points throughout the State, which were entirely independent of each other. The first effort looking to union and mutual aid, was made in 1872, when Robert Weidensall, on behalf of the International Committee, called a convention, to meet at Bloomington, November 6-9. State conventions have been held annually since 1872. In that of 1875, steps were taken looking to the appointment of a State Secretary, and, in 1876, Charles M. Morton assumed the office. Much evangelistic work was done, and new associations formed, the total number reported at the Champaign Convention, in 1877, being sixty-two. After one year's work Mr. Morton resigned the secretaryship, the office remaining vacant for three years. The question of the appointment of a successor was discussed at the Decatur Convention in 1879, and, in April, 1880, I. B. Brown was made State Secretary, and has occupied the position to the present time (1899). At the date of his appointment the official figures showed sixteen associations in Illinois, with a total membership of 2,443, and property valued at $126,500, including building funds, the associations at Chicago and Aurora owning buildings. Thirteen officers were employed, none of them being in Chicago. Since 1880 the work has steadily grown, so that five Assistant State Secretaries are now employed. In 1886, a plan for arranging the State work under departmental administration was devised, but not put in operation until 1890. The present six departments of supervision are: General Supervision, in charge of the State Secretary and his Assistants; railroad and city work; counties and towns; work among students; corresponding membership department, and office work. The two last named are under one executive head, but each of the others in charge of an Assistant Secretary, who is responsible for its development. The entire work is under the supervision of a State Executive Committee of twenty-seven members, one-third of whom are elected annually. Willis H. Herrick of Chicago has been its chairman for several years. This body is appointed by a State convention composed of delegates from the local Associations. Of these there were, in October, 1898, 116, with a membership of 15,888. The value of the property owned was $2,500,000. Twenty-two occupy their own buildings, of which five are for railroad men and one for students. Weekly gatherings for young men numbered 248, and there are now representatives or correspondents in 665 communities where no organization has been effected. Scientific physical culture is made a feature by 40 associations, and educational work has been largely developed. The enrollment in evening classes, during 1898-99, was 978. The building of the Chicago branch (erected in 1893) is the finest of its class in the world. Recently a successful association has been formed among coal miners, and another among the first grade boys of the Illinois State Reformatory, while an extensive work has been conducted at the camps of the Illinois National Guard.

ZANE, Charles S., lawyer and jurist, was born in Cumberland County, N. J., March 2, 1831, of English and New England stock. At the age of 19 he emigrated to Sangamon County, Ill., for a time working on a farm and at brick-making. From 1852 to '55 he attended McKendree College, but did not graduate, and, on leaving college, engaged in teaching, at the same time reading law. In 1857 he was admitted to the bar and commenced practice at Springfield. The following year he was elected City Attorney. He had for partners, at different times, William H. Herndon (once a partner of Abraham Lincoln) and Senator Shelby M. Cullom. In 1873 he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court for the Fifth Judicial Circuit, and was re-elected in 1879. In 1883 President Arthur appointed him Chief Justice of Utah, where he has since resided, though superseded by the appointment of a successor by President Cleveland. At the first State election in Utah, held in November, 1895, he was chosen one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the new Commonwealth, but was defeated for re-election, by his Democratic opponent, in 1898.

SUPPLEMENT.

The following matter, received too late for insertion in the body of this work, is added in the form of a supplement.

COGHLAN, (Capt.) Joseph Bullock, naval officer, was born in Kentucky, and, at the age of 15 years, came to Illinois, living on a farm for a time near Carlyle, in Clinton County. In 1860 he was appointed by his uncle, Hon. Philip B. Fouke—then a Representative in Congress from the Belleville District—to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, graduating in 1863, and being promoted through the successive grades of Ensign, Master, Lieutenant, Lieutenant-Commander, and Commander, and serving upon various vessels until Nov. 18, 1893, when he was commissioned Captain and, in 1897, assigned to the command of the battleship Raleigh, on the Asiatic Station. He was thus connected with Admiral Dewey's squadron at the beginning of the Spanish-American War, and took a conspicuous and brilliant part in the affair in Manila Bay, on May 1, 1898, which resulted in the destruction of the Spanish fleet. Captain Coghlan's connection with subsequent events in the Philippines was in the highest degree creditable to himself and the country. His vessel (the Raleigh) was the first of Admiral Dewey's squadron to return home, coming by way of the Suez Canal, in the summer of 1899, he and his crew receiving an immense ovation on their arrival in New York harbor.

CRANE, (Rev.) James Lyons, clergyman, army chaplain, was born at Mt. Eaton, Wayne County, Ohio, August 30, 1823, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Cincinnati in 1841, and, coming to Edgar County, Illinois, in 1842, attended a seminary at Paris some three years. He joined the Illinois Conference in 1846, and was assigned to the Danville circuit, afterwards presiding over charges at Grandview, Hillsboro, Alton, Jacksonville, and Springfield—at the last two points being stationed two or more times, besides serving as Presiding Elder of the Paris, Danville, and Springfield Districts. The importance of the stations which he filled during his itinerant career served as evidence of his recognized ability and popularity as a preacher. In July, 1861, he was appointed Chaplain of the Twenty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at that time commanded by Ulysses S. Grant as Colonel, and, although he remained with the regiment only a few months, the friendship then established between him and the future commander of the armies of the Union lasted through their lives. This was shown by his appointment by President Grant, in 1869, to the position of Postmaster of the city of Springfield, which came to him as a personal compliment, being reappointed four years afterwards and continuing in office eight years. After retiring from the Springfield postoffice, he occupied charges at Island Grove and Shelbyville, his death occurring at the latter place, July 29, 1879, as the result of an attack of paralysis some two weeks previous. Mr. Crane was married in 1847 to Miss Elizabeth Mayo, daughter of Col. J. Mayo—a prominent citizen of Edgar County, at an early day—his wife surviving him some twenty years. Rev. Charles A. Crane and Rev. Frank Crane, pastors of prominent Methodist churches in Boston and Chicago, are sons of the subject of this sketch.

DAWES, Charles Gates, Comptroller of the Treasury, was born at Marietta, Ohio, August 27, 1865; graduated from Marietta College in 1884, and from the Cincinnati Law School in 1886; worked at civil engineering during his vacations, finally becoming Chief Engineer of the Toledo & Ohio Railroad. Between 1887 and 1894 he was engaged in the practice of law at Lincoln, Neb., but afterwards became interested in the gas business in various cities, including Evanston, Ill., which became his home. In 1896 he took a leading part in securing instructions by the Republican State Convention at Springfield in favor of the nomination of Mr. McKinley for the Presidency, and during the succeeding campaign served as a member of the National Republican Committee for the State of Illinois. Soon after the accession of President McKinley, he was appointed Comptroller of the Treasury, a position which he now holds. Mr. Dawes is the son of R. B. Dawes, a former Congressman from Ohio, and the great-grandson of Manasseh Cutler, who was an influential factor in the early history of the Northwest Territory, and has been credited with exerting a strong influence in shaping and securing the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787.

DISTIN, (Col.) William L., former Department Commander of Grand Army of the Republic for the State of Illinois, was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, Feb. 9, 1843, his father being of English descent, while his maternal grandfather was a Colonel of the Polish Lancers in the army of the first Napoleon, who, after the exile of his leader, came to America, settling in Indiana. The father of the subject of this sketch settled at Keokuk, Iowa, where the son grew to manhood and in February, 1863, enlisted as a private in the Seventeenth Iowa Infantry, having been twice rejected previously on account of physical ailment. Soon after enlistment he was detailed for provost-marshal duty, but later took part with his regiment in the campaign in Alabama. He served for a time in the Fifteenth Army Corps, under Gen. John A. Logan, was subsequently detailed for duty on the Staff of General Raum, and participated in the battles of Resaca and Tilton, Ga. Having been captured in the latter, he was imprisoned successively at Jacksonville (Ga.), Montgomery, Savannah, and finally at Andersonville. From the latter he succeeded in effecting his escape, but was recaptured and returned to that famous prison-pen. Having escaped a second time by assuming the name of a dead man and bribing the guard, he was again captured and imprisoned at various points in Mississippi until exchanged about the time of the assassination of President Lincoln. He was then so weakened by his long confinement and scanty fare that he had to be carried on board the steamer on a stretcher. At this time he narrowly escaped being on board the steamer Sultana, which was blown up below Cairo, with 2,100 soldiers on board, a large proportion of whom lost their lives. After being mustered out at Davenport, Iowa, June 28, 1865, he was employed for a time on the Des Moines Valley Railroad, and as a messenger and route agent of the United States Express Company. In 1872 he established himself in business in Quincy, Ill., in which he proved very successful. Here he became prominent in local Grand Army circles, and, in 1890, was unanimously elected Commander of the Department of Illinois. Previous to this he had been an officer of the Illinois National Guard, and served as Aid-de-Camp, with the rank of Colonel, on the staff of Governors Hamilton, Oglesby and Fifer. In 1897 Colonel Distin was appointed by President McKinley Surveyor-General for the Territory of Alaska, a position which (1899) he still holds.

DUMMER, Henry E., lawyer, was born at Hallowell, Maine, April 9, 1808, was educated in Bowdoin College, graduating there in the class of 1827, after which he took a course in law at Cambridge Law School, and was soon after admitted to the bar. Then, having spent some two years in his native State, in 1832 he removed to Illinois, settling first in Springfield, where he remained six years, being for a part of the time a partner of John T. Stuart, who afterwards became the first partner in law of Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Dummer had a brother, Richard William Dummer, who had preceded him to Illinois, living for a time in Jacksonville. In 1838 he removed to Beardstown, Cass County, which continued to be his home for more than a quarter of a century. During his residence there he served as Alderman, City Attorney and Judge of Probate for Cass County; also represented Cass County in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and, in 1860, was elected State Senator in the Twenty-second General Assembly, serving four years. Mr. Dummer was an earnest Republican, and served that party as a delegate for the State-at-large to the Convention of 1864, at Baltimore, which nominated Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency a second time. In 1864 he removed to Jacksonville, and for the next year was the law partner of David A. Smith, until the death of the latter in 1865. In the summer of 1878 Mr. Dummer went to Mackinac, Mich., in search of health, but died there August 12 of that year.

ECKELS, James H., ex-Comptroller of the Currency, was born of Scotch-Irish parentage at Princeton, Ill., Nov. 22, 1858, was educated in the common schools and the high school of his native town, graduated from the Law School at Albany, N. Y., in 1881, and the following year began practice at Ottawa, Ill. Here he continued in active practice until 1893, when he was appointed by President Cleveland Comptroller of the Currency, serving until May 1, 1898, when he resigned to accept the presidency of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago. Mr. Eckels manifested such distinguished ability in the discharge of his duties as Comptroller that he received the notable compliment of being retained in office by a Republican administration more than a year after the retirement of President Cleveland, while his selection for a place at the head of one of the leading banking institutions of Chicago was a no less marked recognition of his abilities as a financier. He was a Delegate from the Eleventh District to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago in 1892, and represented the same district in the Gold Democratic Convention at Indianapolis in 1896, and assisted in framing the platform there adopted—which indicated his views on the financial questions involved in the campaign of that year.

FIELD, Daniel, early merchant, was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, Nov. 30, 1790, and settled at Golconda, Ill., in 1818, dying there in 1855. He was a man of great enterprise, engaged in merchandising, and became a large landholder, farmer and stock-grower, and an extensive shipper of stock and produce to lower Mississippi markets. He married Elizabeth Dailey of Charleston, Ind., and raised a large family of children, one of whom, Philip D., became Sheriff, while another, John, was County Judge of Pope County. His daughter, Maria, married Gen. Green B. Raum, who became prominent as a soldier during the Civil War and, later, as a member of Congress and Commissioner of Internal Revenue and Pension Commissioner in Washington.

FIELD, Green B., member of a pioneer family, was born within the present limits of the State of Indiana in 1787, served as a Lieutenant in the War of 1812, was married in Bourbon County, Kentucky, to Miss Mary E. Cogswell, the daughter of Dr. Joseph Cogswell, a soldier of the Revolutionary War, and, in 1817, removed to Pope County, Illinois, where he laid off the town of Golconda, which became the county-seat. He served as a Representative from Pope County in the First General Assembly (1818-20), and was the father of Juliet C. Field, who became the wife of John Raum; of Edna Field, the wife of Dr. Tarlton Dunn, and of Green B. Field, who was a Lieutenant in Third Regiment Illinois Volunteers during the Mexican War. Mr. Field was the grandfather of Gen. Green B. Raum, mentioned in the preceding paragraph. He died of yellow fever in Louisiana in 1823.

GALE, Stephen Francis, first Chicago bookseller and a railway promoter, was born at Exeter, N. H., March 8, 1812; at 15 years of age became clerk in a leading book-store in Boston; came to Chicago in 1835, and soon afterwards opened the first book and stationery establishment in that city, which, in after years, gained an extensive trade. In 1842 the firm of S. F. Gale & Co. was organized, but Mr. Gale, having become head of the Chicago Fire Department, retired from business in 1845. As early as 1846 he was associated with Wm. B. Ogden and John B. Turner in the steps then being taken to revive the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern), and, in conjunction with these gentlemen, became responsible for the means to purchase the charter and assets of the road from the Eastern bondholders. Later, he engaged in the construction of the branch road from Turner Junction to Aurora, became President of the line and extended it to Mendota to connect with the Illinois Central at that Point. These roads afterwards became a part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy line. A number of years ago Mr. Gale returned to his old home in New Hampshire, where he has since resided.

HAY, John, early settler, came to the region of Kaskaskia between 1790 and 1800, and became a prominent citizen of St. Clair County. He was selected as a member of the First Legislative Council of Indiana Territory for St. Clair County in 1805. In 1809 he was appointed Clerk of the Common Pleas Court of St. Clair County, and was continued in office after the organization of the State Government, serving until his death at Belleville in 1845.

HAYS, John, pioneer settler of Northwest Territory, was a native of New York, who came to Cahokia, in the "Illinois Country," in 1793, and lived there the remainder of his life. His early life had been spent in the fur-trade about Mackinac, in the Lake of the Woods region and about the sources of the Mississippi. During the War of 1812 he was able to furnish Governor Edwards valuable information in reference to the Indians in the Northwest. He filled the office of Postmaster at Cahokia for a number of years, and was Sheriff of St. Clair County from 1798 to 1818.

MOULTON, (Col.) George M., soldier and building contractor, was born at Readsburg, Vt., March 15, 1851, came early in life to Chicago, and was educated in the schools of that city. By profession he is a contractor and builder, the firm of which he is a member having been connected with the construction of a number of large buildings, including some extensive grain elevators. Colonel Moulton became a member of the Second Regiment Illinois National Guard in June, 1884, being elected to the office of Major, which he retained until January, 1893, when he was appointed Inspector of Rifle Practice on the staff of General Wheeler. A year later he was com missioned Colonel of the regiment, a position which he occupied at the time of the call by the President for troops to serve in the Spanish-American War in April, 1898. He promptly answered the call, and was sworn into the United States service at the head of his regiment early in May. The regiment was almost immediately ordered to Jacksonville, Fla., remaining there and at Savannah, Ga., until early in December, when it was transferred to Havana, Cuba. Here he was soon after appointed Chief of Police for the city of Havana, remaining in office until the middle of January, 1899, when he returned to his regiment, then stationed at Camp Columbia, near the city of Havana. In the latter part of March he returned with his regiment to Augusta, Ga., where it was mustered out, April 26, 1899, one year from the date of its arrival at Springfield. After leaving the service Colonel Moulton resumed his business as a contractor.

SHERMAN, Lawrence Y., legislator and Speaker of the Forty-first General Assembly, was born in Miami County, Ohio, Nov. 6, 1858; at 3 years of age came to Illinois, his parents settling at Industry, McDonough County. When he had reached the age of 10 years he went to Jasper County, where he grew to manhood, received his education in the common schools and in the law department of McKendree College, graduating from the latter, and, in 1881, located at Macomb, McDonough County. Here he began his career by driving a team upon the street in order to accumulate means enabling him to devote his entire attention to his chosen profession of law. He soon took an active interest in politics, was elected County Judge in 1886, and, at the expiration of his term, formed a partnership with George D. Tunnicliffe and D. G. Tunnicliffe, ex-Justice of the Supreme Court. In 1894 he was a candidate for the Republican nomination for Representative in the General Assembly, but withdrew to prevent a split in the party; was nominated and elected in 1896, and re-elected in 1898, and, at the succeeding session of the Forty-first General Assembly, was nominated by the Republican caucus and elected Speaker, as he was again of the Forty-second in 1901.

VINYARD, Philip, early legislator, was born in Pennsylvania in 1800, came to Illinois at an early day, and settled in Pope County, which he represented in the lower branch of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth General Assemblies. He married Miss Matilda McCoy, the daughter of a prominent Illinois pioneer, and served as Sheriff of Pope County for a number of years. Died, at Golconda, in 1862.

SUPPLEMENT NO. II.

BLACK HAWK WAR, THE. The episode known in history under the name of "The Black Hawk War," was the most formidable conflict between the whites and Indians, as well as the most far-reaching in its results, that ever occurred upon the soil of Illinois. It takes its name from the Indian Chief, of the Sac tribe, Black Hawk (Indian name, Makatai Meshekiakiak, meaning "Black Sparrow Hawk"), who was the leader of the hostile Indian band and a principal factor in the struggle. Black Hawk had been an ally of the British during the War of 1812-15, served with Tecumseh when the latter fell at the battle of the Thames in 1813, and, after the war, continued to maintain friendly relations with his "British father." The outbreak in Illinois had its origin in the construction put upon the treaty negotiated by Gen. William Henry Harrison with the Sac and Fox Indians on behalf of the United States Government, November 3, 1804, under which the Indians transferred to the Government nearly 15,000,000 acres of land comprising the region lying between the Wisconsin River on the north, Fox River of Illinois on the east and southeast, and the Mississippi on the west, for which the Government agreed to pay to the confederated tribes less than $2,500 in goods and the insignificant sum of $1,000 per annum in perpetuity. While the validity of the treaty was denied on the part of the Indians on the ground that it had originally been entered into by their chiefs under duress, while held as prisoners under a charge of murder at Jefferson Barracks, during which they had been kept in a state of constant intoxication, it had been repeatedly reaffirmed by parts or all of the tribe, especially in 1815, in 1816, in 1822 and in 1823, and finally recognized by Black Hawk himself in 1831. The part of the treaty of 1804 which was the immediate cause of the disagreement was that which stipulated that, so long as the lands ceded under it remained the property of the United States (that is, should not be transferred to private owners), "the Indians belonging to the said tribes shall enjoy the privilege of living or hunting upon them." Although these lands had not been put upon the market, or even surveyed, as "squatters" multiplied in this region little respect was paid to the treaty rights of the Indians, particularly with reference to those localities where, by reason of fertility of the soil or some other natural advantage, the Indians had established something like permanent homes and introduced a sort of crude cultivation. This was especially the case with reference to the Sac village of "Saukenuk" on the north bank of Rock River near its mouth, where the Indians, when not absent on the chase, had lived for over a century, had cultivated fields of corn and vegetables and had buried their dead. In the early part of the last century, it is estimated that some five hundred families had been accustomed to congregate here, making it the largest Indian village in the West. As early as 1823 the encroachments of squatters on the rights claimed by the Indians under the treaty of 1804 began; their fields were taken possession of by the intruders, their lodges burned and their women and children whipped and driven away during the absence of the men on their annual hunts. The dangers resulting from these conflicts led Governor Edwards, as early as 1828, to demand of the General Government the expulsion of the Indians from Illinois, which resulted in an order from President Jackson in 1829 for their removal west of the Mississippi. On application of Col. George Davenport, a trader of much influence with the Indians, the time was extended to April 1, 1830. During the preceding year Colonel Davenport and the firm of Davenport and Farnham bought from the United States Government most of the lands on Rock River occupied by Black Hawk's band, with the intention, as has been claimed, of permitting the Indians to remain. This was not so understood by Black Hawk, who was greatly incensed, although Davenport offered to take other lands from the Government in exchange or cancel the sale — an arrangement to which President Jackson would not consent. On their return in the spring of 1830, the Indians found whites in possession of their village. Prevented from cultivating their fields, and their annual hunt proving unsuccessful, the following winter proved for them one of great hardship. Black Hawk, having made a visit to his "British father" (the British Agent) at Malden, Canada, claimed to have received words of sympathy and encouragement, which induced him to determine to regain possession of their fields. In this he was encouraged by Neapope, his second in command, and by assurance of support from White Cloud, a half Sac and half Winnebago — known also as "The Prophet" — whose village (Prophet's Town) was some forty miles from the mouth of Rock River, and through whom Black Hawk claimed to have received promises of aid in guns, ammunition and provisions from the British. The reappearance of Black Hawk's band in the vicinity of his old haunts, in the spring of 1831, produced a wild panic among the frontier settlers. Messages were hurried to Governor Reynolds, who had succeeded Governor Edwards in December previous, appealing for protection against the savages. The Governor issued a call for 700 volunteers "to remove the band of Sac Indians" at Rock Island beyond the Mississippi. Although Gen. E. P. Gaines of the regular army, commanding the military district, thought the regulars sufficiently strong to cope with the situation, the Governor's proclamation was responded to by more than twice the number called for. The volunteers assembled early in June, 1831, at Beardstown, the place of rendezvous named in the call, and having been organized into two regiments under command of Col. James D. Henry and Col. Daniel Lieb, with a spy battalion under Gen. Joseph Duncan, marched across the country and, after effecting a junction with General Gaines' regulars, appeared before Black Hawk's village on the 25th of June. In the meantime General Gaines, having learned that the Pottawatomies, Winnebagos and Kickapoos had promised to join the Sacs in their uprising, asked the assistance of the battalion of mounted men previously offered by Governor Reynolds. The combined armies amounted to 2,500 men, while the fighting force of the Indians was 300. Finding himself overwhelmingly outnumbered, Black Hawk withdrew under cover of night to the west side of the Mississippi. After burning the village, General Gaines notified Black Hawk of his intention to pursue and attack his band, which had the effect to bring the fugitive chief to the General's headquarters, where, on June 30, a new treaty was entered into by which he bound himself and his people to remain west of the Mississippi unless permitted to return by the United States. This ended the campaign, and the volunteers returned to their homes, although the affair had produced an intense excitement along the whole frontier, and involved a heavy expense.

The next winter was spent by Black Hawk and his band on the site of old Fort Madison, in the present State of Iowa. Dissatisfied and humiliated by his repulse of the previous year, in disregard of his pledge to General Gaines, on April 6, 1832, at the head of 500 warriors and their families, he again crossed the Mississippi at Yellow Banks about the site of the present city of Oquawka, fifty miles below Rock Island, with the intention, as claimed, if not permitted to stop at his old village, to proceed to the Prophet's Town and raise a crop with the Winnebagoes. Here he was met by The Prophet with renewed assurances of aid from the Winnebagoes, which was still further strengthened by promises from the British Agent received through a visit by Neapope to Malden the previous autumn. An incident of this invasion was the effective warning given to the white settlers by Shabona, a friendly Ottawa chief, which probably had the effect to prevent a widespread massacre. Besides the towns of Galena and Chicago, the settlements in Illinois north of Fort Clark (Peoria) were limited to some thirty families on Bureau Creek with a few cabins at Hennepin, Peru, LaSalle, Ottawa, Indian Creek, Dixon, Kellogg's Grove, Apple Creek, and a few other points. Gen. Henry Atkinson, commanding the regulars at Fort Armstrong (Rock Island), having learned of the arrival of Black Hawk a week after he crossed the Mississippi, at once took steps to notify Governor Reynolds of the situation with a requisition for an adequate force of militia to coöperate with the regulars. Under date of April 16, 1832, the Governor issued his call for "a strong detachment of militia," to meet by April 22, Beardstown again being named as a place of rendezvous. The call resulted in the assembling of a force which was organized into four regiments under command of Cols. John DeWitt, Jacob Fry, John Thomas and Samuel M. Thompson, together with a spy battalion under Maj. James D. Henry, an odd battalion under Maj. Thomas James and a foot battalion under Maj. Thomas Long. To these were subsequently added two independent battalions of mounted men, under command of Majors Isaiah Stillman and David Bailey, which were finally consolidated as the Fifth Regiment under command of Col. James Johnson. The organization of the first four regiments at Beardstown was completed by April 27, and the force under command of Brigadier-General Whiteside (but accompanied by Governor Reynolds, who was allowed pay as Major General by the General Government) began its march to Fort Armstrong, arriving there May 7 and being mustered into the United States service. Among others accompanying the expedition who were then, or afterwards became, noted citizens of the State, were Vital Jarrot, Adjutant-General; Cyrus Edwards, Ordnance Officer; Murray McConnel, Staff Officer, and Abraham Lincoln, Captain of a company of volunteers from Sangamon County in the Fourth Regiment. Col. Zachary Taylor, then commander of a regiment of regulars, arrived at Fort Armstrong about the same time with reinforcements from Fort Leavenworth and Fort Crawford. The total force of militia amounted to 1,935 men, and of regulars about 1,000. An interesting story is told concerning a speech delivered to the volunteers by Colonel Taylor about this time. After reminding them of their duty to obey an order promptly, the future hero of the Mexican War added: "The safety of all depends upon the obedience and courage of all. You are citizen soldiers; some of you may fill high offices, or even be Presidents some day—but not if you refuse to do your duty. Forward, march!" A curious commentary upon this speech is furnished in the fact that, while Taylor himself afterwards became President, at least one of his hearers—a volunteer who probably then had no aspiration to that distinction (Abraham Lincoln)—reached the same position during the most dramatic period in the nation's history.

Two days after the arrival at Fort Armstrong, the advance up Rock River began, the main force of the volunteers proceeding by land under General Whiteside, while General Atkinson, with 400 regular and 300 volunteer foot soldiers, proceeded by boat, carrying with him the artillery, provisions and bulk of the baggage. Whiteside, advancing by the east bank of the river, was the first to arrive at the Prophet's Town, which, finding deserted, he pushed on to Dixon's Ferry (now Dixon), where he arrived May 12. Here he found the independent battalions of Stillman and Bailey with ammunition and supplies of which Whiteside stood in need. The mounted battalions under command of Major Stillman, having been sent forward by Whiteside as a scouting party, left Dixon on the 13th and, on the afternoon of the next day, went into camp in a strong position near the mouth of Sycamore Creek. As soon discovered, Black Hawk was in camp at the same time, as he afterwards claimed, with about forty of his braves, on Sycamore Creek, three miles distant, while the greater part of his band were encamped with the more war-like faction of the Pottawatomies some seven miles farther north on the Kishwaukee River. As claimed by Black Hawk in his autobiography, having been disappointed in his expectation of forming an alliance with the Winnebagoes and the Pottawatomies, he had at this juncture determined to return to the west side of the Mississippi. Hearing of the arrival of Stillman's command in the vicinity, and taking it for granted that this was the whole of Atkinson's command, he sent out three of his young men with a white flag, to arrange a parley and convey to Atkinson his offer to meet the latter in council. These were captured by some of Stillman's band regardless of their flag of truce, while a party of five other braves who followed to observe the treatment received by the flagbearers, were attacked and two of their number killed, the the other three escaping to their camp. Black Hawk learning the fate of his truce party was aroused to the fiercest indignation. Tearing the flag to pieces with which he had intended to go into council with the whites, and appealing to his followers to avenge the murder of their comrades, he prepared for the attack. The rangers numbered 275 men, while Black Hawk's band has been estimated at less than forty. As the rangers caught sight of the Indians, they rushed forward in pell-mell fashion. Retiring behind a fringe of bushes, the Indians awaited the attack. As the rangers approached, Black Hawk and his party rose up with a war whoop, at the same time opening fire on their assailants. The further history of the affair was as much of a disgrace to Stillman's command as had been their desecration of the flag of truce. Thrown into panic by their reception by Black Hawk's little band, the rangers turned and, without firing a shot, began the retreat, dashing through their own camp and abandoning everything, which fell into the hands of the Indians. An attempt was made by one or two officers and a few of their men to check the retreat, but without success, the bulk of the fugitives continuing their mad rush for safety through the night until they reached Dixon, twenty-five miles distant, while many never stopped until they reached their homes, forty or fifty miles distant. The casualties to the rangers amounted to eleven killed and two wounded, while the Indian loss consisted of two spies and one of the flag-bearers, treacherously killed near Stillman's camp. This ill-starred affair, which has passed into history as "Stillman's defeat," produced a general panic along the frontier by inducing an exaggerated estimate of the strength of the Indian force, while it led Black Hawk to form a poor opinion of the courage of the white troops at the same time that it led to an exalted estimate of the prowess of his own little band—thus becoming an important factor in prolonging the war and in the bloody massacres which followed. Whiteside, with his force of 1,400 men, advanced to the scene of the defeat the next day and buried the dead, while on the 19th, Atkinson, with his force of regulars, proceeded up Rock River, leaving the remnant of Stillman's force to guard the wounded and supplies at Dixon. No sooner had he left than the demoralized fugitives of a few days before deserted their post for their homes, compelling Atkinson to return for the protection of his base of supplies, while Whiteside was ordered to follow the trail of Black Hawk who had started up the Kishwaukee for the swamps about Lake Koshkonong, nearly west of Milwaukee within the present State of Wisconsin.

At this point the really active stage of the campaign began. Black Hawk, leaving the women and children of his band in the fastnesses of the swamps, divided his followers into two bands, retaining about 200 under his own command, while the notorious half-breed, Mike Girty, led a band of one hundred renegade Pottawatomies. Returning to the vicinity of Rock Island, he gathered some recruits from the Pottawatomies and Winnebagoes, and the work of rapine and massacre among the frontier settlers began. One of the most notable of these was the Indian Creek Massacre in LaSalle County, about twelve miles north of Ottawa, on May 21, when sixteen persons were killed at the Home of William Davis, and two young girls—Sylvia and Rachel Hall, aged, respectively, 17 and 15 years—were carried away captives. The girls were subsequently released, having been ransomed for $2,000 in horses and trinkets through a Winnebago Chief and surrendered to sub-agent Henry Gratiot. Great as was the emergency at this juncture, the volunteers began to manifest evidence of dissatisfaction and, claiming that they had served out their term of enlistment, refused to follow the Indians into the swamps of Wisconsin. As the result of a council of war, the volunteers were ordered to Ottawa, where they were mustered out on May 28, by Lieut. Robt. Anderson, afterwards General Anderson of Fort Sumter fame. Meanwhile Governor Reynolds had issued his call (with that of 1831 the third,) for 2,000 men to serve during the war. Gen. Winfield Scott was also ordered from the East with 1,000 regulars although, owing to cholera breaking out among the troops, they did not arrive in time to take part in the campaign. The rank and file of volunteers responding under the new call was 3,148, with recruits and regulars then in Illinois making an army of 4,000. Pending the arrival of the troops under the new call, and to meet an immediate emergency, 300 men were enlisted from the disbanded rangers for a period of twenty days, and organized into a regiment under command of Col. Jacob Fry, with James D. Henry as Lieutenant Colonel and John Thomas as Major. Among those who enlisted as privates in this regiment were Brig.-Gen. Whiteside and Capt. Abraham Lincoln. A regiment of five companies, numbering 195 men, from Putnam County under command of Col. John Strawn, and another of eight companies from Vermilion County under Col. Isaac R. Moore, were organized and assigned to guard duty for a period of twenty days.

The new volunteers were rendezvoused at Fort Wilbourn, nearly opposite Peru, June 15, and organized into three brigades, each consisting of three regiments and a spy battalion. The First Brigade (915 strong) was placed under command of Brig.-Gen. Alexander Posey, the Second under Gen. Milton K. Alexander, and the third under Gen. James D. Henry. Others who served as officers in some of these several organizations, and afterwards became prominent in State history, were Lieut.-Col. Gurdon S. Hubbard of the Vermilion County regiment; John A. McClernand, on the staff of General Posey; Maj. John Dement; then State Treasurer; Stinson H. Anderson, afterwards Lieutenant-Governor; Lieut.-Gov. Zadoc Casey; Maj., William McHenry; Sidney Breese (afterwards Judge of the State Supreme Court and United States Senator); W. L. D. Ewing (as Major of a spy battalion, afterwards United States Senator and State Auditor); Alexander W. Jenkins (afterwards Lieutenant-Governor); James W. Semple (afterwards United States Senator); and William Weatherford (afterwards a Colonel in the Mexican War), and many more. Of the Illinois troops, Posey's brigade was assigned to the duty of dispersing the Indians between Galena and Rock River, Alexander's sent to intercept Black Hawk up the Rock River, while Henry's remained with Gen. Atkinson at Dixon. During the next two weeks engagements of a more or less serious character were had on the Pecatonica on the southern border of the present State of Wisconsin; at Apple River Fort fourteen miles east of Galena, which was successfully defended against a force under Black Hawk himself, and at Kellogg's Grove the next day (June 25), when the same band ambushed Maj. Dement's spy battalion, and came near inflicting a defeat, which was prevented by Dement's coolness and the timely arrival of reinforcements. In the latter engagement the whites lost five killed besides 47 horses which had been tethered outside their lines, the loss of the Indians being sixteen killed. Skirmishes also occurred with varying results, at Plum River Fort, Burr Oak Grove, Sinsiniwa and Blue Mounds—the last two within the present State of Wisconsin.

Believing the bulk of the Indians to be camped in the vicinity of Lake Koshkonong, General Atkinson left Dixon June 27 with a combined force of regulars and volunteers numbering 2,600 men—the volunteers being under the command of General Henry. They reached the outlet of the Lake July 2, but found no Indians, being joined two days later by General Alexander's brigade, and on the 6th by Gen. Posey's. From here the commands of Generals Henry and Alexander were sent for supplies to Fort Winnebago, at the Portage of the Wisconsin; Colonel Ewing, with the Second Regiment of Posey's brigade descending Rock River to Dixon, Posey with the remainder, going to Fort Hamilton for the protection of settlers in the lead-mining region, while Atkinson, advancing with the regulars up Lake Koshkonong, began the erection of temporary fortifications on Bark River near the site of the present village of Fort Atkinson. At Fort Winnebago Alexander and Henry obtained evidence of the actual location of Black Hawk's camp through Pierre Poquette, a half-breed scout and trader in the employ of the American Fur Company, whom they employed with a number of Winnebagos to act as guides. From this point Alexander's command returned to General Atkinson's headquarters, carrying with them twelve day's provisions for the main army, while General Henry's (600 strong), with Major Dodge's battalion numbering 150, with an equal quantity of supplies for themselves, started under the guidance of Poquette and his Winnebago aids to find Black Hawk's camp. Arriving on the 18th at the Winnebago village on Rock River where Black Hawk and his band had been located, their camp was found deserted, the Winnebagos insisting that they had gone to Cranberry (now Horicon) Lake, a half-day's march up the river. Messengers were immediately dispatched to Atkinson's headquarters, thirty-five miles distant, to apprise him of this fact. When they had proceeded about half the distance, they struck a broad, fresh trail, which proved to be that of Black Hawk's band headed westward toward the Mississippi. The guide having deserted them in order to warn his tribesmen that further dissembling to deceive the whites as to the whereabouts of the Sacs was useless, the messengers were compelled to follow him to General Henry's camp. The discovery produced the wildest enthusiasm among the volunteers, and from this time-events followed in rapid succession. Leaving as far as possible all incumbrances behind, the pursuit of the fugitives was begun without delay, the troops wading through swamps sometimes in water to their armpits. Soon evidence of the character of the flight the Indians were making, in the shape of exhausted horses, blankets, and camp equipage cast aside along the trail, began to appear, and straggling bands of Winnebagos, who had now begun to desert Black Hawk, gave information that the Indians were only a few miles in advance. On the evening of the 20th of July Henry's forces encamped at "The Four Lakes," the present site of the city of Madison, Wis., Black Hawk's force lying in ambush the same night seven or eight miles distant. During the next afternoon the rear-guard of the Indians under Neapope was overtaken and skirmishing continued until the bluffs of the Wisconsin were reached. Black Hawk's avowed object was to protect the passage of the main body of his people across the stream. The loss of the Indians in these skirmishes has been estimated at 40 to 68, while Black Hawk claimed that it was only six killed, the loss of the whites being one killed and eight wounded. During the night Black Hawk succeeded in placing a considerable number of the women and children and old men on a raft and in canoes obtained from the Winnebagos, and sent them down the river, believing that, as non-combatants, they would be permitted by the regulars to pass Fort Crawford, at the mouth of the Wisconsin, undisturbed. In this he was mistaken. A force sent from the fort under Colonel Ritner to intercept them, fired mercilessly upon the helpless fugitives, killing fifteen of their number, while about fifty were drowned and thirty-two women and children made prisoners. The remainder, escaping into the woods, with few exceptions died from starvation and exposure, or were massacred by their enemies, the Menominees, acting under white officers. During the night after the battle of Wisconsin Heights, a loud, shrill voice of some one speaking in an unknown tongue was heard in the direction where Black Hawk's band was supposed to be. This caused something of a panic in Henry's camp, as it was supposed to come from some one giving orders for an attack. It was afterwards learned that the speaker was Neapope speaking in the Winnebago language in the hope that he might be heard by Poquette and the Winnebago guides. He was describing the helpless condition of his people, claiming that the war had been forced upon them, that their women and children were starving, and that, if permitted peacefully to recross the Mississippi, they would give no further trouble. Unfortunately Poquette and the other guides had left for Fort Winnebago, so that no one was there to translate Neapope's appeal and it failed of its object.

General Henry's force having discovered that the Indians had escaped—Black Hawk heading with the bulk of his warriors towards the Mississippi—spent the next and day night on the field, but on the following day (July 23) started to meet General Atkinson, who had, in the meantime, been notified of the pursuit. The head of their columns met at Blue Mounds, the same evening, a complete junction between the regulars and the volunteers being effected at Helena, a deserted village on the Wisconsin. Here by using the logs of the deserted cabins for rafts, the army crossed the river on the 27th and the 28th and the pursuit of black Hawk's fugitive band was renewed. Evidence of their famishing condition was found in the trees stripped of bark for food, the carcasses of dead ponies, with here and there the dead body of an Indian.

On August 1, Black Hawk's depleted and famishing band reached the Mississippi two miles below the mouth of the Bad Ax, an insignificant stream, and immediately began trying to cross the river; but having only two or three canoes, the work was slow. About the middle of the afternoon the steam transport, "Warrior," appeared on the scene, having on board a score of regulars and volunteers, returning from a visit to the village of the Sioux Chief, Wabasha, to notify him that his old enemies, the Sacs, were headed in that direction. Black Hawk raised the white flag in token of surrender, but the officer in command claiming that he feared treachery or an ambush, demanded that Black Hawk should come on board. This he was unable to do, as he had no canoe. After waiting a few minutes a murderous fire of canister and musketry was opened from the steamer on the few Indians on shore, who made such feeble resistance as they were able. The result was the killing of one white man and twenty-three Indians. After this exploit the "Warrior" proceeded to Prairie du Chien, twelve or fifteen miles distant, for fuel. During the night a few more of the Indians crossed the river, but Black Hawk, seeing the hopelessness of further resistance, accompanied by the Prophet, and taking with him a party of ten warriors and thirty-five squaws and children, fled in the direction of "the dells" of the Wisconsin. On the morning of the 2d General Atkinson arrived within four or five miles of the Sac position. Disposing his forces with the regulars and Colonel Dodge's rangers in the center, the brigades of Posey and Alexander on the right and Henry's on the left, he began the pursuit, but was drawn by the Indian decoys up the river from the place where the main body of the Indians were trying to cross the stream. This had the effect of leaving General Henry in the rear practically without orders, but it became the means of making his command the prime factors in the climax which followed. Some of the spies attached to Henry's command having accidentally discovered the trail of the main body of the fugitives, he began the pursuit without waiting for orders and soon found himself engaged with some 300 savages, a force nearly equal to his own. It was here that the only thing like a regular battle occurred. The savages fought with the fury of despair, while Henry's force was no doubt nerved to greater deeds of courage by the insult which they conceived had been put upon them by General Atkinson. Atkinson, hearing the battle in progress and discovering that he was being led off on a false scent, soon joined Henry's force with his main army, and the steamer "Warrior," arriving from Prairie du Chien, opened a fire of canister upon the pent-up Indians. The battle soon degenerated into a massacre. In the course of the three hours through which it lasted, it is estimated that 150 Indians were killed by fire from the troops, an equal number of both sexes and all ages drowned while attempting to cross the river or by being driven into it, while about 50 (chiefly women and children) were made prisoners. The loss of the whites was 20 killed and 13 wounded. When the "battle" was nearing its close it is said that Black Hawk, having repented the abandonment of his people, returned within sight of the battle-ground, but seeing the slaughter in progress which he was powerless to avert, he turned and, with a howl of rage and horror, fled into the forest. About 300 Indians (mostly noncombatants) succeeded in crossing the river in a condition of exhaustion from hunger and fatigue, but these were set upon by the Sioux under Chief Wabasha, through the suggestion and agency of General Atkinson, and nearly one-half their number exterminated. Of the remainder many died from wounds and exhaustion, while still others perished while attempting to reach Keokuk's band who had refused to join in Black Hawk's desperate venture. Of one thousand who crossed to the east side of the river with Black Hawk in April, it is estimated that not more than 150 survived the tragic events of the next four months.

General Scott, having arrived at Prairie du Chien early in August, assumed command and, on August 15, mustered out the volunteers at Dixon, Ill. After witnessing the bloody climax at the Bad Axe of his ill-starred invasion, Black Hawk fled to the dells of the Wisconsin, where he and the Prophet surrendered themselves to the Winnebagos, by whom they were delivered to the Indian Agent at Prairie du Chien. Having been taken to Fort Armstrong on September 21, he there signed a treaty of peace. Later he was taken to Jefferson Barracks (near St. Louis) in the custody of Jefferson Davis, then a Lieutenant in the regular army, where he was held a captive during the following winter. The connection of Davis with the Black Hawk War, mentioned by many historians, seems to have been confined to this act. In April, 1833, with the Prophet and Neapope, he was taken to Washington and then to Fortress Monroe, where they were detained as prisoners of war until June 4, when they were released. Black Hawk, after being taken to many principal cities in order to impress him with the strength of the American nation, was brought to Fort Armstrong, and there committed to the guardianship of his rival, Keokuk, but survived this humiliation only a few years, dying on a small reservation set apart for him in Davis County, Iowa, October 3, 1838.

Such is the story of the Black Hawk War, the most notable struggle with the aborigines in Illinois history. At its beginning both the State and national authorities were grossly misled by an exaggerated estimate of the strength of Black Hawk's force as to numbers and his plans for recovering the site of his old village, while Black Hawk had conceived a low estimate of the numbers and courage of his white enemies, especially after the Stillman defeat. The cost of the war to the State and nation in money has been estimated at $2,000,000, and in sacrifice of life on both sides at not less than 1,200. The loss of life by the troops in irregular skirmishes, and in massacres of settlers by the Indians, aggregated about 250, while an equal number of regulars perished from a visitation of cholera at the various stations within the district affected by the war, especially at Detroit, Chicago, Fort Armstrong and Galena. Yet it is the judgment of later historians that nearly all this sacrifice of life and treasure might have been avoided, but for a series of blunders due to the blind or unscrupulous policy of officials or interloping squatters upon lands which the Indians had occupied under the treaty of 1804. A conspicious blunder—to call it by no harsher name — was the violation by Stillman's command of the rules of civilized warfare in the attack made upon Black Hawk's messengers, sent under flag of truce to request a conference to settle terms under which he might return to the west side of the Mississippi—an act which resulted in a humiliating and disgraceful defeat for its authors and proved the first step in actual war. Another misfortune was the failure to understand Neapope's appeal for peace and permission for his people to pass beyond the Mississippi the night after the battle of Wisconsin Heights; and the third and most inexcusable blunder of all, was the refusal of the officer in command of the "Warrior" to respect Black Hawk's flag of truce and request for a conference just before the bloody massacre which has gone into history under the name of the "battle of the Bad Axe." Either of these events, properly availed of, would have prevented much of the butchery of that bloody episode which has left a stain upon the page of history, although this statement implies no disposition to detract from the patriotism and courage of some of the leading actors upon whom the responsibility was placed of protecting the frontier settler from outrage and massacre. One of the features of the war was the bitter jealousy engendered by the unwise policy pursued by General Atkinson towards some of the volunteers—especially the treatment of General James D. Henry, who, although subjected to repeated slights and insults, is regarded by Governor Ford and others as the real hero of the war. Too brave a soldier to shirk any responsibility and too modest to exploit his own deeds, he felt deeply the studied purpose of his superior to ignore him in the conduct of the campaign—a purpose which, as in the affair at the Bad Axe, was defeated by accident or by General Henry's soldierly sagacity and attention to duty, although he gave out to the public no utterance of complaint. Broken in health by the hardships and exposures of the campaign, he went South soon after the war and died of consumption, unknown and almost alone, in the city of New Orleans, less two years later.

Aside from contemporaneous newspaper accounts, monographs, and manuscripts on file in public libraries relating to this epoch in State history, the most comprehensive records of the Black Hawk War are to be found in the "Life of Black Hawk," dictated by himself (1834); Wakefield's "History of the War between the United States and the Sac and Fox Nations" (1834); Drake's "Life of Black Hawk" (1854); Ford's "History of Illinois" (1854); Reynolds' "Pioneer History of Illinois; and "My Own Times"; Davidson & Stuve's and Moses' Histories of Illinois; Blanchard's "The Northwest and Chicago"; Armstrong's "The Sauks and the Black Hawk War," and Reuben G. Thwaite's "Story of the Black Hawk War" (1892.)

CHICAGO HEIGHTS, a village in the southern part of Cook County, twenty-eight miles south of the central part of Chicago, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern and the Michigan Central Railroads; is located in an agricultural region, but has some manufactures as well as good schools—also has one newspaper. Population (1900), 5,100.

GRANITE, a city of Madison Couuty, located five miles north of St. Louis on the lines of the Burlington; the Chicago & Alton; Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis; Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis (Illinois), and the Wabash Railways. It is adjacent to the Merchants' Terminal Bridge across the Mississippi and has considerable manufacturing and grain-storage business; has two newspapers. Population (1900), 3,122.

HARLEM, a village of Proviso Township, Cook County, and suburb of Chicago, on the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, nine miles west of the terminal station at Chicago. Harlem originally embraced the village of Oak Park, now a part of the city of Chicago, but, in 1884, was set off and incorporated as a village. Considerable manufacturing is done here. Population (1900), 4,085.

HARVEY, a city of Cook County, and an important manufacturing suburb of the city of Chicago, three miles southwest of the southern city limits. It is on the line of the Illinois Central and the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railways, and has extensive manufactures of harvesting, street and steam railway machinery, gasoline stoves, enameled ware, etc.; also has one newspaper and ample school facilities. Population (1900), 5,395.

IOWA CENTRAL RAILWAY, a railway line having its principal termini at Peoria, Ill., and Manly Junction, nine miles north of Mason City, Iowa, with several lateral branches making connections with Centerville, Newton, State Center, Story City, Algona and Northwood in the latter State. The total length of line owned, leased and operated by the Company, officially reported in 1899, was 508.98 miles, of which 89.76 miles—including 3.5 miles trackage facilities on the Peoria & Pekin Union between Iowa Junction and Peoria—were in Illinois. The Illinois division extends from Keithsburg—where it enters the State at the crossing of the Mississippi—to Peoria.—(HISTORY.) The Iowa Central Railway Company was originally chartered as the Central Railroad Company of Iowa and the road completed in October, 1871. In 1873 it passed into the hands of a receiver and, on June 4, 1879, was reorganized under the name of the Central Iowa Railway Company. In May, 1883, this company purchased the Peoria & Farmington Railroad, which was incorporated into the main line, but defaulted and passed into the hands of a receiver December 1, 1886; the line was sold under foreclosure in 1887 and 1888, to the Iowa Central Railway Company, which had effected a new organization on the basis of $11,000,000 common stock, $6,000,000 preferred stock and $1,379,625 temporary debt certificates convertible into preferred stock, and $7,500,000 first mortgage bonds. The transaction was completed, the receiver discharged and the road turned over to the new company, May 15, 1889.—(FINANCIAL). The total capitalization of the road in 1899 was $21,337,558, of which $14,159,180 was in stock, $6,650,095 in bonds and $528,283 in other forms of indebtedness. The total earnings and income of the line in Illinois for the same year were $532,568, and the expenditures $566,333.

SPARTA, a city of Randolph County, situated on the Centralia & Chester and the Mobile & Ohio Railroads, twenty miles northwest of Chester and fifty miles southeast of St. Louis. It has a number of manufacturing establishments, including plow factories, a woolen mill, a cannery and creameries; also has natural gas. The first settler was James McClurken, from South Carolina, who settled here in 1818. He was joined by James Armour a few years later, who bought land of McClurken, and together they laid out a village, which first received the name of Columbus. About the same time Robert G. Shannon, who had been conducting a mercantile business in the vicinity, located in the town and became the first Postmaster. In 1839 the name of the town was changed to Sparta. Mr. McClurken, its earliest settler, appears to have been a man of considerable enterprise, as he is credited with having built the first cotton gin in this vicinity, besides still later, erecting saw and flour mills and a woolen mill. Sparta was incorporated as a village in 1837 and in 1859 as a city. A colony of members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church (Covenanters or "Seceders") established at Eden, a beautiful site about a mile from Sparta, about 1822, cut an important figure in the history of the latter place, as it became the means of attracting here an industrious and thriving population. At a later period it became one of the most important stations of the "Underground Railroad" (so called) in Illinois (which see). The population of Sparta (1890) was 1,979; (1900), 2,041.

TOLUCA, a city of Marshall County situated on the line of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad, 18 miles southwest of Streator. It is in the center of a rich agricultural district; has the usual church and educational facilities of cities of its rank, and two newspapers. Population (1900), 2,629.

WEST HAMMOND, a village situated in the northeast corner of Thornton Township, Cook County, adjacent to Hammond, Ind., from which it is separated by the Indiana State line. It is on the Michigan Central Railroad, one mile south of the Chicago City limits, and has convenient access to several other lines, including the Chicago & Erie; New York, Chicago & St. Louis, and Western Indiana Railroads. Like its Indiana neighbor, it is a manufacturing center of much importance, was incorporated as a village in 1892, and has grown rapidly within the last few years, having a population, according to the census of 1900, of 2,935.

CHAPTER I.

INDIANS.

ABORIGINAL OCCUPANTS—INDIAN TRIBES IN ILLINOIS TERRITORY—SOME NOTABLE INDIAN CHIEFS—THE STORY OF WAUBONSIE AND NEOQUA—WATER ROUTES AND PORTAGES CONNECTING THE LAKES WITH THE ILLINOIS AND MISSISSIPPI RIVERS—INDIAN CONFEDERACY OF THE ILLINOIS—INDIAN MOUNDS AND BURIAL GROUNDS.

To note the development of a great State is a rare privilege, and to observe the transition of any considerable portion of a great commonwealth, from its primal wildness to a condition of high culture, both in its material features and in the mental and moral characteristics of its inhabitants, is wonderfully interesting. In no fuller measure has such peculiar opportunity been given to any people than to the early settlers of the Fox River valley in Northern Illinois. Less than four-score years have passed since the untutored savage, with nature's countless forms of animal and vegetable life, alone had lived and died, through countless ages, on the banks of its beautiful streams, amid its lovely woodlands and across its verdant prairies. For untold centuries no sound, save nature's multitudinous voices, had broken the vast solitude. With the advent of the white man, the Indian vanished as a passing vapor; he disappeared and left no trace of his long occupancy. Whoever attempts to trace the history of Indian tribes, delves amid mists and shadows.

Speaking from uncertain data, it appears that the Pottawatomies, who were the immediate predecessors of the white man, were a branch of the Algonquin stock, differing in dialect, customs and characteristics from the Sioux, the Iroquois, or the Illinois (Illini—Linni-wek). We find the Pottawatomies first mentioned in 1639, as then located upon the northerly bank of Lake Huron. A half century later, they showed Pere Marquette the narrow summit between the waters of the Fox River of Wisconsin, emptying into Green Bay, and of the Wisconsin River, tributary to the Mississippi, near the present city of Portage; and placed him upon the long, marvelous waterway, through the heart of the continent to the Southern Gulf. Steadily they pushed the different branches of the Miamis down the western shore of Lake Michigan, and about 1718 the Weas—a branch of the Miamis—abandoned their village at Chicago, through fear of the "Canoe Indians"—the Pottawatomies. Their name signifies "we are making a fire;" and, from their roaming habits, other Indians spoke of them as "squatters." A careful enumeration of the Indians in Illinois made by Governor Edwards showed that, in 1809, the Pottawatomies had about three hundred and fifty warriors on the Little Calumet and Kankakee Rivers—about three hundred near Chicago, and one hundred and eighty on the Calumet, DesPlaines and Fox Rivers. Of these Waubonsie was the head War Chief. In Thomas L. McKenney's "History of the Indian Tribes of North America," published by the War Department of the United States Government, we have a sketch of his life and a colored portrait of the great chieftain. It says: "He was the principal war chief of the Pottawatomies of the prairie, who sold their lands in Illinois and Indiana to the United States, and accepted other territory west of the Mississippi River, to which they agreed to remove. In 1835 he visited Washington for the purpose, he said, of taking his Great Father by the hand, and the next year he led his people to their new home near Council Bluffs, Iowa, where, in 1838, he is still living."

In 1833 the principal village of this portion of the tribe extended loosely along the west bank of Fox River from the site of the present city of Aurora to Mill Creek; and a smaller village in command of Nic-o-wah was located on the east bank of the river, just below where Dundee now stands, in the sheltered glade known as "Granny Russell's Hollow." The few settlers who lived near these Indians before their removal, say they were lazy, dirty vagabonds, slightly sheltered in comfortless te-pees, destitute of furniture or conveniences of any kind. They were quite respectful, almost subservient, in their intercourse with the whites; not truthful, incorrigible beggars, and inclined to pilfer. A venerable lady, who for months lived near the much superior wigwam (or council house) of the chief, describes him as a large, fine-looking, powerful man, over six feet in height, with a kindly and pleasant bearing. She says he was an intelligent, considerate husband and father, and ruled his people well. She declares that his name was not Waubonsie, but that the Indians pronounced it as spelled Wah-bn-seh—the accent being upon the first and the last syllables, especially upon the last, while the second was a mere buzzing or humming sound.

Captain Charles B. Dodson, late of Geneva, Ill., contracted with the Government to furnish transportation for the tribe to their new reservation; and he is recorded as saying the chief promised him "to be ready with his people on a certain morning to start upon the long journey, but he found on reaching the old chief's wigwam at the time designated, only a portion of the tribe had assembled. Waubonsie, a portion of his warriors and his squaws, were nowhere to be found, and the escort was compelled to start without the head of the tribe. This, however, so troubled Captain Dodson and the United States officers of the escort, that, although several days distant upon the journey, Dodson with only three men returned, and surprised the chief surrounded by the remnant of his people. An entire day was spent in trying to induce him to follow his tribe in accordance with his promise, but only a sullen dissent was the result until just at evening, when, by promises and presents, the Captain succeeded in getting the squaws aboard his wagons and started westward. This was too much for old Waubonsie who could not live without his squaws, and, with a last, sad look over the lovely valley of the Fox, which had been his hunting grounds and where he had marshalled his dusky warriors, he took up the line of march, following his people with a subdued and broken spirit." It is said that his son, the young chief, Neoqua, was a pleasant fellow and a great favorite with the settlers; but, true to his Indian nature, he would not work; he said: "Me hunt the meat, squaw hunt the corn." It is reported that Waubonsie's system and discipline were such that he could assemble five hundred armed warriors in six hours' time; but this is doubtless an exaggeration. It is also reported that, during the great war, Neoqua raised a regiment of his people in Kansas, and served faithfully in the Union Army.

The Indians, the hunters and trappers, and the "voyageurs" and priests of the days where tradition and history dimly merge, had three water routes and portages connecting the great system of northern rivers and the lower lakes with the Illinois and Mississippi, viz: By the St. Joseph to South Bend or "Mishwaukie," with portage to the head-waters of the Kankakee or Theakiki; by the Calumet with portage to the Kankakee; and by the South Chicago and Mud Lake with portage to the Des Plaines, and from these several portages down the rivers named to the Illinois. Along this great highway to the Mississippi many sad and thrilling tragedies of savage life were enacted; and along this route, and the trails connected with it, the first soldiers and settlers found their way into the new land.

The "Illinois" was the collective name of a confederacy of five separate tribes, namely: the Kaskaskias, the Cahokias, the Tamaroas, the Peorias, and the Mitchigamies; and they possessed the country along the Illinois River from the Kankakee and Des Plaines to the Mississippi, and southerly past the center of the State. "Pere Membre" states that, in 1680, their chief village, which he called "La Vantum," contained some seven thousand souls, and was situated about a mile southerly from Starved Rock (Fort St. Louis), near the site of the present village of Utica. Doubtless they were the most manly and humane of any of the western tribes, with a stronger inclination toward progress and civilization. Their complete annihilation, under the repeated assaults of the Iroquois, the Foxes and the Pottawatomies, is among the most pathetic tragedies of Indian tradition or history.

But Kane County, situated some distance up the valley of the Fox, was a little removed from this great water highway, and there is no tradition of any encounter of the aborigines within its peaceful borders. Indolent, improvident, gluttonous and cruel, they had roamed over these fertile lands during countless generations. As a race, they developed no intellectual or moral force, evolved no national or governmental system worthy of perpetuation, indicated no inventive genius whatever, and seemed utterly incapable of progress toward better conditions. No enduring monument did they rear, no structure of beauty or utility did they erect, and there is no trace of literature or art in all their traditions or history. They left absolutely nothing to mark their long, long occupancy, save the narrow trail which the elements and vegetation almost obliterated in a single year, and the low mounds above their dead warriors that cultivation quickly smoothed into utter oblivion. Old settlers at Elgin well remember the group of such mounds thickly covering some fifteen or twenty acres between Highland Avenue and Wing Street, on the southeast quarter of Section 10. Three of them, protected by the orchard fence and sod near the Washington Wing homestead, are still plainly visible on the north side of Wing Street. A map of the State, published in 1837, indicates them by stars as "old Indian mounds" situated just west of Fox River, although the old map shows no settlement of any kind between Chicago and Galena, except Bloomingdale at Meacham's Grove.

The fine cities along the Fox River, and from thence westward, were then but names, or a few settlers' cabins. Now and again among the Indians, individuals appeared who rose far above their low environment; yet their rarity but flashes into more vivid distinctness the brutal characteristics of the race. They passed as the wild beasts and birds have perished, and, while there is pathos and pity that it should be so, nevertheless it is well.

CHAPTER II.

TOPOGRAPHY AND FLORA.

UNWILLING MIGRATION OF THE POTTAWATOMIES WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI—THE FOX RIVER VALLEY—NATURAL BEAUTY OF ITS SCENERY AND FERTILITY OF ITS SOIL—RICH TIMBER LANDS AND MINIATURE LAKES—INDIGENOUS FRUITS, FLOWERS AND PLANTS.

The Pottawatomies very reluctantly turned their unwilling footsteps westward, for they had some appreciation of the beauty and bounty of the land they were leaving forever. In this middle valley of the Fox there were no bad lands. It was all easy to traverse, delightful to the eye, and wonderfully productive of the food suited to savage life. The seasons were temperate with few heavy snow falls in winter, and the climate healthy and invigorating. The woodland and prairies abounded in game, and the streams were teeming with excellent food-fishes. There were no tangled forests, no large impenetrable swamps nor vast prairies, but a continued succession of gentle, sloping hills and smiling valleys, covered with rich verdure and beautiful forest glades. The flower-bedecked prairies were bordered by fair woodlands and dotted with shady groves.

Through that portion of the valley now included within the boundaries of Kane County, the Fox River held its course from the north nearly due south. Its waters were clear and pure, fed by innumerable creeks and springs, and it was not connected with any large sloughs or swamps. Its bed was clean gravel with a few short stretches of limestone rock; its channel of quite uniform depth, with a quick, steady flow or current, while its banks, both in prairie and woodland, along its whole course, sloped gently to the water's edge. On its west bank, Tyler, Ferson's and Mill Creeks were its principal tributaries, while from the east Popple Creek was the only stream of similar size contributing its waters. Yet, upon each bank, very many fine brooks and contiguous springs were feeding its whole course with their pure, cool waters. In ordinary times it was never a deep stream; but in those early days, when the whole surface of the land was covered with the tough prairie sod, like an almost impenetrable thatch, the heavy rains and, in spring, melting snows, poured volumes of water into all its tributaries, that frequently overflowed their banks and so filled the river that it became a torrent impassable to man or beast. And, when the ice broke after a severe winter and came sweeping down with the spring freshet, its force was irresistible, and the first bridges and dams were swept away like straws before the mad floods. Probably the river itself, and also each of these tributary streams, have diminished nearly one-half in size and flow of current. The winter cutting of thousands and hundreds of thousands of tons of ice from its frozen surface, and the erection of so many dams and bridges, together with the constant diversion of so much of its water for the use of the fine cities and towns along its bank, have so diminished its volume and current that it is now easily controlled. The river valley is very narrow, as the summit toward Lake Michigan is but eight or ten miles eastward, while, from ten or twelve miles westward, the drainage flows to the distant Rock River.

A number of lakes or ponds, covering from fifteen to eighty or more acres each, formerly existed along its western water-shed. Nelson's Lake on the line between the townships of Batavia and Blackberry, and Lily Lake, just east of the Campton and Virgil line, were probably the largest and deepest of them. Quite a body of deep water covered a portion of the northwest quarter of Section 8, and another larger, but shallower, lay on the east line of the southeast quarter of Section 16, both in Elgin Township. The latter was the source of the north branch of Ferson's Creek, and Lily Lake was the source of the south branch. There were many other smaller ponds in the county.

The greater absorption of the rainfall by the earth under cultivation, and a thorough system of open ditches and covered tiling, have completely drained these reservoirs, and the former sloughs; and today these low-lying lands are among the most productive in the county. Each township has one or more clear running spring brooks, and yet so well defined and straight is the summit between the Fox and Rock Rivers, that the dividing line of the two western tiers of townships of the county does not cross a single stream.

The banks of the river and of its principal tributaries were usually bordered with a fine growth of forest trees, the white, black, red and burr-oaks being most numerous; but there were also shag-bark and bitter hickories, white and black ash, sugar maples, black walnut and butternut, several varieties of elms, basswood, poplar, sycamore trees, and a few cedars. On the east bank of the river there was a body of magnificent timber, extending from the south line of the county northward to Batavia, called the "Big Woods," and a similar growth, reaching from Geneva to the north line of St. Charles Township, was called the "Little Woods." These tracts were covered with a growth of hardwood trees, standing so thickly and of such stately proportions as to fully justify their designation as "timber lands." There were many splendid oaks, maples and black walnuts, whose massive boles would square over two feet, which rose straight as arrows, with a height of thirty or forty feet to the first spreading branches which formed their lofty crowns, and whose huge limbs often produced logs sixteen feet in length that could be split into rails. For many years these timber lands produced large quantities of hewed and sawed timber, ties, planks and boards, for building dams, mills, bridges, plank-roads, railways and various other structures; while also supplying rails, stakes and posts for fencing, and fuel for the communities located along the river.

On the northeast quarter of Section 1, in Elgin Township, there was a small tract of very remarkable forest and plant growth known as the "Cedar Swamp." Each variety of the forest trees above mentioned reached their perfection here; and, in addition, there were great red and white cedars, not tall but with low immense trunks, and very large branches. From single points of view more than a dozen varieties of splendid forest trees could be seen in close proximity, besides very many species of rare and beautiful swamp and woodland shrubs, plants, ferns, flowers and grasses. Copious springs of clear, cold water bubbled up from the depths of boggy hillsides, over which you could pick your cautious way on slimy, moss-covered logs, and into whose oozy depths one could easily thrust a pole amid submerged decaying logs ten or fifteen feet. Mr. Burgess Truesdell, an educated gentleman and student, and a close observer of nature, declared that, on no other so restricted space, had he ever seen or read of an equal variety and beauty of plant life. A half-dozen sparkling streams hurried to the near-by river, and in their pure, cold water the fastidious brook trout were successfully propagated in later years. Until despoiled by the greedy hand of man, it was indeed a scene of rare forest beauty.

Each of the townships lying away from the river had woodland amply sufficient for the buildings and fences of the early days, and for domestic use as fuel. It is doubtful if a fertile area equal to Kane County could be found in which prairie, woodland and water were more equally and favorably distributed.

Beside these trees of larger growth, were found the smaller varieties—ironwoods, willows, wild cherries, crab-apples, thorn-apples, wild plums and the like, in great abundance. Hazel, blackberry, raspberry, gooseberry and black currant bushes grew in great profusion; and wild grape vines made luxuriant growth along the borders of the streams. The nuts and mast, and the wild fruits of the forest furnished, in early times, quite abundant, and always palatable and wholesome, food for man, beast and bird. The open prairies were thickly covered with rich verdure from the nutritious upland grass to the coarse wire and the rank broad-leaved grasses, and the rushes and lilies of the sloughs and ponds. Over both woodland and prairie, from early spring until the sharp frosts of near-by winter, there passed a constant procession of bloom and beauty. How delightful to recall, even in fleeting visions and happy memories of those early days, the lovely panorama of the spring, summer and autumn time. First, the springing grasses, the pussy willows and hazel tassels, the opening buds of the young hickories and the shy blooming of the wind flower; then the snowy white of the fragrant hawthorn and wild plum, the immense bouquet of the crab-apple in bloom, the wild rose and eglantine, the beautiful beds of phlox, the great swaying lilies, the brilliant cardinal flower ("green knight with a scarlet plume," the children called it); the wonderfully delicate tinted lady-slipper, and all the bright and lovely procession of wild flower and fruit that swept on through the glowing summer, until the chill winds of autumn ushered in the golden Indian summer, with its soft air and mellow haze. Upon the broad canvas of green verdure, nature painted pictures of exquisite color and charming loveliness.

Though now nearing life's radiant sunset, what man or woman is there who lived in this favored land in the pioneer days, who does not still recall, with a thrill of pleasure, the delicious wild-strawberries and the yellow ground-cherries, that bloomed and ripened on the sunny slope of some familiar hillside; the deep blue of the indigo plant ("horse-fiddle"); the tall sunflower-like rosin weed, whose broken stems exuded such delicious white gum; the swaying golden-rod and innumerable daisies and asters; the wood anemones and mandrakes or "May apples;" and, with greater or less distinctness, dear memories of his or her chosen favorites among the countless varieties of lovely wild flowers that, in rich profusion, decked with beauty and fragrance this home of their childhood? Many, very many, of these are lost and gone; yet J. H. Becker, Esq., an ardent lover of nature, furnishes this list of blossoming shrubs and plants that still may be found in quiet nooks undisturbed by cultivation: Blood-root; rue; wood anemone; star-flower; mandrake; spring beauty; Dutchman's breeches; white trillium; wild sarsaparilla; Solomon's seal; false Solomon's seal; dog-wood; red-berried elder; white and yellow wood-sorrel; poison ivy; Virginia creeper; ox-eyed daisy; Indian pipe; field chickweed; white and yellow water-lily; poke -weed; wild carrot; yarrow; water-parsnip; arrow-head; jimson weed; white, blue and purple asters; boneset; marsh marigold; dog-tooth; yellow, white and purple violets; celandine; yellow and white lady-slipper; small yellow and white lady-slipper; meadow lily; wood lily; pond lily; yellow star-grass; butter and eggs; St. John's wort; mullen; jewel weed; evening primrose; black-eyed Susan; golden-rod; elecampane; wild and swamp sunflower; stick tight; tansy;

milk-weed; bouncing Bet; fire-weed; columbine; wake robin; painted cup; cardinal flower; honey-suckle; liverwort; phlox (many varieties); geranium; blue-eyed grass; blue flag; spider wort; Indian tobacco; white and blue gentian; fringed gentian; skunk cabbage; Jack in the pulpit; wild hyacinth; pussy willows; buttercups; wild roses; leeks; rosin weed; ground cherry; strawberry; cat tail; red root, and many varieties of ferns.

CHAPTER III.

WILD ANIMALS, BIRDS AND REPTILES.

INDIAN TRADITION OF A COLD WINTER—ILLINOIS THE EARLY HABITAT OF THE BISON AND THE ELK—INDIAN LEGEND ABOUT BUFFALO ROUND-UPS AT BUFFALO ROCK—MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE OF THE LARGER ANIMALS FROM ILLINOIS SOIL—PRINCIPAL REPTILES—BIRD LIFE IN ILLINOIS.

The Indians told the early settlers a tradition related by their fathers of a very long and very cold winter, many years ago, when the snow covered the tops of the young trees and remained very late in the spring. As the story goes, the cold was so bitter and so steady that many Indians and all the game perished, being starved and frozen; that very late in the spring there was a sudden change to summer-like weather, accompanied by a warm, heavy rain; that it rained for many days, melting the snow so fast that the land was deluged with water, when many more of the Indians were drowned; also that the savage beasts which had lived through the cold upon the carcasses of the starved and frozen animals, were all drowned in the flood. They showed marks and scars, high upon the trees, which they declared had been made by the drift and ice upon the rushing torrents.

This tradition was, doubtless, highly exaggerated; yet there is great probability of a modicum of truth in the substance of the tale; for unquestionably this was once the habitat of the bison and elk. Pere Marquette and other of the early explorers mentioned them in their reports of the country, and the early settlers found indubitable proofs of their former presence in the decaying skulls, horns and bones of these animals which remained; and also in the numerous paths and "wallows" which were said to have been made by the buffalo. Each of these evidences indicated that the living animals had vanished many years before. The Indians also told of the time when their fathers would encircle, on three sides, great numbers of buffalo and quietly stalk and drive them toward the high bluff of the Illinois River, a little below Ottawa—still known as "Buffalo Rock"—and, at the proper time, by suddenly rushing, leaping and shouting at the herd, throw it into a wild stampede, and plunge it in a mad frenzy over the precipice upon the rocks below, thus killing hundreds of them at a single drive. The entire absence of these animals in a land peculiarly adapted to their production, and furnishing, in bounteous profusion, the food necessary for their support, indicates their extermination in some sudden and unusual manner. And the meager number of Indians themselves gives strong color of probability to the substance of the tradition.

The tradition tends also to explain the absence of the larger beasts of prey. Occasionally a bear, a panther or a timber wolf was seen, but these were only individual instances, and so rare as to give no trouble to the pioneers. Prairie wolves were very numerous, but they should not be confounded with the coyotes of the western plains. They were much larger and bolder than the latter. In size they were midway between the timber wolf and coyote. Many a good dog would hesitate to give battle to a full-grown one, and a pair were more than a match for any dog. They fought with quick rapid snaps, and their powerful jaws made their sharp teeth cut like knives. They were sneaking and cowardly enough; yet they were crafty and persistent, and, when hungry and emboldened by numbers, or when cornered and desperate, they were formidable fighters.

The common red deer were very abundant, and were often seen in herds of ten or a dozen. From 1840 to 1850 many men made the winters profitable by hunting them for sale upon the market. Rabbits swarmed in the timber and openings, and raccoons and fox-squirrels were abundant. Foxes were not numerous; neither were there many wild-cats of any kind. Occasionally a Canadian lynx was found. None of the water-courses bore indication of the presence of beaver at any time, but now and then an otter was taken. These animals were observed upon the river as late as in the '50s. Muskrats were very numerous, and their houses may still be occasionally seen along the water-courses. Minks, weasels and skunks seem appurtenant to civilization, and are about as numerous and about as destructive of domestic fowls now as they ever were. A large gray gopher and innumerable little striped gophers were found in the country, and are still here, each quite destructive of the newly planted grain. There were, and still are, plenty of chipmunks, also of fox-squirrels, and a few black and gray squirrels in the woods. Woodchucks and house-rats and mice came with civilization, but moles and field-mice were here when the first settlers came. The soil had never been turned by the plow and their snug burrows thus destroyed, and the collective broods of all sorts, varieties and species of creeping, crawling, jumping creatures that find shelter on and under the surface of the earth, had multiplied and increased without measure, and incredible numbers of insects—some very beautiful and others exceedingly repulsive—swarmed on every side during the whole warm season.

Many varieties of small, innocuous snakes were found in great abundance—the common milk-snake, water-snake, striped (or "garter") and green snakes being most numerous. Scores of the mottled water-snakes could be seen on any quiet bright summer day about the log, brush and dirt dams at the saw-mills, sunning themselves in the warm light, and slipping quickly and silently out of sight upon the approach of an intruder. There were at least a dozen varieties of harmless snakes that, in the early days, abounded in great numbers. The rattlesnakes, called by the Indians "Massasaugas," were also very numerous. The children at play in the door-yard found them, and the men in the fields pitched them upon the loads in the bundles of grain and forkfuls of hay. They were a very poisonous reptile and, unless their bite were quickly attended to, it was liable to result seriously. To man, or to the faithful dog, it might prove fatal. Horses and cattle avoided it with terror; yet upon them its virus rarely, if ever, produced death. Hogs manifested no fear of it whatever, and sought it for food. The hog utterly indifferent to its strike, would greedily seize it with his teeth, put his front feet upon it, and tear it to pieces and devour it. A courageous dog would sometimes seize one near its head and shake its life out so quickly as to escape its fangs; but usually he received a venomous stroke that seemed to produce intense agony for several days, yet rarely proved fatal. The massasauga was a dull, slow-moving, stupid creature, apparently incapable of fear. It had but two quick movements. Its dull filmy eyes seemed nearly blind, and its motions purposeless and clumsy; but, upon the slightest disturbance, it slid into a coil—its head at the center and raised two or three inches above the ground—its rattle-equipped tail on the outer periphery of the coil, sounded its warning with a quivering movement so rapid as to be almost invisible. Upon near attack it struck with widely extended jaws in a quick strong action of the head, projecting its stroke about one-third the length of its body, and it was not rapid in recovering its position for another stroke. These reptiles were usually equipped with three to eight rattles, yet occasionally one was killed having fifteen or more "buttons",—even up to twenty. Each rattle or button was said to represent a year of life, and, as we never killed one having less than three, the young fellows must have kept closely concealed. It was held a religious duty to destroy every rattler that was discovered, and the duty has been so fully observed that they are now practically extinct.

The resourcefulness of the children in the early times is illustrated by the story of the barefoot boy of ten years, who, while riding bareback on a big horse, discovered one of those venomous reptiles upon the prairie where there was neither a stick nor a stone, or clod of earth in sight. Yet he hears the rattle and must kill the snake. Without a moment's hesitation he slides from the horse's back, pulls off the bridle, and, holding the animal with one hand by the "foretop," he swings the bridle and brings the iron bit with crushing force upon the reptile, again and again, until it is dead. Some of the boys would handle the striped and the little green snakes as pets, carrying them in their pockets. They were really as harmless as grasshoppers. Many tales were told in the pioneer times of "vipers," "adders," "Moccasins," and "blow snakes," as venomous reptiles that should be carefully avoided; but it is exceedingly doubtful if any such serpents were ever actually found here. There were many vicious "snapping turtles," and the common land and water tortoise was abundant. Frogs and toads were, of course, numerous. Along the borders of the low lands, very many little circular embankments of clay two or three inches high, would be noticed surrounding the entrance to the perpendicular smooth round well of the little crab, or crawfish, that, it was said, always went down until it found water.

Innumerable land and water-fowl made this their permanent or their migratory home. With the melting of the snow in early spring, the brant, goose and duck made their appearance. The geese, especially, flew in great wedge-shaped flocks, steadily following their tireless leader, and their honk was heard in the sky at all hours of the day and night during the migratory season. Ever northward in the spring, and southward in the fall, they passed in countless numbers. The few we see now are as nothing compared to the thousands of the early days. They nested and reared their numerous broods along the river, creeks, and reedy ponds. Their flesh and their eggs were common food, and the settlers' children used to place their eggs in the nest of the setting hen and raise young wild ducks and geese. They were easily domesticated, yet frequently one that had matured in apparently contented captivity, would listen to the call of an over-flying flock and, taking wing, disappear with the wild ones forever. Their numbers may be inferred from the fact that, after a heavy summer rain, in a little temporary pool of water formed in a depression of the prairie, now part of the cultivated field of one of our dairy farms, as they took wing from the pond, seven ducks were brought down by the discharge of a single-barreled shot-gun. Prairie chickens literally swarmed over the prairies, and numberless coveys of quail whistled in prairie and woodland. The children caught them by dozens in "figure-four" and other traps. The drum of the partridge was heard in the heavy timber, and in startled flight, they whirred from copse to copse through the groves.

During the summer time there were many sand-hill cranes. They came in spring at about the same time as the geese, or a little later, but flying much higher and without order. First was heard their call far up in the sky, and presently in small numbers and in pairs, they were seen descending upon the prairies, in localities from which they rarely wandered far during the summer. They were exceedingly wary and shy, and they seemed to prefer the gravelly knolls and dry summits of the prairie. Standing erect from three to five feet high, their alert vision caught sight of the most cautious foe. At the warning cry of any member of the flock, all took flight at once, and rarely returned to the place of alarm for many hours. They were exceedingly timid, yet, when wounded and unable to escape, they were a dangerous quarry; for the vicious stroke of a long powerful beak would inflict a painful wound. Their preparations for migration southward in the fall were very peculiar and full of interest. In the late autumn they could be heard uttering a loud call, differing from their ordinary cries, and soon they began to assemble in pairs and groups at some chosen spot, where for several days their antics were most astonishing. In an apparent frenzy of excitement they joined in a sort of pow-wow, leaping, dancing and screaming in the most ceaseless and curious manner. In the meantime their numbers were constantly increasing by new arrivals. At length when all appeared to have come, the leader took wing, and uttering that loud call, began his circling upward flight. He was quickly followed by one and another, and others in more rapid succession, until soon the entire assembly was in air sailing in a sweeping, enlarging circle, ever upward—upward—frequently uttering that singular cry. At length, as they became mere specks in the sky or disappeared wholly beyond vision, that far call still came down to earth, but passing southward and receding steadily until it, too, was lost in the distance and every crane had disappeared until the following spring. There were many blue herons along the streams and ponds, and quite frequently most beautiful snow-white herons were seen. A species of bittern, the children called "thunder pumps," inhabited the marshy places, and snipes of different kinds, and plover and woodcock were numerous on the prairies and lowlands. Rarely, but now and then, stately snow-white swans, were observed floating majestically upon the still water places or sailing in the quiet air.

Immense flocks of wild pigeons, in their season, actually darkened the sky, and they passed like the sound of a mighty rushing wind. Myriads moved on northward, while other myriads tarried here. In some favorite grove or clump of trees, which they chose for their nesting or roosting places, they broke down the branches with the weight of their numbers. If permitted to settle upon a field of late sown spring wheat or oats, they would devour the seed or young grain, in a few minutes destroying the whole seeding. The women and children guarded the crop, and "scare-crows" were rigged to frighten them away. Thousands and thousands of them were netted and shot. It is said that the species is now utterly extinct.

The "brown thresher," robin, lark, bobolink, cat-bird, whip-poor-will and many other song birds in great numbers filled the air with their delightful notes. Birds of brilliant plumage were not wanting. The Baltimore oriole and scarlet tanager flashed amid the foliage; the red-headed, golden-winged and spotted woodpeckers clung to the trunks and branches of the trees and winged their rapid flight from cover to cover, while the gaudy, jaunty blue-jay followed one with his impudent scolding, and the beautiful little blue-bird delighted you with its soft color and modest song. In the quiet evening from the loneliest depths of the woods was heard the plaintive cry of the whip-poor-will. In the long twilight of the summer evenings how many night hawks there were sailing on tireless wing through the sky, ever and anon plunging downward in rapid flight almost to earth, and then, with graceful curve, sweeping away and upward to the heights again!

This was a favorite abode of the carnivorous birds. Our historic bald eagle and the great gray eagle were frequently seen, and their wild, fierce scream was familiar to the early settler. No person who has brought down one of these terrible creatures with but a broken wing or less than a mortal wound, will ever forget its appearance of malignant savagery. Its flat head and low protruding brow, its burning eyes flashing defiant hate, its vaporous breathing and raucous cries, together with its wicked, powerful beak and talons, produce an impression too deep and vivid for time to efface. The smaller varieties of raptores were very abundant and, from the large hen-hawks down to the bee-eating king-bird, and unconquerable little shrike or soldier bird, they waged relentless warfare upon each other and upon the smaller birds, reptiles and insects. There were four or five varieties of owls; the great horned, the equally large gray owl and the little barn screech-owl—the latter being most numerous. Crows were scarce in the early days, and if there were any of them here when the white man came, they have largely increased in numbers, notwithstanding the mistaken and cruel warfare incessantly waged against them; but the large black-bird, with his rich plumage, and the brilliant red-winged starlings were then, as now, very abundant. The singular little tame brown "cow black-birds" were also very numerous; and their habit of familiar attendance upon the cattle was pleasant and interesting. They would follow the grazing or working animals closely and constantly, almost alighting upon them, and when the tired creatures lay down to rest, their little attendants never left them. The companionship seemed mutually agreeable, and children used to think the birds protected the cattle from the tormenting flies, and that they also pulled out the irritating murrain or grub that, far too often, burrowed in the thick skin along the backs of the poor animals. The assembling in the fall of the clouds of black birds, preparatory to southern migration, was interesting to observe.

CHAPTER IV.

EVOLUTION OF THE COUNTY.

EARLY CONDITIONS—WATER-COURSES CONVERGING TOWARD ILLINOIS—THE "ILLINOIS COUNTRY" IN TRANSITION—A PART OF VIRGINIA—TERRITORIAL ORGANIZATIONS — NORTHWEST TERRITORY — ILLINOIS STATE ENABLING ACT—NORTHERN BOUNDARY QUESTION—WONDERFUL FORESIGHT OF DELEGATE NATHANIEL POPE—KANE COUNTY GOVERNMENTAL CHANGES—COUNTY ORGANIZATION AND FIRST ELECTION—JUSTICES' DISTRICTS AND VOTING PRECINCTS—TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION.

It is highly interesting to note the remarkable accessibility of Illinois to immigration, in those days when the rivers were the best and almost only avenues of transportation. The Wabash has its rise in Northwestern Ohio, traverses a rich section of that great State, crosses Indiana diagonally, and becomes, for about a hundred miles, the dividing line between that State and Illinois. Far away in Western New York are the headwaters of the Allegheny, and, in West Virginia, of the Monongahela. Converging and flowing across the State of Pennsylvania, they unite at Pittsburg to form the majestic Ohio; which, after traversing a portion of Pennsylvania, becomes the dividing line of the States of Ohio and West Virginia, of Ohio and Kentucky, of Indiana and Kentucky, and at length of Kentucky and Illinois. Next the lovely Cumberland River comes winding through the heart of Kentucky and a large portion of Tennessee, to join the Ohio at Smithland. The charming French Broad River, from North Carolina, and the Holston, from Virginia, unite just above Knoxville, to form the historic Tennessee, that, with its affluents, taps both the Carolinas. It traverses all Eastern Tennessee, skirts a corner of Georgia, flows across the entire north end of Alabama and a portion of Mississippi. Then reversing the current of the streams of the Mississippi valley, it flows nearly due north across the entire breadth of Western Tennessee, and a portion of Kentucky, to its confluence with the Ohio at Paducah.

These are each large navigable streams, and for many miles all their waters flow along the southeastern boundary of Illinois. Immigrants could float with their current from a dozen States to the beautiful "Illinois Country," so easily bringing all their goods and household effects. At Cairo these waters unite with the mighty Mississippi, which forms the western border of the State for its entire length, and at no other point in the republic can be found such great waterways, converging and uniting and reaching back over so vast, so varied, and so rich an expanse of country.

The commanding importance of this delta, in both a military and commercial point of view, was recognized at a very early period. And its central location at the heart of the republic, its salubrious climate, its fertile soil and exuberant fecundity gave the "Illinois Country" an attractive name, and desirable significance, very early in the settlement of the continent. In 1634—but fourteen years after the landing of the Pilgrims—Jean Nicolet discovered the "Lac des Illinois" (now Lake Michigan), and in 1673 Louis Joliet and Pere Jacques Marquette paddled up the Illinois and Des Plaines Rivers, and made the portage at "Chicago." Father Marquette wrote in his journal, "We have seen nothing like this, for the fertility of the land, its prairies, woods, and wild cattle." In 1680, a year before Penn landed at Philadelphia, the Sieur de La Salle and Henry Tonti erected Fort Crevecoeur near the foot of Peoria Lake. In 1765 the last French flag waving over the northwestern portion of the continent, was lowered at Fort Chartres to the proud ensign of England, and that, in turn, was the last emblem of the sovereignty of King George to float over any territory of the United States. Beside the struggles of the Indians to retain its possession, it has been schemed and battled for by Spaniard, Frenchman, Briton and American. The "Illinois Country" was first officially recognized by the "Continental Congress" in an act of July 13, 1775, creating it an "Indian Department," with Benjamin Franklin, James Wilson and Patrick Henry as Commissioners. Virginia, however, claimed the territory, and, in 1778, organized the County of Illinois, and appointed Col. John Todd "County Lieutenant." Thus, the brilliant Patrick Henry was the first Governor, and, through his lieutenant, directed the first election of civil officers at Kaskaskia and Cahokia in 1779. Virginia ceded her claims to the United States in 1783. By the famous Ordinance in 1787, Congress organized the Northwest Territory and President Washington appointed Gen. Arthur St. Clair its first Governor. In March, 1790, Governor St. Clair arrived at Kaskaskia and, during his stay of three months, he organized the county of St. Clair, embracing indefinitely the vast region lying between the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. Cahokia, Prairie du Rocher and Kaskaskia were established as county seats, where the first court proceedings under the English common law were held in 1796. The records, however, were preserved in the French language.

By act of Congress of May 7, 1800, the Northwest Territory was divided, and substantially that portion embracing the present States of Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin was organized as Indiana Territory, and Captain —afterwards General and President—William Henry Harrison was appointed its Governor by President John Adams. In February, 1809, Indiana Territory was divided, and the Territory of Illinois, including the present limits of the State, and also Wisconsin and the peninsular portion of Michigan, was organized and Ninian Edwards was appointed its first Governor, and Nathaniel Pope its first Secretary, in March of that year, by President Madison. On April 7, 1818, a bill was introduced in Congress, enabling the people of a portion of the Territory to organize the State of Illinois. As presented, the bill designated the northern boundary of the new State, to be "an east and west line drawn through the southerly bend or extreme of Lake Michigan, west along the north parallel of 40 degrees, 39 minutes, to the center of the Mississippi River." Nathaniel Pope was then the delegate from Illinois Territory in Congress. With rare political foresight he moved as an amendment that the eastern boundary of the proposed new State "upon reaching the northwest corner of Indiana, should turn due east, and be extended to the middle of Lake Michigan, and thence north, along the middle of the lake, to North latitude 40 degrees, 30 minutes, and thence west to the center of the Mississippi River." In the light of subsequent events, the argument of Mr. Pope in support of this amendment was wonderfully prophetic. In substance, he said that the new State, by reason of her accessibility, central location, and exceedingly fertile soil, was destined soon to become densely populous, and of potential influence; that her people long had been, and ever would be, closely bound to the South by ties of consanguinity and commerce; that, by the proposed line, they would be confined to that section in their future domestic and trade relations, through the use of those great arteries of communication, the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers, and their tributaries; and that these ties were liable to become so powerful that, in the event of an attempted dismemberment of the Union, she might be carried to the Southern Confederacy; that, from the southwestern shore of Lake Michigan, great lines of communication by land and water were soon to be opened, reaching far to the north, to the south, to the east, and to the west, uniting all in bonds of common intercourse; and that, to counteract her present and future strong southern tendency, these mighty forces should be included within the northern boundary of the new State; thus possibly placing her, at some time of future national peril, in the position of the keystone of the arch of perpetual union.

It will be difficult to find in all history a parallel to this wise political forecast; to note an hour pregnant with more wide and vital issues for good or ill. Had his amendment failed, Kane, with the other thirteen rich and populous northern counties of Illinois, would have passed to another State. In that event would this State have constructed the Illinois and Michigan Canal?—would the Illinois Central Railroad have been built? Could Chicago have attained its present magnificent proportions, and become the dominant financial, commercial, and industrial center of the nation? Could the loyal people have held the great State of Illinois in the front line of the defenders of the assailed Union, four decades later, without the potent political influence of these fourteen patriotic counties? Would Abraham Lincoln have been chosen President of the United States? The student familiar with the conditions leading up to the mighty conflict for the Nation's preservation, in 1861, will not doubt that, had that original line prevailed, the people of the great fertile delta of Illinois would have been as hopelessly divided at the crucial period of the Republic's history, as were those of Kentucky or Missouri, and the probable result too appalling to contemplate. Kane County has been a part of all these events, and her history is linked with all these changes.

Summarizing the governmental organizations of which Kane County has been a part, its political status may be traced as follows:

First, the home of various Indian tribes, whose title was finally transferred to the United States in the treaty negotiated by Gen. Harrison with the chiefs of the Sac and Fox tribes, Nov. 3, 1804, covering the region lying between the Fox River of Illinois, on the east and south, the Wisconsin River on the north, and the Mississippi River on the west. Under this treaty, the Indians conveyed about fifteen million acres of the fairest lands for the miserable pittance of twenty-five hundred dollars and a promised annuity of one thousand dollars. Indian dissatisfaction with the unfair terms of this treaty was one of the causes of the infamous Black Hawk War, which occurred twenty-eight years later, causing the loss of many lives and the expenditure of some two and a half million dollars. Second, it was a part of the famous "Illinois Country" from about 1765, claimed in turn by Indian, Spaniard, Frenchman, Briton and American; third, of the Indian Department of the Confederate Colonies in 1775; fourth, of Illinois County, Virginia, in 1778; fifth, of the Northwest Territory, in 1779; sixth, of St. Clair County, Northwest Territory of the United States, in 1790; seventh, of Indiana Territory in 1800; eighth, of Illinois Territory in 1809; ninth, of Madison county in 1812; tenth, of Edwards County in 1814; eleventh, of Clark County, State of Illinois, in 1819; twelfth, of Pike County in 1821; thirteenth, of Fulton County in 1823; fourteenth of Peoria County in 1825; fifteenth, of LaSalle in 1831; sixteenth, by act of the State Legislature, dated January 16, 1836, it was organized as Kane County. It was named in honor of Elias Kent Kane, who was one of the Territorial Judges, a member of the first Constitutional Convention, and first Secretary of the new State. He was also a member of the State Legislature, and of the United States Senate, dying at Washington during his second senatorial term. He was cousin of the distinguished Chancellor, Judge James Kent, of New York, and a relative of the famous arctic explorer, Elisha Kent Kane.

As originally organized, Kane County was thirty-six miles square, including all of De Kalb and the three northern townships of Kendall County. De Kalb was set off in 1837, and the three townships of Kendall in 1841, by acts of the Legislature, thus leaving the county as at present—three townships (eighteen miles) wide, and five townships (thirty miles) long. The statute under which the county was originally organized required that three reputable citizens residing therein should certify that fifty voters actually resided within the limits of the proposed new county; and it is said that the late Hon. Ira Minard and two others rode three days on horseback, camping out nights, in finding fifty-three voters to sign their petition. The proceedings preliminary to organization were had before the Hon. Thomas Ford, then Judge of the Sixth Judicial District, and later Governor of the State.

By proclamation, dated May 24, 1836, he ordered the first county election to be held, at the house of James Herrington, on Saturday, June 4, of that year, for the election of a Sheriff, Coroner, Recorder, Surveyor, and three County Commissioners, designating Nathan Collins, A. F. Hubbard and John Griggs as judges of such election, and announced the third Monday of June, and fourth Monday of September as the days for opening the terms of circuit court at the same place. James T. Wheeler and Selden M. Church were the clerks of this election, and one hundred and eighty votes were polled. James Herrington was elected Sheriff; Asa McDole, Coroner; Relief Duryea, Recorder; and Solomon Dunham, Eli Barnes, and Ebenezer Morgan were chosen County Commissioners. These Commissioners met at the same place the following Wednesday, June 8th, and appointed Mark Fletcher Clerk. The next day they divided the new county into eight Justice of the Peace Districts, and nine voting precincts, naming them and defining their boundaries. These precincts were named in numerical order: First, Ellery; Second, Fox River; Third, Sandusky; Fourth, Lake; Fifth, Pleasant Grove; Sixth, Kishwaukee; Seventh, Sycamore; Eighth, Orange, and Ninth, Samonac. The justice districts and voting precincts were identical, except that the Eighth District included both Orange and Samonac. The subjoined map shows these districts and precincts with reasonable accuracy, save that the boundaries of Ellery, Sycamore, Orange and Samonac were determined in part by objects that have changed or disappeared, and can, therefore, only be approximated. (For map here referred to, see Index.)

These names and boundaries, however, were subsequently frequently changed, until, in accordance with the provisions of Section 6 of the act of the State Legislature in 1849, providing for township organization, a commission, composed of Gen. Elijah Wilcox, Dr. D. D. Waite, and Mr. W. B. Gillett, so established them as to conform to the government survey as to townships, and fixed their present permanent names, one of them being named in honor of the able lawyer and cultured gentleman, State Senator William B. Plato.

COMING OF THE WHITE MAN.

INDIAN DISSATISFACTION AND UNREST—VALIANT EXPLOIT OF LIEUT. JAMES WATSON WEBB—MAJ. STEPHEN H. LONG'S EXPEDITION—THE BLACK HAWK WAR OPENS—THE STILLMAN RUN DEFEAT AND INDIAN CREEK MASSACRE—GEN. WINFIELD SCOTT'S ARMY TRAIL THROUGH KANE COUNTY—CHARACTERISTICS OF THE EARLY SQUATTERS.

The Indians were greatly dissatisfied with the unfair terms of the treaty of 1804, which Black Hawk, the War Chief of the Sac and Fox tribes, bitterly denounced, and which he contended had never been properly ratified by the councils of his people. The horrors of the Fort Dearborn Massacre were still vivid in the minds of the few settlers at Chicago, and at the portage, and along the river routes of the Illinois; and at the time the State was organized, the menace of further uprisings of the savages was an ever present terror. In 1822 the commanding officer at Fort Dearborn became convinced that the destruction of the garrison and few settlers at Fort Armstrong, on Rock Island near Black Hawk's village, was being planned by the Indians, and Second Lieutenant James Watson Webb volunteered to warn the unsuspecting garrison of the impending danger. Alone and in mid-winter, he accomplished this perilous mission, and his promotion, the following year, to a first lieutenancy was doubtless in recognition of this deed of high daring and arduous endurance. Later he became a famous journalist and editor, and was appointed United States Minister to Brazil by President Lincoln. Avoiding the Indian trails, he secretly and silently held his dangerous way due westward through the unbroken wilderness to the Mississippi River at a point near the site of the present city of Fulton, and thence passed down that stream to the Fort. In all that vast solitude he saw no sign of human life save at the crossing of Rock River, where a Frenchman named La Salier had a trading post. He crossed the Fox River at the opening between the heavy timber of the "big woods" and of the "little woods," just north of Batavia. He was, beyond doubt, the first white man to enter the bounds of the present County of Kane.

The following year (1823), Major Stephen Harriman Long, in whose honor "Long's Peak" of the Rocky Mountains was named, passed over the county in charge of a party of United States topographical engineers, en route to explore the sources of the Mississippi River. From prehistoric times, important Indian trails centered at the portage between the Chicago and Des Plaines Rivers, radiating eastward and southeastward, and in all directions westward. There is little doubt that Major Long's party reached the portage over the old Indian and wagon trail around the foot of the lake from Detroit, and, crossing both streams, passed westward on an Indian trail leading past the place where Fort Paine was constructed in 1832, and on or near the site of the present city of Naperville, where he took a more northward trail toward Warrenville and Wayne, crossing the Fox River and Kane County on the route afterward well known as "Scott's army trail."

Black Hawk and his followers, known as the "British Band" of the Sac and Fox tribes, had clung tenaciously to their large village, "Saukatuk," and its adjacent fields, situated near the mouth of Rock River, but had been roughly crowded out by the invading whites and, by threats and warlike preparations of the National and State Governments, driven across the Mississippi; and, on the 30th day of June, 1831, he was forced to sign a stipulation not to return unless by permission of the United States. It was too late in the season to raise any crop; game was scarce and, during that summer and the following winter, the Indians suffered miserably for want of food and shelter. On April 6, 1832, Black Hawk and his band of about five hundred men, with their families and scant effects, recrossed the river and trailed leisurely up the valley of the Rock, saying they were going to visit, and raise a crop of corn, with their friends, the Winnebagoes.

At Dixon's Ferry he was entertained at dinner by Mrs. John Dixon and declared that all his intentions were peaceful. But his coming created the wildest excitement throughout the State, and Governor Reynolds at once summoned volunteers to repel "the invasion," and called upon the General Government for assistance. Meanwhile Black Hawk moved leisurely up the Rock River valley, and encamped on the Killbuck near the mouth of the Kishwaukee, a few miles north of the beautiful Stillman valley, and, it is said, was enjoying a dog-feast with some Winnebagoes and Pottawatomies. The country was absolutely wild and there were no settlers in that region. Some of his hunters reported a body of white soldiers on his trail and encamped on the Stillman Creek. He at once dispatched a small party of braves, with a white flag of peace, to request a conference with its commander. This party was fired upon and two of them killed. Just how the miserable blunder occurred none can tell; but the Indians, already smarting under a bitter sense of previous wrong, were rendered furious with rage. Burning with hatred and desire for revenge, the chief raised the war-whoop of his tribes and plunged into open savage warfare. Charging furiously upon Major Stillman's command of volunteers and killing eleven of their number, he sent them flying back to Dixon's Ferry, "stinging under the most disgraceful defeat ever received by white men at the hand of Indians."

After enriching themselves with the spoils of Stillman's camp, the Indians hurried their women and children to the broken country and swamps about Lake Koshkonong, and then, joined by a few disreputable Pottawatomies and Winnebagoes, the warriors returned to Illinois, where scattered bands of the savages swept eastward and southward, upon the defenseless homes of the few settlers along the frontier, killing, scalping and destroying. Sha-be-na, the Peace Chief of the Pottawatomies, rode night and day giving hasty warning, and the few settlers near the Upper Illinois fled to the fort at Ottawa, and those more eastward to Fort Dearborn. A number, however, were massacred, and their homes burned. At Indian Creek, in La Salle County, which then included the present Kane County, sixteen men, women and children were brutally killed and scalped, and two young girls were carried into savage captivity.

Meanwhile, Gen. Winfield Scott, in command of Government troops, was hurrying toward the border, and arrived at Fort Dearborn, July 8, 1832. The dreaded scourge of cholera had broken out in his command and he was forced into a short encampment on the bank of the Des Plaines some miles above the portage. From this camp Gen. Scott moved nearly due west, and struck the trail followed by Major Long probably a little northerly from Warrenville. Following that trail, he entered Kane County near the dividing line of Sections 12 and 13 in St. Charles Township. Moving down the southerly bank of Brewster Creek, he forded Fox River near the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of Section 11, where the traction company's bridge now crosses. The graves of two soldiers of his command are still pointed out on the northerly bank of the river. From here the old trail is readily traced, some portions of it being still visible and its location well remembered by old settlers. It passed through the southwest corner of Elgin, over the whole diagonal breadth of Plato Township, across the northeast corner of Burlington, and the southwest corner of Hampshire, and left the county over the old Hogebome farm on Section 30.

Thus the first white men appearing in the county were soldiers, and led by distinguished officers. Soldiers observe the county through which they march, and relate far and wide the tales of its characteristic features, and armies are often the advance guard of a changing civilization. Surely in the United States the sword and rifle have ever preceded the axe and the plow. Over these Indian and army trails, and along the waterways of the streams, the pioneers of Kane County found their way to this beautiful valley.

In 1833, when the first squatters appeared, Chicago was but a frontier outpost, in that year was incorporated as a village with two or three hundred inhabitants—many of them half-breed French and Indian—and Galena was the only village of any importance in the northern part of the State. The whole country between these points was peopled by only a few bands of Indians. As in other new lands, the first white men to appear were restless adventurers—men dominated by an impulsive desire for freedom of action that chafed at the social and legal restraints of populous communities and demanded more nearly the isolation and lawlessness of the Indian. Such men followed closely upon the footsteps of the army, constructed their rude and temporary cabins beside the springs, in the groves and in many of the most beautiful places throughout the county, always seeking the convenience and shelter of the timber. They were a brave, generous and honest people, very hospitable, and full of rude kindness; but they were rough and resentful, reckless and improvident. They were hunters and trappers, loved the abandon and freedom from restraint of isolated life, and had no desire for neighbors or the improvements of civilization. Whence and when they came was nobody's business, and when or where they went, few knew or cared, and they were soon forgotten. Still they were of great service to the early permanent settlers, many of whom were quite unfamiliar with the needs and ways of pioneer life. It was near their cabins the home-seekers camped, and left their families while searching for desirable locations; and of them they learned of the pleasant places where there was water and wood, and open sheltered land to cultivate. As the squatters made no improvements for themselves, they had time, and willingly helped the new-comers; and very handy help they were, for they knew how to adjust life to the primitive surroundings. But they did not wish the settler to locate too near, and they did not care to work many days. They knew how to locate a cabin; how to notch the logs so as to fit, and bind at the corners; how to split shakes and puncheons, and how to lay the crooked rail fence upon a straight line. They taught very many lessons highly useful to men and women, making homes amid surroundings and conditions wholly new and strange. In sickness, too, they were exceedingly helpful. They lived principally by hunting, trapping and fishing; and when the sound of a neighbor's axe was too frequently heard, or the light too often seen in a neighbor's cabin, they deemed the settlement too close, and soon sold their claim, or traded it to some new-comer, for enough of his outfit to transport them to another location on the western border; and so they kept advancing continually to the front. Two of them happened to locate their temporary homes in this county where beautiful cities have since been built, and their names are still remembered. Daniel S. Haight's cabin was beside the big spring on the west bank of the river at Geneva; while Christopher Payne's was located on the east bank of the river, near the center of the city of Batavia. It is known that these people came in 1833 along the old army trail, and quite a number of similar squatters built their cabins in the woods, in various parts of the county about the same time.

The next year settlers began to arrive, seeking permanent farm homes, "mill privileges" and town-sites, and the real occupation and development of the country began. The stormy years of President Jackson's tumultuous administrations, with their disastrous financial convulsions and reverses, had brought ruinous commercial losses to many enterprising men throughout all the populous sections of the country. The strong, self-reliant ones, who, through these losses, had become comparatively impoverished, naturally sought new and broader fields of activity in that promising western land whose fame had been told by the officers and soldiers who had traversed it, and thus began a tide of immigration replete with intellectual and moral force. Northern Illinois experienced the full momentum of these influences, and such qualities among its emigrants were potent factors in shaping the future development of Kane County. Very many of its first permanent citizens, were accustomed to the intelligent discharge of both personal and public responsible duties. They had met unavoidable financial reverses bravely and honorably, and were prepared to meet resourcefully, the demands of any new exigency. They were experienced and industrious, and many, both men and women, were highly educated and refined. Kane County was exceedingly fortunate in the intellectual, moral and religious character of its early settlers.

CHAPTER VI.

EARLY HOME-SEEKERS.

HARDSHIPS OF EARLY IMMIGRATION—METHODS OF TRANSPORTATION—LOCATING A CLAIM AND BUILDING THE FIRST CABIN—CONSTRUCTION OF STOCK SHELTERS—HARVESTING THE FIRST CROP—HORRORS OF A PRAIRIE FIRE—PROCURING THE WINTER'S SUPPLY OF FLOUR AND MEAL—TRIP TO THE OTTAWA GRIST-MILL—EXPERIENCE OF A PIONEER WOMAN—THE BUILDING OF A VIRGINIA WORM FENCE.

It is, at best, a long wagon-road from the States bordering upon the far Atlantic to Illinois. But in the days when Western New York was only sparsely settled; when Northern Ohio was a new country, and Northern Indiana and Michigan almost uninhabited; when the roads were but the tracks of immigrants passing on their western way; when the smaller streams had to be forded and the larger ones crossed on clumsy and dangerous ferries; when day after day passed without the sight of a human habitation, and the lonely night-camp was made dismal by the cry of wild beasts; it was, indeed, a journey to be dreaded and long remembered, especially by mothers caring for their little children. Yet hundreds so came, even from distant New England; and infants were borne in their mothers' loving arms over this weary journey. It was needful to be at the new home, early enough in the season to provide for the imperative needs of the coming winter; and, therefore, many started soon after the holidays, and were on the road during the cold storms and muddy season of late winter and early spring. Some came by the Erie Canal to Buffalo, and thence by schooner to Detroit, driving from that point through the wild Michigan forests. On this old Indian and army route the muddiest small streams had been bridged, and the worst swamps and sloughs "corduroyed." Under the most favorable conditions it was a dreary, toilsome journey never to be forgotten.

In those days all vehicles and implements were made by hand, and, compared with those now in use, were exceedingly coarse and imperfect. For instance, the wagon-axles were all wood; there were no steel skeins, there were no neatly fitting, smooth steel-boxes inside the hub. The wooden hubs wore upon the wooden axle, and as the wood was harder in some places than in others, they wore unevenly, causing the wheels to "wobble" dreadfully. The wheels were held in place by iron "linch pins." There were no patent lubricants then, and frequently it was impossible to obtain grease, and the shrill complaint of the loud creaking wheels, as the weary teams toiled their tedious way, was terribly trying to the nerves. The outfit usually consisted of three or four horses, or of two yoke of cattle. A few well-to-do people had also a covered spring buggy for the women and children, and quite frequently there was a saddle-horse. Sometimes in the cattle teams, there was a cow under the yoke, and almost invariably a milk cow was a treasured part of the outfit. The wagon was covered with canvas, fastened at the sides and so arranged that the ends could be closed. Within it was stowed the very scant household effects, the iron parts of a few agricultural implements and useful tools, some seeds for spring planting and sowing and the food supply for the trip, with a little surplus to start on in the new home. Outside was attached a coop with a few chickens, and sometimes a box, with a pair of small pigs for breeding. At the rear end-board was fastened a feed-box for the team, and the water-bucket swung from the hind axle. The faithful dog trotted beneath, and the people rode, or walked, as choice or necessity dictated. Often a little strong rocking chair, with a raw-hide seat, was hitched on in such way that it could be easily taken off for "Ma" to sit on in the evening camp. Ten to twenty miles made a good day's progress.

Men and women are still living among us who, floating down the far-reaching rivers and over these dreary wagon-ways, were brought in their infancy and childhood to these wild western homes. They were in haste to find a satisfactory location, and many of them, instead of going to Fort Dearborn or the little unknown village of Chicago, crossed the South Branch of the Chicago River and the Des Plaines at the portage, pushing on west and northwestward over the old trails until they entered with delight the beautiful grovelands bordering the Fox. Weary with the long pilgrimage, and charmed with the appearance of the country, they halted at a well watered and sheltered grazing spot, near the cabin of some squatter, and began the inquiry and search for a good "claim." The squatter, who was familiar with the whole region, directed them or went with them to the most desirable places; and, while the men hunted for what they thought the best locations, the women rested and, as eagerly as the men, sought information and suggestions from the squatter's family. Meanwhile the teams grazed and rested, putting on flesh and strength for the hard work before them. As soon as a final choice was made the teams were hitched up and driven to the selected locality, which invariably was the sunny side of sheltering timber and near to an unfailing supply of water. Here a more comfortable camp was arranged, and busy work was immediately begun in preparation for impending needs; for winter is not far away, no neighbors are near, and upon themselves alone they must depend. If early enough to hope that any grain or garden plants will mature, some ground is broken and seeds planted upon the sod, and access to the water supply is made as convenient as possible. A "claim" is marked out, either by plowing a furrow or driving stakes and blazing trees around it, and its lines are laid as nearly as may be with the points of the compass, in order that they may conform to future Government surveys. Meanwhile, with more or less earnest discussion, they select the location of the cabin, having in mind the building, by and by, of a better and more permanent home. The women and children attend the growing crop, guarding it from the grazing stock, while the men cut and prepare logs for the house and poles for the cattle-sheds. The log houses were usually about fourteen by sixteen feet in size and eight logs high. The logs were cut to suitable lengths where felled in the timber, and the ends afterward properly notched to bind the corners, and perhaps flattened a little to make them fit closer. If the man had sufficient skill, he cut straight and square the ends of some of them at proper lengths to leave openings for the door, and one—or possibly two—small windows. When thus prepared, he hauled them to the selected site, and, with the assistance of the family only, or such other help as he could procure, the logs were put in place, making the four walls. Then he put up pole rafters and cross-ties, and upon these he placed in layers, like shingles, the oak or bass-wood shakes he had split and flattened with the handy axe. Across each course of shakes he placed a binding pole, reaching from end to end of the building, and fastened the whole roof securely at the gables with hickory withes and vines.

The family can now move in and be better protected from the heat and storms than in the wagon camp. In connection with other work, he can more leisurely carry up the gables, and build the fire-place and stick and mud chimney at one end. He makes the door and window-casings with the axe and a draw-shave—if he has brought one—and pegs them into place. Then he "chinks" the openings between the logs with mud and sticks, and lays the puncheon floor. He makes the window-shutter and the door of bass-wood shakes, which he takes particular pains to shave straight and true, and hangs them on wooden hinges that he has made. He arranges a wooden button to fasten the shutter and fits a wooden latch to the door, through which, a little above the latch, he runs "the latch-string that is always out."

Now his attention is turned to providing shelter for the stock. He cuts posts about nine or ten feet long with crotches at the top, and sets them in the ground to a depth of a foot or two, in rows down the sides and across the ends; and, if the shed is to be wide, he places longer posts down the middle. In the crotches he lays good solid poles for plates, and reaching across the posts lays upon them poles for rafters. Then he sets stakes down the sides and ends, of course leaving an opening for an entrance, the tops resting against the plates, and the bottoms slanting out a little, standing upon the ground. Around these, and over the whole top, he places first small tree-tops and brush, and later stacks plenty of straw and slough hay, and the result is a very dry, warm shelter for the stabled stock and the poultry.

Before all this work is completed, whatever of crop he had planted is beginning to ripen, and the upland prairie grass, which made excellent hay, was ready for the scythe. Fortunately, crops growing upon new sod needed very little cultivation, and usually the women and children could care for them. Corn could be left upon the stalk indefinitely, but the other grain had to be harvested as it matured. The light crop of the first year, and the prairie hay, the farmer and his family harvested without help. The men cut and pitched both the grain and the hay, but the women and children assisted in the raking, binding and stacking. The grain was secured in round stacks generously topped with slough hay, and the hay was stacked in long ricks, so placed as to form wind-breaks for the stock. The cabin, sheds and stacks were in close proximity, so that they could be most easily protected from the awful prairie fires. Early in the fall the farmer "back-furrowed" a wide strip of plowed ground around them all; and, as soon as the grass was dry enough, when there came a still day with no wind, he "back-fired" and carefully burned a much wider girdle outside the plowing, to further protect against the late fall and the spring fires that were liable to come sweeping, with terrible fury, around the little home, scattering the kindling sparks far and wide.

The prairie fires were a sharp menace and dread to the early settlers. The whole prairie land was covered in summer with a dense growth of grass and flowering plants, from one to two feet in height, with frequent rosin-weed and other stalks five or six feet tall, while in the sloughs the thick coarse foliage was doubly as rank. In the fall, when matured and killed by the frost, and then thoroughly dried by the warm winds of the beautiful Indian summer, this vast mass of evenly spread vegetation was dry and inflammable as tinder, and blazed forth at the least touch of flame and sped away, in ever widening area, actually "upon the wings of the wind." Words cannot exaggerate the awful terror and sublimity of the great fires which once swept, like oceans of flame, over the wide prairies, and people will marvel at the tales of their magnificent fury. The mysterious instinct of all wild creatures seemed to warn them of the approaching danger, before any sense of man could discover cause for alarm, and their terror told him of the impending peril. Then came the faint odor of burning vegetation, the scarce perceptible darkening of the sky and the total hush of the breeze, when suddenly, out of the unnatural stillness, away yonder leaped the monstrous sheet of flame, sweeping onward with incredible speed. The child of sixty years ago will still recall, with a thrill of horror, this awful menace and the frantic struggles to save the cabin home. Backward against the wind it only crept, and a child could control or extinguish it; but with the wind, it rushed with the full velocity of the current on which it rode, a solid sheet of flame flashing high in the air, and with fierce heat, instantly burning the life out of any living creature caught in its fiery breath. The great sheet of roaring flame rose and fell with the wind that swept it onward; yet it passed as quickly as it came. Whatever could withstand its scorching heat one dreadful minute was safe, for the blackened land in its wake was fanned by a cool breeze the instant it had passed. During the autumn time the evening sky was often lurid with the light of prairie fires, some of them miles away. Buildings or stock were rarely destroyed, but much fencing and many stacks of hay or grain were ignited and consumed.

Having protected his buildings and stacks from this menace by the plowing and back-firing, the first settler turned his attention toward securing flour and meal for the winter consumption before the approaching stormy weather arrived. One of the nearest mills was at Ottawa. If he had been able to raise a little wheat, he threshed a few bushels with a flail he had made, and winnowed it in the breeze; by hand they shelled a few bags of corn, and early in the morning, with a plentiful box of lunch, he starts for the mill. If he passed a neighbor's cabin, he would probably take a few bags for him also. There were no roads or bridges, and when he reached Ottawa his grist must await its "turn at the mill," and so the trip might require a week, or even a fortnight, if bad weather should come upon him. On the way and at the mill he camps with his team and wagon, subsisting upon the lunch the good wife had prepared, and such game as he may chance to have shot. While he is gone the wife is left alone, unless there are children in the household. But everything is new and strange, and full of interest, and there is plenty of work to do; so the days are rendered quite endurable, even though during the whole time of his absence, his wife sees no human being except, perhaps, some silent and hungry, but not hostile Indian whose presence she had instinctively dreaded. Yet brave as she might be, when the shadow of the lonely night drew down with all its mysterious sounds, awakening phantoms of imagination, and when from out the deepening darkness the malignant howl of the prowling wolf suddenly broke the awful silence, a shuddering sense of her vast and utter isolation swept over her with almost maddening force.

Through all their long and active lives, these pioneer women were never able to fully shake off the dread remembrances of these nights of horrible loneliness. In the first hush of night, and in that darkness which preceded the dawn, the wolves were most persistent in their howling, and a single one could convey the impression of the presence of a score of wailing demons. One of the brave women often told her children an incident of one of these dreadful nights. She said the wolves had closed their evening serenade and all was still and quiet, when she heard a scratching noise at the little pen she had made for her few chickens, in the angle of the chimney outside the cabin. Suspecting it was made by wolves endeavoring to get her chickens, she took the heavy iron-poker from the hearth and stepped out of the door. As she appeared, a wolf at the corner of the cabin drew back a few feet, snarling viciously and snapping his white teeth, while, as she turned the corner of the house, its mate was trying to crowd himself into the little opening that had been left for the passage of the chickens to the inside. Summoning all her strength, she dealt the animal a blow across the back with the poker, bringing him quickly out and sending him howling to join his mate. While they were growling and snapping their teeth but a few feet distant, she piled some heavy sticks from the wood-pile over and around her chicken-pen to save her fowls from another attack. During the night she heard the wolves scratching and whining about the pen, but they were unable to reach her precious chickens.

The slow days come and go and, at last, the weary team comes toiling homeward, and no one can tell the relief it was to both husband and wife to have him back again. And, then, he had brought flour and meal, and the winter's food supply was fairly assured. Probably he had also purchased a few of the most needful groceries, and, last, but not least, perhaps he had brought a wonderfully welcome letter from the home-folks "back East." The letter postage then was twenty-five cents, and that represented much more labor and economy than a dollar does now.

Every day of the first winter, in this new country, was spent by the men in the woods getting out rails and stakes for the fence that must be built in the spring to protect the next summer's crop, and in preparing the season's fire-wood.

Early in spring, while the ground was soft from the effect of the winter's frost and rain, the farmer broke as much more sod as possible, and upon all his plowed land he sowed oats and wheat and planted corn, and then at once fenced all the land his rails would enclose. A good farmer did not lay the bottom rails of his fence upon the ground, but he placed a thick block or stone under each corner for the purpose of heightening the fence and preserving the lower rails. In order that his fence should be straight he set a high visible guide-stake at each end of the proposed line. Then he fastened a cross-bar at its center upon a similar stake, about eighteen inches above its sharpened lower end. This cross-bar was twice as long as the distance of the angle he intended to give each rail. By setting this stake on the line of the guide-stakes, the projecting end of the cross-bar would indicate the point, where the ends of the angling rails should meet and rest upon each other. Thus built, the outer corners, the center of the fence, and the inner corners would each be upon true and straight lines. Such a fence made of rails fourteen or sixteen feet long, laid five rails high, and then well staked and "double ridered," afforded excellent protection from intrusion by any domestic stock. Hundreds of miles of rail-fence were built in the country, and it was the best available until the introduction of wire about 1870. Amid such loneliness and privations, and in such hard labor the early home-seekers spent their first busy years in Kane County.

CHAPTER VII.

MILLS, MILL-DAMS AND BRIDGES.

PROMOTERS OF EARLY MILL ENTERPRISES—THE M'CARTY AND THE CLIFFORD BROTHERS—THE FOUNDING OF AURORA AND ELGIN—A PERILOUS JOURNEY AND GRUESOME FIND—MILL ENTERPRISES AT NORTH AURORA, MILL CREEK, BATAVIA, GENEVA, ST. CHARLES, DUNDEE AND CARPENTERSVILLE — THE FIRST SAW-MILL — EARLY BRIDGES.

Our civilization is a complex development and, at every period of the county's settlement and growth, there was need of all the varied avocations and industries. Mills for sawing lumber and for grinding grain, however, were immediate and imperative necessities; for shelter and food are each day indispensable. It is an interesting coincidence that the first seekers for mill-sites, both at the south and at the north end of the county, were in each instance brothers coming from adjacent counties in Western New York, and that each pair of brothers came on foot to their respective locations—in the one instance coming up the river, and, in the other, down the stream. These two instances are given somewhat in detail, and yet very briefly, as indicating the courage required and the hardships endured, by the resolute people who originated and, with indomitable will, pushed to success the establishment of the larger enterprises necessary for the development of the new settlements; because, in these two cases, the incidents are best authenticated, and because they pertain to the establishment of the two principal cities of the county. Equal toils and perils were met and overcome by the enterprising men who conducted similar enterprises in each of the fine cities adorning the rich valley of the Fox.

Joseph McCarty, the founder of Aurora, who was a mill-wright by trade, left his home at Elmira, in Chemung County, N. Y., in the fall of 1833, accompanied by a young apprentice named Beardslee (or Barsley) in quest of a desirable water-power and "mill privilege" in the West. They made their way westward over the hilly, thinly-settled country to the Allegheny River, where they fashioned a dug-out, in which they, with their chest of tools, floated down that rapid river to Pittsburg—the trip being both arduous and perilous. Thence they proceeded down the Ohio upon one of the primitive little steamboats of the time, and up the Mississippi to Cape Girardeau, Mo., where they worked at odd jobs for their living until early spring. Then, as best they could, they made their way up the Mississippi and Illinois to Ottawa, examining various locations of which they had been told, but not finding any place that gave satisfaction. McCarty was almost discouraged, but at Ottawa he met a man named Robert Faracre, who agreed to explore with them the Fox River. The three proceeded up the valley of the Fox and were charmed with the beauty of the country and evident fertility of the soil. On the first day of April, 1834, only seventy eventful years ago, they reached the Indian village of "Wah-bnseh," and here McCarty found the full realizations he had so far, so long, and so diligently sought. The east bank of the stream was covered with the magnificent timber of the "Big Woods." On the west side he often caught glimpses, through the park-like openings, of the fertile prairie stretching away to the distant groves and horizon. In midstream of the river lay a lovely wooded island. A few yards below the island, the river swung gracefully westward and flowed, in shallow, rippling current, over a pebbly, rocky bed a very short distance, when it again curved southward upon its former course. No more charming scene could be imagined. Careful examination showed excellent banks on both sides of the stream, and upon the island, a solid bed of rock for the foundation of the dam with ample fall of water to insure power for the mill-wheels.

Here McCarty determined to locate, and he at once marked out a claim of about 360 acres on the east side of the river, and erected upon it a log cabin some ten by twelve feet in size. This was the beginning of the enterprising and handsome city of Aurora. In order to control both ends of the dam, Mr. McCarty also made a claim upon about 100 acres on the west side of the river and built a shanty upon it; and, during the summer, he purchased a claim to about 400 acres, lying south of his first claim on the east side of the river, paying a squatter sixty dollars for it. This was for his younger brother Samuel McCarty, who was also a mill-wright in Chemung County, and who arrived at his brother's on the 6th day of November, 1834. During that winter a Mr. and Mrs. Stephen A. Aldrich and their two children lived with the McCartys, Beardslee and Faracre; and these seven persons constituted the entire white population of the present wealthy and populous city of Aurora.

In March of the same year (1834) Mr. Hezekiah Gifford, of Oneida County, N. Y., determined to explore the beautiful country of Northern Illinois, where broad acres of fertile lands awaited the plowman; where living springs, running brooks and flowing rivers watered all the lands; where wood and timber were found in sufficient abundance to meet all the needs of the new settler. He sailed from Buffalo to Detroit, obtained a sort of stage conveyance to St. Joseph, and again, by schooner, sailed to Chicago, which he declared "was hardly a fit dwelling place for a colony of gophers." He said that, "around its dirty cabins and in its filthy streets, geese and pigs waddled and wallowed in happy mire and content, while dog-fights and drunken rows seemed to be the principal divertisements of its mongrel inhabitants." On his journey he had made the acquaintance of a Mr. Duryea, who was probably the same "Relief Duryea," who, in 1837, was elected the first Recorder of Kane County. Meeting upon the street a man with an ox-team, they made inquiry of him regarding the country, and were told that the driver's name was Ferson, and that, with his brother, he had just entered a claim on the Fox River, about thirty miles west, where they had found the finest country on earth, and, being anxious for the presence of neighbors, he persuaded them to accompany him to his claim. They drove out over the old army trail, upon which the winter frosts and spring rains had rendered the sod so soft that the wheels frequently cut through the crust and, to lighten the load, the men walked most of the way. They forded the river near where the St. Charles bridge now stands, and found the Ferson cabin a little up the stream on the west bank.

As was the custom of the time they made this hospitable home their headquarters, while they prospected for a location. They went down the river a number of miles, and came upon Joseph McCarty digging stone for his dam "in the midst of a solitude that would have charmed a hermit." They were both delighted with the country, and determined to make it their future home. Mr. Gifford returned to New York, and his glowing account of the beautiful land he had discovered, induced his brother James T. Gifford to sell his property in Yates County, and arrange to accompany him to Illinois the next spring. Late in February, 1835, they started with a pair of horses and a lumber wagon containing a few tools, a camping outfit, and clothing and food for themselves and team, after the usual tedious journey, reaching Chicago on the 24th day of March, 1835.

Everybody was talking of the beauty and desirability of locations to be found at different points, and they heard much praise of the opportunities offered at Milwaukee Bay, and determined to visit that section. A Mr. Goodwin, whom they had met, decided to accompany them, and leaving their wagon and taking a little food, the three men followed the trail on horseback to Milwaukee. They found no settlement nor shelter on the way, and, as the vegetation was not sufficiently advanced for the horses to graze, they divided their food with the animals. All the land about Milwaukee appeared to be claimed, and the Giffords concluded to push westward on foot to explore the Fox River valley, which was their original destination. Sending their horses back to Chicago by Goodwin, they started westward, but in some way having lost their bearings, near nightfall came upon the cabin of a French and Indian half-breed named Jock Jumbo, near the present site of the city of Racine. They staid with him over night, and in the morning, having supplied them with a little food, he put them upon a trail which he said would bring them to the river about noon, and he thought they would find settlers a little way down the stream.

Following the trail, they reached the stream and turned southward along its banks. They thought nothing could exceed the beauty of the landscape continually opening before them. But James T. Gifford was looking for the location of a village where water-power was available, and desired it should be on the line between Galena and Chicago, then giving promise of becoming the two most important points, as he thought, in the northern part of the State. They saw no sign of a human being's presence until about mid afternoon, when they discovered an Indian in a canoe. Neither party could understand the other's speech, and they failed to learn of any settler, but he paddled them to the west bank of the river and they continued their journey and camped at night shelterless. The next morning they resumed their tramp, hoping each hour to come upon some settler's cabin, but none appeared. Hungry and weary—for they had had no food that day—they were overjoyed about the middle of the afternoon to discover a low hut, evidently of human construction. Upon investigation, they found it to be simply an enclosure of poles and logs, protecting from wild animals the decomposing body of a Pottawatomie brave. Disgusted and depressed they hurried on until night again settled upon them, cold and cheerless and almost despondent. A heavy thunderstorm in the night drenched them, and their condition was pitiful and perilous. Their only hope of succor was in pressing forward, and, at daybreak, they were again on their way. Two nights they had been without food, and this was also the second day of fasting. Each day they had forded creeks and sloughs, and now they were benumbed and soaked with the cold rain of the previous night. Toward noon they forded the marshy stream called the Nippersink, near the present village of McHenry, and with difficulty waded through its muddy bottom. In after years they said it was indeed "nip-or-sink" with them. Soon after, when very nearly exhausted, they heard the welcome sound of an axe and discovered a man splitting rails. He proved to be in the employ of Samuel Gillian, who had just located a claim and built a cabin some five or six miles above the present thriving village of Algonquin. Had they not crossed the river with the Indian, and had they endeavored to make their way down its east bank, they would almost inevitably have miserably perished in the interminable swamps above and around Fox and Grass Lakes. Who can fathom the providential impulse, that induced them to cross to the west bank of the stream?

The half-famished and worn-out men were at once conducted to Mr. Gillian's cabin, where, of course, they received a hospitable welcome, and such succor as their pitiable condition required. Mr. Gillian told them of the cabin of Wm. Welch, some twenty-five miles down the river on the east side, and near Scott's old army trail, and furnished them with a needful supply of food for their trip to Welch's. They now felt assured of their way, and that, as they neared the army trail, they were approaching the desired line between Galena and Chicago; and so they scanned the country, and the banks and current of the stream with more deliberate care. The general appearance of the whole valley had, in all respects, fully equalled their most sanguine expectations, and the lovely landscape, where the city of Elgin now stands, attracted their admiring attention. It seemed to them a vast park rather than an uncultivated wilderness. The steep, though not precipitous, hills on the west bank of the river were covered with great white and black oak trees, and patches of smaller trees, and hazel and berry bushes grew in the more open places. The whole imposing hillside and narrow level bank to the river's verge was green with the grassy verdure of early spring. For a half mile or more in width on the east side, over the gentler hills and valley slopes, were scattered the low topped, wide-spreading burr oak trees, with no undergrowth and carpeted beneath like a grassy lawn. The view was open and unobstructed to the timber lands that are now the beautiful city park. It reminded them of the great old orchards in New York. The firm, gravelly bed of the stream guaranteed a solid foundation for a dam, and the rapid flow of the river indicated the fall of water necessary to insure the requisite power for mills. There was also a long, narrow slough paralleling the river for a half mile or more, near to its east bank, that with little expense could be converted into a raceway for distributing the power acquired by a dam.

Here they decided to locate their farms, and James T. Gifford's prospective mill and village. James T. stepped off and marked out a claim to the land which he subsequently platted, and Hezekiah located a larger claim for a farm adjoining and south of his brother's. They found Mr. Welch's cabin some five miles south, on the bank of Brewster Creek, and near the army trail, which was the path they took back to Chicago. In Chicago they met a Mr. Joseph Kimball who was looking for a mill-site, and they persuaded him to investigate the one at their location, which he soon after did, in company with his son Samuel J. Joseph Kimball died while on his way back to New York for his family, but Samuel J. made a claim, and another son, Mr. William C. Kimball, came also and joined Mr. Gifford in constructing the dam, and equally shares with Mr. Gifford in the honor of first developing the beautiful city of Elgin. Mr. Kimball's saw-mill and Mr. Gifford's grist-mill were put in operation in 1837.

In the meantime dams and mills had been or were being constructed at North Aurora, Mill Creek, Batavia, Geneva, St. Charles, Dundee and Carpentersville. These were based upon individual enterprise and capital, yet were so essential to the interest and convenience of every individual settler that all possible help was extended by each. The McCarty's did their first sawing in June, 1835, and their first grinding in February, 1837. Previous to that time the nearest mills were near Naperville and at Ottawa. It is said that one settler drove his ox-team to some point on the Wabash River for flour.

Probably the first saw-mill to be operated in the county was built by Captain C. B. Dodson and Mr. Archibold Clybourn, at Clybournville, on Mill Creek a little below the fine city of Batavia. Some twenty or thirty rods above the present highway and tramway bridge over Mill Creek, a portion of the foundation timbers of the old mill-flume may still be seen at the bottom of the east side of the creek, and a part of the carriage that guided and conveyed the logs to the saw, with the iron-dogs that held one end of them in place, are exhibited near the pavilion of the park. A few of the stately white-oak trees of the olden time still stand as beautiful souvenirs of the former splendid timber of the country, in the lovely "Mill Creek Park," that is now the easily accessible resort of thousands of pleasure-seekers during the summer picnic season. Dodson and Clybourn also opened a store for trade with the Indians, and it was often well filled with pelts taken in exchange for goods. The mill was a marvel and delight to the Indians. In amazement they would silently watch the log press forward against the swift up-and-down flying saw, but when the man in charge stopped and reversed the motion, and the log started back to be reset for another cut, their astonishment was beyond stoic bounds, and they would break forth with expressions and antics of the most extravagant amazement and delight. The old mill and store, and all they who then acted there their little part in that half-civilized, half-savage life, are but memories of man's puny efforts on the shoreless stream of time. A little longer the old oaks will stand, yet soon they too, with these men and their works, shall pass and be no more, but the beautiful brook shall murmur on forever.

About 1838 or 1839 George and Calvin Tyler began operating a saw-mill on the creek bearing their name, and John Hill commenced running a like mill on Popple Creek. It should be remembered that all these constructions were upon Government land to which the occupants had no title whatever, depending simply upon occupancy.

The first bridge to span the river was erected at Aurora in 1836, and in the same year one was built at St. Charles. Bridges were constructed at Schneider's mill, at Batavia, at Geneva and at Elgin in 1837, and at Dundee in 1838. The first Carpenterville bridge was built in 1851. These bridges also stood upon unsurveyed Government land and they were built by individual subscriptions of money, material or labor, and the copy of the papers relating to the Dundee bridge indicates substantially the method of operation in each case. They read as follows:

"We, the subscribers, promise to pay to Thomas Deweese, Charles Metcalf and George McClure the sums by us respectfully subscribed, for the purpose of building a frame bridge across Fox River at or near the present crossing of said river, a little above T. Deweese's mill. We also authorize the said Deweese, Metcalf and McClure, or a majority of them, to let a job of said bridge to the lowest bidder, and generally superintend the erection and completion of the same, and to see generally to the faithful expenditure of the money. Those who subscribe to pay in cash are not to be called on for payment until the frame of said bridge is erected, but those who may subscribe payable in labour or materials, will pay when called on by said committee. Payments are to be made to the person contracting on the order of the committee, surplus money, if any, to be expended in improving the road." Signed, "John Oatman, $100; Jesse Oatman, $25; Hardin Oatman, $25; Joseph Oatman, $25; John Oatman, $15; Charles Metcalf, $15; Thomas L. Shields, $25; Benjamin Bell, $10; Seth Green, $10; Ira Earl, $5; David Deweese, $5; George Hammer, $5; Isaac Hammer, $5; Jesse H. Newman, $10; Thomas Deweese, $100; Samuel Underhill, $25; James E. Parker, $15; Thomas H. Thompson, $10; Benjamin Moore, $10; Thomas Burbank, $10; Fred Ashbaugh, $10; Thomas Perry, $10; Salisbury Lang, $10, together with a number of other names so worn and obliterated as to be undecipherable.

The above paper bears no date, but a supplemental subscription, dated August 1, 1838, was circulated, in which money, material, work or grain was solicited; and this paper named as the building committee, Increase C. Bosworth, Jesse Oatman, Seth Greene, Thomas Deweese and Edward W. Austin. This committee let the contract for constructing the bridge to Edward W. Austin, George W. Hoit and Thomas H. Thompson, who agreed to erect a bridge with abutments "190 feet apart, with four piers between, ten feet high and made of hewed timber," etc., and complete the same by March 1, 1839, for the sum of $1,565. That they promptly fulfilled its terms is shown by this indorsement upon its back: "We, the party of the second part, do hereby accept the bridge which the party of the first part, in the within contract, here agreed to build." Dated, "Dundee, February 27, 1839," and signed by each member of the committee.

Some of these subscribers lived at least three or four miles from the proposed bridge, every one of them in a log structure we would today call a hut, and very few of them had means sufficient to pay the government price for the land they had claimed. The real magnitude of these various undertakings may be faintly apprehended, by reflecting that the entire population of the county in 1837, was less than that of one small ward of our present populous cities, and that their financial means were even more largely disproportionate.

CHAPTER VIII.

LAND CLAIMS, SURVEYS, LAND TITLES.

PIONEER IMMIGRATION OF 1838-40—METHODS OF LOCATING AND PROTECTING LAND CLAIMS—STRUGGLES BETWEEN THE CLAIM GRABBER AND THE CLAIM JUMPER—GOVERNMENT SURVEYS—THE THOMAS HUTCHINS SYSTEM—SOME IRREGULARITIES EXPLAINED—PREEMPTION TITLES AND MANNER OF PERFECTING THEM—GOVERNMENT LAND OFFICE AT CHICAGO—FIGHTING THE "LAND SHARKS."

The settlers who came into the county after 1838 or 1840 were not so wholly isolated or dependent upon themselves as were the earlier pioneers. By this time there were neighbors, although widely separated, who would assist in cases of sickness or other emergency. Roughly sawed oak, black-walnut and bass-wood lumber could be had for use in building; some small kilns for burning lime had been made; "flour-mills" were in operation within reasonable distance; and in the villages along the river, there were tin, blacksmith, and shoe shops. There were stores, also, at each of these places, where the common necessities of the household could be procured, and there were physicians who could be called in case of accident or illness.

The more desirable lands near the timber, and where water was available, had nearly all been claimed, yet very little of it was actually occupied. The claims were usually so large that neighbors were very widely separated. A thousand acres or so was not a very large claim, and it was not considered disreputably greedy to claim as much land as you could run a furrow around in one day. Some shrewd men located and endeavored to hold several smaller claims in choice localities. The only security they had for the assumption of ownership of any except the tract on which they resided, was their individual ability to drive away intruders and small degree of respect entertained by the community for their pretensions.

These conditions produced frequent disputes and controversies, and occasionally bitter conflicts and feuds. As emigrants came driving through the country seeking desirable places to locate, they camped upon the great open tracts, and looked with desire upon the fertile lands. The former claimant soon observed the camp and notified the newcomers of his "claim," and endeavored to sell a portion of it, or, if he failed to do so, ordered them to move on. Usually they went if the claim to previous ownership did not appear too unreasonable; but at other times they refused to recognize the claimant's right, and would neither buy nor move, but set about making a "claim" of their own.

Thus the issue was fully joined. If the first claimant was bold and resolute, and appeared able to enforce his demand and the neighbors seemed disposed to support his claim, the new-comer would probably leave and make a similar trial elsewhere; for he was not seeking a fight and knew that, by and by, he would be in the other fellow's situation and would not wish anybody to "jump" the claim he was hoping to locate. But if the reverse of this appeared, he often stood his ground and prepared for battle. Sometimes it came on then and there in a rough-and-tumble fight, to which the women and children were often not idle spectators, but in which they took an active part. The contestants were not out on a holiday picnic, but were in desperate earnestness, seeking homes and land; each had trailed in toil, privation and peril over the long journey from the older States, and was no trifler to be readily bluffed. Usually, however, after a war of words and show of determination, if neither yielded, the quarrel was referred to the neighbors, and if public sentiment was adverse to the newcomer, it was idle for him to continue the struggle, for they dealt summarily and roughly with the "claim-jumper." But if, on the other hand, he and his family seemed to be honest and thrifty folks who would be a desirable addition to the community, and if his contention that the first claim was unreasonable appeared just, they took no action and the struggle became wholly personal. This was a dangerous condition, and in the strife the most determined and persistent won. Sometimes they remained bitter enemies for years, while in other instances they became helpful friends after the struggle was over.

One actual occurrence of this kind is narrated to illustrate the conditions then prevailing over the entire county that brought on many such conflicts, sometimes with disastrous results. In 1835 or 1836 a Mr. D———, who was an unusually active, resolute man, settled in the county and commenced making "jack-knife claims" of separate tracts, covering about a quarter section each, of the choicest pieces of land in that vicinity. He would indicate his "claim" by driving a few stakes or by blazing trees, by plowing a furrow or building a little pole and brush shack, as suited his convenience. The settlers in the locality did not approve of his course, for they desired neighbors and that the land should be improved. By his resolute manner and belligerent attitude, however, he stood-off some people who wished to locate on these lands, and induced others to pay him something for his "claim." At length a Mr. W———, looking for a desirable location, arrived and camped, and finding such a place and seeing no indications of occupancy, he decided upon a favorable spot and hired a Mr. H——— to assist him in putting up a cabin for his family. It happened to be upon one of Mr. D———'s "claims," and learning of it, Mr. D——— came to the place where the two men were at work and warned them off. The usual discussion followed; W——— refused to admit the claim or to quit work, whereupon D——— gathered about him a few rough fellows who were accustomed to follow his lead, and, coming with a load of rails, commenced building a fence close around the cabin W——— and H——— were at work upon. This of course, led to a quarrel, and the principals being hot resolute men, quickly precipitated a fight. W——— was a large powerful man and defended himself with great courage and vigor, but the numbers were too heavily against him, and the battle seemed, as usual, to be going in D———'s favor. Infuriated by the unjust attack and unfair odds, W——— pulled his hunting-knife and rushed upon his assailants like a madman, stabbing and cutting some of them and driving them from the field. Fortunately none were seriously wounded. W——— held the land, but the fight created a bitter feud that lasted many years. This dangerous condition existed for six or eight years, until the lands were pre-empted or purchased. The struggles over pre-emption rights were almost as disturbing and bitter. The fact that so few homicides occurred, and that these differences were so frequently adjusted without violence, is ample evidence of the innate quality of justice and power of self-restraint possessed by the early settlers of the county.

About 1838 the Government began the surveys of the lands of the county, the north tier of townships being first surveyed. Theoretically, and by provision of law also, the township lines should be just six miles apart and run due north and south, and the range lines should also be just six miles apart and run due east and west, thus dividing the land, like a checkerboard, into perfect six-mile squares, each containing thirty-six sections of one mile square to the section. The township lines start at the "Base Line," which had been very carefully surveyed and distinctly located, crossing the State on an exactly east and west line. Its east end is on the Wabash, a little north of Mount Carmel, and its west end is on the Mississippi, a few miles south of Belleville. It crosses at right angles the third principal meredian line at the corners of the four counties of Clinton, Marion, Washingon and Jefferson. The range lines began at the "Third Principal Meridian," which also had been very carefully surveyed and distinctly located, and which runs due north from the confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers near Cairo to the Wisconsin State line. This line passes three or four miles west of Rockford. Therefore, the townships of Kane County number north from the Base Line; and the Ranges east from the Third Principal Meridian. The south line of townships in the county is No. 38 North, which should be 228 miles north of the Base Line, and the north line of townships is No .42 North. The ranges number east from the Third Principal Meridian, and the west line of townships is in Range 6 East, which should be thirty-six miles east of the meridian line, while the east row of townships is in Range 8 East. Knowledge of this enables a person to readily locate any properly described tract of land situate in the county. The township and range lines were first surveyed, cutting the county into fifteen townships.

Then another set of surveyors came, and, by east and west and north and south lines, one mile apart, divided each township into thirty-six sections, each one mile square, and containing 640 acres of land. These sections were numbered consecutively, beginning at the northeast corner of the township and numbering west to six, then dropping south bringing seven under six, and numbering east to twelve, and so continuing, back and forth, to number thirty-six in the southeast corner of the township. These surveyors also ran half-section lines, cutting the sections into quarters, and at each quarter-section corner they drove a stake properly marked to designate the number and the quarter of the section.

This beautiful system of land-surveys was devised by Thomas Hutchins, the first Government Surveyor, and was adopted by the United States in 1788. It is the best ever yet suggested; but, like all human theories, it is not perfect in practical application. The second party of surveyors rarely, if ever, found the township surveys strictly accurate, and consequently there would be minus or plus thirty-six even sections in a township. They carried these inaccuracies to the west and to the north sections of the township. But larger errors were made by the first surveyors, who, in running their township lines north from the Base Line, would vary from an exact northerly course and, to get back upon the true line, were compelled to make an offset, like that which projects the north tier of townships of this county, about a mile and a quarter east of the other townships.

The convergence of exactly due north lines, as they proceed toward the pole, also affects the range lines as they run from meridian to meridian. The surveyors running the range lines east from the established meridian would likewise find their lines deflecting, compelling them at intervals to run more carefully a true "correctional line" like that between Townships Forty-one and Forty-two, locally called a "base line," and which causes the fraction in each of the north sections of Township Forty-one.

As soon as these surveys were made, enabling the settlers to locate the sections and quarters, the claimants began adjusting their claim-lines and fences to the Government lines, as far as practicable; and, when that could not well be done, agreeing with each other to exchange and convey lands after they had respectively obtained title from the Government, in such manner that each should finally retain the boundaries of his original claim. It was a task thick with perplexing difficulties and long delays, and full of tedious arguments and disputes. That agreements were reached amicably in most cases and fairly executed, is highly creditable to the good sense and just spirit that prevailed. Settlers also began filing their preemption notices with the Register of the Land Office at Chicago, in compliance with the act of Congress of February 5, 1813, providing preemption rights to settlers in "Illinois Territory." This act authorized "every person, or legal representative of every person who has actually inhabited and cultivated a tract of land lying" within the Land District, to acquire a preference in the purchase of "no more than one quarter-section to any one individual," which shall be bounded "by the sectional and divisional line run under the direction of the Surveyor General." To obtain this preference the person was required to "make known his claim by delivering a notice, in writing, to the Register of the Land Office, wherein he shall particularly designate the quarter-section he claims." When it was made to "appear to the satisfaction of the Register and Receiver of public moneys of the Land Office," that the claimant was entitled to such preference, he could "enter" such quarter-section "with the Register of the Land Office on producing his receipt from the Receiver of public moneys for at least one-twentieth part of the purchase money." The act further provided that these terms must be complied with "at least two weeks before the time of the commencement of the public sales," or the claimant's rights should be "forfeited and the land by him claimed shall be offered at public sale with the other public lands." To facilitate the just division of the lands among the settlers whose claim lines could not be equitably adjusted to conform to the Government divisional lines, the interested parties of a neighborhood would sometimes select one person to represent them all at the Land Office and land sales, and this chosen representative would make the proper entries and payments, covering all the lands included within the claim lines of all the parties he represented, and obtain for each purchaser one of the duplicate certificates of entry that were issued by the Register of the Land Office, the other being sent by the Register to the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington to be recorded. Having thus secured the Government title, he would prepare and have the proper parties execute the deeds necessary to convey to each person the land bounded by his claim lines, and deliver the conveyance to the grantee upon compliance with the terms that had been agreed upon. To obtain sufficient cash to secure the title to his claim was the one all-absorbing desire and effort of the early settlers and their families.

The act of Congress enabling the Territory to become the State of Illinois, provided that the lands therein, which should be sold by the Government "after the first day of January, 1819, shall remain exempt from any tax laid by order of or under any authority of the State, whether for State, county or township, or any other purpose whatever, for the term of five years from and after the day of sale." This exemption was a great relief to the first purchasers of lands for homes in the new county.

The "Land District" lying "north of the dividing line between Township Sixteen and Seventeen north of the Base Line and east of the Third Principal Meridian, and extending north to the northern boundary of the State—which includes Kane County—was formed by act of Congress dated February 19, 1831; and it authorized the President to locate an office "where it will best accommodate purchasers and others," and to appoint a Register and Receiver. This Land Office was opened at Chicago soon after, and the minimum price of Government land was $1.25 per acre. Many settlers preempted the quarter-section on which their buildings and improvements were located, and "entered" and paid for it just before the opening of the public sale, and then endeavored, by every possible device, to prevent persons from entering or pre-empting the rest of their claim until such time as they could, in some way, procure the means to perfect title in themselves.

It was a time of bitter trial. They banded together and treated very roughly any person endeavoring to obtain possession of or title to these lands. As soon as the Government survey stakes were set, showing the section numbers and sub-divisions, speculators, whom the people called "land sharks," swarmed over the county, noting in books prepared for that purpose the desirable quarter-sections, and then endeavoring, by every scheme they could devise or concoct with others, to acquire possession and title. The settlers whipped them, rode them on a rail, burned their claim shanties, threatened to tie them to a log and float them down the river, and by every means drove them from the neighborhood. The Government land officers usually favored the bona fide settlers and, as a rule, they secured the legal ownership of the lands to which they were fairly entitled.

CHAPTER IX.

EARLY SETTLERS AND THEIR STRUGGLES.

PROBLEMS THE EARLY SETTLERS HAD TO FACE—BREAKING THE PRAIRIE SOD—PLANTING OF FIRST CROPS—HARVESTING THE WHEAT CROP—STORING GRAIN AND VEGETABLES—"WILD-CAT" CURRENCY—THE BARTER METHOD OF EXCHANGE—MODES OF LIVING—HARDSHIPS OF EARLY HOUSEWIVES—A FISHING FROLIC—AMUSEMENTS—CHICAGO AS A WHEAT MARKET—PRIMITIVE ROADS—MARK BEAUBIEN AND THE OLD "SAUGANASH."

Many of the early settlers had greatly improved their claims before the Government offered the land for sale. They had made additions to the first cabin or, perhaps, had built a more commodious and comfortable one; they had sunk a well, probably about twenty-five feet deep, to permanent and excellent water, and they had enclosed large well-cultivated fields with good staked-and-ridered rail fences. They had also provided better shelter for their stock and increased their herds, and many of them had planted fine orchards of fruit. The lives of both men and women were strenuous with toil and beset with many discomforts. Very few of them had a surplus dollar when they first came under the shelter of the original cabin, and had often struggled with the closest economy through the first winter. It was at once an urgent necessity to subdue the wild land, and fit the rich soil for cultivation, and it required a strong team to break the prairie sod. Neighbors could combine their forces and make a team of three or four yoke of oxen, and, with the strongest plow attainable, in turn do as much breaking for each other as they could. A few years later regular breaking teams, of four to seven yoke of cattle, with a plow made for this especial purpose, were organized, and did the larger part of this work for a whole neighborhood.

The breaking plow was, of course, heavy and strong in all its parts. By the attaching clevis it could be regulated to cut a sod from twenty to thirty or more inches wide, and two to four or five inches in thickness. Three inches was usually considered the best depth of furrow. It was equipped with a standing or a rolling coulter, the "land side" was high and thick and extended well back and the "point" projected far forward, perhaps one-third the length of the beam. The share was broad and long and laid wide and flat upon the bottom of the furrow. It was edged with tempered steel, by frequent hammering drawn thin and then filed keen and sharp. When in good order, one of these big plows would sever a grub or red root an inch or two in diameter with scarcely a perceptible shock. The boys would kill some worthless dog, tan his hide, and cut it into strips of suitable width, and then braid them into a firm lash ten or twelve feet in length. Fine young iron-woods grew along the clay banks of the creeks, and they would select one for a stock that was about an inch and a quarter to an inch and three-quarters thick at the butt and some ten feet long, straight and tapering evenly to the size of one's little finger and full of spring. These made a whip with which a stout boy, walking near the center of a seven-yoke team, could raise cruel welts and sometimes bloody stripes upon the backs of the leaders or of the beam oxen, and with which he often wickedly cut down many a luckless bird. They generally laid off the ground that was to be broken into "lands" either fourteen or twenty-one paces wide, and of course as long as the piece that was to be plowed, which was often a half mile or more. Sometimes they encircled the whole field. Around and around these "lands" or squares toiled the slow breaking-team, turning the broad furrows of grass and flower-covered sod. And toward the constantly diminishing area of grass and flower concealment converged the many reptiles and swarms of creeping, crawling, jumping creatures whose haunts were being destroyed, until the lessening space was fairly alive with the repulsive collection.

The driver was usually a sturdy barefoot boy, "in his teens," and back and forth in their midst he picked his wary footsteps, especially alert to avoid the dangerous "massasauga," that infested all the land. Right glad he was, when the narrowing "land" permitted him to walk in the smooth cool furrow on the opposite side from the team. And as these creatures fled from the narrow cover, he very often, almost severed the gliding snake, or scurrying gopher, with a stroke of that long terrible whip. The man at the plow had rather an easy time walking between the steady handles down the long furrows, for the plow would stand alone; but throwing it out at the ends, hammering and filing the share and dragging it to place and setting it up for the next furrow was heavy work. The chains were all unhooked at noon, and the cattle grazed upon the prairie, yoked, while the men went to dinner. At sunset they were driven to the yard, unyoked and turned out for the night.

In such a team there usually was at least one yoke which had the vicious habit of dashing away as they were being unyoked. The moment the driver began raising the bow of the near ox to remove the key, no matter how gently he proceeded, they were seized with a strange frenzy of excitement. When the key was removed and he quietly and soothingly began to withdraw the bow, as it left the yoke and before it could be drawn from his neck, off dashed the near ox, either forward or backward, while at the same instant away sprang the off ox with the yoke swinging at his neck and, like a crazy beast, he plunged around and around the yard, the swinging yoke banging against the corners of the fence, and the narrow bow turning across his neck and choking him until exhausted and panting for breath he stopped and stood with protruding tongue and quivering flanks, while the driver stole softly up to him and warily prepared to dodge the swinging yoke if the animal should again break away—as he was quite liable to do—gently unkeyed the bow and removed the yoke from his neck. It seemed almost impossible to cure this miserable habit if once acquired. At daylight in the morning the boy was up and away after the oxen, clad only in a "hickory" shirt and coarse cotton-cloth trousers. He was wet to the waist with the cold night dew, and the saw-edged wire grass cut his tough feet painfully, but the cattle must be in and yoked before breakfast at sunrise.

This first plowing killed the grass and flowers very thoroughly, but the mass of tough roots decayed slowly, and required fully a year or two for the sods to entirely disintegrate. "Back-setting" and "cross-plowing" this tough sod was very hard work for man and team.

The early breaking was often sowed or planted to some spring crop, and in the fall winter-wheat was frequently sowed upon the sod. Corn was usually planted upon sod with an axe. With a stroke of the axe, carried in one hand, a hole was made in the sod; with the other hand a few kernels of corn were dropped into the opening, and a shuffle and pressure of the foot upon the spot covered the seed. These movements were each so slight and so quickly done that the planter scarcely paused in his slow walk. No marking was done, and very little cultivation given, yet quite fair crops of corn were often produced. Wheat was the only cash crop, and was very nearly the farmer's sole dependence for money to meet his few cash obligations, and by and by when the land-sale occurred, to pay for his land upon which absolutely his all was staked. For a number of years after the first breaking, the land produced very fine crops of plump heavy winter-wheat of most excellent quality. It was frequently sowed broadcast in the field of ripening corn, by a man on horseback. The green fields of winter-wheat made rich pasturage for the wild deer.

There are few rural sights more lovely than a large field of clean wheat, its long full heads of ripening grain standing thick and even over the land, swaying gracefully in the summer breeze and giving such delightful promise of an abundant harvest very soon to be ready for the ingathering. And there is no keener financial disappointment than that of the debt-laden farmer, who watches with pride and intense satisfaction this near fruition of his toil, when he awakens after an unusually hot July night ,to find a misty, "muggy" morning without a ripple of air, the warm stifling vapor hanging like a steaming cloud over his field. He knows all too well that his only hope of escape from the deadly blight is the coming of a cool breeze that will shake the dampness and heat from the grain stalks before the summer sun pierces the cloud, and adds its torrid ray. But the calm continues, and about mid-forenoon the mist rises and the full sunlight and heat bursts above the field revealing the whole promising crop of wheat blighted and utterly ruined. Such was the frequent and disheartening experience of many Kane County farmers during the 'fifties.

The ordinary yield of wheat was from twenty to forty bushels to the acre. Oats, barley and rye produced bountifully. Properly cultivated corn made from fifty to eighty bushels to the acre and continuous replanting did not appear to exhaust the soil. Three or four hundred bushels of "Pinkeye" or "Neshannock" potatoes, were often dug from an acre's planting, and the pestiferous Colorado beetle or potato-bug was unknown. Early in June the farmer, or his boys or girls went along each third or fourth row of young corn, and in each third or fourth hill pushed a pumpkin seed into the soft earth. "When the frost was on the pumpkin, and the fodder in the shock," what innumerable loads of great red and yellow pumpkins covered the field. A full load of a wagon-box with sideboards, could be bought in the towns for one dollar. They furnished excellent and abundant food for all farm-stock during the fall. Large and luscious water-melons and musk-melons were raised in great abundance, usually on some piece of low rich ground hidden in the midst of the corn-field.

All farm work was done by hand and with the crudest implements. The plow of the pioneers was an iron-share and land-side, with a wooden or strap-iron mold-board. Later our farmers used a cast-iron mold-board, set so squarely against the furrow, in an effort to make it scour, that it was a terrible draft for the team, and drawn at a fast walk would frequently turn the sod a complete somerset. Gradually this gave place to the long, easy-sloping, polished steel moldboard of today. The harrow was a rough heavy triangle or square with bars across, set with uneven blacksmith forged iron teeth or wooden pegs, and was usually made on the farm. All sowing was done by hand broadcast. The shovels, hoes, rakes, etc., were entirely hand-made, very heavy, rough and dull, and wearisome to use. Grain was cut with the cradle, which was then a comparatively new harvesting implement, for many settlers brought sickles with them from the East. The older "turkey wing" and the new-fashioned "grapevine" or "muley," were each hotly championed as the best cradles. Of course, the grain was raked and bound by hand, the bands being made by forming with a dexterous turn of the hands, a knot with the heads of a good handful of straight grain stalks, and so dividing it as to give a double length to pass around the bundle, and being drawn tight, twist the butts together, and turn and tuck the ends in a bow under the band.

At harvest time every available person in the community was urgently needed to secure the crop. Literally many people worked night and day, and often on Sunday. Frequently the shocking was done by starlight, the stacking resumed after supper and continued far into the night. Breakfast was over at sunrise; luncheon was served at about ten o'clock; from twelve to one was given to dinner and rest; luncheon again about four or five o'clock; then work until sunset and finally supper, was the usual day's routine in the harvest time. Jugs of water were always accessible in the field, and many farmers furnished whisky also, which could be bought at any grocery store for eighteen or twenty cents a gallon. Swinging the cradle from sunrise to sunset with three or four strong men pressing steadily behind or leading away in front, with the utmost possible reach of the cradle into the standing grain and laying each cut evenly into the swath, and all with cadenced step and stroke that had to be met and equaled, was indeed laborous toil. To rake the grain cleanly and bind it firmly and evenly and keep up with a good cradler, required a mighty active handy man, and it was considered an annoying feat to crowd the cradler by raking the grain from the fingers of the cradle before it was aid in the swath. So there usually was strife in the gang, and an effort to crowd and "push" each other.

During the first few years of the occupancy of his claim, the early settler's most strenuous efforts were necessary to produce enough for the immediate pressing needs of his family; then, to improve somewhat the comforts and conveniences of living, and gradually to enlarge his facilities for raising larger crops with which to pay for his land at the Government sale. The first small crops were frequently threshed with a flail of his own manufacture, or trampled out by the colts upon a closely-cut grass sod, and the carefully swept up grain was winnowed in the breeze upon a sheet of cloth. The first threshing machine was a terror; they called it a "squirt machine." It was simply a wooden cylinder and concave, each set with iron teeth not too firmly fastened in place, and that sometines flew out with fearful velocity. The straw, chaff, dirt and grain were hurled from it in a mass. The heavier grains of wheat came flying from the cloud of stuff and rattled around like bird shot from a musket, and it was a frightfully wasteful affair. A separator and straw carrier, however, was soon devised and attached to it.

There were, of course, no granaries or barns, and the threshed grain was stored usually at the place of threshing in cribs made of rails so laid that the thin edge of each rail was toward the outer side, and the crib was flaring, larger at the top, thus excluding the rain. The bottom, also, was of flat rails laid closely together, and raised a foot or more above the ground, and the whole was lined with straw. The sides and ends were laid up cob-house fashion, and the straw lining arranged as the grain was poured into it. When the grain was all in, rails were laid across a few inches above it, and the whole nicely roofed with straw, topped off with wild hay. The grain was excellently preserved except from the ravages of mice. Corn was cribbed in the same way, the straw lining being omitted. Corn was husked in the field and, during the winter, the cattle foraged on the nubbins and stalks. As there were no cellars, the potatoes were kept over winter in fine shape, by smoothing a circle some six or eight feet in diameter on some dry place in the "patch" and piling the sound freshly-dug potatoes upon it in a pyramid, covering them with a layer of straw like a thatch, and shoveling upon this a thin banking of earth. At the foot of the mound a shallow ditch was dug encircling it for drainage, and the whole was covered with coarse wild hay to shed the rain. As winter approached more covering was put on to exclude the frost, but with care not to make it too warm, and in spring the potatoes were fresh and nice as when first dug.

Up to about 1860 there was no reliable cash market for any of the products of the farm except wheat. Coin alone was legal tender money, and there was not enough of it in circulation here to do one-tenth the necessary business. The few coins that were obtainable were nearly all of foreign mintage, the stamp entirely obliterated by wear, and the piece very thin and light—German, Spanish and English coins, old-fashioned shillings, sixpences and the like, with now and then a sovereign or half-sovereign. Dealers put varying value upon these pieces. United States coins rarely got into general circulation. "Red-dog," "wild-cat," "stump-tail" and "shin-plasters" were the euphonious names applied to the crude stuff that circulated as currency, and counterfeits abounded. The bills of different banks had as many different values, and these values fluctuated from day to day. At every payment of money, the "Bank-note Reporter," issued weekly or oftener, was consulted and the percentage value of each bill computed. It would be impossible to exaggerate the bewildering and worthless variety of bills and tokens that were in circulation, not alone in Kane County, but throughout the western country.

These conditions necessarily caused barter to be the usual method of exchange. Every store in the early days kept a general assortment of articles needed by the settler, and would take from him, in trade, almost any product of his farm—the difference between the merchant's and the farmer's position being that the farmer fixed the price of both articles, and "charged" the balance that usually occurred up to the latter. Each six or twelve months the merchant footed up these balances and took the farmer's note, drawing ten per cent. interest, for the sum due. He would accept dressed pork at about eight to ten shillings per hundred, and potatoes at twelve to twenty cents per bushel. He took chickens at sixpence to a shilling each, eggs at four to eight cents a dozen, and butter at seven to twelve and a half cents a pound. He charged from a shilling to eighteen pence per yard for calico; for sugar, ten to fifteen cents a pound, and about "two bits" a pound for loaf-sugar. Other goods bore proportionate prices. As to the quality of the brown sugar and the butter, "the less said the better." Their inferiority was equal, but the prices widely divergent. Every artisan and professional man took "store pay" for part of his bill, and wood, a cow, a pig or "farm truck" for a good portion of the balance. The want of market is well illustrated by the argument used to deter farmers from giving the right-of-way or assisting in the construction of the "Galena & Chicago Union Railroad" (now the Chicago & North-Western Railway), which was, that it would supersede the "Frink & Walker" stage lines, and so destroy the demand for hay, oats and corn to feed the stage-horses, and there was no other cash market for these products.

How the settler's wife managed to endure the hardships and inconveniences of those times, and make her family at all comfortable, is a marvel. The log house was about fourteen by sixteen feet in size, and had a low loft for beds, reached by a ladder or open steep narrow stairway in one corner. After the sawmills were started, a "lean-to" for a sort of summer kitchen, and perhaps another for a bed room, was added. The water was "hard" and she had to "soften" it for washing with ashes; she made her own soap; at first she "dipped," and later, she "molded" her own candles. There were no canning processes then, and she dried such fruit as she could get. She often milked the cows (out of doors) and always cared for the milk and cream and butter, and frequently churned. Some of the more thrifty people had a little hole under the middle of the floor, reached by a trap door, called a cellar, and a few built out-door cellars; but the majority of the log houses had neither. Ice in summer was unknown, and in winter everything froze solid. There was no wire screen made, and even mosquito netting was a most recent convenience. Flies, mosquitoes, gnats, millers and varieties of flying bugs were far more abundant than now. Matches were almost unknown; the flint and steel, with tinder or punk, was often used, and some fortunate people had a "sun-glass." Fire was carefully buried in ashes and kept over night, and if it unluckily "went out," the good wife had to send or go to a neighbor's, probably a mile away, and borrow some live coals. The house was so small and the presence of so many men was required to do all the farm work by hand, that she had no place or time for privacy or quiet rest; and yet, so admirably adapted to necessary surroundings is our human nature, that both men and women toiled contentedly and happily, amid these adverse conditions, in making and improving their pioneer homes.

The little clock or looking-glass shelf in the cabin was usually ornamented with a display of Indian stone-hatchets, and flint, spear and arrow-heads, and by strings of blown-out wild bird eggshells, ranging from the large sand-hill crane and wild-goose egg, to the tiny ones of the wren and humming bird. There were also a number of massasauga rattles, of varying sizes and number of buttons. Perhaps a wasp's nest, of unusual size or peculiar shape, decorated a corner of the single room.

All the slaughtering and the dressing and preserving of the pork and beef was done on the farm, and the farmer's wife "tried out" the lard and tallow. Whenever an animal was butchered a portion of the meat was distributed among the neighbors, and if it was a calf, the "rennet" was carefully preserved for some neighbor who occasionally made a cheese. The scarcity of fruit was a great discomfort for a number of years until the transplanted trees and cultivated fruit plants began to produce. The wild fruits were abundant during the short season, but they quickly passed, and for months there was no fruit to be had save the scant supply of very choice "preserves" that good house-wives carefully prepared. Dried pumpkin was the common substance for table fruit, during many months of the year. "No, thank'ee; not any pickle," said the hired man, "but please pass up the pumpkin sass." Bread (and pancakes for the winter breakfast), salt pork and potatoes, and milk gravy were the regular and monotonous daily diet. Game and fish were abundant, but the men were too busy to capture or prepare them for food. In winter the children caught great numbers of prairie chickens and quails in traps set with a "figure-four."

Often when the fish were "running," the men of a few neighboring families would procure a seine and have a day's profitable sport at the river, and sometimes the women accompanied them for a picnic. They selected a place with gradually sloping banks and smooth even bottom, from waist to arm-pit deep, and the exciting sport began. A sufficient number of men to draw it taut and haul it steadily, handled the seine by the rods at its ends, and they swept it out into, and in a wide curve through, a portion of the stream, then gradually bringing the ends to the shore and carefully drawing it out to the center, where the fishes gathered, and so landing the shining, flopping catch. The small ones and nondescripts were tossed back into the water. A successful sweep of the net brought to land at least a bushel or two of fine pickerel or red horse, whichever was running. Pickerel were preferred. Sometimes they dressed and salted the larger portion of the catch as they were taken. A reliable man tells of helping to catch, near St. Charles in 1837 or 1838, with a four-rod seine, and dress and salt ten barrels of fine pickerel in one day. To insure a fair and equal division of the fish, the men would divide them into as many equally desirable piles as there were parties interested. Then a bystander was blindfolded, turned around a few times and placed with his back to the fish, and a person pointing to one of the piles, asked him "who shall have these?"—to which he replies by naming one of the party. Thus by questions and replies each pile was apportioned. These fishing excursions, turkey-shoots and wolf-surrounds were the larger sports of the men; tea parties and quiltings interested the women; and dancing parties, singing schools, spelling matches, corn-huskings, and pumpkin-parings were the entertainments of the young people. Oxen did the greater part of the team work, and often drew merry parties of young folks to these frolics. Aside from the "prairie schooners" of the immigrants, it is doubtful if there was a half score of covered vehicles in Kane County as late as 1840.

Hired men working by the year received about eight or nine dollars per month and their board and washing; the hired girl had from six to ten shillings per week. A fairly good cow was worth seven to ten dollars, an ordinary yoke of oxen from thirty-five to sixty dollars, and a horse was of about the value of a yoke of cattle. There were very few cash sales at any price, as barter was the almost universal rule, and the people then in the county were financially very poor indeed, in comparison with its present inhabitants.

After about 1840 Chicago furnished a reliable cash market for the surplus wheat product of the farm, and it was taken there by teams until the advent of the railroad. Forty bushels was a fair load for a team of horses, and the trip from the Fox River required about three days. Ox-teams, of course, were slower, yet they were very frequently used. There were many freighters who, with four and six-horse teams and huge covered wagons, made regular trips from the country west as far as Galena, and Frink & Walker were running daily lines of four-horse stages between Galena and Chicago. In the fall after the threshing was nearly completed, and while the roads were fine, all the highways leading from the west through Kane County to Chicago were filled with loaded teams, and half the few houses along the way were "taverns." Each of them, and the public-houses at Chicago also, were full to overflowing every night. Each bed would have two occupants, and then the late comers slept on the hay at the stable, or on the bar-room floor. It was a joke of the times, that Mark Beaubien of the old "Sauganash" could cover sixteen men with one blanket, by successively drawing it carefully from those asleep over the ones who had just lain down. Five shillings for supper, lodging and breakfast for one man and hay for the horses, was the regular price at country taverns. Whisky, "which then sold for about eighteen cents a gallon at every grocery store," was free. Kane County farmers usually took with them noon lunches for the men, and oats or corn for the horses. Wheat sold at Chicago for from thirty to fifty cents per bushel and dressed pork for about ten shillings per hundred. The teams usually found return loads of goods for the merchants, or of lumber, and very frequently they brought out the families and household effects of newcomers, who had arrived by way of the lakes.

No work whatever had been done upon the roads, and at about this date (1837-1840) the first bridges over the streams were being built. There was very little fencing to interfere and teamsters picked their own way through and around the sloughs in wet weather. It was by no means unfrequent for them to drive into the wet slough as far as the struggling team could move the load, then carry the sacks across on their backs, hitch the team to the rear end of the wagon and draw it back in the deep cuts its wheels had made in the wet sod to firmer ground. They then put the team in place again at the pole, drove over where the sod was uncut and reloaded the sacks of grain. In the late fall of 1848 or 1849, two men and a boy of fifteen spent a whole afternoon in taking two loads of Kane County wheat from the east end of Meacham's grove to Cottage Hill (now Elmhurst), a distance of two or three miles across the prairie to the terminus of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad. They would "back" half a load across a slough, and by doubling the team draw the other half load over. How many times they waded sloughs carrying a two-bushel bag of wheat cannot be told; the labor of it the reader may imagine. As the track was laid westward, each new station—which was merely a side-track and a little passenger platform, with carpenters at work constructing a cheap depot building—became a busy crowded point of shipment, toward which hundreds of teams turned from the paralleling highways on either side, to transfer their loads to the waiting cars; and, after a rain, such struggles through the soft sod between the highways and the wonderful new railroad, were constantly occurring along the whole line and on both sides of it.

CHAPTER X.

DAIRYING, STOCK-GROWING AND MANUFACTURES.

A REVOLUTION IN INDUSTRIES—DECLINE IN AGRICULTURE AND RISE OF THE DAIRYING INDUSTRY—INTRODUCTION AND GROWTH IN CHICAGO—IMPROVED BREEDS OF DAIRY STOCK—ORIGIN OF ELGIN DAIRY BOARD OF TRADE—STATISTICS OF BUTTER AND CHEESE TRADE—OTHER STOCK-GROWING INTERESTS—ELGIN WATCH COMPANY AND OTHER MANUFACTURING ENTERPRISES—AGGREGATE CAPITAL AND NUMBER OF EMPLOYES—FOX RIVER VALLEY CITIES—BANKING BUSINESS AND PROPERTY VALUATIONS.

The settlers in the new county were, of necessity, too deeply absorbed in producing crops capable of giving quick returns with which to meet their immediate and pressing needs, and to pay for and improve their lands, to give much attention to agricultural methods, perhaps more profitable but requiring longer time in bringing financial returns. During the first fifteen or twenty years of the county's settlement, the new land gave a bounteous and reliable yield of excellent wheat; and it was practically the only source of cash revenue for all the people, for, as yet, there was no manufacturing industry in the county except of individual workmen in the common trades to meet strictly local needs. Every financial transaction depended upon the yield and price of wheat.

Early in the '50s, however, the yield began to decline and the entire failure of the crop to become more frequent, thus forcing the people into more varied productions and industries. Chicago's enormous handlings of wheat were creating a great lake commerce and attracting the attention of capitalists. Its future as a great railway and commercial center was becoming clearly apparent, and its hotels were crowded with brainy men intent on large business plans and projects. The young urban giant of the century was fairly entering upon its marvelous career. Its demand for food supplies that must of necessity be fresh and wholesome each day, was rapidly outgrowing the ability of local producers to furnish promptly and reliably. The hotels, especially, found it difficult to obtain pure sweet milk, with punctuality and certainty, each day. The effort to supply this daily necessity opened a new industrial era in the Fox River valley and throughout the great Northwest. On February 12, 1852, Mr. Phineas H. Smith shipped from Elgin, over the old Galena & Chicago Union Railroad to the late J. Irving Pierce, then the genial landlord of the "Adams House" in Chicago, the first can of milk ever sold out from the county of Kane. Little did he, or any other person, then realize the vast industrial revolution being inaugurated. Years later, as Elgin was rapidly becoming the center of an immense trade in dairy goods and supplies, when its products were sought and prices quoted in both domestic and foreign markets, that battered old can was traced and found; and it is now in the possession of Mrs. A. M. Stewart, the daughter of Mr. Smith. It has been exhibited at Dairymen's Associations in this and neighboring States, and was given an honorable place at the World's Columbian Exposition, as a significant relic of the opening of a most wholesome, profitable and widely-distributed industry. Many persons now claim the cow to be, of all the animal creation, man's best and most constant friend from his cradle to his bier. In Kane County she is certainly the gentle queen of safe and profitable investments.

Other Chicago hotels soon made contracts with Elgin farmers for their daily supply of milk, and the peddlers of the city quickly sought the same source of supply. The movement seemed extremely popular and, in a short time, nearly every milkman's wagon in Chicago was labeled, "Elgin Dairy." They received their cans of milk at the cars each day on the incoming of the morning trains; and the scores of these wagons, crowding toward the milk-cars almost before the train stopped—each driver struggling to secure his cans and hurry away—attracted the attention of hundreds of travelers each day, and spread the fame of Elgin as a dairy center far and wide. This continued many years after Elgin ceased to ship a can of milk, and to quite an extent is still practiced. Naturally, conditions upon the farms changed to meet this new demand, and dairying became the dominant interest of the county, although in Big Rock, and in portions of the adjoining townships, many fine steers and hogs are still raised and fattened for the Chicago market. Successful dairying requires the very best strains of milk-producing stock; yet, while breeding-cows yield the largest flow of excellent milk, it is also highly desirable to produce animals best fitted for the shambles when their brief career as milkers terminates. As a consequence the study and experiments, tending toward these results, have wrought wonderful improvements in the domestic animals of the county. The "scrub" stock of the pioneers have vanished and there are now as fine breeding herds of Durham, Hereford, Holstein, Guernsey and Polled Angus cattle in Kane county as can be found anywhere else in the republic. Few of the dairymen, however, seem to favor full-bred cows, but rather to prefer a cross showing a generous strain of their favorite blood. In riding through the county, it is not difficult to note the preference of the owners of the fine herds of milk-cows grazing in the rich pastures by the wayside. Since about 1874, when Dr. Joseph Tefft introduced his famous Friesian-Holstein cow, "Zwaan," which startled our incipient dairymen by a daily yield of eight gallons of milk, there has been a marked increase in both the quantity and quality of the milk produced. The change in the products of the farm is now complete. To-day no wheat is raised in Kane county, nor any other cereal for market, while hundreds of car-loads of various stock foods are annually brought into the county, and the Fox River valley is known as one of the finest dairy regions of the world. The great factories of "Borden's Condensed Milk Company," located at Elgin, Carpentersville, and St. Charles, alone require an average of many tons of milk daily, in the preparation of their various brands of excellent lacteal foods. This company has never failed to make monthly cash payment in full to its patrons; and, since its organization in 1863, it has disbursed many millions of dollars to the farmers of Kane County.

Early in the '60s many of our dairymen engaged in the manufacture of cheese and, for ten or fifteen years, produced much more cheese than butter for the general trade. The factorymen soon discovered, however, that a large portion of their best product was repacked at Chicago—their sole market—and put into packages labeled "Orange County Butter" and "New York Full Cream Cheese," and, under these false brands, was quoted in the Chicago papers and sold on its markets at higher prices than was demanded for Western butter and cheese. They long and earnestly protested to both publishers and dealers against the unjust deception, but in vain, and the persistence of these misrepresentations brought about the organization of the Elgin Dairy Board of Trade in 1872. Chicago dealers ridiculed and ignored the project, and the Southern and Eastern markets were appealed to. Their representatives, especially from St. Louis and New Orleans, at once appeared at its meetings and readily purchased its offerings, thus assuring its success. The extraordinarily rapid expansion of its operations, as producers and purveyors of these indispensable food supplies, here met on fair and honest terms, has been a marvel of surprise to its most sanguine friends. Its vast volume of steadily increasing trade is shown in the subjoined table compiled by its Secretary and published in the Elgin Dairy Report:

STATISTICS OF THE ELGIN DAIRY BOARD OF TRADE—Total production for thirty-one years (1872 to 1902, inclusive): Butter, 587,989,045 pounds; cheese, 193,631,354 pounds. Total number pounds of both, 781,620,399; value, $147,361,251.

The following figures indicate the average price of butter per pound (in cents) on the Elgin Board of Trade for the last fourteen years, viz.: 1889, 22 3-4; 1890, 22 3-8; 1891, 25; 1892, 25 1-4; 1893, 25 7-8; 1894, 22; 1895, 20 6-10; 1896, 17 8-10; 1897, 18 4-10; 1898, 18 8-10; 1899, 20 6-10; 1900, 21 8-10; 1901, 21 1-8; 1902, 24 1-8.

The sales on the Board, during last six years, have aggregated as follows:

| | | Pounds. | Value. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1897, | Butter | 44,224,022 | $ 9,137,219 |
| | Cheese | 9,520,668 | 618,834 |
| | Total | | $ 9,756,053 |
| 1898, | Butter | 42,579,139 | $ 8,004,878 |
| | Cheese | 6,841,715 | 496,024 |
| | Total | | $ 8,500,902 |
| 1899, | Butter | 43,610,507 | $ 9,027,374 |
| | Cheese | 6,104,725 | 518,901 |
| | Total | | $ 9,546,275 |
| 1900, | Butter | 44,061,368 | $ 9,638,424 |

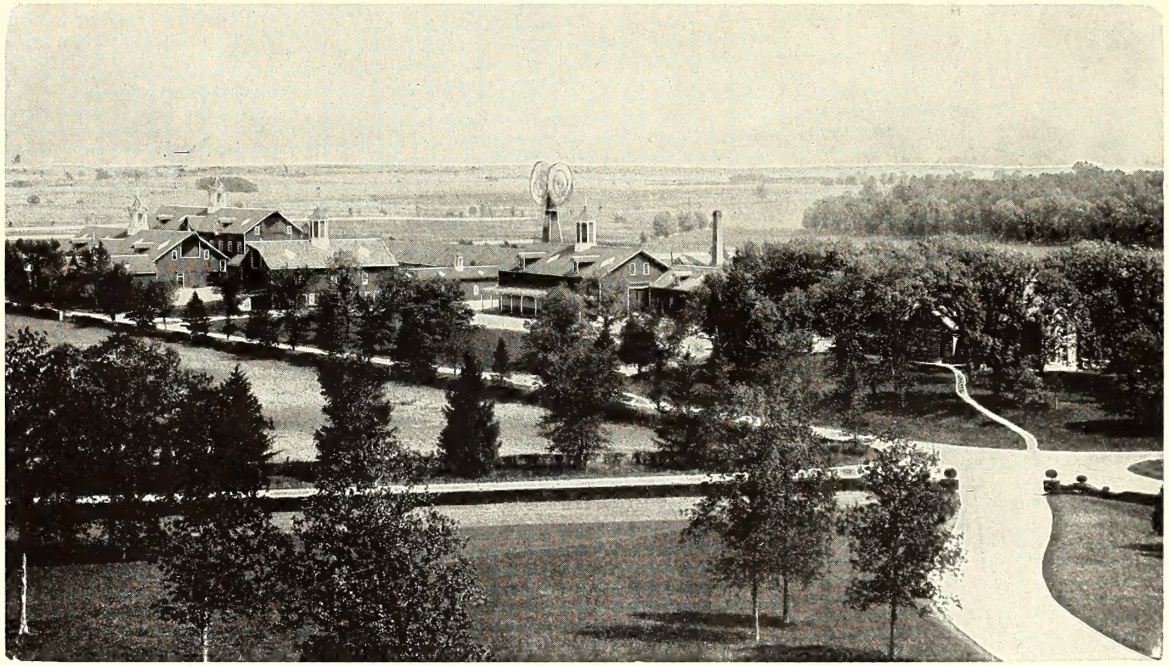
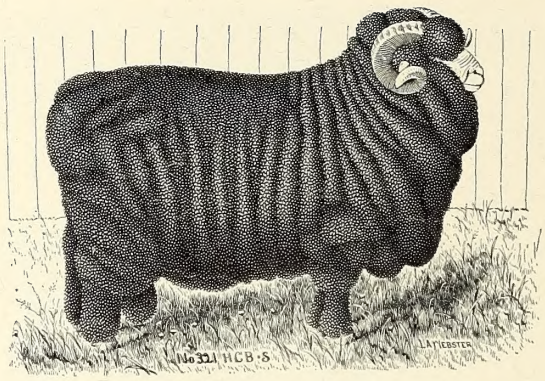
| | Total | | $ 9,946,421 |



| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1901, Butter | 44,763,468 | $10,464,277 |
| Cheese | 6,840,413 | 547,233 |
| Total | | $11,011,510 |
| 1902, Butter | 45,121,360 | $10,887,784 |
| Cheese | 5,847,408 | 467,792 |
| Total | | $11,355,576 |
| Grand Total | | $60,116,837 |

It will be observed that far more butter than cheese is now sold upon the Board. Of course, Kane County actually produces but a minor portion of these enormous handlings, yet here the butter trade of the world centers; here the the vast product of the best butter ever made for the general market finds its outlet to the consumer, and the quotations of this Board of Trade establish the price in the markets of the world. Some of the finest and largest creameries ever operated in any land are located in Kane County, and are steadily turning out 250 to 300 sixty-pound tubs of pure creamery butter per week; and the company controlling them operates scores of other model factories in this and adjoining States, having a combined output of delicious butter that sells for more than a million dollars annually. The factories are introducing a unique method of dealing with the farm dairymen that may prove satisfactory and helpful. It is to have the cream extracted from the freshly drawn milk at the dairy by a hand separator, and only the thoroughly cooled cream brought to the factory; the sweet skimmed milk to be fed to the young stock on the farm. As each invoice of cream is received at the factory, a very carefully weighed quantity is taken to the "testing room" and, by means of a "tester," its exact quantity of "butter fat" is ascertained. From these data the amount of butter it will produce is determined, and the farmer is paid according to the price of butter.



Improvement in the size, power, action, endurance and style of the horse has fully kept pace with that noted in cattle. The first marked improvement in this direction was the introduction by the Fletcher Horse Company of the splendid Percheron Norman stallion "Success" about 1870, and his immense success laid the foundation of the great "Oak Lawn" stables which, today, stand at the head of all like establishments in the land. Mr. Mark W. Dunham (deceased) was the active member of this company, and in 1874 he purchased the interest of his copartners. His original farm of about 200 acres has been enlarged to include 1,700 acres of as fine grazing, hay and grain land as can be found, and the splendid property is now owned by his only son and two daughters. "Oak Lawn" has imported and bred about 5,000 Percheron and French coach-horses of the finest type and purest lineage, as is evidenced by the awards it has received, amounting to 182 first prizes, and 42 medals of the highest order, from the last five Universal Expositions held in the United States, Great Britain and France.

Fine studs of imported Clydes from Scotland, and Cleveland Bays from England, were soon after established within the county, and have been steadily and profitably maintained. During the '40s one or more choice "Black Hawk" or "Gifford" Morgans were brought into the county, and a little later the "Updykes" appeared. At about the close of the great war, the Hambletonians were introduced, and in later years the Oak Lawn, and some other stables, have had full stalls of the very best imported French and English coach-horses. Gentlemen of ample means and lovers of this noblest animal creation have kept, in their city stables and on their stock farms, sires of the choicest strains of racing blood known to the turf; and the result of breeding and cross-breeding these very best stocks is shown in the splendid horses daily to be seen on the streets of every city, and on every highway of the county. It is not extravagant to assert that Kane has as high an average excellence of horses as any county of our great State.

From about 1845 to 1885 considerable attention was given to sheep-raising, and the first extensive manufacturing establishments in the county were the "Aurora Woolen Mills" of James G. Stolp, which commenced carding and spinning in 1837, and weaving in 1849, employing from seventy-five to one hundred and twenty-five hands in the manufacture principally of heavy woolen cloths until about 1887; and the S. Newton Dexter mills at Elgin, which began operations in 1847, and some twenty years later, under the management of Mr. J. P. Goodale, manufactured from 300 to 500 yards of excellent woolen cloths daily. But the production of wool ceased to be profitable and these industries have languished and died. Kane County now has practically no sheep upon her meadows and downs, except the fine breeding flock of pure Spanish Merinos kept by E. Peck & Sons, of Geneva, who for full fifty years have been very widely known as among the most reliable and intelligent flock masters in the State.

Pens of excellent Berkshire, Poland-China, Chester Whites and other breeds of hogs used to be exhibited at the fairs of our local agricultural societies, and during that period of dairy development, when a good deal of butter was made upon the farms and much milk worked up into cheese at the neighboring factories, the hog was a profitable farm product; but that condition is also past, and now our dairymen buy their pork, beef, mutton and butter almost as universally as does the mechanic. The old-time methods of farming and farm-living in Kane County are gone forever, being superseded by new, and in many respects, better modes.

An epoch in the transition from pioneer to settled conditions is marked by the laws of 1864, forbidding domestic stock to run at large. It will be observed that stock is, of necessity, permitted to graze at will upon the unenclosed pasturage of a new country; and not until the land is well occupied and cultivated, will public sentiment require the owner to confine his grazing animals upon his own premises. As the capabilities of the country were developed, hamlets and villages sprung up, with postoffice, school-house, church, store, tavern, blacksmith, shoe-shop, and other similar conveniences—first along the stage routes and later upon the railway lines throughout the county; but the utility and beauty of the river traversing the whole length of the county inevitably fixed the location of the larger villages and cities upon its banks, and their growth has ever fully equaled the prosperity of the country. It should be remembered that, previous to the great war, nothing was produced upon the farm for a market beyond Chicago, and the very limited manufacturing interests of the towns had little wider scope. The supply of a small portion of strictly local needs of the people absorbed the energies and covered the aspirations of the people of both country and town.

Marvelous changes have been evolved in only four decades. Today, it may fairly be questioned if there is another community, of similar area and population, upon earth, furnishing from its farms and factories products distributed so universally and widely over and around the whole world. For, wherever civilized man resides, the "Elgin National Watch" marks the standard time; and wherever a ship traverses the sea, "Borden's Condensed Milk" is an indispensable part of its supplies for comfort and health. And so, also, for man's mental and moral culture the "David C. Cook Publishing Company," with offices at Elgin, Chicago and New York, is daily mailing its wholesome literature to every land and clime under the sun. Scores and hundreds of other manufacturing plants within the county are constantly shipping their various products to all portions of our own land, and to many foreign countries; the weekly prices of our Dairy Board of Trade are quoted, and its goods are sold in the commercial centers of America and Europe; and the superbly-bred horses, cattle and sheep of Kane County are taking premiums at the great exhibits, and are shipped at the very highest prices to every State in the Union.

It is highly suggestive to note what one progressive movement, establishing a large industrial plant, will accomplish for the development of a community, and striking illustrations of this are shown by comparing the growth of Aurora, Elgin and St. Charles—the three largest cities in the county. The census of 1850 gave Aurora Township a population of 1,895, St. Charles 2,132 and Elgin 2,359. In 1855 Aurora succeeded, by an enlightened liberal policy that was bitterly opposed by some of her good citizens, in securing the great Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Car Shops, and the census of 1860 shows her population to have increased to 6,011—a gain of over two hundred per cent. St. Charles had fallen in numbers to 1,882, and Elgin had reached 3,341. Again, in 1865, the first buildings of the Elgin National Watch Company were erected, and the next census shows Elgin's population to have increased to 6,739, and St. Charles had reached but 2,281. St. Charles has now entered upon a progressive manufacturing career, and it may safely be predicted that the next census will show a very gratifying growth of that beautiful city. From Carpentersville, near the north line of the county, to Montgomery at its south line, ten unusually fine cities and villages adorn the banks of the lovely river, with an aggregate population of 60,000 or more enterprising, cultivated people. Kane is the only county in the State having two cities, each containing more than 20,000 inhabitants; and the beautiful Fox is the only river having two such cities upon its banks, except the great Mississippi, which has three in this State. The historic Illinois has but one—Peoria—and the splendid Rock, with its broad and fertile valley, has only the noble city of Rockford. In these cities and villages, there are now in active operation more than one hundred and five industrial organizations, employing from five persons to three thousand each—practically formed and built up within the last forty years. Their combined investment of capital exceeds $15,788,500, and the value of their annual product is more than $19,319,000. The old river still furnishes 3,100 horse power; steam produces 9,317 horse power, and electricity supplies the power of 687 horses. These establishments furnish employment for 9,590 men, 2,770 women, 754 boys and 520 girls. Many of the men employed are mechanics and inventors of the highest type and skill, and the combined wages of all probably exceeds $30,000 daily. We confidently claim these facts justify the belief that Kane is second in the State only to Cook County in the extent, variety, and usefulness of its manufacturing interests.

"Cram's Universal Atlas" of 1895 states that "Aurora opened the first free public schools in the State, and was the first city in the world to light its streets with electricity, in 1881." The same high authority declares Chicago to be "the most remarkable city in its growth, influence and future outlook, that the world has ever produced," that "it is the chief grain market, the largest lumber market, and the greatest pork-packing and live-stock market in the world; that she "has the proud distinction of being the greatest railroad center of the world," and that her extensive and numerous parks, beautiful boulevards, handsome streets, and magnificent mercantile buildings are not equalled by any city of the country." So many of Chicago's active and leading men in all the years have been residents of Kane County, and so many of our men have ever been in the front management of Chicago enterprises, that we may fairly claim a portion of these well-merited distinctions.

The banking facilities of the county seem fully adequate to meet all business and financial needs. There are five National Banks at Aurora, whose combined resources, on September 9, 1903, were officially stated to be $4,319,292.31; one Trust and Savings Bank, showing a business of $187,232.75, and two Building and Improvement Associations, with loans amounting to $512,490. Batavia's National Bank states its resources to be $545,920.24; the Geneva State Bank reports $142,529.32; that at Maple Park, $90,845.43, and the one at Elburn about $80,000. The National Bank at St. Charles reports its resources to be $42,000, and those of the private bank are estimated at about $300,000. The three National Banks at Elgin certify their resources to be $2,296,719.36; the two savings banks report $2,016,776.29, and the Loan and Homestead Association has $335,000 loaned out. The Dundee National Bank statement of resources is $240,000, its State Bank $44,842.13, and the private bank at Hampshire $36,000. These figures make a grand total of eleven National Banks, three State Banks, three private banks, three Savings Banks, and three Loan and Building Associations, whose aggregate resources amount to $11,813,047.83.

The property valuations, for the basis of taxation in the county for the year 1903, are shown by the Assessor's books as follows: Personal property, $19,903,945; farm lands, $21,575,260; town and city lots, $33,089,280; railroad lands and lots "other than railroad track," $179,005; personal "other than rolling stock," $739,865; telegraph and telephone property, $331,786—making a total of $75,819,341. These assessor's valuations, as all know, entirely fail to reach much of the actual property held, and fall far below the real value of much that is covered. Yet these very conservative figures show an average of over $1,500 for each man, woman and child in the county.

CHURCHES, SCHOOLS AND LIBRARIES.

The real pioneer clergymen of Kane County were Rev. Nathaniel C. Clark, of the Congregational Church; Rev. John Clark, of the Methodist; and Rev. Joshua E. Ambrose, of the Baptist denomination. They commenced their labors in this vicinity in 1833 or '34 and, with untiring zeal, consecrated their lives to the cause of their Divine Master. Their names are invariably associated with the schools, as well as with the churches, of those primitive days. On foot and on horseback, in summer's beauty and in winter's severity, these devoted men visited the lonely settlers and the scattered communities along the river valley, with words of encouragement and cheer; ministering to the sick, comforting the disheartened, praising well-doing, discountenancing evil and suggesting better ways of living. Where night or storm came upon them, there they abode as welcome, but helpful, guests. If not offensive, they reverently read and expounded selections of the Sacred Word, and conducted family worship. In humble homes, in shady groves and in the rude school-rooms, they raised the voice of prayer, and praise, and admonition. They married the lovers; they baptized the converted; they christened the children; and they spoke words of consolation and warning above the still forms of the dead. They persuaded into paths of righteousness and admonished against wicked ways; and, with the earnestness of deep conviction, they hurled, in the manner of their time, the vengeance of God's eternal decrees of wrath and torment, against the stubbornly unrepentant. They were not polished in speech or deportment, and their only eloquence was the passionate utterance of deeply earnest souls. Yet they moved the people mightily, and their wholesome influence in guiding public sentiment and action aright, in that formative period, can hardly be overestimated.

The Rev. John Clark was transferred to a Texas conference about 1841, where he continued his ministerial work for a few years amid the pioneers of that young republic, and was then returned to this conference. He resumed his labors here with unabated vigor and enthusiasm, but during the cholera epidemic of 1853-4, was stricken with that dreaded ailment and died in Chicago. The fine educational institution, so beautifully located at Aurora, that for so many years has exercised a wide and beneficent influence beyond calculation, and which seems to stand today upon the threshold of still broader achievement for virtue and knowledge, was first suggested by him. And because of his strenuous effort in behalf of this ideal, which was not completed in material form until four years after his death, its original builders dedicated it in his honor under the title of "Clark Seminary," and it will long stand a superb and appropriate memorial of his consecrated life.

Rev. Nathaniel C. Clark's enduring monument is of a different, yet, perhaps, of a less permanent or significant and appropriate character. It is written, again and again, upon the records of the many churches of his denomination which he organized, and whose houses of worship he assisted in erecting and dedicating to their holy use in all parts of the county. It stands in the assured place he holds as the Nestor of Congregationalism in the Fox River valley; it is inscribed in the utterances and resolutions of scores of assemblages of that denomination, and it abides in the loving title of "Father Clark," so appropriately bestowed by his grateful people. Surely he was well called "Nathaniel," for he was indeed a "man without guile." His life, and that of his equally excellent wife, had their full measure of chastening sorrow. Very nearly in the order of their birth, their children fell asleep in the mysterious change that men call death—the first born, in early childhood; the only son, in the promising vigor of youth; and the two older daughters, in the beauty of young womanhood and wifehood. And then, amid a rapidly changing and marvelously developing civilization—life's work all done, and well done—his kind and gentle spirit entered into rest. His home had been at Elgin since 1840, and here he died, on the 3d day of December, 1873, aged 71 years. His devoted and loving wife survived him until January 15, 1884, when her entrance completed the unbroken circle above.

"Elder" Ambrose also spent the whole, or nearly all, of his life in active ministerial work in this county; and here his mortal remains are entombed. His achievements are likewise written upon many records of the Baptist denomination, and he was held in high esteem. But he was, by nature, more austere and inclined to theological controversy, and never came into a close and kindly fellowship with the struggling people. Many other clergymen contributed most excellent Christian service in their respective denominations, but these were the pioneers who remained until transferred by death.

In the earlier years the camp-meeting, in summer, and the "protracted meetings" (revivals), in winter, held sway in their crudest forms. The most materialistic ideas and utterances characterized these assemblages. To the sad-eyed, heavily burdened saint, this earthly life was a "desert dread," a lonely thorny way, "with here and there a traveler;" while to the sinner, it was a gay, delightsome place, a broad and sunny road, "and thousands walked together there." "Righteousness was a 'weary load' and sin was delicious as a 'sweet morsel under the tongue.'" When this brief life terminated, however, then all was absolutely reversed. The wearied saint became a "happy angel" in heaven, a place of delightful reward for sorrows endured on earth; the happy sinner was plunged into hell, a place of excruciating torment, principally by fire, as an endless penalty for the simple enjoyments of life on earth. Death's knell sounded the eternal doom. The Omnipotent Jehovah, bound by irrevocable decrees, looked on mildly indifferent, while Jesus tearfully pleaded with the thoughtless sinner to choose the narrow, grievous way, and Satan laughingly beckoned him to dance along the bright and shining road. Professional exhorters, full of emotional fervor and untrammeled by devotion to truth or reason, enunciated and elaborated such doctrines with consummate energy and ability, and enforced them by sharp illustrations wrought out through months and years of study and practice. On the instant they could change from the most vehement and vengeful denunciation to the most tender and tearful pleading. The effect was often remarkable. When the carefully-planned and well-heralded meeting had been under way a few days, the whole surrounding community became strangely excited. It was the one absorbing theme of thought and speech. The leader did not hesitate to name the individual selected to be "plucked as a brand from the burning;" and, by alternate exhortation, threatening, prayer and pleading, centered the thought and utterance of the whole assembly upon that person with an influence and power almost irresistible. An unaccountable frenzy would sweep intelligent people into utterances and acts of the most ridiculous folly. A leading merchant at a revival, praying the Lord to save a certain sinner "right now," shouted, "Come down through the roof, dear Jesus, and I will pay the damage;" and a calm, sensible father in his normal state, at a camp-meeting stood by and watched his educated daughter of eighteen or twenty, scream and gasp and sob, almost in convulsions, under the mysterious influence of the "power," while he, in almost equal frenzy, clapped his hands and shouted, "Go it Harriet! That is the way to conquer Satan; that is the way Jesus saves." And hundreds of people have many times stood upon the ice on Fox River, and seen converts go down upon steps placed in a hole cut through the ice for that purpose into the freezing water to be immersed. Revival scenes, as they have often been portrayed, were enacted in all their wild completeness in Kane County during the early 'thirties and 'forties. Similar meetings are still occasionally held; and, by many excellent people, are believed to be productive of great good; but the more objectionable features have been largely eliminated.

There is ever a thoughtless inclination to belittle the work of the Christian ministry, and to criticise too severely the speech and action of the clergy; but, in sober truth, it is the church and its ministry that, while imperfect as all human agency and life must always be, is still the great conservator of morality, kindness and virtue, and the inspiring power that raises the minds and souls of men toward nobler and diviner ideals. To the clergymen—Protestants of all denominations, and Catholic as well—perhaps more than to any other class or profession, the people of Kane County are indebted for the high mental and moral culture that has been attained and enjoyed in its happy homes of plenty and content, the orderly peace and kindliness that prevails, and its excellent public and private schools.

Each church organization has its churches, its Sunday schools and classes for Bible study; and now in many churches, kindergartens are held to care for the little children in order that the mothers may attend the church service. The churches have powerful auxiliaries in the various Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, Christian Endeavor Societies, Young People's Christian Unions, and similar organizations that have enrolled hundreds of the best young men and women of the county in the service for God and humanity. It is said that, in 1850, there were eighteen church edifices in Kane County capable of seating about 5,000 people, and valued at about $30,000. Today, there are one hundred and twenty-six church buildings in the county, with a seating capacity of more than 51,900, and of an estimated value of $1,134,400; and the aggregate expense of maintaining them is fully $234,250 per annum, as shown by the accompanying table, which indicates their location by townships and denominations.

The several churches contribute about one-tenth as much more for missionary and benevolent uses, and nearly every church has one or more organization of ladies engaged in the local charitable and social activities of the parish Sunday schools. The Kane County Sunday School Union is rendering excellent service in harmonizing, systematizing, and stimulating the work of the Sunday Schools. The report made at its annual meeting, held at St. Charles in November, 1903, exhibits the condition of the work in the Protestant schools of the county as follows:

EDUCATIONAL HISTORY.

Schools for the children engaged the active attention of the very first settlers. Scarcely had half a dozen families located within a radius of three or four miles, and secured indispensable shelter in their primitive cabins, before effort was made to provide a school for the children. It is quite impossible to state, with any degree of certainty, exactly when or where the very first school in the county was opened. Neither is place of slight priority of especial importance; but it is highly significant and important to note the quick and general recognition of the need of intellectual training and the instant effort to provide the best attainable. In 1848, at the first opportunity to vote upon the question of levying a school-tax, 1,176 votes were cast in favor of a two-mill assessment and but 221 against it. It is quite probable, however, that the first secular school, and Sunday school also, was held at Batavia in 1834 or '35, and within a year there were primitive schools in in educational matters. Soon after his arrival he built a rude school house near his home in the "Little Woods," and taught without pay—doubtless, the first free school in the State. He was the first Superintendent of Kane County Schools, and held the first teacher's institute at Geneva in 1851, in the old stone Court House, now the city hall. Having thirty or forty female teachers to provide for, he secured sleeping quarters for them in the ball room of the near-by hotel (long since burned), and solicited table entertainment among the good citizens. They appropriately named him "Father" Brewster; and, in grateful honor, the old settlers still so speak of him. Few nobler men have blessed the world by excellent precept and example. His death occurred at Wheaton in 1886. An interesting incident illustrating the ready humor of the great President Lincoln, occurred during the famous debate with Stephen A. Douglas, at Freeport, in 1858. As he arose for his address, Mr. Lincoln swung off the loose cloak which he wore, and turning to Mr. Brewster sitting on the platform, he said, in a low but penetrating tone, "Please hold my clothes, Father Brewster, while I stone Stephen."

The first free school district was organized at Aurora ,as heretofore stated. Such progress was made in school affairs that the Rev. David Higgins, County Superintendent, reported in 1860 that there were 186 schools in the county, with an attendance of 4,827 boys and 4,247 girls—a total of 9,074. Marvin Quackenbush, Superintendent, prepared a table showing that, in 1887, there were 150 school buildings in the county valued at $540,600; 303 schools, 338 teachers, 5,270 male pupils and 5,151 female pupils—making a total enrollment of 10,421 pupils. The reports of township school officers for the year 1902, as tabulated by Mr. W. H. Bridges, the present efficient Assistant County Superintendent, shows there are now 161 school buildings, valued at $1,052,060, with 394 schools, 432 teachers, 7,669 male and 7,515 female pupils —a total of 15,222 pupils. The accompanying table shows the statistics of 1887 and 1902, as given by townships:

each of the river settlements. They were the result of purely voluntary effort, either of an individual or of a few associated persons, and were, of course, temporary and held amid the crudest possible surroundings. A one-roomed log cabin, whose only furniture was an old chair, or stool made with an ax and an augur, for the teacher, and three or four benches, six or eight feet long, made of puncheons with pegs driven into holes near the ends for legs, to serve as seats for the few children, was the best obtainable at the beginning. Probably there were no two text-books in the room that were of the same edition, and, perhaps, half the children had slates and pencils. Two could study from one book at the same time, and books and slates could be used by different scholars alternately. Generally five and one-half days, from nine to twelve, and from one to five oclock, constituted a school week. Saturday afternoon was a holiday. The teacher "boarded around" usually, and, if a girl, was paid in addition about six shillings or a dollar a week. The men who taught in winter received a little better wages. Then all "sums in arithmetic" were figured out on a slate with a pencil; today, it would be difficult to find a slate or slate pencil in any store or public school in the county. It was in such fashion the schools were begun, and they have been steadily improved in material comforts, facilities and elegances, and in the culture, training and efficiency of teachers, until we reasonably and justifiably boast a school equipment, thoroughout the county, as complete and thorough as that of any county in our great State.

Edward W. Brewster, who settled in Sandusky precinct in 1839, on the old army trail upon the bank of the creek that bears his name, and on which his son Charles built and operated a saw-mill in the very early days, long sustained toward the schools of the county the same relations that Father Clark did to the churches. He was a refined and educated gentleman possessing a courteous and commanding presence rarely equaled, and he was an untiring and most enthusiastic leader

These statistics present two especially noteworthy items: first, the large preponderance of boys enrolled in 1860, as compared with the closely even balance of the sexes at the two later periods; and, second, the doubling of the school building values during the last fifteen years.

The wisdom and foresight of the people who, in 1839, planned and laid the foundations of Elgin Academy commands our admiration and surprise. Their names should be imperishable in the records of the county. They were Solomon Hamilton, Cotton Knox, George McClure, Luther Herrick, Reuben Jenne and Burgess Truesdell. It should be remembered that each one of these men was poor in worldly goods, and with all his neighbors, was struggling with the pressing necessities of frontier life, and that the ideals of school men were at that time very crude. Yet they took from their busy days the time to project an educational institution, and to associate for organized effort in its behalf; and from their very scant means, the money necessary to secure its incorporation by the legislature, and with rare foresight they wrote in the act of incorporation assurance of freedom for both teachers and scholars from all religious denominational tests and provision for the practical industrial training of both boys and girls. They also secured authority to confer academical and honorary degrees upon its scholarly graduates. This was four years before the public lands came into market, and while the shadow of the red man still lingered across the pathway of the pioneer. In 1848 the heavy stone walls of the first story of the main building had been erected, but the financial means of its promoters were exhausted. Thus it stood until 1854-5, when the charter was amended, a new Board of Trustees selected and the main building was completed. It was opened for students December 1, 1856, and its doors have never been closed except for the usual vacations. Its Board of Trustees has ever been composed of our best and most public-spirited citizens, and its faculty has always been of an unusually high order. Laying deep and firm the foundation of high mental and moral aspiration and attainment has ever been the keynote of its endeavor, and its excellent success is demonstrated in the upright character of its alumni, many of whom have obtained and adorned positions of great responsibility, and not one of whom can be recalled who has brought disgrace upon his Alma Mater. It gave seven commissioned officers, six non-commissioned staff-officers, twenty-one non-commissioned officers and twenty-three privates to the military service of the Government in the great struggle for national existence, and of these, nine died that their country might live. You will vainly search for a nobler record of patriotic education and devotion to high ideals of duty. One member of its present Board of Trustees, who has served over thirty years, notes, with lonely sadness, that every one of the excellent men associated with him during the first half of his long term, walks and works no more on earth. Yet this best of their mortal work does follow after them. The academy is now closely associated with the great Northwestern University, and is preparing to so expand its curriculum as to cover the first two years of college work, but in no way to curtail its preparatory classes. The original imposing three-story stone and brick structure, and the fine brick building of the same height, erected in 1888 by the revered Mrs. Lucy S. Lovell, are both situated upon a commanding elevation in the midst of the northeast residence portion of the city, and they are surrounded by a delightful campus of four acres. The institution possesses an unusually well-selected library of 1,500 volumes, and has two roomy laboratories for physics and chemistry, with an adjoining room for chemicals. The gymnasium is well equipped with the usual facilities for physical training, and the excellent tennis courts, croquet grounds, basket-ball and foot-ball grounds give ample opportunity for athletic exercise and sport. The location is most beautiful and accessible, and the institution rests upon a firm basis in the appreciative regard of its intelligent constituency throughout this and adjoining counties.

The fine educational institution, heretofore mentioned as suggested by the Rev. John Clark, has long been an honor to the city of Aurora, and to the county. It received a charter in 1855 and, two years later, its imposing five-story buildings were erected upon the high land on South Broadway. From its lofty cupola is presented a panorama of scenic beauty rarely equaled. The fine city of Aurora lies at one's feet; stretching away in each direction is the boundless vista of as fair and beautiful a landscape as ever pleased a beholder, and through its midst winds the lovely river. The buildings are constructed of dimension stone, and are stately and imposing in appearance. The grounds and buildings cost about $70,000—which was a very large sum of money in the low, hard times of 1857—and that it could possibly be raised in the struggling young city, demonstrates more forcibly than words can express, the people's active interest in the cause of education. It has ever been under the guiding influence of the great religious denominations so worthily represented by its original projector, and is now controlled by the deaconesses of the Rock River Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is conducted as a young woman's seminary and educational school of the very best Christian type. It is well equipped with the appliances necessary for its work; has a fine corps of eleven excellent instructors, and a fairly satisfactory attendance of students. It possesses a well-selected library, and the gymnasium and basket-ball and tennis court of its beautiful campus afford excellent facilities for in-door and out-door exercise so essential for the proper development of spirit, mind and body. It is a denominational, but by no means a sectarian, school, and it offers its excellent facilities to, and seeks the patronage of all, the families of Kane and adjacent counties.

About 1854 the Batavia Institute opened its doors to students and, for about ten years, did very fine educational work. It was beautifully located and the buildings, costing about $30,000, were exceptionally elegant. But the development of the excellent public-school system rendered it somewhat superfluous, and it passed into the hands of Dr. R. J. Patterson, an accomplished gentleman and skillful medical practitioner, of careful study and wide practical experience in the treatment of mental ailments, and by him was converted into a modern retreat for the insane, and is still so used.

And so we find that, in the decade of unparalelled political excitement, bitterness and financial depression which preceded the great war, the people of Kane County, by voluntary contributions, appropriated fully $125,000 of their scant means to provide these three educational institutions.

St. Mary's Academy at Elgin is a fine academic school conducted by one of the sacred orders of the Catholic Church. Its curriculum is comprehensive, its instruction very careful and thorough, and its influence highly refined and religious. The new German Catholic Church has a complete parochial school building, while the Catholic parishes of Aurora maintain three very large parochial schools in connection with their churches. There are also a number of other private schools maintained throughout the county; and, in the cities, business colleges and night schools are affording instruction to large numbers of students and enterprising young people.

LIBRARIES.

Library Associations were formed in many of the pioneer communities very early in the settlement of the county; in some of them during the 'thirties. By natural process of expansion these have developed until, at Aurora, Batavia, Elgin and Carpentersville, elegant buildings have been donated or erected for their especial use, and at Geneva, St. Charles and Dundee, pleasant quarters are rented. At each of these places, well-lighted, cheerful reading rooms, well supplied with the best newspapers and magazines, are maintained, and are well patronized by people of both sexes and of all ages and conditions in life. At Aurora, the "Public Library" was first established under the statutes of the State by the City Council, and opened for popular use in June, 1882, in the unique and artistic Memorial Hall. Its development soon outgrew the capacity of this building, and only three years later quite a large addition was erected. But the steady accumulation of books, and the increasing use of the reading and reference rooms by the people, and especially by the pupils in the schools, soon overtaxed these enlarged facilities, and in 1897 the Library Board, principally through the Rev. W. A. Colledge, entered into correspondence with Mr. Andrew Carnegie, who tendered the city $50,000 for the erection of a new library building, upon the city's pledge to perpetually appropriate at least $5,000 annually for the maintenance of the library. A levy of one and one-half mills upon the dollar at present produces a library fund of $6,000 yearly.

In compliance with this arrangement, a commodious and elegant building is now in course of erection and nearly completed. Its appropriate and central site upon the island was donated by the generous heirs of Joseph G. Stolp. It is constructed of pressed brick and Bedford stone, thoroughly non-combustible, in artistic style suiting its express use, and of the most approved material and construction throughout. It is being finished and furnished with all the best equipment known to library science. Its steel book-stacks have a capacity of 40,000 volumes, and both building and equipment are arranged with a view to indefinite expansion, as future needs may require. It now contains 20,000 volumes, carefully selected to cover all useful and interesting topics, scientifically classified according to the Dewey decimal system, making selections easy and the volumes readily accessible. The circulation of the Library at present is about 2,000 books per week; but with its increased facilities now promised, this will be largely increased. Mr. James Shaw has been Librarian and Secretary of the Board since 1884.

Mrs. Mary Prindle Newton quite recently donated to the township of Batavia, for library use, the beautiful homestead of the late Levi Newton, founder of the great Newton Wagon Company. Its central location and delightful surroundings render it another appropriate monument to the munificent public spirit of this patriotic family. The library is supported by township tax, has upon its shelves about 8,500 well-selected volumes and exchanges about 300 each week. The Geneva Public Library has about 3,000 books, with a weekly exchange of 200. It is maintained by public tax, and occupies rented quarters. The St. Charles Library Association still sustains the library at that city. It rents its rooms and has about 3,000 volumes, exchanging about 200 weekly.

The Elgin Library can be traced back to 1841 or '42, and, with less certainty, to a still earlier date. At that time a small collection of books for circulation was kept in a room over the old B. W. Raymond store, on the southeast corner of Spring and Chicago Streets. Subsequently they passed into the possession of the "Young Men's Christian Association," and from that to the Public Library. In March, 1872, the State Legislature passed an act authorizing townships, by vote of its citizens, to establish and maintain by taxation free public libraries. The very next month Elgin voted to organize under this law, and to levy a tax of one mill upon the dollar, for library uses. The amount of this levy has been increased, and is now three mills annually. The upper story of the Home Bank Block was rented for a number of years, and then more commodious rooms were obtained in the block on the south side of Chicago Street, just west of the alley near the river bridge. The brothers, Alfred B. and Samuel M. Church, purchased the former residence of D. C. Schofield, situated on the west side of Spring Street, and extending from Milwaukee to Division Street, and very generously donated it to the city for library use in 1892 or '93. The location is central and in every way acceptable, and upon it the town at once erected the modest yet elegant building now in use. It is admirably arranged, fully and conveniently equipped and tastefully furnished. It was opened for use by appropriate public ceremonies on February 22, 1894, and, at the request of the donors of the site, was named the "Gail Borden Public Library."

About 1875 or '76 Congress passed an act authorizing each Representative to designate a public library in his district, to which a copy of every document published by authority of the Government should be transmitted. At the request of the Elgin Library Board, Gen. Stephen A. Hurlbut, then Representative of this District in Congress, so designated this library, and many of the volumes received from this source are of great value. It now has 26,416 volumes upon its shelves, and weekly exchanges over 3,000 books. There is a constant throng of studious readers in its very pleasant rooms, and obviously more ample space will soon be imperatively needed. For just twenty years, from June 1883, until June 9, 1893, Miss Cecil C. Harvey was its nearly perfect librarian. She discharged all her duties with a peculiar grace and prompt efficiency, rarely equaled. She was tenderly loved by old and young of all stations in life, and her death was sincerely mourned by the entire community.

Dundee Library has 2,265 books with a weekly exchange of about 150, and its library occupies rented quarters. Mr. and Mrs. George P. Lord selected upon their own lands the most desirable location in the village of Carpentersville, and a few years ago erected upon it an unusually handsome and substantial building, especially designed and completely fitted for library purposes, at an expense of about $15,000, and donated it, fully furnished and equipped, to the Carpentersville Literary and Library Asociation and the Congregational Church; these two bodies agreeing to maintain and perpetuate it for library use. The library has 2,188 volumes, and exchanges weekly about 150.

The educational department of the Kane County Federation of Women's Clubs has twenty-three libraries of fifty volumes each, in constant circulation throughout the rural communities of the county, and many of the public schools have collections of excellent books for the use of scholars. Every Sunday School has its library and papers, and each of the State and County Institutions provides books and periodicals for the edification of its inmates.

It will be observed that Kane County has over 66,000 volumes in its public libraries, and that its people exchange over 7,000 of them weekly. The critical and exhaustive study of so many topics, now eagerly prosecuted by members of the numerous Women's Clubs that have been organized during the last twenty-five years, renders the use of the reference rooms of the libraries, and the very intelligent aid of the librarian and the special assistant in charge of them, almost invaluable.

CHAPTER XII.

POLITICS AND PUBLIC OFFICERS.

EARLY POLITICS IN KANE COUNTY—PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS AND PARTY VOTES—FIRST REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION — CONGRESSIONAL REPRESENTATIVES—PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS AND FEDERAL OFFICERS—CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS—STATE SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES FROM KANE COUNTY—CIRCUIT JUDGES AND COUNTY OFFICERS.

Until the questions which culminated in the great war were fairly developed, the political sentiment of the county evidently favored the Democratic party, and since that time has been as steadily Republican. In 1836 Martin VanBuren and Col. Richard M. Johnson were the Democratic presidential and vice-presidential nominees, and to arouse the martial spirit of the people, their followers sang,

"Shout and sing, Oh, rumsey dumsey!
Colonel Johnson killed Tecumseh—" referring to an alleged incident (which probably never occurred) of the battle on the Thames River, in Canada, where the famous chieftain was killed in 1813. They had 235 votes in the county while the Whig nominees, Harrison and Granger, had but 93. In 1840 VanBuren and Johnson again contested with Gen. William H. Harrison and John Tyler for the national honors. Now the Whigs sang:

"Let lady and man do all they can
For Tippecanoe and Tyler, too,
For Tippecanoe and Tyler, too;
And with them we will beat little Van;
Van, Van, Van is a used-up man;"

and the military prestige of "Tippecanoe" gave him a majority in the county of 36 votes in a total of 1,584. In 1842 Thomas Ford, Democratic candidate for Governor, received 750 votes, and his Whig opponent, ex-Gov. Joseph Duncan, had but 457. This year the first "Liberty" ticket appeared in the county, and polled 32 votes for its candidate, Charles W. Hunter.

The Whigs nominated the great Kentucky statesman, Henry Clay, with Theodore Frelinghuysen, in 1844, and the Democrats ran James K. Polk and George M. Dallas. The sharp and exciting contest resulted in 1,046 votes for Polk, 748 for Clay and 299 for James G. Birney, the "Abolitionist" candidate. It will be noticed that the Liberty vote had increased nearly tenfold, yet the combined opposition vote was but one greater than the Democratic.

In 1848 three tickets were fairly in the field, viz.: Cass and Butler, Democratic; Taylor and Fillmore, Whig, and VanBuren and Adams, Anti-slavery. But the Democrats were badly divided and the "Barn Burner" faction voted with the "Free-Soilers" for their old favorite, Martin Van Buren, who received 1,220 votes; General Cass, 783; and General Taylor, 855. The strengthening of the slave-power by the acquisition of Texas, the resulting Mexican War and the political action which led up to the passage of the Fugitive Slave Law in 1850, aroused the apprehension of the people and resulted in the phenomenal anti-slavery vote.

During the decade of the 'fifties, the country was plunged on in the mad political turmoil that culminated in the great war, and Kane County was in the thick of the fray. Wendell Phillips, Cassius M. Clay, Joshua R. Giddings, Owen Lovejoy, Ichabod Codding, and scores of other impassioned orators addressed immense assemblages of the people with tempestuous eloquence, while John F. Farnsworth, A. J. Joslyn, Isaac Preston and many other talented home-speakers kept the fires of liberty hotly burning. They sang:

"Ho! the car, Emancipation,
Rides majestic through the Nation,
Bearing on its train the story,
'Freedom is our Nation's glory.'
Roll it along, roll it along; roll it along through the nation, Freedom's car, Emancipation."

And the other refrain,

"Sound the alarm, sound the alarm,
Sound the alarm, pulpits thunder,
Ere too late you see your blunder," was literally obeyed by nearly every clergyman in the county. It is altogether impossible for the present generation to approach a realization of the intense and bitter excitement that characterized these campaigns. Gen. Franklin Pierce, Gen. Winfield Scott and John P. Hale were the presidential candidates in 1852. Pierce had 1,308 votes, Scott 1,160 and Hale 642.

In August, 1854, the first convention of the opponents of the further spread of slavery that was held in the county under the distinctive name of Republican, assembled at Geneva, and was presided over by "Father" E. W. Brewster. It was a gathering of able, high-minded, patriotic men, and the addresses given and resolutions adopted were eloquent, emphatic and strong. The next month, September 20, 1854, the first Republican congressional and county ticket was nominated at a convention held in the Congregational Church at Aurora. The entire ticket was elected except the candidate for Sheriff, who was defeated by the recently deceased L. P. Barker, of Batavia. In 1856, James Buchanan led the Democratic column, John C. Fremont the Republican and Millard Fillmore the "American." Fremont's vote was 3,750, Buchanan's 912 and Fillmore's 29.

In the ever memorable contest of 1860 Lincoln polled 4,207 votes, Douglas 1,651, Bell and Breckenridge 12. The vote in 1864 stood: Lincoln, 4,270 (the absent soldiers voting in the field); McClellan, 1,482. General Grant had 5,047 votes and Seymour 1,653 in 1868. In 1872 Grant had 4,657 and Horace Greeley 1,606. The vote in 1876 was: Hayes 5,398, Tilden 2,850 and Cooper 172. Garfield had 6,180 votes in 1880, Hancock 2,831 and Weaver 410. In 1884 Blaine had 7,143, Cleveland 3,558, Butler 124 and St. John 206. In 1888 the vote stood: Harrison, 7,572; Cleveland, 4,386; Fisk and Street, 147; in 1892 ,Harrison, 7,967; Cleveland, 5,779; for Prohibition, 719; Social Labor, 353; in 1896 ,McKinley, 12,133; Bryan, 4,839, and 375 scattering. In 1900 McKinley had 12,031 votes; Bryan, 5,260; for Prohibition, 393 —and there were 129 scattering votes. It is worthy of note, that the first nominating Republican convention of the county was held in a church, and its candidates were elected; and that at each subsequent presidential election its nominees have received about two-thirds of the entire vote cast; also, that Grover Cleveland was the most popular candidate of his party.

REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS. — Shadrach Bond represented the Territory as Delegate from 1812 to 1814 in the Twelfth and Thirteenth Congresses; Benjamin Stevenson, 1814-1816, in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth, and Nathaniel Pope, 1816-1818, in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Congresses. John McLean represented the new State during the second session of the Fifteenth Congress, 1819. Daniel Pope Cook was the Representative in the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, Eighteenth and Nineteenth Congresses, from December, 1819, to March, 1827, and was followed by Joseph Duncan from 1827 to 1834, through the Twentieth, Twenty-first, Twenty-second and part of the Twenty-third Congresses. In 1832 the State was divided into three Congressional Districts, and LaSalle County, which then included Kane, became a part of the Third District. Duncan, having resigned before the expiration of his fourth term to accept the governorship, was succeeded by William L. May, Democrat, of Springfield, who served during the last session of the Twenty-third and the whole of the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Congresses (1834-39). In 1839 Kane first voted as a separate county. John T. Stuart, Whig, of Springfield, and Stephen A. Douglas, Democrat, were the opposing candidates for Congress. Stuart was elected and served in the Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh Congresses until 1843, but in Kane County Douglas received 517 votes and Stuart 311. In 1843 Kane had become a part of the Fourth Congressional District, and John Wentworth ("Long John"), Democrat, of Chicago, represented it in the Twenty-eighth, Twenty-ninth, Thirtieth and Thirty-first Congresses from 1843 to 1851, being succeeded in the latter year by Richard S. Molony, Democrat, of Belvidere, who served in the Thirty-second Congress—1851-3.

By the apportionment of 1852 Kane was transferred to the Second District, and Mr. Wentworth again represented it in the Thirty-third Congress. James H. Woodworth, Republican, of Chicago, served in the Thirty-fourth Congress, 1855-7, and the district has since that time been strongly Republican. Its Representatives have been: John F. Farnsworth, of St. Charles, in the Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth Congresses (1857-61); Isaac N. Arnold, of Chicago, Thirty-seventh Congress (1861-63); Gen. John F. Farnsworth next served five terms—the Thirty-eighth to the Forty-second Congress—(1863-73). He became a bitter personal enemy of General Grant, in this position antagonizing many of his warm admirers. The congressional convention of 1872 was held in DuBois Hall, Elgin, and was probably the most protracted and exciting congressional convention ever convened in the county. After innumerable ballots between the friends and political opponents of General Farnsworth, he was defeated and Gen. Stephen A. Hurlbut, of Belvidere, nominated and elected. He served in the Forty-third and Forty-fourth Congresses (1873-7), and William Lathrop, of Rockford, in the Forty-fifth (1877-9), after which John C. Sherwin, of Geneva, was elected to the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh (1879-83). By the apportionment of 1882, this district became the Fifth and during 1883-88, Reuben Ellwood, of Sycamore, represented it in the Forty-eighth Congress. In 1884, Albert J. Hopkins, of Aurora, was elected and served continuously through nine terms—the Forty-ninth to the Fifty-seventh Congress (from 1885 to 1903)—a remarkably long term and covering a period surcharged with governmental questions of most vital interest. During it all he bore himself with a manly steadiness and fidelity, discharging his duties with an industry and ability that won the confidence of the people of the whole State; and, in January, 1903, the State Legislature, complying with the nomination of the Republican State Convention, elected him to the exalted position of United States Senator from this great commonwealth—conferring a distinguished honor upon Aurora, the city of all his manhood years, and upon the Representative District in which he was born. In 1902 Howard M. Snapp, of Joliet, was elected, and is now the Representative of this Congressional District which, under the late apportionment, is the Eleventh, and now consists of Kane, McHenry, DuPage and Will Counties.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS AND FEDERAL OFFICERS. —Augustus M. Herrington was chosen a Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket in 1856; William B. Plato on the Republican ticket in 1860, and Albert J. Hopkins in 1884. On April 7, 1869, George S. Bangs, of Aurora, was appointed Assistant Superintendent of the United States Railway Mail Service, and on May 3, 1871, was promoted to General Superintendent of that new and experimental branch of mail distribution. Captain Maurice J. McGrath, also of Aurora, was promoted to succeed Mr. Bangs in the office of Assistant Superintendent, and is still in the postal service, for many years having been Superintendent of Mails in the Chicago Post Office.

Too much credit cannot be given these two men for their persistent and successful efforts to improve this most important branch of the government service. F. A. Eastman, Postmaster at Chicago at the time of the great fire, in a recent newspaper article, speaks of their inestimable assistance amid the perplexities of that appalling catastrophe. He says: "Both came at once to Chicago, instantly called into the city a large number of railway postal cars, and undertook to do in them the distributing that heretofore had been done in the postoffice. From that day to this, the principal part of the distribution of the mails has been in transit on the railway postal cars, and the application of this remedy to an accidental situation resulted in great permanent good." The head of the Postoffice Department at Washington, whose high position has been attained by forty years of efficient service, writes that "Mr. Bang's comprehensive mind grasped all the great possibilities of the railway mail service, and it is safe to assert, that nearly every improvement made since his retirement was thought out by him."

Captain Leverett M. Kelly was appointed by President McKinley, early in his first term, Assistant Commissioner of Pensions, and still holds that important office. About the same time he appointed Arthur M. Beaupre, of Aurora, United States Consul General at Guatemala, and after about three years' service he was transferred to the same office in Bogota, Colombia. In the spring of 1903 he was appointed to the office of United States Minister to Colombia, and very recently, as arbitrator, chosen by Great Britain and Guatemala, adjudicated very satisfactorily disturbing complications of state questions that had arisen between those two countries.

May 4, 1900, President McKinley appointed John A. Russell, of Elgin, United States Attorney-General for our newly acquired Territory of Porto Rico, but paramount duties at home compelled his resignation in December, 1900. Thus we find Kane County men occupying important civil offices under the General Government.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS.—In the convention which assembled at Springfield in June, 1847, to prepare the first amended Constitution of the State, we find among its members Augustus Adams, Alfred Churchill and Thomas Judd, of Kane County, besides Eben F. Colby and Samuel Drake Lockwood, from other counties, each of whom afterwards became honored and useful residents of this county—the one at Elgin and the other at Batavia, where they resided many years before their deaths. Judge Lockwood was a member of the Supreme Court from January, 1825, until December, 1848, and no Justice was held in higher esteem for purity of character, sound judgment and eminent ability.

In the Constitutional Convention of 1870 Charles Wheaton was the member from Kane County. Major Woodbury M. Taylor was elected Clerk of the Supreme Court in June, 1867, for the Central Grand Division, and served until his death some years later. Henry E. Hunt, of Dundee, served as a member of the State Board of Equalization from 1876 to 1880, and Dr. Ansel L. Clark, late Surgeon of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois Infantry, was for a long term of years, a member and Secretary of the State Board of Health. Besides his extensive practice in the county, he was an incorporator of the Bennett Medical College at Chicago, and for many years has been its president.

MEMBERS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.—Kane County first appears upon the journal of the Senate and House of Representatives at Springfield on the 5th day of December, 1842, at the opening of the session of the Legislature when Ira Minard was sworn in as Senator, and Henry Madden as Representative of the District composed of Boone, DeKalb, Kane, McHenry and Kendall Counties. After this date the Senators resident in Kane County were: 1844-46—Ira Minard, St. Charles; 1846-48—Gen. Elijah Wilcox, Elgin; 1848-55—William B. Plato, Geneva; 1855-63—Augustus Adams, Elgin; 1863-71—Edward R. Allen, Aurora; 1871-73—James W. Eddy, Batavia; 1873-77—Eugene Can-field, Aurora; 1877-81—Major James H. Mayborne, Geneva. After one term as member of the House (1877-79), from the Thirty-second General Assembly in 1881 until the Forty-third in 1903—a period of twenty-two consecutive years—Henry H. Evans has represented this Senatorial District. This simple statement of fact demonstrates his absolute capacity and strength, beyond the power of words to add or detract.

The members of the House of Representatives, resident in Kane County during their terms of service, have been: 1846-48—James Herrington, Geneva; 1848-51—Edward W. Austin, Dundee; 1851-53—Augustus Adams, Elgin; 1853-55—John Ranstead, Plato; 1855-57—Benjamin Hackney, Aurora; 1857-59—William Parker; 1859-61—William B. Plato, Geneva; 1861-63—Thomas S. Terry; 1863-67—Sylvester S. Mann, Burlington; 1867-69—John W. Eddy, Batavia; 1869-71—Needham N. Ravlin, Kaneville; 1873-75—Sylvester S. Mann; Julius A. Carpenter, Carpentersville; James Herrington, Geneva; 1875-77—James Herrington; 1877-79—Henry H. Evans, Aurora; James Herrington; 1879-81—Edward C. Lovell, Elgin; James Herrington; 1881-83—Oliver P. Chisholm, Elgin; James Herrington; 1883-85—James Herrington; 1885-87—John Stewart, Elburn; Thomas O'Donnell, Aurora; 1887-89—John Stewart; James Herrington; 1889-97—Edgar C. Hawley, Dundee; Luther M. Dearborn, Aurora; 1897-99—William F. Hunter, Elgin; Samuel Alschuler, Aurora; 1899-01—John Stewart; Samuel Alschuler; 1901-03—Charles Backus, Hampshire; John A. Logan, Elgin; 1903-05—Charles Backus and John Linden, Aurora. The Democratic members—Messrs. Herrington, O'Donnell, Dearborn, Alschuler, Logan and Linden—were elected under the minority representation provision of the State Constitution, the other members being Republicans.

Circuit Court Judges.—The first term of the Circuit Court in Kane County was held in James Herrington's log house at Geneva (then called Herrington's Ford), beginning Monday, June 19, 1837. Kane was then in the Sixth Judicial Circuit, and Thomas Ford, Judge of the Circuit, issued the order calling the term and also appointed A. P. Hubbard to serve as Clerk. It was presided over, however, by John Pearson, Judge of the Seventh Circuit. Judge Jesse B. Thomas, of the First Judicial Circuit, presided at the second term of court held at the same place in September, 1837. Alonzo A. Huntington appeared as State's Attorney and Mark Fletcher served as Clerk. The third and fourth terms were again presided over by Judge Pearson. February 25, 1839, Thomas Ford was commissioned Judge of the Ninth Judicial Circuit, to which Kane County had evidently been assigned, and Judge Ford first appears upon the bench at the term beginning May 27, 1839. Onslow Peters is entered as State's Attorney. John Dean Caton, as a Justice and Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, presided from May 27, 1841, until January 24, 1848, when Judge Hugh T. Dickey, of Cook County, held a special session of the court. December 4, 1848, Theophilus Lyle Dickey was commissioned Judge of the Ninth Circuit. The Legislature having increased the number of circuits, Kane became a part of the Thirteenth Circuit, and Isaac Grant Wilson, the first Judge resident in the county, was commissioned June 18, 1851. He was re-elected in 1855, and again in 1861. October 3, 1864, Kane was transferred to the Twenty-eighth Circuit. Judge Wilson held the office until 1867, when, on June 14, 1867, Sylvanus Wilcox was commissioned Judge and recommissioned in June, 1873. On May 5th of that year, Kane was assigned to the Fourth Judicial District. Because of failing health, Judge Wilcox resigned in September, 1874. October 1, 1877, the number of the district was changed to the Twelfth, and Judge Isaac Grant Wilson was again commissioned as Judge on June 16, 1879; a third time, June 16, 1885, and he continued in office until his death in 1891. From June, 1879, he served as a Judge of the Appellate Court at Chicago. In June, 1891, Henry B. Willis received his commission as Judge of this circuit, again in 1897 and for a third term of six years in 1903.

The Clerks of the Circuit Court have been as follows: 1836—Allen P. Hubbard; 1837-48—Mark W. Fletcher; 1848-52—Charles B. Wells; 1852-56—Luther Dearborn; 1856-60—Paul R. Wright; 1860-64—Thomas C. Moore; 1864-68—Pinder F. Ward; 1868-72—J. W. Parrington; 1872-76—H. T. Rockwell; 1876-84—C. P. Dutton; 1884-96—Charles Miller; 1896-1901—John F. Dewey, who died in 1901, being succeeded by Thomas Rushton, who served the remainder of his term until 1902, when Capt. Benjamin E. Gould was elected. Mr. Gould lost his life in the Iroquois Theater fire in Chicago, December 30, 1903.

The County Commissioners who started the whole machinery of county government and largely conducted county affairs until, by the adoption of township organization under the first amended Constitution, the office was abolished, and the Board of Supervisors substituted, were: 1836—Solomon Dunham, Ebenezer Morgan, Eli Barnes; 1837—Thomas H. Thompson, Mark Daniels, J W. Churchill; 1838—Ira Minard, George E. Peck, A. P. Hubbard; 1839—Noah B Spaulding, William B. West, A. P. Hubbard; 1840-41—Noah B. Spaulding, William B. West, A. P. Hubbard; 1842—William B. West, ——————, S. E. Johnson; 1843—S. E. Johnson, W. B. West, Thomas E. Dodge; 1844—William C. Kimball, S. E. Johnson, Thos. E. Dodge; 1845—Wm. C. Kimball, Silas Reynolds, Thos. E. Dodge; 1846-47—David W. Annis, S. Reynolds, T. H. Whittemore; 1848-49—D. W. Annis, John Scott, T. H. Whittemore.

The persons named as County Clerks kept the records of the County Commissioners' proceedings. The Commissioners appointed Relief Duryea Recorder of Deeds, and he was succeeded by David Dunham, who served until 1842. Others who served in that office were: George W. Gorton, 1842-46; and E. H. Swarthout, 1846-48, when the duties of the office were delegated to the Circuit Clerk, C. B. Wells. In 1892 the office was revived, and Joseph Ingham elected Recorder. Frank E. George was elected in 1896 and re-elected in 1900.

Other county officers of Kane County, with their terms of service, have been as follows:

COUNTY JUDGES—1836-38—Mark Daniels; 1838-40—Isaac Wilson; 1840-42—H. N. Chapman; 1842-44—L. Howard; 1844-48—S. S. Jones; 1848-50—A. V. Sill; 1850-52—I. G. Wilson; 1852-58—W. D. Hanchett; 1892-1900—Frank W. Joslyn; 1900-04—W. J. Tyers.

CHAPTER XIII.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND INSTITUTIONS.

FEDERAL BUILDINGS — AURORA AND ELGIN POST-OFFICES — STATE CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS—NORTHERN HOSPITAL FOR INSANE—TRAINING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS—HOME FOR BOYS—KANE COUNTY COURT HOUSE HISTORY—ALMS-HOUSE AND THE COUNTY POOR.

The General Government has erected two beautiful and elaborate Post-office Buildings within Kane County. In each case the amount of the appropriation was $100,000, about $20,000 each being paid for the respective sites and $80,000 expended upon each building. The Aurora office—a fine two-story building of red brick with stone trimmings—was built in 1894-95, and the one at Elgin, a very elaborate one-story structure of light-colored granite, was erected in 1901-02. The Aurora building is finished in artistically designed and highly wrought and polished hard woods, while the public portion of the Elgin office is walled, ceiled and finished in white marble, with rich mosaic floor. In each building every conceivable facility for the reception and prompt distribution of all incoming and outgoing mail is carefully provided. The arrangements for selling stamps and postal money-orders, and for handling registered matter, seem almost perfect. Every precaution against loss by carelessness, criminality, or the natural elements have been most studiously and thoroughly provided. The flag constantly floats above each, as in military posts, and the buildings, grounds and surroundings are maintained in the most scrupulous order and neatness.

STATE BUILDINGS.

The Illinois Northern Hospital for the Insane was established by an act of the Legislature, approved April 16, 1869, by Governor John M. Palmer. The district to be provided for by that institution embraced the thirteen counties of Lake, McHenry, Boone, Winnebago, Stephenson, Jo Daviess, Carroll, Ogle, DeKalb, Kane, Kendall, Lee and Whiteside—Jo Daviess and Carroll having since been withdrawn. A locating commission, composed of Augustus Adams, B. F. Shaw, W. R. Brown, M. L. Joslyn, David S. Hammond and William Adams—none of whom were residents of Kane County—after careful inspection of the numerous sites offered, with generous bounties by various localities, selected the beautiful grounds at Elgin. It would be very difficult to find a location meeting more completely the prime requisites of fair healthful altitude, good drainage, abundant water, accessibility, beauty of situation and pleasant diversity of landscape. The city purchased of R. B. Chisholm, and donated to the State, 150 acres of land in Sections 23 and 24 and, by subsequent purchases, the grounds have been enlarged to 510 acres, lying along the west bank of the river.

The highway to the south, from the city, which is also traversed by a line of electric cars, runs parallel with, and some eighty rods distant from, the river, through the State grounds; and that portion lying between the river and the road is cultivated as farm land. The Hospital buildings front toward the east and stand some forty rods west of the highway, near the center of the park-like lawn, which is separated from the highway by a substantial and artistic iron fence. The grounds are entered through elaborate iron gateways, flanked by neat stone lodges. With an even, gradual slope, rendered more pleasing by two grassy waterways for the surplus rain-fall to reach the river, the land rises from its pebbly shore, perhaps sixty or eighty feet, to the broad plateau whereon the buildings stand, with the farm in their rear. The grounds about the buildings are artistically platted to produce the most pleasing landscape effects, and are kept in perfect condition. Miniature lakes and streamlets, with rustic arches, bridges and grottoes, have been most naturally devised, and beautiful driveways and walks are laid in pleasant courses, through the groves and lawns. Inviting seats are placed in quiet sheltered places, and there are grassy, sunny slopes for patients to recline upon, while beds of brilliant flowers contrast most charmingly with the deep green of the smooth well-kept lawn. A large and beautiful fountain is in almost constant play in front of the main porch and entrance hall of the administration building, and near by stands the elaborate conservatory, built and endowed by the generous bequest of the late Jonathan Burr.

The central portion of this main building comprises reception rooms and offices for the Superintendent and his staff of medical and business assistants, apartments for his family and for domestic use, and a large and beautiful chapel, and amusement hall, with their accessories, for the benefit of the patients. The north wing is occupied by female, and the south wing by male patients. This north wing was opened for the reception of patients in April, 1872, the center building was first occupied in 1874, and the south wing in 1875. Each has been improved and enlarged and, on the south, a separate infirmary for males, and a large annex for chronic non-violent male and female patients, have been erected. The women's infirmary connects with the north wing. The buildings have been constructed, and are being so arranged, as to bring into each patient's room all the brightness, beauty and sunlight possible, together with an abundance of pure invigorating air, so that, from every window and place of rest or recreation, the view shall tend to produce pleasurable content. Every effort is made to induce regular habits of body and mind and quiet sleep; to provide nourishing food, healthy employment, cheerful religious services and singing, reading, music, games, dancing, dramatic entertainments and pleasurable enjoyments, to divert from morbid thoughts and hallucinations, and to heal the unbalanced, wavering minds. The most rigid discipline is maintained, with power, if it must be employed, but rather by gently and firmly checking, at its very first manifestation, all tendency toward insubordination, and to cultivate in the minds of patients the individual feeling of personal restraint, courtesy and respect—to put patients, as far as possible, upon a sense of honorable regard for their own control and deportment, and to remove all feeling of prison restraint and confinement. At best it is a sad, trying task; but these more humane methods are superseding the harsher ways of the past. The growing sentiment of faith in the all-conquering power of goodness gives evidence of a confidence that the newer treatment will prove more beneficial than the old, in alleviating the pitiable condition of these saddest victims of the inadvertent or wilful violation of Nature's laws.

Such are the views of Dr. Frank S. Whitman, the present highly efficient Superintendent, and of the officers employed to assist him; and, while each day, and nearly each individual case, have their trials, perplexities and discouragements, results continually give assurance that such treatment is most salutary. Of course, all the arrangements, appliances and accessories of the buildings and grounds are the best to-day attainable. About 250 acres of the land is cultivated in farm and garden; and in tilling these and caring for the well-housed stock, repairing the buildings, tending the lawns, and meeting the daily recurring needs of the great institution, patients are induced to assist so far as may be beneficial to them. The last biennial report shows 1,102 inmates on July 1, 1900; admitted during the two following years, 731; and re-admitted, 100—making a total of 1,933. There were discharged, during the same period as recovered, 189; as improved, 114; as unimproved, 17; and 166 died. There were transferred to other institutions 138; returned to various counties 111; released by order of court 5; and 10 escaped—present, July 1, 1902, 1,183—total, 1,933. The estimated requirements for the ordinary needs of the institution for 1903-4 was $185,000 per year. The trustees also asked a further appropriation of $88,300 for special repairs and improvements.

STATE TRAINING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

By authority of a legislative act, approved June 22, 1893, the Governor appointed Mesdames M. R. M. Wallace, G. M. Holt, J. D.

Harvey and Charles Henrotin, and Judge Frank Annis, Matthew Henneberry and William Prentiss, and their successors, a body corporate under the name of "State Guardians for Girls," and authorized them to establish a "State Home for Juvenile Female Offenders." The same act authorized the purchase of not less than 20 nor more than 120 acres of land, and the erection thereon of suitable buildings and appropriated $75,000 to carry its provisions into effect. The law authorized the commitment of girls thereto between the ages of ten and sixteen years, by courts of record, for "not less than one year nor beyond their minority;" and by Justices and Magistrates, for "not less than three months, nor beyond their minority." By subsequent legislation the limit has been extended to 21 years of age. "No imbecile or idiotic girl shall be committed or received into the Home. Girls may be discharged at any time by the Governor or by the Trustees whenever, in their judgment, the good of the girl or of the Home will thereby be promoted." "The Superintendent and other officers at the Home shall be women." The Trustees are given the exclusive custody, care and guardianship of such girls as are committed to the Home, and are authorized to appoint one or more suitable persons to serve without compensation in each county to aid them. They are required to instruct the girls "in such branches of useful knowledge as may be suited to their years and capacities," in domestic vocations, such as housekeeping in all its departments. "Any girl may be placed in the Home of any good citizen, upon such terms, and for such purposes and time, as may be agreed upon; or she may be given to any suitable person of good character who will adopt her; or she may be bound to any reputable citizen to learn any trade; or as a servant to follow any employment which, in the judgment of the Trustees, will be for her advantage." But if she is cruelly treated or neglected, or the terms agreed upon are not observed, the Trustees shall take and receive her again to the protection of the Home. For good behavior each girl is to be credited five days each month of the first year; six days monthly in the second year; seven days the third; eight days the fourth; and thereafter nine days in each month—while for any misconduct or violation of rules, she is liable to forfeit five days per month. The balance of good days to her credit brings so much nearer the date of her discharge by the Superintendent.

The Home was first opened November 17, 1893, in rented quarters at 3,111 Indiana Avenue, Chicago. Subsequently, and largely at the instance of Mrs. Julia Plato Harvey, fifty-one acres of land lying on the north half of Sections 10 and 11, just southeast of the city of Geneva, were purchased for $7,000 and, later forty acres additional were purchased at a cost of $4,000. Three buildings costing $127,850 have been erected thereon, designated as the Administration Building, and the "Wallace" and the "Harvey Cottages." Two additional cottages are now in course of construction. A fine school building, a heat and power house, and a suitable barn have been provided. The residence buildings are beautiful and very substantial structures of rock-faced and pressed brick, with cut-stone trimmings, carefully protected against fire and, of course, fully equipped with every appliance for comfort, security and convenience. They front toward the west and command a magnificent view of the wooded play-ground and park, sloping quite sharply down to the river, the fine city with its stately county buildings and elegant homes, and the many fertile, highly cultivated and improved farms, stretching away to the western horizon. It is a lofty, commanding situation.

The grounds about the buildings are neatly cultivated in gardens, flower-beds and lawns, and are kept in complete order by the girls under the supervision of a woman gardener. Within, the scrupulous neatness and quiet comfort of a refined private home seems to prevail. The entire absence of walls, guards and barred doors, and of apparent forced restraint or confinement of the inmates astonishes the visitor. Alternating each midday, one-half the girls are at school and the other half at work throughout the buildings and grounds, under firm, yet kind and competent instructors, acquiring by practice the varied habits and information essential to good womanhood. Save in the uniformity of neat dress, there is no visible indication among these bright girls of their being in public custody; and everything, from kitchen to parlor, is sweet, clean and tasteful enough to suit the most fastidious housekeeper. There are now 226 girls in the Home and 100 on parole in private families. It certainly must require the most firm and vigilant discipline to so excellently control this large number of wayward young girls. Those in the Home are arranged in separate families, as nearly as practicable, of about twenty-seven each, thus giving the matrons and housekeepers far better opportunities to discover and cultivate the individual necessities of each girl.

All the officers and assistants are women except the engineer and fireman, the farmer and his hired man. Mrs. Ophelia L. Amigh is the Superintendent and, in the Home and at Geneva, she is held in the very highest esteem. The deepest actuating sentiment of this lady and her excellent assistants is indicated in their expressed gratitude to the last Legislature for eliminating the term, "juvenile female offenders," and substituting the more kindly name, "State Training School for Girls." For, as they remove every garment from each girl upon her entrance and clothe her in new, clean and neat apparel, so at once they seek to remove every stain, habit and memory of her former life, and to awaken better aspirations and higher ideals, and to kindly place, guide and strengthen her in the way of a future life of intelligent usefulness, purity and happiness. Surely, in the list of beneficial institutions, there is not one more worthy the active encouragement and support of all the people, than the "State Training School for Girls."

ST. CHARLES BOYS' HOME.

Continuing the enlightened policy of saving the young from conditions tending toward lawlessness and criminality, the people and the State Legislature are providing a similar Home for Dependent and Delinquent Boys at St. Charles. Philanthropic and patriotic citizens of that city, and more largely of Chicago, having voluntarily raised a fund of over $100,000, purchased 901 acres of the finest farm lands in the county, which they have presented to the State as a site for the Home. These lands, lying in the three southwest sections of St. Charles, the southeast section of Campton and southwest section of Geneva, are unsurpassed for fertility and beauty of location. In May, 1901, the Legislature appropriated $25,000 for building purposes, $5,000 for books, tools and apparatus, and $5,000 for maintenance of inmates. In May, 1903, a further appropriation of $300,000 was made for building purposes and equipment, and $25,000 for ordinary expenses for the year ending June 30, 1904, with a like amount for 1904-5. The act states that the intent is to give all delinquent boys "a good common school education, and the learning and practice of such trades and employments, including agriculture and horticulture, as shall fit them for the ordinary employments of life." Delinquent boys who may be committed to the Home are defined as any boy under sixteen years of age who violates any law of this State, or any city or village ordinance; and none can be committed beyond their majority. The act provides that not more than forty boys shall be housed in one building, together with the manager, or teacher, and family. Two of the six cottages that are now (1903) being constructed, are so near completion that workmen are putting in the heating apparatus, and the other four will soon be under roof.

The cottages that have been furnished show what kind of quarters the boys will have at this institution. Each building is about 60x100 feet, two stories and basement high. On the right of the hall are the quarters of the house-father, and house-mother; consisting of office, sitting room, and one chamber, bath and toilet room. On the left of the hall is a large sitting room for the boys and immediately in the rear, in what is known as the extension, is a large living room, and at the extreme end of the extension are the pantry, kitchen and sinks. The rooms overhead are finished in mill construction work, the material being Georgia pine; the walls are of adamant plaster and the casings of red oak. On the second floor are two large dormitories lighted by nine large windows to each room—the whole set affording a magnificent view in three directions.

These rooms will be fitted with iron bedsteads, forty to each dormitory, each boy to have a bed to himself. Between the two dormitories is what is known as the locker room. In this room, to which access is had from each sleeping room, forty lockers are ranged around the walls. A boy on retiring for the night will place his clothes in one of the lockers. After all are in bed the night watchman will close and lock each of the lockers, so that any youngster who may be taken with a desire to sneak off in the night will have to get out into the world clad in nothing but his night robe, should he even succeed in getting outside the building. The upper floor of the extension is used for storage purposes, and the servants' rooms are in the extreme end of the extension. Each cottage is heated by steam and ventilated by the most improved system that engineering skill has devised. The boys will have breakfast and supper in the dining room of their own cottage, but the mid-day meal will be taken in one large dining room that will be connected with the central kitchen. The food will be placed on cars and pushed through the tunnel, which, in daytime, will be lighted from above by prisms set in concrete.

At the west end of the main street will be constructed the school building. This will be built entirely of stone and brick, and will be provided with ample lighting facilities. At the end of the street will be the power house. On the high knoll will eventually be constructed a gymnasium. No building at the home will be more than two stories high.

COUNTY BUILDING.

Geneva, the county-seat of Kane County, is located principally upon Section 3, Township 39, Range 8 East, and was largely covered by the original land claim of James Herrington, bought of the squatter, Daniel S. Haight. In 1836, at the first meeting of the County Commissioners, negotiations were opened between the Commissioners, of the one part, and James Herrington and three men—Hamilton, Madden and Daniels—who had acquired squatter's rights by location or by purchase from Herrington, of the other part, for the location of the county-seat. It was finally agreed, in substance, that the county-seat should be at Geneva; that the above named four men should furnish the money to pay for the tract of land, which should be entered and purchased at the land sale, by the county; that the county should retain one village block for county uses, and convey the remainder of the land to said four men in such portions as they should agree among themselves, and the said four men should pay to the county the sum of $3,000, with which to erect a court-house. Richard J. Hamilton, one of the men above named, contracted to build the court house for $3,000 and, in the spring of 1837, erected quite a pretentious looking wooden building upon the designated site, which appears upon the original plat of Geneva as the public square, instead of a number being designated by a star. It lies on the north side of State, between Third and Fourth Streets. The Commissioners, however, refused to accept the building at $3,000 and Isaac Wilson, Gen. George McClure and Harry Boardman were selected by mutual agreement to arbitrate the question. They placed the value of the building at $2,300, awarding the county several village lots as a consideration for the remaining $700.

Mr. James Herrington, who was one of the most enterprising of the early settlers, died in 1839, but the money to pay for the land, and also for the court-house, was furnished as agreed, and the land was duly purchased in the name of the county. Mark W. Fletcher was selected to convey to the representatives of said four persons, in such proportions as were agreed upon by them, the lands not contracted for being reserved for the county—all of which was satisfactorily accomplished.

This building was destroyed by fire—probably in 1843—and in 1844 the second court-house, a substantial two-story stone structure, was erected on the southeast corner of Block 52. The lower floor of this building was used as the jail and jailer's residence. A small stone building, nearly fire-proof, was erected some twenty feet south of the court-house for the Clerk's office, and for the preservation of the county records. This court-house building is now used as the City Hall.

The third court-house was erected in 1856 on Block 57 of the Geneva plat, at a cost of about $125,000 and was a very handsome dressed stone structure, with buttressed chimneys, arched ornate windows and turret-like cupola. In style, arrangement and construction it was considered a model building. Its first story also was fitted up for the jail and jailer's residence. It was destroyed by fire, March 13, 1890, and the present magnificent court-house and separate jail were built upon the same site. The corner-stone was laid April 9, 1891, and in it was deposited a list of the names of the county officers from 1835 to 1888; a copy of statistics of the building committee of the Board of Supervisors and of the Board of Equalization; abstracts of the assessment and of the taxes of 1890; copies of a $1,000 and a $500 court-house bond; a cut of the court-house and of the electric car, Aurora; a bible and a number of school-books now in use; the course of study in Illinois public schools, and samples of work done in the schools and kindergartens of the county; also various coins, with copies of The Aurora News, Post, Express, Beacon, Democrat and Volksfreund; The Batavia News; The Dundee Courier and Hawkeye; The Elgin News, Courier and Volksfreund; The Geneva Republican and Patrol; The Hampshire Register, and The St. Charles Chronicle; also of The Chicago Inter Ocean, Tribune, Herald, and The New York Herald. The completed building was dedicated by direction of the Board of Supervisors, September 30, 1892, with quite elaborate exercises conducted by T. N. Holden, Chairman of the Board, presiding, and Supervisor A. T. Lewis, acting master of ceremonies. Supervisor C. E. Mann, for the building committee, architects and builders, reported the structure to be 210x110 feet in size, and 110 feet high, from foundation to dome, the rotunda forty-six feet square, and the base of dome fifty feet square. The court-house cost $194,000, the jail $33,000, and the furnishings $25,000. Mr. Mann briefly reviewed the labor of its erection and formally presented the completed structure, to the Board of Supervisors and the citizens of the county, whom they represented. Chairman Holden, in behalf of the Board and the people, accepted the beautiful edifice, and gracefully thanked the persons represented by Supervisor Mann for the efficient and highly satisfactory accomplishment of their various duties, and heartily congratulated them, and the citizens of the county generally, upon the successful completion, without an accident of any kind, or disturbing complication, of the noble structure before them. He then introduced the Hon. N. N. Ravlin, for many years Supervisor from Kaneville, and Chairman of the Board, who spoke in behalf of the old citizens, industrial interests, and people generally; Hon. Charles Wheaton, representing the Bar; Gen. John S. Wilcox, whose theme was the military and patriotic sentiment and record of the county; Hon. Albert J. Hopkins, who spoke of its political action, and Hon. David B. Sherwood as the representative of the Judiciary. It was a large assembly of the leading people of the county, and there were the usual accompaniments of music, refreshments and general congratulations. The building defies just adverse criticism, and competent judges declare that, for appropriate architectural appearance, substantial construction, spacious and convenient arrangement and elegant finish, it is unsurpassed by any court-house in the State. About $25,000 has been spent since its erection in more completely furnishing and elaborately decorating it. The very complete, and tasteful appearing Sheriff's residence and jail is constructed of red pressed brick with heavy red sandstone trimmings, uniform in material and style with the adjacent court-house, and is equipped with all modern conveniences. It is handsomely finished and is furnished with the most perfect appliances for the safety, and secure keeping of prisoners. The Court-House Square is kept a neat lawn, shaded with handsome trees; and the broad white cement curbs and walks that surround it and lead to the entrances of the building are of the best possible material and construction.

ALMS-HOUSE.

For a number of years after the organization of Kane County the Commissioners' Court supported the unfortunate poor separately, by paying individuals a small compensation for their care in private homes. In the spring of 1852 the Board appointed M. Mallory, John S. Lee and Andrew Puigree a committee to select and recommend a suitable farm to be purchased for alms-house purposes. Upon the issue of their report a farm of 179 acres, lying in Sections 11 and 14 in Geneva Township, was purchased of Elijah Lee at $16 per acre. Supervisor Mix of Aurora negotiated the purchase and made such changes in the building thereon as were deemed necessary, and, in June of that year, James Hotchkiss, its first Superintendent, began to receive inmates. There were, however, many demands pressing upon the county; the tremendous strain of the great war came on, and the needs of the "poor farm" were doubtless neglected. In 1871 a large permanent stone structure was erected at a cost of about $18,000 and, later, an extensive addition to this building was put up. In 1887 the western portion of the building was destroyed by fire, and then the whole structure was remodeled, rebuilt and very greatly enlarged and improved. The next year Mr. S. E. Keyes was appointed Superintendent, and under his intelligent and energetic supervision, the Board systematized and perfected the equipment, and conduct of the institution, until it is conceded by all visiting officers and committees, that Kane County has as complete provison for the kindly care of its needy and afflicted people as can be demanded by the most philanthropic sentiment.

There are now 245 acres of excellent farmland most beautifully located, with three large stone buildings of modern style and construction, three stories high, with iron and slate roofs, equipped with standpipes, hose and all facilities for preventing and extinguishing fires. A large, deep well furnishes a copious supply of excellent water that, of course, is freely conducted throughout the buildings and grounds. Up-to-date steam and electric plants furnish power, heat and light for all the various uses about the place, and also for lighting the court-house and jail at Geneva. There are 92 male and 79 female inmates; more than half of them—viz.: 55 men and 50 women—are considered mildly insane. Mrs. Eliza Smith Keyes is matron, and she has associated with her five assistants. Two of them attend the insane women; one cares for the old and feeble; another conducts the laundry, and the fifth is in the Superintendent's kitchen. The large and well-ventilated rooms are very comfortably furnished and scrupulously clean and sunny, and no prison or hospital odor whatever can be detected. The pantry, kitchen, and dining room are clean and wholesome, and an appearance of comfort and abundance prevails everywhere. The cooling and cold-storage room for fresh meats is of the very best pattern, and the great quarters of meat upon its hooks are of the best quality. The matron's cold pantry for butter, eggs, fruits, etc., is a great economy and convenience. There is an excellent cattle and hay-barn, and fairly good stables for the horses, while the original dwelling shelters the swine. The horses upon the place are estimated to be worth about $1,200 and the cattle and hogs $4,000. To the latter such care has been given to selecting and properly rearing animals of the best strain of blood, that each year a number of choice breeding animals are sold at high prices. Much small fruits, and all the vegetables, meat, milk, eggs, etc., required for the tables, are produced upon the farm, and sufficient milk is sold to buy the needed butter. Every day the inmates are supplied with a generous portion of fruit. Of course all grain and hay for the stock is raised upon the farm. As much of the work as is proper, is done by the more healthy inmates. The Superintendent employs two assistant farmers, two attendants in charge of insane men, and one night watchman and attendant; also one electrician, one engineer and one cook. The plant is estimated to be worth $100,000.

CHAPTER XIV.

HIGHWAYS—POSTOFFICES—THE PRESS.

TREND OF ROADS TO THE NORTHWEST—INDIAN TRAILS DEVELOP INTO STAGE LINES AND STATE ROADS—ROAD LAWS—ADVENT OF THE RAILROAD—GALENA & CHICAGO UNION AND OTHER PIONEER LINES—POSTOFFICES AND POST ROUTES—INAUGURATION OF FREE DELIVERY SYSTEM—NEWSPAPER HISTORY.

In ancient times it was said, boastingly, that "all roads led to Rome." It is certain that in the ages gone by, as well as now, all trails and paths from the Great West and Northwest converged toward the foot of the vast chain of the largest lakes in the world, and the short land-portage between them and the long water-route of the interior rivers to the gulf. The paths of the buffalo and trails of the Indian instinctively followed the lines of least obstruction; and, as naturally, the roads of the pioneers kept on the same track. The most casual observer of the map of Kane County will note the trend of all the main highways to be northwesterly from the river crossings at the cities, and more carefully examination will show that these are usually located at the places where the animals and the Indians had discovered the fords most accessible and convenient. Along the river banks, and from those leading toward the northwest, the early settlers followed the trails, gradually by travel developing them into roads. By bridging small streams and draining and turn-piking sloughs, these have been straightened and constantly improved, and as necessity arose they have been connected by convenient cross-roads. Under progressive legislation all have been legalized, and thus has been steadily evolved our present net-work of highways.

The incidents of the early efforts to improve these trails and incipient roads, and sufficiently divert them from their original line, to bring travel to the new taverns and projected villages, are numerous and full of interest. Two are given as typical of many others. In 1836 McCarty Mill (now Aurora) obtained its mail at Naperville, and Frink & Walker's stage line from Chicago westward crossed the Fox at Gray's Ferry, now Montgomery. The McCartys cut and blazed the trees, staked the prairies and roughly corduroyed the worst sloughs, from Naperville through their prospective town to a crossing of the Big Rock Creek, and furnished the stage-drivers and their teams with board for a month in consideration of the change of the route to their place. And the Giffords at State Road (now Elgin), in the fall or winter of 1835, blazed and cleared a way through the timber eastward toward Meacham's Grove (Bloomingdale), and planned a novel celebration of the next Fourth of July, by arranging to have the people at each end of the route turn out en masse, hitching teams to plows and to trees as large as could be drawn with the limbs still on, and to every available wagon, and with these mark the way, crush down the bushes and the grass, and trample the pathway from each end to the meeting place, where the first patriotic celebration in the county was held with much enthusiasm, and social refreshments of corn-bread, salt-pork and coffee were heartily enjoyed. The Giffords also marked a roadway in a somewhat similar manner westward across Coon Creek, and, it is said, to the ford of the Kishwaukee near Belvidere. Soon after, both they and the McCartys, with profound satisfaction, saw Frink & Walker's four-horse stage-coaches, with passengers and mails, passing daily over these new roadways through their prospective villages. The early securing of these stage-lines gave prominence and permanence to the locations of Aurora and Elgin.

It is also interesting and suggestive to note the vague and broad authority conferred by the early Legislatures upon commissions appointed to locate highways. For instance, one legislative act, in force April 13, 1849, appoints nineteen separate commissions for such purpose. Paragraph 15 appoints "Elijah Wilcox, Augustus Adams and Luther Herrick, of Kane County, commissioners to view and locate a State road, commencing at a point on the State road between Elgin and Sycamore, thence to the village of Clinton (now South Elgin), thence across Fox River to the State road between Elgin and the Des Plaines River." The compensation authorized for the persons engaged in this work was: "To a commissioner $1 per day; to a surveyor, $2; to chainmen, axemen and other hands, 75 cents, for each day necessarily employed." The large latitude given as to terminals and the small pay allowed—especially to the commissioners, as compared with present-day methods and compensation—are significant of the changed conditions.

In dry weather, if not sufficiently travelled to become very dusty, the "dirt roads" of the olden time were most delightful; but when softened by rain, they were quickly changed to a thick, pasty mud, and readily cut into deep uneven ruts. As these hardened—either baked by the summer sun or frozen by the winter winds—the track became most terribly rough and exceedingly trying to driver, team and vehicle. The old-time stories of prying the wagons and stage-coaches out of the mud and ruts are not exaggerations, but the actual realities of many severe experiences.

The improvement of the highways by the county was commenced at the first meeting of the County Commissioners in 1836. At that time there was not one legally established highway in the county, and there was no individual ownership of land. The Commissioners divided the county into road districts, and appointed "pathmasters," or supervisors, and they passed an order requiring every able-bodied man, between the ages of twenty-one and fifty years, to work three days each year upon the public roads. Provision was made to accept substitutes, needful material, or cash, in lieu of individual work, and for off-setting the use of teams and tools.

Men held different views then as now. Mr. B. and Mr. R. were neighbors and friends, living in the same school and highway district, and both were usually school and highway officers. At the school meetings B. insisted seventy-five cents per week, and "board round," was sufficient compensation for the young women teachers, while R. contended they should receive at least $1 per week. B.'s scraper was used just one week upon the roads, and he brought in a bill of $6 for its use. R. declared it too much, and B. said that "scrapers cost money" and that the charge was reasonable, to which R. replied: "Well, B., you have very strange ideas; you think a woman capable of teaching your children and mine is worth less than one-sixth as much as your confounded old scraper."

The method of establishing and maintaining the highways has been changed by State and county legislation to the present system, which places the whole process in the hands of the Township Highway Commissioners, with provision for appeal from their rulings, and provides for carrying a specific percentage tax for the construction of the roads and bridges. Under the statutes, however, option is granted to townships as to this change; and some of those in which but few and small bridges are needed, and consequently little need for cash expenditures exists, prefer to remain under the old system. The necessity for delivering milk daily and promptly at the factories and shipping stations, imperatively required a radical improvement of the highways, and fortunately nearly every road district in the county has banks of excellent gravel, with which it is possible to construct the very best road-beds. The very general—even though brief—popularity of the bicycle greatly stimulated the improvement of the roads, and the more recent introduction of the automobile will strongly tend in the same direction. Every one of the "old State roads"—a designation once very significant but now almost obsolete—which means nearly all the main thoroughfares running northwesterly from the river towns, are well drained and heavily piked with gravel, as also are very many of the cross roads. The principal highways of every township are now in fine condition—rain or shine, in summer or in winter—and it is very doubtful if there is a county in the State with better roads than Kane.

RAILWAYS.—The first railway train to enter the county came over the spur-track, which branched from the track of the old Galena & Chicago Union Railroad line about three miles northwest of Turner Junction, now West Chicago. It rolled proudly up to the depot at St. Charles on December 12, 1849—a memorable day in the annals of the county. The railway station was some forty or more rods southeasterly of the present elegant high school building, and a part of the old engine house near it still remains. This track was soon after extended to Geneva, and the old long building east of Bennett's large flouring-mill served as the depot and freight-house. From its platform Stephen A. Douglas addressed a large asemblage of people from all parts of the county in the early 'fifties. The operation of these lines ceased about 1857. In February, 1850, a train of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad first reached Elgin. (The careful reader will note that Galena was the important point and Chicago secondary.) It was a gala day, observed with appropriate public exercises. About two years was required to accumulate sufficient financial strength for its extension, and during that time Elgin remained the busy, hustling western terminal.

The "Aurora Branch Railroad" was built in 1850-51, from Turner Junction, via Batavia, to Aurora, and after consolidation with other similar corporations, finally became a part of the great Chicago, Burlington & Quincy System, and in 1855 was extended to the Mississippi River. Soon after the direct line to Chicago was constructed and opened for traffic.

The "Dixon Air-Line" Division of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad was constructed through Geneva in 1853, and in that year work was commenced on the "Fox River Valley Railroad," connecting Elgin with Geneva Lake, Wis., in order to reach the pine lumber region. This enterprise moved very slowly. As a bit of road-bed was graded, it was covered with widely separated ties upon which wooden stringers were placed, instead of the "T rail" of today, and a flat bar of iron spiked to these stringers, called "strap-rail," was the temporary and dangerous bearing prepared for the wheels to roll upon. The ends of these strap-rails, becoming loosened, would occasionally be caught upon the upper side of a rolling wheel and come crashing up through the car-floor. They were called "Snake-heads," and were a terror to the few passengers on the line; although by reason of the slow movement of the trains not many serious accidents occurred. These were the pioneer roads; wood was the fuel used, and the earlier coaches consisted of a single apartment with no retiring rooms whatever. Yet these trains were considered marvels of comfort and speed. Now the lines of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy pass through the townships and towns of Aurora, Batavia, Geneva, Sugar Grove and Big Rock and the village of Montgomery. The Iowa Division of the Chicago & North-Western passes through the townships and towns of Geneva, Batavia, Aurora, St. Charles, Blackberry, Kaneville and Virgil, and the stations of LaFox, Elburn and Maple Park; the Chicago Great Western through the townships and towns of St. Charles, Campton and Virgil, and the stations of Wasco, Lily Lake and Richardson; the Illinois Central runs through the townships of St. Charles, Elgin, Plato and Burlington, and the villages of Coleman, East Plato, Plato Center and Burlington; the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul passes through the townships of Elgin, Plato, Rutland and Hampshire, and the stations of Elgin, Almora, McQueen, Pingree Grove, Sunset and Hampshire; and the Freeport & Lake Geneva lines of the Chicago & North-Western pass through the townships of St. Charles, Elgin, Almora, Gilberts, Dundee and Carpentersville. Except the two last mentioned, these are great trunk lines running frequent and fast trains. Over these tracks, rushing from ocean to ocean, roll the solid vestibuled "flyers," provided with every known appliance to insure safety and speed, and equipped with every possible provision for elegant comfort that has yet been devised. Marvelous, indeed, has been the transition within the memory of many still living.

There are over 166 miles of steam railway main-track within Kane County, and they reach every township in the county. There are also about sixty-eight miles of electric railway in the county, and, beside the frequent up and down the river trips, Aurora, Batavia and Elgin have a regular half-hour service with Chicago over their lines, with a maximum single fare of fifty cents, and a round-trip for seventy-five cents. Every city and village in the county is connected by telegraph with stations in all parts of the world, while a net-work of telephone lines brings the homes of both town and country residents into close relation with all the business and social needs and pleasures of life.

POST ROUTES.—The first mail carrier, other than the regular four-horse stages, in Kane County, was familiarly known as "Daddy Wilson," who in 1837-38 made a trip once in two weeks from La Fox (Herrington's Ford) to Naperville, carrying the mail in his hat or pockets. A little later the people of St. Charles hired a man to convey the mail to and from Elgin, where the daily line of stages made connection with Chicago. In the same way the people at McCarty's Mill had, for a time, obtained their mail from Naperville. As offices off these stage lines were established, their patrons and postmasters made arrangements for conveying the trifling—as to amount, but intensely interesting—mail to and from the offices on the stage-routes.

Soon after the transfer of the mail transportation from the stages to the railways, the Postoffice Department arranged many of these short lines throughout the country—from the railway station offices to interior offices—into groups called "star routes." A "star route" frequently included a score or more of short lines, some of which were hundreds of miles apart. The transportation of mail over each of these groups was let to the lowest bidder in sealed proposals, and the successful bidder sublet the carrying to local contractors. The short lines in Kane County were so grouped, and frequently—if not always—let to the contractors of whom our people never heard, but who, through the Department and the postmaster, arranged with the local carrier and paid him for his services, the contractor himself never appearing. If the plan was not conceived in iniquity, it developed much fraud and brought great shame upon the Department.

The free-delivery of mail began about 1887, and Aurora, Batavia and Elgin now have frequent deliveries each day. The first rural delivery route in the county was authorized in 1902, and this great convenience now reaches nearly every township. To those who can still recall the expense, delay, uncertainty, inconvenience and sometimes severe hardship incurred by the pioneer in sending out and receiving their small amount of mail—when a journey of a whole day and far into the night, over a roadless, unsettled country, was cheerfully endured for the sake of obtaining precious letters from the old home, and where the wages of a day's labor were paid for postage—the marvelous change to the certainty, celerity and cheapness of the present postal service reads like a fairy tale.

POST OFFICES.—As accurately as can be ascertained, the dates of establishment, discontinuance and changes in the postoffices of the county, with the names of the first postmasters, have been as follows:

La Fox—December 31, 1836, Henry A. Miller, P. M.; changed to Geneva.

Aurora—March 2, 1837, Burr Winton, P. M.

Elgin—July 19, 1837, James T. Gifford, P. M.

Waterville—November 23, 1838, Horace Bancroft, P. M.; changed to St. Charles.

Deerfield (in Rutland)—December 3, 1838, Alfred Standish, P. M.; discontinued August 18, 1841.

Acasto (in Big Rock)—February 9, 1839, Orson Brooks, P. M.; discontinued November 12, 1849.

St. Charles (from Waterville)—February 28, 1839, Horace Bancroft, P. M.

Lily Lake—November 5, 1839, John Scott, P. M.; changed to Avon.

Udina—December 30, 1839, Asa Merrill, P. M.; discontinued November 9, 1868; reestablished January 29, 1869, and again discontinued.

Blackberry—April 8, 1840, David Wheeler, P. M.; changed to Elburn.

Avon (in Campton)—April 20, 1840, Milton S. Cline, P. M.; late Lily Lake.

Berkshire (in Plato)—June 13, 1840, John Griggs, P. M.; discontinued July 6, 1857.

Batavia—February 6, 1841, Isaac Wilson, P. M.

Hampshire—February 27, 1841, Enoch O. Garland, P. M.

Dundee—September 3, 1841, George W. Hoit, P. M.

Little Woods (in St. Charles)—May 28, 1842, E. W. Brewster, P. M.; changed July 7, 1853, to Wayne, DuPage County.

Rees (in Kaneville)—September 27, 1845, Alfred W. Churchill, P. M.; discontinued August 16, 1849.

King's Mill (in Campton)—December 22, 1845, Thomas E. Dodge, P. M.; changed to Gray Willow.

Canning—May 26, 1846, Samuel Worcester, P. M.; discontinued October 5, 1848.

Burlington—May 28, 1846, John W. Ellithorp, P. M.

Schneider's Mill—December 28, 1846, John Peter Schneider, P. M.; discontinued November 7, 1848.

Grouse (Sugar Grove)—September 13, 1847, Marcus White, P. M.; discontinued September 27, 1858; reestablished, January 10, 1859, William Thompson, P. M.; again discontinued.

Jericho (Sugar Grove)—December 8, 1847, Isaac S. Fitch, P. M.; discontinued November 12, 1849; reestablished, January 8, 1850, Isaac S. Fitch, P. M.; discontinued May 11, 1886.

Montgomery—January 20, 1848, Ralph Gray, P. M.

Pingree Grove—March 6, 1848, Andrew Pingree, P. M.

Banner (in Rutland)—July 28, 1848, John McKay, P. M.; discontinued.

Kaneville—August 10, 1848, Nicanor N. Ravlin, P. M.

Fayville (St. Charles Township)—January 18, 1848, Rice Fay, P. M.; discontinued September 25, 1851.

Swinton (in Campton)—July 24, 1849, Henry Warne, P. M.; discontinued August 1, 1854.

Collamer (in Virgil)—August 16, 1849, Milton Thorne, P. M.; changed to New Virgil.

Geneva (from La Fox)—April 9, 1850, Albert W. Glass, P. M.

Big Rock—May 23, 1850, Robert Summers, P. M.; discontinued January 23, 1855; reestablished March 23, 1855, Joshua Rhodes, P. M.

Winthrop (Sugar Grove Township)—August 12, 1850, Samuel S. Ingham, P. M.; discontinued May 16, 1865.

Clintonville—September 26, 1851, G. M. Woodbury, P. M.; changed to South Elgin.

Campton—October 27, 1851, Elbridge Walker, P. M.; discontinued December 27, 1860; reestablished December 11, 1865, William A. Lindsay, P. M.; changed to Lily Lake.

Hibernian (in Rutland)—June 21, 1852, Dennis Ryan, P. M.; discontinued July 6, 1853.

Lodi Station—March 31, 1854, Zachariah Hathorne, P. M.; changed to Maple Park.

New Plato—January 7, 1854, Stephen Archer, P. M.; discontinued November 7, 1870.

New Virgil (from Collamer)—January 7, 1854, William H. Robinson, P. M.; discontinued August 2, 1864.

Rutland—January 7, 1854, John B. Eakin, P. M.; changed to Gilbert's.

West Burlington—January 27, 1854, Amos A. Brown, P. M.; discontinued November 14, 1854.

North Plato—April 6, 1855, Freeman Temple, P. M.; discontinued May 6, 1867; reestablished April 26, 1869, John Eastman, P. M.

East Campton—April 28, 1862, Edward W. Miller, P. M.; discontinued January 21, 1865.

Carpentersville—February 4, 1863, Julius A. Carpenter, P. M.

East Burlington—April 1, 1865, John Green, P. M.; discontinued.

Gray Willow (from King's Mill)—September 20, 1869, Philo Plummer, P. M.; discontinued 1887.

North Aurora (Schneider's Mill)—January 18, 1869, Alex H. Stone, P. M.

Riverside (late Fayville)—July 27, 1870, Thomas Alexander, P. M.; changed to Silver Glen.

Gilbert's (from Rutland)—August 26, 1870, John Martin, P. M.

Plato Corners—September 30, 1870, George H. Thompson, P. M.; discontined December 5, 1871.

Silver Glen (from Riverside)—November 7,

1870, Thomas Alexander, P. M.; discontinued July 9, 1873.

Holstein (in Hampshire)—July 6, 1876, Lucy J. Whiting, P. M.; discontinued July 7, 1884.

South Elgin (from Clintonville)—December 22, 1876, Mary O. Farrell, P. M.

Plato Center—May 18, 1877, Louisa J. Hanson, P. M.

Maple Park (from Lodi Station)—February 18, 1880, Norton Snow, P. M.

Padel (in Elgin Township)—September 28, 1881, Albert Gilbert, P. M.; changed to Spring Valley.

Spring Valley (from Padel)—Albert Gilbert, P. M.; changed to Almora.

Almora (from Spring Valley)—December 16, 1885, Albert Gilbert, P. M.

Sunset (in Rutland)—April 30, 1883, Philip Hemrick, P. M.

McQueen—March 9, 1885, John A. McQueen, P. M.

Elburn (from Blackberry)—February 26, 1886, Milton S. Cline, P. M.

Lily Lake (from Campton)—June 6, 1887, Morton J. Springer, P. M.

Wasco—September 1, 1887, George Bergland, P. M.

Richardson—February 11, 1888, E. C. Connor, P. M.

East Plato—1889, A. H. Fairchild, P. M.

Youngsdale—1889, Smith Young, P. M.

The Presidential and money-order offices in the county, with salaries of incumbents, are: Aurora, $3,100; Batavia, $2,500; Dundee, $1,600; Elgin, $3,200; Geneva, $1,800; St. Charles, $2,100; and Hampshire, $———. The next class, also including money-order offices, are: Big Rock, Burlington, Carpentersville, Elburn, Lily Lake, Maple Park, Montgomery, North Aurora, Pingree Grove, South Elgin, Sugar Grove and Wasco. The offices not authorized to issue money orders are: Almora, Bald Mound, East Plato, Gilbert's, Kaneville, McQueen, Plato Center, Richardson, Sunset, Virgil and Youngsdale. Each of the thirty offices transmits registered mail. The cash receipts of the Elgin Office for the year ending March 31, 1903, were $113,774.54, the third largest in the State, as the receipts of the Chicago and Peoria offices alone exceeded that amount.

THE PRESS.—Not only do the number of churches, schools and libraries indicate the mental activity of the people of Kane County, but the numerous newspapers that have been, and are now, being issued within its borders, further demonstrates it. We cannot be assured that we have discovered all of them, but we find eighteen journals to have begun their more or less extended career at Aurora; seven at Batavia; seven at Geneva; twenty-one at St. Charles; forty-seven at Elgin; six at Dundee; two at Hampshire, and two at Elburn—a total of 110. The number now published in different cities and villages are as follows: Aurora, nine; Batavia, two; Geneva, two; St. Charles, two; Elgin, twenty-six; Dundee, two; Hampshire, one; Elburn, one—in all forty-five.

The David C. Cook Publishing Company alone issues 1,060,000 weekly copies, and its list of monthly and quarterly periodicals brings the number of regular issues to the immense aggregate of 2,500,000. Beside this vast work, it is constantly sending forth tons, and scores of tons of leaflets, cards and printed sheets of various kinds. In intellectual matter, material, arrangement, illustrations and mechanical execution, these are, each and all, of the highest character, and most perfect type known to the editor's desk and the printer's art. Some of the immense and complicated presses seem almost endowed with human capacities. The daily and less frequent issues of other publications in the county approximate 50,000 copies.

Who will attempt to portray the brain work—the life force—expended upon publications that have been in advance of the public needs, and have thus failed to receive material support; the high hopes and fine aspirations that have withered and died; the sad disappointments and keen anguish involved? Their projectors were persons of unusual mental endowment and sensibility, and their sufferings at the failure of their earnest endeavors were correspondingly keen. All through the early years in the history of Kane County, we had pioneer editors and printers well worthy of long and grateful remembrance. Midway down the line of the vanished years stands the pathetic form of Dudley Randall—familiar in every river town—a genial, talented, generous man, who saw fair visions and dreamed bright dreams that were never to be attained or realized. Poor "Dud" Randall! fine type of a class of brainy men who did much to advance the intellectual life of the people, and who passed from sight in poverty and public neglect, amid the ruins of his unattained ideals. Others there were, some of whom are still with us, whose financial fortune has been almost as sad as his; yet neither he nor they have lived and wrought in vain; for old friends still hold them in grateful memory, and their moral and intellectual force made large and lasting—even if untraced and unrewarded—impress for good upon the hearts and minds of the people. The impartial historian cannot fail to give high meed of praise to the intellectual, moral and public-spirited persons who have conducted, and who still manage, the public press of the county.

To St. Charles belongs the honor of issuing the first publication in the Fox River valley. In that then frontier hamlet, on the 15th day of December, 1841—while far the larger portion of the adjacent lands still belonged to the Government, and a year before these lands came into market in Elgin and many of the other townships—the Revs. William Rounseville and Seth Barnes began the publication of a religious weekly newspaper called the "Better Covenant." Some years later the office was removed to Chicago, and subsequently its name was changed to the "New Covenant," and again to the "Universalist." In 1897 it was consolidated with another similar periodical, and the office removed to Boston, Mass., where it is now published as the "Universalist Leader." It is an interesting historical fact that that first paper of the county has never missed its weekly appearance, is still a welcome messenger to many homes in the county of its birth, and stands upon a broader and more permanent basis than ever before.

CHAPTER XV.

LEGAL AND MEDICAL PROFESSIONS.

ANECDOTES OF EARLY COURTS AND COURT OFFICERS —FIRST JUDGES OF KANE COUNTY CIRCUIT COURT —NOTABLE MEMBERS OF THE BAR—PIONEER PHYSICIANS AND THEIR HARDSHIPS—PERSONAL HISTORY AND REMINISCENCES.

Elderly people are quite liable to think "there were giants in those days," and so there were; but we should not forget that the men and women of today are certainly the peers, and in some respects the superiors, of those of the yesterdays. There have been great changes in methods and requirements, as the inevitable result of experience and development, and if people have not changed for the better with the advanced methods and improving conditions, then Christianity is a sham and civilization a failure. In those embryonic days the courts had comparatively few guiding precedents, and taking the crude statutes of the Legislature and the fundamental principles of the common law as the basis of their decisions, they marked the legal trail of the frontier State. Each Judge was, in far larger measure than now, "a law unto himself" and unto his court; and at times the early court officers had ways peculiarly their own. One of the first constables, who always buckled upon himself an old sword when attending court or serving processes, furnished an example of the latter, while a sturdy Scotch magistrate, who insisted upon "instructing the jury" in imitation of the Circuit Judge, afforded an illustration of the former. Upon one occasion counsel objected to the method of the aspiring dispenser of justice so vehemently that at length the latter exclaimed, "Weel, Muster Freedley, sin' ye are sa strenuous aboot et, a'hle note enstruct the juree, but this aa weel say: ye've made a verra bad case o' et."

In another instance two Justices, sitting as a court, found a prisoner guilty of grand larceny, and sentenced him to two years' confinement in the penitentiary at Alton. The constable actually took him a day's journey on the way to prison, when learning the magistrates had no jurisdiction, he turned the prisoner loose. In still another instance, the defendant's counsel cited the statute of limitations clearly barring the case; and the Justice replied, "well, Judge, that appears to be the law; but I'll be d—d to h—l if I don't make that dandy young fellow pay this poor wash-woman," and he did.

Judges Ford, Caton and Dickey, who held the first terms of the circuit court of Kane County, were very able men and sound jurists; and they deservedly rose to high distinction, while T. B. Blackstone, Onslow Peters, Burton C. Cook, and others, who practiced before them, were brilliant lawyers; but as the old custom of the lawyers to accompany the court through the circuit passed away, they were succeeded by men resident in the county who were versatile scholars and able lawyers. John F. Farnsworth, William B. Plato, Sylvanus Wilcox and Benjamin F. Fridley were men of strong personality, incorruptible integrity, and profoundly versed in the law, while many of their early associates possessed great strength in certain lines of practice. Few men are endowed with so brilliant oratorical gifts as Col. E. S. Joslyn possessed, and very few lawyers had such audacity and instant keenness in the trial of a case as Augustus M. Herrington.

The other members of the bar who met these men in the sharp contests before the courts, and successfully competed with them for practice in the various communities of the county, were capable and resourceful lawyers, cultivated gentlemen and leaders in the educational forces in their respective places of residence. Each in his own distinct personality they stand clearly outlined in the horizon of memory, and their names, familiar as household words, appeal almost irresistibly for mention. But with the mighty procession of the ages, they have passed down the ceaseless current of time, and their number forbids the mention of each individually. Judge R. G. Montony, Hon. Charles Wheaton and Judge R. N. Botsford, who were in active practice within the later years of that generation of lawyers, alone remain actively engaged in their profession; and, with well deserved honor, they are regarded as the Nestors of the present able bar. B. F. Fridley and Judge William D. Barry were the most unique characters of the first Kane County lawyers, and while each possessed a peculiar and undefinable dignity, they persisted —consciously or unconsciously—in the speech and manners of the frontier. Innumerable stories are told of their quaint utterances. It was Fridley who said that "he didn't know of any statute law agin a man makin' a blank fool of himself." And, again, when overruled in his contention before the court upon some question of law, and reminded by the presiding Judge of his right to appeal to the Court of Errors, he remarked, sotto voce, yet in an audible tone, that "if this was not a 'court of errors,' it would be mighty difficult to find one." The peculiar tone and manner that gave unique pungency to many similar utterances cannot be imitated.

Great changes have occurred in the thirty or more years since these men were in the prime of their powers, and a much more numerous and, under changed conditions, equally able bar has taken their places. Then books and precedents were comparatively few and special lines of practice almost unknown. A good lawyer had to meet all the requirements of the office, the court and the jury, whether along chancery, civil or criminal lines of practice. No printed forms of bills, declarations or indictments, nor of cross bills, answers, pleas, demurrers or motions of any kind were furnished him by the Clerk of the Court or at the stationer's counter. He had to prepare all court papers himself. His annotations and cross-references to authorities, examined in preparing briefs, were penciled by himself upon the margin of the pages of the few available books in his scant library. Studiously read and thoroughly grounded in the principles of law, the pioneer lawyer was forced by the environment to depend very largely upon his own personal effort and strength to impress his individual deductions and views upon both Judge and jury. Hence, there was wider scope for the personal effort of the ambitious practitioner, probably, than now. They were erecting the frame-work of the spacious Temple of Justice, in whose separate apartments the practitioner of today, with more numerous helps, finer polish and, perhaps, equal or greater skill, performs his special function. The bench of Kane County has always respected and admired its able Bar; and the pride of the Bar has ever been a wise and discreet and impartial judiciary. Both Bench and Bar are worthy of the best estate of their predecessors and rank well with those of any other county of the State.

MEDICAL PRACTITIONERS.—The pioneer doctors led especially strenuous lives. Their patients were very widely separated, and pinchingly poor. But generally the doctors were robust young men, full of courage and resources, and they did not greatly mind the storms, sloughs, fords and long night-rides. Except the very few old settlers left, and the veterans of the great War, there are not many persons now in Kane County who can at all realize the utter darkness of a stormy night in an unsettled country. Probably not one person in a hundred ever experienced the sensation of being in absolute solitude except for the presence of his faithful horse, in the complete blackness of a stormy night, where not one ray of light pierced the gloom, amid the loneliness and silence of an uninhabited locality. How many of our excellent young physicians of today would be willing, on such a night and in such environments—or even if there were kindly stars in the sky—to mount his horse and set forth to find his patient twelve or fifteen miles in the country, where streams were unbridged and so-called roads but a few wagon-tracks, branching off here and there to some settler's lonely cabin with but one little window—perhaps on the side away from the traveler, all as dark and obscure as the grove that shadowed it—his only companions a group of sneaking wolves that stealthily trailed his pathway? Dr. Joseph Tefft used to laugh heartily over one experience of this sort, when a little nervous over the number and close familiarity of a band of wolves that had followed him out, he picked up a convenient club at the corner of the cabin as he came away, and which having thrown down beside his stable-door as he alighted after reaching home, he found next day was the good woman's roughly fashioned rolling-pin.

But the patients of tnat day, as well as doctors, were usually persons in the prime of life, and the prevalent ailment was different forms of malarial fever—mighty vexatious but seldom dangerous or fatal—and the remedies to be administered from the doctor's ever-present saddle-bags were few and simple, even if powerful. One early settler being asked by a newcomer how he liked the country, replied that he "liked the few people first rate, and the big country was mighty fine; but after shaking down two or three shanties with the ague, he could not say he loved the climate."

It is very doubtful if there was a drug-store in the county as early as 1840; so each physician was compelled to procure a supply of medicinal drugs in their primary form, and from these to compound his own prescriptions and roll his own pills—not usually by careful weights and exact measurements, as now, but largely by guess as to quantities used. The frequent—perhaps common—measurement of a dose was "as much as would lay upon the blade of a pocket knife." Some knives were larger than others. The remedies used consisted largely of calomel, "blue mass" and other mercurial preparations; opium in its various forms and combinations; quinine and Peruvian bark; rhubarb, ipecac, jalap, tartar-emetic and Dover's powders.

In the villages there were no side-walks or street lamps; and the doctor waded through the black mud at night, carrying a tin-lantern that emitted thin streaks of the feeble light of a tallow home-made candle through little slit-like crevices punched in the tin for that purpose. The doctor was also sometimes called upon to act as both lawyer and minister. There were few facilities for caring for the sick and very little diversity of food for their nourishment. He grappled courageously with the high duties of his profession amid discouraging surroundings that would appal the practitioner of today. He treated all the ailments of the body and of each of its members. There were no specialists as yet. He was both surgeon and physician; and, without anaesthetics, he performed surgical operations with instruments most crude and rudimentary. The financial recompense for his services was very small, long delayed, and paid largely in products of the farm or shop, or in an order on the store. But he was entertained with the best his patients could command, was welcomed at every home, and blessed with a veneration and love that deepened with the passing years, and that is ever priceless. He lived as well, and accumulated as rapidly, as any of his neighbors; and his labors had rich compensation of respect and good will.

Allopathy was substantially the only "pathy" known in the pioneer days. In 1835 there was no Kane County, but in that year Dr. N. H. Palmer came into what is now Sugar Grove. Dr. Daniel Eastman—who was also a preacher, a lawyer and a Judge, and eminent in each office—settled in Aurora, and Dr. Joseph Tefft and Nathan Collins located in Elgin Township. It is quite impossible to state with definiteness which came first, but probably it was Dr. Palmer. It has been quite generally agreed, however, that Dr. Tefft made the first professional call, and prescribed for a young lady who became the loved and honored wife of Nathaniel Ladd, a highly respected citizen whose fine farm lay in the four townships of St. Charles, Campton, Plato and Elgin, where the family long resided and which remained the home of the father and mother during their lives. Dr. Collins removed to St. Charles in 1836, and was probably the first physician in that place, although Dr. Thomas P. Whipple purchased a claim in that township and began practice there the same year.

One of the best and most noted physicians of the county was Dr. Henry M. Crawford, who graduated from the Royal Belfast College in 1848, came immediately to America, and in the same year began his life-work at St. Charles. During the terrible scourge of Asiatic cholera, which prevailed in 1848 and 1854, his tender and daring devotion to the afflicted awakened the warmest gratitude and admiration, and his professional skill equalled his devotion and energy. He at once acquired a wide popularity and practice that grew with the passing years. In 1861 he became Surgeon of the Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was rapidly promoted to Brigade, Division, and Army Corps Surgeon, and to Chief of Hospitals. He died at his home in St. Charles on June 26, 1900, and his remains rest in the beautiful "Bluff City Cemetery" at Elgin. An artistic and durable marble monument, surmounted by a beautiful figure, representing most fittingly the Angel of Mercy, marks the grave of this knightly man.

In 1843 Dr. G. W. Richards opened a medical school at St. Charles, chartered as the Franklin Medical College. The only riot attended with fatal results that ever occurred in the county, was precipitated by the action of students of this school, taking place on the 19th day of April, 1849. John Rood, one of the medical students, and George W. Richards, a son of Dr. Richards, exhumed from her grave at Sycamore, for dissecting purposes, the body of Mrs. George M. Kenyon, a well-known young woman very recently married, and the daughter of David Churchill. The grave desecrators observed but little secrecy, and the outrage was quickly discovered. Plain traces indicated the purpose of the desecration and a party of one hundred or more indignant citizens started from Sycamore to recover the body and avenge the crime. Many St. Charles people were in full sympathy with them, and doubtless joined them; as it was said that fully two hundred excited men approached the Doctor's house and demanded the body which had been hurriedly taken from his barn and secreted in the woods half-way to Geneva. The Doctor boldy confronted them and, denying all knowledge of the transaction, resisted their attempts to search the premises. In the struggle that ensued shots were exchanged, and Rood, probably the most guilty person, was mortally wounded. The Doctor also received a wound which paralyzed one arm, and doubtless hastened his death. The mob withdrew, and the body was soon after restored to its friends untouched by the knife. The college was abandoned, and the Doctor removed to Dubuque, Iowa, where he died just four years later. The people of the whole county were intensely excited, not alone by the ghoulish nature of the affair, but also by the bold and brutal insolence of its perpetrators. While the belief was general that the Doctor had no previous knowledge of the intended crime, nearly all justified the measure of prompt retribution.

It is said that Dr. Charles Volney Dyer became a resident of Geneva in the early 'thirties and suggested the present name of that city; but he soon removed to Chicago, where he became very prominent in political, business and benevolent enterprises. He was the Free-Soil candidate for Governor in 1848. Many old citizens remember him as a man of fine humor and full of waggish jest. At a meeting of the projectors of one of Chicago's north shore suburbs, in which he was interested, various names for the place were proposed, embodying the name of an interested party; and the Doctor gravely remarked that he, too, cherished a laudable desire to send his name "thundering down through the corridors of time," which possibly might be accomplished by calling the town Dyerthea.

The first permanently resident physician of Geneva, however, was Dr. Henry A. Miller, a brother-in-law of Judge Isaac G. Wilson. In 1839 Dr. D. K. Town began medical practice at Batavia, and he at once became one of the most useful and influential men of the town and county. He was one of the founders of the Batavia Institute, which has greatly contributed to the prominence and character of the city and vicinity. Dr. John R. Goodnow was the first physician to locate at Dundee, coming in 1837. It is stated that one Dr. Smith opened the first medical office at Blackberry in 1856. Hampshire's first physician was Dr. Thomas E. Fowler, who came in 1850. Dr. Stephen R. Hyslop located at Kaneville as early as 1848, and in Virgil Township it is believed that Dr. Strong began practice in 1856. Dr. J. T. H. Brady and Dr. S. O. Long, were medical practitioners in Big Rock Township for many years, commencing about 1840. Dr. Latimer S. Tyler was the pioneer physician of Plato, where he began practice in 1836. Dr. I. W. Garvin was the first physician to locate in Burlington, and Dr. John King in Campton, where he built the "King's Mill" (a saw-mill). Dr. Tyler, at Udina, and Dr. Daniel Pingree, at Pingree's Grove, were so near Rutland that they, with the physicians of Elgin and Hampshire, attended the calls from that township, although it is said that one Dr. McKay settled and practiced there at an early day. He was probably the postmaster at Banner in 1848.

These men and their professional co-workers and successors have ever been active leaders in the developing enterprises of their respective localities, and their guiding minds and constructing influence is recorded upon all the pages of the progressive history of each township and city, as well as upon the records of the county. Dr. Anson L. Clark was, for many years, a member and Secretary of the State Board of Health. He is now and, for more than a score of years, has been the useful and honored President of Bennett Medical College.

CHAPTER XVI.

MILITARY HISTORY.

THE RECORD OF KANE COUNTY IN VARIOUS WARS—PATRIOTIC RESPONSE AFTER THE FIRING ON FORT SUMTER—LIST OF MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS AND COMMISSIONED OFFICERS—NUMBER OF VOLUNTEERS—PART OF THE COUNTY IN THE SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR—SOLDIERS' MONUMENTS.

A fine military and loyal spirit has been manifested by the people of Kane County upon all proper occasions. Many of its first settlers were sons of Revolutionary sires, who vividly recalled the stories told by their parents of the toils and perils of that long heroic struggle; and, under such inspiring impulses, the great anniversary of the Declaration of Independence has, from the very first settlement of the county, been ushered in as prophesied, "by the ringing of bells, the firing of guns and the glad shouts of a grateful people." Since the establishment of "Memorial Day," its tender and patriotic ceremonies have everywhere been observed along the broadest and most impressive lines. So complete cessation from the ordinary labors and business of life—so general abstinence from games and amusements—such ample and generous provisions for speakers, music, stands, seats and decoration—such wealth of wreaths and garlands of flowers—so general attendance of veterans and children, and such vast concourses of intelligent, appreciative people to join in all its sacred and beautiful services as characterize the annual celebration of this day, attest and demonstrate the patriotic devotion of the people of Kane County.

On the Sunday preceding Memorial Day, very many clergymen select for their discourses themes bearing upon the higher civic duties of life, and inciting love of liberty and devotion to country. In many schools prizes are offered for the best essays treating of the lives and characters of great Americans; and these are read, and the prizes publicly awarded, as an interesting part of an afternoon program of patriotic school exercises. The school children proudly take a prominent part in honoring the surviving veterans, and in decorating the graves of the sleeping heroes. Flag Day is most fittingly observed by the schools generally. So the men and women of tomorrow are being taught the cost and value of liberty and native land, the horrors of war and the blessings of peace, and the high duty of living—and, if need be, of dying—for humanity and our country.

There were men, too, among the early settlers, who had served in the War of 1812. The pioneers watched with keen interest the heroic struggle of the Texans in their effort to be free from the tyrannical despotism of Mexico. All were thrilled with intense indignation at the barbarous butchery of Travis, Crockett, Bowie and all their comrades at San Antonio, and the shocking massacre at Goliad. And when, a few years later, our own disturbed relations with Mexico deepened to war, they did indeed "remember the Alamo," and with alacrity responded to the call of Governor French for volunteers, although the war was by no means wholly justified in the minds of the people. The ten-year-old frontier county of Kane organized a company of over ninety-five men, officered by Edward E. Harvey as Captain, and Lewis A. Norton, Hugh Fullerton and William G. Conklin as Lieutenants. It rendezvoused at St. Charles, and was mustered into the United States service at Alton, August 3, 1847, as Company I, Sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Its principal service was in guard duty at Tampico on the coast where the unaccustomed climate, filthy, unsanitary conditions, and the inexperience of new recruits, wrought their usual fatal results in the death by disease of Captain Harvey and thirty-four of the enlisted men. Moses' History of Illinois states that, upon the death of Captain Harvey, in March, 1848, Sewell W. Smith, whose name appears upon the company rolls as a private, was promoted to the captaincy. The regiment was mustered out at Alton in July, 1848. Lieutenant Conklin was again mustered into the military service of the United States, as Battalion Major of the famous Eighth Illinois Cavalry, on September 18, 1861.

No words can adequately portray the varied and startled emotions of the people when the lurid war-cloud of the great Rebellion rolled darkly up the southern sky, and burst forth in the thunders and lightnings of war above and around Fort Sumter. During the long debate over the question of African slavery, which was first focussed in the Compromise Measure of 1820, there had been great diversity of political sentiment in Kane County, and many who loved the Union more than they hated the Southern system of African slavery, had done their utmost to allay the dangerous contention. But when treason culminated in open rebellion and assailed the sovereignty of the Nation, all differences were upon the instant fused in the hot fire of indignant loyalty. There was no hesitation. With one voice, all declared "the Federal Union—it must and shall be preserved." On Monday, April 15, 1861, Illinois' beloved President telegraphed Illinois' great War Governor, a call for six regiments of volunteer infantry for immediate three-months' military service. Kane County's response was two full companies on their way to Springfield within one brief week. Sixty companies were called from the one hundred and two counties of the State, and this new county—the ninth in population—instantly furnished two of the sixty. The State Adjutant General's official report shows Captain Nicholas Greusel's Aurora company as enrolled at Springfield on April 18th (Thursday), and Captain Edward S. Joslyn's company as enrolled—the officers at Springfield and the enlisted men at Elgin—on April 22d (Monday.) The facts were, that the officers and enlisted men of both companies were actually, but informally, enrolled on each day of the intervening week as they consented to enlist, and at their home cities. The formal enrollment recorded by the Adjutant-General was undoubtedly written out, at Springfield, with no regard for exact date or place of individual enlistment. Very few of the original enrollment papers have been preserved, and herein lies the utter impossibility of determining who first enlisted either in the county or in the State. To show the method usually adopted—although these agreements were of as many varying forms as the number of persons who individually prepared them—one which has been preserved is here given:

"We hereby enroll our names as members of a military company at Elgin, Kane County, Illinois. Whenever the number necessary for a full company shall have been enrolled, officers shall be elected and a name and by-laws adopted, by a majority vote of the members; and by a like vote the company shall immediately determine what regiment or branch of the service they will enter, and forthwith tender themselves to the proper authorities for the war. And, for the prompt performance of the duties of any station assigned us in said company, we solemnly pledge to each other our sacred word of honor."

This paper was in circulation more than a month before the number of young men requisite for a full company had signed it. No date was given each signature, and precedence was only shown by the order of the signatures.

Captain Joslyn's company had been under militia organization three or four years as the "Washington Continental Artillery," and had been drilled two seasons by that enthusiastic Colonel, Elmer E. Ellsworth, who was tragically killed at Alexandria, Virginia, early in the war. Its members began enlisting immediately upon knowledge of the President's call. Sergeant (afterward Captain) George F. Wheeler went before the Elgin City Clerk and took oath of enlistment on the morning of April 16th, and has always strenuously insisted that he was the first man to enlist in the State of Illinois. Who can deny his patriotic claim?

The "hot" boys were hastily enlisting. The cooler ones were at once making preparation to do so a little later. The officers were writing and telegraphing for instructions and supplies, and all were in a turmoil of the wildest excitement. Little thought was given to the preservation of exact statistical data. The "Continentals" had been attired in the showy uniform of Revolutionary times, which now must be changed to the inconspicuous gray of the United States army. We should not forget that the Confederates "appropriated" the color of our army uniform, as well as its arms, and many of its West Point officers, but none of its enlisted men. We were thus compelled to change our uniform to "the blue." As rapidly as its members or new recruits enlisted for the war they were measured by the local tailors. William G. Hubbard, George W. Renwick and John S. Wilcox borrowed money upon their note at O. Davidson's "Home Bank," and Joseph Hemmens hurried with it to Chicago and purchased the required gray cloth. Immediately upon its arrival every tailor began cutting from the measurements that had been taken, and every seamstress began sewing upon the new uniforms. Many an anxious mother, wife, sister and loving friend wrought far into the night, with prayers and tears amid the stitches. At the morning services on Sunday, April 21st, the pastors announced the abandonment of the usual afternoon meetings, and asked the women to repair at once to places where the unfinished garments had been collected, and assist in completing them. On Monday, the 22d, the company of noble young men, fully clad in their new gray uniforms, were on their way to Springfield. It will be well for the young men of future years to make careful note of the significant fact, that very nearly every member of that old militia company was honored with a commissioned officer's rank before the close of the great war upon which they were now entering. On Thursday, the 25th, both companies were mustered into the first regiment organized under the call—the Seventh Illinois Infantry Volunteers—the old "Continentals" as Company "A," and the Aurora boys as Company "C." And so Kane County's two companies appear "on the right of the line"—Company "A" on the extreme right of Illinois' magnificent parade of 149 regiments of infantry, seventeen regiments of cavalry, and two regiments of Field Artillery, besides the many unattached organizations, and the great number of patriotic men and women of the State in voluntary hospital, sanitary, and other service, incident to the prosecution of this most stupendous war of ancient or modern times. Of this splendid array Kane County organized within her borders, in separate and not permanent government camps, three regiments of infantry, two regiments of cavalry, three unattached companies of cavalry, and one battery of light artillery. If another county in the proud State of Lincoln, Grant, Logan, Yates and Oglesby can equal this distinguished record, fair and patient search has failed to disclose it.

The commissioned officers from Kane County in these two companies were: Captain Nicholas Greusel, promoted to Major; Captains Edward S. Joslyn and Samuel E. Lawyer; Lieutenants Reuben H. Adams, James Davidson, Samuel E. Lawyer, Silas Miller and Rufus Pattison. Before their short term of service expired, the members of these two companies were being placed in proper positions in more permanent organizations. The Seventh Regiment retained its autonomy in the three years' service with Nicholas Greusel promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel; William Brown, Jr., to Quartermaster; Samuel G. Ward, George F. Wheeler, Thomas McGuire and Samuel E. Lawyer as Captains; and Jonathan Kimball, Mason M. Marsh, Charles T. Elliott and John H. Hubbard as Lieutenants.

FOX RIVER REGIMENT—THIRTY-SIXTH ILLINOIS—On August 14th Governor Yates, by General Order No. 139, promoted Nicholas Greusel, then Lieutenant-Colonel of the Seventh Infantry, to the Colonelcy of the "Fox River Regiment" and, only four days later, the first company of this new command marched into "Camp Hammond" on the line of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, between Aurora and Montgomery—so named in honor of Colonel Hammond, the patriotic Superintendent of the road. On the 22d of the same month, Captain John Webb, United States mustering officer, examined the rolls of eight companies, and verified them by parading the entire body of men in double line and calling the roll by companies. As each man answered to the call of his name, he advanced three paces into a new line; and, when all had responded and the new line had been completed, with bared heads and uplifted right hands, they united in this impressive oath: "I do solemnly swear that I will bear true allegiance to the United States of America; that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all enemies and opposers whatever; that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and all officers appointed over me, according to the rules of the army of the United States, so help me God." And so, in one momentous instant, these patriotic men voluntarily laid off their free citizenship and became the sworn subjects of the most arbitrary despotism. Sublime self-abnegation, heroic sacrifice for you and for me, for the Nation and for posterity!

On the 12th day of September Col. Albert G. Brackett, of the regular army, paraded the complete regiment, and had each company marched slowly in sigle file before a board of inspecting surgeons, when those in whom the slightest defect was detected were subjected to more careful scrutiny and, if found deficient, rejected. When the inspection was finished, the recruits received and the correctness of the rolls carefully verified, he administered again the same oath, and in the same manner, to the whole regiment of ten companies, as well as to the line and field officers. Now it was a part of the United States army designated as the Thirty-sixth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry. On September 24th, under marching orders for St. Louis, Mo., it broke camp, and, boarding cars of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, bade farewell to Kane County.

EIGHTH CAVALRY.—On August 12th the Hon. John F. Farnsworth received from the Secretary of War authority to recruit and equip a regiment of twelve companies of cavalry, and very soon thereafter recruits began to arrive at the camp which he had established in the southeast quarter of the village of St. Charles. The largest formal muster of this regiment into the United States service occurred on the 18th day of September, 1861; but enlisting and frequent musters continued until its departure under military orders for Washington on or about October 13th. It took to the field about 1,150 stalwart and well mounted young men, as the Eighth Illinois Cavalry.

LINCOLN REGIMENT — FIFTY-SECOND ILLINOIS INFANTRY.—In the same month of August, 1861, Judge Isaac G. Wilson obtained from the Secretary of War permission to organize a third Kane County regiment. This he christened the "Lincoln Regiment." Establishing its camp on the Fair Grounds at Geneva, on the south side of State Street just at the present city limits—named "Camp Lyon," in honor of Gen. Nathaniel Lyon, who had just fallen in action at Wilson's Creek, Mo.—he began the work of organization. His official certificate is preserved, stating that Companies "I," from Dundee, and "K," from Elgin and Plato, were accepted for service by him on the 6th day of September. It is known that the company from Kaneville marched into camp the day before. In recognition of its first arrival in camp, it was given the position of honor on the right of the Regiment as Company "A," and, for like reason, the companies above named being the next to arrive, became the "color companies," "I" and "K."

Colonel Brackett officially certifies that, on the 25th day of October, 1861, he mustered into the service four companies of the regiment with John S. Wilcox as its Lieutenant-Colonel. At two different dates in November Lieutenant John Christopher of the regular army completed the mustering of this regiment, and on November 28th, with 945 as fine young men in its ranks as ever marched beneath any banner, the Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry left "Camp Lyon" forever, under marching orders, boarding cars of the Chicago & North-Western Railway for Benton Barracks, St. Louis, by way of Chicago.

It would be extremely interesting to trace, even briefly, some of the deeply touching incidents of these camps—to recall something of the strangely mingled emotions of lofty enthusiasm and deep anguish; the extravagant hilarity (often forced) and the silent grief, the laughter and the tears; the greetings and the partings, as the fondest ties were severed, the dearest hopes deferred—perhaps forever—and the dreaded separations, toils and perils of dreadful war which were then assumed. Since history began, such have been war's prelude and concomitant, touching the loftiest heights and lowest depths of human emotions.

SERVICE.—The Thirty-sixth received its first real baptism of battle at Pea Ridge, Mo., on the 6th and 8th of March, 1862, in which action it suffered a loss of six killed and thirty-two wounded. Its service was in the South and Southwest. It took to the field, originally, 965 men, received 221 recruits, and lost in killed, wounded and by the hardships incident to the service about 700 men. It passed, by rail and boat and marches, over fully 10,000 miles. It served under ten different commanders and participated in ten battles, beside innumerable minor engagements and skirmishes.

The Eighth Cavalry served in the army of the Potomac, and its record was brilliant in the extreme. Its original strength was about 1,150 daring riders, and its mount and equipment were the best. It received over 400 recruits to its ranks. Its achievements are an honorable part of the history of the "Army of the Potomac." Its Colonel was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General, and served with distinguished ability in the Congress of the Nation. It was claimed that John F. Farnsworth was the only member of the House that the audacious Ben. F. Butler avoided challenging to debate. One of its captains, Elon J. Farnsworth, was also promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General, and was killed at Gettysburg.

The most disastrous campaign of the Fifty-second was in the winter of 1861-62 along the western end of the Hannibal & St. Jo Railroad, in Northwest Missouri. It was at Donelson and, from that victorious struggle, brought about 5,000 prisoners to Camp Douglas and 2,000 to Springfield. From there it hastened to Shiloh's bloody field, where it first experienced the terrible shock of battle. It participated in about twenty engagements and very many skirmishes, and, in garrison, march, bivouac and battle, displayed an orderly bearing and valor, that gave it public recognition by army commanders as one of the best regiments in the field. It marched with Sherman to the sea, and through the Carolinas and Virginia to Washington, where, with "Sherman's Bummers," it participated in the last Grand Review.

Two companies of cavalry were recruited with the Thirty-sixth Infantry, one with the Fifty-second and one (called the Kane County Cavalry), was organized by Capt. Christian B. Dodson, of Geneva. The company organized with the Fifty-second was mustered October 25, 1861, as Company H, of the Twelfth Illinois Cavalry. The other companies served as escort of various Generals and on detached duty but with no regimental organization, until by order of Governor Yates, in compliance with authority from General Halleck under General Order No. 250, issued at Springfield on December 25, 1862, these three companies, with other detached organizations, were united to form the Fifteenth Regiment Illinois Cavalry. Captain Gilbert of the Fifty-second was promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy in this new command, his company becoming Company G; Captain Sherrar, of Company B in the Fifty-sixth, received the rank of Major, his company being designated Company K in the Fifteenth. Company A of the same regiment became Company I in the new regiment, and Captain Dodson's was lettered Company H. January 25, 1865, the Tenth and Fifteenth Cavalry Regiments were consolidated and reorganized as the Tenth Regiment and Captain Willis was promoted to the rank of Major. A number of changes and promotions also occurred among the line officers from Kane County.

SEVENTEENTH CAVALRY.—On September 13, 1863 the War Department authorized Gen. John F. Farnsworth to organize still another regiment of cavalry in Kane County, and on his recommendation, the colonelcy of the new organization was tendered by Governor Yates to Major John L. Beveridge of the old Eighth Cavalry. Colonel Beveridge at once established its camp of rendezvous at St. Charles, upon the grounds formerly occupied by the Eighth, and pushed enlistments with such vigor that eight companies were mustered into service on January 22, 1864, and four more—completing the regiment—on February 12th. Six hundred and fifty horses were procured, and on May 3d the regiment moved by rail, under orders to report to Maj. Gen. Rosecrans at St. Louis, Mo. It took about 1,100 men to the field. Its arduous service was principally rendered in the Department of the Missouri under command of Generals Rosecrans, Grenville M. Dodge and John Pope. It was the last cavalry regiment organized in the State, and was not mustered out until February 6, 1866.

Early in the spring of 1864, the patriotic Governors of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa and Ohio tendered the President 85,000 men to serve 100 days, with a view to relieving from guard duty the veterans needed at the front. Of these, Illinois furnished thirteen regiments of infantry and two battalions of cavalry. One of these infantry regiments rendezvoused at Elgin and, at the request of Governor Yates and Adjutant-General Fuller, John S. Wilcox commanded the camp of organization until muster. Mrs. Lucy S. Lovel tendered the use of beautiful grounds where the great Cook Publishing House now stands, and the camp was there located and named "Camp Kane." This regiment was mustered into service June 16, 1864, with 842 men, and was mustered out October 10, 1864. So opportune and vital was the service of these commands of 100-day men that, in special orders, the President extended to them the thanks of the Government and Nation for their patriotic and effective discharge of duty. Thus it will be observed that Kane stands well at the beginning and at the close of the great conflict —and with two companies in the first regiment of infantry organized for the war, while in her central city was organized the State's last regiment of cavalry.

In the various commands organized within the State, we find Kane County men holding commissioned rank as follows—not mentioning successive promotions, but only the highest rank attained:

In the Thirteenth Regiment Infantry.—Lieutenant-Colonel, Benamin F. Parks; Captains, George H. Gardner, Ethan A. Pritchard and Edwin Went; Lieutenant, Jesse D. Pierce.

Twenty-third Infantry.—Lieutenant, Anthony McBriarty.

Thirty-sixth Infantry.—Colonels, Nicholas Greusel, Silas Miller and Benjamin F. Campbell; Lieutenant-Colonels, Edward S. Joslyn, Albert Jencks and Porter C. Olson; Majors, Alonzo H. Barry, George D. Sherman and George G. Buddolph; Surgeons, Delos W. Young, Jethro A. Hatch, Sidney B. Hawley; Adjutant, George A. Willis; Quarter-Master, Isaac N. Buck; Captains, Melvin B. Baldwin, Leverett M. Kelley, William Dugan and Aaron C. Holden; Lieutenants, Edward S. Chappel, Leroy Salisbury, Joseph M. Walker, George P. Douglas, Owen Hughes, William S. Smith, Samuel Hitchcock, Lewis C. Belden and Aaron C. Holden.

Forty-second Infantry.—Colonel, Edgar D. Swain; Major, Henry K. Wolcott; Captains, Ogden Lovell, John S. Hedges and Joseph Hudson; Lieutenants, Wesley P. Andrews, Charles E. Smiley, Joseph Voller and Charles A. Livingston.

Forty-sixth Infantry.—Lieutenant, William H. Howell.

Fifty-second Infantry.—Colonels, Isaac G. Wilson and John S. Wilcox; Lieutenant-Colonel, Jerome D. Davis; Surgeons, Leland H. Angel, Edgar Winchester; Chaplain, Benjamin Thomas; Adjutants, Ethan J. Allen, Edward S. Wilcox and Charles H. Hill; Quartermasters, Charles B. Wells and Fulton Gifford; Captains, Smith G. Ward, George E. Young, Charles Barnett, Jacob Grimes, D. Carlos Newton, Francis H. Bowman, William H. Wilcox, Jay Hamilton, Alvah P. Moffatt, Luther C. Lee, Maurice J. McGrath, Henry C. Williamson, Joseph T. Brown, Thomas H. Thompson, Amos W. Welburn, Alphonso Barto and Henry Newton Patchin; Lieutenants, Charles R. White, Thomas W. Mack, George L. Kinnear, Harvey O. Perry, Lewis H. Evarts, Joseph J. Kessler, Lawrence W. Wolcott, George Rice, Arthur P. Vaughn, James Davidson, William Shattuck, Cornelius Snyder, Charles T. Orr, Alfred Billings, Elijah Perrigo, John W. Acker, G. Lucius Beckley, LeRoy Powers, Henry S. Doty, John M. Vote and Charles Isbell.

Fifty-fifth Infantry.—Captain, Charles Tazewell; Lieutenant, William R. Halligan.

Fifty-eighth Infantry.—Colonel, William F. Lynch; Lieutenant-Colonels, Jonathan Kimball and John Murphy; Major, Thomas Newlan; Quartermaster, Nicholas T. Roche; Surgeons, Henry M. Crawford, Emery A. Merrifield and George F. Heideman; Captains, David J. Lynch, Gustav C. Kothe and Philip R. Heelan; Lieutenant, Robert H. Winslow.

Seventy-second Infantry.—Lieutenant, Benjamin F. Leonard.

Eighty-ninth Infantry.—Major, Bruce B. Kidder; Surgeon, Samuel F. Hance; Captain, John W. Warren; Lieutenants, John B. Watkins, Robert Miller, Jacob N. Hopper, George M. White and Oscar C. Pease.

One Hundred Fifth Infantry.—Captain, John M. Smith; Lieutenant, James S. Hasburgh.

One Hundred Twenty-fourth Infantry.—Lieutenant-Colonel, Adin Mann; Major, Rufus Pattison; Surgeon, Leland H. Angel; Captains, Edwin F. Stafford, William B. Sigley, Reese L. Merriman and John W. Kendall; Lieutenants, Fernando C. Van Vlack, James H. Blackman, William H. Anderson, Justin D. Andrews, Theodore Potter, Greenville A. Spear, Freeman L. Campbell, Christopher H. Kellar, Henry J. Brockway, Osborn Wilson, Joy J. Tarble and George M. Cronk.

One Hundred Twenty-seventh Infantry.—Major, Frank C. Gillitt; Surgeon, Anson L. Clark; Adjutant, Addison A. Keyes; Quartermaster, Samuel W. Durand; Captains, John S. Riddle, William Warner, James F. Richmond, Charles Schryver, Frederick A. Raymond, Nelson H. Merrill, John H. Lowe and Alexander C. Little; Lieutenants Thomas Clark, Lucian B. Patchin, Frederick Knight, Ira F. Hall, Jeremiah Evarts, Alfred Darnell, Horace Perry, Benjamin C. Wilkins, Edgar Percival, Amasa Stuart and James S. Soper.

One Hundred and Thirty-second Infantry.—Captain, Charles Barker; Lieutenant, H. A. Hinckley.

One Hundred Forty-first Infantry.—Lieutenant-Colonel, Thomas Clark; Adjutant, Edward C. Lovell; Quartermaster, Alonzo H. Barry; First Assistant Surgeon, Francis C. Hageman; Chaplain, Samuel S. Renwick's Elgin Battery. — Captains, George W. Renwick and Andrew M. Wood; Lieutenants, Caleb Rich, John Short, Lorin G. Jeffers, Joel H. Wickers, Henry E. Tower, Waldo W. Paine, James N. Boutwell and William C. Clift.

Twenty-ninth United States Regiment Colored Troops.—Lieutenant, John J. Gosper.

Thomas Clark, of Geneva, was Captain and Frank Clark Lieutenant in a colored regiment, and James H. Mayborne, Esq., was a Paymaster in the army with rank of Major.

The General Field Officers, whose homes were in Kane County, were: Brigadier-General John F. Farnsworth; Brigadier-General Elon J. Farnsworth; Lieutenant-Colonel Twelfth Cavalry and brevetted Brigadier-General Thomas W. Grosvenor; Colonel Fifty-second Infantry and brevetted Brigadier-General John S. Wilcox, and Colonel Eighth Illinois and brevetted Brigadier-General William F. Lynch. By this list we find that Kane County furnished two Brigadier-Generals, three Brevet Brigadier-Generals, five Colonels, eleven Lieutenant-Colonels, fourteen Majors, fifteen Surgeons, ten Adjutants, eleven Quartermasters, two Chaplains, eighty-five Captains, and 129 Lieutenants—in all, 287 commissioned officers.

Of one of these Quartermasters, Captain Charles B. Wells, it is known that over $26,000,000 of Government property and money passed through his hands; yet he entered the army when in the comfortable financial circumstances of a very fairly successful lawyer, and he surrendered his commission and lived and died in the same honorable and happy condition with no breath of suspicion that the slightest portion of this vast amount was ever appropriated to his personal use. His record is also that of his companions in arms from Kane County, whose position and duties involved great property trusts and responsibilities.

Careful study of the published reports of the State Adjutant-General accredits to each of the townships of Kane County the following number of volunteers. As in many instances the place of enlistment is not given, the number here stated is more probably too few rather than exaggerated: Aurora, 1,297; Batavia, 288; Geneva, 229; St. Charles, 453; Elgin, 1,138; Dundee, 249; Sugar Grove, 53; Kaneville, 124; Campton, 46; Plato, 171; Rutland, 39; Big Rock, 63; Virgil, 43; Blackberry, 162; Burlington, 72; Hampshire, 148—making a total of enlisted men of 4,338, and of commissioned officers, 287—grand total, 4,575. There were enlisted in the regular army and accredited to Kane County fifty men, making a grand total of 4,625 young men volunteering from a population of about 30,000 in 1860. Classifying these figures, there were 3,365 men credited to the county in the infantry service, just 1,000 in the cavalry, 210 in the artillery and fifty in the regular army.

It is sincerely regretted that the scope of this brief work does not permit giving an honorary roll of the names of those heroic and patriotic men in the ranks, hundreds of whom actually died for their country, and each one of whom voluntarily surrendered all that life holds dear and, for months and years, amid the toils and perils of war, again and again, times almost without number, tendered life itself in defense of the Union and of liberty. It is eminently proper and well to emblazon high upon the roll of immortal fame, the names of those matchless soldiers who, with steady advance, rose by demonstrated ability to the topmost summit of military success and renown in the conduct of our stupendous war; yet it was the patriotic devotion, the steady valor and the resourceful intelligence of the vast host in the ranks that, under the directing orders of the profoundest military genius, marched to final and complete victory. Generations yet unborn shall say with exultant pride, "My ancestor was a soldier in the great war that preserved the Nation."

As an indication of the quality of the men who filled the ranks of the Kane County volunteers, it is recalled that one soldier who carried a musket in Company "A," Seventh Illinois Infantry, subsequently became Superintendent of Public Instruction in the great State of New York; another is now Deputy Commissioner of Pensions at Washington, and a third was Paymaster with rank of Major in the late war with Spain. So, also, in the last regiment recruited in Kane County (the One Hundred Forty-first Infantry), one of her boys, John M. Hamilton, marched with his musket upon his shoulder and, in later years, occupied the Governor's chair of our own grand State worthily and well. By direction of President Lincoln a gold medal bearing the following inscription was awarded a brave Kane County soldier, now residing at Monticello, Minn.: "The Congress to Sergeant Andrew McCornack, Co. I, 127th Ill. Vols., for gallantry at Vicksburg, Miss., May 22, 1863."

In a list of names of soldiers receiving the special thanks of Congress for meritorious service, we find that of private and Captain Leverett M. Kelley of Company A, of the gallant Thirty-sixth. In grateful recognition of his patriotic services, the great Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company presented Col. Nicholas Greusel of the Thirty-sixth a life-pass over all the lines of their system, beautifully engraved upon a plate of solid gold.

It has long been the custom of nations at peace to send the most complete and powerful of her armored vessels on visits of comity to the open ports of the world. It displays the mailed hand of War clad in the silken glove of Peace. The United States was at peace with Spain when, early in 1895, the Cuban revolution began. For three long years, while our ears were assailed with authentic reports of Weyler's atrocious cruelties perpetrated against the Cuban people; while the cruisers of other nations paid the usual visits of courtesy to the Spanish ports in Cuba; not once during this period did the unhappy people of the beautiful island behold the inspiring flag of liberty floating from the masthead of an armored vessel in Cuban waters. Early in President McKinley's first administration official suggestion was made that these national courtesies be resumed; and, a little later, Admiral Cervera brought the gracious greetings of the Queen Regent of Spain to the President of the United States, and his majestic battleship, the Viscaya, was moored in the harbor of New York. He was received with every salute and ceremony of naval honor, and himself and officers entertained with the most elegant hospitality, while every safe-guard against accident or injury was given his splendid vessel. At sunrise of the 25th of the following January, 1898, the United States battleship Maine, Captain Sigsbee commanding, returning the visit of comity and honor, steamed slowly into the Spanish port of Havana and was anchored at the mooring indicated by the Spanish official harbor master. She was courteously received with the customary naval and military salutes and the exchange of ceremonial official visits, as required by naval etiquette, yet with thinly concealed hatred. At 9:40 o'clock on the evening of February 15th, a terrific submarine explosion shattered the magnificent ship instantly to an utter wreck, hurling two of the ship's officers and 264 brave seamen to an instant and horrible death.

This atrocious infamy filled to overflowing the cup of our forbearance. The American people, already burning with indignation at Spain's unspeakable brutality in her treatment of the Cubans, could no longer be restrained; and on April 22d following, Congress passed an act officially recognizing Cuban independence, demanding Spain's withdrawal from the waters of the Gulf, and authorizing the President to call into service 125,000 volunteers to carry the resolution into effect. On the next day the President's call was issued, and the celerity with which a trained and highly efficient army could be mobilized was amazing to those unfamlliar with the facts of our thorough militia organization. The Third Regiment of the Illinois National Guards was commanded by Colonel Fred Bennitt of Joliet. Major Joseph B. Caughey, one of its field officers, and Assistant Surgeon Carlton E. Starrett upon the regimental staff—both gallant and experienced officers—were residents of Kane County. Three companies of the regiment were composed of Kane County men, viz.: Company "D" of Aurora, commanded by Captain John L. Graves and Lieutenants Fred L. Thatcher and Charles F. Spicer; Company "E" of Elgin, officered by Captain (Major) Ben E. Gould, and Lieutenants Jacob Bode and Fred J. Smailes; and Company "I" of Aurora, with Captain Charles H. Greene and Lieutenants William Kline and Albert Lindsey. These splendid companies had many of the attributes of veterans. They had participated in eight or ten regimental, brigade and larger encampments at Chicago, Lake Geneva, Wis.; Rockford, Buffalo Rock, Springfield and elsewhere. They had marched in review through the streets of the vanished "White City," and up Broadway, New York, and had taken a practice march from Aurora to Ottawa. They had participated in a number of sham battles involving the movements of a brigade or larger force, and they had been thoroughly drilled in squad and company tactics—that best "school of the soldier." They had also seen actual war service in quelling at least eight great mobs and riots, in one engagement killing three and wounding eight of the rioters. At the great Pullman strike and riot they demonstrated their celerity in assembling for duty. About noon on July 6, 1894, Governor Altgeld telegraphed hurry orders for the Third Regiment to report at Chicago to assist in maintaining order. At 9 p. m. the regiment was in line with nearly every soldier in his place at Thirty-fifth Street and Wentworth Avenue, near the center of the riot, although some of the companies had journeyed about 100 miles.

It was near midnight on Monday, April 25, 1898, when Colonel Bennitt received Governor Tanner's order to report, with his command at Springfield, on the following Wednesday. The twelve companies of the regiment were scattered in ten different towns of a half dozen counties from Rockford to Joliet, from Woodstock to Streator; yet so prompt and vigorous was the action of its commander, field staff and line officers, so thorough its discipline and preparedness for any emergency, that on Wednesday morning, the 27th, every company responded to the Adjutant's call and marched with nearly full ranks to its place on the color line, fully equipped and ready to volunteer for foreign service. Rank and file, about 1,000 choice young men were in line, and when they voluntarily mustered for United States army service on May 10th, and with uplifted hands and uncovered heads, deliberately and reverently assented to the prescribed oath of allegiance and obedience, the scene was deeply impressive. It is said to have been the first muster of a full regiment in this State since the close of the great war.

On May 14th the regiment left Springfield under orders for the organizing camp at Chickamauga, Tenn., where it received recruits that brought its numbers up to 1,300 men. It left this camp of discipline and drill on July 22d for Porto Rico, via Newport News, and on board the transport St. Louis, it arrived off Ponce on the night of July 31st. August 3d it effected a landing at Arroya, and the colors of the Third Illinois were raised above the custom house. Guayama was captured August 9th. On August 13th, while in line of battle on the main road leading to Cayey, before extended intrenchments of the enemy mounting twelve or more pieces of heavy ordnance, and momentarily expecting a severe engagement, General Brooke commanding the column, received dispatches from General Miles announcing the termination of the war. Our boys occupied various positions upon the island until November 2d, when they finally broke camp and marched aboard the transport Roumania, and the next morning sailed for the United States. They reached New York on November 9th, and arrived at home about the 12th. Each member at his home, they were held on waiting orders for sixty days, and then mustered out of the United States service.

Major George D. Sherman, of the gallant old Thirty-sixth, was commissioned Major and served as Paymaster in the Spanish-American War. It is said that Kane County furnished more men for this war, in proportion to her population, than any other county in the Union; and computation will show that, if each county of this State had furnished an equal number, Illinois alone would have marshalled over 30,000 men—nearly one-fourth the entire call.

So, in every military emergency the people of Kane County have nobly demonstrated their patriotic devotion; and in manly strength and vigor, mental attainment and high moral character, the volunteers who have gone forth from her homes have been surpassed by none. For brave, resourceful, soldierly qualities, others, doubtless, were their equals, but none were their superior. In peace and in war, her people have ever heeded the cry of distress and hastened generous assistance. In time of sore need, Ireland stretched over the sea her famished hand, and one little city of the county instantly contributed over eighty pounds sterling to purchase food for the hungry. Fire swept the fair city of the lakes from existence in one vast holocaust of flame, and at once her hospitable doors opened wide with generous welcome to hundreds of homeless refugees, and from every avenue of ample supply, poured bounteous streams of benefaction to meet the requirements of every human need. Anticipating any uttered request, before the flames had swept their awful course, the people of Kane County were gathering supplies for the distressed, and car-loads by the score were hurried to the stricken city. When the shuddering earthquake wrought devastation and ruin in the historic city of the Palmetto State, within forty-eight hours the people of one small municipality telegraphed over five hundred dollars of collected relief. And again, when the devastating flood engulfed the city of Johnstown, measures of relief were instantly taken throughout the county.

Upon all questions affecting the public weal, such has ever been the characteristic attitude of the people of this county, settled so recently by brave, intelligent pioneers cherishing high ideals of Christian loyalty and duty. Their descendants and successors have continued steadfastly along the same lines of thought and action, and by the practice of industry, virtue, wisdom and loyalty, have kept the city, township and county of their happy homes fully abreast of all the progressive movements of our proud State and Nation.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENTS.

The statutes of Illinois confer upon Boards of Supervisors of the various counties authority to appropriate public money for the erection of appropriate monuments at the respective county-seats in honor of the volunteer soldiers of such counties; and this has been admirably done in many counties of our patriotic State, but not in Kane. The careful observer, however, will note that these monuments have usually been erected where the county-seat was the most populous and influential city of the county. Such is not the condition in Kane County, and the greatly preponderating influence of the river cities and villages near the opposite boundaries of the county, renders such action in the near future quite improbable.

But not in one generation is such heroism and sacrifice as that displayed by the men and women of 1861-65 forgotten; and the day may not be distant when the descendants of those men and women will, in some proper manner, testify by a county memorial their deep appreciation of the deathless loyalty which saved the Nation from dismemberment. An imposing monumental shaft, rising from the high land once occupied by the historic Kane County Agricultural Society, overlooking Geneva and visible over an area of many miles—standing in full and near view of the people hourly passing over the electric railway line, marking and commemorating the camp of organization of the Lincoln Regiment, and dedicated to a perpetual and grateful remembrance of the county's heroic volunteers—would indeed be a thrilling inspiration to loyalty and an object lesson of priceless value to future generations.

But while the people of Kane County have not been moving unitedly in thus honoring her volunteer soldiery, they have by no means been negligent or remiss. Dundee, never behind in patriotic devotion or impulse, has been the first to act in this direction. At a largely attended public meeting held April 3, 1866, it was unanimously voted:

"That the surplus bounty fund remaining in the hands of the Town Clerk be appropriated to build a monument to perpetuate the memory of those soldiers who entered the service of the United States, during the late rebellion, from the town of Dundee, Illinois, and whose lives were sacrificed in the defense of the country. And that I. C. Bosworth, William Hill and Moses Wanzer, are hereby constituted a committee to receive said surplus, and to appropriate the same, with such additional funds as they may be able to procure for the purpose above specified, and to superintend the erection of said monument."

In compliance with said resolution, the committee erected a substantial monument with granite base and plinth, and graceful marble shaft, in all about fifteen feet in height, and costing about $1,000. Its location is near the principal entrance of the beautiful Dundee Cemetery upon the land covered by the first claim located within the township. This monument bears the following inscription:

ERECTED BY THE CITIZENS OF DUNDEE, ILLINOIS,

IN MEMORY OF OUR DEPARTED HEROES.

It is also deeply engraven with the names of forty volunteers from Dundee Township who had died for the Nation's perpetuity. Eleven of these were members of the Fifty-second Regiment and nine of the Thirty-sixth. Thirteen are stated to have been killed in action—four of them at Shiloh—while one died in prison. Twenty-seven were from eighteen to twenty-five years of age at the date of death. The monument was dedicated with appropriate exercises, on July 4, 1867, the address being given by the last Colonel of the Fifty-second Illinois Infantry.

Elgin was next in point of time to take similar action. At the regular town meeting in the spring of 1869 the sum of $3,000 was voted to be expended in the erection of a soldiers' monument, and F. W. Raymond, L. M. Kelley, T. E. Lawrence, H. N. Patchen and E. W. King were appointed a committee to carry the resolution into effect. Leonard W. Volk, of Chicago, was then a young artist rapidly acquiring fame in his profession, and he was selected to design and construct the memorial. The nearly completed work was destroyed in the great fire of 1871, while still in the hands of the sculptor. The plans were at once changed, and the present structure, consisting of a double granite base and high plinth, or die, with round marble shaft surmounted by a globe and eagle, was substituted. It stands near the center of the Elgin Cemetery, upon a triangular plat of ground that is encompassed by avenues and forms the rallying place for the veterans and "Relief Corps" on "Memorial Day," in the special services of the Grand Army of the Republic honoring their comrades. It stands about twenty-five feet in height; and upon the west face of the die is cut the inscription:

"OUR HEROES."

"ELGIN'S TRIBUTE TO HER FALLEN SOLDIERS, 1861—1865.

On the northeast and south faces are inscribed the names of sixty-eight soldiers from Elgin, who gave their lives in the service. This list includes eight in the Seventh Infantry, one in the Seventeenth, one in the Nineteenth, six in the Thirty-sixth, seven in the Fifty-second, five in the Fifty-fifth, ten in the Fifty-eighth, one in the Eighty-ninth, twenty-two in the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh, two in the One Hundred Forty-first, and one in the One Hundred Fifty-third Infantry; one in the Twelfth and two in the Fifteenth Cavalry, and one in the First Artillery. This list indicates how widely the volunteers were scattered in their regimental commands.

On the evening of June 19, 1869, a meeting of the citizens of Aurora was held in the grand jury room of the City Hall Building, and after exchange of views a committee was raised to prepare a constitution and by-laws for a Soldiers' Monument Association, to be submitted for the consideration of an adjourned meeting. The report of this committee was accepted and adopted at the adjourned meeting, and L. D. Brady was elected President; F. O. White, Secretary; and Abner Hard, Treasurer of "The Aurora Soldiers' Monument Association." The Association was reorganized under the new State law, and became a legal corporation, December 24, 1872. In October, 1870, "The Ladies' Auxiliary Monument Association" was formed in aid of the undertaking, and after mature consideration it was decided to erect a memorial building, not only to commemorate the valor of Aurora's patriotic volunteers whose lives were sacrificed in the service, but also to honor the living veterans, and to preserve such interesting mementos of the great struggle as might be obtained. Through the enthusiastic and indefatigable efforts of Post No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, of the Department of Illinois, and of the above mentioned local organizations, an artistic and desirable building was erected upon the island in the very heart of the city, beside the City Hall and Postoffice, and now adjacent to the new Carnegie Library. It is octagonal in form, of ornamental Gothic type, yet very heavy and enduring, one story in height and constructed of rock-faced ashlar sand-stone, with cut-stone trimmings and with iron finials and cresting. Its dome is surmounted by an impressive, well-executed statue in bronze, representing an infantry soldier at parade rest. This was contributed by the Grand Army Post, and cost $800. The interior was arranged for the Post Room and repository of memorials. Its walls were beautifully frescoed, adorned with striking battle scenes, and well-executed portraits of Washington, Lincoln, Thomas, Farragut, and other famous army and naval heroes. Marble tablets are inscribed with the name of every soldier who enlisted from Aurora and the names of members of Post No. 20, and one is dedicated to the revered memory of "The Unknown Dead." Around the room are cases with glass doors for the reception of war relics, and such other articles of a historical or scientific character as shall be deemed worthy of preservation. Handsome frames are also hung, in which are grouped photographs of each comrade of the Post. An exquisite life-size, pure white marble statue, emblematic of the Recording Angel, adorns the center of the room. This most beautiful, and exceedingly appropriate and useful structure, was completed and dedicated July 4, 1878, at a cost of about $8,000, of which the ladies furnished $2,000. It should be ever remembered that this splendid tribute was erected by voluntary individual contributions, and the taxing power was not invoked.

In 1881 the City Council, by ordinance, established a Free Public Library and Reading Room, and its Board of Directors, composed of Prof. T. H. Clark, F. O. White, W. S. Beaupre, Mrs. Pierce Burton, J. J. McLallen, E. Denney, Mrs. Thomas Galt, F. L. Bartlett and Isadore Leins, arranged with the above associations for the construction of an annex to the building, the whole structure to accommodate also the library and provide a pleasant reading-room. Such annex, harmonizing in style and material with the original building, was immediately erected at a cost to the city of about $6,000, and opened for public use in March, 1882. The Library Board is now transferring its equipment to the elegant new building, recently erected; and when this is completed the Post will come into possession of the whole Memorial Building for its comfort and use until the sad, and not distant day, when the last "Veteran Comrade" shall be mustered into the silent ranks of those who rest on "Fame's Eternal Camping Ground."

In 1901-2 a committee of three public-spirited and patriotic ladies, viz.: Mrs. Bowers, Mrs. Calhoun and Mrs. Ryan, raised a fund by private subscription of the people, and erected upon a conspicuous location in the beautiful and carefully kept cemetery at St. Charles, an enduring and impressive monument upon a broad foundation of solid masonry. Its first base is six feet square and twenty inches high, the second base four feet two inches square and sixteen inches high, and the square plinth and shaft are seven feet in height, giving it a total elevation of fifteen feet. It is chiseled from the best gray granite, and cost $1,000. The inscription deeply cut in the base is:

"TO OUR VOLUNTEERS."

It was dedicated May 30, 1892.

Among the early settlers in the eastern part of Virgil Township was Manly Powers, whose father, Abner Powers, was a patriotic and New Hampshire soldier in the Revolutionary War. The old veteran died in 1852, and was buried in the little cemetery at Canada Corners, now Lily Lake. In 1901 the propriety of erecting a monument in memory of this Revolutionary sire was suggested, and a committee consisting of the Hon. John Stewart, J. J. Read (a grandson of Joshua Read, the pioneer), L. M. Gross, Superintendent of Schools of near-by De Kalb County, and John Winterhalter, was appointed to have the matter in charge. The Supervisors of Kane County appropriated $200 toward the project, Elgin Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution donated $25 and, in various ways, $475 more was raised. Wm. Outhouse and son, who were dealers in granite and marble work at Elgin, were also the son and grandson of that James Outhouse, who, with his father-in-law, Joshua Read, was one of the very first settlers in this region. In kindly memory of pioneer days, and in recognition of family and former neighborhood ties, they generously contributed whatever more might be required, and erected in this quiet burial place, where the vanished form of the old patriot had so long ago crumbled back to mother earth, a noble gray granite shaft rising, in severe and imposing symmetry, thirty feet above its broad secure foundation. Its first base is seven feet square and twenty-four inches high; the second base five feet square and sixteen inches high. The die is three feet and eight inches square and fifty-six inches high, and the tapering shaft is thirty inches square at the base and twenty-two feet high. Its proportions are excellent and, standing alone in that quiet rural surrounding, it is indeed an impressive memorial. In heavy letters, sunk deeply in the large base, is cut the inscription:

ABNER POWERS, 1760–1852.

"BENNINGTON, SARATOGA, VALLEY FORGE, YORKTOWN."

An immense concourse of people gathered to witness the unveiling and dedication of the monument, and subsequent celebration in the grove a mile away, on July 4, 1902. For the services at the cemetery a delightful chorus of young people from Sycamore furnished the singing; the Rev. A. T. Horn, of De Kalb, invoked the divine benediction; Mr. Gross, on behalf of the committee, read a brief, clear statement of the conditions that led up to the formation of the committee, reported upon its work, thanked those who had patriotically contributed to its success, and presented the completed monument to the community and to posterity. A beautiful little girl, of the fifth generation in descent from Abner Powers, drew the cord which loosened the great American flag with which it was veiled, and the stately monument stood forth in majestic and enduring beauty. A brief address was given by Gen. John S. Wilcox.

CHAPTER XVII.

TOWNSHIPS, CITIES AND VILLAGES.

INDIVIDUAL TOWNSHIP HISTORY — ORGANIZATION AND LOCAL CHARACTERISTICS—EARLY SETTLEMENTS—CHARACTERISTICS OF THE PIONEERS—EARLY INDUSTRIES AND BUSINESS ENTERPRISES—WILLIAM LANCE, A NOTED PIONEER—SOME GRASPING LAND CLAIMANTS—MANY "FIRST" EVENTS RECOUNTED—CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS, LIBRARIES, ETC.

AURORA TOWNSHIP.

The first white settler in Government Township 38 North, Range 8 East of the Third Principal Meridian, undoubtedly was Thomas (or Jacob, as it is given in some histories) Carpenter, who built a log cabin on the east side of Fox River about half a mile east of Montgomery, late in the fall of 1833, and during Christmas week of that year moved his family into it from Naperville, then a hamlet containing perhaps a half-dozen pioneer families. His father-in-law, Elijah Pierce, arrived in April, 1834, and erected a one-room cabin nearer the river within the limits of the present village; and, as the stage lines from Chicago pushed westward past Colonel Naper's place, they found a crossing here, and Pierce's one-room cabin became the stage tavern. Mr. William Elliott, who during the same year made a claim on adjoining land, is said to have declared that as many as forty persons have slept during the night in that small room, which also served as kitchen and dining room. We may doubt if Mr. Elliott made just that statement for record as history; but, if he did, he should be regarded as good authority, since he was an exemplary man and, about this time, fell madly in love with Mr. Pierce's daughter, Rebecca, and was equally beloved by her. But the father strenuously opposed the desired marriage, probably needing her help in caring for his numerous guests, and he warned the young fellow to keep away from his place. Young Elliott walked forty miles to Ottawa for a marriage license, which the Clerk of LaSalle County refused to issue because of the young lady's minority; yet he told Elliott that if they would have the "bans" publicly announced for two weeks in open church service, the marriage would be lawful without a license. This was done at Naperville by "Father" N. C. Clark, and very soon after, on August 3, 1835, during a visit of Mr. Pierce to Chicago to purchase supplies for his tavern, the young people quietly visited a neighbor residing a little further down the river, hastily summoned Esquire Morgan from the settlement that later became Oswego, and they were happily married. This was the first marriage in what is now the Township of Aurora and their daughter Emeline Elliott, born August 5, 1836, was the first white child born in the township.

In 1836 Daniel S. Gray came from Montgomery County, N. Y., joined this settlement and began improvements which resulted in the present thriving village of Montgomery. For a number of years it was known as Graytown; but it is said that, at Mr. Gray's instance, it received its present name in honor of his former home. The village was platted in October, 1853, by Mr. Gray and was incorporated in February, 1858. At the first village election, held March 1, 1858, Ralph Gray, Edward Gillett, John Lilley, A. L. Davis and A. C. Palmer were elected trustees. Mr. Gray was the first President of the Village Board. The first school, it is said, was taught in 1839 by a young lady teacher, and the first substantial school house was erected soon after the act of incorporation.

AURORA CITY.—The first settlement at the present city of Aurora by the McCartys in 1834, has already been briefly recorded. In the fall of the same year that the McCarty brothers began improvements at Aurora, John Peter Schneider and his brother, John Nicholas Schneider, settled at North Aurora, and at once began work upon the dam and mills which they completed and operated many years, to the great convenience and benefit of the surrounding country—the saw-mill being located upon the east, and the grist-mill upon the west bank of the river. It was widely known as Schneider's Mills until about 1868-69, when it became North Aurora.

The early histories treat so much more largely of the settlement and development of the villages and cities, that it is difficult to trace the individuals connected with the equally important, but more scattered, work of bringing into cultivation the fertile soil of the country. But during the period intervening between the years 1834 and 1840, old account books and business records show among the land-owners trading at these points—although some of them resided on farms now within the city limits, some outside the township, and some even outside the present county—Hiram Hopkins, John Barker, Frederick Stolp, Epaphras Clark (a brother of Father N. C. Clark), John Douglas, Charles McNamara, E. Squires, Ashbel Culver, John Lilley, William Hall, George Slater, John Stolp, Elihu Wright, John Warne, Levi Leach, Harrison Albee, Addison Allbee, Lyman Isbell, Joseph Means, Charles Stolp, Thomas Paxton, William J. Strong, Robert Hopkins, John Wormley, Chester P. Trask, Daniel Bloss, Charles Wagner and others. Among these will be found names historic in the annals of Kane County.

The first election in Fox River Precinct was held in 1835. Ralph C. Horr was elected Justice of the Peace and B. F. Fridley was chosen Constable. The first election under township organization, which was adopted in 1850, was held on April 2d of that year, and R. C. Mix was elected as the first Supervisor; H. F. Kingsbury, Town Clerk; W. V. Plum, Assessor; I. T. Bevier, Poormaster; S. Richardson, I. M. Howell and John Douglas, Commissioners of Highways; John King and W. R. King, Justices;

C. Pinney and W. D. King, Constables. W. D. King was also chosen Collector.

At the close of 1834 twelve persons appear to have been located at McCarty's Mill, viz.: Joseph and Samuel McCarty, Jeffrey Beardsley, Robert Faracre, Stephen A. Aldrich and his wife and two children, Ralph C. Horr, Seth Reed, Zaphne Lake and Hiram Bowen. In 1835 the settlement was reinforced by the arrival of Dr. Daniel Eastman, D. Gorton and George Gorton, Theodore Lake, R. Matthews, John Barker, B. F. Phillips, Winslow Higgins, Elgin Squires, John Livingston, Charles Bates, L. Huntoon, John Holbrook, B. F. Fridley, E. D. Terry, M. D. Cone and probably a few others, a portion of whom had families. Such as desired were permitted to "squat" upon Joseph McCarty's claim, and occupy lots which they selected with a view to purchasing when his land should be platted. McCarty prepared a plat of lots and blocks on the east side of the river in the fall of 1835, and Dr. Eastman purchased, at $5 each, the two lots first sold. This plat was first recorded at Ottawa—then the county-seat—and, later, on August 8, 1839, at Geneva, in Volume I., page 160, and the Eastman purchase embraced Lots 5 and 6 in Block 11.

Burr Winton, an old friend of the McCarty's, was persuaded by them to come from down on the Vermilion River, where he was prospecting, and board their hands. He arrived with his family October 9, 1836, after eight days' journey, with his family in a prairie schooner drawn by a yoke of oxen, and leading the indispensable cow. The first wheat ground at the McCarty mill was grown, it is said, about where the First Congregational church now stands, at the corner of Main Street and East Park Place. Elias D. Terry and his brother Richard built the first frame hotel at the northeast corner of Main and LaSalle Streets, which was opened January 1, 1837, with a grand New Year dancing party. This doubtless was the first plastered building in the city. The lime was burned from the stone taken out of McCarty's mill race, and the trowel used was fashioned by John King, the first blacksmith and Justice of the Peace in 1850, out of an old broken hand-saw.

Joseph G. Stolp arrived in 1837, and immediately commenced the foundation of the manufacturing enterprises that have contributed so largely to the immense prosperity of the city. Noah B. Spalding, John Holbrook, W. D. King, Abram Odell, Anson Pease and William Gardner were among those who arrived in 1836 or earlier. William V. Plum, Nathaniel Deniston, Abel Downer, Clark and Roswell Wilder, William H. Hawkins and E. D. Huntoon were among those who came in 1837. Among the names of those who came in 1838-39 we find O. D. Day and William B. Plato, well remembered as able lawyers and influential men, besides Griffith Evans, father of the present State Senator H. H. Evans. The first death within the limits of the present city was that of Miss Elmira Graves, in the fall of 1835, and the first within the present township, but not within the city, was that of Mr. Jacob Carpenter, its first settler, which occurred September 20, 1836.

At an election held March 6, 1845, fifty-two votes were cast in favor of incorporating the village of East Aurora. Daniel Cushing presided, Myron Whipple was clerk, and no negative votes were cast. During the same year the following Village Board of officers was elected: Daniel Eastman, President; Daniel McCarty, Perseus Brown, Luke Wheelock and F. J. Wagner, Trustees. The village of West Aurora was organized in 1854 with Myron V. Hall, President, D. B. Waterman, B. Street, George McCollom and Anor Richardson, Trustees. The Legislature of 1857 granted a charter uniting the two villages, and at the first city election, held March 3, 1857, B. F. Hall was elected Mayor, J. D. Clark and W. V. Plum, Aldermen of the First Ward; Holmes Miller and J. G. Stolp of the Second Ward; William Gardner and R. C. Mix of the Third Ward; and L. Cottrell and S. L. Jackson of the Fourth Ward. In 1887 the special charter was abrogated and the general charter for the incorporation of cities was adopted. The development of the united corporation, in all desirable lines, has been steady and rapid, and few cities in this great Middle West bear a more desirable reputation than does the beautiful city of Aurora.

BATAVIA TOWNSHIP.

Township 39, covering the half townships of Batavia and Geneva, has ever been in all its material aspects and resources, as attractive and desirable as can well be imagined. The soil is deep and very fertile; prairie and woodland could not be more conveniently alternated; the beautiful river, frequently widening to encompass many picturesque islands, holds its course almost due southward across its center; many charming spring brooks wind their way through its highly cultivated and thoroughly improved farms; and its artistic suburban lawns extending to the outflowing stream, and exhaustless quarries of the finest building stone in this part of the State, are found in many places along its banks. The main Indian and army trail passed near its eastern border, and it included the opening between the two bodies of heavy timber known as the "head of the Big Woods."

These most desirable natural features, and its proximity to the trail, are the plain reasons why it irresistibly attracted the first settlers, and became the rallying center of the early activities of the county. Its highly cultivated farms, its excellent rural homes and buildings, and its intelligent agricultural enterprise and wealth, have ever kept it in the front rank of the fine farming townships of the county, while its two beautiful cities have been noted for refinement and intellectual culture from their first settlement.

A little more than the south half of Town 39 constitutes the Township of Batavia adjoining Aurora. Its first cabin—perhaps the first in the county—was built by Columbus Payne in the grove bordering the prairie just east of the city of Batavia. It was a most charming and attractive spot, and was probably not more than half a mile south of James Watson Webb's trail, as he approached the river in his perilous journey of 1822. As the pioneer settlers came along the old army trail, Payne's near-by cabin became a hospitable shelter while they prospected for desirable locations. Mr. E. K. Town and Harry Boardman, who "put up" at Payne's in 1834, have frequently stated that sixteen guests had spent the night together in that one 16x16 log house; and when some one suggested they were crowding the family, Mrs. Payne told them not to be uneasy about that, as she had lodged twenty-three persons at one time. So this was not only the first house, but also the first tavern in the county; and in it the first wedding occurred, as heretofore stated.

Payne sold his claim to Isaac Wilson, the second County Judge and father of Judge Isaac G. Wilson, who came in 1835. At the first precinct election held in this house, in 1836, E. S. Town and Ira Minard were elected Justices of the Peace. Here, too, Rev. N. C. Clark preached the first sermon, as heretofore stated, and in Batavia, Dodson Vandeventer was born, October 10, 1834—the first white child born in the county. In the winter of 1834-5 Mr. Cleghorn taught a school here; Joel McKee opened the first store in 1835, and in 1837 Charles Ballard built the first regular tavern where the "Revere House" stands. Joseph W. Churchill, the first lawyer to locate here, came in 1835; also John Churchill, James Rockwell, Horace Town and Dr. D. K. Town, the first physician. John Gregg, the indispensable "village blacksmith," opened a shop east of the village limit near "the trail" in 1834, and it is said that farmers came from west of the Kishwaukee to his shop for repairs to their plows and tools—thus beginning, with good workmanship at his trade, the manufacturing industries that have given Batavia so wide and favorable a reputation. Titus Howe put up the frame for a saw-mill, and began the construction of a dam near the lower end of the island, in 1834; but, before completing either, sold his property and claim in 1835 to William Van Nortwick and his son John, both of whom were educated and experienced engineers familiar with the production and use of water-power, then the only energy in practical use for driving machinery. Associated with eastern capitalists they built the dam at the head of the island. John, while retaining his interest here, returned to his engineering work for the State of New York, and attended also to the eastern end of the financial business of the partnership. He became a permanent resident of Batavia in 1848. The firm of Van Nortwick, Barker, House & Co. became the first shippers of Illinois flour to the young city of Chicago, by strict integrity and by manufacturing the best product known in their time, establishing the reputation for excellent production that has made Batavia famous, and securing a ready market for its goods.

Col. Joseph Lyon dug the first stone for curbing a well in 1834 or '35, and the first regular quarrying of this excellent stone was begun in 1842 by Z. Reynolds. Since then eight or ten different quarries have been operated, and very smooth surfaced blocks, about ten inches thick, and up to nine by twenty feet square, have been shipped in great quantities, beside the usual irregular flat building stone.

BATAVIA VILLAGE PLATTED.—The original site of the village on the east side was platted by Van Nortwick, Barker, House & Co. in 1837, and on the west side by John Van Nortwick in 1844. April 26, 1856, twenty-seven votes were cast in Batavia in favor of village incorporation, and eleven against. At the first election of village officers, held May 10, 1856, T. C. Moore, one of the most genial and gentlemanly lawyers of the county, served as Moderator and J. C. Pindar as clerk. John Van Nortwick, Orsamus Wilson, M. N. Lord, D. U. Griffin and George E. Corwin were elected as the first Board of Trustees.

These are a few of the beginnings of the unusually attractive and prosperous township and city of Batavia—the namesake of the equally beautiful city in New York, from which Gen. Isaac Wilson and others of its first settlers came to Illinois.

GENEVA TOWNSHIP.

This twin sister of Batavia embraces the north half of Township 39, and takes its name also, as has been stated, from one of the most beautiful cities of the Empire State. Its fertile farms also lie on both banks of the river, the prairie in pioneer days extending in places to the river on the west bank. They are absolutely unsurpassed in cultivation and fine improvements. There is little or no doubt that a distinct and well-worn Indian trail branched westward from the old army trail, and crossed the river at the head of Herrington's Island; and along this trail Daniel S. Haight prospected in 1833, and built his cabin beside the then noble spring on the west bank of the river. In summer the stream could be easily forded; in winter it was solidly ice-bridged, and, in time of freshet, one had to avoid the necessity of crossing it at all.

Like Payne, who at the same time settled a couple of miles below, Haight is said to have been a sober, intelligent, honest man; rough, kind and generous, but a born scout and pioneer. He soon sold out to James Herrington and disappeared, as has been already told. When Captain Dodson first came here in 1834, he found near Haight's place a man named Corey, another named Crow, and an Andrew Miles (or Mills), whose claim and wretched shanty, on the east side of the river, he bought. Dodson was then busy with his store and sawmill at Claiborneville. Edward Trimble, who married Payne's daughter, also had a claim near the edge of the timber on the east side (the Samuel Sterling farm) and their daughter was the first white child born in this township. Miles died in 1836—the first death of an adult in the township—and Crow and Corey soon disappeared. One Frederick Bird's claim covered the Eben Danford farm, just north of the village on the west side. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Sterling first settled on this place in 1834 or '35, and Mrs. Sterling taught the first school of the township here in the winter of 1835 or '36. They were superior people, each being very energetic, well-educated and refined, and they richly merit far more extended notice than is permitted by the limited scope of this work—but so, also, may be said of many others. Mr. Sterling built the first dam and bridge across the river, and the first saw-mill; and he and his wife opened the first regular public tavern.

COMING OF THE HERRINGTONS.—In May, 1833, the man and wife who were to be among the leading builders of Geneva brought their family of six children to Chicago. These were James Clayton and Charity Herrington, who had come to Illinois from Meadville, Penn. Their children were Augustus M., Nathan, James, Fannie, Richard and Thad. Mary, another daughter, was born in Chicago and became the wife of J. Tuttle. The next daughter, Margaret, was born at Geneva, November 3, 1836, and is said to have been the first white girl baby born in the place. The year that his family lived in Chicago was beyond doubt spent by Mr. Herrington in carefully prospecting the surrounding country, and his selection of Haight's claim, in the fall or winter of 1834-35, is strong proof of its desirability. Herrington at once used Haight's "shack" as a store, and built the best double house of hewed logs to be found in the county for a number of years. L. M. Church served him as his first clerk, and then David Dunham, who was elected Recorder in 1836. Crawford Herrington came in 1835; also Arthur Aken, who built a cabin near 'McWayne's Spring." Here, again, "Father" Clark preached the first sermon in the place at James Herrington's, and, in 1836, Logan Ross opened the first blacksmith shop. Noah B. Spaulding took out the first marriage license and married Miss Angelina Atwater in the fall of this year.

THE BOSTON COLONY.—In 1837 came the first families of that colony of educated Bostonians who, for so many years, gave the society of Geneva an atmosphere of culture and refinement that was distinctly felt throughout the county. Among them were Scotto and Samuel Clark, Charles Patten, Peter Sears and C. A. Buckingham—the latter the first lawyer and a young man of very brilliant promise. The accomplished daughters of Mr. Scotto Clark became the wives of Charles Patten, Judge Isaac G. Wilson and Major Davis of Ausable. Charles Patten opened a store in 1837, and was a leading merchant of the place until his death in 1887. Then there were Marshall and "Aunt Maria" Clark, George Patten, Dr. Henry Madden, Julius Alexander, Abram Clark, Samuel Nye Clark and others, including Miss Susan Sophia Carr.

There was an elegant graciousness and quiet energy in the lives of these ladies of the early days at Geneva, that lingers like a halo of loving righteousness about their memories, exalting and ennobling all who came within its benign influence. Charity Herrington and Mrs. Julius Alexander were the very best types of helpful, brave pioneer women. When some ten years later the cholera broke out in the first Swede colony here, and many people fled in terror, "Aunt Polly" Clark ministered like a mother to the stricken ones; and it is reverently told of one poor woman dying, clasping her beloved bible in one hand and with the other clinging to the ministering hand of Mrs. Clark. The large number of Swedish people at Geneva still gratefully cherish in love her memory. In those early days came also Isaac Claypool, Mark Daniels, Hendrick Miller and, following close after, many other most excellent people like the Rev. Augustus Conant, Dr. William LeBaron, for some time State Entomologist, Luther Dearborn and a host of others whom we would gladly mention.

MANUFACTURES.—The first mowers and reapers, invented about 1850 by Eben Danford, surpassed in excellence the McCormick and other machines displayed at the fairs in this and other counties, and almost invariably bore the blue ribbon of superiority. Many people familiar with the development of the county believe that, if this excellent man of fine inventive genius had been given a little more financial encouragement, Geneva would have become one of the great manufacturing centers of the country.

BIG ROCK TOWNSHIP.

This is the southwest corner township of the county, in Range No. 6, Town 38, and its lands came into market June 6, 1842. It is one of the very best agricultural townships in the county, and along Big Rock Creek is found the most picturesque scenery in the county. The southwest and the northeast portions of the township consist of beautiful rolling prairie lands with deep fertile soil, doubtless of ancient alluvial formation, while traversing it diagonally from the northwest to the southeast corner, along the branches of the Big Rock Creek, are fine bodies of heavy timber. The two branches of Welch Creek flow from the Kaneville line, nearly south through the eastern half of the township to their intersection on Section 24, a mile or two north of its junction with the Big Rock. The old Chicago and Galena stage road passes through the center of the township from east to west. It will be readily observed that this natural distribution of prairie and timber lands, with an indispensable water supply and the accessibility of this region over the stage road, would strongly attract the early settlers. Undoubtedly the first family taking up a claim on land within the township, was that of Santy Cook, who was found living in a tent pitched about a mile south of the present Big Rock village in 1834 or '35. Cook was from Kentucky and doubtless brought his family down the Ohio or the Cumberland to the "Illinois Country." But little is known of his history. He must have staked out an immense claim, as it is recorded that he sold a thousand acres of it at one sale. Justice E. Ament located about a mile north of the village in the fall of 1835, and says that the Cooks and Matthew H. Perry's family were the only settlers then in the township. John Pierce, Joseph Summers, Robert Nash, James W. Swan, Percy Taylor, Robert Fisher, Alexis Hall and J. W. Whiddon came in 1836. A waif called "Indian Jim" was also there at that date. In 1837, among others, came James and Isaac Hatch, Edward Whiddon, Mr. Rexford, L. D. and Jesse Brady and a Mr. Matlock, who settled at a sharp bend in the creek still called "Matlock's Point;" also, James Dundee who came from Ireland and, it is claimed, originated the principal ideas of the riding-cultivator.

L. J. Lamson, who came from "York State" in 1837, tells an interesting incident suggestive of the conditions of pioneer days. He says he took the stage at Chicago for Big Rock Creek, of which he had received very favorable accounts, and was put down at the creek-crossing just before dark. The driver at once splashed his team through the water and drove on west. Looking about him he could discover no indication of human presence, save the wagon tracks through the grass, and following them until night fall, he saw a light through the darkness. Approaching it he found a miserable cabin almost destitute of the ordinary comforts of life. Its occupants were asleep upon the floor except one very large man, who hospitably welcomed him and said he might have his place upon the floor, as his tooth ached so that he could not sleep. As the people unrolled from their blankets next morning he discovered that he had nested with the whole Cook family, men and women, who were all fully grown and unusually large.

Maurice Price and many others came in this year. Calista Ann Ament, the first white child, was born November 13, 1837. Coon and Massy built the first saw-mill on the creek during this year. The first marriage was that of Thomas W. Glasspool and Katie Cook, a daughter of the settler first mentioned. Edward Pierce was born in 1836, soon after his father's arrival, and his was the first birth in the township. Joseph Summers kept the first tavern on the old State road. William Coon opened the first blacksmith shop and a Mr. Welby the first store. The first school house, of rough logs, with door, desk, seats and floor made of slabs, was raised by a "bee" of settlers in 1841, upon the claim of Joshua F. Rhodes, and in it the first school was taught by Colin Ament. J. F. Rhodes, Thomas Meredith and Ira Hodges were the commissioners who located the State road from Aurora westerly through the county.

Among the old settlers of Big Rock and their descendants will be found both men and women who are among the most prominent and useful in the county. The shape of the farms and location of the highways of this rich agricultural township, as shown upon the map, most forcibly indicates the eager desire of the early settlers to attach wood and water to their homesteads.

BLACKBERRY TOWNSHIP.

This is Township 39 North, Range 7 East, and is another rich agricultural township. Bald Mound, near the center of Section 23, and Johnson's Mound on the northwest quarter of Section 5, are said to be the highest points of land in the county, and have ever been conspicuous land-marks, noted for the exceeding beauty of the landscape visible from their summits. Nelson's Lake—now nearly dry—lies partly in Blackberry and partly in Batavia Township. Lake Run, the outlet of Nelson's Lake and its tributary streams in the southeasterly part of the township, and Blackberry Creek, with its numerous branches in the westerly part, have ever furnished an abundance of running water for its fine grain and stock farms. The land in this township is the most undulating or rolling, perhaps, in the county; and it is one of the townships in which the groves, woodlands and prairie are so favorably mingled, although along the line of Blackberry Creek, from Elburn station in the northwest corner of the township, south to Sugar Grove, there was heavy timber in the early days. The Iowa Division of the North-Western Railroad passes through its northern tier of sections across the entire township, with the busy station of La Fox and the fine, growing village of Elburn, affording excellent shipping facilities for its people and their products. Its splendid farms are devoted to grain and stock-raising, and feeding and dairying, and its landowners are highly prosperous.

A Notable Pioneer.—The first settler in this township was a remarkable man; and within the years of his eventful life occurred the most momentous and far-reaching movements and events in man's history. William Lance was born April 8, 1771, in Hunterdon County, New Jersey Colony, a subject of King George III. He was five years old when the immortal Declaration of Independence was adopted, and twelve at the close of the Revolutionary War. He well remembered many incidents of the historic struggle, and had frequently seen Washington and other famous characters of the first years of the Republic. Many of the Indian struggles on the Atlantic coast, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, and the awful conflict of the great Rebellion were not altogether history to him, but incidents in his country's development within his own observation. He lived during the administration of all the great historic Presidents of the Republic. Possessing much of the pioneer spirit, he was living in Indiana in 1833 and resolved to push still farther westward. Early in the spring of 1834, which was an unusually mild and early season, he started with his adult children John and Mary and a much younger son, Charles, driving, it is said, eight yoke of cattle, and, on the trail in what is now Du Page County, they picked up a man named Isaac Walthrop. They camped for a few days at the head of the Big Woods, probably near Christopher Payne's cabin, and John prospected the west side of the river. He found a location near the southeast part of the heaviest body of timber on Blackberry Creek near the present northwest corner of Section 28, which he thought (and truthfully) one of the most delightful spots on earth; and, returning, piloted the family to the place. There on May 2, 1834, they located the first claim in all that portion of Kane County, and there Mr. Lance resided until his death, September 7, 1873, aged 102 years, four months and twenty-nine days.

In the fall, William Lance and his son John, having left Mary and Charles with an uncle in Du Page County, returned to Indiana for the other members of the family. John and an older daughter, Margaret, married in Indiana during that winter, and all returned to Illinois together, arriving at the claim on Christmas Day. William Lance and his family, John Lance and his bride, and David Beeler with his bride, Margaret Lance—all living in one little log cabin—were the only white people in this township; and probably the only ones in the county, save Haight, west of the river during the winter of 1834-5. Mary Lance, the first white woman in the townsnip, married John Souders about Christmas time 1835, their's being the first wedding in the township; and about this date her sister, Margaret Beeler, gave birth to a daughter, Martha, who was the first white child born in the township. A little more than a year after, on February 2, 1837, another sister, little Sarah Lance, was burned to death in the destruction of the first cabin built in the township. These are said to have been the first death and the first fire in the township —a very remarkable train of "firsts" to center in the family of a man of such extraordinary experience.

In the spring and summer of 1835 came D. W. Annis, Harry White, George Trimble, L. D. Kendall, John Souders, Hiram Hall, and perhaps others, and settled near R. Acres and J. G. Acres. John Vannatta arrived in 1836, and during that year and the following year, S. Kendall, Mr. Corey, James Smith, S. Platt, J. Calkins, Mr. Larkin, Noah B. Spalding and others took up claims in the township. William B. West was one of the first settlers. He became a magistrate of the township, and a man of great influence throughout the county; was also the first banker at Geneva.

The early settlers of Blackberry effected a very strong organization for protection against "claim jumpers" and to secure to all their respective claims, each placing himself under $2,000 bonds to observe its requirements. They selected Mr. West to bid in all the land at the Government sale, and convey to each his proper portion according to the claim lines. Whoever will examine a map of the township, showing the irregularity of the farm lines, will get some idea of the delicacy and difficulty of the duty assigned to Mr. West, but which he successfully and satisfactorily accomplished.

Peter H. Johnson, at an early day, paid David Beeler $1,150 for his improvements and claim of about 1,000 acres, covering the Mound; and a little below its summit, on its southerly side near a distinct Indian trail, he built the first frame house in the township, which he opened with a national celebration on July 4, 1844. William P. West was another influential man among the pioneers of this township. The names of many of these pioneers, and of others not here mentioned, are still familiar as "household words" in the families of the older residents of the county.

BURLINGTON TOWNSHIP.

Township 41, Range 6, is another purely agricultural township. Its lands came into market January 30, 1843. No stream flows across the township; but Coon Creek and two other creeks which empty into the Kishwaukee, have their rise within its borders. As the woodland and the prairie intermingle, the farm lines follow very nearly the Government surveys, and the farms have a more uniform acreage than exists in most of the townships. Its lands are peculiarly adapted to grazing, and it is a fine dairying section.

Stephen Van Velzer appears to have made the first location in the township and, unfortunately, made the preposterous claim to an area of about twelve miles square. This must have retarded settlement, as many quarrels resulted in consequence, while a number of settlers paid him something for his pretended claim to avoid contention. He came in 1835, as also did Allison Banker. In 1836 Solomon Wright and his three sons, Baldwin, Elisha and D. C., and a daughter who soon married Banker, arrived from New York; also P. R. Joslyn from Indiana, who, with his son Riley, settled upon a portion of Van Velzer's claim in defiance of his objection. T. C. and O. H. Ellithorp also came this year from Vermont, and Asa W. Lawrence of New York, who soon sold his claim and settled on Section 9 in Elgin Township, upon the beautiful farm on which he died, and which is now occupied by his son, Oscar F. Lawrence. John Holden, of Pennsylvania, and C. M. Andrews, from Massachusetts, came and entered claims in 1837. Stephen Godfrey, the father of Charles B., came from Vermont in the fall of 1839, and bought a claim of Van Velzer, arranged to have a portion plowed, and went back for his family, with whom he returned the next spring. This family has ever been one of the most useful and highly respected in the community. B. T. Chapman came from Canada and Stephen R. Ellithorp from Vermont in 1842. The next year David Sholes, whose home had been in Genesee County, N. Y., arrived and made very extensive purchases of land, including the site of Van Velzer's first settlement. He died in October, 1881, owning some 1,900 acres of very excellent land. James Roseborough came from the North of Ireland, and became a permanent resident in 1843. James Mann came in the fall of the same year from Wyoming County, N. Y., bought a 1,000-acre claim, plowed a part of it, set out a few apple trees, and went back home for his family. Eben Norton, Elder Isaac Newton, Joel Root and J. W. Hapgood, Simon Young, Sr., and his sons—William, Daniel, John, Simon, Jr. (who perhaps came a little before the others), Stephen and David—made a strong addition to the settlement in 1841. Harvey A. Matteson, an old and public-spirited resident, came with his parents to St. Charles this same year. The Manns and Hapgoods intermarried, and have been active factors in building up the community.

Soon after the land sale Mr. McClenathan entered a tract of land claimed by Mr. Mason—in retaliation, it is said, of Mason's attempt to avoid payment for a yoke of cattle. The quarrel came near ending fatally. Mason and a number of his friends seized the alleged "claim jumper," dragged him to a near-by pond, cut the ice, and nearly drowned him in the freezing water. He managed, however, to escape, and fled to the village, whose few settlers protected him from further violence, although a pitched battle with his pursuers seemed imminent. This pond is on Section 12, near the Wallace Brothers' barn, and McClenathan's old log cabin is now their chicken house.

The first death in the settlement was that of Van Velzer's wife, in 1837. She was a Southern woman and brought with her a negro slave who served her mistress faithfully; but soon after her death, the slave returned to her old home in the sunny South land. The first school in the township was taught by Mrs. Catherine Ellithorp in her own log house in 1839, and her husband, John W. Ellithorp, was the first postmaster. The next year (1840) Mrs. Godfrey also taught a few pupils in her home. Miss Fannie Putnam kept a school in 1842 in Van Velzer's barn. About this date a log schoolhouse was built on the old stage road about a mile southeast of the present village, and Miss Larrabee and Miss Nancy Hill taught there in the early days.

The marriage of John Holden and Hannah Van Velzer in 1840, was the first wedding. Ezra Hanson put out the first tavern sign at his log-house on the State road southeast of the village. James Mann erected, in 1844-45, the first frame barn and house in the township. While on a visit to "York State," where he drove with a team of horses in 1845, his house and all his household goods were burned; but on his return he erected the quite commodious brick tavern which, for many years, entertained very many travelers, and was the happy scene of numerous dancing parties and other social festivities. The first store was opened by Sylvester S. Mann, who, for a number of years, represented the district in the State Legislature, and after his removal to Elgin it was conducted very sucessfully by his brother A. J. Mann, and by the firm of Mann, Hapgood & Co. until A. J. Mann also moved to Elgin. Franklin Mann and Gideon Sherman erected the first saw-mill in 1850.

The first clergyman in the town was "Elder Eaton," who came in 1840 and soon after organized a Free-Will Baptist society. The first church building appears to have been commenced in 1853 by the Congregationalists, but it was four or five years in process of construction, and was also used by the Methodists and Free-Will Baptists, finally passing to the ownership of the latter.

In the late 'forties appearances were very favorable for the village of Burlington becoming an important place in the county. The State road was crowded with teams hauling out the produce of the country. The daily stages were filled with passengers, and the horses were stabled and changed at Mann's brick tavern. Plank roads were being built from St. Charles and Elgin, converging at Burlington, and prospects were very bright. But the route of the steam railways changed all this, and the village is now a thriving station on the Chicago Great Western Railway, which passes nearly due east and west across the township through the second tier of sections from the north line.

CAMPTON TOWNSHIP.

Township 40, Range 7, is the central township of the county. East of it lies St. Charles, at the north Plato and Rutland, on the west Virgil, and at the south Blackberry and Sugar Grove. There is no township in the county in which the pioneers found the indispensable wood and water more bountifully provided and conveniently distributed; while bordering the woodlands were the inviting tracts of open land, scarcely large enough to be called prairie, entirely free of rocks and bushes and ready for the plow, the wild grasses and flowers alone covering the rich black soil of seemingly exhaustless fertility. The southerly branch of Ferson's Creek had its rise in Lily Lake near the north line of Section 18 and, passing eastward across the entire township, in the early days was a stream of very respectable dimensions, in the spring being filled with pickerel and red-horse suckers, seeking the shoal waters in which to deposit their spawn. Very near the center of the township is the head of a branch of Mill Creek, which passes out of the township near the east line of Section 35. We can scarcely estimate, in these days of numerous wells and convenient pumping machinery, and of steam and electric power so easily available, the value of these natural features to the pioneer settlers. At first the water for all daily household use was obtained from the spring, creek or shallow well at the edge of the slough; and for fully twenty years, the farmers depended upon these for stock water. During the winter, ice was hauled from them and melted for family use, and to secure the luxury of soft water for washing. In the later 'thirties, Dr. King, a preacher, a physician and an energetic, useful pioneer, built an up-and-down saw-mill on Lily Lake Creek on the northwest quarter of Section 14, and established the King's Mill postoffice on the old thoroughfare toward Rockford. Each was a great convenience in its time. It is said that there was a very distinct Indian trail near the line of the highway from the river northwestward, passing the south end of Lily Lake. This lake is now practically dry, and doubtless its former bed will soon be cultivated land. The effect of the drying up of the water reservoirs and shrinking of the stream is one of the problems future time must solve, we hope without serious detriment to posterity.

John Beatty, who arrived at Haight's early in the spring of 1835 and began prospecting westward, was doubtless the first person to stake out a claim in this township. He drove his first stakes in the prairie upon what is now the southeast quarter of Section 36; but with the advancing season he ventured a mile or two further west, and located permanently in the edge of the woodland on the northwest quarter of Section 35, convenient to a fine spring and near the running creek, where he erected the first settler's cabin in the township. He sold his first claim to a Mr. Archie, and the second passed to the Burr family. John Whitney, Charles Babcock and James Hackett also came in 1835, and Luke Pike who entered the claim which became the home of the well-known and highly useful Chaffee family. In 1836 and '37 Harry and Spalding Eddy, John Elliott, Atwell Burr, James Ward, William Kendall, John Durant, E. Reed, James Outhouse, John Hagerman, T. E. Dodge, Ansel Lake, John Tucker, George Thompson, Eben Foss, Franklin Watkins and others arrived, and some of them, with their families, became important factors in the town and county. The venerable Robert Corion was also one of the earliest and best settlers in this township.

In 1837 Henry Warne and his wife, Charity Warne, took up a large claim on Sections 32 and 31 and became, with their intelligent and enterprising descendants, among the most powerful and beneficent forces in upbuilding the township and county. Mr. Warne built a large and good log house, which naturally became the halting place for incoming settlers, and as naturally and necessarily, a tavern, named by Judge Ford, "The Halfway House," between the county-seats, Geneva and Sycamore, and between Chicago and Oregon on Rock River. Governor Marcy, of New York, Stephen A. Douglas, John Wentworth and other noted men of that day, were among its sometime guests. John Warne, Elisha Warne and Gideon D. Warne, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Warne, have ever been noted for their energy, enterprise, integrity and business success, while their daughters—Susan, wife of the late L. N. B. Burr; Lucinda, wife of the "barb-wire king," J. F. Glidden, of De Kalb; and Isabel, wife of M. W. Willis—are women of whom any community may rightfully be proud.

At least four very popular taverns were kept in this township as early as 1840. "The Halfway House," "The Fairfield Exchange" by D. B. Mallory on the southeast quarter of Section 24, Timothy Garfield's tavern, and one near the south end of Chicken Grove, kept by Elias Crary. The extent of the teaming from Chicago westward, in early days, may be inferred from the fact that there were, at this time, forty taverns by the roadside between Mallory's place and Chicago. It is said that, in order to mark and establish the route of travel, Ira Minard and Daniel Marvin drove a number of yoke of oxen attached to a fallen tree, from St. Charles across Campton to Oregon, in Ogle County, in 1838.

During the winter of 1836-7 a Mrs. McClure taught school in a log house upon the claim of a Mr. Lawson, and the next winter Miss Mary Lee taught in the house of James Ward. The next fall a log school-house was built on land occupied by Mr. A. Fisher. In 1841 E. Chaffee, Charles Fletcher, Thomas E. Dodge, Ansel Lake and Hylas T. Currier were elected School Trustees, Nelson Walker chosen Clerk, and the town divided into five school districts, besides a sixth district including a portion of Virgil Township. The township has always been well supplied with schools, and it was one of the first townships to erect a neat and commodious town house. Avon; the first postoffice in the township, was established April 20, 1840, with Henry Warne as postmaster, was discontinued in 1845, but reestablished as Swinton, July 24, 1849, with the same postmaster. The first village settlement was at Canada Corners where, about 1844 or '45, Eldridge Walker opened a little store and soon the industries of a village gathered about it. He came from Canada, as did the Wolcotts and Lindleys who settled near, and thus it took the name Canada Corners. It came to have two blacksmith shops and a paint shop, a store, church, school house, a number of homes, and a well-kept cemetery.

In 1886-7 the Minneapolis & Northwestern—now the Chicago Great Western—Railroad was constructed across the township near its center, and the busy thriving station of Wasco was located on the north half of Section 28, and Lily Lake Station on the south half of 18, a short half-mile from Canada Corners. Lily Lake village was platted May 9, 1887, by Renalwin Outhouse. Dairying has, for years, been the principal industry, and fine herds of dairy cows are found on nearly every farm of that township. The Hon. John Stewart's magnificent farm, of over 900 acres, is one of the finest breeding establishments in any county. His Clydesdale horses, Polled Angus cattle, and Ayreshire cows are the very choicest that brains, experience and money can produce.

The lands of the township came into market January 30, 1843.

"BONNIE DUNDEE."

Dundee Township, No. 42, Range 8, is the northeast township of Kane County, and in making a "set off" to correct errors in the original government surveys, it is projected eastward of the other townships of the county about a mile and a quarter. The river passes from north to south through the second and third tier of sections west of its east line. Thompson's Creek, which skirts a valley of singular loveliness and remarkable fertility, emptying into the river near the southeast corner of Section 27, is the principal flowing brook, while from its romantic hillsides, many springs supply brooklets of pure water delightfully cool in summer, and in the coldest weather free from ice for quite a distance from their source —a condition peculiarly attractive in the early days. The current of Thompson's Creek had formed at its mouth a gravel bar reaching quite across the river, which the pioneers thought the best ford in the county at times of high water. The river valley is very narrow and extremely fertile, bordered by higher and more precipitate bluffs than in the lower townships, while the small prairie lands in many places extended to the river side. The table lands are high and quite hilly, presenting at many points extensive views of great beauty.

The Government sale of lands in Dundee Township opened on September 2, 1840. Jesse H. Newman and Joseph Russell, from Virginia, whose families had intermarried in their native State, came westward from the "Old Dominion" and located in La Porte County, Ind. From there the two men, in a covered wagon, prospected westward in the summer of 1834, and early in October camped for the night on the high bluff upon the west bank of Fox River near the present beautiful cemetery at Dundee. Whoever has viewed the charming landscape that environed them will not be surprised that they resolved to seek no farther. Newman staked a claim including their camp ground, and Russell selected a location on the east bank of the stream near Chief Nickowa's village in "Granny Russell's hollow." They returned at once to Indiana, and in April, 1835, came back with their families, and first put up a cabin on Newman's claim, where all lived while they built Russell's log house, which stood for many years just south of the brick yard. These were the first white men's habitations in the county. Mr. A. R. Dempster came to the new land in May of that same year, and during that season John Jackson, the Hawleys, Mr. Burbank, Benjamin Irick, Mr. Moore, Mr. Van Arsdell, George Tyler, Gen. George McClure, Mr. Parker, and possibly one or two others, settled in the neighborhood. Mr. and Mrs. John Oatman, with their nine sons—Joseph, Hardin, Clement, Jesse, Ira, William, James, John Jr., and Pleasant —and their two sons-in-law, Thomas Deweese and Thomas L. Shields, together with another daughter—all of whom came in the fall of 1835 or spring of 1836—constituted the strongest addition this settlement ever received, or probably ever came to the county in one family. The names of eight of them appear among the subscribers for building the first river bridge, already referred to, and they furnished over one-third of the money for that important improvement. All of the Oatmans except Jesse and his family moved south in 1849, there, as here, becoming leaders in the communities where they settled. John Oatman, Deweese and Shields had Mark W. Fletcher survey and plat for them the village of Dundee on the west bank of the river, on March 29, 1837. Thomas H. Thompson located his claim in 1835, upon the south half of Section 27, and built the beautiful home which became the residence of the late E. G. Ketchum, and with his sons at once became a strong factor in the development of Lake Precinct, Dundee Township and Kane County.

The year 1836 saw many strong accessions to this settlement, among the arrivals of that year being the Welch family, Henry Smith, John Allison, Mr. Freeman, William Wilburn, the Halls, Bucklins, Perrys, D. W. Bangs, the Mannings, Ashbaughs, Calvin Tyler, Benjamin Moore, and the first physician, Dr. Goodnow. The names Dundee and Elgin, given beyond doubt in loving remembrance for the old hymns then so familiar, found in Burns' couplet from the "Cotter's Saturday Night,"

"Perhaps Dundee's wild warbling accents rise, Or noble Elgin beats the heavenward flame," proved very attractive to the sons and daughters of Auld Scotia, and A. R. Dempster was soon joined by a number of strong families from his beloved isle. We find near him and Allison the Binnies, Cochranes, Alstons, Todds, Hills, McCullucks, McNeils, Crichtons, Egglestons, Howies, Archibalds, Duffs, Fraziers, Griffiths, Campbells, Morrisons, McAllisters, Robert and Allan Pinkerton, and others, and there was never a more desirable class of settlers. The last named, while prosecuting his trade as a cooper, was appointed a Deputy Sheriff, and skillfully detected and arrested "Old Craig," one of the shrewdest counterfeiters of that time, well loaded with spurious bills of the famous Scotch financier, George Smith's "Wisconsin Fire and Marine Insurance Company's" Bank. He quit coopering and became the founder of the great Pinkerton Detective Agency.

Probably the first persons drowned in the Fox River were two boys about thirteen or fourteen years old, sons of James Howie and James Sherrar, who in "teetering" their boat, overturned it and were both drowned. Catharine Dempster, daughter of A. R. Dempster and, in womanhood, the wife of Malcolm M. McNeill, who was born June 25, 1835, was doubtless the first white child born in the township. Thomas Deweese's father died in October, 1836—the first death—and the first marriage was that of Captain Jamison, U. S. A., to a daughter of Gen. George McClure, in 1837. The first school was taught in 1837 by Amanda Cochrane, who became the wife of Moses Wanzer. The first preaching was undoubtedly by "Father Clark" at General McClure's settlement in 1836, which was very near the southeast corner of Section 26, then called McClure's Grove.

"Elder" Marshall Sherman—the first of the enterprising Sherman family—Moses Wanzer, David and John Mason, E. W. Austin, David Corliss, the Hewitts and many other excellent men settled upon the farms west of the river in the last half of the 'thirties, and the Smiths, Hawleys, Bullards, and others made equally desirable claims on the east side. The Deweese picturesque overshot mill, driven by water from the abundant springs flowing from the high bluff upon the east side of the river, began grinding in the fall of 1837, to the immense relief and delight of the settlers for many miles around. The Oatmans brought a small stock of goods with them, and at once opened a little store on the west side. Hardin Oatman opened the first tavern, also, in 1838; David Hammer kept the first grocery and the first tavern on the east side. The Bosworths, Edwardses and Carpenters came between 1837 and 1840—each composing unusually enterprising families; Daniel G. and Charles V. Carpenter located on Sections 14 and 15 in 1837, and the Oatmans and Shields built a dam and saw-mill here about this time, which they finally sold to George J. and S. H. Peck.

The village of Carpentersville was platted in 1851, and incorporated in 1857. The Hon. Julius A. Carpenter was for many years the remarkably able leader in this community, and under his wise direction it developed some of the finest manufacturing industries of the county. Dundee was quite exclusively a grain growing township, until the failure of the wheat crop compelled a change; and it now claims to be the best dairy township in the county.

ELGIN TOWNSHIP.

This is Township 41 North, Range 8 East of the Third Principal Meridan, lying between Dundee and St. Charles. Tyler Creek takes its name from the Tyler family who, in 1835, settled on Section 2 near the township line, and about 1837 or '38, built a saw-mill on this stream some forty rods below the crossing of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway. This creek enters the township on Section 5, runs southeasterly into Section 15 within about a mile of the center of the township, where it is joined on the Cox farm by a branch which rises north of Udina and flows about midway between the Burlington and Hampshire highways. At this point it swerves easterly a half mile, and, turning an even semicircle, flows sharply to the north past Illinois Park Addition to Elgin through Wing Park; and, in a northeasterly course, returns again almost to the north line of the township, where it describes another irregular half circle, flowing southeasterly to the river. Otter Creek—or the north branch of Ferson's Creek—heads in what was once quite a body of permanent water lying on the Henry Sherman and Cyrus Larkin farms, almost exactly in the center of the township, and within a mile of the long southerly bend of Tyler Creek. The low land intervening almost permits the water of the stream passing to the pond, and following this outlet to the river. About a mile south of the Sherman Lake there used to be another pond on the Douglas farm. These were both prairie ponds, and the south two-thirds of this township, from the river west as far as, and in places beyond, Ferson's Creek, was prairie land and well supplied with water. Nearly all the township east of the river was covered with woodland, as also were the western and northern portions.

Soon after the arrival of Olds, the Giffords and the Kimballs at what became the village of Elgin, and of Drs. Joseph Tefft and Nathan Collins at Clintonville, as heretofore stated, farm settlers began to appear. Isaac Stone and E. K.

Mann—young men from New Hampshire who had entered into a bachelor marriage—were perhaps the first to locate west from the river. They staked their claim and built a log house—near the center, now of Section 17—a little over three miles west of the river, beside the Indian trail that passed near the two peculiar isolated rocks, which were a noted land mark. Jonathan Tefft, Sr., with his family of energetic sons and daughters, and Joseph P. Corron also made claims in 1835, and became permanent settlers. From this early date settlers were constantly arriving and locating claims until, at the date of the opening of the land-sale, January 30, 1843, nearly, if not quite, every acre in this township had been claimed or pre-empted. Among the excellent pioneer farmers in the south and southwesterly sections were, P. C. Gilbert, Thomas Mitchell, Truman Gilbert (who platted the village of Clintonville), H. E. Perkins, Caleb Kipp, Seth Stowell, John Pruden, Martin Switzer, George Stringer, George French and Nathan E. Daggett. Along the Udina road had settled Asa Merrill, Sr., and Gilman H., Asa, Jr., Richard and Bazilla Merrill; Aaron Mann and his sons, William R., Adin and Leonard, half-brothers of E. K. Mann; Francis and Harriet (Mann) Weld, and their sons, O. P., Dr. N. A., Newton F. and Salem E.; Ezekiel Ballard and family, and Nathan G. Phillip, his son-in-law; Henry Sherman and Cyrus Larkin; William Plummer and his sons; Joseph Kimball and his sons and son-in-law, Hiram Wilson; Calvin Pratt, Almon Fuller, Gen. Elijah Wilcox and his sons. Solomon and Solomon Harvey Hamilton and James Todd had located on the more northerly roads; Cotton Knox, Sidney Heath, the Abbotts and others were near the river. Asa Merrill's tavern at Udina, and Joseph Kimball's tavern on the north road, were doing a big business, while "Uncle Billy Plummer" also offered excellent entertainment for man and beast. Within the village, beside those mentioned in the general history of the county, we find among the active men at this date, Jason House, the first permanent blacksmith; Bernard Healy, the first harness maker; Philo Sylla, George W. Renwick, Samuel Hunting, Augustus Adams and Alfred Hadlock, with machinery and repair shops; George Hassan, the first dairyman; Abel Walker, the first undertaker; John Smith, the first gunsmith; Vincent and John Lovell, George W. Kimball, the first cabinet-maker; P. J. Kimball, Jr., the first tailor; Horace Benham, mill-wright. Philo S. Patterson had a little yellow grocery where the Home Bank now stands. In 1838 B. W. Raymond and S. Newton Dexter bought the northerly portion of James T. Gifford's claim, and thereafter contributed greatly to the prosperity of the place. Dr. Anson Root came about 1839 and purchased heavily of Gifford's village and water rights, and became at once an important factor in the community's development. He was a man of remarkable persistence and energy. William S. Shaw, Lewis S. Eaton, Luther C. Stiles and Daniel S. Wilcox were pioneer carpenters, David Longley, the first wagon-maker, and I. P. Scott, the early-day liveryman. George P. and E. E. Harvey, S. P. Burdick, David Hunter, B. Hall, Burgess Truesdell, Calvin Carr, Harvey Raymond, Philo Hatch, Aaron Harwood, Halsey and Asa Rosenkranz, John S. Calvert, W. W. Merrill, Whitman Underwood, William Bellows, and a few others were making homes in the village. Many times more oxen than horses were in use upon the streets, and an event of far greater general interest than any ordinarily transpiring now, was the daily arrival and departure each way of the stages plying between Chicago and Galena. Hezekiah Gifford opened the first tavern in the fall of 1836 in a log house which he put up at the southwest corner of Villa and Chicago Street, fronting on Villa Street, and astonished the public by keeping no whisky. Charles Tibballs and William S. Shaw built a frame tavern just south of it, called the "Eagle Hotel." The small frame building, now standing close to Du Page and Villa Street, was put up on the north side of Du Page just south of the tavern and used as a store. Hunting and Renwick built and operated a brick blacksmith shop where the Universalist church now stands. North of them, and opposite the Eagle tavern, another little store was opened, and next at the southeast corner of Villa and Chicago Streets, Dr. Root built his two-story brick residence, in whose upper rooms his daughter Mary, who became Mrs. Increase C. Bosworth, taught school. Shaw and Tibballs later built a much larger frame tavern called the "Elgin House," where the Congregational church stands, and which was excellently kept for ten or twelve years by Tibballs. The stages stopped at the newest of these taverns, as they were successively erected. William Humphrey kept the "Eagle" after Tibballs left it, and later it was run by John S. Calvert. Dr. Joseph Tefft lived where the City Hall stands, his barn fronting Spring Street, and his office was on Chicago Street, with a little building beside it used as the post-office. Longley's wagon-shop was nearly opposite, and House's blacksmith shop was east of it, nearer the corner of Villa Street. James T. Gifford established a brick yard east of Spring Street between Du Page and Fulton Streets (the latter street named after his son Fulton), and built a lime-kiln in the bank east of the brick yard. Dr. Root's house, the David Hunter house (now Y. W. C. A.), B. W. Raymond's store (now Leitner's market), and probably Augustin Raymond's house (now W. F. Sylla's house) were built with brick and lime from this kiln and yard.

This was nearly all there was of Elgin in 1840 except hopeful prospects. It was thought that the broad part of Villa Street would accommodate the future business needs of the community. William C. and Samuel J. Kimball, who were brothers, were leading in the improvements on the west side of the river. There were at least three distinct families of this name in the community, and not only were the first birth, first death and first marriage in the village all in these families, but Jonathan Kimball was the first Justice of the Peace, and Samuel J. Kimball the first constable elected. The gratifying growth and development of this prosperous city and township, during the early days, is briefly, but more generally, stated in the history of the county.

HAMPSHIRE TOWNSHIP.

Township 42, Range 6 East, is the northwest township of Kane County. It all lies west of the Fox River watershed, and its streams flow to the Rock River. It was a beautiful region in the early day, in the fact that almost its entire surface was open woodland. It contained very little prairie and no body of heavy timber. It is not level, yet in the whole township there is not a single incline long or steep enough to fairly be called a hill. The soil is fertile and deep, and every part of the township is well supplied with water. From the east and south, four or five spring brooks flow westerly and northwesterly to the Coon Creek. For some inexplicable reason the public lands in this and Rutland Township were opened to entry and sale on September 2, 1839, three years and four months before the lands at the south and southeast of it came into market. Zenas Allen, of Vermont, father of Ethan J. Allen, once Sheriff of the county and Adjutant of the Fifty-second Illinois Infantry Regiment during the Civil War, with a numerous family of children and grandchildren, marked out a claim to a large body of land in what became Sections 36 and 35, and built the first cabin in the township near where the school house now stands. A little later in the same year Thomas E. Whittemore, of New Hampshire, and Samuel Hawley, of Connecticut, arrived and made claims a few miles farther toward the north and northwest. Hawley's claim became, in the government surveys, a part of Section 28, and his patent issued on preemption certificate number 5,061, dated May 20, 1841, signed by John Tyler, President, for the northeast quarter of said section, is certified by the Department of the Interior at Washington, to be the first patent issued conveying land situated in Kane County. The northeast corner of this land adjoins the present village of Hampshire. A few years later Allen made another claim, a mile or two further north of his first, on Section 23, where he lived with his son John A. until his death. In 1837 and '38 Daniel Hall, William H. Seymour and S. A. McApes took up claims still further north in Sections 13 and 12, and gradually quite a settlement gathered around them, which came to be spoken of as Hampshire, the name of the township—but more definitely as "Henpeck." This was on the old stage road, and William N. Humphrey, who bought the Eagle Tavern at Elgin, of Tiballs and Shaw, sold it very early in the 'forties to John S. Calvert and opened a tavern here. E. A. Garland, a New Hampshire man, also a tavern-keeper, transferred his location from West Elgin to a stage-road house about one mile northwest of "Henpeck," where the remainder of his life was spent. Each was considered a good landlord. Isaac Paddock and William Trumbull, of New York; Stephen Haviland, Hilda Coon, and John Aurand, from Germany, were early settlers in and near this community. Lucien Baldwin and Samuel C. Rowell, both from Vermont, took up claims in an early day. The number of New England people among these pioneers readily explains the preference for the name of the township.

The Rev. Robert Williams, a New Hampshire man, was the first resident preacher. There was immense teaming done over the stage roads in the decade preceding the first railway. So old Hampshire became a noted camping place, not only for teamsters but for settlers seeking locations, and it became the temporary stopping place, where pioneers camped while prospecting the country. From one to three score wagons in camp was no unusual sight at this place.

John Aurand was the forerunner of a large number of excellent German families, who did much to improve and enrich this fine township. Among them were the Reins, Leitners, Klicks, Garlicks, Wertweins, Getzelmans, Widmiers, Hausleins, Waidman, Peter Johnnin, John Blazer, and others. One of the most quaint and conspicuous was John Wales, a brother of Mrs. Aurand, who was one of the first storekeepers, and earliest Justices of the Peace in the township. Everybody knew him and was his friend. When an old man he spent some years among the Blackfoot Indians near the Canada border, and although they were then accounted the most cruel of the tribes, he declared them to be his kind and faithful friends. Among the early and useful families we find in this township the Dotys, Isbell, Patchens, Reed, Terwilligers, Bell, Lyon, Hogeboom, Weed, Bean, Williams, DeWitt, and the Baldwins.

Hampshire has furnished three County Sheriffs, viz.: Adjt. Ethan J. Allen, Capt. James C. Brown and N. S. Carlisle. The present Representative in the State Legislature, Hon. Charles H. Backus, is the banker at Hampshire, the only village in the township. The village was platted October 22, 1874, by Andrew J. Willing and Ceylon A. Fassett, and incorporated in 1876. Its first trustees, elected November 9, 1876, were S. C. Rowell, President; J. S. Wyckoff, Secretary; Philip Doty, E. W. Whelpley, Hervey Ruin and A. R. Freeman. It is a fine dairy township, and in the village there is a brick and tile yard, grinding mill, pickle factory, and other minor industries.

The first white child born in the township was Jane A. Seymour, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Seymour, born in 1840. The first school house was built a little later on the west half of Section 10, about where the "Bean" school house now stands. Zenas Allen, T. C. Whittemore and Samuel Hawley were the first School Trustees in 1842.

KANEVILLE TOWNSHIP.

Kaneville Township, in the western tier of townships, is the second from the south line of the county. It embraces Town 39, Range 6, in the government surveys, and today is one of the richest, most productive and handsomest townships in the county. But it was not so considered in the earliest days of the country's settlement, for the pioneers were fond of woods and hills, and this portion of the new country seemed a low prairie, save a little woodland in the northeast, and a grove near the center, so isolated that they called it Lone Grove. The two branches of Big Rock Creek head respectively in the eastern and the western portions of Kaneville, in wide low bottom lands, that, before settlement, grew rank high grass, and were too wet to be attractive. Each of the first two land claimants were drawn to Lone Grove by the view they had of this body of timber across the prairie from Blackberry. Job Isbell, an unmarried man, noticed this grove in passing to a claim his brother James had made in Blackberry; and in the fall of 1835 went across the prairie to it, staked out a claim and built a little log shack. Returning to Ohio, however, he died there, and the claim was abandoned until renewed by his brother James, who, in 1837, came from his settlement in Sugar Grove and took possession of it. In October, 1836, Amos Miner drove an ox-team that M. Sperry, of Blackberry, had purchased of Levi Leach, an emigrant with whom Miner had made his way into the new country as far as Naperville. After delivering the oxen, Miner walked to this grove and staked out a claim on its south side before returning to his family. He must have gone six or eight miles at least across the wild country from any sign of human habitation. The next spring he brought his wife and daughter Rosaline, in some way, to the "claim" and put up a shack in which they managed to live. He had no team, and worked for his distant neighbors, splitting rails in winter and harvesting in summer, sometimes as far distant as Naperville, to pay for a little breaking, a cow, seed, tools, and a team—living as best they could, sometimes the wife and child utterly alone during the whole week. He would buy on time and pay in work, until he succeeded in establishing a home and getting a team. It is said that he split 2,500 rails to pay for breaking his first five acres of land, and that he raised upon the sod, corn, beans, buckwheat and vegetables enough to subsist his family until the next crop. Thirty years later he had a splendid farm of over 600 acres, including a third of the beautiful grove and the broad rich prairie land south of it, with a habitation and home of abundant comfort and delight. The first birth in the township was that of his daughter Mary, who married Robert Alexander of Campton. She was born November 27, 1837. Isbell and Miner's family were the only residents of the township until Alfred Churchill came in the fall of 1837. John B. Moore had just arrived and made a claim which he sold to Mr. Churchill. His daughter Sarah Moore and James Isbell were married February 24, 1838—the first wedding in the township.

The first school in the township was taught in 1839 by Miss Fayetta R. Churchill, in her father's house, and she also taught the opening school in the first log school house of the township, which was built near the center of Section 22. Her father procured the establishment of the first postoffice at Avon, and was its Postmaster. He was an unusually capable man of whom mention is made in the general history of the county. This daughter became the wife of David Hanchett, another of the very best of the early settlers of the township. Indeed the trinity of Davids—David Hanchett, David W. Annis and David Snyder—whose fine farms covered these rich bottom lands in the southern part of the township, is one very rarely equaled. Mr. Annis and his young wife came to the county in 1836 or '37 from Stratford, Vt., the place of their nativity, and soon after settled for life in Kaneville Township. Integrity, intelligence, energy and economy constituted the invincible equipment which they brought to the new frontier home with very little else save youth and health. But these are forces that invariably win in the battles of life. None did more than they in advancing all the interests of the community, and none were held in higher honor and esteem. Forty years later they left their descendants, who are among the county's best citizens, a patrimony of 1,800 acres of the choicest lands in the Garden State. The McNairs, Inmans and David Wentworth came in 1838. The government sale of the land in this township opened January 30, 1843, and owing to the distrust of prairie land, considerable of it remained unclaimed as late as 1845. But again the last proves to be the best. There is little doubt that, for purely agricultural purposes, that is the choicest township in the county. Beside its heavy dairying interests, stock-raising and feeding are still a prominent branch of business. Kaneville has the least railway of any township in the county; yet is well supplied with shipping facilities with convenient stations in the southern, eastern, and northern portions.

Kaneville, the only village and postoffice in the township, early became quite a business and social center. It is very pleasantly located at the crossing of the two main highways leading from the river towns and roads, the one northwesterly and the other southwesterly, each of which is a much frequented thoroughfare; and whoever even passes through this delightful country hamlet, retains an impression and memory of neat and orderly thrft, of abundance and comfort, and quiet elegance that it is very pleasant to recall. The Rev. Thomas Ravlin purchased the claim to the prairie land upon which the village is located of Willard Inmann in 1845, and then procured his title from the Government. John Bunker was the first magistrate, elected in 1845 under the old precinct organization. Needham N. Ravlin was the first postmaster. The application for the establishment of the postoffice suggested the name "Royalton," and was sent to "Long John" Wentworth, the Member of Congress. Upon examination it appeared that an office with that name already existed in the State, and without further consultation, Wentworth changed the name to Kaneville, which proved so satisfactory that it was adopted for the township name also. R. W. Acres was the first Supervisor of the township in 1850. N. N. Ravlin was elected to this office in 1857, and with two intermissions of only one year each, he was reelected to that most important town office until 1887, serving nearly thirty years; and for over twenty years the Board of Supervisors chose him as its chairman. Governor Oglesby appointed him a member of the State Board of Equalization in 1867-8, and he was a member of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly.

In 1852 a hotel was opened here by William Hall, and a store by Mr. Goodwin. Convenient shops, neat churches, school house and town hall, and pleasant homes soon clustered around this central location. The village plat was made in August, 1861, by Thaddeus Hoyt. Mr. F. L. Young, an old settler in Blackberry and Kaneville Townships, has for many years been a resident of this pleasant village. His neighbors have kept him busy with public affairs, as Highway Commissioner, Town Clerk, Assessor, School Director, Justice of the Peace, and the like, and the people of the county hold him in such confidence that for seven successive years, from 1879 to 1886, they elected him County Treasurer.

The first death in the township was that of John B. Moore, and the second that of Rev. Thomas Ravlin, on September 6, 1846, who was the first to be buried in the Kaneville cemetery.

PLATO TOWNSHIP.

Plato Township embraces Town 41, Range 7, and lies directly west of Elgin and east of Burlington. Because of the diverging correctional range line, run by the Government Surveyor between the townships numbered 41 and 42, all its north row of sections, as well as those of Elgin and Burlington, are fractional. Its west line is on the summit of the divide between the Rock and Fox Rivers, and its three or four small spring brooklets, or lowland drains, flow to the creeks emptying into the Fox. They furnished in the early days an abundance of good water for household and stock, conveniently distributed over a large portion of the township. Chicken Grove, near the southwest corner, was a body of fine heavy timber, principally oak of several varieties; but there was also considerable hickory, maple, black-walnut, and butternut. The old trail of the Indians and of General Scott's army, passed diagonally entirely across it. The general surface is quite level, yet sufficiently undulating to afford good drainage. The soil is excellent and small tracts of alternating woodland and prairie rendered it an inviting region to the pioneers. Prospecting, doubtless, along the army trail, and probably attracted by the neighboring grove, John Griggs and his son John Griggs, Jr., located claims along the southwest part of Chicken Grove, on land that became part of Sections 35 and 36 in this Township, in the summer of 1835. They were upright, energetic, intelligent men, and they and their descendants have ever been active and influential in local and county affairs. John Griggs was appointed by Governor Ford one of the judges of the first election in the county in 1836. He was the first Treasurer of the new county, and the first Justice of the Peace in his precinct. He kept the first tavern in the township and at it held the office of first postmaster. John S. Lee, another able and honorable man, just attaining his majority, came during the same year, and located an excellent claim adjoining Griggs but extending north toward the trail, October 23, 1838. He married Miss Nancy Perry, daughter of Mr. George Perry of Campton—we must remember that there were no townships then, and no surveyed lines of roads or lands—and they were the first couple married in these settlements. They were each as handsome, in all manly and womanly endowment, as one need wish to see. Their son, Abijah A. Lee, born September 4, 1839, was the first white child born in the township. Mr. Lee's original claim of two quarter-sections, was added to, until he owned 940 acres of magnificent land. He was first elected Justice of the Peace in 1840, and served nine years. He was first elected Supervisor and served twelve years, and for forty years he served as a School Director. His first son, Abijah A., is now an Assistant Supervisor from Elgin Township. Such records indicate something of the character of the first settlers of the township, and equally strong men have succeeded them. Their first grists were ground near Naperville, and a little later at Boardman's mill south of Batavia, and their tracks to and from the mill marked the route of the stage road from St. Charles toward Galena, beside which Grigg's tavern long stood. Dr. Latimer S. Tyler and Marcus and John Ranstead—the latter becoming in later years a member of the State Legislature—came in 1836 and settled on Section 12.

During the period between 1838 and 1840 came Dr. Daniel Pingree, William Hanson, Thomas Burnidge and others. At the general election in 1844 at the "Washington Precinct," which included Plato, we find the following voters registered: John Griggs, John Griggs, Jr., John S. Lee, Joseph S. Burdick, Lemuel Wolsey, Solomon Ellis, Morris Gutchis, Pardon Taber, George W. Spruce, Thomas Matteson, James Ingalls, Charles Thrall, George P. Harvey, Edward Burnidge, Thomas Burnidge, Edward Burnidge, Jr., Stephen Archer, Michael Detro, Mark Ranstead, James Mitchell, Solomon Ellis, Jr., A. W. Hodge, John S. Lee, Nathaniel Ladd, James Morey, William S. Peck, Benjamin Hall, William D. Peck, James Brown, Baldwin Wright, Josiah Mitchell, Alson Banker, Thomas Clark, Solomon Wright, Benjamin Fuller, Benjamin F. Gage, Harvey Gage, Marley Gage, William Sanders and Lorenzo Mitchell. This was so soon after the "land sale" that these can well be named as old settlers. As the voting precincts were arranged in 1836, the lands of this township lay in Pleasant Grove, Lake and Sandusky Precincts. It became a part of Fairfield in 1840 and of Washington in 1843. Later it was called Homer, and, at the final adjustment of Congressional townships, it became Plato. The name seems pleasant to the people, for every hamlet of the township ever has been and is "Plato" something—thus Plato Center, North Plato, Plato Corners and East Plato. It is a fine prosperous dairy township. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad cuts across the northeast corner, and McQueen Station, with its tile factory, is just within its limits. Pingree Grove, with its brick and tile yards, is just over the border in Rutland Township, and East Plato and Plato Center are thriving stations on the Chicago Great Western Railroad, which follows the general line of the old army trail diagonally across the township. Its first school was taught by Charlotte Griggs in 1840, at Plato Corners, down on the old stage road on Section 35. The first church organization was the Methodist, and they were holding services in the combined school house and town hall at Plato Center as early as 1848.

RUTLAND TOWNSHIP.

Rutland, embracing Town 42, Range 7, is of course, the central one of the north tier of townships of the county. It is very difficult to obtain authentic information regarding the detail of the original government surveys of the lands in Kane County; but it appears quite certain, that the south line of the north tier of townships was not established, technically, as a correctional line to bring the variant lines back to their true positions and courses, but rather that, while surveys were in progress northward from the foundation Base Line, nearly 250 miles south of here, a new sub-base line was carefully laid from the meridian line eastward; and from this as a base, township lines were surveyed to the north. It is certain that the land in these three townships, as well as in McHenry County, was surveyed before the balance of Kane County. The sections in these townships, thus being laid off at the opening of new surveys, should be even without fractions; while we know that, as the surveys from the far south reached this new line, they had so converged toward the meridian line as to be over a mile out of their true course to the north, causing the "jog" eastward, and the range lines had taken so wide a northward trend that they left heavy fractions in the last tier of sections south of this sub-base line.

The surface of this township was far more broken into knolls and short ranges of hills—some of them quite high, and with deep sloughs and water-holes between—than any other portion of the county, which greatly retarded its early occupation. Nearly all the dry land was covered with oak openings, but there was no real timber land in the township. A few choice spots were taken at an early day; yet there was land subject to entry in this township more than ten years after the early date at which it was placed on public sale. Its lands came into market with those of Hampshire, September 2, 1839. The meandering brooks that drain it can scarcely be traced to any distinctive head; but the branches of those which flow to the Kishwaukee in a northwesterly course, can be followed, respectively, to what was a large pond on the southeast quarter of Section 30, near Sunset Station, and the other to what were sloughs near the center of Section 21, while there was another brook flowing in the same direction from near the center of Section 11. The one arm of Tyler Creek reached to the sloughs in the neighborhood of Pingree Grove, and the other to those about Gilbert Station. There was quite a pretty prairie lake near the center of the line between Sections 1 and 2, and another, called Lake Killarney, amid the hills on the east half of Section 15.

About the winter of 1852 the contractors, grading the road-bed of the old Galena & Chicago Union Railroad, made a fill of six or eight feet across a frozen slough, a mile or so northwest of Gilbert's. When the frost came out of the ground the next spring, the embankment sank through the vegetable mold, or crust, that had formed over a hidden lake, and the company had a canal instead of a railroad embankment. Many pickerel, some of them fully eighteen inches long, besides other fish, were caught in this canal. It was very deep, and it proved an expensive job to fill it. While the road was being built, a temporary track was laid around this canal on the northeast, over which the trains passed while the filling was being done. A number of the cars used ran off the dump and were lost in the deep water. The hill skirted by the temporary track was all put into this hole, as was also a large portion of the hill at the northwestern end of the canal. Passengers on the railway can now readily observe the evidences of this heavy work.

The southwest portion of the township was settled generally by native Americans and a few Germans, the central portion from southeast to northwest by Scotch-Irish and Irish, and the northeast part by Scotch and Americans. Evelyn R. Starks prospected along the army trail (then but three years after the army passed over it as an old Indian trail), from the home of a friend who had settled near Naperville, in the fall of 1835. The Indians were still here, and nobody else. Starks was then twenty-two years old, and the lonely trip of this young man may be imagined, and shows the spirit of the pioneers. Nobody knows how much time he spent in prospecting, but he searched until he found a beautiful body of rich prairie land sheltered by excellent wood land on the west-northwest, and sloping gently toward the south and east, with a fine pool of clear water half encircled by a fine tree-covered bank. Here he made a well marked claim and returned to his friends for the winter. Early the following spring he was back upon his claim making improvements, and was soon joined by his uncle, Elijah Rich, who entered the lands south of Starks' claim. When the government surveys were made, their claims were on the south half of Sections 29 and 30 and the north half of 31. No better pioneers than they came to the county; and no finer farms can be found than the ones on which they lived and died. Solomon Gage made his pleasant home near them, and here the school house, cemetery and Sunset (or Stark) Station is located. Hemerick, Daum, Widener, Smithing, Hauslein and other Germans settled north of them. In the early days Mason Sherburn kept a tavern on the old stage-road, a couple of miles north, near the center of Section 18 and about a mile east of "Henpeck," and this was strongly suspected to be a hiding place for the bold horse-thieves that infested the country about 1850. Nathaniel Crampton, Noble King and a Mr. Seymour came in 1836, and Francis and Straw Pingree in 1837. Rev. Andrew and Dr. Daniel Pingree—both unusually strong, useful men—joined their brothers here in 1838. The Pingrees took large bodies of land to the east of Starks, and established the Pingree Grove postoffice and station. During the same year Andrew McCornack came with his fine family, the vanguard of the host of sturdy Scotch-Irish Presbyterians who were to follow. Thomas and William Moore and William Lynch(the latter, because of his small stature called "Wee" Lynch), the Christies, Rileys, Atchinsons, Eakins, McQueens, Sheddens, and others joined this vigorous element of the population. The Fraziers, Stevens, Tazewells, Thomas Rich, Oliver Plummer and William Bellows were also settlers in the early development of this township. Mr. John Hunter ("Uncle Johnny") was a noted and useful man, an excellent and successful farmer, and an active politician. Northeast of these came Clinton, Caton, Tobin, Solon, McFarlan, Patrick, Thomas and Brian O'Brien, Long, Murphy, Galligan, Hays, Freeman, Owen Burk, Welch Dwyre, Hayden, Devine, Costello, Clinnin and others from the Emerald Isle. They settled in what was called "the Barrens," and by industry, thrift, and good sense, converted it into a region of productive farms and happy homes. Northwest of them were located the Duffs, Binnies and Ashbaughs, among the old settlers.

The name "Rutland" was suggested by E. R. Starks, the first Supervisor of the township. Adelia, daughter of Elijah Rich, was the first white child born in the township, and the first death was that of his mother, Hannah Rich. Her grave was the first in the Stark cemetery. Starks was the first Justice of the Peace, and in 1839 he performed the first marriage ceremony in the township for Lewis Bandall and Miss Brady. The first church was erected by the Catholics near the cemetery, about a mile and a half southeast of Gilbert's, as early as 1846. Elijah Wilcox and Andrew Pingree bought the Gilbert farm and platted the village in 1855, and Andrew and Hannah Pingree platted the Pingree Grove Village in 1882, upon the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad.

ST. CHARLES TOWNSHIP.

St. Charles is the center one of the eastern tier of five townships in the county, embracing Town 40, Range 8. Its lands were first offered for sale by the Government on June 6, 1842, all having been practically claimed and preempted before that date. The east bank of the river was nearly covered by the heavy oak, hickory, maple, ash, black walnut and butternut timber of the "Little Wood." The low, level, but very fertile prairie on its eastern border stretched away across the old army trail into Du Page County, while a little south of the center of the township, lightly connected with the woods by open woodland, was a beautiful body of stately forest called "Round Grove." The two arms of Norton Creek, which unite near the centers of Sections 14 and 23, half encircle this fine grove, and from this junction flow to the river near the center of Section 15. Lewis Norton built a saw-mill on this stream about 1845, but as he was one of the volunteers for the Mexican War, very little sawing was done at the mill. Further north the prairie is drained by the small streams that meet near the dividing line of Sections 1 and 12, forming Brewster Creek, on which Charles Brewster, son of "Father" E. W. Brewster, operated a saw-mill in the early days. Passing near Wayne, the old Indian trail followed by General Scott's army approached the river on "the divide" between these streams. West of the river there was a fringe of woodland along its bank and along Ferson Creek, the western part of the county being beautiful rolling prairie land. Near the north line of Section 11 the river makes a broad sweeping curve to the west and a half mile north of west, following this course about a mile and a half, when it swings away to the south again near the center of the township. In the broad channel of its northwestward course lie five separate islands well above the ordinary flow of the water. The half encircled promontory-like bluff is bold and high, and was densely covered with heavy forest trees, including many sugar maples. On the high northwesterly and westerly bank of the stream, at and below the second bend, stood stately great white oak trees, under whose broad spreading branches glimpses of the prairie land to the west could be seen. Two rippling brooks from the highlands above had cut their channels down to the underlying bed of limestone rock, and near the highway fell in little shimmering cascades toward the river.

As early as 1834 the beauty of this location and the evident fertility of its soil attracted Rice Fay, a strong, enterprising man who settled and long resided upon Section 3, and subsequently erected thereon the fine, substantial stone dwelling, since occupied by the Keating family. Soon a blacksmith shop was opened by the river roadside, two or three small stone houses were built and a little store established, and the settlement became known as Fayville. In 1836 the Rev. D. W. Ellmore entered a claim west and south of Captain Fay's. He laid plans for the location here of a large industrial training school, and in 1851, with these plans in view, platted a village called Asylum. He also had a bill for the incorporation of his school introduced in the Legislature; but his sudden death by lightning, on July 29, 1854, ended these philanthropic efforts of a cultured, broad-minded Christian pioneer. Three post-offices—Fayville, Silver Glen and Riverside—have been established and discontinued at this place. Quite extensive lime kilns were opened here in the early days.

The different branches of Ferson Creek enter the northwestern corner of the township, and with numerous curves and windings, serving to water and drain many farms, find the river near the southeast corner of Section 21. There were a few red cedar trees on the rocky banks of the streams, besides extensive deposits of excellent gravel and sand on the higher knolls along Brewster, Norton and Ferson creeks, which are now of value. In the spring of 1834, Evan Shelby and William Franklin, brothers-in-law, followed the army and Indian trails to a beautiful location near the Fox River, where they marked claims and built a log cabin, and in August of that year Mrs. Franklin came with her two children. Elijah Garton with his wife and six children, and John W. Gray, his son-in-law; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Howard, with six children; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Steward and four children (a most surprising party of emigrants) arrived at Round Grove, it is said, on May 8, 1834. Friend Marks and family, William Arnold, John M. and Alexander Laughlin; Walter Wilson, with his sons, John C. and Thomas, and his son-in-law, Thomas Barlan; Mrs. Moses Young, with her sons Samuel, Stephen, Joel and Daniel C., and her daughter Jerusha; Robert Moody, J. T. Wheeler, John Kittridge (after whom Dr. Kittridge Wheeler, D. D., the distinguished Baptist divine, is named), Nathan Perry, William Welch (who settled on the army trail beside Brewster Creek, on what became Section 1), and his son-in-law, Tucker; William Wilson, Melvin Marsh and James Davis all came this first year, and the most of them entered land along the east side of the timber. It is said that a settler named Crandall built a cabin on the west side near Captain F. H. Bowman's residence in 1834. Three of the most active and enterprising men who have contributed to the progress of the town and county—Solomon Dunham, Mark W. Fletcher and Calvin Ward—came in 1835, as also did Charles B. Gray, Ephraim and O. W. Perkins, Warren Tyler and his son Ira, Daniel Marvin, the first blacksmith, and many others. In this year the first school was opened in a part of Warren Tyler's double log house, standing where the "Western Enterprise" tavern was afterward built. It was taught by Miss Prudence Ward, who, in serene old age, still survives, crowned with the glory of a long life of Christian kindliness and exemplary usefulness. In 1835 Friend Marks performed the first road-work in the county by marking and improving a wagon track past his cabin (which was the first tavern) to Herrington's Ford. It is said that Garton and Howard drove their ox-teams to the Wabash settlement after supplies for these pioneers in the winter of 1834-5, which was unusually severe, the mercury during their trip ranging lower than twenty degrees below zero. J. M. Laughlin has stated that in June, 1835, he drove to Chicago with two yoke of oxen which had to swim in crossing the Des Plaines, and that the level land, from Oak Ridge in, was entirely covered with water.

In January, 1835, J. T. Wheeler and Jerusha Young were married at the home of Gideon Young, who then lived at Naperville. J. M. Laughlin and Emily Garton were married at Elijah Garton's the same month; Dean Ferson and Prudence Ward were married in "Charlestown," as it was then called, on September 14, 1835. Death, as well as Love, was busy in the little colony. Stephen Young died May 8th, and it is said that, at his funeral, the Rev. Mr. Perry, a Congregational clergyman, preached the first sermon in the township. That fall Alzina Garton, twin sister of Mrs. Gray, died and was buried at Round Grove.

Crowds of settlers came in 1836. Among them were John Gloss, the Bairds and the Howards (Frances Christmas Baird was born on December 25 of that year), Zebina Brown, George Parker, J. H. Andrus, James T. Durant (whose brother, Bryant, arrived the next year), Nathan H. Dearborn, Dr. Whipple, Dr. Nathan Collins, Horace Bancroft (the first postmaster, who, four years later, refused to continue in office under General Harrison's Whig administration), Asa Hazeltine, Valentine Randall, Major W. G. and Smith Conklin, Amos N. Locke and Bela T. Hunt. During this year plans for utilizing the water power, and laying out and improving the village were matured, and in large measure carried forward. About this date excellent families were also settling in the northwest portion of the township, prominent among whom were Joel Harvey, James O. Burr, Mark Bisbee and Garritt Norton, each of whom established farms that have been models of thrift and productiveness.

Among all these early settlers will be noticed the names of families who have contributed very largely to the development and prosperity of the township and county. Famous camp-meetings have been held, from the very earliest times, in the beautiful glades of the timbered lands bordering the eastern line of the township. St. Charles is one of the most prosperous dairy districts of the county, and its later development forms an important part of the progress of the county.

SUGAR GROVE TOWNSHIP.

Township 38 North, Range 7 East, forms the middle of the tier of three southern towns of the county, and if people interested in the county will only remember that its southern line of townships constitute the Thirty-eighth North of the Base Line, and that its western tier are in the Sixth Range East of the Meridian Line, they will have no difficulty in accurately locating any tract of land of which they have the government description. Of the ten agricultural townships in the county, no one can authoritatively declare either one to be the best. Yet this is often claimed for Sugar Grove, and few, if any, will doubt that it is at least "as good as the best." Lying directly west of the populous and wealthy city of Aurora, whose western limit is but a mile and a half from the township line, and closely connected by highways as good as the city streets, it feels the stimulus of the wealth and culture of the metropolis, and its land values are probably the highest of any in the towns away from the river. Its northeasterly portion along Lake Run and Blackberry Creek is well covered with excellent woodland, portions of which, in the early days, was heavy timber and the remainder—about two-thirds of the township—was beautiful prairie, with a skirt of timber at the southwest bordering a branch of the Big Rock Creek. Every foot of the soil is very fertile, and well supplied with pure, excellent water; and the abundance and convenience of wood and water, together with the handsome "lay of the land," was very attractive to the pioneers seeking homes in a delightful region of absolutely unoccupied country, where they had "all out of doors" to choose from.

Very early in the spring of 1834, Asa McDole left his home in the State of New York, and started alone to explore the Far West. In Wood County, Ohio, he camped for the night with James and Isaac C. Isbell (brothers), Parmeno Isbell (a cousin), James Carman, and an elderly man named Bishop, who had just left Medina County, Ohio, for the same purpose. They had arranged for a third brother, Lyman Isbell, whose wife was Carman's sister, to join them when they had found a satisfactory location, and bring on the family, consisting of Lyman's wife and two children, Mother Isbell and her daughter Miranda. Of course McDole joined them. They had two ox-teams, some axes and a few implements, a little food, blankets, etc., and each man had a flint-lock musket. The muskets were as serviceable for "flashing powder in the pan" and so starting a fire—for matches were scarce, if not unknown, in those days—as they were for shooting game. The Isbells also had four cows. This was April 27. Journeying westward they crossed the Fox River at Oswego, where there was one cabin on each side of the river, and thence pushed on nearly northward across the trackless country, until on the 10th of May, when, having camped in a most beautiful grove of maple trees near a pleasant stream, they made up their minds that nothing more desirable could be found. They saw plain indications that the Indians had been accustomed to making sugar from these trees, and here they found an abandoned Indian tepee, or shack, which they used while building, for immediate shelter, the first cabin erected in the township. Next they constructed for the expected family quite a commodious and comfortable log house farther north and west, near the line of Sections 10 and 9. Each was made entirely of wood "from the tree," and with very few and simple tools. In July Lyman arrived with the families, driving the first horse team that was brought into the county. They marked a number of choice claims, and were doubtless the only whites west of the river until Joseph Ingham came in the following winter, and settled lower on the Blackberry below its junction with Lake Run. The next spring his son Cyrus Ingham came with his father's family. These were Oneida County, New York, people of the best quality. Joseph's brother, Samuel Ingham, came four years later with his excellent family, and took up a large tract of land. The brothers, with their descendants, have always been active promoters of all worthy enterprises, have filled many public positions, and maintained high standing and wide acquaintance throughout the county. Harry White, Asa and Rodney McDole, William A. Tanner and Theophilus Wilson—names as familiar as household words in the county—came also in 1835, but Rodney McDole, after locating his claim, returned to Menard County for the bride he had married in January of that year. He came back in the spring of 1836, and lived to be the oldest settler in the township. In 1833 or '34 he carried a chain for "A. Lincoln, surveyor," in Sangamon County, it is said, and over twenty years later the great President was glad to meet and greet his former chainman and friend.

A number of other settlers came in that season, and, in the spring of 1836, Silas Reynolds, Lorin Inman, Samuel Taylor, Silas Gardner, Nathan H. Palmer, Samuel Cogswell, Isaac Gates, Joseph Bishop and Silas Leonard were located here. James Judd and H. B. Dinsmore also came in this fall. The next year (1837) Ira H. Fitch and family, including his parents, took up a claim that became a part of Section 32, and opened a blacksmith shop in connection with his farm. The hamlet called Jericho gathered about this settlement. John Morris, the Austin family, Captain Jones, Reuben Johnson, Charles Simmons, Ezekiel Mighell and P. Y. Bliss, and doubtless a number of others, came also in 1837. Mr. Bliss built a frame building near the northwest corner of Section 10, in 1838, and "Father" Clark preached here the first sermon in the township. In June, 1839, Mr. Bliss put in a stock of merchandise, and this first store in the town, it was said, drew trade from Dundee to Yorkville, and from Warrenville to Shabbona Grove. His business for a time seemed to overshadow that of any merchant on the river. Mr. Bliss has stated that, in going from his place to Geneva in 1838, he passed not a building, fence, furrow or sign of human habitation or occupation, and that the wooden court house, built by Col. R. J. Hamilton, was the first indication of settlement to be seen. To indicate the generous feeling of neighborly helpfulness that prevailed, he said that one morning Isaac C. Isbell called at his store and told him he meant to kill a beef on the following Saturday morning, and wished Bliss would tell any of the neighbors whom he happened to meet to come to his place and get a piece of the meat; and that, when they came, they found the dressed quarters of beef, with a knife and hatchet by a block, ready for each to take such portion as he wished.

The township has always been noted for its educational zeal. Schools and circulating libraries were established at an early day and steadily maintained. The first library, opened in the winter of 1843, came to contain 264 volumes of the best literature. It was kept at the home of S. G. Paul on Section 16. Another whose books reached about 500 in number, passed to the unique school in District No. 7, so long and ably presided over by Prof. F. H. Hall. This school, in its best estate, was largely the product of the philanthropic zeal and enthusiasm of Thomas Judd, an early settler, to whose efforts the county owes much of its progress. His statistics regarding the productive capacity of the country, greatly encouraged the builders of the pioneer Galena & Chicago Union Railroad, and his contributions to the "Prairie Farmer," and papers read before the farmers' institutes and agricultural societies, did much to stimulate improvement in methods of farming, at that date the only productive industry of the people.

The name of the township did not have to be imported, for it just naturally suggested itself. The first marriage in the township was that of Dr. N. H. Palmer and the pioneer girl, Miranda Isbell, in the fall of 1835; and, during that same fall, A. G. McDole, a son of Rodney McDole, and Charlotte Isbell, a daughter of I. C. Isbell, were born. The first death was that of a child of Mr. Carman's in 1835. A trail and wagon track from Chicago to Dixon passed through the township, and beside it, on Section 14, Robert Atkinson opened the first tavern. Asa McDole was the first Justice of the Peace, elected in 1837, and his death on September 16, 1839, was perhaps the first among the adults. Sugar Grove postoffice was the first in the township, established at Thomas Slater's house, near the center of Section 15, on September 18, 1840. The township has ever been a productive grain and stock-growing section, and while it is extensively given to dairying, there is still a great deal of fine stock, both reared and purchased, and fitted for the Chicago market. The Chicago & Iowa Railroad crosses the township near its center, and the district has exceptionally good facilities for shipment on this line, as well as the main line of the Burlington System. Sugar Grove is the only incorporated village in the township.

VIRGIL TOWNSHIP.

As St. Charles is the center of the eastern tier of townships, so Virgil is in the center of the western tier. It adjoins DeKalb County, which was once a part of Kane and, while that condition existed, was in Sycamore Precinct with its voting place at Lysander Darling's house. The township now consists of Town No. 40 North, Range 6 East. Soon after the government surveys were made, marking the township lines, its few inhabitants voted to call it Washington Township, but at a town meeting held April 30, 1842, the name was changed to Franklin and so continued until 1839, when it was changed by the State Commissioners to Virgil, as heretofore stated in the sketch of the county.

Several small streams have their sources well toward the eastern line of the township, and with scarcely enough fall to make any perceptible current, they converge and unite near the center line dividing Sections 21 and 20, and form one of the branches of the Kishwaukee, whose waters are carried to the distant Rock River. The eastern portion of the township along the sources of these drains was low prairie, covered with a luxuriant growth of coarse vegetation, which, in the early days, was not inviting to the pioneers. The land was too wet for convenient cultivation, and too damp and cold for the production of good crops. The rank slough grass threatened fearful prairie fires in the late fall and early spring, and the low land was the abiding place of malaria with its attendant fever and ague, and during the summer and fall it swarmed with mosquitoes. And so, like the low prairie east and west of the Des Plaines timber, these lands were passed by the majority of the first pioneers and, for a number of years after the opening of the government land sale, on January 30, 1843, there was public land subject to entry in this township. Cultivation and drainage soon removed these objectionable features, and the fine farms of this township have long been held as among the very best in the county. Its rich alluvial soil, the accumulated deposit of this luxuriant vegetation through countless centuries, had become almost exhaustless in fertility, and productive of abundant crops and the most nutritious grasses. Virgil township is one of the very finest stock-raising and dairy regions of the State.

Luther Merrill, John B. Moore, James Outhouse, Milton Thornton and Daniel McKinley appear to have located claims on land now within the township in 1836. Merrill was probably the first, and he claimed all the land in sight. His absurd pretensions probably retarded settlement; for it is said that Moore "jumped" a part of the vast tract "claimed" by Merrill, and was ready to fight for it if attacked; and that Outhouse, rather than fight, gave Merrill his choice of $100, or a fight for the 200 acres he selected, and that Merrill sensibly chose to accept the money. Quite a number of settlers who came in 1837 and '38 gave Merrill something for his "claim" rather than contend with him. Joshua Read, Joseph Gray, William H. Robinson, Daniel Smith, Henry and Lyman German, Eleazer Pattee, Harrison Chambers, Charles Jackson and John McKinley came in 1837-8. Milton Thornton, William H. Robinson and Joshua Read and his many sons and daughters were unusually public-spirited, enterprising people. Outhouse was a son-in-law of Mr. Read. These pioneers rest in honored graves, but the influence of their good works in the land they began transforming from an uncultivated wilderness to a fruitful garden, remains, and their descendants have been and are occupying many positions of usefulness, trust and honor. George Baker was an early and very highly respected settler in the northeast corner of the township, near the Griggs and Lee settlement at Chicken Grove; also L. S. Ellithorp, Orson Kendall, the Warfords and McEwens. It is said that Joshua Read built the first frame house in the township. All the timbers in the framework were hewed with the broadaxe. Previous to about 1850 the light balloon frames (as they were first called), now in use, were unknown, and the frames of buildings were of solid hewn timbers, mortised and tenoned, and held in place by hardwood pins. They were framed into firmly fastened "bents," as they were called, which were raised to a perpendicular position by hand, using ropes and "pike poles" for that purpose. To erect these heavy "bents" at the ends of the building and across it between the ends as desired, and to put in place and secure the "purlin plates" that bound them at the top from end to end of the structure, was a heavy and somewhat dangerous job, and required the united strength of the neighborhood, directed by a cool and experienced head. The "raising bees," so common in former days, were to put up these heavy frames. To "score" the logs properly and then to hew straight and true to the line, is an almost forgotten art which was well known to the pioneers; and occasionally one of these solid old frames is still standing.

The first notable dancing party, probably, ever given in kindly recognition of assistance at the "raising," was held in the house of Joshua Read, and in it occurred also the first marriage in the township—that of Maria Read and Orson Kendall in 1839—"Esquire" West officiating. Probably the first birth in the township was that of a daughter born to Mr. and Mrs. Merrill, in the summer of 1837.

In 1839 a log school house was built on the Joseph Woodman farm on Section 24, and the school held in it that winter was taught by Simeon Bean. This building was also used for the first religious services by the Rev. Mr. King (probably of King's Mill in Campton), a Baptist clergyman, as early as 1840; and in that year a settler on the northeast corner of Section 17—probably on the Stacy P. Kenyon place—hung out a tavern sign. One of the frontier wayside inns had this original sign: A small gate made of puncheon staves, was hung upon two tall posts over the entrance, and upon the four cross slats was rudely painted:

"This gate hangs high
And hinders none;
Refresh and pay,
And travel on"— surely an indication of hospitality and a humorous landlord. About 1844, Mrs. Graves opened a little store near the tavern, and in 1845 Joseph Jenkins started a blacksmith shop. These are some of the "beginnings" in this prosperous township.

The Iowa division of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad was constructed on an airline from the southeast corner of Section 35 to the northeast corner of Section 31, and to comply with contracts requiring the road to be in operation as far west as the county line by January 1, 1853, the ties were laid upon the level but ungraded frozen ground, rails spiked upon them, and the first train slowly moved to this point on that day. Here at the county line and upon Sections 30 and 31, the village of Lodi was platted and surveyed by Andrew Pingree for Messrs. Loren Heath and Zachariah Hathorn, on March 20, 1854. This charming place is the only incorporated village in the township. Its beautiful location attracted a population of about four hundred residents within a year and a half after it was platted. The Chicago Great Western Railway enters the township near the center of Section 13, and crossing on an airline passes out a little south of the center of Section 6. Richardson, near the northeast corner of Section 7, is the station on this road, Lily Lake station being about six miles easterly. A highway is laid near and along its southern line across the township, three others, at about equal distances, cross above it, and still another lies between it and the Burlington on the town line. It is also equally well provided with cross roads, and all these roadways are constructed and maintained in admirable order. These numerous highways indicate the intelligence, enterprise and activity of the people, and a ride in summer time over either of them, among the highly cultivated farms with their pastures filled with well-bred dairy stock, and past the beautiful farm homes with spacious, well arranged barns and out-buildings, is as charming a drive as can well be imagined.

CHAPTER XVIII.

CITIZENS OF KANE COUNTY.

The verdict of mankind has awarded to the Muse of History the highest place among the classic Nine. The extent of her office, however, appears to be, by many minds, but imperfectly understood. The task of the historian is comprehensive and exacting. True, History reaches beyond the doings of court or camp, beyond the issue of battles or the effects of treaties, and records the trials and the triumphs, the failures and the successes of the men who make history. It is but an imperfect conception of the philosophy of events that fails to accord to portraiture and biography its rightful position as a part—and no unimportant part—of historical narrative. Behind and beneath the activities of outward life the motive power lies out of sight, just as the furnace fires that work the piston and keep the ponderous screw revolving are down in the darkness of the hold. So, the impulsive power which shapes the course of communities may be found in the molding influences which form its citizens.

It is no mere idle curiosity that prompts men to wish to learn the private as well as the public lives of their fellows. Rather, it is true that such desire tends to prove universal brotherhood; and the interest in personality and biography is not confined to men of any particular caste or avocation.

The list of those to whose lot it falls to play a conspicuous part in the great drama of life is comparatively short; yet communities are made up of individuals, and the aggregate of achievements—no less than the sum total of human happiness—is made up of the deeds of those men and women whose primary aim, through life, is faithfully to perform the duty that comes nearest to hand. Individual influence upon human affairs will be considered potent or insignificant according to the standpoint from which it is viewed. To him who, standing upon the sea-shore, notes the ebb and flow of the tides and listens to the sullen roar of the waves as they break upon the beach in seething foam, seemingly chafing at their limitations, the ocean appears so vast as to need no tributaries. Yet, without the smallest rill that helps to swell the "Father of Waters," the mighty torrent of the Mississippi would be lessened, and the beneficent influence of the Gulf Stream diminished. Countless streams, currents and counter-currents — sometimes mingling, sometimes counteracting each other —collectively combine to give motion to the accumulated mass of waters. So is it—and so must it ever be—in the ocean of human action, which is formed by the blending and repulsion of currents of thought, of influence and of life yet more numerous and more tortuous than those which form "the foundation of the deep."

In the foregoing pages is traced the beginning, growth, and maturity of a concrete thing —Kane County. But the concrete is but the aggregate result of individual labor. The acts and characters of men, like the several faces that compose a composite picture, are wrought together into a compact or heterogeneous whole. History is condensed biography; "biography is history teaching by example."

It is both interesting and instructive to rise above the generalization of history and trace, in the personality and careers of the men from whom it sprang, the principles and influences, the impulses and ambitions, the labors, struggles and triumphs that engrossed their lives.

In the pages that follow are gathered up, with as much detail as the limits of the work allow, the personal record of many of the men who have made Kane County what it is. In each record may be traced some feature which influenced, or has been stamped upon, the civic life.

Here are pioneers, who, "when the fullness of time had come," came from widely scattered sources, some from beyond the sea, impelled by diverse motives, little conscious of the import of their acts, and but dimly anticipating the harvest which would spring from their sowing. They built their little cabins, toiling for a present subsistence while laying the foundations of private fortunes and future advancement.

Most have passed away, but not before they beheld a development of business and population surpassing the wildest dreams of fancy. A few yet remain, whose years have passed the allotted three score and ten, and who love to recount, among the cherished memories of their lives, their reminiscences of early days in Kane County.

Among these early, hardy settlers, and those who followed them, may be found the names of many who imparted the first impulse to the county's growth and home-likeness; the many who, through their identification with general agricultural pursuits, dairying and stock-raising, aided in her material progress; of skilled mechanics, who first laid the foundations of beautiful homes and productive industries; and of the members of the learned professions—clergymen, physicians, educators and lawyers—whose influence upon the intellectual life and development of a community it is impossible to over-estimate.

Municipal institutions arise; Commerce spreads her sails and prepares the way for the magic of Science that drives the locomotive engine over iron rails. Trade is organized, stretching its arms across the prairie to gather in and distribute the products of the soil. Church spires rise to express, in architectural form, the faith and aspirations of the people, while schools, public and private, elevate the standards of education and of artistic taste.

Here are many of the men through whose labors, faith and thought, these magnificent results have been achieved. To them, and to their co-laborers, the Kane County of today stands an enduring monument, attesting their faith, their energy, their courage, and their self-sacrifice.

[The following items of personal and family history, having been arranged in encyclopedic (or alphabetical) order as to names of the individual subjects, no special index to this part of the work will be found necessary.]

CHARLES L. ABBOTT, attorney, Elgin, Ill.; born in the city where he now resides, April 7, 1865; educated in the public schools of Elgin and read law in the office of Frank W. Joslyn; admitted to the bar in 1896 and immediately entered into practice; served as City Attorney two years, and was City Alderman from 1901 to 1903; appointed Assistant State's Attorney in December, 1900, and is still serving in that capacity. Mr. Abbott married, May 1, 1890, Mary Schmidt of Elgin.

EDWARD H. ABBOTT, M. D., physician and surgeon, Elgin, Ill., born Nov. 6, 1866, in Elgin, Ill., son of Frank U. Abbott; received his literary education in the Elgin city schools, and his professional training in Rush Medical College, from which he graduated in 1895. At fourteen years of age he began life for himself as a worker in the Elgin Watch Factory, remaining there for the ensuing twelve years. While in the employ of the Watch Company he completed a high school course with additional branches. He then entered the Medical College in March, 1892, and, having already studied with Dr. Tefft, he was able to shorten the course by a year, completing the full course in three years, and immediately after graduating began practice in Elgin. Dr. Abbott is a member of the American Medical and the Illinois State Medical Associations and of Fox River Valley Society. At the time of the Spanish-American War he was active in the organization and became Surgeon, with the rank of Major, of the John B. Hamilton (or Sons of Veterans) Regiment, an organization which, though provisional, had the reputation of being the best organized of the provisional regiments of Illinois. He now holds a commission as Surgeon and Major (unassigned) in the Illinois National Guard, and a complimentary commission from the State Legislature of Illinois. He is a Royal Arch Mason, an Odd-Fellow, and Medical Director of the Archæan Union, a fraternal insurance order. Dr. Abbott was married in 1901 to Miss Ethelyn M. Wells, of Elgin, and they have one son.

WILLIAM H. ABEL, retired farmer and merchant, Batavia, Ill., was born in Dutchess County, near Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Sept. 3, 1827, son of John and Miranda Abel. He was brought up on a farm and educated in the public schools. In New York State he followed agricultural pursuits until 1858, when he left there to come to Illinois. For fifteen years thereafter he was engaged in the lumber, live-stock and wool trade in Sandwich, Ill. Afterward he was in the lumber trade in Chicago for a time. In 1878 he came to Kane County and was engaged in farming near Batavia until 1892, when he retired from active business and established his home in the city of Batavia. Besides his farming and other interests already mentioned, he has been a stock-holder in the Metropolitan and First National Banks, of Chicago, for many years, and in the first quarter of the year 1903 received his eighty-third dividend on this stock. He married, in 1852, Miss Elizabeth Vail, daughter of Joseph Vail, of Dutchess County, N. Y.

W. W. ABELL, architect and civil engineer, Elgin, Ill.; born at Cummington, Hampshire County, Mass., Nov. 7, 1853; educated in public and private schools in his native State, and, after completing his educational training, became assistant to an architect and engineer. His first practical professional experience was with an engineering corps of the Massachusetts Central Railway; was later with a similar party employed by the Inter-Colonial Railway Company of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and afterwards became associated with an architectural and engineering firm at Springfield, Mass. In 1873 Mr. Abell located in Elgin, Ill., where he became connected as a draftsman with the Elgin National Watch Company, continuing in that capacity for eighteen years. In February, 1891, he established private offices in Elgin and Chicago, but three years later discontinued his branch office in Chicago, and has since operated exclusively in Elgin, where he conducts a large and increasing business as a result of thorough preparation, long experience and careful business management, his field of operations extending into nearly every State in the Union. In social relations Mr. Abell is a member of the American Institute of Architects, Illinois Society of Civil Engineers and Surveyors, Order of United Workmen, Archæan Union, Elgin Century Club, and Elgin Country Club. Mr. Abell's office is at 30 and 31 Home Bank Block, and his residence 527 Laurel Street, Elgin, Ill.

FREDERICK H. ACKEMANN was born at Winzlar, Province of Hanover, Germany, Feb. 2, 1869, son of Henry and Wilhelmine (Walbaum) Ackemann, where he attended the public school and afterwards a private school at Pr. Oltendorf, Westphalia. After leaving school he entered the Government service in the Postal Department, from which he resigned in the fall of 1887 and came to America, arriving at Elgin, Ill., in November of that year. He commenced work in the dry-goods store of his brother, W. D. Ackemann, where he remained three months, when he was offered and accepted a position in the real-estate and investment office of Hon. William Grote, a life-long friend of the Ackemann family. Knowing that, in this country, each man was master of his own destiny, he set out with a strong will to make the best of his opportunities and realize his ambition, and his efforts have been crowned with a gratifying success. While devoting his energy to the real-estate and investment business, he became interested with his brothers, Henry and Conrad, in the furniture and undertaking business in 1893, and in the spring of 1894, in company with his brother Henry, erected the large business block known as the "Ackemann Bros.' Block." The following year he joined in the consolidation of the furniture business and the dry-goods business of his brother William D. under the firm name of Ackemann Bros., and opened up the largest department store in this section outside of Chicago. This business proving a great success from the beginning, they had to add another story to their building, which is now 44 by 132 feet, equipped with electric passenger and freight elevators and all other modern improvements. The firm now occupy over 29,000 square feet of floor space, and, being still crowded for room to take care of their growing business, they contemplate adding one or two more stories to their building. This store is generally known as "Ackemann Bros., The Big Store." Mr. Ackemann is also interested in the "Courier Publishing Company" of Elgin, proprietors of the leading daily paper of Elgin, of which he is Vice-President. He is also a Director and Treasurer of the Elgin National Gas and Oil Company, operating in Ohio and Indiana, and a Director and the Treasurer of the Seybold Reed-Pipe Organ Company of Elgin, acting in the capacity of its General Manager. He is a Director of the Masonic Association of Elgin, which is now erecting a handsome new Masonic Temple for use of the various bodies of the order in Elgin. He is also a Director of the Gail Borden Public Library, and in politics an active Republican. During the last Presidential campaign he was Treasurer of the German-American Republican Club. Mr. Ackemann was married in 1895 to Miss Christie Deuchler, of Dundee, Ill., and they have four children: Stella Irene, Walter Frederick, Helen Wilhelmine and George William. He and his family are members of the First Church of the Evangelical Association. He is also a Thirty-second Degree Mason and member of Monitor Lodge, No. 522, A. F. & A. M.; the Loyal Legion, Munn Chapter, No. 96, and Bethel Commandery, No. 36, all of Elgin, and the Oriental Consistory of Chicago; also of the Royal League and the Knights of the Globe. Mr. Ackemann is not a member of any club, preferring to spend his leisure hours with his family and in his private library, which contains upwards of 500 volumes of choice literature. He has traveled to some extent, and since coming to this country has visited forty-three different States of the Union, visiting the Atlantic and the Pacific, the Gulfs and the Lakes. His home on Douglas Avenue is one of the handsomest in Elgin.

WILLIAM D. ACKEMANN, merchant, born in Winzlar, Province of Hanover, Germany, Sept. 24, 1855, was educated in the schools of Winzlar and came to the United States in the fall of 1872. He lived one year in New York City, where he learned the grocery business, and came from there to Elgin, Ill., in 1873. Here he became connected with the dry-goods house of Bosworth Brothers & Peck, with which he remained seven years. For two years afterward he was in the employ of M. W. DuBois, also of Elgin. He then engaged in the dry-goods trade in this city on his own account, becoming founder of the extensive mercantile house which is now conducted by the firm of Ackemann Bros. In 1894, in company with his brothers, August W., Conrad F., Henry F. and Fred H. Ackemann, he opened the department store of Ackemann Bros., which occupied a modern, thoroughly well equipped building erected in the heart of the business district of Elgin. This business has since grown to large proportions, and their establishment is one of the largest department stores in Northern Illinois outside of Chicago. Mr. Ackemann married, in 1882, Miss Bertha Sexauer, of Elgin. AUGUST W. ACKEMANN,, brother of William D., was born in Winzlar, Germany, Oct. 22, 1859, was educated in the public and private schools of Winzlar, and came direct to Elgin from Germany in 1875. Until the winter of 1881 he clerked in Elgin dry-goods stores. In that year he went to Minnesota and was employed in Faribault until the spring of 1882, when he went to Milwaukee, Wis., where he was connected with the firm of Rich & Silver during the next four years. He then returned to Elgin, and, after clerking for a time for his brother, W. D. Ackemann, became a member of the firm of Ackemann Bros., in which he is still interested and in the management of which he takes an active part. He married, in 1885, Miss Minnie Buhmeyer, of Elgin. CONRAD F. ACKEMANN, merchant, a second brother, born in Winzlar, Germany, May 23, 1864, was educated in the public and private schools of his native town and came to Elgin in 1880. During the first year of his residence in this city he was employed in a crockery and glassware store. He then entered the employ of W. D. Ackemann and worked seven years in the latter's dry-goods store. At the end of that time he became junior member of the furniture and undertaking firm of Clothier & Ackemann. Later his brother, Henry F. Ackemann, purchased the senior partner's interest in this business and the firm became Ackemann Bros. Afterward Fred H. Ackemann joined the firm, and the three brothers continued in business until they consolidated their interests with those of their brothers in the present large department store in 1894. Mr. Ackemann has since been one of the managers as well as a partner in this business. He is at the present time (1903) a member of the Elgin Board of Aldermen. He married, in 1887, Miss Millie Mutzelburg, of Elgin. Another brother, HENRY F. ACKEMANN, merchant, was born Nov. 11, 1853, in Winzlar, Germany. His education was obtained in the public and private schools of that town, and he was trained in farming, which occupation he followed for some years before coming to the United States. He came to Elgin in 1891 and became a member of the furniture and undertaking firm of Ackemann Bros. In 1894, in company with his brother, Fred H. Ackemann, he erected the handsome business block since occupied by the department store of which he is part owner and one of the managers. He is also interested as a stockholder in the Elgin Gas & Oil Company, operating oil and gas wells in Ohio. He married, in 1884, Miss Minnie Schlie, of Winzlar, Germany.

FREDERICK G. ADAMSON, manufacturer, Aurora, born in Nottaway, Canada, Sept. 8, 1866, was reared and educated in Toronto. In early manhood he spent six years in the service of the Northern Railway Company, being first employed in the office of the Chief Engineer, and later as private secretary of the General Manager. Still later he was in the general offices of the Grand Trunk Railway Company at Detroit, Mich., where he was employed for about a year and a half. In 1890 he came to Chicago to take a position with the Webster Manufacturing Company. Two years later he transferred his services to the John S. Metcalf Company, engineers and grain elevator builders, becoming Secretary and Treasurer of the corporation, of which he was a Director and stockholder. In 1901 he retired from the company to locate at Aurora, where, with Wiley W. Stephens as partner, he established and built the present Stephens-Adamson Manufacturing Company plant for the construction of power-transmitting machinery and elevating and conveying appliances, a rapidly growing industry. Mr. Adamson is the Vice-President and Treasurer of the corporation. In 1892 he married Miss Annie B. Rose, daughter of Duncan D. Rose, of Seaforth, Canada. He is a member of the Union League Club of Chicago.

LEOPOLD ADLER, retired merchant, Elgin, Ill., was born in Baden, Germany, Oct. 15, 1834, and educated in the schools of his native town, where he was trained to the business of cigar manufacturing. In 1856 he came to the United States, and for two years was engaged in mercantile pursuits in Chicago. In 1858 he removed to Elgin, which has since been his home, and where he was solely engaged in mercantile business until 1891, when he sold out and spent the ensuing two years in Berlin, Germany, where his younger children completed their education. In January, 1894, he resumed business in Elgin in company with his son, as head of the firm of L. Adler & Son, a business which he turned over to his son three years later, since when he has been associated with Sears, Roebuck & Co., of Chicago, and the Capital City Woolen Mills, of Des Moines, Iowa. In 1859 Mr. Adler married Miss Rose Sheuerman, also a native of Baden, Germany.

NATHAN J. ALDRICH, lawyer, Aurora, Ill.; born in Kendall County, Ill., Dec. 3, 1851; graduated from the law department of the University of Michigan in the class of 1875, and in the same year began practicing his profession in Aurora, where he has since been a leading member of the bar; has been identified with various business enterprises, and has taken an active part in politics in the councils of the Republican party; married, in 1879, Miss Mary E. Winchell, of Rantoul, Ill.

PIERRE A. ALLAIRE (deceased), pioneer physician, Aurora, Ill.; born in New York City in 1815 and died in Aurora in 1863; educated at Columbia College, New York, graduating from the medical department of that institution, and came to Illinois two years later, locating at Aurora shortly afterwards, where he practiced his profession until his death. The Doctor took much interest in the advancement of educational interests, and served as a member of the Aurora School Board; was also a member of the Board of City Aldermen. He was married to Mrs. Catherine (Gates) Fuller, a native of Jefferson County, N. Y.

JOHN ALLASON (deceased), pioneer farmer, Carpentersville, Kane County, Ill.; born at Lake Champlain, N. Y., in 1812, where he grew to manhood; came to Illinois in early manhood, locating at Carpentersville, but later removed to Chicago, residing there for several years, and afterwards returned to Carpentersville, where he owned and managed a fine farm and became closely identified with the affairs of his community. In political views he was a Republican and served as Township Collector for several years, besides holding other town offices. In religious faith he was a Baptist, being a member of the church at Dundee, Ill. His wife, Anna (Shaw) Allason, was born in Dundee, Scotland, and they were married at Dundee, Ill., and became the parents of six children. The only member of this family living at Carpentersville is Mrs. Charles I. Wilber.

EDWARD R. ALLEN (deceased), merchant and banker, Aurora, Ill. born at Cortland, N. Y., Nov. 7, 1819, reared at home, and trained to be a druggist at Lockport, same State, first came west in 1839 and was in the drug business in Chicago until 1841, when he removed to Aurora, engaging here very extensively in merchandising. For many years he was closely associated in various important mercantile enterprises, and with the late L. D. Brady set up what soon became the banking house of Brady, Allen & Hawkins, and later still the First National Bank of Aurora. Until his retirement Mr. Allen was a most active business character and of wide influence. Many enterprises of moment were helped by him, and he was a leading spirit in anything that sought to promote the public welfare. While Aurora was still a village he was a trustee of the town, in after years being City Alderman, Mayor and State Senator. He was personally and intimately acquainted with Abraham Lincoln, and by appointment of President Polk was the second Postmaster of Aurora. He died in Aurora, August 22, 1897. His first wife was Alice Carr, whose family is famous in Kane County. She died, leaving one son. His second wife, Miss Mary A. Gates, born at Stowe, Mass., during the Civil War, took high rank as a patriotic woman, and in the local Ladies' Soldiers' Aid Society did much to help the "boys at the front." She died May 16, 1865. Mr. Allen's children living in 1903 are: Mrs. Lottie (Allen) Mack, Aurora; Frank G., Moline, Ill., and Mrs. Anna (Allen) Staudt, Aurora. Edward C. Allen, the eldest son, born and reared in Aurora, became a noted manufacturer after being in the coal business at Aurora some years with his father, and in the United States Railway Mail Service, and was connected with the Moline Plow Company. He bought land near Huron, S. D., and when his failing health became serious he retired into seclusion. He was born Sept. 3, 1849, and died in Huron July 4, 1893. Arvilla, his wife, was a daughter of Ansel Hayward, a pioneer farmer of Kane County. Frank G., second son of Edward R. Allen, born in Aurora Feb. 14, 1858, graduated from the University of Michigan in 1880, became a lawyer and was admitted to the bar. After two years of practice he became interested in the Moline Plow Company, of which he is now Vice-President and General Manager. He is also interested in other Moline enterprises. He married Miss Minnie F. Stephens, of Moline, in 1882.

FRANK E. ALLEN, Deputy County Recorder, Elgin, Kane County, Ill., was born at Oriskany Falls, N. Y., May 6, 1856, the son of F. J. and Oriana (Henderson) Allen; obtained his education at Colgate Academy, Hamilton, N. Y., graduating from that institution in the class of 1874; came to Illinois in 1876, establishing his home in Elgin, where he was engaged in the dry-goods trade for several years afterwards as head of the firm of Allen Bros.; later became chief adjuster of fire losses for the Union Insurance Company of Philadelphia, being employed in this capacity until 1897, when he resigned to accept the official position which he now holds; has served two terms as a member of the City Council of Elgin. Fraternally Mr. Allen is a member of the Knights of Pythias and Elks. He was married in 1882 to Miss Frances V. Plant, of Elgin.

MARTIN V. ALLEN (deceased), merchant and soldier, Aurora, Ill., was born in St. Lawrence County, N. Y., Nov. 6, 1832, son of Reuben and Nancy Allen. In 1845 the family came to Illinois by way of the lakes in a sailing vessel, and located at Shabbona, DeKalb County, where Mr. Allen was reared on the farm. He enlisted, Aug. 12, 1862, in the One Hundred and Fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Sept. 2, following, was mustered into the service as First Lieutenant of Company E of this regiment. His promotion to Captain was made March 9, 1863, and he was in command of this company until Aug. 16, 1864, when he received a gunshot wound in the shoulder at Atlanta. This wound proved so disabling that he was compelled to leave the service, being discharged Jan. 22, 1865. In the course of his military experience he participated in the battles at Resaca, Cassville, Dallas, New Hope Church, Price Mountain, Kenesaw, Marietta, Peach Tree Creek and Atlanta. As an officer and a soldier he had an enviable record, and was highly regarded by his comrades in arms. After his return from the army Captain Allen was elected Superintendent of Schools of DeKalb County, a position he filled from 1865 to 1869. In 1875 he established himself in the drug business at Shabbona, where he continued until 1888, when he removed to Aurora. From this time until his death, Feb. 12, 1899, he was never entirely engaged in business. For several years he was Treasurer of the town of Shabbona, where he also held other positions. He was a Knight Templar Mason, and was a Past Master of the Lodge at Shabbona; was also first Commander of the Grand Army Post at that place. His first marriage was in 1856, with Miss Jane A. Hunter, of Little Rock, Ill., who died in 1864 as the result of fever contracted at Chattanooga, Tenn., while nursing her wounded husband. In 1867 Mr. Allen married Miss Lizzie Alexander, of Shabbona. The surviving members of the Allen family are Mrs. Allen and Bert A., of Aurora; Mrs. Cora A. Sanborn, of Chicago; and Mrs. Jennie M. Ellwood, of DeKalb, Ill.

GEORGE W. ALSCHULER, real-estate operator, insurance and loan agent, Aurora, Ill., was born in his present home city; began life as an office boy on the "Aurora Daily News," where he was employed for some five years. In 1884 he entered into business with his father under the firm name of J. & G. W. Alschuler, dealers in real estate, insurance and loans. The two continued together until 1896, when the father died, and the son has since carried on the business alone. He was chosen Alderman in 1895 and was re-elected until 1901, when he was elected Mayor of the city. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Elks, and the Modern Woodmen.

CHARLES D. AMES, farmer and stock-raiser, Kaneville, Ill., was born in Rutland, Vt., August 25, 1857, and in 1866 came to Kane County, Ill., in company with his parents. After he had finished his schooling he began farming, which has been his business to the present time. In 1900 he purchased a farm, which adjoined the village of Kaneville on the east. For nine years he has served as Road Commissioner. Mr. Ames was married, Feb. 11, 1883, to Miss Lucy E. Ames, by whom he has had three children—two sons and a daughter.

OPHELIA L. AMIGH, Superintendent State Training School for Girls, Geneva, Ill.; born in Dutchess County, N. Y., in 1841, daughter of Riley Shadbolt, and was educated in the schools of Poughkeepsie. In 1859 she married and removed to Iowa. In May, 1861, she became a nurse in the Third Iowa Volunteer Infantry, in which her husband was serving as a soldier in the ranks. Her time was divided between the field service and the hospital at St. Louis. At the close of the war she returned to New York, where she remained fifteen years, part of the time being in charge of a reformatory for boys. In 1882 she removed to Chicago and became connected with the management of the Erring Woman's Refuge of that city. In 1894 she was appointed Superintendent of the State Training School for Girls, then a Chicago institution, but which in 1895 was removed to Geneva, where commodious buildings have been erected for its accommodation. Under Mrs. Amigh's management this school has become one of the noted educational and reformatory institutions of the State. Mrs. Amigh has long been prominently identified with temperance work, having been Grand Vice-Templar of the Good Templar Order for the State of Illinois, and has held other official positions in the fraternity. She was one of the organizers of the W. C. T. U. in Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

ANDREW J. ANDERSON, retired farmer, Elgin, Ill., was born Nov. 14, 1840, in Jersey County, Ill., where he was educated. While a young man he went to Macoupin County and purchased a farm, on which he lived until 1872. During that year he removed to Christian County, where he again located on a farm, which he tilled until 1899, when he retired, and has since made his home in Elgin. In active life he took a prominent part in local affairs. In Macoupin County he was for six years School Trustee, and also served as School Director; was the County Secretary of the F. M. B. A. three years, and stood well in the community. He was married, March 25, 1868, to Isabelle Davidson, who was born March 23, 1847, in Waverly, Morgan County, Ill., and to them have been born twelve children: Elmore (deceased), Ida, Walter (deceased), Mary, Charles (died Feb. 12, 1894), Albert, William J. and Helen (twins), George, Susan (deceased), John and Leslie.

DANIEL B. ANDRUS, banker, Batavia, Ill., born in Great Barrington, Berkshire County, Mass., Feb. 18, 1850, son of Daniel and Julia (Munson) Andrus; received his early education in the Massachusetts schools, and for several years after coming west in 1870, taught in Wisconsin. In 1881 he graduated from Lawrence University at Appleton, Wis., and the same year helped organize the Shawana County Bank, being cashier of this bank until June, 1884, when he came to Batavia to connect himself with the private banking house of Gammon & Newton. In 1891 when the First National Bank of Batavia was organized as successor to Gammon & Newton, Mr. Andrus became its cashier, which position he has since held continuously. In 1901 this bank absorbed the banking house of Mallory, James & Co. For nineteen years he has been associated with various banking interests of Batavia, and during all this time has been in close touch with the business affairs of Batavia, as well as with the entire commercial and financial interests of the Fox River valley. He was married, first to Miss Abigail F. Grout, of Omro, Wis., who died in 1879. Mr. Andrus was again married, in 1882, to Miss Martha M. Smith of Chicago.

ROBERT F. ANGELL, merchant, St. Charles, Ill., born Sept. 20, 1864, came to St. Charles, in March, 1882, and for ten months gave attention to farming, and during the next ten years was engaged in business as a painter. For a few years he was engaged in a meat market, finally becoming President and manager of the St. Charles Mercantile Company, a position which he retained until he sold out in 1899. For a short period following this he resumed his trade as a painter, and was then in the meat business until March, 1903. He was married Dec. 2, 1888,, to Miss Laverne Baker, daughter of Edward Baker, of St. Charles. He belongs to the St. Charles Lodge, Knights of Pythias, Camp of Modern Woodmen, and Unity Lodge, A. F. & A. M.

DAVID WHEELER ANNIS, born in Orange County, Vt., in 1812, and died in 1877; settled in Blackberry Township, in 1836, and became one of the most prominent and successful of the sturdy pioneers of Kane County.

CHARLES W. ANTHONY, clergyman, Aurora, Ill., is a native of Union Springs, Cayuga, N. Y., where he was born May 29, 1843. In 1854 he accompanied his parents to Santa Cruz, Cal., where he grew to manhood. His education was secured in the public schools and at the University of California, the latter at that time located at Oakland, and from which he graduated in 1870. He prepared for the ministry in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at San Francisco, and in 1873 was ordained and installed pastor of the Presbyterian church in Livermore, Cal., where he remained until 1880. That year he was called to Aurora, where some years prior he had married Miss Fannie H. Janes, daughter of Nelson L. Janes, an old-time resident of that city. Mr. Anthony has since held pastorates at Spring Valley church, Whiteside County, and at Kewanee. He was pastor of the Second Presbyterian church in Duluth, Minn., for about three years, and was in charge of the Presbyterian church at Franklin Grove, Lee County, for eleven years. In 1899 he again removed to Aurora, and has since devoted only a portion of his time to the ministry, the care of the extensive estate of his father-in-law occupying much of his time. In 1877, and again in 1890, he sat as a representative in the Presbyterian General Assembly. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony is Maud H., who graduated from Lake Forest University in 1901, and who is now engaged in educational work at Wabash, Ind.

ALSON H. ARNOLD (deceased), merchant, Batavia, Ill., born in Benson, Vt., April 23, 1836, son of Artemas and Clara (Wilson) Arnold, was reared in his Vermont home, where he was educated and trained to mercantile pursuits. In 1854 he came west and entered the employ of Moor & Buck, pioneer merchants at Batavia, Ill., and was later a traveling salesman. In 1865 he embarked in the clothing trade, a business which he followed until his death, Jan. 26, 1898. He was Mayor of Batavia two years, served as Alderman several terms, and was long a member of the Board of Supervisors. He was a Mason of high standing, and took a leading part in the affairs of that fraternity in Batavia. In 1864 he married Miss Mary, daughter of Milo and Julia (Root) Kemp of Batavia.

JOHN B. ARNOLD, manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., born in Northampton, Mass., Jan. 27, 1835; received his education at Williston Seminary, East Hampton, and in the high school at Northampton, and was trained as a druggist under Theodore Metcalf, of Boston, and the B. A.

Fahnstock Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., with which he later began the manufacture of white lead. About 1874 he became associated with Pittsburg parties in the organization of the third establishment of the kind in the United States. A few years later Mr. Arnold, in company with others, organized the Aurora Smelting and Refining Company, their large plant going into operation at Aurora, Jan. 1, 1883; later they bought and combined with their original plant those of the Chicago Refining and Smelting Company, located at Chicago and Leadville, Colo. The Aurora plant was operated eighteen years without the loss of a day, until it was finally disposed of to the American Refining and Smelting Company. Mr. Arnold was President from its organization until its sale, and he has also been interested in kindred enterprises in Colorado and Utah. His home has been in Aurora since his removal from Pittsburg in 1882.

GEORGE F. ARVEDSON, merchant, Carpentersville, Kane County, was born in Algonquin, Ill., April 26, 1855, son of the Rev. Peter Arvedson, and at fourteen years of age was employed as clerk by H. E. Hunt, a merchant at Dundee. In 1875 he became a partner in a store in Carpentersville, but sold out his interest two years later to take a position in the Illinois Iron and Bolt Company as shipping clerk. After the death of his wife's uncle, Julius A. Carpenter, in 1880, he assumed the management of the flouring mill, and two years later he began shipping molding sand from the C. V. Carpenter farm, which had come into his wife's possession. This business he still (1904) continues, though the milling business was given up in 1885 as no longer profitable. In 1893 a co-partnership was entered into with Ora H. Smith in the sand and gravel business, and three years later in the lumber, coal and feed business. Mr. Arvedson is now serving his fourth term on the Board of Education, and for many years has been a Vestryman and Warden of St. James parish, Dundee. He is also a member of the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Chicago.

REV. PETER ARVEDSON (deceased), Algonquin, born in Norkoping, Sweden, Aug. 24, 1822, and educated in the public schools of his native land, came to the United States in 1840, in company with William Estergren, who is still (1904) living in Algonquin. After spending some two years in Cincinnati and Chicago, Mr. Arvedson came to Algonquin to work on the farm of Dr. Andrew Cornish. Here it was that, coming under the influence of Mrs. Cornish whose granddaughter he afterward married, his religious life was quickened, and he was ordained a minister of the Episcopal Church, after several years' active work as lay-reader and member of St. John's Episcopal Church, Algonquin, of which he became deacon-in-charge. Upon his advancement to the priesthood in 1869, he became rector, this relation continuing until his death, Nov. 22, 1880. For one summer only (that of 1868), was he a resident of Kane County; but, as being the prime mover in the organization of St. James parish, Dundee, in 1864, he was from that time actively interested in the affairs of the county. From Algonquin as a center, where a church building was completed in 1865, his missionary labors extended to many points in Northern Illinois, and at one place across the border into Wisconsin. As the fruits of his missionary work, beside the church in Algonquin, an old building was bought of the Baptists in Dundee, and new churches erected at Wilmot, Wis., and Spring Grove, Ill.

GUSTAVUS AUCUTT, farmer and merchant, Aurora, Ill., was born in Oneida County, N. Y., July 20, 1839, and spent the early years of his life in his native State, attending the public schools when a boy; came to Illinois when fifteen years of age, and has since lived in Kane County. In 1869 he bought a farm in Sugar Grove Township, and was engaged in farming and stock-raising there until 1883, when he sold out and purchased another farm in Aurora Township which he still owns, but in 1893 retired from active farming operations and has since resided in Aurora. In 1896 he embarked in the coal business in Aurora, and has since been head of the firm of Aucutt & Son. In 1862 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry for service in the war of the rebellion, and was mustered out in 1865 after three years of active service. Mr. Aucutt was married in 1865 to Miss Josephine Dennison, daughter of Gilbert P. Dennison, of Aurora.

CHARLES H. BACKUS, banker, Hampshire, Ill.; born at Chaplin, Conn., June 9, 1856; came west in March, 1879, locating first at Marengo, Ill., and removed to Hampshire, Ill., in April, 1882, and established what is known as the Kane County Bank, of which he has been the owner since 1885; also has an interest in the mercantile establishment of Backus & Sisley, and in the firm of Backus & Sholes, manufacturers of brick and tile; elected member of the State Legislature in 1900, and again in 1902; married Jan. 1, 1884, Miss Emma L. Sisley, and they have one son, Charles S.

JAMES C. BAIRD (deceased), banker and man of affairs, St. Charles, Ill.; born in Cayuga, County, N. Y., son of William and Annie (Brown) Baird; same with his parents to St. Charles in 1836, and became the first banker in that village, as well as one of the leading men in the development of Kane County. Mr. Baird died August 21, 1884.

LEWIS A. BAKER, manufacturer, Elgin, Ill.; born at Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 28, 1852, son of Joseph and Sarah (Nickerson) Baker; in 1857 he came west with his parents, who established their home in Michigan and lived on a farm in that State until 1866, when they removed to Kane County. In 1887 Lewis A. Baker removed to Elgin and established a machine shop in that city; later he purchased the Jackson Foundry and consolidated it with his former business; organized the Elgin Manufacturing Company, of which he has since been President and general manager. He was married in 1873 to Miss Frances Saltmarsh, of Ithaca, N. Y.

JOHN M. BALDWIN, retired farmer, St. Charles, Ill., was born at St. Charles, Dec. 13, 1858, son of James C. and Harriet (Blanchard) Baldwin, and was reared and educated in his birth-place. He began farming in 1876 on the J. B. Blanchard farm, belonging to the estate of his grandfather, and here he remained until 1884, when after an absence of three years in 1887 he returned to the farm, which continued to be his home until 1891. The latter year he removed to St. Charles, and engaged in live stock business, but two years later again returned to the old farm, which he finally bought from his mother, and of which she had been the owner since 1873. This he now rents to tenants, living on the farm retired from active work. His retirement dates from 1898. Mr. Baldwin is a Republican and has served as Highway Commissioner of St. Charles Township; fraternally he belongs to the I. O. O. F. He was married Nov. 1, 1900, to Miss M. A. Hendricks, daughter of Adolph Hendricks, of Elgin.

JOHN P. BARCKLEY, merchant, Batavia, Ill.; born in the city where he now resides, August 23, 1855; son of James and Mary (Paul) Barckley; educated in the schools of Batavia and Elgin, and later learned the machinist's trade, which he followed for twenty-five years; was one of the organizers of the Batavia Hardware Company in 1898, and became sole proprietor of the business in 1901. He was married in 1877 to Miss Minnie Bartholomew, of Batavia.

LAWRENCE P. BARKER.

LAWRENCE P. BARKER (deceased), Batavia, was born in DeRuyter, N. Y., July 29, 1811, and was reared and educated in his native State, until 1845 being engaged in agricultural labors. That year he moved to Illinois, settling in Batavia, where for a time he was engaged in the cooperage business. About 1852 he and J. C. Derby opened stone quarries near Batavia, the first product of their quarries being used in the construction of what was known as the Great Western Railway bridge at St. Charles, Ill. Mr. Barker and Mr. Derby were associated together in extensive quarrying operations until the death of Mr. Derby in 1864. The firm of Mallory, Derby and Barker built all the stone work for the bridges on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway between Aurora and Chicago. Mr. Barker later became widely known as a leading railroad builder of the West. He retired from business in 1882. Meanwhile, he had become largely interested in land in Kane County, and these interests occupied a very considerable share of his attention. Before the Civil War he was Sheriff of Kane County, and from time to time has filled various local offices. In 1845 he married Miss Mary Gowdy, who was born and reared in New York. She died in 1894. Mr. Barker died June 24, 1903, aged nearly ninety-two years.

JABEZ BARKER, retired farmer, Elburn, Ill.; born in Bristol County, Mass., March 27, 1818; educated in the public schools of the Bay State, and came to Kane County, Ill., in 1843; afterwards spent some time in California and his native State, but located permanently in Kane County about 1850, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1898, when he retired. Mr. Barker was married May 19, 1840, to Sarah White, who died Nov. 25, 1902.

WILLIAM P. BARKER, Batavia, Ill., born in the city of his residence, July 7, 1850, a son of Lawrence P. and Mary (Gowdy) Barker, both of whom were natives of New York. He was educated in the East Batavia public school, and when sixteen years of age, began with his father in the stone quarrying and contracting business, becoming a partner in 1870. Since his father's retirement Mr. Barker has continued in business devoting his attention to the lumber and coal trade, and the care of his extensive real-estate investments and farm property, also retaining his interest in the quarrying business. He has served as a member of the Batavia Board of Aldermen and Board of Education. In 1875 he married Miss Helen Brown, daughter of Mrs. Sarah M. Brown, of Batavia.

HARRY D. BARNES, manufacturer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Bloomingdale, DuPage County, Ill., Nov. 29, 1863, a son of George W. and Susan (Dudley) Barnes, received his education in the home schools and in Elgin Academy, remaining on his father's farm until he was twenty years old. In 1881 he moved to Elgin, which has since been his home. During the summer of 1882 he worked for the Elgin Lumber Company, and the following year was in the employ of the grocery firm of A. M. Stewart. In 1884 he entered the shop of the Elgin Packing Company, and here his promotion was rapid. In May, 1890, upon the resignation of Mr. F. L. McClure, he was made Assistant Manager, and when Mr. E. K. W. Cornell resigned, in January, 1899, he was elected Manager. In 1902 he was elected Secretary of the corporation and is now (1904) holding both positions. The Elgin Packing Company is regarded as one of the best paying concerns in Elgin, and has about doubled its output in the last five years. Mr. Barnes owns a farm west of Elgin of 145 acres, and now has a controlling interest in the Elgin Packing Company. He was married June 28, 1898, to Miss Ida Merrifield, daughter of Oscar C. Merrifield, of Ottawa, Ill. He served on the Elgin School Board from 1894 to 1900.

WILLIAM B. BARNES, retired machinist, Aurora, Ill.; born in Vermont, Nov. 20, 1832; grew to manhood in his native State, and came to Aurora, Ill. in 1853; employed in the shops of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad from 1864 to 1897, being foreman of the locomotive department most of the time. Mr. Barnes was married in 1858 to Mary E. Crance, of Aurora.

CHARLES HOPKINS BARRETT, retired farmer, La Fox, Kane County; born Oct. 16, 1849, at Lenox, Mass., son of Sylvester and Caroline (Hicks) Barrett, and removed in infancy to Brainard, N. Y., where he began his schooling in a private school. When seven years old he was taken by his parents to Geneva, Ill., where he completed his education in the public schools. His first employment was found on a farm, and farming has been his life-work.

SYLVESTER BARRETT.

SYLVESTER BARRETT (deceased), La Fox, Kane County, mason and builder, was born in Lenox, Mass., in 1800, and was all his life a mason contractor and builder. Before coming west he served as Selectman in his native place. After his arrival in Kane County, he furnished the stone for the County Court House; also furnished the stone for the first school house in Geneva, and was in great demand both as a stone mason and a dealer in stone throughout this section. Many of the abutments in the highway bridges were constructed by him, and his work was pronounced of the most enduring character. He married Caroline Adelia Hicks, a native of New York, who died in January, 1898. His death occurred in April, 1896.

WILLIAM H. BARRETT (deceased), Aurora, born in London, England, Aug. 13, 1831, and when a year and a half old was brought by his parents to this country, was reared and educated in Detroit, Mich., and became a blacksmith; in 1863 came to Aurora from Detroit, and entered the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co., where with brief exceptions, he remained until near his death, Jan. 30, 1903. He spent a short time in Canada, and about a year at Atchison, Kan., in charge of the railway shops there. He was widely known as a Mason, having taken all the degrees up to and including the thirty-second. For nearly twenty-eight years he was Tyler for Lodge No. 254. His funeral services were attended by many hundreds, attesting their belief in his worth as a man and a Mason. In 1859 he married Mrs. Amarett Rosier, of Aurora. Mrs. Barrett was born in Erie County, Pennsylvania, by birth a Selby, and she survives her husband, living in Aurora. To Mr. and Mrs. Barrett were born children named Emma W. and Sadie I., of Aurora. George A. Rosier, of Cecil, Penn., Mrs. Fannie Rees, and Mrs. Mary E. Wright, of Aurora, are Mrs. Barrett's children by her first marriage.

BISHOP BARTHOLOMEW (deceased), pioneer farmer, Batavia, Ill.; born at Whitehall, Washington County, N. Y., in 1817; came to Chicago in 1837; settled at Naperville, DuPage County, and there married Elmira Jones, daughter of Z. Jones, one of the first settlers of that county; purchased a farm three miles north of Naperville where he lived until 1884, when he retired and removed to Batavia. He died Oct. 15, 1901. His first wife died in 1848, and in 1850 he married Miss Asenath McFerran of Vermont.

DARIUS BARTHOLOMEW, retired farmer, Batavia, Ill., born near Naperville, Ill., Feb. 14, 1844, son of Bishop and Emma (Jones) Bartholomew; in 1862 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Fifth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was assigned to the Army of the Tennessee. During his service he participated in the battles of Resaca, Lookout Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, and in all the engagements of the Atlanta Campaign. After the close of the war he returned to DuPage County, where he was engaged in farming until 1895 when he removed to Batavia. He was married in 1870 to Miss Annie E. Lehman, of DuPage County.

HENRY B. BARTHOLOMEW (deceased), merchant, Batavia, Ill.; born in Naperville, DuPage County, Ill., Dec. 6, 1852; reared in DuPage County and educated at Warrenville Academy and Northwestern College (Naperville); began his business career at Batavia in 1880 in the lumber trade; later embarked in the coal business, but eventually combined the two and added a stock of agricultural implements, carriages and wagons; served as Mayor of Batavia besides holding other local offices. He was married in 1879 to Miss Ida J. Vaughn. Mr. Bartholomew died suddenly in Batavia, Oct. 10, 1901.

LUCIUS BARTHOLOMEW, farmer, Batavia, Kane County, Ill., was born at Whitehall, N. Y., Oct. 29, 1825, son of Thomas Bartholomew; grew to manhood in New York State, and in 1849 came to Illinois, locating near what was known as the Big Woods, in DuPage County, where he was engaged in farming until 1873, when he removed to Batavia, residing at the latter place until the time of his death, which occurred Jan. 26, 1896. Mr. Bartholomew was a deacon in the Baptist church for over forty years. He was married in 1846 to Miss Mary Graves, daughter of Phineas Graves, who settled in Will County, Ill., in 1833, removed to DuPage County three years later, and died in Kane County in 1887.

ABNER R. BARTLETT (deceased), Aurora, physician, and in his earlier life a clergyman, was born in New Hartford, N. Y., in 1812, and was reared in his native State. While a scholarly man, his education was largely self-acquired, and he brought to the study of theology a mind trained by self-culture, to close thinking and reasoning. The celebrated pulpit orator of the Universalist church, Dr. E. H. Chapin, was his classmate, and he entered the Universalist ministry under favorable auspices. Dr. Bartlett had pastorates at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Bath, Me., and at various other points. In 1847 he made his first visit to Illinois, and three years later removed his family to Waukegan, where he organized a church. In the meantime he had begun the study of medicine, and after attending lectures at the Homœopathic College at Cleveland, Ohio, he removed to Aurora in 1852, and began the practice of his profession. In medicine he proved very successful and continued in practice until his death, Dec. 26, 1880. As a pioneer practitioner of homœopathy in the West, he did much to establish that school of medicine in the confidence of the public. He was identified with medical education as Professor of Physiology in the Cleveland school, which he held for one year, and later in the chair of Physiology in the Homœopathic Medical College of Missouri, at St. Louis. His wife, born Esther Gage, was a native of Litchfield, N. Y.

DR. FREDERICK L. BARTLETT, physician, son of the preceding, was born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Dec. 16, 1843, and was nine years old when the family came to Aurora, where he received the greater part of his academic education. At first he read law with the famous firm of Wagner & Canfield, of Aurora, and in 1866 graduated from the Law Department of the University of Michigan, but two years later was a graduate of the Homœopathic Medical College of Missouri, at St. Louis, very soon becoming a practitioner of medicine in Aurora in association with his father. Rapidly attaining prominence in his profession, he was speedily recognized as a leading exponent of homœopathy up to the time of his retirement from professional life in 1899. He was elected Mayor of Aurora in 1877, and for many years was a member of the Board of Education, long serving as its President. In the establishment of the Aurora Free Public Library, Dr. Bartlett played an important part. A prominent Republican, he has taken an important part in political affairs, and has been intimately associated with many of the leading men of Northern Illinois. Dr. Bartlett was married in 1879 to Miss Arvilla A. Carter, of Aurora, and their son, Frederick A. Bartlett, physician, was born in Aurora, Ill., June 26, 1876, was educated in the Aurora schools, graduating from the West Aurora high school in 1894, and three years later from the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago. He began practice immediately with his father, and Dr. C. E. Colwell, who had been associated with the latter for some years. The younger Dr. Bartlett and Dr. Colwell are still associated in the practice of their profession, Dr. Frederick L. Bartlett being retired. Dr. F. A. Bartlett still retains the old office so long occupied by his father and his grand father.

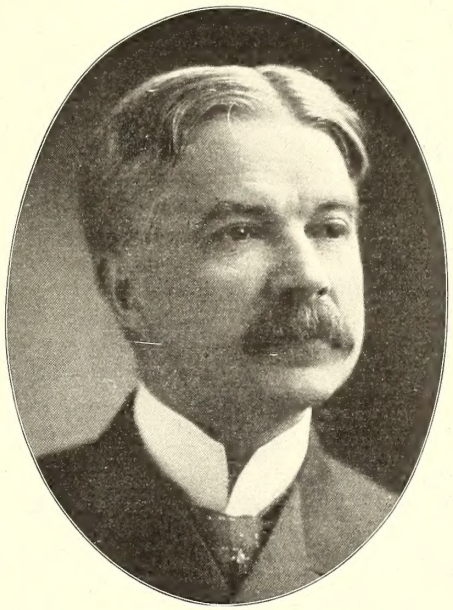
JOHN E. BARTLETT (deceased), farmer, Campton Township, Kane County, was born Sept. 15, 1850, in Campton Township, and received his education from the district schools of his native town. He worked on the farm with his parents until his marriage, March 4, 1873. He bought a farm in 1875, two miles northeast of Elburn, and died Nov. 17, 1889, leaving a widow and five sons. Mrs. Bartlett's maiden name was Elsie Richmond, and her parents were Almon and Hannah (Smith) Richmond.

JOSEPH P. BARTLETT (deceased), farmer and school teacher, was born Jan. 16, 1810, at Campton, Grafton County, N. H., and came to Illinois in 1843. For five years he made his home in Winnebago County, and then bought Government land in Kane County, where he lived until his death. He was married Dec. 31, 1843, to Miss Julia Ann, daughter of Ephraim and Mary (Robie) Elliott. By this marriage he became the father of five children—two daughters and three sons. He died in March, 1893, his wife having passed away March 22, 1876.

L. EDWIN BARTLETT, farmer, Elburn, Kane County, born Sept. 15, 1850, on the farm where he now lives, two and a half miles northeast of Elburn, was educated in the district school, and has devoted his life to farming. He has served his neighbors two terms as School Director.

GEORGE BARTON (deceased), pioneer settler, born in England in 1815; came to the United States in 1834, locating first in New York State, removing to Kane County in 1836, where he purchased a tract of government land upon which he resided until his death, August 27, 1903, dying at the age of eighty-eight years; married in 1853, Miss Sarah N. Ferguson, who still survives and resides on the old farm in Big Rock Township.

JAMES W. BATTLE, prominent business man and ex-Mayor of Aurora, was born in Gill, Franklin County, Mass., Oct. 5, 1831, son of Ichabod and Miranda (Moore) Battle, was educated in his native town and variously employed in Massachusetts and Vermont until 1853. The latter year he came west, and was locomotive fireman for a time in Ohio; later he returned east, but soon came to Michigan City, Ind., where he secured employment with the New Albany & Salem Railroad, soon after connecting himself with the Michigan Central Railroad. In 1859 he was with the Hannibal & St. Joe Railroad, but the following year he went back to Massachusetts, where for two years he was engaged in merchandising. Since 1862, with the exception of four years in which he was on the Northwestern as an engineer, for most of the time until 1871 he was in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad as engineer. For six years thereafter he was a grocer in Aurora, was the first superintendent of the first street car line established in Aurora, and in 1886 was appointed Superintendent of the city water works. In 1878 he was elected City Alderman and served four years; in 1882 was chosen Mayor, and in 1892 again made Alderman, and in 1894 was a second time elected Mayor. Although "counted out," the Illinois Supreme Court confirmed his claim, and he served his term. In 1898, he was elected to the County Board, and served a year as Superintendent of the water works. In 1903 he was chosen on the Kane County Board of Review, a position which he still fills. He has been associated with the various manufacturing interests of Aurora and is a director and Vice-President of the Aurora Silver Plate Manufacturing Company. In 1854 he married Miss Cordelia Lobdell, born and bred in Ohio, but who died in 1856. Three years later Miss Isabella Gilbert, a native of Massachusetts, became his wife.



HENRY J. BAUMANN, druggist, Dundee, born in Dundee, Kane County, Ill., June 27, 1859, son of John Baumann, a native of Germany, was educated in the Dundee schools and graduated from the St. Louis College of Pharmacy in 1878. He was employed as clerk in Dr. Cleveland's store until 1880, when he bought a half-interest in the establishment, the following year purchasing the remaining interest and now being sole proprietor. He has been local manager for the Chicago Telephone Company since it established a Dundee station, and also does a general fire insurance business. For two years he served as Trustee of West Dundee, for twenty years he has been a member of the Library Board, and for four years has filled the President's chair. Dr. Baumann was married, May 5, 1881, to Miss Elizabeth Bartels, daughter of Charles Bartels, of West Point, Neb, but formerly of Dundee, Ill.

ABRAHAM BEAMISH, farmer, Burlington Township, Kane County, Ill.; born in County Cork, Ireland, in 1817; came to America in 1840, locating first in Canada; removed to Kane County, Ill., in 1843, settling in Plato Township. In 1853 he purchased 180 acres of land in Burlington Township, to which he subsequently added forty acres more, and here carried on dairy farming until his retirement in 1896. He was married in 1843, to Miss Sarah Mitchell, and of their children, two sons and one daughter are still living—Samuel, John and Lily Beamish. Mr. Beamish died May 29, 1901; his wife surviving him until February, 1903.

GEORGE A. BEAZIER, retired farmer, Hampshire, Ill, born in the village where he now resides, Sept. 13, 1852, and remained under the parental roof until 1875. In 1875 and '76 he traveled extensively in Europe, and in 1883 purchased a 120-acre farm in Hampshire Township, which he conducted until 1902, when he removed to the village, where he has since lived retired. On January 1, 1877, he was married to Miss Mary M. Munsch, of Hampshire.

ARTHUR M. BEAUPRE, son of Mathias and Sarah J. (Patrick) Beaupre, was born in 1853, at Oswego, Kendall County, Ill., where he spent his early boyhood. In 1865 he removed with his parents to DeKalb, Ill., and when sixteen years of age entered the office of the "Dekalb County News" in the last named city, where he learned the printer's trade thoroughly and made himself generally useful in all departments of the office. At the age of twenty-one years he came to Aurora, where, a few months later, he was elected Clerk of the City Court, and later elected for a second term, but shortly after his re-election, was induced to accept the position of Deputy County Clerk at Geneva. In 1886 he was elected County Clerk by a large majority and re-elected to the same position in 1890, thus holding the office eight years, and left the position with the good will and esteem of all who had occasion to transact business in his department. In October, 1897, he was appointed by President McKinley, Secretary of Legation and Consul-General at Guatemala, Central America, where he served about three years, when he was transferred to Bogota, Colombia, South America. In 1903 he was appointed by President Roosevelt, Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy-Extraordinary of the United States to Colombia, this being one of only two instances where a Consul of the United States has been promoted to the position of Minister. In March, 1904, he was appointed Minister to the Argentine Republic by President Roosevelt, this mission being the most important in South America. On October 20, 1880, he was married to Mary F. Marsh, daughter of Hon. C. W. Marsh, and their only child, Beatrice, was born March 26, 1884, and is now the wife of Spencer Stuart Dickson, British Vice-Consul at Bogota.

WILLIAM S. BEAUPRE, banker, Aurora, Ill., born at Ottawa, La Salle County, Ill., Oct. 2, 1844, son of Mathias Beaupre, who was of French descent and came to Illinois from Canada in 1838, locating first in Joliet and later in Kendall County, where he served as Sheriff two terms. William S. Beaupre was reared in La Salle and Kendall Counties, obtained his education in the public schools, and began his business career as clerk in a dry-goods store at Aurora. In 1869 he was appointed Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue in the Second District of Illinois, holding that position until 1883, when he resigned to become Cashier of the Aurora National Bank, organized in the year last named, and since 1895 has been Vice-President and Manager of that institution. Mr. Beaupre is also President of the Kane County Title & Trust Company, which he organized in 1902 by consolidating the Kane County Abstract and the People's Abstract offices; is a Director of the Fox River Light, Heat & Power Company, a pioneer enterprise in the distribution of gas from a central plant to surrounding towns in the Fox River Valley; is Director and Treasurer of the Home Building & Loan Association of Aurora; has been a member of the Aurora Board of Education (East Side) for twenty-two years, and a Director of the Aurora Free Library since its organization. He is a Knight Templar in Masonry, and a member of other fraternal organizations. He married Miss Julia Brady, daughter of Lorenzo D. Brady, a pioneer merchant and banker of Aurora, a sketch of whom may be found elsewhere in this volume.

Y., until 1858, when he came with his parents to Illinois and settled on a farm near Batavia, Kane County; married in 1863 Sarah Annis. Mr. Belden was one of the most widely known farmers in Illinois, and was noted at all county fairs and agricultural exhibitions held in Illinois for the fine cattle he raised on his farm.

GEORGE C. BELL, cement contractor, Elgin, Ill., was born in Battle Creek, Mich., June 3, 1881, son of Edward and Mary C. (Mitchell) Bell. When an infant he was brought by his parents to Elgin, where he received his education in the Elgin Academy and the Ballou Business College. He spent his summers working with his father, and learning all kinds of the cement and concrete trade, including paving. He worked six winters learning the photograph business. August 10, 1901, he was taken into partnership with his father, who is a pioneer in Elgin in this line of business. In the summer season they employ from fifteen to eighteen men, and at the present time have orders enough on hand to keep the full force of men at work until snow flies. Their office is Room 5, Hubbard Block, Elgin. Mr. Bell was married Sept. 25, 1901, to Miss Ethel Anderson, a native of Illinois.

GEORGE A. BEITH.

GEORGE A. BEITH, retired farmer, Campton Township, Kane County, born Jan. 7, 1848, in St. Charles, Ill., son of William and Mary (Allen) Beith, was educated in the public schools, the private school of Mr. McClellan, and the Bryant & Stratton's Business College of Chicago, where he took a course. In 1892 he bought the old homestead farm of his father, having already bought the Kenier place adjoining. For three years he was Assessor, and has been School Director since he was twenty-one years old. He is a deacon and trustee of the Congregational Church, of which he has been treasurer since its organization. He was married Sept. 21, 1871, to Miss Lucinda, daughter of Almon and Hannah (Smith) Richmond

BELLEVUE PLACE SANITARIUM, an institution for the treatment of female patients afflicted with nervous and mental disorders, located at Batavia, Ill. It was founded in 1867, by Dr. Richard J. Patterson, who was a noted specialist in this line and had previously had a wide experience in other institutions of like character. The institution gained a wide celebrity under Dr. Patterson's management, which continued until his death in 1892. It is still continued under the management of Dr. Patterson's successors, who have introduced many improvements since his death, and many distinguished patients have received treatment within its walls.

LEONARD BENJAMIN (deceased), pioneer; born at Sangerfield, N. Y., in 1813; came to Illinois in 1837, locating on Government land in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, where he resided and carried on general farming and stock-raising until his death in 1895. The old homestead is now the residence of his son, Todd Benjamin. Mr. Benjamin was also one of the pioneer school teachers of Kane County. He was married in 1847 to Miss Lucretia Emery, who still survives her husband and lives in Sugar Grove.

PRATT BENJAMIN, farmer and stock-raiser, Sugar Grove Township, Kane County; born in the township where he now resides, June 5, 1855; was reared on a farm and educated in the public schools, the Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial Institute and the Jennings Seminary, Aurora. He has been engaged in farming during his entire business career. Mr. Benjamin was married in 1878 to Miss Jane Densmore.

ARTHUR A. BENNETT, manufacturer, St. Charles, Ill., was born in Montpelier, Vt., July 31, 1847, son of George H. and Emeline Bennett, in his youth becoming a graduate of the Montpelier high school and a student of Dartmouth College. Upon leaving college he became interested in farming, in which he was engaged a number of years, his next employment being in connection with the creamery business in New York, after which going to Canada, he there built and equipped about thirty creameries. In Burlington, Vt., he entered into the employ of a company for making sugar from milk. This factory was removed in 1886 to St. Charles, where it is now the National Sugar Milk Company, with Mr. Bennett as its General Manager. He served as Mayor of St. Charles four consecutive terms—from 1891 to 1899. Mr. Bennett was married in October, 1868, to Miss Harriet French of Vermont, who died in 1881. He was again married, May 3, 1883, to Miss Eleanor Needham, of Montpelier, Vt. One daughter, Clara E., was born of the first marriage, and two sons, Edward E. and Sydney R., of the second union. Mr. Bennett is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

BENNIE BENSON, farmer, Kaneville Township, Kane County, was born March 31, 1858, in Sweden, and came to Kane County in 1880. He worked on a farm many years, and in 1895 was able to buy a place for himself four and a half miles southwest of Elburn. In politics he is a Republican, and in religion a Lutheran, being a member of the Lutheran church of Batavia. In March, 1885, Mr. Benson was married to Miss Mary Anderson, and to them have come two daughters.

In 1872 he became associated with the Aurora Beacon, and was identified with that paper until the spring of 1897, acting as manager of the publication during the last ten years of his service. In 1898 he associated himself with A. G. Wormwood, thus establishing the now well-known printing house of Wormwood & Berry. Mr. Berry is a director and Vice-President of the Improvement, Building & Loan Association, with which he has been officially identified since its organization; has been prominent in the councils of the Republican party of Aurora for twenty years, and for sixteen years was Secretary of the Republican organization in the city. He was married in 1880 to Miss Martha W. Hoyt, daughter of A. J. and Caroline Hoyt of Aurora.

ALBERT BEVERLY.

ALBERT BEVERLY, retired farmer, Maple Park, born in Oneida County, N. Y., March 12, 1825, son of David and Eleanor (McMaster) Smith, received his education in the district schools of his native place, and in 1843 came to Maple Park, Ill., where he bought a farm one mile north of Elburn. This place he sold in 1847, to purchase another farm near Lodi (now Maple Park), where he lived until 1879. That year he built a home in Maple Park, where he is now living a retired life. In his active years Mr. Beverly has taken a leading part in the political and business affairs of his home community. He has been Collector, Road Commissioner, School Trustee, Mayor of Maple Park and for sixteen years Assessor of the Town of Virgil. His marriage to Miss Mary Jenkins occurred in September, 1845. She died Dec. 27, 1846, and he married his second wife, Miss Sarah J. Smith, in October, 1849. She became the mother of six children, only two of whom are now living. She died Jan. 30, 1863. Miss Leannah Bennett became Mr. Beverly's third wife, and of her six children, two daughters and one son are now living.

MELVIN BEVERLY, carpenter and joiner, Maple Park, Kane County, born Sept. 24, 1842, in Chautauqua County, N. Y., received his education in the schools of his native State, and came to Kane County, Ill., in 1860. Here he worked as a carpenter and joiner, and established a business as a contractor and builder, which he discontinued to enter the Union army, in April, 1862, when he became a member of the Sixty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. At Harper's Ferry, on Sept. 15, 1862, he was taken prisoner, was paroled, and coming to Chicago, enlisted in the Thirteenth Regiment United States Regular Army. On Feb. 5, following, he received his discharge, having been permanently injured so as to seriously affect his legs. On his return home he resumed his business as a carpenter, and was quite a noted builder. Mr. Beverly was married, Aug. 15, 1878, to Miss Hattie Shoop, of Kane County, and they have had four children—two sons and two daughters.

MILTON J. BEVERLY, Deputy Clerk of the Kane County Probate Court, Maple Park, Kane County, Ill., was born in Virgil Township, Kane County, Dec. 11, 1874, son of Albert Beverly and Leannah (Bennett) Beverly; was educated in the public schools and the Metropolitan Business College (Chicago), and trained to merchandising, being employed for eight years in the general store of L. C. Clyne at

Maple Park. In November, 1900, Mr. Beverly was appointed Deputy Clerk of the Kane County Probate Court to succeed Capt. Ben Gould, and has since filled that position, in the meantime becoming well known to the people of Kane County. In political views he is a Republican and served at Tax Collector of Virgil Township four years. He is a Thirty-second Degree Mason, and a member of many other fraternal organizations. Mr. Beverly was married in 1893 to Miss Emma M. Kenyon, daughter of Oliver and Sarah (Farah) Kenyon of Maple Park, Ill.

BIG ROCK PLOWING MATCH, a farm contest which originated in Big Rock Township, in 1895, William Thomas and others being the promoters. The first President of the association was William Thomas, and the first plowing match was held on his farm one mile north of the village of Big Rock. The purpose was to bring the farmers of the community together for object lessons in plowing, and to promote friendly rivalry in this important feature of agriculture, prizes being offered for the best work of this kind. The first match proved successful beyond expectation, and new features have since been developed. A grain exhibition has been added, and an entertainment and exhibits by the ladies of Big Rock each year have added largely to the importance of the occasion. As high as 5,000 people have been in attendance at these exhibitions, and the day of the Big Rock Plowing Match is an annual holiday in this region.

ALEXANDER BINNIE, pioneer farmer, Dundee, Township, Kane County, was born in Kirkliston, Scotland, Dec. 22, 1829, and there lived with his parents, attending the Parish school until eighteen years of age. He is the youngest of a family of nine children, all of whom are deceased except one brother, Henry, who at present lives in Iowa. At eighteen years of age Mr. Binnie went out into the world to "hoe his own row," working for his brother David until coming to the States in 1848. Two years later he met and married Miss Jane Wilson, one son (John, now deceased) being the result of this union. His wife died in 1878. Knowing it was "not good for man to be alone," he married as his second wife Bethia F. Crichton,, whose companionship, with their six children —four sons and two daughters—he at present enjoys. In politics he is a stanch Republican, and has always been interested in the welfare of his country, State and town, taking an active part in school and town affairs, and served as Town Assessor for twelve consecutive years. At present he is reputed one of the largest land-owners in the township, and is the heaviest milk-shipper to the Borden Condensed Milk Company, at Carpentersville. Throughout his long residence of more than fifty years in Dundee, he has been one of its most active citizens.

WILLIAM WARD BISHOP, pioneer manufacturer and banker, Aurora, Ill.; born in Essex County, England, April 19, 1821; came to America when a lad and spent his youth in Massachusetts where he was engaged in a foundry for several years; came to Illinois in 1852, establishing a foundry of considerable magnitude in Aurora, which he conducted very successfully until 1865; was President of the Aurora Cotton Mills, and also of the Bishop & Colter Bank, which later became the First National Bank. Mr. Bishop served as director of the latter institution until the time of his death, Oct. 26, 1892. He was married in 1845 to Miss Julia Ann Shepherd, and they became the parents of two children: Frank William, who died in 1895, and Mrs. Fanny Henderson, of Aurora. Mrs. Bishop is still living (1903).

FRANCIS H. BLACKMAN, physician and surgeon, Geneva, Ill.; born at Naperville, Ill., Aug. 28, 1846; was reared on his father's farm and obtained his academic education at Clark's Seminary (Aurora) and Lawrence University (Appleton, Wis.); graduated from the Department of Medicine of the Northwestern University with the class of 1870; located in Geneva immediately after graduation and has since been engaged in medical and surgical practice in that city. June 1, 1871, he married Miss Julia A. Cole, who is also a graduate in the science of medicine.

JOHN M. BLACKBURN.

JOHN M. BLACKBURN, Secretary and Treasurer Elgin Silver Plate Company, Elgin, Ill., born in Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 29, 1858, was educated in the city schools of his native place, and entered the employ of the Meriden Britannia Company, Meriden, Conn., in 1877 as a clerk. In 1882 he equipped and managed a branch factory at Toronto, Ont. He spent 1889 in Meriden, and in 1890 was elected Secretary and Treasurer of the Griffin Silver Plate Company of Chicago. The following year he located in Elgin, and in 1892 was elected Secretary and Treasurer of the Elgin Silver Plate Company. In political matters he is a Republican, and in 1898 was chosen a member of the Board of Education, where he served three years, two years of that time being President of the Public Library Board. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Century Club.

CHARLES L. BLANCHARD.

CHARLES L. BLANCHARD, undertaker and insurance agent, St. Charles, Ill., born in Chicago Nov. 27, 1852, son of Zara A. and Elizabeth (Jordan) Blanchard, was brought to St. Charles by his parents when an infant, and was there reared and educated. He was in Kansas from 1869 to 1873, and began his business career as a clerk in the old Kane County National Bank in 1875. In 1879 he went to Kansas City to enter the employ of the Santa Fe Railroad, which he served four years, and for four years following was in the real-estate business in that city. For five years he did a railway contracting business in Kansas and Kentucky. In 1893 he returned to St. Charles, and for a time was inactive, but in February, 1896, took up the undertaking business, in which he is at present (1903) engaged. Fraternally Mr. Blanchard is a Mason and belongs to Fox River

Chapter, No. 14, and Unity Lodge, No. 48, and to St. Charles Lodge, No. 14, I. O. O. F. Mr. Blanchard was married, Feb. 26, 1896, to Miss Florence, daughter of Leonard and Caroline (Smith) Howard, the oldest settlers of St. Charles. They have one child, a daughter, Wilda B.

GUSTAVUS P. BLANCHARD (deceased), carpenter and well driller, St. Charles, Ill.; born in Cayuga County, N. Y., August 10, 1831; came to St. Charles with his father in 1837, and in 1849 made a trip to the California gold fields, where he remained ten years. Returning to St. Charles in 1859, he was variously employed until the time of his death, Feb. 15, 1900. He was married to Lucy Sunderland, of Highgate, Vt.

WILLIAM L. BLANCHARD (deceased), farmer, Aurora, Ill., was born in Newton, R. I., in 1785, was reared in his native State, and married Hannah Hull, of Tolland, Conn. They spent their early married lives in Eaton, N. Y., and in 1839 came west to Aurora, Ill., where they lived for some years and then located on a farm near that city. There Mr. Blanchard died in 1852. Mrs. Conant, of Batavia, is the only surviving member of the family.

ZARA A. BLANCHARD (deceased), engineer and farmer, St. Charles, Ill., was born in Jefferson County, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1829, and came to St. Charles with his parents March 2, 1838. They settled on a farm in Section 17, near the village, and Zara received his education in the St. Charles schools. Mr. Blanchard's first business experience was as engineer on a construction train of the Galena Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, from 1851 to 1854. The latter year he returned to St. Charles, where for ten years he worked as a carpenter, and then removed to a farm east of the city. He was married in 1851 to Elizabeth Jordan, who was born in England, and was a school teacher in St. Charles at the time of her marriage. Mr. Blanchard died in the spring of 1895, leaving two children: Charles L. Blanchard and a daughter, now Mrs. C. C. Morse, of Chicago.

JEDEDIAH H. BLISS, prominent farmer and financier of Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, was born in the town where he is now doing business, Nov. 5, 1850, a son of P. Y. Bliss, one of the pioneers of the county. He was brought up on the family homestead, and given his education in the public schools. As a young man he began farming, and has continued that occupation to the present time, being also extensively interested in stock-raising. His attention was early turned to banking enterprises, and he is a director of the old Second National Bank at Aurora. In 1888 Miss Grace Carter, of DeKalb, became his wife.

P. Y. BLISS (deceased), merchant and farmer, Aurora, Ill., was born in Strafford, Vt., in 1806, and died at Sugar Grove, Ill., in 1888. His father having died when the son was four years of age, he grew to years of maturity in the family of his uncle, Judge Harris, of Strafford, where he obtained his education in the old-time "select schools," and in his early manhood taught school for a time. Later he went to Boston, Mass., where he was trained in merchandising, and afterwards returned to Strafford, where he was connected with Judge Harris in the mercantile business for several years. Some time in the '30s he came west, bringing with him a stock of goods and intending to locate in St. Louis, Mo., but a dishonest clerk having run away with a part of his goods caused him to change his plans, and he then came to Kane County and opened a store at Sugar Grove. For years thereafter he was well known throughout that portion of the county as the pioneer merchant. Later he purchased a farm near by, and thereafter, until his death, was a successful farmer. His leisure hours were devoted largely to literary work, and he became a frequent contributor to newspapers and periodicals. He was notable among the pioneers for his advocacy of tree planting and the protection of wild birds, and he built up a beautiful country home. In 1846 he married Miss Helen Mather (a descendant of Cotton Mather), born at Lodi, Erie County, N. Y., and came west with her parents, who located in Kane County at a very early date. Since her husband's death Mrs. Bliss has resided at Aurora, and her son, J. Harris Bliss, now occupies the old homestead at Sugar Grove.

CHESTER W. BOLCUM, farmer and stock-raiser, Wasco, Ill., was born in the town of Fowler, Jefferson County, N. Y., Jan. 17, 1852, son of George F. and Bessie (Jeffers) Bolcum. His father, who was born Aug. 16, 1819, is still living. Chester W. Bolcum acquired his education in Oneida County, N. Y., and has earned his own way since the age of seven years, working for his board, clothes and schooling until he was thirteen years old, when he started lumber-jobbing, and very soon had from ten to thirty men under his charge. When he reached the age of twenty-one he came to Plano, Ill., and, entering the employ of Lewis Steward, soon became foreman and general manager of his extensive mills and factories. This position he held for about eight years, when he rented a farm about half a mile from the present site of Wasco and engaged in extensive dairying operations, at the same time operating several rented places. In 1887 he bought a farm one mile north of Wasco, and the adjoining farm in 1901, all comprising 232 acres. He has sold his dairy interests, and now devotes his attention to dealing in live stock. Several times a year he makes extensive trips into Iowa and Wisconsin, where he purchases cattle. Mr. Bolcum was married, Feb. 19, 1879, to Miss Cassie Buckley, daughter of Joseph and Jane (Hartman) Buckley, and they have had eight daughters and two sons—one daughter dying in infancy. Mr. Bolcum is a Republican, and has served as a member of the School Board for about eighteen years, and has been Commissioner of Highways for many years. For five years he has been commander of the local lodge Knights of Maccabees, and helped organize the Great Camp at Chicago. In the conventions of the order at Peoria and Springfield he was a prominent figure. He is a member of Unity Lodge, No. 48, A. F. & A. M., at St. Charles, one of the oldest lodges in Illinois.

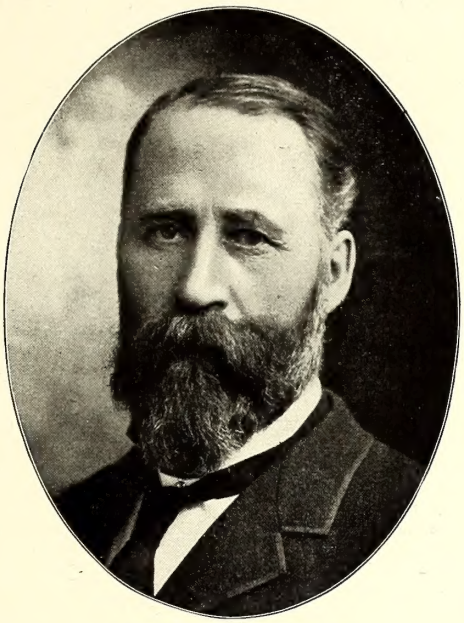
CHARLES BOLZ, merchant, Dundee, Ill., was born in Dundee Township, Kane County, Oct. 19, 1867, son of Michael and Christina (Sorn) Bolz, grew to manhood on his father's farm, and received his education in the local schools. He was engaged in farming until the spring of 1902, when, in company with his younger brother, August, he bought out the firm of E. M. Garrison & Co., and engaged in the sale of agricultural implements in Dundee. This business they have since continued on an extensive scale under the firm name of Bolz Brothers, and have a trade which extends over a good part of three counties. He served as a member of the Dundee Township School Board for twelve years. He is a member of the Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, and for six years was a correspondent of the Agricultural Department at Washington, making out regular reports as to the condition of crops in Kane County.



GAIL BORDEN (deceased) was born at Norwich, N. Y., in 1801, and reared in Ohio and Indiana, received a good education, and in his early manhood taught school in Mississippi, where he was also a United States Deputy Surveyor; in 1829 went to Texas, where he engaged in farming and stock-raising; was appointed Superintendent of Official Surveys by General Austin, and compiled the first topographical map of the Texas colonies. He had charge of the land office at San Felipe, and published the only newspaper issued in Texas during the Revolution; was Collector of the Port of Galveston in 1837, and was afterward agent of the Galveston City Company for twelve years. Returning to the North, he located in Elgin, Ill., where he became famous as the pioneer manufacturer of condensed milk and other kinds of concentrated foods. He died Jan. 11, 1874. The Public Library of Elgin is named in his honor.

J. M. BORDEN, merchant, Dundee, Ill.; born at Cazenovia, N. Y., Nov. 8, 1838; came with his parents to Dundee in 1854; engaged in the coal and lumber trade in Dundee, and at the present time is a member of the firm of Borden, Westerman & Co.; is also interested in the wholesale cigar trade in Chicago, to which he devotes most of his attention.

FRANK S. BOSWORTH, dealer in lumber and coal, Elgin, Ill.; born at Boston, Erie County, N. Y., Dec. 17, 1832; came west with his grandparents in 1839; began his business career in 1843 as a clerk in his uncle's store at Dundee, with whom he became a business partner in 1852, which was continued until 1866; came to Elgin in 1871 and has since been connected with business interests in that city.

ALFRED BOSWORTH, banker, Elgin, Ill., born April 1, 1846, at Dundee, Ill., son of I. C. and Mary (Root) Bosworth, received his education in the Dundee schools and from the old University of Chicago, from which he was graduated in 1866 and is now one of its Trustees. The following year he was made a partner with his father and George M. Peck in a large mercantile enterprise at Elgin, with which he remained connected until 1875, when he engaged in banking as a member of the firm of Bosworth, Carpenter & Co. The year following he bought a controlling interest in the First National Bank, became its cashier, and took active management of its affairs, a position he has since retained. For one term he has been Treasurer of the city of Elgin, and is highly regarded by the business men and the public generally. He was married in 1873 to Miss Eleanora M. Wheeler, of Bradsborough, Vt.

INCREASE C. BOSWORTH (deceased), merchant and banker, Elgin, Ill., born April 2, 1812, in Saratoga County, N. Y., came west to Chicago in 1838, but, remaining there only a short time, removed to Dundee, where he started a general store. There he was in business until 1867, when he removed to Elgin and continued in the same line until 1875, when he turned his attention to banking interests. The following year he bought an interest in the First National Bank of Elgin, became its President, and held that position during the remainder of his life. His investments were extensive in and around Elgin, and he was largely interested in a number of important enterprises. As a public-spirited citizen he was always ready to serve in any useful capacity. For years he was a member of the Board of Trustees of the Northern Hospital for the Insane; was on the Board of Trustees of the University of Chicago; served as an Alderman and Supervisor in Elgin, and, prior to 1875, had been Vice-President of the Home National Bank. Mr. Bosworth was married in 1844 to Miss Mary Ann Root, of Elgin, and died Jan. 12, 1888, in his own home.

HENRY I. BOSWORTH, banker, Elgin, born in Dundee, Ill., Sept. 10, 1854, son of I. C. Bosworth, was educated in the Elgin public schools and academy, and graduated from the old University of Chicago in 1876. For about a year he was a clerk in the establishment of Bosworth Brothers & Peck, and in 1879 accepted a clerkship in the First National Bank, his father being President. For several years he has been Second Vice-President of the bank, with which he has been connected continuously since his first entrance into its service. He has been Treasurer of the City of Elgin several terms, a member of the Board of Supervisors, and is now (1903) a member of the Library Board.

WILLIAM E. BOSWORTH (deceased), former merchant, Elgin, was born in Dundee, Ill., Oct. 5, 1848, was a student of the Dundee local schools, and a graduate of the old University of Chicago in 1869. The same year he became a member of the firm of Bosworth Brothers & Peck, a noted dry-goods house, which, by the retirement of Alfred Bosworth in 1874, became Bosworth & Peck. In 1881 Mr. Peck retired, leaving the entire business in the hands of Mr. Bosworth, who built up a large and growing trade in dry-goods and carpets. In June, 1902, he sold out to Cohen Brothers and retired from business. Mr. Bosworth was largely interested in farm lands, and owned a number of fine farms in association with his brothers. In the '80s he was a member of the Board of Trustees of the University of Chicago, and at the time of his death was a member of the Board of Trustees of Elgin Academy and of the School

Charles, Ill., in the fall of that year. For a time he was engaged in teaching and in the publication of the St. Charles "Chronicle." He studied law and was admitted to the Bar in 1857. Beginning his practice the following year, Mr. Botsford soon attained a good standing in his profession, and was elected County Judge in 1861, filling this position four years. In 1870 he located in Elgin. In politics a Democrat, he was nominated for Supreme Judge on the State ticket in 1897. He is attorney for the Chicago & Northwestern Railway and the First National Bank, and very actively assisted in promoting the construction of the Chicago & Pacific Railway Company, being both a stockholder in the company and attorney for the company before the courts.

FULLER A. BOWDISH, retired farmer, Aurora, Ill., born at Milford, Otsego County, N. Y., Sept. 7, 1833; came west in 1849 with his parents, who settled in Blackberry Township, Kane County; began his business career as a farmer and followed that occupation in Blackberry Township until the spring of 1900, when he retired and removed to Aurora, where he has since resided. He was married to Miss Malinda Acres, and their children are Gordon A. and Elbridge S.

GEORGE S. BOWEN, retired merchant, manufacturer and capitalist, Elgin, Ill., born at Ingham's Mills, Herkimer County, N. Y., Nov. 30, 1829; was educated in the public schools, and obtained his first business experience in the office of the Wool-Growers' Manufacturing Company, of Little Falls, N. Y., where he was employed six years. He came to Chicago in 1849, and soon after entered into the employment of N. H. Wood, a leading dry-goods merchant of that period. In 1853, in company with his brother, Chauncey T. Bowen, and others, he purchased the establishment of his employer, Mr. Wood, and founded the firm of Mills, Bowen, Dillenbeck & Co., which three years later was changed to Bowen Brothers, the latter for many years conducting one of the leading wholesale dry-goods and notion houses of Chicago. Col. J. H. Bowen, another brother, became a member of the concern in 1857, the firm some time before the fire of 1871 becoming Bowen, Whitman & Winslow, and still later Bowen, Hunt & Winslow. After the fire, in which Mr. Bowen was a heavy loser, having retired from trade, he removed to Elgin, which has since been his home, in the meantime maintaining his connection with business and financial affairs in Chicago. While a resident of Chicago Mr. Bowen was active in the advancement of many enterprises calculated to promote the commercial, manufacturing and educational interests of the city. Among these may be mentioned the Woolen Manufacturers' Association of the Northwest, of which he was the President for many years, and under whose auspices a number of expositions of woolen goods were held in Chicago, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis and other cities. He also inaugurated the movement which resulted in the organization of the Chicago Manufacturers' Association and the Chicago Exposition, which was carried on successfully for a number of years, and in support of which, by his personal efforts, he succeeded in raising $150,000 for the erection of the Exposition buildings. In 1861 he was chosen President of the Chicago Library Board, and after the fire of 1871 organized the movement which resulted in the founding of the present Public Library. In 1871 he took part in the organization of the Chicago & Pacific Railway Company, serving as Treasurer, Vice-President and President, and after his removal to Elgin was an active factor in promoting the construction of this line, now a part of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul system. His connection with this enterprise continued during the life of the original corporation, and he negotiated the sale which resulted in the transfer of the property to the St. Paul line. Mr. Bowen has since represented various financial interests and railroad enterprises, and has spent much time in Europe in negotiation with capitalists and investors. He has been largely interested in the introduction of the tower system of electric lighting, establishing plants in New Orleans, Detroit, Evansville, Ind.; Macon and Savannah, Ga.; La Crosse, Wis.; Fargo, N. D.; the City of Mexico, Elgin and other cities. In 1879 he conducted a manufacturers' excursion to Mexico, the results of which have been apparent in the increase of trade with that country, and has also been active in promoting more intimate commercial relations with South American States. He is now the President of the North Pacific Trading Company of Chicago and Tokio, importers and exporters of Japanese and American goods. Mr. Bowen was one of the founders of the Elgin Board of Trade, and served as Mayor of that city two years (1872-3), his administration being remembered as one of the most business-like and progressive in the history of the city. In 1896 he was an unsuccessful candidate for Congress in opposition to present United States Senator A. J. Hopkins. His long and active business career and his interest in public affairs have brought him in contact with many leading men in public life, financiers and men of affairs, and few men now living in the West have had more interesting and varied experiences. Mr. Bowen was married in 1854 to Miss Julia E. Byington, at Salisbury Center, N. Y.

CAPT. FRANCIS H. BOWMAN, retired merchant and banker, St. Charles, Kane County, Ill., born in Binghamton, N. Y., May 9, 1816, son of Ebenezer and Sylvia (Barnaby) Bowman, of English ancestry; was educated in the schools of his native place, and in 1834 went to Ithaca, N. Y., where he entered upon a course of training for mercantile pursuits in the general store of his uncle, Hiram Heath; later spent some nine years as clerk in a hardware store at Auburn, N. Y., when in 1845 he came to St. Charles, Kane County, Ill., where he had previously been interested in business with a former fellow-employe, and soon after engaged in the hardware trade there, becoming head of the firm of Bowman & Lloyd, in the meantime also operating an iron foundry. Having disposed of a part of his business interests in 1861, he took part in the organization of the Fifty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he was commissioned Captain of Company G, receiving his "baptism of fire" at the battle of Shiloh in April, 1862. Having resigned his commission during this year, he returned to St. Charles and there resumed his connection with the hardware and manufacturing business, and later helped to organize the Kane County National Bank, of which he was chosen a Director, serving in this capacity during its entire existence. The Kane County National Bank having been dissolved, he became a stockholder in its successor, the banking house of J. C. Baird & Co., after the death of Mr. Baird becoming manager of the latter concern, which finally took the name of Bowman, Warne & Steward, and of which he continued to be the head until 1898, when he retired from business. Captain Bowman has been a member of the Republican party since its organization, and has represented his party in many State and County Conventions. He was a member of the first Kane County Board of Supervisors for St. Charles Township, has served as Village Trustee, and is at present (1903) Township Treasurer. For sixty-three years he has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has frequently served as delegate to the Grand Lodge and Grand Encampments. In addition to his banking and mercantile interests, he has been a stockholder in the St. Charles Milk Condensing Company, the Crown Electric Manufacturing Company, and has done much to promote manufacturing interests in Kane County. Captain Bowman was married in 1849 to Miss Helen M. Smith, who was born and reared in Elmira, N. Y. She died in 1891.

FREEMAN H. BOWRON, retired farmer and veteran of the Civil War, was born in Champlain, Clinton County, N. Y., May 31, 1839, where he was reared on a farm and was educated in the public schools and a local academy. On March 5, 1862, he enlisted in Company H, Eleventh New York Volunteer Cavalry, being mustered into the service on Staten Island shortly afterward. His first year of military life was spent with his command in and around Washington; the second year the regiment was sent to New Orleans, and spent the rest of the period of the Civil War in the Department of the Gulf. Mr. Bowron was mustered out March 5, 1865, at Memphis, Tenn., having served twenty-six months as Orderly Sergeant and later as Second Lieutenant. After revisiting New York, he came to Aurora, Ill., where for twelve years he was in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. In 1877 he purchased a farm on the edge of Geneva, Kane County, Ill., where he was entirely engaged in farming and dairying until 1896, when he removed to Aurora, where he has maintained his home to the present time. Mr. Bowron is a Knight Templar Mason and a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. In 1870 he married Miss Clara A. Earle, daughter of Charles C. Earle, whose name appears elsewhere in this work.

EDWARD A. BRADLEY.

EDWARD A. BRADLEY, banker, Aurora, Ill., was born in Lee, Mass., Sept. 5, 1830, son of Eli Bradley, who came of an old New England family. Reared as a farmer and given an academic education, he began his business career as a clerk in a dry-goods store, but soon after became connected with a bank in his native town, where he received that training that fitted him for his subsequent career. In 1857 he came to Aurora, Ill., to take a position in the private banking house of Albert Jencks & Co. This institution was succeeded by Brady, Hawkins & Allen, of which Mr. Bradley became Cashier and Manager. Later Mr. Bradley, in company with these gentlemen, organized the First National Bank of Aurora, of which he became Cashier—a position which he held until the death of Mr. Hawkins, when he succeeded to the Presidency, continuing in the latter position up to the time of his death, Oct. 4, 1899. Mr. Bradley's career as a banker in Aurora covered a period of more than forty years, in which he was noted alike for his financial ability and his personal integrity. The only surviving member of his family in Aurora is Mrs. Bradley, born Elizabeth Abell, in Norwich, Conn. Her marriage with Mr. Bradley occurred in 1876, she being at that time the widow of Edward D. Griffin, to whom she was married in Ohio, removing with him to Illinois in 1858. Mr. Griffin was one of the pioneer insurance men of Illinois, and died in 1875. Mrs. Bradley has resided in Aurora continuously since 1858.

MYRON BRACKETT, retired farmer, Sugar Grove, Ill., born at Williston, Vt., Oct. 17, 1833; came west in 1844, locating with his parents in Aurora; removed to Big Rock Township the following year and settled on a farm, where the father and mother spent the remainder of their days. Myron Brackett followed agricultural pursuits until 1901, when he removed to Sugar Grove, which has since been his home. He married, in 1858, Miss Susan Hadley, and they reared a family of twelve children, all of whom were living in 1903.

LORENZO D. BRADY (deceased), pioneer banker, Aurora, Ill., born at New Castle, Westchester County, N. Y., Jan. 19, 1810, son of John B. and Lydia (Kipp) Brady; was reared and educated principally in New York City, where he became proprietor of a grocery store when nineteen years of age, and later engaged in the wholesale paint and oil trade in that city; came to Kane County, Ill., in 1837, and established his home on a 700-acre tract of land in Big Rock Township. From 1840 to 1842 he was associated with George E. Peck in the conduct of a general store at Little Rock, Ill., and after Mr. Peck's death, in the latter year, he continued to conduct the business until 1848, when he removed to Aurora, where he engaged in merchandising as a partner of E. R. Allen, but after a few years conducted this enterprise alone until 1871. Mr. Brady was a Representative in the State Legislature from Kendall County, and secured the charter for the Aurora Branch Railroad (parent of the present Burlington System), which was built from Aurora to Turner Junction. He was the organizer of the Aurora Fire Insurance Company and served as President of the same during its existence; was also one of the founders of the pioneer banking house of Hawkins, Brady & Allen, and of its successor, the Old First National Bank, and was a bank director for many years. He was President of the association that erected the Soldiers' Memorial Building, and his interest in building up the Aurora public school system has been fittingly commemorated by the city in naming one of its principal schools ("The Brady School") in his honor. He was President of the Aurora Board of Trustees while the place was still a village, and later served as Alderman and Mayor. A member of the Republican party from its organization, he acted as Chairman of the first Republican Congressional Convention held in Illinois, which met at Aurora in 1854. In 1845 he was married to Miss Caroline Kennon, of Cincinnati, Ohio, who died in Aurora in 1883. Mr. Brady died Feb. 27, 1892. The surviving members of this pioneer family in Aurora are: Mrs. Sue (Brady) Fishburn, Mrs. Julia (Brady) Beaupre, Mrs. Lydia (Brady) Smith, Mrs. Marion (Brady) Haring and John L. Brady. The latter, the only surviving son, is a resident of San Francisco, Cal.

BENJAMIN BRANFORD, retired, Batavia, born in Yarmouth, England, July 5, 1849, son of Richard Branford, came with his parents to the United States in 1853. They settled at Batavia, and there the son was reared and educated. The father was a farmer, and Benjamin Branford became the owner of the farm on which his father settled, and was engaged in its cultivation until 1902, when he removed to a home in Batavia, and has since devoted his attention to the care of his real-estate interests. He has laid out an addition to the city of Batavia which presents promising features. He was the first man to start the dairy business in Batavia, and for twenty-eight years supplied its people with milk, in all that time missing only seven days. He belongs to the I. O. O. F. In 1896 he married Miss Mary, daughter of James McMasters, who was postmaster of Batavia for many years. She died in 1899.

WILLIAM C. BRIDGE, M. D., physician and surgeon, Elgin, Ill., born in Cook County, Ill., Jan. 18, 1856; was educated in public schools and in Elgin Academy; read medicine at Elgin and Dundee; graduated from the Chicago Homœopathic Medical College in 1886; for a year and a half was an interne in the Cook County Hospital, and subsequently took a course at the New York Post-Graduate College. In the fall of 1887 he began his private practice in Elgin, and has there followed his profession up to the present time (1903). For two years he was Lecturer on Surgical Pathology at the Chicago Homœopathic College. Dr. Bridge was married in January, 1888, to Miss Clara Barrows, daughter of Martin T. Barrows, of Dundee, Ill.

CHARLES R. BRIGGS, Assistant Postmaster, Batavia, Ill., was born in Batavia, Sept. 6, 1860, son of J. H. and Maria (Hopkins) Briggs, received his aducation in the home schools, and as a boy he learned the iron-molder's trade. In 1889 he was appointed Assistant Postmaster of Batavia, and served four years under that appointment. In 1897 he was again appointed to the same position, which he is now filling. He is a member of the Masonic Order and is Master of Batavia Lodge, No. 404.

LEONARD R. BRIGHAM, M. D. (deceased), born in Lake County, Ohio, was educated in Farmington Institute, Ohio, and began practice at Thompson, Ohio, in 1843. From 1847 to 1850 he practiced his profession at Painesville, Ohio, and in 1860 removed to Aurora, Ill., where he pursued his profession until his death, becoming widely known by his lectures on Anatomy, Physiology, Hygiene and kindred topics.

ALBERT M. BROWN (deceased), merchant, Aurora, born in Van Etten, Chemung County, N. Y., Sept. 22, 1837, son of Hiram and Polly (Meeker) Brown, both of New England lineage; received a public school education and a training for the mercantile trade in a general store at Freemansburg, N. Y.; in 1856 came west and established his home in Aurora, where he was connected with the hardware house of Titsworth & Son. Enlisting in the Union Army in April, 1861, he was mustered into Company C, Seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three months. Then, returning to Aurora, he was employed as clerk for a few months by his former employer, Mr. Titsworth. In 1862 he went into the creamery business, still later was again a clerk, but in 1874 engaged in farming, which he followed several years. In 1879 he became a partner in the shoe-store of J. H. Thompson, of Aurora, and in 1883 became sole owner of the establishment. He soon had a large boot and shoe trade, which he retained until his retirement. In a small way he had an interest in the grocery trade. For many years he was Secretary and Treasurer of the Edison Incandescent Electric Light Company of Aurora, and was associated with other enterprises of a semi-public character. He was a member of the Board of Aldermen and belonged to the G. A. R., the I. O. O. F. and other fraternal organizations. Mr. Brown died May 28, 1900. The surviving members of his family are his widow (Mrs. Brown) and children—Fay W., Anna G. and Ray A. Mrs. Brown was born at Naperville, Ill., daughter of Urbin and Octavia (Crampton) Stanley, who were among the earliest settlers of DuPage County.

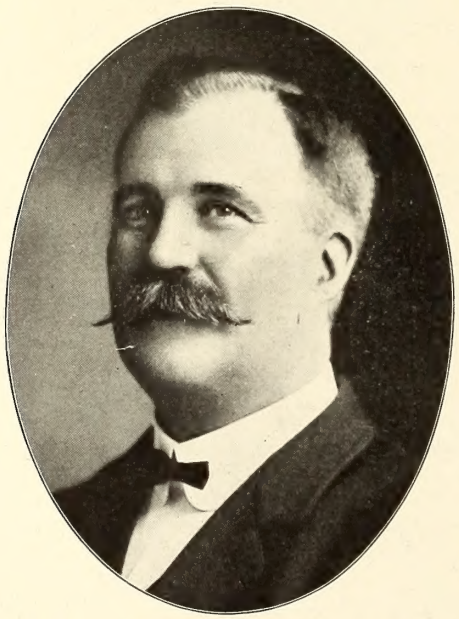
CORNELL H. BROWN, postmaster, Batavia, Ill., born in Batavia May 24, 1853, son of Rufus J. and Aurelia (McDaniels) Brown, pioneer settlers of Kane County; was educated in the local schools, and became a clerk in the Batavia postoffice when he was about fourteen years of age, a position which he held until about 1878. He was later in the Railway Mail Service, but retired in 1882 to accept a position with the Van Nortwick Paper Company, remaining with that concern until 1896. As trustee of the Van Nortwick estate he spent five years in settling its affairs. For a time he was Cashier of the Citizens' Bank of Batavia, and was one of the reorganizers of the bank prior to its consolidation with the First National Bank of Batavia. For two terms he served as Mayor of Batavia, beginning in 1897. In 1900 President McKinley appointed him Postmaster at Batavia, and he is still (1903) holding that position. Mr. Brown is a member of the I. O. O. F., the K. P., and the M. W. of A. In 1879 he married Miss Florence S. Starkey, of Batavia.

FREDERICK BROWN, Justice of the Peace, Aurora, Ill., born at Hudson, Ohio, Jan. 10, 1828; came to Illinois in 1855, locating in Aurora in 1873; practiced law for a time, and was elected Justice of the Peace in 1881, having held that office continuously since. Mr. Brown was married in 1855 to Jane M. Groat, who died in 1876. Two of their children are still living, viz., Mrs. Jennie W. Otis and Mrs. Hattie L. Lougee, both of Minneapolis, Minn.

JOHN BROWN, lawyer, Elgin, Ill., born in Genoa, DeKalb County, Ill., Jan. 1, 1849; educated in the public schools of Sycamore, Ill., and at Hillsdale College (Hillsdale, Mich.); graduated from the Union College of Law, Chicago, in 1877; practiced his profession in DeKalb County until 1893, when he became a member of the Elgin bar and has since practiced in that city. He was married in 1871 to Miss Juliet Strong, who died in 1898, leaving the following named children: Sarah Juliet, John Lincoln and Agnes.



JULIUS G. BROWN, manufacturer, Batavia, Ill., born at Wysox, Bradford County, Pa., April 26, 1827; grew to manhood in the Keystone State, where he also received his educational training; came to Illinois in 1857, locating first at DeKalb, where he was engaged in the lumber trade and interested in the manufacture of sash, blinds and doors; removed to Batavia in 1860, and continued the same line of manufacturing until 1862, when he suspended business operations and enlisted in the Union Army. He enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served until 1865, being mustered out at Vicksburg, Miss. Returning from the war, he was interested in the manufacture of sash, blinds and doors at North Aurora until 1901, when he retired from active business. He married, in 1850, Mary I. Griswold, who died in 1900, and their only living child is Miss Amelia F. Brown, who has long been connected with the public schools of Batavia.

CHARLES O. BRYANT (deceased), undertaker, Elburn, Ill., born in Wayne County, N. Y., Dec. 7, 1812, and coming to Illinois at an early day; for five years conducted business as a carpenter and builder; also bought a farm near Elburn, on which he was engaged for ten years or more. He then moved to Elburn, where he began wagon-making, and opened the pioneer undertaking establishment in that region, which he conducted until his death, Oct. 24, 1874. He was married Aug. 23, 1845, to Miss Esther E., daughter of Harry C. and Hannah (Richards) Hotchkiss. He was an active member of the Methodist Church and helped build the first church in Elgin.

ANSON J. BUCK, Carpentersville, Postmaster and noted veteran of the Civil War, was born in Hannibal, N. Y., Feb. 17, 1832, and his parents moved to Bloomingdale, DuPage County, Ill., in 1838. From there they moved to St. Charles, and later to Burlington Township, coming in 1857 to Dundee. Mr. Buck attended the common schools of the county, and as a boy worked on a farm. In 1862 he enlisted in the Union Army, and after serving nearly three years in the Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, was mustered out at Washington, D. C., May 1, 1865. He returned to Carpentersville after the war, and has made that place his home to the present time. For some years he was a traveling salesman for the Atlantic Flour Mills, and for four years was Deputy Sheriff of Kane County under Sheriff Kelcey, serving a like period in the same position under Sheriff Robert Burke. For four years he was Postmaster at Carpentersville by appointment from President Harrison, and in 1897 was appointed to the same position by President McKinley, and is meeting its responsibilities and duties to the eminent satisfaction of the office patrons.

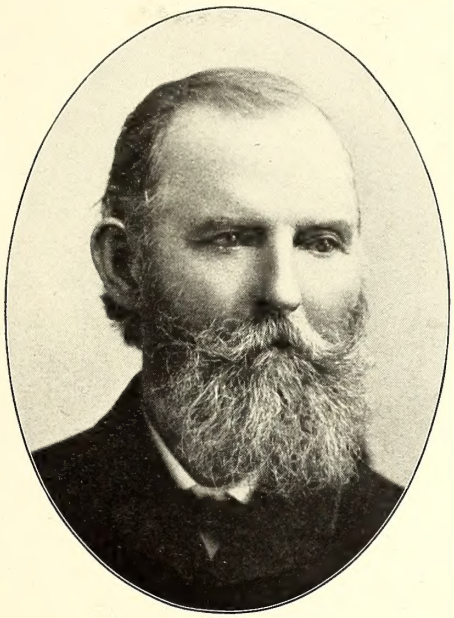
A. C. BUCKLIN (deceased), farmer, Dundee, Ill., born in North Adams, Mass., Oct. 20, 1823; came to Illinois when fourteen years of age with his mother and sisters and located at Dundee. His mother purchased 200 acres of government land east of Dundee, which came into his possession at the time of her death. Mr. Bucklin was married to Miss Julia S. Jencks, of Dundee, Ill., and two of their children are now living, viz.: Henry I. and Mrs. Francis Burks. Mr. Bucklin died July 9, 1900.

ROBERT BURKE.



ROBERT BURKE, Aurora, Sheriff of Kane County, was born Oct. 28, 1859, in Paterson, N. J., son of William and Ellen (Donnelly) Burke, natives of County Wexford, Ireland, who came to this country in 1848. In 1869 the family removed to Illinois, and Robert finished his education in the city schools of Aurora, beginning his apprenticeship at the machinist's trade when only thirteen years of age. In 1888 he was one of the charter members of the "Creamer Lodge of Machinists.' In 1889 and 1890 he was a member of the Aurora Board of Aldermen, and in 1891 was elected Assistant Supervisor in the County Board, filling that office for four years. In 1894 he was chosen Sheriff of Kane County, and during his four years' term inaugurated various reforms of a character that contributed materially to the resources of the county. In 1900 he was appointed State Food Inspector, and filled that office until the end of 1902, when he again assumed the Sheriff's position, to which he had been elected by a flattering vote. He is a Republican, and is one of the influential younger members of the party in Kane County.

JAMES E. BUMSTEAD, physician, Dundee, Ill., born in Dundee Township, Kane County, in 1848; educated in the public schools of Dundee, Elgin Academy and University of Illinois, graduating from the latter institution in 1877, and from the medical department, Northwestern University (Chicago), in the class of 1880; has conducted a successful medical practice at Dundee since the latter year. The Doctor is a member of the American Medical Association and the Fox River Valley Association. He was married in 1881 to Miss Justina A. Pingree, of Evanston, Ill.

D. E. BURLINGAME, physician and surgeon, Elgin, Ill., born at Adams, Mass., June 8, 1844; educated in his native city, and came west in 1865, locating first in LaSalle County, Ill., but removed to Elgin a few months later; graduated from the Chicago Medical College in 1869, and immediately afterwards began practicing his profession in Elgin, which he has continued to the present time (1903). Doctor Burlingame was married in 1870 to Miss Sarah A. Winchester, of Elgin.

ATWELL BURR (deceased), pioneer farmer, Campton Township, Kane County, Ill., born Oct. 6, 1796; came to Illinois in May, 1836, locating on a farm in Campton Township, where he died April 17, 1852. Mrs. Burr died at La Fox, Ill., Dec. 13, 1881.

PETER BURRITT (deceased), formerly a resident of Hanover, Cook County, Ill., was born at Amsterdam, N. Y., Jan. 17, 1816, the oldest son of Benjamin and Kate (Noonan) Burritt, and a relative of the celebrated linguist, Elihu Burritt. Before attaining his majority he had learned the blacksmith's trade, but in early life, having caught the Western fever, in 1836 came to Illinois by way of the Erie Canal to Buffalo, and by the lakes to Chicago, taking passage on the "Constitution," one of the first vessels to make the hazardous voyage to the Western metropolis. From Chicago he journeyed westward on foot to the beautiful Fox River valley. The following year (1837) his father, Benjamin Burritt, came to Illinois with his family, making the trip overland with team and wagon. After their arrival here Mr. Burritt and his father bought considerable land from the Government, located about two miles east of Elgin on the banks of Poplar Creek, and here the son built a shop and worked at his trade as a blacksmith while improving his farm. The Burritt place was widely known among the pioneers. About 1848 the father with his family moved to Elgin, where he long filled the office of Justice of the Peace and other public positions. Peter Burritt continued to reside upon his farm during his life, but early began to acquire property in the city. He was a business man rather than a farmer, and possessed a keen sense of values which seldom deceived him. He was a man of industry, economy and conservative judgment; his integrity was unquestioned, and his word was as good as a bond. He was a stockholder of the Elgin National Watch Company, as well as interested in other industrial enterprises, and was for many years a director of the Elgin Packing Company and the Home National Bank. In 1847 he married Miss Henrietta Hackerodt, daughter of a pioneer hotel-keeper whose hostelry stood by the State road, near Salt Creek, southeast of Meacham's Grove. For many years before her death, in 1884, Mrs. Burritt was a helpless invalid. During the fifteen years of her illness Mr. Burritt was absent from home but one night, and the nurse who attended her for three years declared him the kindest husband in Illinois. It can be truly said that those who knew him best loved him most. He married for his second wife Miss Rebecca McBride, daughter of Thomas McBride, of Elgin. Mr. Burritt was an extensive traveler, and with his wife acquired an unusual fund of information regarding many parts of the world. He died at San Francisco, Cal., June 2, 1892.

GEORGE H. BURNETT, merchant and City Clerk, Batavia, Ill., born in Batavia March 7, 1870, son of John and Frances (Ballard) Burnett, her father being a native of England, and the mother of Batavia. Educated in the Batavia schools and trained to mercantile life, George H. has taken an active part in city and county affairs, and up to the present time (1903) has served ten years as City Clerk of Batavia. He is owner and manager of the undertaking establishment of George H. Burnett & Co. In Masonry he is an advanced member, belonging to Aurora Temple, Fox

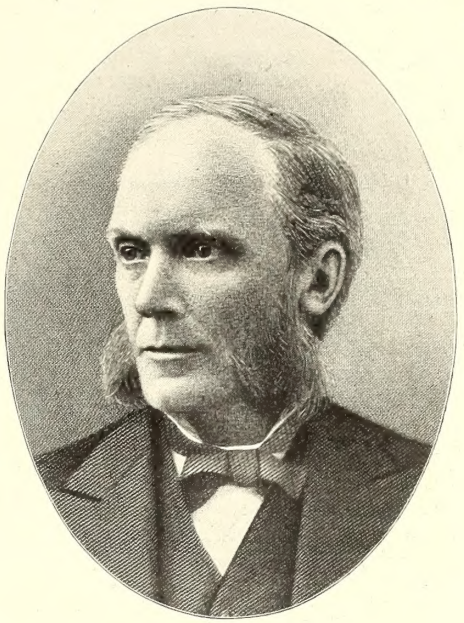
JOHN BURROWS, farmer, Batavia, Ill., born in Lincolnshire, England, in 1849, was brought to the United States by his parents in 1853, and grew to manhood in Kane County, Ill., where he was given a public school education. He began farming while yet a boy, and continued that occupation until 1902, when he removed to Batavia, where his home is still located. In 1877 he married Miss Jane E., daughter of Asa B. and Amanda (McKee) Knapp, of Maple Park.

LESTER M. BURROUGHS.

LESTER M. BURROUGHS, physician, Batavia, Ill., born in Portage County, Ohio, Sept. 25, 1820, son of Daniel Burroughs, Jr., and grandson of Daniel Burroughs, Sr., the latter a soldier in the War of the Revolution. Lester M. obtained his early education in the Ohio schools, finishing in the Kane County schools, whither his parents removed in 1836. He read medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Waldo at Kenosha, Wis., and later with Dr. Gardner at Blackberry, Kane County, in 1846. A prominent position among the pioneer physicians of Kane County was assured him, and his practice covered a wide territory. In 1861 he established his home in Batavia, where he continuously practiced medicine until 1903, his practice being very large, not only in the city but throughout the adjacent country. His active professional life covered a period of fifty-four years, and he is the dean of the medical profession in the Fox River valley. In 1849 he married Miss Elmira, daughter of David and Judith Wheeler, pioneers of Kane County.



AMOS BURTON, retired merchant, Batavia, Ill., born in Manchester, England, Aug. 7, 1849, and came with his parents to Batavia, Ill., when about three years of age; engaged in merchandising in Batavia in early manhood, being thus engaged until about 1888, having since devoted his attention principally to farming, making a specialty of dairy farming and stock-raising; is also interested in manufacturing enterprises at Batavia. Mr. Burton has been twice married, first to Miss Mary E. Van Nortwick, and after her death to Miss Maud S. Sloan, of Nebraska City, Neb. His children are John Van Nortwick, Amy L. and Don S.

CHARLES P. BURTON, journalist and State Printer Expert, Aurora, Ill., born in Anderson, Ind., March 7, 1862; came to Aurora in 1874; began his business career in the office of the "Aurora Herald," a weekly paper published by his father, and was interested in newspaper work in Aurora until February, 1903; was appointed by Governor Yates, in June, 1901, State Printer Expert; was married in 1887 to Miss Cora Vreeland, of Michigan.

JOHN BURTON, manufacturer and inventor, Chicago, Ill., born in Kendall County, Ill., in 1838; reared and educated in Chicago. In 1880, with other gentlemen, he founded the "Geneva Grape Sugar Company," which later became the "Charles Pope Glucose Company." This corporation developed one of the largest industries of its kind in the West, operating plants both at Geneva and Venice, Ill. Later Mr. Burton became interested in other lines of manufacture, making his home in Chicago.

J. W. BUTLER, wholesale merchant, 216 Monroe street, Chicago, was born in Essex, Vt., May 7, 1828, son of Zebediah and Esther (Morris) Butler, was reared in his native State and given a good education in its schools. In the fall of 1848 he came to St. Charles, Ill., whither his father had preceded him, and entered the store of Butler & Hunt, the former being his brother. About a year later, in company with George Ferson, he bought out the business and became the head of the mercantile firm of Butler & Ferson, which continued until

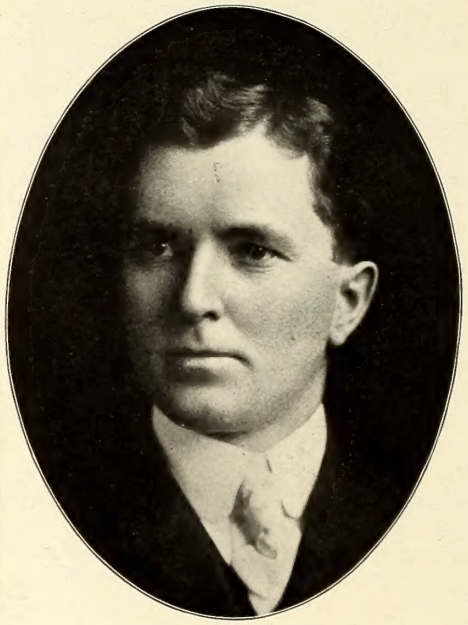
This firm was incorporated as the J. W. Butler Paper Company in 1875, with Mr. Butler as Vice-President and Treasurer. In 1877 he was made President of the company, a position which he still retains. Mr. Butler was married in May, 1858, to Miss Julia Ann Osgood, of St. Charles.

CHAMBERS D. CALHOUN, physician and surgeon, Elburn, Ill., born in Armstrong County, Penn., Aug. 17, 1858; educated in the public schools and Glade Run Academy, and obtained his medical training in Jefferson Medical College (Philadelphia), later taking a post-graduate course in the Chicago Post-Graduate School; began practice in Elburn in 1889, and has since been one of the leading physicians and surgeons of that locality. He was married June 2, 1886, to Sophia Martin, daughter of John and Sarah (Evelyth) Martin.



CHARLES A. CALKINS, farmer and stock-raiser, was born in Sugar Grove, Kane County, Ill., Nov. 2, 1853; brought up on his father's farm and educated in the public schools; began farming near his early home and ten years later purchased the old homestead, where he has lived ever since. He was married in 1874 to Miss Clara Keck, daughter of William Keck, of Sugar Grove.

ELDAD L. CALKINS (deceased), pioneer, was born at Corning, N. Y., in 1805, and grew to manhood in the Empire State. He was a wagon-maker by trade, and followed that occupation and farming in New York State until about 1849, when he came to Illinois. In the latter year he established his home in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, and was one of the successful and prominent farmers of that part of the county thereafter until his death, which occurred in 1879. His wife, whose maiden name was Abisha Allen, was a native of Massachusetts, and died in 1889. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Calkins now living are Charles A. and Mrs. Mercelia (Calkins) Rutt, both of Sugar Grove.

CYRUS CALKINS (deceased), pioneer, was born in Corning, N. Y., in 1815, and was trained to the milling business and farming. He came to Illinois in 1853 and settled in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, and was engaged in farming there until his death, which occurred in 1903. Mr. Calkins was the oldest of the early settlers of Sugar Grove Township at the time of his death. For many years he was Postmaster at Jericho, Ill. He never married.

JOHN P. CALLAN, lawyer, Aurora, Ill., born at Swanton Center, Franklin County, Vt., Sept. 4, 1844, was reared in his native State, attending the public school and the high schools at Franklin and St. Albans; came west in 1868 and located in Aurora, Ill.; since then has been in the real-estate and insurance business chiefly to the present time (1903); read law with the Hon. Charles Wheaton, of Aurora, and attended the Illinois College of Law three years, graduating in 1902; had already been admitted to the bar of the Illinois Supreme Court, and has since practiced in Aurora. He was married in 1897 to Miss Minnie E. McGregor, of Toronto, Canada.

JAMES CANNON.

JAMES CANNON, railway station agent, Geneva, Ill., was born in Fulton, Ill., Aug. 15, 1865, and was reared to manhood in Geneva, where he received his education in the local schools, entering into the employment of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway in 1880. In 1888 he was appointed station agent at Geneva. In 1902 he was one of the organizers of the Cannon Box Company, of Geneva, of which he became President, and is still acting in that capacity (1903), meanwhile retaining his connection with the Northwestern Railway. He is also a stockholder and Secretary of the Cannon Printing Company, of Milwaukee, which employs about seventy-five persons. The Cannon Box Company is one of the leading industries of Geneva, employing over one hundred hands.

ALFRED L. CARLISLE, live-stock dealer, Geneva, Kane County, Ill., was born at Hampshire, Kane County, Ill., May 7, 1865, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nathan S. Carlisle, and was educated in the public schools of his native county. From 1880 to 1886 Mr. Carlisle was Deputy in the office of the Sheriff of Kane County, and during the latter year established himself in the grocery business at Geneva, in which he continued nine years. In 1895 he became interested in the live-stock trade, with which he has since been prominently identified. Mr. Carlisle was married in 1886 to Miss Isabella M. Goiver, of Aurora.

NATHAN S. CARLISLE, ex-Sheriff of Kane County, St. Charles, Ill., was born in Berkshire County, Mass., Oct. 22, 1841. His father, Dennison Carlisle, removed to Illinois with his family in 1855, and settled in Hampshire Kane County, where young Nathan S. finished his schooling. In early life he was engaged in farming and manufacturing, but was later in the live-stock trade. He was a member of the Kane County Board of Supervisors in 1875, and served on the Board until 1880. During the latter year he was elected Sheriff of the county, a position he held for six years. Mr. Carlisle was married Feb. 22, 1861, to Miss Martha M. Keyes, of Hampshire, Kane County.

FRANCIS J. CARR, farmer, Batavia, Ill., born in Batavia Township, Kane County, in 1849, son of Capt. Leonard J. and Laura (Snow) Carr; educated in the public schools and Batavia Seminary; engaged in farming and has been identified with this interest all his life; established his home in Batavia in 1890, but has retained his farm interests; is also interested in manufacturing and banking in Batavia; married, in 1877, Miss Kate A. Doty.

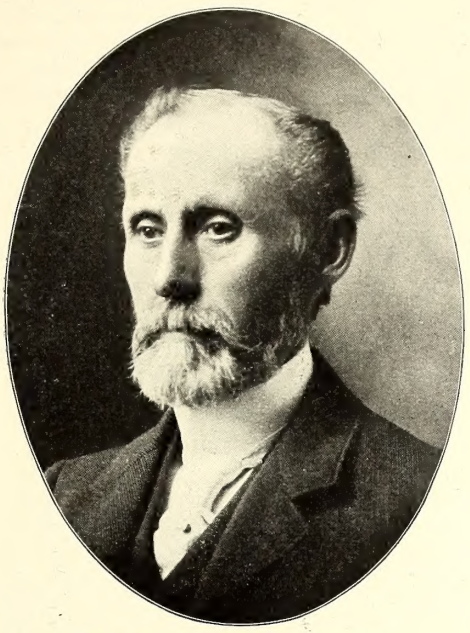
JAY W. CARR, manufacturer, Aurora, born in Hanover Township, Cook County, Ill., Dec. 9, 1857, son of John C. and Julia (Smith) Carr, was educated in the home schools and reared to farming life. The father was one of the pioneer butter-makers of the region, and was the first to base the price of milk on the amount of butter-fat it contained. He was also among the first to use the separator system in the extracting of the cream from the milk. The son became thoroughly familiar with the butter-making business, and joined the father in the home factory at Bartlett Station, Cook County, in 1885, being a member of the firm of J. C. Carr & Sons from 1885 to 1891, when the business was incorporated as the Palace Car Creamery Company, which opened a number of creameries in Cook, DeKalb and LaSalle Counties. Jay W. Carr succeeded his father as President of the Company in 1899. In 1893 the company sold out its plant in Bartlett and removed its office to Aurora, and has since operated factories in Kendall, DeKalb and LaSalle Counties, and also two factories in Iowa. Mr. Carr has made his home in Aurora since 1898. He married Miss Allie Lobdell, daughter of Seth Lobdell, of Bartlett, Ill.

GEORGE S. CARR, brother of Jay W., was also born in Hanover Township, Cook County, his birthday being Sept. 9, 1859. His education was secured in the public schools, and in Elgin Academy under Professor and Mrs. Sears. In 1885 he went to Iowa, where he followed farming for the next five years. In 1890 he returned home to join his father and brothers in the butter-making business at Bartlett Station. In 1898 he was made General Manager and Treasurer of the concern, and has since had charge of the office and business in Aurora and elsewhere. He was married in 1882 to Miss Mary Luella Blank, daughter of Jonas G. Blank, a pioneer settler of Wayne Township, DuPage County.

FRED A. CARR, another brother, was born in Hanover Township in 1863, and received his education in the public schools, Elgin Academy and a Chicago business college. He became a member of the firm with his father and brothers in 1884, and is now Secretary of the corporation. Mr. Carr married Miss Etta Pelsue, of Sandwich, Ill.

ARTHUR W. CARR, a fourth brother, was born in Hanover Township, Cook County, in 1861, and was educated in the public schools and at Elgin Academy. He was trained to the butter-making business, and has been associated in that line with his father and brothers since 1883. He is now a Director of the Palace Car Creamery Company, and is the active manager of its factories in LaSalle and DeKalb Counties, his home being at Somonauk, Ill. He married Miss Hannah Nichols, whose home was at Fairbank, Iowa.

CAPT. LEONARD J. CARR (deceased), pioneer settler, Batavia, Ill., born in Bangor, Maine, June 10, 1807; followed a seafaring life in early manhood, and in 1839 came to Illinois, locating at what was known as Nelson's Grove, about two and a half miles west of Batavia, where he was engaged in farming and stock-raising until 1858; removed to the edge of the city of Batavia in the latter year, and in 1872 established his home in the city, where he resided until his death, which occurred Jan. 30, 1892. He had various investments in manufacturing and other enterprises, and was one of the first stockholders in the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway. He was married in 1841 to Miss Laura Snow, of Bucksport, Maine.



ROBINSON L. CARTER, born in Worcester, Mass.; came to Illinois in June, 1840, locating in Blackberry Township, Kane County; crossed the plains to California in 1854, returning to Aurora in '57; spent several years in Clinton, Ky., but has resided in Aurora since 1901. On March 25, 1843, he was married to Eliza Ann Hooker, and they have two children—Mary C. and Arvilla A. In political views Mr. Carter is a Republican, and has served in several important offices, including Supervisor of Aurora Township, Mayor of Aurora City, and was a member of the Kansas Legislature from Barber County District.

ELZY C. CAVINS, educator, Batavia, Ill., was born in Coles County, Ill., July 2, 1869, where he was reared and educated in the local schools, graduating from the State Normal School at Normal, Ill., in 1896. He had previously taught school three years, and after his graduation was elected principal of the schools at Neoga, Ill. In the fall of 1900 he became Superintendent of the West Side schools of Batavia, which position he now holds (1903). In 1899 he received a State certificate, and in 1902 matriculated at the University of Chicago and entered upon a special course of study at that institution. In 1899 he married Miss Mildred Maxon, and they have one child, Harold, born in 1901.

SIMON E. CHAFFEE, milk and dairy agent Chicago Great Western Railroad, Lily Lake, Kane County, was born in Campton Township Nov. 21, 1845, son of Eber and Anna E. (Davis) Chaffee. His education was secured in the Jennings Seminary, Aurora, and the Elgin Academy, and when the Civil War broke out he was engaged in teaching. In the last year of the war Mr. Chaffee enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Forty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served one year. After his return from the army he spent a year in a store in Chicago, and then bought a farm two miles east of Lily Lake, which he conducted until December, 1901. In 1889 he secured the position of milk and dairy agent for the Chicago Great Western Railroad. Mr. Chaffee served as Town Clerk several years, since 1883 has been a member of the Board of Supervisors, and for some twenty years Treasurer of the School Board. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, the Grand Army of the Republic, and Knights of the Maccabees. His marriage to Miss Sarah Woodman, daughter of Joseph and Eleanor (Barnard) Woodman, occurred March 26, 1867, and they have four sons and three daughters living, one daughter being deceased.

REV. ANDREW CHALLMAN (deceased), clergyman, Batavia, Ill., was born in Boralanda, Province of Dahlaland, Sweden, Jan. 1, 1841, receiving a university education in his native land. In 1861 he came to the United States and settled in Chicago. His preparations for the ministry were made at Augustana College, then at Paxton, Ill., and now at Rock Island. He began his labors as a minister of the Swedish Lutheran Church in Chicago, and from there went to Porter, Ind., where he held pastoral charge for eleven years. In 1886 he was called to the Bethany Swedish Lutheran church of Bethany, and filled this important pastorate until 1897, in the meantime taking an active part in public movements to improve the city. For twelve years he was a member of the Board of Education, and in 1897 was appointed Postmaster of Batavia by President McKinley, holding this office until his death, May 15, 1900. For several years he was Chairman for the Rockford District of the Illinois Conference of the Swedish Lutheran Church. In 1865 he was married to Miss Albertina Simonson, also born in Sweden, and their two sons, David O. and Robert E., are still connected with the postoffice at Batavia.

DANIEL J. CHAMBERLAIN (deceased), merchant, Elgin, Ill., born in Madison, N. H., Aug. 14, 1844, was educated in the public schools, and early employed as clerk in a clothing store. From 1863 to 1876 he was employed by Whitten, Burdett & Young, wholesale clothiers in Boston, as a traveling salesman. In 1876 he located in Elgin, where he established the Big Boston Clothing Store. In politics he was a Democrat until the advent of Bryan, when he took the stand of a Gold Democrat. He was a prominent Mason and belonged to the Oriental Consistory, of Chicago, the Medinah Temple Mystic Shrine, and in 1895 organized Chamberlain's Crusaders (a party of Masons) for the tour of the Mediterranean countries. In 1890 he was connected with a similar organization (the Temple Commandery, of Albany, N. Y.) during an Old World tour. He was married June 15, 1874, to Celeste L. Chamberlain, of Ellsworth, Maine, who survives him. Mr. Chamberlain died Aug. 27, 1901.

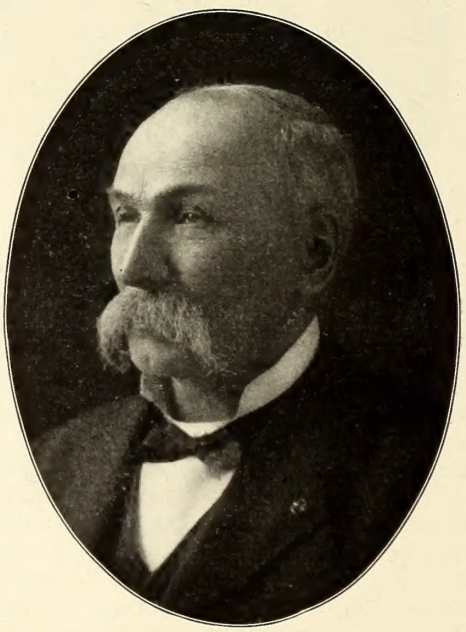
ALBERT PRATT CHAPMAN, farmer and stock-raiser, Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, Ill., was born in the township where he now resides, Oct. 4, 1855; reared on his father's farm, and obtained his education in the public schools of Sugar Grove and Aurora, and at the State University, Urbana, Ill. After leaving college he taught school for two years, and then joined his father in managing the latter's farm in Sugar Grove Township. He was successfully engaged in farming, stock-breeding and dairying until 1899, when he retired from active work in this connection, although he still owns the old homestead where he now resides. In 1880 he was married to Miss Clarinda Spear, daughter of Warren and Matilda Spear, of Aurora, and their only living child is Tillie J. Chapman. Mrs. Chapman was educated at Oberlin College, Oberlin Ohio, graduating from that institution in the class of '79.

ANDREW F. CHAPMAN, merchant, Dundee, Ill., born at Uhrichsville, Ohio, Dec. 4, 1845; came to Dundee, Ill., in 1867, and in 1879 bought an interest in the coal, lumber and feed business with D. C. Adams. Mr. Chapman has been owner of the enterprise since 1887, and conducts an extensive trade. He was married in 1880 to Miss Anna Wyatt.



BENJAMIN F. CHAPMAN (deceased), farmer, Burlington Township, Kane County, Ill., born in Canada, March 7, 1827; came to Kane County in the '40s, and in 1850 purchased a small farm in Burlington Township, to which he made subsequent additions until his holdings embraced 280 acres. He was married Feb. 2, 1851, to Miss Lovina Godfrey, and of their children two are still living, viz.: Charles E. and Mrs. Ada E. Smith. Mr. Chapman died April 12, 1888.

HENRY CHAPMAN (deceased), pioneer citizen, Sugar Grove, Kane County, Ill., was born in Chemung County, N. Y., March 15, 1821; grew to manhood on a farm in his native State, and for several years taught school during a portion of each year, devoting the remainder of his time to working at the carpenter's trade. He first came west in 1842, but returned east shortly afterwards, took a course in surveying, and later, coming again to Illinois, devoted much of his time to this profession. He surveyed much of the Government land in Kane County, and in later years became noted for having set more corner-stones than any other man in the county. Mr. Chapman was also one of the pioneer school teachers of this region. In 1844 he purchased a tract of Government land about two and a half miles northwest of Sugar Grove Station, which he brought under cultivation, and upon which he lived until his death, Sept. 2, 1897. Mr. Chapman was a member of the County Board of Supervisors for several years; also served as Assessor of Sugar Grove and held other town offices. He married Julia Pratt, of Chemung County, N. Y., who died in 1884, and the only representatives of this pioneer family now living are Albert Pratt Chapman and Harriet E. Chapman, both of Sugar Grove, Ill.

MATTHEW T. CHAPMAN, manufacturer, Aurora, a native of Priddy, Somersetshire, England, where he was born Dec. 20, 1844, came to the United States when a boy and grew to manhood in New York. He worked as a blacksmith and machinist at Skeneateles and Auburn, N. Y., for two or three years, and was subsequently in the employ of the Government at Nashville and other points in the South. After the Civil War he returned to New York, and worked at his trade in Seneca Falls and Rochester. For the purpose of constructing the city gas works he came to Aurora, Ill., and that city has become his permanent home. For some time he conducted a gas-fitting, plumbing and machinist business, and still later established the American Well Works Company, of which he was President, with a large and growing business. Various successful devices for sinking deep wells have been perfected by him. Mr. Chapman has been twice married, his first wife having been Miss Mary T. Sperry, and his second Mrs. Helen Leet, of Aurora.

SAMUEL W. CHAPMAN, merchant, Elgin, Ill., born in Wyoming County, N. Y., Sept. 9, 1843, son of Samuel and Margaret (Spittal) Chapman; in 1844 came to Illinois with his parents, who located on a farm in Plato Township, Kane County, and there resided until a few years previous to their death. They both died in Elgin, the father in 1886, and the mother in 1889. The elder Samuel Chapman served in the War of the Rebellion as First Lieutenant of the Plato Cavalry Company, which was attached to the Thirty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; the members of this company furnished their own horses when they entered the service. The subject of this sketch grew to manhood on the farm and obtained his education in the public schools and Beloit College (Beloit, Wis.); later became cashier for the American and United States Express Companies —joint offices at Burlington—and in 1868 removed to Elgin, where for several years he was in the milling business; in 1878 was appointed general agent for the McCormick Harvester Company for Northern Illinois, remaining in that position until 1893, when he established himself in the agricultural implement and carriage business, which he has conducted up to the present time. In 1894 he was appointed by President Cleveland Postmaster of Elgin, holding office four years. Mr. Chapman was married in 1867 to Miss Elvena F. Stone, daughter of Isaac Stone, one of the first settlers of Kane County.

ANSON L. CLARK.

ANSON L. CLARK, M. D., M. A., Elgin, President Bennett Medical College, Chicago, was born in Clarksburg, Mass., Oct. 12, 1836, received his education in the public schools, and at Lombard University, Galesburg, Ill., from which he graduated in 1858, receiving the degree of M. A., in 1867. He was graduated from the Eclectic Medical Institute at Cincinnati in 1861, and was appointed first Assistant Surgeon One Hundred Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving as such until the close of the war. In 1862 he had established his home in Elgin, and there resumed his practice at the close of the war. As a Republican he was sent to the Twenty-seventh General Assembly. Promoting the organization of Bennett Medical College he became so important to it that he was chosen its President at the organization of the school, and has held that position to the present time (1903) since 1870. President Clark's services to the cause of medical eclecticism have been many and important, and he is actively engaged in the work of the National Medical Association, the Illinois State Eclectic Association, and the Chicago Medical Eclectic Society, and has acted as President of each. Dr. Clark was a member of the Illinois State Board of Health for the first fifteen years of its existence. He is a member of the staff of physicians and surgeons of the Sherman Hospital at Elgin, and belongs to the Loyal Legion, the Elgin Post, G. A. R., and is a Knight Templar Mason. For six years he was a member of the Elgin Board of Education, being President of that body for three years.

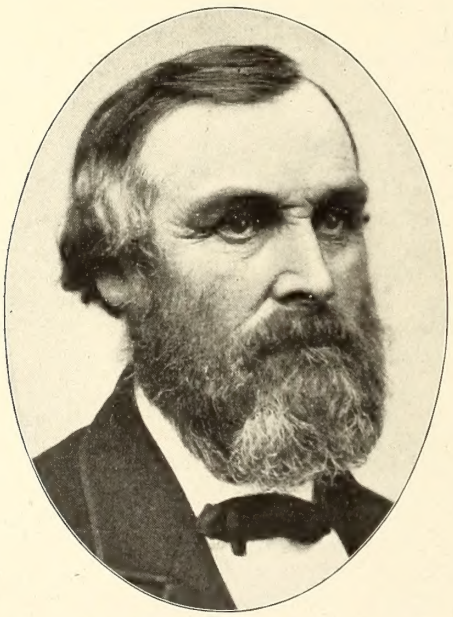
SAMUEL N. CLARK (deceased), merchant and pioneer, Geneva, Ill., was born in Massachusetts, Feb. 15, 1818, and was there reared to mercantile pursuits. In 1837 he came to Geneva, Ill., where he established a store which he conducted until his death in 1856. In 1844 he married Mrs. Polly H. Patten, who was living in Chicago in 1903, at the age of over ninety years. These worthy pioneers helped to found and maintain the Unitarian church at Geneva, one of the first churches of that denomination in the West.

SCOTTO CLARK (deceased), pioneer merchant, Geneva, Ill., was born Sept. 2, 1782, in Harwich, Mass., where he was reared to mercantile pursuits. After being engaged in mercantile business in Boston, he removed in 1837 to Geneva, Ill., where he had a store for a time. He married Sally M. Freeman in 1808. His death occurred Oct. 12, 1844.

REV. E. F. CLEVELAND, M. D., born Sept. 29, 1841, attended the public and private schools at Port Henry, N. Y., where his parents took up their residence soon after his birth. When about fourteen years of age he was sent to Canada for further study. In May, 1862, he enlisted in Company A, Ninth Vermont Volunteer Infantry and served until July, 1865, being mustered out of service with the rank of First Lieutenant. In March, 1868, he graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Michigan, and soon after settled in Dundee, Ill., where he has successfully practiced his profession up to the present time. He married Miss Ella L. Edwards Sept. 22, 1870. He was ordained a deacon in April, 1879, and a priest of the Episcopal Church in September, 1886, being engaged in ministerial work in St. James parish, Dundee, and adjacent territory. As one of the directors, and Vice-President of the Illinois Iron and Bolt Company, Dr. Cleveland has been identified with the business life of the community. He is a member of the Fox River Valley Medical Association, the American Medical Association, and of several scientific and literary societies.



THOMAS L. CLEVELAND (deceased), pioneer merchant, Batavia, Ill., born in Boston, Mass., April 15, 1818, a son of Aaron P. Cleveland, and a cousin of Ex-President Cleveland, was reared to manhood in Boston, where he received his education. He made a trip to the East Indies when he was approaching manhood, and spent his eighteenth birthday on the banks of the Ganges. On his return to the United States, he spent some time in Charleston, S. C., and in 1839 opened a general store in Geneva, Ill., which he removed the following year to Batavia where he continued it several years. Later he entered the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and for twenty years was station agent at Batavia. He held various town offices, and shortly before his death on April 10, 1882, was elected City Clerk. In 1840 he married Olivia Blanchard, daughter of William L. and Hannah (Hull) Blanchard, pioneer settlers of Aurora.

EUGENE CLIFFORD, lawyer, Elgin, Ill., born in Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 3, 1848; in 1854 came west with his parents, who settled in Elgin; admitted to the bar in 1871; practiced in Elgin until 1882, but since the latter date has practiced in Chicago, although he has continued to reside in Elgin. He was married in 1879 to Miss Jennie A. Martin, of Elgin.

REV. LEONARD CLIFFORD, retired clergyman, Dundee, Ill., born at Wales, Erie County, N. Y., August 12, 1819; came with his parents to Illinois in 1834, locating first near Lemont, Cook County, where he worked on his father's farm. Later he entered the Evanston Theological Seminary, where he remained ten years, then entered the ministry in 1858 and has filled various charges, including Dundee, Palatine and Burlington; was superannuated in 1875, and has since resided at Dundee. He was first married in 1843 to Miss Jeanette Boreland, who died in 1896, and on Feb. 28, 1897, he married his second wife, Mrs. Mary (Skidmore) Manzer, of Dundee.

CHARLES M. COATS, manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., was born in Otsego County, N. Y., Sept. 12, 1850, and educated in the public schools, Whitesboro Seminary and Hamilton College, N. Y., 1870; for three years was engaged in mercantile business, but moved to Indianapolis, Ind., in 1873, where he conducted a fruit and produce commission business for seven years. Coming to Aurora in 1890, he embarked in the manufacturing business, and in 1898 helped organize the "Yeomen of America" (an insurance society), being elected Supreme Secretary at its organization, and re-elected in 1901 and 1903.

MOSES COLBY.

MOSES COLBY (deceased), pioneer settler, Aurora, Ill., was born near Dover, N. H., Feb. 28, 1810, and spent his early life in his native State and in Boston, where he followed various occupations until about 1840. During that year he moved to Aurora, Ill., where his first winter was spent in the pioneer saw-mill of Samuel McCarty. Later he purchased a farm not far away from the rising village, and became a prosperous farmer. This farm was his home until he retired from an active business life, when he located in Aurora, where he spent the most of his subsequent years. His death occurred in Corning, Iowa, in November, 1891, leaving Mrs. Colby, who is now (1904) the only surviving member of his family, although they reared several foster children. She was born near Lake Champlain, Clinton County, N. Y., in 1819, and is a daughter of George Hawkins, who came with his family to Aurora in 1844. Mrs. Colby is greatly interested in charitable work, and is now taking part with others in the founding of an Old Ladies' Home in Aurora.

REV. WILLIAM A. COLLEDGE, D. D., clergyman, Aurora, born in Edinburg, Scotland, in November, 1858, was educated in the Presbyterian Church School at Glasgow, and in London, England. In 1892 he received his degree of Doctor of Divinity from Adrian College, Mich., the same year becoming extension lecturer for the University of Chicago. In 1894 he was called to the pulpit of the People's church in Aurora, from Cadillac, Mich., where he had been located for five years.

CORNELIUS COLLINS, Alderman, Batavia, Ill., born at Sycamore, Ill., Feb. 6, 1862, son of Daniel and Alice (McCullough) Collins. Daniel Collins removed with his family to Batavia, Kane County, when the son Cornelius was a boy, and here the latter was reared and received his educational training in the city schools. Cornelius Collins was engaged in contracting and building and in the stone trade for several years, but since 1887 has also conducted a meat market in Batavia. In political sentiment he is a Democrat and, at the present time (1903), is serving his fellow-citizens as a member of the Batavia Board of Aldermen.

CHARLES E. COLWELL, physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., born at Newburgh, N. Y., June 19, 1864; obtained his medical training at the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago, graduating from that institution in the class of 1885; took a post-graduate course at the Post-Graduate Medical School (New York City); has practiced in Aurora since 1885.

WILLIAM CONANT (deceased), farmer and once Mayor, Geneva, Ill., was born in Brandon, Vt., March 13, 1819, a son of Luther Conant, and a descendant of Roger Conant, the founder of the settlement at Salem, Mass., in 1622. William Conant received an academic education in Vermont and was trained to agricultural pursuits. In 1850 he came to Kane County, and purchased a farm near Geneva, on which he made his home until 1891. That year he removed to Geneva, and in 1893 was elected Mayor of the city on the temperance ticket. He died in 1894. He was twice married, Miss Melissa White becoming his wife in 1840 and dying in 1884. In 1886 he married Mrs. Olivia (Blanchard) Cleveland, who still survives and lives in Batavia. She comes of New England ancestry, her father having been born in Rhode Island, and her mother in Connecticut.

CORNELIUS B. CONDE (deceased), pioneer settler, Batavia, Ill., born in Troy, N. Y., in 1815; grew to manhood in his native State, and in 1836 came to Illinois, locating at Batavia where he engaged in blacksmithing. Early in the '40s he purchased lands from the Government which remained in possession of the family until 1902. In 1849 he drove an ox team overland to California, remaining in that State two years, in the meantime mining for gold with fairly successful results; retired from business in 1864, and died in 1885. He was married in New York State to Hannah Quant, who died in Batavia, in 1901.

JOHN A. CONNELL (deceased), Elgin, Kane County, Ill., born at Greenwood, Ill., Sept. 23, 1861, son of James and Jennie Connell; was trained to farming in his boyhood, and obtained his education in the public schools. Being left an orphan at an early age, he was thrown upon his own resources and obtained his later education by the dint of personal effort. Having completed a course of study at the Northern Indiana Normal School, Valparaiso, Ind., he taught school for several years and in 1882 entered the United States Railway Mail Service, with which he was continuously connected until his death, May 6, 1902. Mr. Connell had a long and honorable career in the Government service, and a memorial, as well as numerous letters written at the time of his death, testify to the high estimation of his personal character and sterling worth. He was a distinguished member of the Masonic Order, having attained the Thirty-second Degree. He was married in 1888 to Miss Cora B. Denison daughter of Daniel Denison of Richmond, Ill., and their children are named Howard, Paul and Virgine Connell.

THOMAS M. CONWAY, farmer, Blackberry Township, Kane County, was born Jan. 29, 1855, in the township where his home is found today. He was educated in the city schools of Peoria, where his home was found until 1885. That year he came back to Blackberry Township, and bought a farm of 'Squire West, which was situated four miles southeast of Elburn, and has given it his attention to the present time. In 1888 he was elected Commissioner of Highways, and served until 1890. He had charge of all the installation teams at the World's Fair in 1893. In 1897 he was again elected Commission of Highways, and is still serving in that position. In religion he is a member of the Catholic church. He was married Feb. 26, 1889, to Miss Bridget Keenan, a resident of Kaneville. They have had four sons, one of whom is dead.

GEORGE E. COOK, farmer and stock-raiser, Campton, Kane County, was born April 18, 1875, in Campton, son of George H. and Amelia (Dennison) Cook, and was educated in the local schools and in Elgin Academy, where he took a business course. In 1898 he began business on his own account on a farm adjoining that of his father, where he put up new buildings in 1901. Mr. Cook married Miss Bessie R. Buck, of Dundee, daughter of F. M. and Nettie (Russell) Buck. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of the Globe.

GEORGE H. COOK, farmer, Campton Township, Kane County, Ill., was born in Campton Township, July 30, 1844, son of J. Henry and Caroline (Harvey) Cook. His education was secured in the district school and he worked on the farm with his father until he was twenty-two years old, when he started out for himself. At the age of twenty-eight he bought a farm in Campton Township, which he has since divided between two sons, while making his own home on the homestead farm which had fallen to him at his father's death. For fifteen years he served as Highway Commissioneer, and for three years was Assessor in Campton Township; has also been School Director several years, and is recognized as a leading citizen. Mr. Cook was married Dec. 22, 1868, to Miss Amelia A., daughter of William and Sarah A. (Cleveland) Dennison, both natives of Canada, and he and his wife have had three sons and two daughters, of whom two daughters and one son are deceased. The oldest son is a physician at Evanston and the other is a farmer.

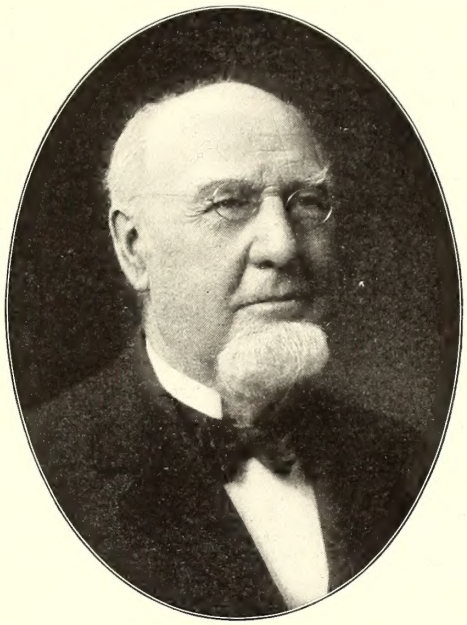
J. HENRY COOK, farmer, Campton Township, Kane County, was born in Wrinkton, near Bristol, Eng., May 14, 1815, and was educated in the schools of his native country. In 1833 he came to the United States, and for the ten years following was engaged in farming near Syracuse, N. Y. In 1843 he removed to Kane County, Ill., and settled on Government land, developing a fine farm, on which his son George now resides. For several years he was School Director, and was highly regarded by the old pioneers. In 1843 he was married in New York to Miss Caroline Harvey, and became the father of three sons and two daughters. Mrs. Cook died in December, 1881, and Mr. Cook survived until April 26, 1888. George H. Cook is the only child of this family now living.

JOHN H. COOK, physician and surgeon, Evanston, Ill., was born in Campton Township, Kane County, in 1869, son of George H. and Amelia (Dennison) Cook; became a student in the local schools, later graduating from Elgin Academy and Rush Medical College, Chicago, when in 1898 he began his professional career in Evanston, where he now resides, and has met with creditable success. In political matters he is a stanch Republican, and has always worked for the good of his party. Socially he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and other fraternal societies. His wife, Fannie Woodman, is a daughter of Freeman and Alice (Bartholomew) Woodman. They have one child, a daughter.

RICHMOND COOK (deceased), farmer, Virgil, Kane County, Ill., born in England, Oct. 6, 1836, came to the United States, and settled in Kane County, Ill., about 1856. In 1869 he purchased a farm midway between Lily Lake and Virgil Center, where he was engaged in general farming until his death, which occurred Dec. 26, 1893. He was married Feb. 11, 1861, to Miss Jane Marshall, a daughter of William and Sarah (Harpum) Marshall, and of this union were born four sons and four daughters two of the sons being deceased.

Y., Dec. 27, 1830; educated in the public schools of his native State and came to Kane County, Ill., in early manhood; first engaged in the boot and shoe business for about ten years, and afterwards engaged in farming for about sixteen years; has resided at Lily Lake for the past fifteen years; married in February, 1854, Mrs. Charlotte Chrisman.

EDWARD C. COOLEY, dairy farmer, Lily Lake, Ill., born at Elburn, Ill., May 24, 1862; educated in the district schools, and grew to manhood on his father's farm; married on Oct. 2, 1889, Cora E. Westgard.



IRA C. COPLEY.

IRA C. COPLEY, manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., born at Walnut Grove, Knox County, Ill., Oct. 25, 1864, came with his parents to Aurora when three years of age and grew up in that city; was educated in the public schools of Aurora, Jennings Seminary and Yale College, graduating from the latter in the class of 1887, and from the Union College of Law, Chicago, in 1889. In the latter year he became manager of the Aurora Gas Light Company, and immediately began developing its property. In 1890 the same interests controlling the Aurora Gas Light Company purchased the property and franchises of the Aurora Electric Light & Power Company, and in 1902 these combined interests secured franchises for gas in Batavia, Geneva and St. Charles, and laid mains to those towns, the name of the company then being changed to the Fox River Light, Heat & Power Company, which also incorporated the gas and electric light interests. In 1894, with other parties, he bought the Joliet Gas Light Company, which has since developed rapidly. In 1900 he built a gas plant at La Grange, known as the La Grange Gas Company, and extended mains to La Grange Park, the Grossdales, Western Springs and Hinsdale. Mr. Copley is at present (1904) Treasurer and Manager of the Fox River Light, Heat and Power Company and the Joliet Gas-Light Company, and President of the La Grange Gas Company. From 1894 to 1898 he was a member of the Executive Committee of the Republican State Central Committee representing the Aurora District, and at the same time was Chairman of the Finance Committee. From 1896 to 1898 he was President of the Illinois State League of Republican Clubs, and has been a member of the Library Board and Park Board of Aurora, and a Trustee of Jennings Seminary for several years. In 1892 he was married to Miss Edith Strohn of Los Angeles, Cal.

ARTHUR M. CORNING, retired merchant, Batavia, Ill., born at Fort Ann, Washington County, N. Y., March 11, 1843; was reared and educated in his native State and trained to mercantile pursuits. Coming to Illinois in 1862, he located in Batavia, where for two years he was in the employ of the Howard Paper Company of that city. He established a mill at St. Charles, Ill., for bleaching straw and manufacturing printing paper therefrom, and about 1866 went to Moline, Ill., and started a mill of a similar kind in that city. Later he returned to Batavia, and for several years was interested in various patents that required him to visit Michigan, Connecticut and other States. He was living in Chicago at the time of the great fire in 1871, but in 1883 returned to Batavia, where he was engaged in merchandising until 1889, when he retired from active business. Mr. Corning has held various municipal offices in Batavia. He was married to Miss Susan Hughes, of Dexter, Mich.

CORY, physician and surgeon, Geneva, Ill., born in Springfield, Bradford County, Penn., Jan. 17, 1852; educated in the public schools of the Keystone State, Troy Academy and Elmira Academy (Elmira, N. Y.); obtained his degree of medicine from the Eclectic Medical College (New York City), graduating from that institution in the class of 1878; began practicing his profession at Springfield, Penn., in March, 1878, remaining until 1892, when he removed to Geneva, Ill., where he has since been a leading practitioner. He was married in 1882 to Miss Hattie O. Sweet, of Ulster, Bradford County, Penn.

BENJAMIN COX (deceased), farmer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Wilmot, N. H., Dec. 28, 1819, son of David and Lydia (Bean) Cox, and was educated in the schools of his native State. When he was seventeen years old he accompanied his parents to Ohio, but soon went to Lynn, Mass., where he learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed for some time. In 1841 he came to Illinois, and purchased a tract of Government land, two miles west of Elgin. Turning his attention to farming, he added to his original purchase and developed a fine farm, which is still in possession of his family. In 1870 he retired from active farming and located in Elgin. For several years he served as Assessor for Elgin, and took a strong interest in local and political affairs. He was twice married, his first marriage being in 1841, with Miss Susan Bell, of Ohio. She died in 1884, leaving two daughters and one son, and the following year he married Mrs. Esther G. Marsh, widow of Mason M. Marsh, of Elgin. Mr. Cox died Dec. 6, 1901, while his widow still lives on the old homestead in Elgin.

CHARLES T. CRAFT, farmer, Burlington Township, Kane County, Ill., born in Lycoming County, Penn., Nov. 1, 1828; came west in 1847, locating in Campton Township, Kane County, where he spent seven years as a farm-hand; came to Burlington Township in 1854 and purchased 110 acres of land in Section 36, where he resided and was actively engaged in the management of his farm until 1896. Mr. Craft was married March 7, 1852, to Miss Katharine McKellar, who died Dec. 30, 1896, leaving four sons and two daughters who are still living, viz.: Edwin I., Charles E., George A., Daniel, Katharine (Mrs. McDonough) and Sarah (Mrs. Haygreen).

LEWIS C. CRANE, merchant, Batavia, Ill., born at La Porte, Ind., Feb. 19, 1850; removed to Batavia, Ill., in 1882, and engaged in the furniture and undertaking business in that city as junior member of the firm of Smith & Crane, now one of the oldest establishments of its kind in the Fox River Valley; has also been interested for many years in the agricultural implement trade. He was married in 1882 to Miss Etta Smith, of Westville, Ind.

DANIEL F. CRICHTON, farmer, Dundee Township, Kane County, born near Glasgow, Scotland, Jan. 8, 1847, son of James and Bethia (Frew) Crichton; came with his parents to Dundee, Ill., in 1848, and grew up on his father's farm, and obtained his education in the public schools and Elgin Academy; has been engaged in dairy farming since early manhood, and is the owner of the farm on which his father settled in 1848; has held local offices and is now (1903) a School Trustee; married in 1881 Miss Jessie Flemming, and their living children are: Bethia, Dora, Archie and Raymond. A daughter, Jessie, died in 1893.

JAMES CRICHTON (deceased), pioneer farmer, Dundee Township, Kane County, born in Airdrie, near Glasgow, Scotland, in 1812, became superintendent of a colliery in early life, and in 1848 removed to the United States. Having come to Kane County, Ill., he bought a farm three miles northwest of the village of Dundee, on which he lived ten years, when he purchased what is still known as the Crichton homestead, two miles southwest of Algonquin, where he died in 1888. Like most of the pioneers of that early day, he began without means and had the usual struggle with poverty, but when he died was the owner of 300 acres of exceedingly choice land. In 1840 he married Bethia Frew, who was also born near Glasgow, and who died some years before her husband, leaving five sons and four daughters, all of whom but one were living in 1903. James Crichton had four brothers and four sisters, all pioneer settlers of Kane County. The brothers were: William, John, Robert and Niel, and the sisters, Mrs. A. Archibald, Sr., Mrs. D. Clarkson, Sr., Mrs., Robert Griffith, and Mrs. R. Todd, Sr.

JOHN CRICHTON, pioneer farmer, Dundee Township, Kane County, born in Airdrie, near Glasgow, Scotland, Feb. 9, 1811; in 1846 married Miss Margaret Forest, born at Woodhall, near Glasgow, and shortly afterward sailed for the United States. They were on the ocean two months, and landing at New York, came direct to Dundee, Kane County, where he purchased from the Government a tract of land three and a half miles northwest of Dundee, became known as the John Crichton homestead. In later years he added to the original tract, and became very extensively interested in land, ranking among the largest land-owners of the county. He was thrifty and sagacious, and both kind-hearted and high-minded. Three of his children grew to maturity. Mrs. Charles H. Eatinger and Mrs. William H. Ervin are still living in 1903, both residing near the old Crichton homestead.

WILLIAM CRICHTON (deceased), pioneer farmer of Dundee Township, Kane County, born near Glasgow, Scotland, in 1821; came to the United States in 1842, locating on a farm near Dundee, Ill., where he lived for forty-five years and then removed to Dundee, where he died Dec. 7, 1900. He was married in 1848 to Grace Todd, also a native of Scotland.

ALBERT H. CRIPPS, retired farmer, Burlington Township, Kane County, born in Cecil County, Md., Jan. 26, 1831; came to Burlington Township in 1845; began farming operations for himself in 1856, and was actively identified with the agricultural interests of Burlington Township until 1900. Mr. Cripps was first married March 29, 1859, to Isabel Parthon, who died in April, 1882, leaving one son and four daughters. On January, 7, 1889, he married his second wife, Addie Buck, of Carpentersville.

DAVID P. CROSBY, proprietor of a livery and sales-stable, Elburn, Kane County, was born in Kaneville Township, Kane County, the son of James and Susan (Shaw) Crosby. He received his education from the district schools and the Elburn high school. His first business was farming, but in 1890 he engaged in teaming in Chicago, where he continued until 1894, when he returned to Kane County. In 1902 he started a livery stable in Elburn. He was married Jan. 1, 1890 to Miss Catherine Johnson, and of this union one son and two daughters were born, one daughter now being deceased. The family belong to the Catholic church.

JAMES CROSBY, retired farmer, Elburn, Kane County, was born May 27, 1835, in County Meath, Ireland, and came to the United States in 1854. He spent two years in New York, and in 1856 made his way to Kane County, Ill., where he found employment for a time on a farm, after which he bought a farm for himself in the Township of Kaneville, two and a half miles southwest of Elburn. In 1894 he retired from active business and moved into Elburn to pass his remaining years in well deserved rest and retirement. For eight years he served his district as School Director. Mr. Crosby is a member of the Elburn Catholic church. In 1862 he was married to Miss Susan Shaw, and of this union nine children have been born—four sons and five daughters.

DARWIN D. CULVER, physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., was born in Byron, Fond du Lac County, Wis., April 6, 1868, where he was reared on a farm, and educated in the public schools, finishing at the State Normal, Normal, Ill. With Dr. O. B. Stanard as his preceptor, he read medicine at Sandwich, Ill., and took a full course at the Homœopathic Medical College, Chicago, from which he graduated in April, 1894. Immediately after the completion of his college work he began practice at Plano, Ill., where he remained three years, and then removed to Aurora, where he has since gained professional prominence. From 1898 to 1901 he was lecturer on the subject of nervous physiology in Dunham Medical College of Chicago, and was later tendered the professorship of anatomy in the Chicago Homœopathic Medical College, which he declined. He is a member of the Illinois Homœopathic Society, and is a contributor to medical journals. In 1894 he married Miss Mary Potter, of La Salle County, Ill.

ELISHA E. CURTIS, retired railway conductor, Geneva, Kane County, Ill., born in Hamburg, Spalding County, Ga., Jan. 10, 1844, son of Silas W. and Emma (Morgan) Curtis. Both his parents were reared in old Stockbridge, Berkshire County, Mass., the father being of English and the mother of Welch extraction. When Elisha E. was five years of age, his father's family, having been temporarily located in Georgia, returned to Massachusetts for a brief stay, and in the spring of 1850 came from the latter State to Kane County, Ill. His father had previously visited Illinois in the '40s, and in 1849 purchased a farm between Geneva and Batavia on what is now known as Batavia Avenue. The family established their home on this farm in the pioneer days, and here the elder Mr. Curtis died in 1892, his wife surviving until 1897. Before his death Mr. Curtis had subdivided his farm, and some of the most attractive country homes of Kane County have been built on this land. Elisha E. Curtis grew to manhood in Geneva, where he obtained his education. In 1861 he enlisted in the Fifty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry for service in the War of the Rebellion, and was mustered out with his regiment at Louisville, Ky., in July, 1865, after serving his country valiantly for nearly four years. Returning to Illinois after the close of the war, he was employed by his father in the coal and lumber trade and conduct of the farm until 1879, when he entered the employ of the Chicago & North-Western Railroad, with which he remained until 1895. During most of the time he was employed by the railroad company he lived in Chicago, but since the death of his father, he has occupied the old homestead in Geneva. He is a member of the order of Railway Conductors. Mr. Curtis was married in 1888 to Miss Elizabeth Carey, daughter of Edward Carey of West Chicago.

RICHARD DALE, farmer, Big Rock, Ill., born in County Durham, England, July 28, 1824; came with his parents to America in 1852, and came to Kane County, Ill., in the same year, where he lived with his parents on a farm in Big Rock Township; married Miss Ann Summers, who died in 1891.

EBEN DANFORD (deceased), manufacturer, Geneva, Ill., was born near Concord, N. H., March 23, 1814, and served an apprenticeship to the machinist trade at Lowell, Mass. Later he was employed by the Adams Printing Press Manufacturing Company, at Boston, and the Hudson River Locomotive Company, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., until 1839. That year he came to Geneva, Ill., where he erected a machine shop. He invented a mowing machine and the Danford super-heated steam-generator. He married Parmelia A. Howard, daughter of David and Ella (Irwin) Howard, pioneer settlers of Aurora, where he died in 1894.

RALPH DANFORD (deceased), manufacturer, Geneva, Ill., was born in Geneva, Ill., March 6, 1854, and died in Lockport, Ill., Sept. 19, 1896. He was a son of Eben and Parmelia (Harvard) Danford, his father in his lifetime being one of the noted inventors of Illinois. Ralph Danford secured his education in the Geneva schools, and began working with his father when only sixteen years of age. Later he became a druggist in Geneva, and continued in that business until 1895. During that year he sold out and removed to Lockport, where he spent his last year. In 1886 he married Miss Sarah Denney, of Aurora.

BENJAMIN DANFORTH, retired manufacturer, Batavia, Ill., born in Sheffield, West Riding of Yorkshire, England, Aug. 1, 1825; grew to manhood and received his educational training in his native country, and in 1847 was married to Miss Sarah Hardcastle; came to the United States in 1850 and first established his home in Chicago; removed to Batavia the following year, where he engaged in the manufacture of horse-shoe nails, a trade he had learned in England; later engaged in the manufacture of nails by machinery and operated a machine shop until he retired from business in 1901. Mr. Danforth always possessed a fondness for music and is noted locally as an accomplished vocalist. Mrs. Danforth died in Batavia in 1894. They reared a large family of children, four of whom were living in 1903.

FREDERIC H. DANIELS, physician, Batavia, Ill., was born Aug. 22, 1855, at Union, Me., graduated at Bowdoin College in his native State, after which he served ten years on the medical staff of the Worcester Lunatic Hospital, Worcester, Mass., occupying the position of Assistant Superintendent, and for ten years later serving as Superintendent of the Bellevue Place Sanitarium at Batavia, Ill. Dr. Daniels was married Nov. 6, 1896, to Addie Stimpson, of Maine.

JONATHAN S. DAUBERMAN, farmer and stock-raiser, Kaneville, Ill., born June 11, 1850, in Center County, Penn., and when quite young was brought by his parents to Kane County, Ill., where he was educated in the public schools. He began farming with his father, and in 1872 started for himself on a portion of the old homestead. He has been very successful, and now owns a farm of 550 acres. In March, 1872, he was married to Mary E. Merrill, by whom he has had three children, two boys and one girl.

JOSEPHUS DAVENPORT, farmer, Batavia Township, Kane County, was born in Downers Grove, March 30, 1845, the only son of Deborah Swarthout and Theron Davenport, who were born in Seneca County, N. Y., in 1823, and at this writing (1903) are living in South Dakota. In 1846, Theron Davenport and his family moved to Aurora, and shortly after to a farm in Sugar Grove Township, five miles from Aurora. Here Josephus grew to manhood. His memory goes back to the time when there were no fenced roads leading to Aurora, now a city of 30,000. As there were no school houses in the town, school was held in a gravel barn, horses occupying one end of the structure. He had fair school advantages, having attended the Aurora High School and Jennings Seminary of that place. He has never aspired to any political position, but has been a life-long Republican. He is a farmer pure and simple. Through industry and frugality he was, in 1878, enabled to purchase the old homestead, where he now resides. He has a choice farm consisting of 224 acres, and the best farm buildings in his neighborhood. He also owns a large tract of land in South Dakota. Mr. Davenport has been twice married; first, in January, 1868, to M. Louise Bodine, of Aurora, to whom was born Nina Louise, now the wife of Elmer E. Given, of Huron, S. D. The second marriage was celebrated June 22, 1876, with Miss Helen I. Niles, of Sugar Grove, who is still living. Mr. and Mrs. Davenport attend the Methodist church at Batavia, and are counted among the substantial people of the vicinity.

ALBERT W. DAVIS, farmer, Big Rock, Kane County, born Jan. 28, 1862, in DeKalb County, Ill., son of William and Ann (Whildin) Davis; was educated in the public schools and at the Normal in Sugar Grove. He became a successful teacher, and for eighteen terms was employed in the school room in his home district in Montgomery, and in Sugar Grove Normal. From 1891 to 1893 he taught school and carried on farming at the same time, but since that time has devoted his attention exclusively to his farm. He was Town Collector in 1895 and 1896, and since 1898 has been a member of the Republican Central Committee. Mr. Davis was married March 28, 1888, to Miss Elizabeth M, Darnell, a native of DeKalb County. He is a member of the Baptist church, and is active in Sunday school work.

JOHN DAVIS, merchant, Batavia, Ill., born in DuPage County, Ill., Jan. 8, 1846; came to Batavia with his parents when eight years of age, and has since made his home in that city, having been connected with several different business enterprises during his residence here; has served as a member of the Batavia Board of Aldermen, Board of Education, and held other town offices. He was married in 1871 to Miss Mary Stanton, of Batavia.

L. J. DAVIS, dealer in hardware and agricultural implements, and postmaster, Big Rock, Kane County, born in Big Rock, Jan. 16, 1854, son of William and Ann (Whildin) Davis; received his education in the public schools and at Aurora Seminary, where he spent one term. As a young man he began a general business, dealing in hardware and agricultural implements, which he has continued to the present time. Since Jan. 1, 1903, M. J. Whildin has been associated with him as a partner. They handle the Deering implements. Mr. Davis has been Town Clerk for several years, Township Treasurer of the School Board, Town Collector, and is now serving his third term as postmaster. He is a Mason, also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of the Globe. He was married March 24, 1884, to Miss Ida Denny, and of this union have been born three children; two sons (both deceased) and one daughter, now living.

T. H. DAY, banker and manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., born in Otsego County, N. Y., Dec. 21, 1838; came west in 1861, locating in Aurora; has been identified with various manufacturing enterprises in Aurora since 1880; served as Alderman, and was a member of the Board of Education; married on March 9, 1870, to Miss Edith Russell, of Jersey City, N. J.

HARRY ADELBERT DEAN, Principal of Public Schools, Elburn, Ill., born at East Foxborough, Mass., July 29, 1866; obtained his preparatory education in the public schools of his native State and Arcadia, Iowa, and later attended Cornell College (Mt. Vernon, Iowa) and the State Agricultural College (Ames, Iowa); has been principal of the Elburn schools since 1893; married August 2, 1893, Eva E. Riplets.

HERMAN F. DEMMER, Aurora, ex-Sheriff of Kane County, was born in Germany, in 1849. His parents died while he was still very young, and his early boyhood was spent in Iowa and Illinois among strangers. In 1861 he came to Aurora, and for some time thereafter was in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. From 1870 to 1875 he served in the United States army, a portion of the time being engaged in the suppression of the Ku-Klux Klan, and the support of the officers of the Internal Revenue Department in Kentucky, and the remainder of the time doing duty on the frontier. He was on the military escort that accompanied Red Cloud to the Union Pacific Railroad on his way to Washington, to make that treaty which he has since so faithfully kept. After leaving the army Mr. Demmer again entered the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, where he was engaged several years. In 1886 he became a member of the Aurora police force, and in two years rose to the position of chief, which he filled for ten years and four months. In the fall of 1898 he was elected Sheriff of Kane County, serving a term of four years. Since his retirement from that position he has been engaged in merchandising in Aurora. In 1903 he was a candidate for Mayor on the citizen's ticket. In 1881 he married Miss Alma Steele, who was born and reared in Aurora. They have five living children, all girls.

JOHN J. DENNEY (deceased), pioneer, Sugar Grove, born in New York, and came to Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, about 1838, where he settled on land purchased from the Government, soon becoming one of the noted pioneer farms of that region. The land on which he first settled continued to be his home until his death in 1871. Mr. Denney was twice Tax Collector, and held other local offices. His wife, born Nancy Snook, a native of New York, died in 1868. Their son, William H. Denney, was born on the family homestead in Sugar Grove Township, Sept. 3, 1840, and was educated in the old time district school. Trained to farming, he has followed that business all his life. He became the owner of the paternal homestead, and lived in the house in which he was born until his death, March 27, 1888. In 1871 Mr. Denney married Miss Harriet A. Senaka, a native of Rockford, Ill., who was reared in DeKalb County, and is still living in the old home. Her mother, who had lived to the extreme age of 99 years and seven months, died at Mrs. Denney's home in 1903. The living children of Mr. and Mrs. Denney are: Mrs. Lottie Danker, of Colorado; Clarence F., George E., Eddy R., and Lottie G., of Sugar Grove Township.

JOSEPH DENNEY, retired merchant, Aurora, Ill., was born in Kirby Moorside, Yorkshire, Eng., Feb. 15, 1828, where he grew to manhood, meanwhile learning the cabinet-maker's trade. In 1851 he came to the United States, and after stopping in Buffalo, N. Y., for a time, he located in Aurora, where he engaged in business as a manufacturer and dealer in furniture. The same year he was chosen village undertaker, and it is an interesting fact that, prior to his retirement from business in 1895, he had buried over 7,000 people. After he had been in the business for a time his brother William Denney became associated with him, and remained a member of the firm until his death in 1860. Later his brothers, Thomas, Hallifield and Ebenezer Denney, entered into partnership with him under the firm name of Denney Brothers, one of the best known furniture and undertaking houses in Northern Illinois. Joseph Denney, the head of the firm, is probably the oldest undertaker in the Northwest. He is the oldest living member of the First Congregational church of Aurora, in which he has been an active worker for more than fifty years. In 1856 he married Miss Emeline Elliott, daughter of William T. Elliott, one of the first settlers of Kane County. She was the first white girl born in Kane County, and also the first in Aurora. The furniture house which Mr. Den-ney founded is now conducted by his brother under the old name, and has had a continuous history of fifty-two years, with a wide reputation for honorable dealing.

EBENEZER DENNEY, now the head of the firm of Denney Brothers, furniture dealers, Aurora, Ill., was born in Kirby Moorside, Aug. 15, 1840, came to the United States as a boy 13 years old, and grew to manhood in Aurora. In 1861 he enlisted in the Seventy-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry. His regiment saw service in the West, and Mr. Denney was for some time attached to the Staff of Gen. M. F. Force. At various times he was detached from his regiment to fill important positions, and was later appointed Second Lieutenant in the Fiftieth United States Regiment Colored Troops, in which rank he was mustered out in the spring of 1866, after nearly five years of continuous service. After the close of his military life he returned to Aurora, and joined his brother in the furniture business of which he is now the head. His connection with the house, which began with his arrival in this country, has covered a period of forty-eight years, and he is known as one of the oldest merchants now in business in Aurora, where he is also a Director of the Aurora National Bank. At the present time he is serving his third term as a member of the Aurora Board of Aldermen, and was City Treasurer during 1901 and 1902. He has also been Treasurer of the Township. Mr. Denney is a Mason and an Odd Fellow, and is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. His first marriage occurred in 1860 with Miss Mary Elliott, daughter of W. T. Elliott, who died ten months after her marriage. In 1865 Mr. Denney married Miss Mary Nix, of Raymond, Miss.

HALLIFIELD DENNEY, retired merchant, was born in Kirby Moorside, Jan. 27, 1833, and spent the first twenty-one years of his life in England, where he was reared to mercantile life in his father's store. Coming to the United States in 1854, he joined his brothers, William and Joseph Denney, in the furniture business in Aurora, being continuously connected with this business until 1894, and doing his full share to give it the high standing it has always possessed. That year he sold out and retired to enjoy the fruits of a well-spent life. Long regarded as one of the pillars of the First Congregational church, the year 1904 will complete his half century of membership in that body. In 1854 he married Miss Alice A. Hardin, also a native of Kirby Moorside, and their voyage to this country was their wedding trip. Their first home was in Aurora, and here they have since resided.

THOMAS DENNEY, retired merchant, was born in Kirby Moorside, April 1, 1826, where he was reared to the business of manufacturing and dealing in furniture. After his marriage he established himself in the furniture trade at Kirby Moorside, where he remained until 1855. In that year he came to the United States, and established himself in Aurora, where his brothers, Joseph, William and Hallifield, were already in business. Upon his arrival he entered the store, and later became one of the partners in the business. He took a prominent part in the upbuilding of the business, and was identified with it until 1882. That year he retired from the firm of Denney Brothers and started a furniture business of his own, which he conducted for ten years, and then sold it to retire altogether from business. In 1855 he became a member of the First Congregational church, into which three of his brothers had already been received, and of which he has been a stanch and faithful member to the present time. It is an interesting fact that the five brothers should have united with this church, and that four of them have worshipped in this church about a half-century each. Mr. Denney married Miss Mary Fowler, of Kirby Moorside, in 1850. She died in Aurora in 1899.

HARVEY B. DENSMORE (deceased), pioneer, Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, Ill., was born in Windsor County, Vt., Sept. 15, 1815, son of Job and Mary I. (Sprague) Densmore, and grandson of Israel Sprague, a Revolutionary soldier who was a participant in the battles of Lexington and Bunker Hill. The subject of this sketch grew up in his native State, and was educated in the schools and Cortlandville Academy, Cortlandville, N. Y. He came to Kane County, Ill., in 1836, locating in what is now Sugar Grove Township. His trip from Vermont to Chicago was made by team and Chicago was then a mere village. After spending a short time in Chicago, he purchased a land claim in Sugar Grove Township and moved into a log cabin which occupied the site of the home in which he lived until his death, which occurred Oct. 15, 1898. He was a successful farmer, a capable manager, and a man of influence in the community. An ardent opponent of slavery, he was known for many years as one of three Abolitionists in Sugar Grove Township, and in the days of the "Underground Railway," he was in close touch with its operations and had a personal acquaintance with some of the noted Illinois Abolitionists. In later years he was an active member of the Republican party. He taught the first school in Sugar Grove Township, helped erect the first school-house, and was always interested in the advancement of educational work. In the later years of his life he set on foot, with other early settlers, a movement to preserve the pioneer history of Sugar Grove Township, and much valuable information was gotten together in this connection, but unfortunately it was destroyed before it was put into print. He married first in 1836 Miss Katie Densmore, who died in 1851, leaving one daughter, Mrs. James Carter. He was afterwards married to Miss Mary J. Mather, who died in 1888. The children of the second marriage were Charles M., Mrs. Grace (Densmore) Lee, Mrs. Jane (Densmore) Benjamin and Mrs. Jessie (Densmore) Paul.

SHELDON DICKINSON (deceased), farmer, born at Hatfield, Canada, in 1832, and grew to manhood in his native country; came to Kane County, Ill., in 1854, locating on a farm near Dundee; married Catharine Hodges and their living children are: Charles S. and Frederick S. Dickinson; removed to Minnesota where he met his death by drowning in 1860. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Dickinson returned to her old home and still resides at Dundee.

THOMAS A. DILLON, retired miller, Carpentersville, Kane County, Ill., born in Vienna, N. Y., March 17, 1823, son of Thomas A. and Lucy (Spike) Dillon; attended school until thirteen years of age, when he started work for himself; learned the miller's trade and followed that occupation at different intervals in New York, Ohio and Michigan until 1849, when he joined a gold-hunting expedition sent out from New York to California by Dr. Townsend. Mr. Dillon engaged in mining in California and later went to the Sandwich Islands. He came to Illinois in 1853 and located permanently at Carpentersville in 1856, where he took charge of a flouring-mill, which he operated for twenty-six years. He retired from active business in 1882, but has lived continuously in Carpentersville, being at the present time (1903) one of the oldest residents in the village. He was married in 1853 to Malvina Knowles, of Sullivan County, N. Y.

CHARLES B. DODSON (deceased), pioneer settler, born June 5, 1809, and died in Geneva, Ill., in 1891; came west in 1833, locating near the site of Batavia in 1834, where he platted the town of Clybournville; in company with Archibald Clybourn he built the first docks in the city of Chicago. Between 1835 and 1837 he removed the Pottawatomie Indians from this part of Illinois to Iowa and Kansas under contract with the Government; built the first store and saw-mill in this region at Clybournville in 1834; was one of the most widely known of the pioneers and was leading citizen of Geneva until his death. His wife was Harriet Warren before her marriage, and she was a daughter of the pioneer after whom Warrenville, Ill., was named.

CHARLES H. DODSON, Geneva, Ill., born in Chicago, Ill., Dec. 1, 1838. His education, "if any" (quoting himself), was obtained in the Geneva public schools, and at Bell & Stevens' Commercial College, Chicago, Ill., in 1858. The "only distinction acquired," (according to the same authority) is in having had his home in Kane County for sixty-two years continuously, excepting five years spent on the Pacific Coast, and five years in South Dakota, the only event in his life, out of the ordinary, being a journey across the plains to California in 1860. He writes himself down as an old-time Abolitionist and a rock-rooted Republican.

WILSON H. DOE, Bank Cashier, Elgin, Ill., born in Janesville, Wis., Feb. 2, 1858; came to Elgin Feb. 8, 1882, and accepted a position as bookkeeper with the Home National Bank, in which he became Assistant Cashier in 1885, and in 1890 was elected Cashier. In 1892, when the Home Savings Bank was organized, he was elected Cashier of that institution, and is still filling that position. Mr. Doe was married in September, 1882, to Miss Maude G. Palmer, of Chicago.

WILLIAM DONOVAN (deceased), farmer and stock-raiser, Elburn, Kane County, Ill., born in County Waterford, Ireland, June 7, 1822; grew to manhood in his native country, where he obtained his education in private schools, and also learned surveying; came to Long Island, N. Y., in 1850, where for six years he engaged in farming. In 1856 he came west, journeying as far as Fort Dodge, Iowa, where he purchased land, but later returned to Illinois and bought a farm in Kaneville Township, Kane County, and established his home at Elburn, where he passed the remainder of his life and died in 1888. Mr. Donovan was married in 1853 to Julia Lucey, daughter of James and Helen Lucey, of Long Island, N. Y. At the present time (1904) Mrs. Helen Riordan of Elburn, Ill., is the only surviving member of this pioneer family.

JAMES DORSEY.

JAMES DORSEY, live-stock dealer, Gilbert's, Ill., was born April 6, 1872, son of Michael and Mary (Ryan) Dorsey, and received his education from the public schools. When he was nine years old he started out for himself, commencing work for Stewart H. Christie at $3 per month. He was cared for as one of the family, and sent to school during the winter until he was twenty-one years of age. In 1895 he began buying calves, taking a one-horse wagon for transportation purposes, and through his honest and upright dealing with the public he has been very successful, and has established a large business interest throughout his community as well as in Mexico. His selection of draft and high-class horses and Holstein cows is second to none in Illinois. He has a commodious sales-stable at Gilbert's, where his horses and cattle are exhibited. He was married June 5, 1895, to Miss Jennie Cooley, and four children have come to bless this union: Nora Marie, Ruth L., John S. and James.

FRED H. DOTY, manufacturer, Batavia, Ill., born in Aurora, Ill., Feb. 18, 1855; educated in the public schools of his native city, and in young manhood engaged in office work in Batavia; in 1890 became connected with the United States Wind Engine & Pump Company, with which he is still identified as assistant secretary. Mr. Doty was married in 1882 to Miss Helen Burton, of Batavia.

ANDREW N. DOWNER, Elgin, Ill., born at West Vienna, Oneida County, N. Y., June 4, 1834, son of Don Sebastian and Lucinda (Force) Downer, was educated in the public schools of his native State and came west in 1858, establishing his home in Chicago, where he became connected with the lumber trade. In the fall of 1862 he enlisted in what was known as the Chicago Board of Trade Battery, and served in the Union army until discharged on account of physical disability. Returning from the war, he engaged in the lumber trade in Chicago with the well-known firm of Ludington, Wells & Van Schaick, continuing in this connection until 1879, when, on account of failing health, he removed to Iowa and engaged in farming and stock-raising. He lived in Iowa until 1892, when he retired from active business life and has since resided in Elgin. Mr. Downer was married in 1866 to Miss Mary A. Falconer, daughter of Laflin Falconer, who came from Scotland to this country in 1844, locating in Chicago, and is still living on the farm (now on the edge of the city of Chicago) which he purchased from George Smith, Chicago's first banker. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Downer are: Charles N., of Woodstock, Ill.; Albert N., of Cass County, Iowa, and Mrs. F. M. Adams, of Elgin, Ill.

GEORGE J. DOWNING, retired farmer, Elburn, Ill., born at North Hempstead, Queens County, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1830; educated in the public schools of his native State, and removed to Virgil Township, Kane County, Ill., in 1869, where he engaged in farming and continued to follow that occupation until 1890, when he removed to Elburn and has since lived retired. He was married Feb. 6, 1861, to Phoebe Albertson.

HICKS A. DOWNING, farmer, Elburn, Ill., born at Roslin, L. I., N. Y., Dec. 1, 1863, and has spent most of his business career as a farmer in Kane County; married, July 13, 1893, Emily C. Mott.

W. HARRISON DOWNING, druggist, Aurora, Ill., born in Norwich, Vt., July 18, 1840, son of Rufus and Sarah (Hayward) Downing, was reared on a farm and educated in the public schools and in Kimball Union Academy, Plainfield, N. H. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted in the Sixteenth Vermont Volunteer Infantry, remaining in the service until discharged for disability. For some years he was engaged in teaching, after which he embarked in the drug business at Hanover, N. H. In 1870 he came to Illinois, and afterward taught at LaFox, St. Charles, Bald Mound, Riverside and Geneva. In 1889 he discontinued teaching and established himself as a druggist in Geneva, but later removed to Aurora, where he at once took a position as a leading druggist, which he maintained until his death, May 14, 1900. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and bore an active part in the work of the New England Congregational church. In 1873 he married Miss Louise Parker, daughter of John W. Parker, who came to this country from Oxford, England, and was an early settler at St. Charles. Of his family still survive Mrs. Downing and her daughter, Mrs. Robert B. Scott, both of whom reside in Aurora.

CHARLES R. DUGAN, farmer and stock-raiser, Sugar Grove, Ill., born in Big Rock Township, Kane County, March 12, 1851; educated in the public schools, and began farming in his early manhood, and, with the exception of a short period spent in school teaching, has since followed that occupation; married, in 1880, Miss Ida Benjamin.

GEORGE H. DUGAN, farmer, Big Rock Township, Kane County, born in Paterson, N. J., Sept. 17, 1842; came west with his parents in 1846, who established their home in Big Rock Township, where George H. attended the old-time schools and was trained to farming, and has since followed that vocation on a part of the old farm on which his father first settled.

WILLIAM DUGAN (deceased), pioneer, was born in Dublin, Ireland, and came to the United States in his early manhood, locating first in Paterson, N. J.; came to Kane County, Ill., in 1846, and lived on a farm in Big Rock Township until his death, which occurred in 1876. The members of his family now living are William H., of Aurora; George H., of Big Rock; Charles R., of Sugar Grove, and Mary E. Dugan, of Big Rock.

DELOS DUNTON, manufacturer and banker, Carpentersville, Ill., was born in Hannibal, Oswego County, N. Y., June 28, 1832, son of William and Mary (Cole) Dunton, and was brought by his parents to Illinois in 1838. The Dunton family had its first home at Deer Grove, but the family removed to a farm near Bloomingdale, DuPage County, the following year, and in 1842 spent a year at Southport (now Kenosha), Wis., after which they located at Dundee, Kane County, Ill. Here young Delos Dunton completed his schooling, and then entered into the wool-carding and cloth-dressing business with his father. He was connected with the pioneer store of J. A. Carpenter, at Carpentersville, from 1850 to 1860, the last two years of this period being a partner in the establishment. Until the fall of 1863 he was engaged in fruit-growing in Michigan, when he went to Niagara County, N. Y., and with others started what was perhaps one of the first attempts to establish a self-supporting manual labor school in this country. The experiment did not prove entirely successful, and in 1866 Mr. Dunton returned to Carpentersville, where he formed a connection with the Illinois Iron and Bolt Company, and for twenty-five years, ending in 1891, he was connected with this company, being treasurer of the corporation for a part of the time. In the meantime he was chosen President of the Star Manufacturing Company, a position which he filled for many years, and only surrendered when partially retired from business. He helped organize the First National Bank of Dundee in 1901, of which he was President until 1904. He has no interest in politics, and has not cast a vote for forty years.

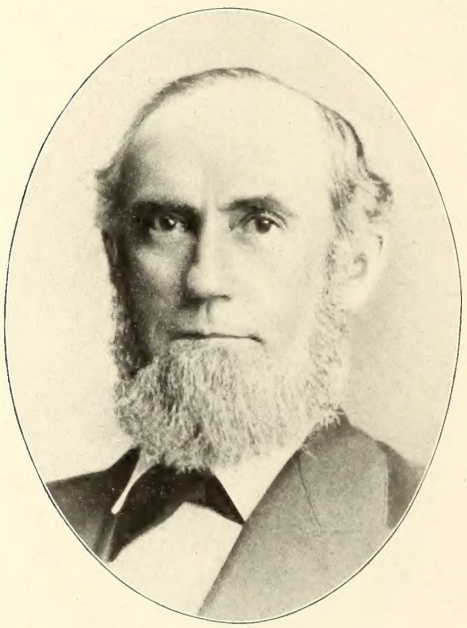
JAMES EAGER, coal merchant, Batavia, Ill., was born in County Kerry, Ireland, Dec. 29, 1840, the son of James and Julia (O'Connor) Eager. He received his early education in the schools of his native country, being fifteen years of age when he came to the United States. Arriving in this country, he lived in Boston and that vicinity for about seven years, and in 1863 came to Illinois and established his home in Batavia. He was variously employed for several years afterwards, but eventually became connected with the coal trade, and embarked in the business on his own account in 1887. In connection with the coal trade, Mr. Eager carries a stock of lime, cement, tile and wood, and is one of the oldest dealers in these lines in Batavia. In 1863 he married Miss Mary Manning, of Massachusetts.

CHARLES C. EARLE (deceased), manufacturer and banker, born at Newburgh, N. Y., July 14, 1822; engaged in the leather trade in Worcester, Mass., in early life, and continued in business in that city until 1856, when he came to Aurora, where he was at first engaged in the iron foundry business, and later in the lumber trade, retiring from business in 1872.

CHARLES H. EATINGER, farmer and stock-raiser, Dundee Township, Kane County, was born in Ravenna, Ohio, April 24, 1848, and was brought by his parents to Illinois in 1855, when they made a settlement in Bureau County. Mr. Eatinger secured a public school education, and was trained to farm life, but operated at one time in butter and cheese-making. In 1878 he purchased the Wanzer dairy farm, three miles west of Dundee, and has since been recognized as one of the leading dairy farmers of the county. In 1887 he started a horse and cattle ranch in Cherry County, Neb., which he has conducted up to the present time, his three sons being there and having direct management. This ranch contains about 4,000 acres, and is a model farm. Mr. Eatinger is also interested in Kansas lands, and has all his life been a dealer in stock. He is a member of the orders of Free Masons, Knights of the Maccabees, and Knights of the Globe. In 1870 he married Miss Jeannette Crichton, daughter of James Crichton, one of the pioneers of Kane County.



CHARLES H. EATON, manufacturer, Batavia, Ill., born in Pawtucket, R. I., in 1849, son of John and Eliza (Pike) Eaton, and was reared and educated in Massachusetts. When sixteen years old he came to Illinois, and finished his schooling at Dwight. In early manhood he became interested in railroad construction, and later in the building of water-works along the lines of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad from Chariton to Fort Kearney in Nebraska, being thus engaged for eight years. In 1886 he came to Batavia to enter into the employment of the United States Wind Engine and Pump Company, and has since filled various positions with that concern, for ten years being general sales agent for its business in twenty-eight States. He is a Mason, and affiliated with the Chicago Commandery Knights Templar. In 1870 he married Miss Clara, daughter of John Wesley Wood, of Warrenville, Ill.

CHARLES J. ECKLAND.

CHARLES J. ECKLAND, late Superintendent Illinois Sugar Refining Company, Geneva, Ill., born in Jonkoping, Sweden, Feb. 19, 1875, son of Solomon and Christina Eckland; was brought by his parents to Geneva, Ill., where he attended the local schools, beginning his technical training with a course in the Scranton Correspondence School. His practical fitness for the position he now holds was demonstrated in the connection he had with the Charles Pope Glucose Works at Geneva, in which he began as office-boy, working his way up, through the laboratory and foremanship of several departments, to the position of Assistant Superintendent in 1901. The following year, although only twenty-seven years of age, he became Superintendent of the great factory. This position he recently resigned to accept another in connection with the construction of the largest independent starch and glucose plant in the United States, for the J. C. Hubinger Brothers Company at Keokuk, Iowa. Mr. Eckland is a Thirty-first Degree Mason, Master of Geneva Lodge, No. 139, A. F. & A. M., and an ardent promoter of Masonic interests.

JOHN K. EDDOWES.

JOHN K. EDDOWES (deceased), merchant, Geneva, Ill., born in Middletown, Del., Nov. 17, 1826, spent his early life near Philadelphia, where he attended school. In 1838 the family removed to Savanna, Ill., where they were neighbors to General Grant and his family in after years. When Mr. Eddowes became a young man he engaged in the drug trade, which he followed until his death, Aug. 7, 1897, having spent the last twenty years of his life in Geneva. He was married June 26, 1878, to Mrs. Sarah J. Akers, of Chicago, whose first husband was a charter member of the Chicago Board of Trade. Mr. Eddowes was one of the pioneer Unitarians of Geneva.

TIMOTHY H. EDDOWES, clergyman, Geneva, Ill., was born in Middletown, Del., May 7, 1837, and was brought by his parents into Illinois the following year. His education was secured in the public schools and the Platteville Academy, Platteville, Wis. He fitted for the ministry at the Theological School, Meadville, Penn., and in 1865 was called to the Unitarian church in Geneva, which he served until 1870. That year he went east and served churches in Littleton Mass., and Farmington, Maine. In 1875 he returned to Geneva, where he has since made his home, though not engaged in active clerical labor.

ALLEN EDDY (deceased), pioneer farmer, Campton Township, Kane County, born in New York State in 1803; trained to farming, and followed that occupation in New York State, later in Ohio, and still later in Illinois; came to Illinois in 1852, and resided in Campton Township, Kane County, until his death in 1877; married Miss Sophia Beardsley, of Ohio.

HOMER EDDY, farmer, Geneva Township, Kane County; born in Vermillion, Erie County, Ohio, Sept. 16, 1847, son of Allen and Sophia (Beardsley) Eddy; came to Illinois with his father in 1852; in 1864 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving nearly four months. After the close of the war he engaged in farming in Campton Township, Kane County, remaining there until 1891, when he purchased a farm near Geneva, where he has since resided. He was married in 1869 to Miss Amelia M. Kinnear, daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth Kinnear, pioneer settlers of Kane County.

HENRY C. EDWARDS, farmer and manufacturer, Dundee, Ill., born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., July 14, 1835, son of Alfred and Lucinda (Bosworth) Edwards, in 1837 was taken by his parents to Chicago, then a frontier village, to which the father and husband had gone the previous year. In 1838 they removed to the settlement at Dundee, Kane County, where Mr. Edwards opened a pioneer store. There Henry C. Edwards was reared to manhood, and there he obtained his education in the village schools, supplemented by attendance at Beloit College and at Bell's Commercial College, Chicago. In early life he became interested in the store with his father, and later turned his attention to farming, in which he has been quite steadily engaged to the present time. From 1888 to 1898 he was President and General Manager of the Illinois Iron and Brass Works at Carpentersville. In August, 1861, he enlisted in the Fifty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered out at Rome, Ga., Oct. 24, 1864, at the end of three years and two months of active and honorable service. He is a member of Dundee Post, No. 519, G. A. R., and has been its Commander. In 1865 he married Miss Ellen A. Dunton, daughter of William and Mary Dunton, pioneer settlers of Dundee.

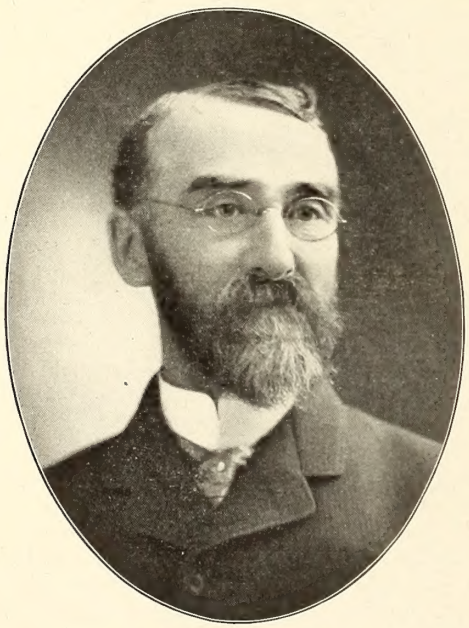
ROBERT S. EGAN, lawyer, Elgin, born in Sycamore, Ill., May 10, 1857, and grew to manhood on a Kane County farm, to which his father retired in 1859. His literary education was secured in the public schools and at Elgin Academy; later he read law in the office of Hon. H. B. Willis, now Judge of the Sixteenth Illinois Judicial Circuit, and was admitted to the Bar of the Supreme Court in 1882. He began practice in Elgin, and has since given his attention to his profession up to the present time (1903). From 1883 to 1899 he was associated with Hon. C. F. Irwin, now Justice of the United States Court, Second District Oklahoma, and from 1883 to 1885 served as City Attorney of Elgin. In May, 1903, he was appointed Corporation Counsel of Elgin. Politically a Democrat, he has been one of the leaders of that party for a number of years.

GEORGE B. ELDEN, retired banker, Elburn, Ill.; born in York County, Maine, May 19, 1832; located in Kane County, Ill., in 1864, where he was engaged in the lumber trade for over twenty years; purchased the Bank of Elburn in 1887 and conducted that institution until 1900, when he retired from active business; married Nov. 3, 1855.



FRANCIS M. ELLIOTT, M. D., physician, Aurora, born in that city April 5, 1844, son of the old pioneer, William T. Elliott, mentioned elsewhere in this volume; was reared on the paternal estate, educated in the local schools and at Jennings Seminary, Aurora, and began his medical studies under the direction of Dr. F. S. Hance, graduating from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in February, 1869. He began practice at Blairstown, Iowa, but in 1872 returned to Aurora to succeed to the practice of Dr. Hance. In the thirty years that have elapsed he has built a fine reputation as a skillful, conscientious and faithful family physician. He has been the inventor and patentee of several valuable medical appliances, which now sell throughout the United States and are highly approved by the profession everywhere. He is a member of the Illinois State Medical Society, and has been City Physician of Aurora for several years. His recreation from hard work is painting in oil, and several of his portraits and landscapes have marked merit. In 1870 he married Miss Lydia, daughter of Rev. Azro and Jane (Hotchkiss) French, born in Nuggar, India, while her father was a missionary in that country. Of this marriage were born three children: Dr. Frank A., of Chicago; Arthur B., an artist of Chicago; and Mrs. Fannie E. Grass, of Chicago.

WILLIAM T. ELLIOTT (deceased), born in Connecticut in 1810, through both parents being descended from Scotch and English ancestry; was taken by his parents to Pennsylvania in 1812, and thence to New York, where he grew up. In 1834 he came to Aurora, Ill., where he purchased land from the Government and became a successful farmer. In 1835 he married Rebecca, daughter of Elijah Pierce, who came from the East and settled at Montgomery, Kane County, three years previous. This was the first marriage in Kane County, and their oldest born was the first white child born in the county. They began housekeeping in a log structure on Fox River, and here their lives were passed. The Elliott farm is now a part of Aurora. Here Mr. Elliott died in 1894, aged 84, and Mrs. Elliott in 1900, at the age of 82.

DE GOY B. ELLIS, lawyer, Elgin, Ill., born in Blaine, Boone County, Ill., Nov. 27, 1877, son of W. B. and Sophia (Bowman) Ellis, was reared on a farm and educated at the Belvidere High School and at Dixon College, Dixon, graduating from the latter in the class of 1897 with the degrees of B. O. and B. S.; two years later graduated from the Illinois College of Law, and in October of same year opened an office in Elgin, where he is engaged in professional labor. In 1903 he was elected City Attorney by a plurality of 588 votes. He is a director of the Fraternal Reserve Life Association, with headquarters at Knoxville; is also giving special attention to insurance and corporate law. Mr. Ellis belongs to the Greek letter fraternity Phi Alpha Beta, the Court of Honor, and the Elgin City Club, and one or two other organizations.

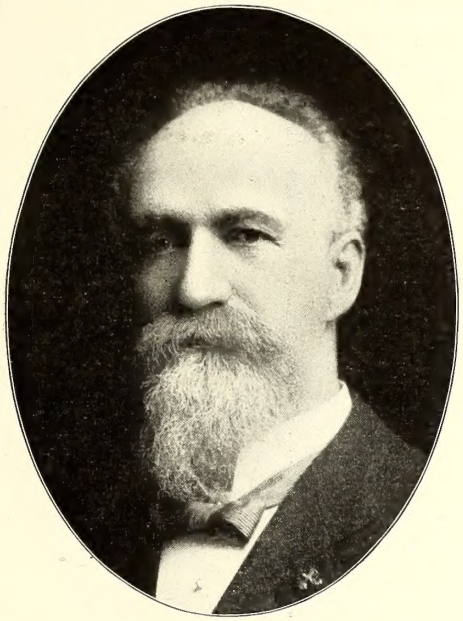
STEPHEN R. ELLITHORPE, pioneer farmer, Burlington Township, Kane County, born at Sheldon, Vt., April 16, 1819; came west, driving across the country with team and wagon, arriving in Burlington Township in 1841, where he took up a quarter section of land; conducted his farm in Burlington Township until the time of his death, Jan. 4, 1902. He was married in 1840 to Miss Emily C. Smith, of Canada, who died Nov. 13, 1898.



EDWARD S. ENO.

EDWARD S. ENO, Superintendent Borden Condensed Milk Company, Elgin, Ill., was born in Honesdale, Penn., May 26, 1848, received his education in the public schools, and in 1868 was clerk in a hardware store. The following year he entered the employ of the Borden Condensed Milk Company, at Brewster, N. Y., coming to Elgin in 1870. In 1881 he was appointed Superintendent of the factory, and is still serving in that capacity. Mr. Eno is a Republican. He was a member of the old Volunteer Fire Department for eight years, and, at the close of that service, held the position of Assistant Fire Marshal. He served one term on the Board of Education and one term in the City Council. While a member of the Council he was Chairman of the Special Committee on Water-Works, and it was largely through the efforts of this committee that the present system of water-works was installed—the contract for the same being let by this committee at that time. He also served on the Board of Water Commissioners for eight years; at the present time is acting as one of the Fire and Police Commissioners of the city of Elgin; is also a member of the Board of Trustees of the Northern Illinois Hospital for the Insane.

WILLIAM H. ERVIN, farmer, Dundee Township, Kane County, Ill., was born in Armstrong County, Penn., Aug. 22, 1852, son of John and Cornelia (Woodruff) Ervin, and reared in his native State; was taken by his parents into Ohio in 1860, and received his educational training in the schools of these two States. In early manhood he was employed in the iron works at Martin's Ferry. In 1875 he came to Illinois, and three years later settled on the farm where he now resides, three and a half miles northwest of the village of Dundee, where he has been largely engaged in dairy-farming and bee culture. Fraternally he has wide connections, being a Mason and Odd Fellow, Modern Woodman, and a Knight of the Maccabees. In 1878 he married Miss Margaret Crichton, daughter of John Crichton, one of the pioneer settlers of Dundee Township.

WILLIAM C. ESTEE, bank cashier, Aurora, Kane County, Ill., was born at Le Roy, Genesee County, N. Y., June 6, 1855; educated in the public schools and Le Roy Academy; came to Aurora in January, 1878, as bookkeeper for the Second National Bank (now known as the Old Second National Bank). He has been cashier of the Second National Bank for nine years (1879-88) and of the Merchants' National Bank for sixteen years.

HON. HENRY H. EVANS, Aurora, statesman and financier, was born March 9, 1836, in Toronto, Canada, a son of Griffith and Elizabeth Evans, both natives of Harrisburg, Penn., and was brought by his parents to Aurora, Ill., in June, 1841, where his father had secured employment as a millwright. Mr. Evans began his business career when quite young by purchasing the Fitch House, then known as Aurora's leading hotel, and still doing business under the name of Hotel Evans. He remained in this business until he was elected to the lower branch of the State Legislature in 1876, where he served one term. In 1880 he was chosen a member of the State Senate, to which he has been continuously re-elected to the present time, and for which he was renominated May 4, 1904. Since 1876 he has been engaged in various business enterprises, and has been very successful in real-estate deals. He was one of the organizers and for some years the President and Manager of the Aurora Street Car lines, built the Aurora, Otsego & Yorkville Electric Railway, and organized Riverview Park, the chief park of Aurora, and one of great popularity. Mr. Evans built the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern line from Aurora to Joliet, and is President of the Interstate Independent Telephone and Telegraph Company, Vice-President and Director of the German-American National Bank, and a Director of the Aurora Silver-Plating Company. For three and a half years he served in the Civil War as a member of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was Colonel on the staffs of Governors Cullom, Hamilton, Oglesby and Fifer. He was a member of the Aurora City Council when first elected to the Legislature. In 1858 he married Miss Alice M. Rhodes, daughter of A. C. Rhodes, of Aurora, but a native of England. She died in Aurora Oct. 6, 1897. One son, Arthur R. Evans, is in the telephone business with his father.

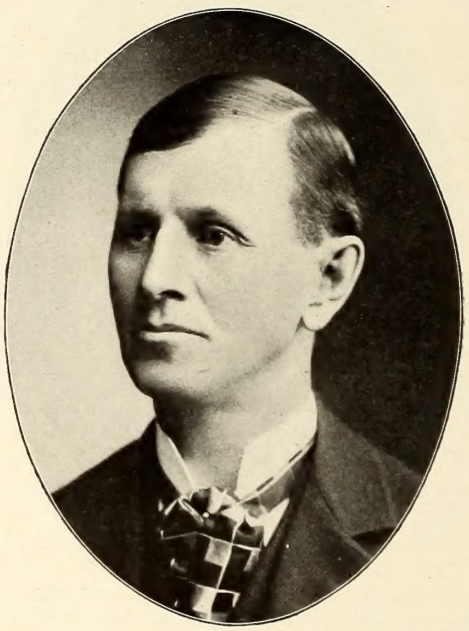
JOHN D. EVANS, farmer and stock-breeder, Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, Ill., born in Sugar Grove, Oct. 25, 1865, son of Isaac Evans, one of the pioneer settlers of the town; was brought up under the parental roof, and received his education in the public schools and the Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial Institute. For a time he taught school a portion of each year, and then turned his attention to farming and stock-raising, in which he has been quite successful. Taking an active part in politics, Mr. Evans soon became noted as one of the more prominent young Republicans of the county, who cared more to help his party and aid his friends than he did for office for himself. Locally he has filled several positions, and has been much interested in the construction of better school houses in Sugar Grove Township. Mr. Evans belongs to the Order of Elks, the Modern Woodmen, the Royal Neighbors, and the Yeomen of America. In 1896 he married Miss Nellie M., daughter of William West, of Sugar Grove.



ISAAC EVANS, pioneer farmer, Sugar Grove, Ill., was born in Caermarthenshire, South Wales, in 1825; grew up in his native country and was trained to farming; came to the United States in 1856, and first lived in Iowa for a year; later came to Illinois and established his home in the town of Squaw Grove, DeKalb County, and afterwards removed to the farm where he now resides in Sugar Grove Township. At the present time (1903) Mr. and Mrs. Evans have lived in Sugar Grove Township forty-one years. In 1856 Mr. Evans was married to Miss Hannah Walters, and their living children are David T., Thomas W., Annie E. and John D.

THOMAS B. EVANS, farmer and stock-raiser, Geneva Township, Kane County, born in Chester County, Penn., Oct. 30, 1839; reared and educated in his native State; trained to farming, and followed that occupation in Pennsylvania until 1870, when he came to Illinois; purchased a farm near Geneva in 1878, where he has since resided, giving special attention to breeding Chester White hogs and Oxford Down sheep. He was married in 1865 to Miss Mary Ann Todd, daughter of John Todd, of Mochlan, Chester County, Penn., one of the founders of the stock-yards at Philadelphia.

JACOB EYE, merchant, Aurora, Ill., was born in the city where he now resides, Feb. 21, 1857, son of Joseph Eye, who came to Aurora in 1852 from Jackson, Mich., but was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. The elder Eye was one of the early German residents of Aurora, and was still living in 1903 at the age of eighty-three years. The subject of this sketch grew to manhood in Aurora, was educated in the public schools and learned the tinner's trade. His first business venture was in the tinware trade; in 1883 he added to this a stock of hardware, and has since been engaged in this line of business, the present commercial house of which he is the proprietor being the successor of the little tin-shop which he started in his early manhood. While devoting the larger portion of his time to merchandising, Mr. Eye has also been identified with other enterprises in Aurora and elsewhere. He was married in 1884 to Miss Mary Reising, daughter of Joseph Reising, who died in 1902.

JOHN FARRELL (deceased), pioneer farmer of Dundee Township, Kane County, Ill., born in Ireland in 1803; came to the United States in boyhood, locating with the first settlers in Dundee Township in 1837, and became one of the largest land owners in the township, his estate, at the time of his death in 1879, embracing about 900 acres. He was an excellent type of the hardy, courageous pioneer, as well as an enterprising and sagacious business man. He married Catherine Donovan, who died in 1865, and their children were: Jeremiah (deceased), John (deceased), Timothy, Dennis and William.

WILLIAM FARRELL, farmer and stock-raiser, Dundee Township, Kane County, Ill., born in the township where he now resides, April 12, 1840, son of John and Catherine (Donovan) Farrell; educated in the pioneer schools and located in 1868 on the farm which he now owns, and where he resides; has been Road Commissioner for twenty years, besides holding other township offices; married, in 1868, Catherine McCartney, who died in 1880, leaving four living children, viz.: Catherine, J. W., W. A. and E. C.

CHARLES F. FIELD.

CHARLES F. FIELD, banker, Geneva, Ill., born at Ellisburg, Jefferson County, N. Y., June 20, 1853; received his early education in the schools of his native town, which he left in 1867, when he accompanied his parents to Batavia, Ill., where he attended school two years and then spent six months on a farm. He was engaged in the express business for one year, and when he was nineteen years of age established himelf in dairy farming, an occupation he followed for nineteen years. In the fall of 1889, in company with W. H. Gaunt, he established the Bank of Geneva, of which he took the entire management. In 1901 he purchased his partner's interest in the bank, and is still engaged in its management. He is also interested in fire insurance. Mr. Field has served several terms as City Treasurer of Geneva, and is now the Treasurer of the State Training School for Girls, a well-known state institution. He was married in 1879 to Miss Sarah E. White, of Elburn, Ill., born in Jefferson County, N. Y. Mr. Field is a public-spirited citizen, and has served three years as a member of the Geneva Board of Education.

DEAN FERSON (deceased), pioneer farmer, St. Charles, Ill., born at Bradford, N. H., April 25, 1810; came to Chicago in 1833 and located on a claim near St. Charles, Kane County, in May, 1834, where he resided until his death, and his estate is still in the possession of his family. In political sentiment he was a vigilant Abolitionist during the ante-bellum period, and later a stanch Republican. Mr. Ferson was married in September, 1836, to Prudence E. Ward, theirs being one of the first marriage ceremonies performed in Kane County. They were the parents of eight children, five of whom are living—Abbie Ferson, Mrs. Maria Wheeler, Kirk, Sampson V. and Frank. Mr. Ferson died May 31, 1892, his wife surviving him until Nov. 28, 1902.

JOHN F. FIERKE, manufacturer, Dundee, Ill., was born in Oelsdorf, Pomerania, Germany, Jan. 25, 1860, and was brought to this country by his parents when about one year old. They settled in Dundee, Ill., where young John F. was reared to manhood, and educated in the German Lutheran parochial school. He left school to enter the employ of the Illinois Iron and Bolt Company as assistant shipping clerk, six weeks later becoming shipping clerk. In January, 1883, he was transferred to the general offices of the company, where he was employed in various capacities until 1898, when he was made General Superintendent. Two years later he was promoted to the office of General Manager of the business, which position he is still filling. For many years he has been a director of the corporation, and his connection with the company covers a period of twenty-six years, during which he has done much to promote its welfare. He began his business life earning seventy-five cents a day, and is now at the head of a great corporation with a large plant, of which he is one of the principal owners. In October, 1883, Mr. Fierke was married to Miss Augusta Sternberg, daughter of Carl Sternberg, of Dundee.

J. MOULTON FISH (retired), Aurora, Ill., born in Danby, Vt., May 27, 1816, son of John and Abigail (Moulton) Fish, was reared in his native State, where he received a common-school education. Being a member of a large family he was thrown upon his own resources at an early age, and from that time was variously employed, at times working on a farm or holding a clerkship in a store, as opportunity offered. For nine years he was connected with a general store in Danby, and while thus employed had a wide range of experience in the work of buying, selling, manufacturing, etc. When twenty-four years of age he received from the Vermont Legislature an appointment as a Justice of the Peace, filling the position acceptably for several terms. During his residence in Danby he also served for a time as Deputy Sheriff. In 1842 he engaged in the marble business in that place, which he conducted successfully for a number of years. About the same time he became interested in the Western Vermont Railroad, the charter for which he had been instrumental in securing from the Vermont Legislature after a spirited contest extending over two years. While thus employed he also succeeded in obtaining a charter for a bank at Danby. The railroad was built in due time, but, being insufficiently financed, Mr. Fish suffered a heavy loss in consequence of the failure of the company. Having removed to Buffalo, N. Y., about 1853, he there engaged in the lumber business as a member of the firm of Mann, Vail & Co., in which he continued some six years. In the meantime, having made a trip to Illinois, he purchased a farm near Lockport, in Will County, and in 1859 removed to that place, where he remained about seven years. While there, in addition to looking after a couple of farms, he was also engaged in the livery business and, for a time, in settling up the affairs of John Arnold, who had been a well-known dealer in Yankee notions throughout the West. He also served for some time as Deputy Sheriff of Will County and as Marshal of the town of Lockport. In 1865 Mr. Fish removed to Aurora, and for several years gave his attention to farming and the buying and selling of real estate, especially farm lands, still later locating on a fine farm in Kaneville Township, where he continued to reside eleven years. For a part of this time he was quite successfully engaged in the business of dairy farming. During the second year of his residence in Kaneville he was chosen a Justice of the Peace for the township, serving in that capacity until he again removed to Aurora, which has been his home for the past thirty years. Since returning to Aurora Mr. Fish has found employment for his activities in looking after the improvement of his property and other interests. Meanwhile he has served ten years as a member of the Board of Aldermen of the city of Aurora, nine years as a Justice of the Peace and nine years as ex-officio member of the Board of Town Auditors. He has also served four years as Deputy Sheriff, and from early manhood has taken an active part in public affairs. While a citizen of Vermont he was an important factor in securing the enactment of the prohibition law in that State. Mr. Fish was married in 1845 to Martha B. Smith, of Danby, Vt., who died in Aurora in 1896. In 1898 he married, as his second wife, Mrs. Mary Bauman, then a resident of Brookhaven, Miss., but a native of Vermont and brought up in that State.

ALEXANDER M. FITCHIE, farmer, East Plato, Kane County, Ill., born at Kinloch of Kinloch, Perthshire, Scotland, Feb. 6, 1870, son of James and Grace (McIntosh) Fitchie; was brought to the United States in his infancy, and grew to manhood in Kane County, Ill., where he obtained his education in the public schools, in Elgin Academy and in Drew's Business College. After leaving school he joined his father in farming, and has since followed agricultural pursuits. Mr. Fitchie is a Republican in political sentiment, and takes an active interest in public affairs. He is Deputy Sheriff for Plato Township, is also Town Clerk, and has held various other public offices.

JAMES FITCHIE (deceased), pioneer farmer, Plato Township, Kane County, Ill., was born in Newtyle, Perthshire, Scotland, June 22, 1828, and grew to years of maturity in his native country, where he also received his educational training in the schools corresponding to the public schools of this country. In his youth he was trained to agricultural pursuits, and in early manhood was foreman on the estate of Sir George Kinloch, of Kinloch, Scotland, remaining in his employ for more than sixteen years. Coming to the United States in 1870, he first located in McHenry County, Ill., and from 1873 to 1885 lived in Rutland Township, Kane County. In the latter year he purchased a fine farm at East Plato, where he died Aug. 12, 1897, but his estate still remains in the possession of his family. In all respects Mr. Fitchie was the typical Scotch-American. Thrifty, sagacious and a close observer of human nature, he was a man of strong intellectuality and possessed a very retentive memory; kind and congenial in his intercourse with those with whom he was brought in contact, he was well known and highly respected. He was married in 1857 to Miss Grace McIntosh, daughter of Alexander and Margaret (Duer) McIntosh. Mrs. Fitchie was also a native of Perthshire, Scotland, and for eighteen and a half years resided on the Kinloch estate. Mr. and Mrs. Fitchie's living children are: Mrs. Hugh Templeton, of Chicago; James and Robert, of Chicago; Hugh W., of Elgin; and Alexander M., of Plato. Mrs. Fitchie still resides on the old homestead at East Plato.

ALBERT A. FITTS, M. D., physician, Batavia, Ill., was born in Ontario, N. Y., April 5, 1853, son of Nelson A. and Maria (Whitney) Fitts. He is in the eighth generation of his family in America, the emigrant ancestor of the family, Richard Fitts, having come from Fittsford, Devonshire, England, in 1635, and settled in Ipswich, Mass. Worcester County, Mass., was the seat of the family for several generations. The earliest history of the family in England reaches back to the twelfth century, and is recorded in Genealogical Records of Sir John Fitts, of Fittsford. Nelson A. Fitts, the father of Dr. Fitts, served in the Union army during the Civil War, and was stationed for some time at Washington, where he was in charge of a detail of the Ninth New York Artillery Regiment, and engaged in working on the fortifications around the city. He was later ordered to the front, and participated in the battle of Cold Harbor and other important and bloody conflicts. He was taken prisoner at Monocacy, Md., but, escaping a few days later, succeeded in reaching the Union lines in an exhausted condition. He was afterward detailed on the Engineering Corps, with which he served until July, 1864. He is still living (1903) in Rochester, N. Y. Dr. Fitts secured his early education in the public schools of New York and Georgetown, D. C., and finished his academic education at Marion. In 1875 he began reading medicine with Dr. N. F. Graham, Professor of Surgery in Howard University, and graduated from the Medical Department of that institution in 1878, and has since taken clinical courses in Chicago and New York. In the fall of 1878 he removed to Batavia, and established a practice which has been continuous to the present time and has grown to large proportions. It is general in character, but in it the Doctor has displayed a surgical ability that has gained him prominence in high medical circles. He is an occasional contributor to medical publications, and has served as United States Pension Examiner and almshouse physician. He is local surgeon of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway and head of the Batavia Health Department, and has been a member of the West Batavia Board of Education since 1882. In 1881 he married Miss Nellie Whitney, daughter of William M. and Sarah (Clark) Whitney, of Hinsdale, Ill.

T. P. FLANDERS, farmer and stock-raiser, Kaneville, Kane County, was born Aug. 28, 1851, in Hill, N. H., and was brought by his parents to Kane County in 1854, when they settled on the farm on which he now resides, three miles west of the village of Kaneville. His education was acquired in the local schools and in Jennings Seminary at Aurora. Mr. Flanders has won a good standing in the community where his life is passing, and is the Secretary and a large stockholder in the County Line Creamery. He has been on the County Board four years, and for eighteen years a Justice of the Peace; is also School Director and a member of the Republican Central Committee for Kane County. Mr. Flanders belongs to the Kaneville Baptist church, and was married Aug. 28, 1876, to Miss Grace R. Lee, by whom he has had two children: T. Delos, born Jan. 22, 1879, and Elmer Lee, born Feb. 17, 1882.

MARK W. FLETCHER (deceased), lawyer and farmer, St. Charles, Ill., born at Thetford, Vt., Oct. 15, 1803; graduated from the law department of Dartmouth College in 1825, and practiced his profession at Batavia, N. Y., until 1835; came to Geneva, Kane County, in the fall of 1835; was the first County Surveyor and first County Clerk of Kane County; purchased 519 acres of land northeast of St. Charles at the Government land sale in 1844, upon which he located in 1848 and lived there the remainder of his days. On Aug. 25, 1846, he married Harriet Dunham, and of their eight children there are now (1903) living: Charles E., James M. and Hattie L. Mr. Fisher died Feb. 3, 1899.

JOHN E. FORBES, farmer, La Fox, Ill., born in Saratoga County, N. Y., Oct. 30, 1840; acquired his education in the home district schools, completing his educational training at the Fort Edward Institute, and engaging in farm work with his father during the summer season and teaching school in the winter, until the family came to Kane County, Ill., in October, 1869. He then bought a farm two miles southwest of La Fox, where he has carried on farming and dairying until the present time. He has been Town Clerk, Highway Commissioner, Assessor, School Trustee, and has proved himself a good citizen. He is a member of the Methodist church at Elburn, of which he has been trustee and steward. Mr. Forbes was married March 31, 1864, to Geraldine, daughter of John H. and Matilda (Cox) Miller, all of the State of New York. James D. and Ann M. (DeWitt) Forbes were also natives of that State, and four of their five children are now living.

JAMES E. FORREST, printer and publisher, Geneva, Ill., born in Galesburg, Ill., Feb. 12, 1844, was educated in the schools of his native city and Chicago; in the former he learned the printer's trade, and helped start the first daily paper in that city. In 1859 he went to Chicago, and was connected with the "Times" under Wilbur F. Story until 1880, when he became assistant foreman of the composing rooms of the "Chicago Globe" during the first year of its existence; after this bought the "Geneva Republican," and published it for two and a half years, when he established a printing office in Chicago. After conducting this eleven years, in 1902 he removed it to Batavia, retaining, however, patrons and contracts in Chicago as before. At the present time (1903) he is the publisher of three monthly magazines, and at one time owned and published the "Irrigation Age." For seven years he published the "Clinical Review" of Chicago, was the chief promoter of the "Operative Miller," and for seven years printed the "Registered Pharmacist." When seventeen years of age Mr. Forrest enlisted in the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, known as the "Board of Trade Regiment," in which he served six months. In 1877 he visited Europe, crossing the Atlantic Ocean on the same vessel with Gen. Grant. In 1867 he married Miss Adelaide, daughter of E. G. Morse, one of the old settlers of Kane County.

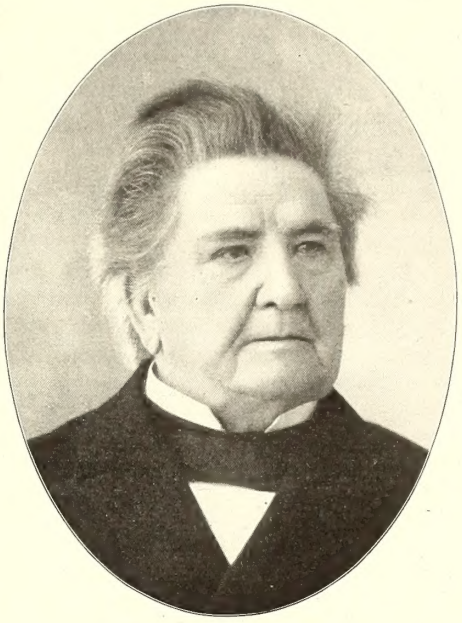
JOSEPH M. FRACE (deceased), farmer, Elburn, Kane County, Ill.; born at Pleasant Grove, Morris County, N. J., Feb. 22, 1820, and came of German parentage; educated in the district schools of his native county; came to Illinois in 1852, and in the same year purchased a farm in Kaneville Township, Kane County, which he conducted until 1894, when he retired from active business life and removed to the village of Elburn, where he resided until his death, April 28, 1902. On Oct. 29, 1857, he was married to Sarah Voorhees, of Pleasant Grove, N. J. Mr. Frace followed diversified farming and was a very successful business manager. His method of holding his grain and other farm produce, and disposing of them at a time when the markets assured the best returns, was one of the principal sources of his success as a business man and property owner.

LINCOLN B. FRAZIER, newspaper publisher, Aurora, Ill., born in the city where he now resides, Oct. 3, 1870, and educated in the West Aurora High School and Lawrenceville Academy, Lawrenceville, N. J. From 1889 to 1902 he was President and Treasurer of the well-known carriage manufacturing plant of W. S. Frazier & Co. at Aurora, being at the same time one of the owners of "The Aurora News," of which he became manager in 1902, and to which he has since devoted the greater part of his attention. At the present time (1904) he is President of the Aurora Daily News Company and one of the Directors in the firm of W. S. Frazier & Co.; is also a member of the Aurora Board of Fire and Police Commissioners. He was married in 1897 to Miss Bertha M. Plumb, of Streator, Ill.

WALTER S. FRAZIER, retired manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., born at Tully, Onondaga County, N. Y., Aug. 31, 1835, was educated at Homer and Pompey Hill Academies, New York, and trained to merchandising at Syracuse, N. Y. He came to Chicago in 1857, and soon afterwards entered the office of the City Comptroller, where he was Chief Clerk for five years; later was Clerk of Special Assessments in Chicago, and in 1865 was Clerk of the Illinois House of Representatives. From 1866 to 1870 he lived on a farm near Batavia, Ill., and in the latter year removed to Aurora, where he soon became prominent in general business affairs. While breeding and training trotting horses, he invented the Frazier road cart, which has since made his name familiar throughout the country. In 1880 he began manufacturing these carts, and thus established an industry which has since grown to large proportions, and the establishment with which he is connected at the present time (1903) is one of the most widely known manufactories of road vehicles in the country. His sons have succeeded to the management of the business, Mr. Frazier having retired on account of ill-health. In 1891 Mr. Frazier purchased the "Aurora Daily News," which is conducted by his sons. He has served as Mayor of Aurora besides filling other municipal offices, and was for many years a leader in the councils of the Republican party. Mr. Frazier was married in New York in 1855 to Miss Mary Stevens, who died in 1880.

WALTER S. FRAZIER, manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., born in Chicago July 5, 1863; educated in the Aurora High School; has been engaged with his father in manufacturing since 1881; was Captain of the Illinois National Guard four years; Lieutenant-Colonel of the same organization for a like period; is Vice-President of the Aurora Public Library Board.



CHARLES H. FRAEY, M. D., physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., born in Philadelphia July 18, 1865; was educated at St. Mary's College, Penn., and at St. Mary's College, Emmetsburg, Md.; graduated from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1888; served a year on the staff of Jefferson Hospital; in 1889 came west, and before coming to Aurora practiced a year in Champaign County. In Aurora he has taken a prominent position in his profession, and from 1893 to 1897 was Assistant Superintendent of the Illinois Northern Hospital for Insane, at Elgin. Dr. Fraey is a member of the American, the Illinois State and the Fox River Valley Medical Associations. He is Medical Examiner for the Catholic Foresters and the Independent Order of Foresters, the St. Vincent De Paul Society and other orders and fraternities, and is a member of the Columbian Club, the Elks and other organizations. In politics he is a Democrat and takes a leading part in political affairs. His wife, Mary (Loser) Fraey, is a daughter of John Loser, a merchant of Aurora.

PHILIP FREILER, distiller and wholesale liquor-dealer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Hartford, Conn., April 3, 1860, son of Joseph and Mary (Bachrach) Freiler, and was educated in Chicago, whither his parents removed in 1867. In early life he became connected with the liquor trade, in which his father and brother-in-law were engaged in Chicago. After some years the elder Freiler established a wholesale liquor house in Elgin, and in 1883 Philip Freiler purchased the business of which he has since been the head. In 1902 he bought what was known as the Stitzel Distillery at Louisville, Ky., and organized the Century Club Distillery Company, which has since operated the plant. Mr. Freiler is a director and the principal stockholder of this company. He is also interested in banking operations in Elgin, where he holds considerable banking stock. During Governor Altgeld's administration he was Treasurer of the Illinois Hospital for the Insane. In Masonry he has attained the Thirty-second Degree, and is a Noble of the Mystic Shrine; is also connected with several other fraternal organizations, including the Elks and Knights of Pythias. In 1883 he married Miss Lizzie Ehrlich, of New York City, and they have had the following named children: Florence J., now at Wellesley Hall, Mass.; Hilda Valerie and Ruth Beatrice.

OTTO FRELLSEN, hotel proprietor, St. Charles, Ill., was born in Denmark Dec. 8, 1866, came to the United States in 1888, and after stopping for a few months in Chicago removed to Geneva, where he found employment as a farm laborer for three years. In 1892 he returned to Chicago, where he kept a saloon for two years. In 1894 he came to St. Charles, and was there engaged in the same line for a time, when he started in the hotel business as landlord and proprietor of the White Front Hotel, which soon became the leading hostelry of these regions. Mr. Frellsen is a member of the local lodge of Knights of Pythias. He was married Jan. 4, 1896, to Miss Kristine Maree Pettersen, of St. Charles.

BENJAMIN F. FRIDLEY (deceased), pioneer lawyer, Aurora, Ill., was born in Elmira, N. Y., May 10, 1810, his birthplace being next door to that of the famous Democratic leader of more modern times, ex-Governor and ex-United States Senator David B. Hill. Left an orphan at two years of age, Mr. Fridley was reared mainly by an elder sister who lived in Baltimore, Md. As a youth he was thrown almost entirely upon his own resources and, as a consequence, enjoyed but limited opportunities for acquiring an education. He early gave evidence of a remarkable energy and tenacity of purpose, as indicated by the fact that, when he determined to study law and wanted to procure a copy of "Chitty's Pleadings," he walked all the way from Elmira to Philadelphia for the purpose of securing the needed work. Through the assistance of his brother-in-law, who was a man of some means, he later went to New York and completed his law studies in that city. Mr. Fridley came to Illinois in the fall of 1834, bringing with him a small amount of capital which he had saved from professional earnings, and for a time made his home near Oswego, Kendall County. The following year he removed to Aurora, having in the meantime located a claim on the east side of the river in Aurora Township, where he afterwards purchased a considerable body of Government land, including the site of the present Spring Lake Cemetery. There was little business for lawyers at Aurora at that time, so Mr. Fridley, who had studied surveying before coming west, turned his attention in this direction, and, by supplementing his labors as a surveyor with farming, became fairly prosperous. In 1836 he was elected the first Sheriff of Kane County, and in the discharge of the duties of this office greatly extended his practical knowledge of the law, so that when, in 1840, he was advanced to the position of Prosecuting Attorney for the district, he had already won a high rank among the pioneer members of the Bar. His district covered an area of twelve counties, and during his incumbency of several years he was brought in contact with the leading members of the profession in Northern Illinois. The late Burton C. Cook, who succeeded Mr. Fridley as Prosecuting Attorney, speaking of the condition existing in this section at that time, says:

"During the term of Mr. Fridley as Prosecuting Attorney, and for a part of my term, the northeastern part of the State was infested by a most dangerous and wicked association of outlaws, thieves and counterfeiters, such as are often found on the frontiers of civilization, having grips, signs and passwords, whereby they could identify each other. They were the enemies of society, unscrupulous and brutal. The citizens of DeKalb and Ogle counties organized bands of regulators to protect themselves and their property. Mr. Campbell, the Captain of the regulators, was shot at his own house at White Oak Grove, and then the citizens followed, captured and shot some of the more notorious of the gang, and it was finally broken up in this section. The able and efficient prosecution by my friend, Mr. Fridley, was greatly appreciated by the Bar and by the citizens generally at the time, and was greatly instrumental in freeing the country from the presence of evil-doers."

Mr. Fridley was a picturesque character, and it is doubtful if any member of the early Bar in Northern Illinois was more widely known or left behind him a larger fund of interesting reminiscence. While affecting a simplicity of speech and manner peculiar to the uneducated backwoodsman, his contemporaries had an appreciation of his nimble wit and keen sarcasm which has been handed down to the Bar of the present day, and which never fails to furnish entertainment to themselves and their friends when "two or three" of the profession are "gathered together" in reminiscent mood. His practical knowledge of the law made him especially successful as a trial lawyer, both as a prosecutor and as a representative of the defense. As a man of affairs he was eminently successful and built up a fortune through his land and farming operations. The later years of his life were given up almost entirely to looking after these interests, and for nearly forty years before his death—which occurred at his home in Aurora, May 29, 1898—he had been practically retired from the profession. During the period of his professional life and long afterwards he was looked upon as the Nestor of the Aurora Bar, and as such, as well as for many other traits of character, was always held in high esteem. Mr. Fridley was married in 1841, at Geneva, Ill., to Miss Eliza S. Kelley, daughter of Maj. William Kelley, a retired officer of the United States Army. Mrs. Fridley still survives, residing at Aurora, Ill., which had been the home of herself and husband for nearly sixty years. Of five children born of this union only one is now living (1903), Mrs. Dunn, of Asheville, N. C.

ALBERT B. FULLER, lawyer, Aurora, Ill., born in Rochester, N. Y., in 1826, and died in Aurora in 1857; admitted to the Bar in Aurora, and was one of the pioneer attorneys of that city. His early death cut short what promised to be a brilliant career. Mr. Fuller was married in 1855 to Miss Catherine Gates, of Jefferson County, N. Y., who afterward became the wife of Dr. P. A. Allaire, one of the pioneer physicians of Aurora.

HENRY G. GABEL, M. D., physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., was born in Nassau, Germany, Oct. 27, 1841, and when nine years old was brought to this country by his parents, who established their home in Somonauk, La Salle County, Ill. There he was bred to a farmer's life and educated in the public schools. After reading medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. A. J. Redding, of Bristol, and Dr. L. R. Brigham, of Aurora, he completed his medical studies in the Eclectic Medical Institute, Cincinnati, Ohio, from which he received his doctor's degree in 1874. The same year he began practice in Aurora, and here has been continuously engaged in professional labors to the present time (1904). Dr. Gabel contributes to the medical journals, and is a member of the American Medical Association, the Illinois State Medical Society, the Fox River Valley Medical Association, the National Eclectic Medical Association, and the Illinois Eclectic Medical Association. The Doctor is a Royal and Select Mason, and has served on the Board of Health and the Aurora Board of Aldermen. In 1869 he married Miss Jane C. Shepherd, of Kendall, Ill., and in 1876, after her death, married Miss Ella M. Olds, of Aurora. After the death of his second wife Dr. Gabel contracted a third marriage, in 1888, with Mrs. Eudora M. Lamb, of Chicago.

CYRIL GAGE, retired farmer, Hampshire, Ill., born in Wyoming County, N. Y., Feb. 13, 1823; grew to manhood in his native State, and came to Kane County, Ill., in November, 1845; went to California in 1852, but returned to Kane County two years later and purchased a 120-acre farm one mile east of Hampshire, where he resided until 1884, when he retired from active farm life and removed to the village of Hampshire. On Jan. 25, 1849, he was married to Miss Julia Fields, and they have seven children.

HERBERT A. GAGE, merchant, Pingree Grove, Ill., born in Hampshire Township, Kane County, Dec. 5, 1855, son of Cyril and Julia (Fields) Gage. His father settled in Hampshire Township, Kane County, about 1841, and still resides there, being at the present time (1903) above eighty years of age. Mr. Herbert A. Gage has been identified with several enterprises, and at the present time is conducting a general store at Pingree Grove. He was married in 1879 to a daughter of Henry McBride, of Elgin.

HENRY J. GAHAGAN, physician and surgeon, Elgin, Ill., born at Grafton, Ill., Dec. 27, 1867, son of Bernard and Ellen (Armstrong) Gahagan; educated in the public schools at Grafton—graduating from the high school—and at a private school in Chicago; graduated from Rush Medical College (Chicago) in 1893; appointed assistant physician in the Eastern Illinois Hospital for Insane in 1893; later in the same year was transferred, at his own request, to the Illinois Northern Hospital for Insane at Elgin, remaining with the latter institution until 1897; began private practice in Elgin in the latter year, in which he has since been successfully engaged. He was married in 1893 to Miss Della Cullen, of Amboy, Ill.

ELI H. GALE, physician and surgeon, Aurora, born in Townshend, Windham County, Vt., April 14, 1857; was educated in his native State, graduating from Middlebury College, Vt., in 1862, and from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1865; was examined and appointed Surgeon in the Union army the latter year, being assigned to the One Hundred and Eighty-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry and put in charge of the barracks hospital in Philadelphia, where he remained until the close of the war. The following year he located in Aurora, where he has remained to the present time, with the exception of the period from 1880 to 1890 when he was associated with his brother in professional work in Marshall County, Ill. Under Presidents Harrison, McKinley and Roosevelt he has been a member of the Board of Pension Examiners at Aurora, of which body he is now the President. He contributes to medical journals and stands high in the profession. Dr. Gale married Miss Adelaide R. Parker, of Aurora, in 1868, who died in 1874. Six years later he married Miss Mary A. Pike, of Bloomington. Their children are Henry G., a graduate of, and now instructor in, the University of Chicago; Mrs. Mabel Gale Lowrie, of Detroit, Mich.; Mrs. Frances Gale Stewart, of Plainfield, Ill.; Eli P. and Burton P., a student of the University of Chicago.

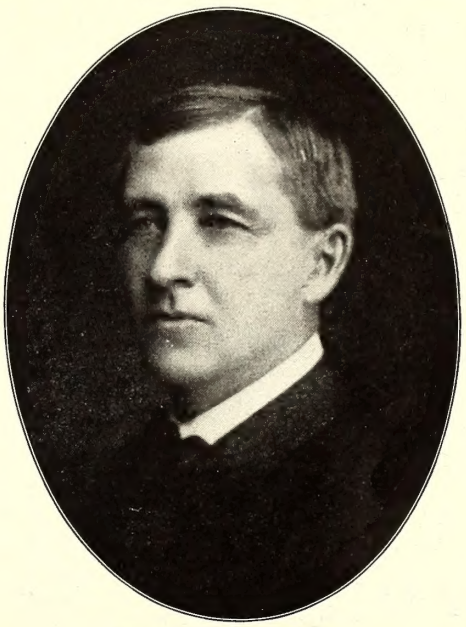
WARD B. GALE (deceased), late a noted musician, Elgin, Ill., was born June 22, 1858, at Volo, Lake County, Ill., where he grew up, receiving a public school education and learning the trade of a machinist. About 1882 he came to Elgin, and so long as his health permitted was connected with the National Watch Factory there. Soon after his arrival in Elgin he joined the Germania Band, and in later years held more than a local reputation as a musician. From 1884 until his death he was a member of the Elgin Military Band. He was married in 1881 to Miss Ida Kellar, of Indianapolis, Ind., who survives him, and still lives in Elgin.

ELIJAH H. GAMMON (deceased), manufacturer and philanthropist, late of Batavia, was born in Lexington, Maine, Dec. 23, 1819, secured his education by his efforts, and in early life became a Methodist preacher. In 1851 he came to DeKalb County, Ill., and for a time conducted a private school at Ross' Grove in that county. Later resuming his ministerial work, he had charge of churches at St. Charles, Chicago and Batavia, and three years was Presiding Elder of the St. Charles district. Being compelled by a bronchial affection to retire from the ministry, he engaged in manufacturing in Batavia, and still later in the sale of agricultural implements in Chicago. In 1868 he became head of the firm of Gammon & Prindle, who were the pioneer distributors of the Marsh harvester throughout the United States. As head of the celebrated firm of Gammon & Deering he became widely known, and was eminently successful in the manufacture and sale of farm machinery. In 1880 he was one of the founders of the Plano Manufacturing Company, and was identified with these interests until his death, July 3, 1891. He acquired a large fortune, and was generous in his benefactions. The Maine Wesleyan Seminary and the Garrett Biblical Institute were recipients of his bounty, and the Gammon Theological Seminary was founded by him.

ALEXANDER GAMSEY, physician, Batavia, Ill., born in Saratoga, N. Y., Aug. 23, 1813, son of David G. Gamsey, who was eminent as a lawyer, jurist and Congressman. The son was reared to manhood in his native State, and received his academic education in the famous schools at Fredonia and West Point Academy. He read medicine with Dr. Lewis at Buffalo, and with Dr. Shipman, the pioneer homœopathic physician of Chicago, and in 1842 began practice in Chicago, where he conducted the first homœopathic pharmacy in the city. In 1850 he removed to Batavia, where he followed his profession forty years, retiring in 1890. Now at the age of ninety years he is still hale and active, and officiates as Health Officer in Batavia. For many years he has been a contributor to his school of medicine, and is one of the oldest practitioners of homœopathy in Illinois.

EDWARD C. GARFIELD (deceased), farmer, Campton Township, Kane County, born at Mt. Holly, Vt., Dec. 8, 1835; came to Kane County, Ill., with his parents in 1841; remained on his father's farm until twenty-three years of age, when he took up surveying and followed that occupation for several years; later engaged in farming and followed that occupation until his death, which occurred Aug. 4, 1896. Mr. Garfield was married on Oct. 7, 1857, to Frances H. Wing.

TIMOTHY P. GARFIELD (deceased), pioneer farmer, Campton Township, Kane County, Ill., born about 1800; came to Illinois in 1841, locating in Campton Township, Kane County, where he conducted a farm and hotel; politically he was a member of the Whig party and took an active interest in the management of local affairs, serving in several local offices; was a practical surveyor and laid out most of the roads in his locality. He died March 27, 1859, his widow surviving until Nov. 3, 1869.



JOHN E. GARREY, physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., born in Chicago Feb. 9, 1848, and educated in the public schools, State Normal School (Oshkosh, Wis.) and Bryant & Stratton's Business College (Chicago); read medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. J. F. Pritchard, of Manitowoc, Wis.; matriculated in Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1876, and graduated from that institution in the class of 1878; practiced medicine twelve years in Wisconsin, and in 1891 went abroad and took a post-graduate course in medicine and surgery at the University of Heidelberg, Germany; removed to Aurora, Ill., in 1892, and has since been a successful practitioner of that city.

R. W. GATES, Justice of the Peace and Notary Public, Aurora, Ill., born at Antwerp, Jefferson County, N. Y., Aug. 29, 1834; came with his parents to Aurora in August, 1838; began his business career as a clerk in the store of John S. Hawley; has served as City Clerk three years, was City Alderman about eighteen or twenty years, and has served as Justice of the Peace for about thirty years. Mr. Gates was married in 1871 to Miss Hermione L. Hill, of Batavia.

ALONZO GEORGE (deceased), merchant, financier and manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., was born in Strafford, Orange County, Vt., April 11, 1822, and during his business life became one of the notable characters of Kane County, remarkable alike for his integrity, ability and public spirit. He received his education in the common schools of his native State, and spent the first sixteen years of his life on his father's farm. He then became a clerk in the store of Justin S. Morrill at Strafford. This gentleman afterward became United States Senator, and in his earlier years Mr. George was his business partner, the association not closing until the election of Mr. Morrill as Senator. Upon the dissolution of the Morrill partnership Mr. George engaged in business for himself at Post Mills, Vt., where he conducted a very successful mercantile establishment. During his residence there he was twice elected to the General Assembly of Vermont, where he acquitted himself with marked ability. Mr. George removed to Illinois in 1859, and made his home in Aurora, where for some years he was engaged in the wool and lumber business. In 1871, in company with others, he established the Second National Bank of Aurora, and was elected its President, a position he held until the expiration of its charter in 1891. Although the bank had paid ten per cent dividends yearly from its beginning, yet upon its liquidation it paid out $250,000 to the stockholders, a remarkable instance of financiering. A new bank was established, known as the Old Second National Bank, having a capital of $200,000, with Mr. George as its President. In 1895, warned by failing health, Mr. George resigned the presidency of the bank, and was succeeded by his son, William George, who has since conducted its affairs with characteristic ability. Alonzo George was a supporter of nearly all the manufacturing enterprises of the city, and was very justly called the father of Aurora's industries. He was a liberal but not ostentatious giver to all worthy charities of the day, and a ready contributor to all city improvements. Always a business man, he was much interested in political matters, and was a stanch Republican. In 1870 he was elected to the County Board of Supervisors, and in 1873 was Mayor of Aurora. At various times he was School Director and Town Treasurer. Mr. George was married in 1851 to Miss Lydia R., daughter of Col. Elisha May, of West Fairlee, Vt. Of this union were born Lizzie, who died in infancy, and William George, of Aurora. Mr. George passed away May 18, 1895, and his widow, Nov. 30, of the same year, both residing in Aurora at the time of their demise. It is worthy of note in this connection that both the May and George families were prominent in Revolutionary days.

BENJAMIN GEORGE, farmer, Aurora, Ill., born at Strafford, Orange County, Vt., Nov. 30, 1825; came west in March, 1856, locating in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, where he purchased a 300-acre farm to which he made subsequent additions until his holdings embraced 500 acres; removed from his farm to Aurora in 1884, where he has been interested in some of the manufacturing industries of that city. He was married in 1853 to Marcia Robinson, of Strafford, Vt.

FRANK E. GEORGE.

FRANK E. GEORGE, Recorder Kane County, Batavia, Ill., was born in Strafford, Orange County, Vt., Oct. 14, 1856, and was brought by his parents to Batavia, Ill., in 1865. His education was secured in the city schools and at Northwestern College, Naperville, Ill. In 1875 he established a grocery and restaurant business, and ten years later turned his attention to groceries and fire insurance. Politically he is a Republican. He was chosen Assistant Supervisor in 1890, and the following year was elected Supervisor. In 1896 he was elected County Recorder, was re-elected in 1900, and is still filling the office; is also serving his second term as President of the State Association of Circuit Clerks and Recorders. He is President of the Board of Education of East Batavia, a member of the Republican County Central Committee and is acting as Treasurer of the latter. Fraternally he is a Mason, an Odd Fellow and a Modern Woodman.

FRANCIS K. GEORGE, retired, Batavia, Ill., born in Strafford, Orange County, Vt., Dec. 31, 1819, the son of Ebenezer and Betsy (Kibbling) George, and the grandson of two revolutionary veterans. His father was a soldier of the War of 1812. Francis K. George was reared in Vermont and educated in the public schools of that State, learned the wool-carding and cloth-dressing trade while still a boy, and in 1864 removed to Illinois, settling on a farm near Batavia. Two years later he moved into the city, where for twenty years he was actively engaged in the real-estate business. Still later he was a partner, with his son Frank E., in the grocery trade; also served as Assessor eight years and two terms as Town Clerk. In 1844 he married Miss Edna Williams, of Strafford, Vt., who died in November, 1882.

WILLIAM GEORGE.

WILLIAM GEORGE, financier and attorney at law, Aurora, was born in Aurora, Sept. 23, 1861, a son of Alonzo and Lydia (May) George, secured his academic education in the Aurora public schools, was graduated from the West Aurora High School in 1879, and a member of the class of 1884, of the University of Iowa. In 1885 he graduated from the Union College of Law, Chicago, and was admitted to the Bar of Illinois the same year. From 1885 to 1887 he was associated professionally with Senator A. J. Hopkins, in the practice of law, and from 1887 to 1893 was alone in his legal work. In 1893 he formed a partnership with F. D. Winslow, and later with N. J. Aldrich, who left the firm of Hopkins, Aldrich & Thatcher, to become identified with the firm of George & Winslow. Some years later, because of demands on the time of Mr. George in other directions, he withdrew from active practice, giving his attention only to such legal matters as concerned corporate interests in which he and his friends were interested. In 1893 he became one of the Vice-Presidents of the Old Second National Bank, of Aurora, and two years later, on the occasion of the retirement of his father, succeeded to the presidency of that institution. Mr. George is a director of the Aurora Cotton Mills, and Director or otherwise officially connected with other institutions in Aurora and elsewhere. In addition to these interests he is associated with his uncle, Benjamin George, in stock farms near Aurora and Galena, where they have successfully established large herds of registered Hereford cattle, many of them directly imported by Mr. George from England. He is Vice-President of the American Hereford Cattle Breeders' Association, and is President of the Illinois Bankers' Association, as well as member of Union League and Hamilton and Saddle and Sirloin Clubs, of Chicago. Mr. George was married Oct. 11, 1887, to Miss Alice Maude Lounsbury, daughter of E. W. Lounsbury, D. D., at Dayton, Ohio, and they have one child, Alice May, born Nov. 12, 1892.

CHRISTOFER FREDERICK GEYER (deceased), Aurora, born in Wurtemberg, Germany, Oct. 22, 1839, and died in Aurora, June 9, 1903; was associated with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company as machinist and in other capacities for over forty years; married March 29, 1864, Miss Caroline Scharschug, and by this union there are three children: Mrs. Mary Lincoln, Clarence and Edna I. Mr. Geyer was in all probability the oldest

GEORGE GIDDINGS, retired farmer, 314 Ann Street, Elgin, Ill., was born in Essex, Mass., August 15, 1830, son of John and Abigail (Proctor) Giddings, and when seven years old was brought by his parents to Illinois. They made their home in Barrington, Cook County, where the subject of this sketch was educated in the local schools, also attended a private school, and spent two terms at a Chicago College. He worked on the farm with his father and when the elder Giddings died he took charge of the farm, situated one mile east of Dundee, into which he moved in 1874, buying a home and retiring from active business for seven years. His removal to Elgin came about this time, where he purchased a house and lot on Ann Street. He was married Jan. 1, 1861, to Almena Todd, and to their union were born two children, Lillian, born Dec. 26, 1864, and Mary Esther, born Jan. 14, 1871.

ABEL D. GIFFORD, pioneer farmer, Elgin, Ill., born at Sherburne, N. Y., August 9, 1818; came to Illinois in 1837 and purchased 280 acres of land in Hanover Township, Cook County, where he carried on dairy farming until 1889, when he retired and has since lived in Elgin. Mr. Gifford has been a director of the Home Savings Bank and Home National Bank of Elgin for nearly thirty years. He was married in 1838 to Miss Harriet M. Root, who died about 1855. His second wife—Julia E. Chappell —died July 10, 1893, and on Dec. 15, 1896, he was married to Mrs. Clara (Flood) Whitten, of Atlanta, Ga.

EDWIN F. GIFFORD, farmer, Elgin, Kane County, born in Jefferson County, N. Y., Aug. 18, 1845, son of Abel D. Gifford, was brought to Illinois in early childhood, reared to manhood in Elgin, educated at Elgin Academy and trained to farming. For several years he lived on what is still known as the old Gifford farm near Elgin, and later was engaged in the hardware trade for a time. Removing to Minnesota, he followed farming for three years, and then returned to Elgin, where he died on the old farm May 26, 1872. During the Civil War he served in the One Hundred Forty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry. In 1866 he married Miss Cora M. Ottaway, daughter of Charles Ottaway, one of the early settlers of Chicago, and owner of a store located near the old Tremont House. To this union were born two children, Ada C., of Elgin, and Fred E., of St. Charles.

F. E. GIFFORD, manufacturer, St. Charles, Kane County, born in Warren, Wis., in April, 1871, son of Edwin F. and Cora M. (Ottaway) Gifford, was taken by his parents to Elgin in 1874, where he passed his childhood and youth, attending the local schools, and graduating from the high school and Drew's Business College. In 1887 he secured a position with the Elgin Condensed Milk Company, where he remained until 1891. That year he removed to St. Charles to enter the employ of the St. Charles Condensing Company, with which his connection has proved so successful that he is now general manager of the establishment. In St. Charles he has taken a prominent part as a public-spirited citizen, and has served the community two terms as Alderman. He belongs to local lodges of the Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In 1892 he married Miss Della J., daughter of Waldo and Charlotte M. Ward, of St. Charles.

HORACE GILBERT (deceased), pioneer merchant and manufacturer, Aurora, born in Otsego County, N. Y., Aug. 1, 1819, was reared on a farm and educated in the public schools. In 1849 he arrived in Aurora on his way to California, but stopping with friends became interested in this part of the State, when he decided to return east and canvass the situation with friends. Returning to Aurora in 1851, he located there and the same year married Miss Minerva Fitch, daughter of Ira Fitch, a pioneer business man of that city, with whom he shortly formed a partnership in the harness trade, later on carrying on the same business in company with John Kemp in a building on the site of the present Merchants' National Bank of Aurora, conducting an extensive trade reaching nearly every State of the Union. Mr. Gilbert retired in 1890 to devote his attention to the care of his estate. During his life he was interested in the old Second National Bank, the Merchants' National Bank, the Aurora Cotton Mills and the Aurora Silver-Plate Manufacturing Company. The first Mrs. Gilbert died in 1859, leaving no children. In 1871 Mr. Gilbert married Miss Mary, daughter of Joseph A. and Julia (West) Spaulding, who settled on a farm near Elgin in 1849, but later resided in Aurora. Mr. Gilbert died in Aurora, July 9, 1894. Mrs. Gilbert survives her husband, still residing in Aurora. Their children are Jennie Gilbert Staples, Mary Gilbert Hills and Edna Morrill Gilbert, all of Aurora.

WILLIAM J. GILBERT, retired, Elgin, Ill., born Jan. 9, 1847, in Brimfield, Peoria County, Ill., was educated in the schools of Brimfield and Elgin, coming to this city in the fall of 1866. He began his business career as a clerk for Bartlett & Waldron, and was later employed by Bartlett & Dennison, who were in the grocery store and restaurant business. In 1872 he began business for himself by establishing a book, stationery and news store in connection with the postoffice. For some twenty years he continued in this business, when he disposed of it, and has since devoted himself to the care of his extensive tenement and store property. He was married in 1894 to Rebecca McBride Burritt.

LEWIS H. GILLETT (deceased), pioneer settler, born in Sullivan County, N. Y., Oct. 23, 1820; came west in 1850, locating in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, where he purchased a large tract of land and became a remarkably successful farmer, adding to his original purchase until his estate embraced 1,000 acres; was one of the founders of the Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial Institute. He was married in 1850 to Miss Rachel Harmes, and their living children are: Arthur L., and Mrs. Rachel (Gillett) Shoop. Mr. Gillett died Jan. 13, 1888; his wife surviving him until June 19, 1900.

STEPHEN C. GILLETT, physician, Aurora, Ill., was born in Neversink, Sullivan County, N. Y., Jan. 31, 1826, son of Ezekiel and Elizabeth (Curry) Gillett, and grandson of Ezekiel Gillett, who was of French antecedents, and was one of the earlier settlers of Neversink, removing thither from Connecticut. In the maternal line Dr. Gillett was descended from Scotch-Irish ancestors. Reared to manhood in New York, he was a school teacher in that State, in his early life. Later he removed to Watertown, Ohio, where he taught school until 1848. During that year he came to Kane County, Ill., and secured a position as a teacher in the public schools of the day. He next took up the study of medicine with Dr. Nicholas Hard, one of the prominent physicians of Aurora, and graduated from Rush Medical College in 1853, immediately beginning his professional career at Sandwich, Ill., where he remained until 1857. He then came to Aurora where he soon rose to prominence and, until his retirement in 1901, was one of the most popular and successful practitioners in this part of the State. Thoroughly skilled and widely read, he had also those qualities which endear the family physician to his patients, and make him both counsellor and guide, as well as physician. He belonged to the American Medical Association, Illinois State Medical Society, and the Fox River Valley Medical Association, and contributed much to the general advancement of the profession. As a man of affairs he was no less successful than in his profession. He was one of the organizers of the Merchants' National Bank of Aurora, and afterwards one of its Directors and its Vice-President. Dr. Gillett was also President of the Aurora Cooperage Company, and the Aurora Bleaching and Dye Works, both important industries, and the last named at that time one of the few of its kind in the United States. Dr. Gillett was married, in 1854, to Miss Elizabeth Mendenhall, daughter of Thomas G. and Elizabeth (Hollenback) Mendenhall, pioneer settlers in DeKalb County, Ill. Mrs. Gillett was born April 15, 1833, in Middletown, Shelby County, Ind., but was married in Aurora. Dr. Gillett and wife settled at Sandwich where they built the first house after the location of the railway station there. Dr. Gillett died Sept. 3, 1903. His living children are: Mrs. Ida Hobbs, Mae, William E., and Mrs. Blanch Watson, all at home in Aurora. WILLIAM E. GILLETT, a prominent manufacturer of Aurora, was born in that city, Feb. 3, 1863, where he received his education in the local schools and the Aurora Seminary. In 1893 he was chosen Treasurer of the Aurora Cooperage Company, and three years later became general manager of the concern. Up to the present time (1904), he has continued to fill both positions. His success is attested by the marked prosperity which the company enjoys, greater under his administration than ever before. It is now ranked among the leading industries of the city. He was married in 1890 to Miss Jennie Ball, of Aurora.

CHARLES B. GODFREY, pioneer farmer, Burlington Township, Kane County, born in Vermont, June 26, 1839; came with his parents to Illinois when only six months old. His father purchased a 200-acre farm in Burlington Township, of which Charles B. took possession at the time of his father's death in 1857, conducted farming operation very successfully, adding to the original tract, until his holdings embraced 600 acres; retired from active farm life in 1898. Mr. Godfrey was married in 1865 to Miss Mary Atkins, and they became the parents of five children.

ALPHONSO L. GODING, retired merchant and farmer, Elburn, Kane County, born at Livermore, Oxford County, Me., April 12, 1828, son of Jonas and Patience (Hathaway) Goding, both of English ancestry. When about fifteen years of age he removed with his parents to Brighton, Mass., and in the public schools of that State completed his education begun in Maine. His first business experience was in the grocery trade in New York City, after which he engaged in buying and improving real estate in Massachusetts. Having met with business reverses about 1860, he determined to remove to Chicago; but after taking a careful inventory of his effects, discovered that he had means enough to enable him to reach Syracuse, N. Y. Without hesitation he started with his family and on arriving at Syracuse, took a building contract upon which he realized a sufficient sum to enable him to reach his destination. Leaving his family at Syracuse, he proceeded in 1861 to Chicago, but a few months later returning to New York, brought his family with him to Chicago in 1862, and there engaged in business as a contractor and builder. In 1868, with a view to benefiting his wife's health, he removed to Kaneville, Kane County, where he purchased a farm upon which he continued to reside for the next fifteen years engaged in agricultural pursuits. Then removing to Elburn in 1883, he embarked in the lumber trade as a member of the firm of Elden & Goding, but two years later, having purchased the interest of his partner, became head of the firm of Goding & Son. In 1894, he sold out his interest and retired from business. During his business career in Kane County, Mr. Goding has been the builder and promoter in the erection of twenty-nine buildings in Elburn and vicinity. For six years he was one of the Trustees of the Village of Elburn and for nine years Superintendent of the Baptist Sunday School there. Nov. 28, 1847, Mr. Goding was married in Levington, Mass., to Miss Lydia M. Chandler, a cousin of Senator Zachariah Chandler of Michigan, and of Salmon P. Chase of Ohio. Of this union there were seven children: Flora C., born May 27, 1849; Alfonso C., born May 31, 1851; Josephine O., born May 21, 1853, died July 13, 1854; Ella M., born Feb. 14, 1855, died March 7, 1893; Horace L., born Oct. 22, 1857, died Sept. 4, 1864; Frederick W., born May 9, 1858, is United States Consul at New South Wales, Australia, having been appointed by President McKinley; and, Oscar W., born May 12, 1860.

E. F. GOODELL, banker, St. Charles, Ill., born in the city where he now resides, August 24, 1858; taught country schools for a few winters, and in 1880 accepted a position as cashier with the banking house of J. C. Baird & Company, with which he has remained through two changes, the firm being at the present time John Stewart & Company, in which Mr. Goodell is a stockholder. Mr. Goodell married Abbie Peterson, of St. Charles, and they have three children, Harry, Ralph and Charlotte.

LEE N. GOODWIN, banker, Aurora, born in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, Ill., Jan. 2, 1870, was reared under the home roof and educated in the public schools, finishing his schooling in Aurora. Entering the employ of the old Second National Bank of Aurora as a messenger boy in 1888, by successive promotions he rose to his present position, being appointed Cashier in 1898. The following year he became a Director of the bank, and as such is efficient. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, the Elks and other orders. In 1895 he married Miss Cecelia O'Meara, of Aurora.

RUSSELL P. GOODWIN, lawyer and jurist, Aurora, Ill., born at Bloomingdale, Ill., Dec. 24, 1851; read law with Judge H. H. Cody, of Naperville, and Judge M. O. Southworth, Aurora; admitted to the Bar of the Supreme Court of Illinois in 1876, and has since practiced his profession in Aurora, except twelve years that he served on the Bench; married in 1885 Miss Minnie Ralph, of Aurora, who died in 1888. In 1890 he married Miss Nellie Ames, of Geneva, Ill.

BENJAMIN E. GOULD (deceased), late Clerk Circuit Court Kane County, Elgin, Ill., was born in Hanover, Cook County, Ill., May 12, 1871, received his education in the public schools and Elgin Academy and in 1891 entered the Elgin postoffice, where he served as Money

BENJAMIN E. GOULD.

Order Clerk. In 1894 he was appointed Deputy Probate Clerk. He received a commission as Captain of Company E, Third Regiment Regular Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served in the War with Spain. He was mustered out Jan. 12, 1899, when he returned to Elgin and resumed his position in the Probate office. Mr. Gould was a Republican, and in 1900 was elected Circuit Clerk, in which position he served till his death in the holocaust of the Iroquois Theater, Chicago, Dec. 30, 1903. He was Junior Vice-Commander of the order of Spanish-American War Veterans for Illinois, and Treasurer of the Elgin Patriotic Memorial Association. Fraternally and socially he was associated with the B. P. O. E., the I. O. O. F., the K. P., Modern Woodmen, the Elgin Cycle Club and the Archæan Union. He was married Dec. 25, 1895, to Pearl Cranston, of Lansing, Mich., who perished with him. They left one child, Dorothy Fern.

GEORGE W. GOULD, retired farmer, Blackberry Township, Kane County, Ill., born in Windham County, Conn., Jan. 22, 1821; educated in the public schools of his native State, and removed to Kane County, Ill., in 1854, and purchased a farm located about five miles south of Elburn, where he has since resided. He was married Nov. 11, 1847, to Mary E. Bowdish.

CHARLES B. GRAY (deceased), farmer, St. Charles, Ill., born in Lawrence County, Ind., Dec. 27, 1813; came to Illinois in 1835, locating on a farm near St. Charles, where he died Dec. 23, 1898. Mr. Gray was married Dec. 16, 1834, to Polly Z. Garton, and seven of their children are now living, viz.: Virgil V., John W., Mrs. Sarah E. Tyrrell, Mrs. Mary J. Fowler, Duncan Z., Hamilton T. and Ellis A.

JOSEPH GRAY (deceased), farmer, Virgil, Kane County, Ill., was born April 22, 1830, in Prince Edward's Parish, New Brunswick. He came to Kane County, Ill., in 1848, bought a farm three miles northwest of Elburn, in the Township of Virgil. For two terms he was Postmaster at Lily Lake. He was married Sept. 15, 1858, to Juliet Woodman, daughter of Joseph and Eleanor (Barnard) Woodman, and of this union there were six children, four sons and two daughters. Mr. Gray died Sept. 16, 1901.

LESTER W. GRAY (deceased), pioneer settler, Aurora, Ill., was born July 13, 1811, in Sullivan, Penn., where he was reared to manhood, and instructed in the currier's trade. In 1838 he located in Oquawka, Ill., but soon removed to Henderson, Knox County, where he remained until 1844. That year he engaged in farming in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, his home until 1852, when he purchased a tract of land near the edge of the village of Aurora, on which he built his home, fronting on what was then called Ridge Street, but which is now Lake street. For many years after this he was engaged in farming and dealing in real estate, his efforts meeting with marked success. He subdivided and improved several tracts of land, and much of the growth and improvement of the west side can be attributed to his earnest and unceasing efforts. He contributed generously to the building of the Chicago and Aurora Railroad, and gave the site for the West Side depot. For nearly twenty years he was a member of the Aurora Board of Aldermen, and for several terms was on the Kane County Board of Supervisors. Mr. Gray was married in 1833 to Miss Diantha P. Putnam, to whose family Gen. Putnam of Revolutionary fame belonged. She was a native of Covington, Tioga County, Penn., and is still living in Aurora, being at the present time (1904) over eighty-seven years of age. The living children of this venerable couple are: John, editor, Jefferson, Iowa; Capt. Thomas P., of Washington, D. C.; Wright, of Windsor, Colo.; and Mrs. Anna Schorb, of Aurora. Mr. Gray died in Aurora in 1881, at the age of seventy years.

ROBERT GRAY, farmer and stock-raiser, Virgil Township, Kane County, was born in Virgil Township, June 14, 1874, the son of Joseph and Juliet (Woodman) Gray. His education was secured in the Geneva High School and in the University of Illinois at Urbana. For a time he was employed as an electric engineer in Chicago, but of late has been living on the home place.

AMOS C. GRAVES (deceased), farmer and early settler, Aurora, Ill., born in Cortland, N. Y., Feb. 5, 1825, son of Phineas and Anna (Kendall) Graves, and second of family of eleven children. Coming west in 1834, the family settled near Lockport, Will County, but later removed to Wayneville, DuPage County, which remained the home of the elder Mr. Graves until his retirement from active life, when he located in Aurora, where he died in 1889. Amos C. Graves was reared and educated a farmer. received such schooling as the times admitted, and was engaged in farming at the breaking out of the Civil War. He raised a company of men in 1862 and was commissioned Captain of Company D, One Hundred and Fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. At first he served on detached duty commanding a company of scouts. In the spring of 1863 he was assigned to duty on the staff of Gen. Gordon Granger, continuing in the service until March 8, 1865, when poor health compelled his resignation. After the war he resumed farming on an extensive scale in DuPage County, as well as in Iowa, but maintained his home in Aurora from 1867 to the day of his death, Nov. 1, 1901. A pioneer Republican, he was interested in public affairs and filled various official positions. Prior to the war he was Sheriff of DuPage County for two terms, and was also on the County Board. In Aurora he was City Marshal for four terms. He was associated with the Baptist church, and married Miss Mary A. Buck, daughter of Stephen Buck, pioneer settler of Kane County. Their children were: Mrs. Julia (Graves) Gary (deceased), wife of Judge E. H. Gary, Vice-President and General Counsel of the United States Steel Company; Mrs. Anna (Graves) Judd, wife of William Judd, of Aurora; Mrs. Eva (Graves) Hamilton, wife of Oscar Hamilton, of Aurora; and Mrs. Bertha (Graves) Northam, wife of Lemuel Northam, of Joliet, Ill.

CHARLES E. GRIFFITH, born in Ontario County, N. Y., Dec. 7, 1853, and came with his parents to Kane County, Ill., in 1865, where he grew to manhood on a farm in Dundee Township and obtained his education in the public schools; became connected with the Illinois Iron & Bolt Company in 1873; elected Secretary of the corporation 1888 and has since filled that position; married in 1879 Miss Anna Evans, of Dundee.

Tobin.

EUGENE H. GRIGGS, farmer, Plato, Kane County, born Jan. 4, 1841, in Plato, where he now resides; attended the public schools and Elgin Academy, and on Aug. 17, 1861, enlisted in Company B, Thirty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He participated in some of the most important events of the war, including Sherman's March to the Sea, and was honorably discharged July 15, 1865. From the army he returned to the farm on which he is now living, and which he received from his father, who secured it direct from the Government. It is located four miles southwest of Plato Center. For ten years he has been a School Trustee, and for fifteen years a School Director. He is a member of the G. A. R. Mr. Griggs was married, Dec. 5, 1877, to Miss Hattie Patterson, and they are the parents of three children: Leslie E., John G., and Jessie B.

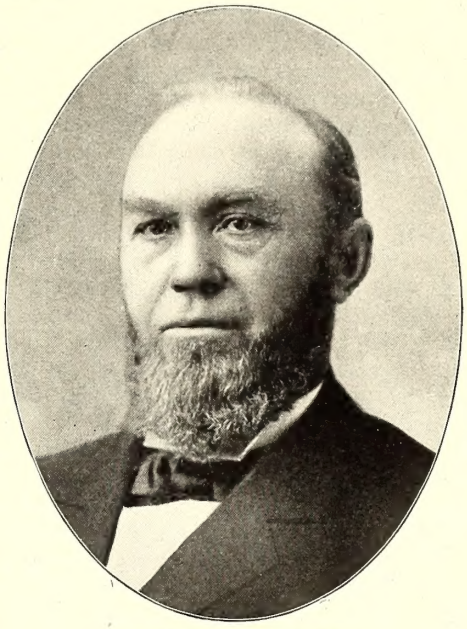
JOHN GRIGGS, Sr. (deceased), pioneer, was born Nov 6, 1782, in Sheffield, Mass. He married Ruth Dibble in 1800, at Mt. Washington, Mass., and three years later removed to Windham, Green County, N. Y., where they lived some years. In 1812 their home was at Black Rock, N. Y., where he saw service in the War of 1812. He owned a vessel plying on the Niagara River and Lake Erie, and was engaged in the transportation of Government supplies. In 1814 he went to Ohio and helped found the town of Sheffield in Ashtabula County. In 1834 he removed to Illinois, and settled in what is now Plato Township, Kane County, where he built an old-time tavern on the Galena stage line, which he kept many years in connection with his farming operation. He was one of the first Justices of the Peace in Plato Township, and held that office many years. He died in 1868.

ALEXANDER GRIMES (deceased), pioneer settler, Batavia, Ill., was born in Linden, N. Y., in 1826, and, when a boy about ten years of age, came to McHenry County, Ill. Here he passed several years with the usual experiences of frontier life, when he returned to New York, and completed his education at Madison University, graduating in 1852. The same year he married Miss Malvina Loveland, who had just graduated from Hamilton Female College, and the young couple at once came west to make their home in Batavia, Ill. Mr. Grimes was interested in real-estate operations, farming, contracting and many other business enterprises, during his long and active business career. In 1864 he was commissioned Captain of Company B, One Hundred and Forty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry (a 100-day regiment), and served out the period of his enlistment. Mr. Grimes was a life-long Democrat and took an active part in politics, and was the local leader of his party for many years. He died at Batavia in 1883. His wife died Feb. 3, 1904.



WILLIS L. GRIMES, merchant and ex-Postmaster, Batavia, Ill., was born in Batavia, Aug. 20, 1854, and is a son of Alexander and Malvina (Loveland) Grimes. He completed his education in the Batavia High School, and was trained to mercantile life. He entered the railway service in his early manhood, and was appointed Postmaster at Batavia by President Cleveland. He served a little over four years under this appointment, after which he became Cashier of the Van Nortwick Bank at Batavia. In 1893 he was again appointed Postmaster and served a little over four and a half years, acting at the same time as cashier of the bank. In 1898 he engaged in the hardware business, in which he has built up a very profitable trade, and one which promises much growth in the immediate future. In municipal affairs and in the councils of the Democratic party he is prominent. He is a Mason, a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America. He was married June 1, 1881, to Miss Anne E. Shaw, daughter of Whitely Shaw of Batavia, and of this union there have been born three daughters, Rebecca M., wife of Wm. Krause; Effie Madge, and Florence L. It is worthy of note in this connection that five generations of Mrs. Grimes' family are now living in Batavia.

WILLIAM GROTE, Real Estate and Loans, Elgin, Ill., born at Winzlar, Hanover, Germany, Nov. 22, 1849; received his education in the German schools and the public schools of Cook and DuPage Counties, whither he removed in 1866. In 1871 he entered mercantile life, but turned his attention in 1882 to real estate. He is a Republican and has served four years as Assistant Supervisor and two years as Supervisor. For six years he was on the Board of Education, was elected Mayor of Elgin in 1891, and re-elected in 1893. Mr. Grote is President of the Elgin Packing Company, President of the Kane County Title & Trust Company, Secretary of the Elgin Lumber Company, President of the Elgin Brick & Tile Company, a Director of the Home National Bank and the Home Savings Bank, Vice-President of the Elgin Academy and of North Western College, Naperville; is also Chairman of the Industrial Association of Elgin and Chairman of the Republican Central Committee of Kane County. JACOB GUSLER, farmer, Kaneville, Ill., born in York County, Penn., Sept. 2, 1842. In his boyhood he attended the public schools and in 1853 came with his parents to Kane County, Ill., where, having finished his education in the schools of that locality, he began his life career as a farmer, though for twenty years he was engaged largely in business as a carpenter, and did much contract work. He bought a farm three miles northwest of Kaneville, on which he now resides. For five years he has been Assessor of the Township. In Masonic circles Mr. Gusler stands high. He was married Dec. 25, 1872, to Miss Sarah Kuter, who bore him three sons. October 8, 1891, Mr. Gusler was married to Miss Susan M, Laschinger, as his second wife, and they are the parents of two sons.

GEORGE G. GUY, mechanical engineer and inventor, Batavia, Kane County, Ill., born at Mt. Morris, Ogle County, Ill., May 7, 1858, son of Robert and Jane (Riggs) Guy, natives of the Isle of Wight; educated in the public schools of Ashton, Ill.; in 1875 accepted a position in the wood-working department of the United States Wind-Engine & Pump Company of Batavia, and through various promotions was advanced to the position of foreman of this department in 1887. During the years of his connection with this enterprise, he spent much of his time superintending the construction of village and railway water-works, covering territory extending from the Missouri River eastward to the Atlantic coast. In 1897 Mr. Guy was made mechanical superintendent of the entire plant of the United States Wind-Engine & Pump Company, and has since filled that position. He is an inventor and patentee of various mechanical devices used on the lines with which he has been connected, and has introduced many improvements into the great industrial plant under his mechanical supervision. He is President of the Batavia Mutual Aid Association; has served four years as a member of the Batavia Board of Aldermen, and three years as a member of the West Side School Board. Fraternally he is a Knight Templar, and a member of the order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Elks. In 1880 he married Miss Jessie M. Brown, of Batavia.

DAVID C. HAEGER, managing executor of the estate of D. H. Haeger, Dundee, was born in Dundee, Ill., June 5, 1879, and was educated in the public schools and Purdue University. Owing to ill-health of his father he took charge of the business Aug. 1, 1899, and since the death of that very notable man, has managed the extensive interests of the estate. Mr. Haeger is a member of the Century and Country Clubs of Elgin, and of the Congregational church, of Dundee.

DAVID H. HAEGER.

DAVID H. HAEGER (deceased), Dundee, Ill., manufacturer, born in Mecklenburg, Germany, Aug. 7, 1839, died June 9, 1900. Mr Haeger came in company with his parents to the United States in 1854, and in 1859 established himself in McHenry County, where he sold farm machinery, bought grain and erected an elevator at Barrington. Removing to Dundee in 1871, he engaged in brick-making and opened a yard at Elgin in 1879. In 1885 he opened a second yard at Gilbert's. He owned 1,700 acres of land, and was very extensively engaged in farming and dairying. In politics he was a Republican, and in religion was principally identified with the Congregational church. In March, 1864, he married Miss Caroline Reese, and one child born of this union is now living, Mrs. Frederick Estergreen. In 1870 he was again married, Miss Mary Weltzien, who is still living, becoming his second wife. To them was born a family of children, of whom Thusnelda, Edna, David C., Mary, Edmund H., and Elsa are still living.

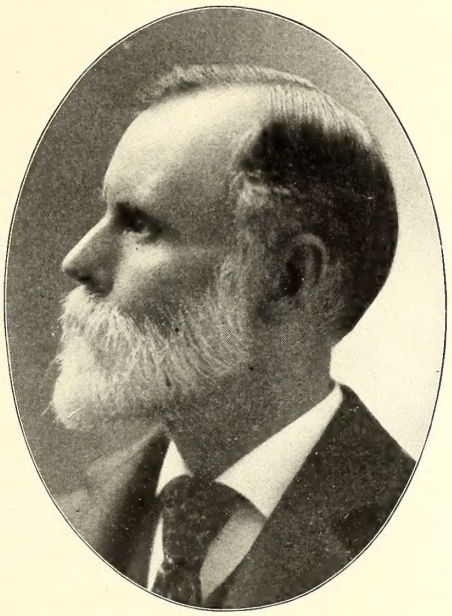
D. H. HAEGER ESTATE, manufacturers of brick and tile, at Dundee and Gilbert's, custom millers at Dundee and dealers in coal, brick, tile and building material at Dundee and Elgin; established at Dundee in 1871. The present plant consists of the brick and tile factory at Gilbert's, Ill., where thirty men are employed, with an output in 1901 of two million brick and two million feet drain-tile; the factory at Dundee, where thirty-five men are employed, with an output in 1901 of three and a half million brick; and the mill, elevator and retail yards at Elgin—representing in all an investment of $75,000, with eighty men on the pay-rolls.



ALBERT L. HALL, editor and publisher, Elgin, Ill., born on a farm in St. Charles, Kane County, Dec. 28, 1870, son of Gustavus and Mary (Alexander) Hall, spent his early youth under the parental roof-tree, and secured his education in the Elgin city schools. In 1893 Mr. Hall purchased the "Leland Express," which he published for two years, when it was consolidated with the "Earlville Gazette," the publication of the combined papers being continued at Earlville, as the "La Salle County Gazette-Express." Four years later having sold the "Gazette-Express," Mr. Hall bought the "St. Charles Chronicle," which he edited and published until 1903. During that year he organized the "Courier Publishing Company," which purchased the "Elgin Daily and Weekly Courier," Mr. Hall becoming business manager and editor of both publications, a position which he still retains. In 1897 he married Miss Frances Rice, of Mediapolis, Iowa.

CHARLES F. HALL, merchant, Dundee, born in Dundee, Ill., Feb. 27, 1846, son of George E. and Helen (Carpenter) Hall, secured his education in the Dundee public school, Clark's Seminary, Aurora, and Oberlin College. In May, 1864, he enlisted in the One Hundred Fiftieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served until the fall of that year, when he was mustered out. In 1868 he established himself as a merchant in Dundee, and has been continuously in trade to the present time (1903). He is a member of the Congregational church, and of the Order of Maccabees, the Modern Woodmen, the Knights of the Globe and the Grand Army of the Republic. In 1870 he married Miss Julia Fairchild, of Berea, Madison County, Ky.

FRANK H. HALL, noted educator and author, Aurora, Ill., was born in Mechanic Falls, Me., Feb. 9, 1841, and educated in the home schools and in Bates College, Maine. He enlisted in the Twenty-third Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry in the summer of 1862, and accompanying his regiment to the front in Virginia, rendered a soldier's duty until mustered out July 15, 1863. For a year he was engaged in college work at Bates, and then became Principal of Towle Academy, where he remained until 1866, when for two years he was Principal at Earlville, Ill. From 1868 until 1875 he was Principal of the West Side Schools in Aurora, and then took a similar position at Sugar Grove, which he held until 1887, when he was called to Petersburg in the same capacity, but the year following he resumed his old position in Aurora on the West Side. From 1890 to 1893 he was Superintendent of the School for the Blind at Jacksonville, and again from 1897 to July 1902. From 1893 to 1897 he was Superintendent of Schools in Waukegan, Ill. Since his last retirement from the Jacksonville institution he has devoted his time to Farmers' as well as Teachers' Institutes. His series of arithmetics has been extensively introduced into the schools of more than half the States of the Union, and his mechanical ingenuity is shown in his invention of the Braile-writer, and the stereotype-maker, which are in use in many schools for the blind, not only in this country but in Europe and Australia as well. The stereotype-maker was perfected by him in association with Harrison and Seifried.

JERRY HALL, retired merchant, Elburn, Ill., born in Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 23, 1821; educated in Chicago, and attended the first public school of that city; came to Elburn, Ill., and was employed as a clerk in several mercantile establishments until 1888, when he retired from active business life; married on March 17, 1850, Harriet M. Hotchkiss, who died Jan. 5, 1891. Mr. Hall is at the present time (1903) the oldest male settler living in Blackberry Township, Kane County.

JOHN H. HALL, farmer, Campton Township, Kane County, Ill., born in Virgil Township, Kane County, Jan. 12, 1868; educated in the district schools of Campton and Elburn; commenced farming on his own account in 1891, and in 1901 purchased his present farm, where he conducts an extensive dairy; married Rosie Crosby, daughter of James and Susan (Shaw) Crosby.

LYSANDER B. HAMLIN.

LYSANDER B. HAMLIN, Elgin, was born in Morgan County, Ohio, Jan. 26, 1839, son of Dr. W. S. and Eliza (Welch) Hamlin, and brought up in his native State, where he secured his education in the local schools. As a boy he was trained to farming, but in his earlier manhood joined his older brother, John A. Hamlin, who had engaged in the manufacture and sale of various proprietary medicines at Cincinnati. In 1861 they removed to Chicago, where they became famous for their Wizard Oil, the sale of which was extended throughout the United States and Canada. The business grew to large proportions, and is still owned and conducted by the original proprietors, though the first partnership has given way to an incorporation, of which L. B. Hamlin is now Vice-President. His home was in Chicago until 1886, when he removed to Elgin, where he has since resided. In later years Mr. and Mrs. Hamlin have spent their winters in Florida, where he has become interested in orange and pine-apple growing. In 1868 he was married to Miss Ella L., daughter of Morris C. Town, the widely known banker of Elgin, Ill. The members of Mr. Hamlin's family are: Maud L. (Mrs. M. M. Cloudman), Morris Clinton, Lawrence B., and Harold S.—all of Elgin, Ill.

JOHN S. HALL (deceased), pioneer, Aurora, Ill., was born in Sutton, Mass., Aug. 4, 1818, son of John and Persis (Cummins) Hall, and was reared to manhood in that State, where he received a public school education, and training as a practical millwright. Later in life he engaged in building in Massachusetts. In 1855 he came to Illinois, spending his first winter in the State in Batavia. In 1856 he located in Aurora, and became connected with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy car shops, remaining in the employ of the company until he retired from active life more than thirty years later. While there he built the first mail-car sent out of Aurora. His death occurred in Aurora, March 7, 1901. In 1841 he married Miss Abbie B. Hastings, daughter of Nahum Hastings, of Berlin, Mass. She survives her husband, still living in Aurora. Their living children are: Mrs. Abbie R. Brundage, of Aurora; Mrs. Mary Wheadon, of Indiana; Marcus M., of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; and Mrs. Susie M. Barth, of Chicago. The eldest son, George S., was killed at the battle of Stone River.

FRANCIS G. HANCHETT, lawyer, Aurora, Ill., born Kaneville, Kane County, Oct. 2, 1865, was educated in the public schools, graduated from the old University of Chicago in 1882 and from the law department of the University of Iowa in 1883, and began the practice of law in Aurora in 1884 as junior partner of the firm of Winslow & Hanchett, which became Hopkins, Hanchett & Dolph, A. J. Hopkins, the head of the firm being the present United States Senator from Illinois. When this firm dissolved, Mr. Hanchett began business alone, which he has since continued. For eight years he was Chairman of the Republican County Committee, and for several years served as a member of the West Aurora Board of Education. In 1883 he was married to Miss Lillian L. Scott, daughter of John H. Scott, a Kaneville farmer. David Hanchett, father of Francis G., was an early settler in Kaneville, and his grandfather on the maternal side, Alfred Churchill, who was one of the early settlers of Kane County, was a member of the Illinois Constitutional Convention of 1847.

SAMUEL H. HANECY, brick manufacturer, Carpentersville, Kane County, born in Bangor, Me., Aug. 1, 1822, son of James P. Hanecy, a sea-captain and a merchant. In 1833 the father took the son to New Orleans with the intention of rearing him to a sea-faring life, but while there the father was stricken with yellow fever and black vomit, and although he recovered, was left a cripple for life. On the homeward voyage his father's ship was caught in a storm, and was fourteen days making the trip to Charleston, S. C., where he was compelled to stop for extensive repairs. Three months later the son was sent to Boston and from there to Bangor. In 1836 Captain Hanecy came with his family to Illinois, settling in Rock Island County, where Samuel H. completed his schooling, and learned the brickmaking trade, in which he established himself in Chicago in 1848, and in which he was very successfully engaged until 1860. Afterward he operated with partners and for the city of Chicago at the Bridewell, and for twelve years was engaged in merchandising in Wisconsin. In 1880 he established his home in Chicago, but continued to do business in Chicago for several years thereafter. Retiring from active business, he has since lived in Carpentersville, where he is now serving his fourth term as Justice of the Peace. He has also acted as local representative of the Ætna Fire Insurance Co. In 1849 Mr. Hanecy married Miss Martha A. Piney, of Bristol, and has reared a family of seven sons and one daughter. His oldest son, Edward, who was connected for twenty-seven years with the Bridewell Prison of Chicago, is now Deputy Warden of the Wisconsin State Prison at Waupun. His second son, Jerome, is in business at Pullman, Ill.; Frank, the third son, is superintendent of a factory in Oshkosh, Wis.; William, the fourth son, is superintendent and chief engineer of the United States Appraisers' building in Chicago; Arthur, the fifth son ,is an expert iron moulder at Harvard, Ill.; Joseph, the sixth son, is engineer at the silver plate factory at Elgin; and Charles, the youngest son, is superintendent of the Borden Condensed Milk Factory, at Auburn, Wash. The daughter married L. J. Wright, who is connected with the Borden Condensed Milk Factory at Carpentersville.

EZRA HANSON (deceased), pioneer farmer, Elgin, Ill., was born April 22, 1806, in Lebanon, Me., then an integral part of Massachusetts, and was a son of John B. and Dorcas (Libby) Hanson. In his early life in the East he operated a tanning and currier business, but when he came west in 1837, located on a farm in Ohio Grove, DeKalb County, where he acquired a large tract of land. In 1844 he sold his land and removed to a farm in Burlington Township. This farm he increased by subsequent purchases until, at one time, he owned over 1,400 acres of land in one body. For years he devoted his attention to raising grain, and was one of the few who never engaged in dairy-farming. In 1856 he left the farm and removed to Elgin, but continued his agricultural labors as long as he lived. Mr. Hanson was married Sept. 5, 1833, to Miss Katharine Kimball Upton, of Danvers, Mass., who died in Elgin, March 28, 1876, and there Mr. Hanson also died, June 15, 1890. Only two of their children reached maturity. Of these Joseph Haven Hanson, who was born Oct. 16, 1835, became a lawyer and died Aug. 14, 1892, and Mary Upton Hanson, born Jan 10, 1839, is still living in Elgin.

ABNER HARD (deceased), physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., was born at Geneva, N. Y., Dec. 3, 1821; spent his early boyhood in his native State, coming from there to Unadilla, Mich., in 1832; educated at a seminary at Ypsilanti, Mich., and began the study of medicine in that State; graduated from Keokuk Medical College, Keokuk, Iowa, and later from Rush Medical College, Chicago. He began the practice of medicine in Aurora about 1848, and soon became one of the leading members of his profession. He died in Aurora in 1885. He was married in 1844 to Miss Laura E. Vreeland, whose home was then at Flat Rock, Mich., but whose birthplace was Geneva, N. Y. Mrs. Hard comes of an old Pennsylvania family which was almost exterminated at the Wyoming Massacre, which occurred during the Revolutionary War. She survives her husband and still lives in Aurora. The living children of Dr. and Mrs. Hard are: Mrs. W. H. Van Arsdale, Mrs. W. T. Murphy and Mrs. Charles C. Shepard. Mrs. Florence Todisneau, another daughter, died leaving two sons who were adopted by Dr. and Mrs. Hard and are his living descendants bearing the name. They are Malcolm Hard, of Cleveland, Ohio, and A. Perry Hard, of Chicago, Ill.

HIRAM T. HARDY, physician and surgeon, Kaneville, Ill., was born in North Groton, Grafton County, N. H., March 12, 1838, and early acquired his education in the schools of his native place and in the academies of Franklin, N. H., and Thetford, Vt. He took a course of medical lectures and instruction in Dartmouth College and began the practice of medicine at Strafford, Vt., in 1866. In 1871 he removed from that point to Illinois, and settled at Kaneville in 1873, where he has since remained. He is an adept in Masonic lore, belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and is a member of the Congregational church. Mr. Hardy was married March 12, 1868, to Miss Sophia E. Buzzell, a native of Vermont. They have had three children: one son and two daughters, one of the latter being deceased. Dr. Hardy is a veteran of the Civil War, having enlisted in 1862 in the Seventh Squadron of Rhode Island, for three months' service, re-enlisting in the Third Vermont Battery, and serving until the close of the war. He participated in some of the fiercest engagements of the Eastern Army and escaped unhurt.

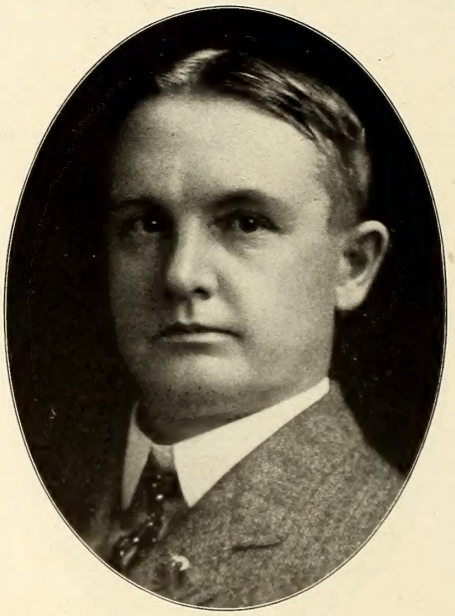
HENRY HARMAN, retired farmer, Batavia, Ill., was born in Westmoreland County, Penn., Jan. 29, 1834, and came to Illinois when he was thirteen years old, making his home for a time near Quincy, and then removing to Kane County, where he has since lived. In 1861 he enlisted in the Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry and served during the Civil War. He was mustered out in August, 1865, as Second Sergeant, after three years and eight months of hard and honorable service. His regiment did service in the Western Army, and he took part in numerous battles, including those of Shiloh, Corinth, Kenesaw Mountain, and all the engagements of the Atlanta campaign. He was severely wounded at Columbia, S. C., being in the hospital, however, only once during his entire service. He returned to Kane County after the war, and lived on a farm near Batavia until 1892, when he removed to the city. Mr. Harman was married in 1864 to Miss Mary Perry, of Batavia.

J. F. HARRAL, coal merchant, Aurora, Ill., born in Leeds, England, Aug. 3, 1840; came to America with his parents in November, 1852; enlisted in Company E, Thirty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry in August, 1861, remaining in the service three years; returned to Aurora in June, 1869, entering the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company; engaged in the coal business in Aurora in 1875, which he has since conducted successfully. Mr. Harral was married June 30, 1875, to Clara W. Hitchcock, of Aurora.



BLEXTON HARRIS, physician, Aurora, Ill., born near Newark, Licking County, Ohio, Sept. 11, 1824, son of William and Rebecca (Comas) Harris; in 1830 came to Illinois with his parents, whose home was made in LaSalle County, later removing to Kendall County, where they bought land near Yorkville, and where Dr. Harris grew to manhood with distinct memories of the Blackhawk War. He was a student in the pioneer schools and in Prof. Stuart's school in Chicago, then began reading medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Buck, of Chicago, graduated from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1859, when he began practice at Yorkville, Kendall County. After the outbreak of the Rebellion, he was commissioned as surgeon serving throughout the war and being mustered out in the spring of 1865. His paternal grandfather was a soldier of the Revolution, and both his father and maternal grandfather were soldiers in the War of 1812. Dr. Harris resumed his practice after the war at Yorkville, remaining there until in 1866, when he removed to Big Rock and continued practice there until 1891, since that time being engaged in practice in Aurora. In the early days Dr. Harris' practice extended over the greater part of Kane and Kendall Counties, and he numbers his friends by the thousands. Dr. Harris belongs to the American, the State Medical and the Rock River Valley Medical Societies. For some years he was active in business, and owns some good farm lands; has been Justice of the Peace, Postmaster, and President of the Board of Education at Big Rock and Yorkville. In 1862 he married Miss Samantha McMullen, who was born in Pennsylvania and died in 1874; in 1878 he married Miss Caroline Rhodes, an early settler in Big Rock Township. Dr. Harris was the last Postmaster at Kaneville under Buchanan, and again at Big Rock under Cleveland—the last two Democratic Presidents. He has taken an active part in every political campaign intervening.

EDWIN M. HARRIS, educator, Sugar Grove, Ill., born at Yorkville, Ill., Oct. 3, 1863; received his educational training at the Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial Institute and the Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., was superintendent of the Batavia schools during 1895-6, and later taught mathematics and sciences in Jennings Seminary, Aurora; became principal of the Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial Institute in 1899, and has since been at the head of this well-known institution. He was married in 1888 to Miss Mary E. Davis, of Big Rock, Ill.

JAMES M. HARRIS, Elburn, Ill., born at Maltaville, Saratoga County, N. Y., June 10, 1832; came to Chicago in 1858, but removed to Janesville, Wis., one year later, where he was in the employ of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Company; removed to Elburn, Ill., in 1864, still retaining his position with the railroad company, and served in that capacity until 1900, but since the latter date has lived retired. On Nov. 23, 1859, he was married to Sarah L. Robinson.

GEORGE J. HARRIS, General Agent Canada-Atlantic Railway, Geneva, Ill., born in Conneautville, Pa.; was educated in the public schools of his native State and Michigan. His business career began with his connection with the Great Western Railway of Canada, when he was only seventeen years of age. In 1879 he entered the employ of the Detroit & Cleveland

Steam Navigation Company, with which he continued until 1884, when he removed to Chicago to take a place with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway. The following year he became connected with the Western Freight Association, and in 1887 accepted a position with the Central Vermont Railway & Steamboat Line, afterward reorganized as the Ogdensburg Transit Company, which he held until Feb. 1, 1899, when he became General Agent of the Canada-Atlantic Line at Chicago. Mr. Harris has resided at Geneva since 1899. He is a Thirty-second Degree Mason, and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. In 1899 Miss Orilla, daughter of H. B. Fargo, of Geneva, became his wife.

SAMUEL HARTER, retired farmer, Kaneville, Kane County, was born in Center County, Penn., Jan. 6, 1828, and secured his education in the home schools. In 1854 he came to Kane County, and soon after bought a farm, on which he has carried on farming to the present time, and has attained a position of more than usual prominence in the community. He has been School Director, Road Commissioner and School Trustee a number of years. In religion he is a member of the Evangelical Church of Pierceville. He married Mary Dauberman in 1852, who died in 1857, leaving two children. In 1858 he was married to Elizabeth Gusler, by whom he has had one boy.

WILLIAM A. HARTSBURG, manufacturer, North Aurora, Ill., was born in Roxbury, Mass., Aug. 23, 1848, in 1856 came west with his parents, who settled in Aurora, Ill., where he attended the city schools, and while quite young worked for A. R. Palmer, then a merchant in Montgomery, Kane County, but later head of the noted manufacturing firm of Palmer, Fuller & Co., Chicago, with whom he learned the door, sash and window blind manufacture. For some ten years he was connected with this firm, and then entered the employ of the North Aurora Manufacturing Company. Ten years later, in company with William Hawksley, he became owner of the plant, which they have since operated with large success. In 1894, in company with other partners, he organized the North Aurora Creamery Company, which has had a most prosperous career, Mr. Hartsburg being its President for two years, and since a Director. For some years he was connected with the Fox River Valley Building and Loan Association—the affairs of which he is now liquidating—and also with the Aurora Pure Ice Company. For several years he has been a member of the Aurora Township School Board. He is a Knight Templar Mason, and belongs to the order of Elks. In 1870 he married Miss Helena, daughter of Charles Simons, of Aurora.

PETER G. HARTZ, merchant, Aurora, Ill., born in the city where he now resides, Oct. 31, 1861; educated in the public schools and trained to the drug trade; graduated from the Chicago School of Pharmacy in the class of 1888, and since 1892 has managed the drug store with which he is connected.

DAVID HARVEY (deceased), Methodist clergyman and farmer, La Fox, Ill.; born in Massachusetts, March 26, 1828; educated in the public schools of New York State; came to Illinois in 1845, locating on 160 acres of land in Chicken Grove, where he was engaged in farming for twenty years; later became a minister in the Methodist Conference, and followed that vocation until his death, which occurred Dec. 10, 1867; married Nabbie K. Ainsworth.

JOEL D. HARVEY, lawyer, Geneva, Ill., was born in Kane County in 1836, son of Joel Harvey, who was born near Saratoga, N. Y., and served as the first Treasurer of the county, having come to Illinois the year before his appointment, making the journey overland through Canada, and settling in what is now Kane County. Joel D. Harvey was reared in Elgin, and received his education in the local schools; read law in Racine, Wis., and was admitted to the Bar in Kane County in 1857. Mr. Harvey began his practice in Geneva in 1858, and later practiced in Aurora four years. In the spring of 1864 he located in Chicago, in which city he is still engaged in business, though maintaining his residence in Geneva. In 1876 he was appointed by President Grant Collector of Internal Revenue for the First District of Illinois, holding that position through the administrations of Presidents Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, and, for a short time, under President Cleveland. In 1858 he was married to Julia Plato, a daughter of the Hon. W. B. Plato, one of the most distinguished lawyers and pioneers of Kane County.

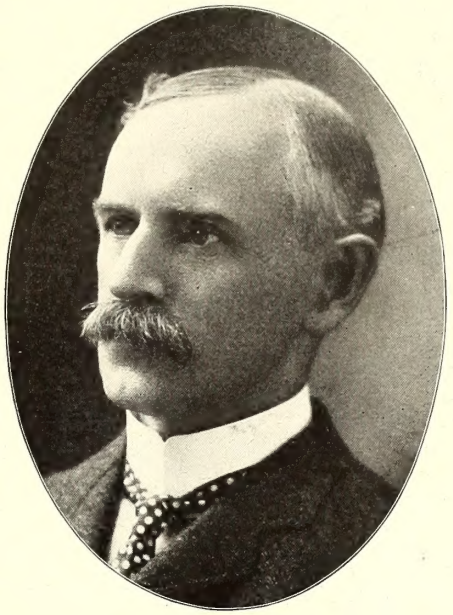
JOHN F. HARVEY, farmer, La Fox, Ill.; born in Herkimer County, N. Y., March 18, 1829; educated in the schools of his native State and Elgin, Ill.; began his business career as a farmer, and in 1864 purchased his present farm near La Fox; married, on Oct. 28, 1862, Angeline Garfield.

AUSTIN P. HATCH (deceased), son of Jethro and Minerva (Peirce) Hatch, was born in Port Leyden, N. Y., June 24, 1843, and was five years old when brought west by his parents. He grew to manhood on the Sugar Grove homestead, and was educated in the home schools, Wheaton College and at Bryant & Stratton's Business College, Chicago. Becoming a pharmacist, he was in the drug store of Dr. Winslow & Dr. Gillett at the outbreak of the Civil War. He enlisted in July, 1862, and July 18, 1863, was mustered out on account of ill health. He followed farming until 1869, when he became proprietor of the same drug business with which he was before associated. From 1880 to 1883 he lived in Minneapolis, Minn., on account of his health, with this exception being a resident of Aurora from 1869 to 1901, his death occurring May 6 of the latter year. He was a member of the G. A. R. and the K. G. In 1886 he was married to Miss Melissa J., daughter of Perley B. and Lois (Gurler) Snow, who settled in Sugar Grove Township in 1839. Of this marriage were born Mrs. Elsie Case, of Mt. Vernon, N. Y.; Mrs. Celia Pope, of Denver, Colo.; and Louise M., Teresa Fay, Bertha M. and Lois G., of Aurora. One who knew Mr. Hatch intimately, in describing his personal characteristics, said of him, that "the unselfish and kindly life of Austin P. Hatch was, at all times, the revelation of a true gentleman."

ELAM HATCH (deceased), pioneer, was born in Sherburne, New York, in 1787, and grew up in his native State, where he was farmer until 1850. In the latter year he came west and settled in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, where he reared his family. He died in 1876. His wife, who was Margaret Farrell before her marriage, died in 1875. Their family consisted of four sons, of whom three were living in 1903. The oldest son, Israel B., died in 1888; T. Yale Hatch, resides in South Dakota; Frank D., is a resident of Kankakee, Ill.; Elam F. Hatch, the only son now residing in Sugar Grove Township, was born in Sherburne County, N. Y., Feb. 10, 1839, and received his educational training in the public schools and at Aurora Seminary. He joined his father in farming while a young man, and still lives on the old farm. He married Augusta M. Collson, who was born in New York State, and they reared a family of six children.

JETHRO HATCH (deceased), pioneer settler of Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, born in the year 1791, at Sherburne, Chenango County, New York State, was a descendant of Thomas Hatch, who was born in Kent, England, and came to America in 1620, in the company of Governor Winthrop. His father, Timothy, and his grandfather, Major Jethro Hatch, were both soldiers of the Revolution. Jethro Hatch was reared in New England, and in 1848 came west. He became wealthy and influential, was deeply interested in all public questions, and was an earnest opponent of human slavery. He was Chairman of the first Republican convention of Kane County, said to have been the first in the State. In 1869 he moved to Aurora, and here he died in 1875. Minerva Peirce, a native of New York, became his wife, and their living children are: Fayette S., of Kankakee, Ill.; Dr. Jethro A., of Kentland, Ind.; Mrs. Martha Winslow, of Gilroy, Cal.; Mrs. Marcelia Winslow, and Austin P. (deceased).



MOSES W. HAWES (deceased), financier, merchant, and contractor, Elgin, Ill., was born in Watertown, N. Y., Sept. 2, 1814, and when a young man studied civil engineering in Baltimore. In 1837 he was chosen out of a hundred applicants to go to Conception, Chile, to establish a flouring mill, the second in that country. For a number of years he was superintendent of the mill, and then became a government contractor, having under his charge some of the largest bridges and docks of the day. After remaining in Chile more than twenty years, he went to China in 1859 but soon returned to the United States. While in Chile he married a Spanish lady, who died before he left that country. His second marriage was contracted Feb. 12, 1860, with Miss Jennie Rosenkrans, who was born in Steuben County, N. Y., Oct. 4, 1833, the daughter of Asa and Jane (Cole) Rosenkrans, her father being a first cousin of the noted Union General of that name. Following his second marriage Mr. and Mrs. Hawes spent six years in Chile, returning in 1866 to Elgin, where Mr. Hawes remained until 1870, when he engaged in the lumber business in Mendota, Ill. After the Chicago fire, Mr. Hawes sold out at Mendota, and resumed his residence in Elgin. Having suffered a severe illness in 1873, accompanied by his wife he made the tour of Europe, repeating the journey on two subsequent occasions. While in Europe the third time, he was elected President of the Home National Bank in 1877, a position he filled two years. In 1880 the family removed to Mendota a second time, for Mr. Hawes to take an interest in a linseed oil mill in that city in company with H. S. Clark. Two years later he sold to Mr. Clark, and again engaged in the lumber business. In 1892 he once more resumed his residence in Elgin, where he remained until his death, Nov. 22, 1894. Mr. Hawes was a Mason and a Republican. He is survived by his widow, and a daughter by his first marriage, Mrs. Bernardo Bambach, who lives in Chile.

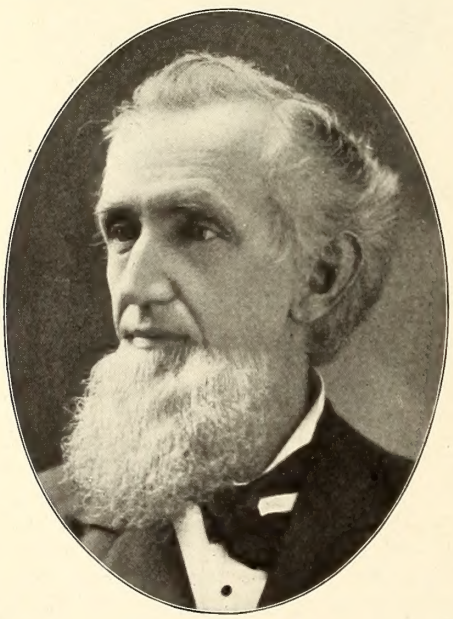
MOSES W. HAWES.



ANDREW C. HAWKINS, Assistant Cashier First National Bank of Elgin and Cashier of the Elgin City Banking Company, Elgin, Ill., born in Toronto, Canada, July 3, 1848, son of Henry and Emma Holt (Bryant) Hawkins, natives of England, came to Elgin when a young man and secured employment as a clerk with the First National Bank of that city, and has since been connected with that institution, a period of almost forty years. He is the oldest living banker in Elgin. In political sentiment Mr. Hawkins is a Republican, has always taken an active interest in public affairs, and has held the office of City Treasurer eight years and Alderman two terms. Mr. Hawkins was married Aug. 25, 1869, to Miss Alice French, born April 15, 1851, daughter of Horace and Eliza J. (Cox) French, of Painesville, O. Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins have five sons: Horace Walter, Henry French, Leonard, Mortimer and Willard B.

ANDREW C. HAWKINS.

WILLIAM HAWKSLEY, manager Sash Factory, North Aurora, Kane County, Ill., was born in Northampton, England, emigrated to the United States in 1873, locating at North Aurora the same year. In 1879 he entered into business with W. A. Harding.

EDGAR C. HAWLEY, Dundee, legislator, born at Barrington, Cook County, Ill., Feb. 20, 1850, son of George C. and Anna (Nute) Hawley, was reared on the farm and educated in the public schools. In 1873 he established himself as a merchant in Dundee, and was later there engaged in banking. He was a member of the Kane County Board of Supervisors two terms, and in 1888 was elected a Representative in the General Assembly from Kane County, by re-elections serving four consecutive terms in that body. He has since been connected with State Board of Grain and Warehouse Commissioners in Chicago. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he has taken all the degrees except the Scottish Rite. In 1871 he married Miss Esther E., daughter of Henry E. Hunt, of Dundee, and their living children are: William A., a civil engineer, now connected with the Pennsylvania Railroad; and Esther A., now a student at the University of Illinois; Henry E., the first born, died in 1881.

JOHN S. HAWLEY.

JOHN S. HAWLEY (deceased), was born in Ridgefield, Conn., Oct. 22, 1820, his ancestors being among the number who came to America in the "Mayflower." Mr. Hawley came to Chicago in the spring of 1836, when that city contained about 4,000 inhabitants, and here obtained his first employment in the mercantile business with Magie & Pitkin. He removed to Aurora in 1851 and started in business at the corner of Main street and Broadway—known as the McLellen property—and early in the fall of the same year built a store on Main Street, where he was actively engaged in business for forty-four years, or until stricken with paralysis on Feb. 22, 1895, which resulted in his death March 12, of the same year. The handsome brick residence at 171 LaSalle Street was built by Mr. Hawley, and here he resided until his death. He was a member of the order of Odd-Fellows, but withdrew a few years before his death; was also a member of the Calumet Club of Chicago, and of the first fire company ("American") in Aurora from 1857 to 1864; was one of the originators of the Aurora National Bank, in which he was a stockholder and Director. On May 8, 1850, Mr. Hawley was married in Detroit, Mich., to Mary Malcolm, who died Dec. 8, 1894. Not having any children of his own, he adopted a little girl in 1858, who survives and lives in Southbridge, Mass. Mr. Hawley was a man of sterling disposition, straight-forward in business and exemplary in all his habits; his every-day life was his religion.

FRANK O. HAWLEY, farmer and real-estate dealer, Aurora, was born in Oswego, Kendall County, Ill., Nov. 20, 1850, son of Frank G. Hawley, a settler in Kendall County in 1837, and long a member of the Bar of that county, as well as a large land owner, was educated in the local schools, Knox College and Northwestern University, and for a time read law, but turning his attention to a business career, engaged in the handling of real estate in Kendall County. From 1878 until 1884 he was in the storage and loan business in Chicago, when he returned to Kendall County to take care of his real estate interests. From 1890 to the present time his home has been in Aurora, where his real estate transactions have been both extensive and profitable, including several additions to the city, as well as a number of large deals in farming lands in the West and elsewhere. In Kendall County he is an extensive landowner, and is now (1903) engaged in building up Oswego, to which he has made an imporant addition. A prominent Democrat, he has refused official position. Was one of the founders of the "Aurora Daily Democrat," and in 1892 became sole owner of its successor, the "Aurora Daily Times," which he conducted for a year and a half. In 1885 he married Miss Letitia Gillespie, of Oswego, Ill., and their children are: Emily, Bessie May, Paul G., and Lysander F.

SIDNEY B. HAWLEY (deceased), physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., was born in Franklin County, Vt., March 9, 1830, the son of Lyman Hawley, a farmer of note in that distant day. Dr. Hawley grew to manhood under the parental roof, and received his academic education from the local schools. In 1852 he graduated from the Brattleboro (Vt.) Medical College, and locating at Jefferson, O., engaged in the practice of his profession with much success. In that community were the homes of Benjamin F. Wade, Joshua R. Giddings, W. D. Howells, and other celebrities. The Wade and Howells families were numbered among his earliest patrons and warmly commended his professional and personal characteristics. After a residence of five years in Jefferson, Dr. Hawley removed to Chicago, where he practiced three years, and in 1860 settled in Aurora. In the summer of 1861 he entered the Union Army as Assistant Surgeon of the Thirty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but was soon transferred to the Thirty-fifth as Surgeon, where he served until the close of the war. His regiment was a part of the Army of the West, and participated in its campaigns. As a consequence Dr. Hawley was always at the front and saw much of the hospital service of the war. Captured by the rebels at Chickamauga, he was held six weeks a prisoner of war in Libby Prison, Richmond. After the war he had a large practice at Aurora until his death, which occurred in 1877. In 1855 he was married to Miss Mary A. Webster, of Fairfax, Vt.

LABAN HAYWARD, merchant, Aurora, Ill., was born in Shrewsbury, Rutland County, Vt., Aug. 21, 1836, and came of an old Vermont family. His father, Willard Hayward, came with his family to Illinois in 1849, and some years later removed to Aurora, where he died in 1880. Laban Hayward received a good education, and taught school for some years in his early manhood. However, as he had been trained to farming life he devoted his earlier years mainly to that occupation in Will County. In 1865 he removed to Aurora, where he at first was engaged in the meat trade and packing business, to which he later added a grocery store. Here he built up a business which he carried on very successfully until 1898, when he disposed of it after more than a third of a century of active work, his sons succeeding him. This business was carried on in a block on Broadway which he had built for himself. Mr. Hayward has been connected with various other interests in Aurora, and for some years was a Director of the First National Bank, and is stockholder in the Home Building and Loan Association. His first vote was cast for Abraham Lincoln, and he has been an active and earnest Republican to the present time. He has served one term as a member of the Aurora Board of Aldermen. Fraternally he is a Mason and at different times has represented his local lodge as a member of the Grand Lodge of Illinois. In later years his attention has been largely given to estates entrusted to his care. His wife, born Elizabeth Barclay, is a native of Glasgow, Scotland, but was living in Will County at the time of their marriage.

JOHN L. HEALY, the son of Bernard and Catherine (Laughlin) Healy, the subject of this sketch, was born in the city of Elgin, Ill., where he now resides, on Aug. 3, 1861. His father, Bernard Healy, was born in Dublin, Ireland, and, as a young man, in the year 1842, emigrated from his native country, and after arriving in the United States at once proceeded to Elgin, Ill., where he settled and immediately established a saddlery and harness business, thereby becoming one of its pioneer merchants and business men. The business thus established he continued and successfully maintained for a period of more than fifty years. He was always prominently identified with public affairs and leading enterprises, and at an early day assisted James T. Gifford in laying out the original plat of the city of Elgin. The subject of this sketch obtained his early education in the public schools of Elgin and later attended St. Joseph's College at Bardstown, Ky., and the University of Notre Dame, at Notre Dame, Ind., from which he graduated in the year 1879. Later on he engaged in the study of the law and was admitted to the bar in 1884, and in the year following pursued a course of post-graduate studies in Heidelberg, Germany, and in connection therewith acquired proficiency in the use of the German language, as well as a general insight into European laws and customs. In 1885, after returning from Europe, he at once engaged in the active practice of his profession, entering into partnership with Henry B. Willis as the junior member of the law firm of Willis & Healy, his partner subsequently becoming one of the present Judges of the Sixteenth Judicial Circuit of the State of Illinois. After the dissolution of the firm, Mr. Healy continued in the active practice of his profession until the month of February, 1903, when he was elected Judge of the City Courts of Elgin and Aurora, thereby achieving a signal victory as the result of a very spirited and exciting contest for this office. In addition to the discharge of his judicial duties in the two cities comprising his district, he has also been frequently called to the City of Chicago to assist in disposing of the causes on the dockets of the courts of Cook County, where his ability as a jurist has received the fullest recognition and the highest commendation, both by the judiciary and the members of the bar of that city. As a business man he has been both prosperous and progressive, having in conjunction with the practice of the law also devoted considerable attention to various commercial enterprises in which he has been exceptionally successful, as his many and extensive property investments in the City of Elgin and elsewhere fully attest. Conspicuous among these investments, as one of the instances of his building enterprises, is the Healy-Egan Block in the City of Elgin, modeled and equipped under his direction, in which are located his commodious and neatly appointed law offices, which in design and finish are the finest in the county, and which are also furnished with a carefully selected and valuable library; and in these pleasant quarters, when not engaged in the more arduous duties of his position, Judge Healy may be found at home, always ready to extend a cordial welcome to his friends.

HARRY DWIGHT HEMMENS, manufacturer and newspaper publisher, Elgin, Ill., was born in the city where he now resides in 1858, and received his educational training in the city schools. He began reportorial work on the "Bluff City," the first daily paper published in Elgin, in 1878, and was later connected with Chicago and New York newspapers until 1882, for a time being financial editor of the New York "Journal," when he returned to Elgin, and in company with William F. Doherty, founded the "Daily and Weekly Courier." For several years prior to 1903, he was editor and sole proprietor of this publication; but at the beginning of the latter year the "Courier Publishing Company" was organized, and to it Mr. Hemmens turned over his newspaper property, and retired from its editorship, but has retained an interest in the establishment and is acting as President of the corporation. He was appointed postmaster of Elgin by President McKinley in 1898, and reappointed by President Roosevelt in 1902. In politics he is a Republican.

HARRY G. HEMPSTEAD, attorney, St. Charles, Ill.; born in Chicago, Feb. 22, 1871; obtained his preliminary education in the public schools of Chicago and St. Charles, and later took a course in law at Ann Arbor and the Northwestern University; admitted to the bar in 1893; was city attorney for St. Charles one term; married in 1897 to Georgia E. Osgood.

PROSPER HEMPSTEAD, manager telephone lines, St. Charles, Kane County, Ill.; born in Williamstown, Oswego County, N. Y., July 7, 1838, son of William C. and Jennette (Putnam) Hempstead; obtained his education in an academy at Pulaski, N. Y., and was trained to merchandising in his native State, and has been more or less identified with mercantile pursuits during his business career. In 1855 he went to Minnesota, where he remained until 1861, when he came to Chicago and became connected with the famous Western Dry-Goods House, then conducted by the late Potter Palmer, remaining with this firm and its successors for many years, but was later associated with Mr. Palmer in the management of the Palmer House in Chicago. In 1886 he established his home at St. Charles, where he has since resided. He became manager of the Chicago Telephone Company's lines in the Fox River Valley in 1899. In political views Mr. Hempstead is a Democrat; has served as City Clerk and Justice of the Peace, and has taken an active part in the conduct of municipal affairs. In 1867 he was married to Miss Helen H. Garner, daughter of Mrs. Sarah Garner.

AUGUSTUS M. HERRINGTON (deceased), lawyer, Geneva, Ill., was born at Meadville, Penn., July 27, 1820, and died at Geneva, Ill., Aug. 13, 1883. His education was secured in the schools of Geneva, where his family settled in 1834. He was admitted to the Bar in 1844, and was appointed United States District Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois. In 1873 he became solicitor for the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, with offices in Chicago, and sustained this relation to the company until his death. A strong Democrat, he was Presidential Elector in 1856, and was a delegate to the National Conventions at Baltimore in 1860, and Chicago in 1864. In 1849 he married Miss Emily A. Cook, of St. Charles, a native of New York.

JAMES HERRINGTON, Sr. (deceased), Geneva, one of the earlier pioneer settlers of Kane County, was born in Mercer County, Penn., and located in Chicago in 1833. In 1834 he purchased the land on which the county-seat of Kane County was located in 1837, the same year in which he laid out the town of Geneva. He was chiefly instrumental in bringing about the organization of the county, and suggested the name which was given it in honor of Elias K. Kane, one of the first United States Senators from Illinois. He died at Geneva in 1839.

JAMES HERRINGTON, Jr. (deceased), legislator, Geneva, Ill., was born in Mercer County, Penn., June 6, 1824, and came with his parents to Kane County, Ill., in 1833. There he grew to manhood and largely received his education. He learned the printing trade in Chicago as an employe of Hon. John Wentworth, proprietor of the "Chicago Democrat." He was elected County Clerk of Kane County in 1849, and filled that position eight years. For seven terms he represented Kane County in the State Legislature, and also served as Mayor of Geneva. He married Mary A. Blodgett, a native of New York. He died in Geneva in 1890.

MASON A. HIGGINS (deceased), merchant, Aurora, Ill., was born in Windham County, Vt., where he received a practical education, and was trained to merchandising. He engaged in business for himself in Washington County, N. Y., where he was a merchant and manufacturer for many years. In 1872 Mr. Higgins came to Aurora and established himself in business as a member of the mercantile firm of Lawrence & Company, Mr. Lawrence having previously been a partner of Mr. Higgins in New York. Mr. Higgins was identified with this firm until 1879, when he retired from active business. His death occurred in Aurora in February, 1893. The surviving members of his family in 1904 are Mrs. Higgins, who still lives in Aurora, and a son and a daughter. An older son died in July, 1903. Mrs. Higgins, nee Nellie E. Campbell, is a native of New York, and was a resident of Vermont before her marriage. She has been associated with many charitable and philanthropic enterprises in Aurora, chief among them, perhaps, being the Aurora Hospital, of which she was one of the founders.

GEORGE HIGGINS (deceased), pioneer physician and surgeon, born at Barton, Orange County, Vt., Dec. 27, 1826; came to Aurora with his parents in 1835; graduated from Rush Medical College (Chicago) in 1850, and passed his entire professional career in Aurora, where he died Sept. 24, 1890. He was married in 1875 to Miss Mary M. Baker, who still survives and lives in Aurora.

FRANK R. HILL, farmer, Batavia Township, Kane County, Ill.; born in Wyoming County, N. Y., June 1, 1849; educated in the common schools of Kane County, Ill., and was trained to farming in boyhood, having followed that occupation to the present time; has been engaged principally in dairy farming and grain raising; married Miss Emma J. Pope, of Aurora.

CHARLES C. HINCKLEY, electrician and inventor, Aurora, Ill., was born in Winsted, Conn., Jan. 1, 1854, and educated in the public schools of Hartford in that State, where he was trained to the watch manufacturing business. After working several years in eastern watch factories, mainly as foreman, he came west, and was one of the organizers of the Rockford Watch Company in 1873. Ten years later he helped organize the Aurora Watch Factory, and thus became associated with the city. Later he organized the Hinckley Manufacturing Company, which secured a very extensive patronage in the making of electrical goods, and watchmakers' tools and machinery. In the financial panic of 1893 Mr. Hinckley was hard hit, and the enterprise met with disaster.

Since then he has devoted his attention to the manufacture of electrical goods. From 1896 he has been City Electrician of Aurora, and prior to that time had served as a member of the Board of Public Works. Many electrical and mechanical devices have been invented by him, and he has taken out numerous patents.

ALBERT WALKER HINMAN, physician, Dundee, Ill.; born at Stillville, Oneida County, N. Y., Oct. 10, 1845; came west in 1876, locating first in De Kalb County, Ill.; during the winters of 1876, '77, '78 and '79 he took a course of training in the Chicago Homœopathic Medical College, and afterward began the practice of medicine at St. Charles; located at Dundee in the spring of 1882, and has since practiced his profession in that city except a short time spent in Chicago (1893-97). The Doctor was married Nov. 29, 1880, to Miss Elizabeth Gliddin, of De Kalb, Ill.

OLIVER ASAHEL HINSDELL, retired merchant, Elgin, Ill., was born in Hanover, Cook County, Ill., Oct. 11, 1846, the son of Asahel Bemis and Eliza (Hanks) Hinsdell, and when about one year old was brought by his parents to Elgin, which, except a few years residence in Chicago, has been his home up to the present time. Mr. Hinsdell received his education in the public schools, in Elgin Academy and Michigan University. He made his first business venture with Thomas Thompson in the furniture trade. After the great fire in Chicago in 1871, the firm removed to that city, locating their store on Wells Street (North Side), where they continued in business for the next three years. Having sold out his interest in Chicago in 1874, Mr. Hinsdell returned to Elgin, where he engaged in the furniture business as a member of the firm of Palmer & Hinsdell. This partnership was continued until 1882, when Mr. Hinsdell sold out his interest to his partner and retiring from mercantile business, has since given his attention chiefly to his real-estate interests. He still lives upon land upon which his father settled when he first came to Elgin, now located in the heart of the city. During the last year of the Civil War, Mr. Hinsdell enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, a 100-days' regiment, which was mustered into the service at Elgin, June 16, 1864, departed for the field eleven days later, and having rendered valuable service to the Union cause during its term of enlistment, was mustered out October 10 following. On Feb. 19, 1873, Mr. Hinsdell was united in marriage with Miss Harriet A. Starr, daughter of Humphrey G. and Harriet (Wicker) Starr, born at Whitehall, N. Y., Aug. 21, 1849, but at the time of her marriage a resident with her parents at Belvidere, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Hinsdell have had four children born to them: one daughter, now Mrs. Ellen Louchelle Carlsen, and three sons—Roy Starr, of River Forest, Ill.; Arthur B. and Oliver Edwin, of Elgin. An uncle of Mr. Hinsdell (James Hanks) is believed to have been one of the first white men to visit the region in which Kane County is situated, coming with a cousin from Steuben County, N. Y., three years previous to the arrival of the first permanent settlers, and later preëmpting the land on which Oliver A. Hinsdell was born.

WILLIAM H. HINTZE.

WILLIAM H. HINTZE (deceased), born April 27, 1845, at Labes, near Stettin, Pomerania, Germany, son of Gottfried William and Charlotte Friederika Qualke Hintze. His father came to America and located in Chicago in September, 1852, and was followed the next year by his family, consisting of his wife and two sons—William H. and Robert. The subject of this sketch was educated in the public schools of Chicago, being the first German boy to graduate from the Chicago High School, where he took the Foster medal for scholarship; a few weeks later removed to Elgin, and there entered into the employment of Orlando Davidson as errand-boy and general assistant in the Home Bank, being advanced to various positions until he became cashier. This position he occupied until 1877, when he resigned. He then became associated with Mr. Davidson and E. D. Waldron in the butter factory on the west side of Elgin, one of the largest establishments of its kind in the country, and of which he became President and Treasurer, and was principal owner. Mr. Hintze was long a member and Treasurer of the Elgin Board of Trade, and to his efforts more than those of any other man belongs the reputation which Elgin butter has acquired in the markets of the world. In June, 1864, he enlisted at Elgin in Company A, One Hundred and Forty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry (100-day regiment), serving during part of his term of enlistment in Kentucky. For three years he was a member of the Elgin Board of Education and, for a long time, one of the Directors of the Elgin Public Library, which he assisted in erecting; was also one of the promoters of the city waterworks, serving as a member of the first Board of Water Commissioners. Socially he was a member of the Elgin Century Club, of which he was President for a number of years; was affiliated with various Masonic fraternities, including Monitor Lodge A. F. & A. M., Munn Chapter and Bethel Commandery K. T.; was also a member of the Loyal Legion and one of the organizers of the Walhalla, the leading one of four German fraternities, and also a member of the Iroquois Club of Chicago. Mr. Hintze was a man of exceptional ability in financial affairs, and was prominently identified with many enterprises of public benefit. He was first united in marriage with Miss Mary A. Daggett, who bore him four children, of whom three are now living: Mrs. May Lane, now of Elgin; William D., and Fred G. Hintze. Mrs. Hintze died in 1887, and in 1889 Mr. Hintze was married to Miss Florence Geddes, of Marengo, Ill., and they had one daughter, Caroline. Mr. Hintze's death, which occurred March 12, 1900, deprived Elgin of one of its most capable and successful business men.

JAMES W. HIPPLE, retired farmer, Elgin, Ill., born in Perry County, Penn., Sept. 11, 1835, was educated in the public schools, had one term of instruction in an academy, and then learned the tailor's trade, at which he worked in his native county until he reached the age of eighteen years. After this he went to Geneva, N. Y., where he engaged in the merchant tailoring and ready-made clothing business in company with a brother. After eleven years spent in Geneva, he removed to Chicago, and in company with a brother-in-law engaged in the lumber business under the firm name of Becker & Hipple. This plant was entirely wiped out by the Chicago fire of 1871, after which Mr. Hipple was engaged in the same business as head of the firm of Hipple & Oestman. In 1875 Mr. Hipple sold out, and moved to a farm he had purchased near Elgin, on which he made his home until September, 1901, when he retired, settling in Elgin. Mr. Hipple was married Feb. 15, 1859, to Arrietta T. Becker, born in New York City May 8, 1836, and to them have come five children: Jesse V., born Jan. 30, 1862, in Geneva, N. Y.; Gideon B., born May 28, 1871, in Chicago; Marietta, born Oct. 25, 1875, in Elgin Township, and Anna Louisa, also born in Elgin Township, July 26, 1877.

CHARLES H. HITCHCOCK, Aurora, physician and surgeon, was born in the town of Strong, Franklin County, Me., Oct. 16, 1831 where he attended school and remained until he was seventeen years of age. From 1848 to 1851 he lived in Massachusetts, where he attended school a part of the time. Beginning the study of medicine in Philadelphia under the preceptorship of Dr. D. Hayes Agnew, he finished in Cincinnati, where he graduated from the American Medical College in 1857. Locating at Earlville, Ill., he opened an office for the practice of his profession, but three years later removed to McLean County, where he lived at the outbreak of the Civil War. In 1862 he was appointed Assistant Surgeon in the Union army, and assigned to Fort Pickering, at Memphis, Tenn., having full charge of the post hospital at that point. After about a year of hard service he resigned, and returning to McLean County, there resumed his professional career, but soon removed to DeKalb County, where he practiced for twenty-four years. In 1892 he came to Aurora, and soon became a prominent practitioner, winning and holding a wide patronage. Dr. Hitchcock is a member of the State Medical Society and the Fox River Valley Medical Association, and has been a Mason since 1858, also belongs to the Knights of the Globe and is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. In 1859 he married Miss Elizabeth M. Galloway, at that time of Earlville, but a native of New Jersey. Their children are Mrs. Hattie (Hitchcock) Montgomery, of Decatur, and Miss Mollie Hitchcock, of Aurora.

EDWARD G. HOBLER, manufacturer, Batavia, Ill.; born near Batavia, Ill., Sept. 8, 1860; entered the employ of the Chicago & North-Western Railroad Company in 1879, and was connected with the supply store of the company for seven years; then became connected with the general office of the Appleton Manufacturing Company of Chicago. The manufacturing plant of this corporation was removed to Geneva, Ill., in 1894, and in 1900, the plant and general offices were removed to Batavia. After various promotions Mr. Hobler was made general manager of the company in 1895, and has since filled that position. He was married in 1886 to Miss Harriet Wells, of Geneva.

JOHN H. HODDER (deceased), Aurora, journalist and inventor, was born in Bridport, Eng., Dec., 1834, and educated in the schools of his native town. Coming to America in 1853, after spending about nine months in New York, he journeyed westward to Chicago, and from there to Aurora, where he entered the employ of D. & J. W. Randall, about the time they purchased the "Beacon" from Hall Brothers. In 1856 he began business for himself, starting the first book-bindery establishment in the county. In 1858 Mr. Hodder became a partner with O. B. Knickerbocker & Co., in the ownership and publication of the "Beacon." That year the "Beacon" and the "Republican" were consolidated under the management of Bangs & Knickerbocker, and Mr. Hodder engaged in job printing. In 1861 he established the "McHenry County Union," at Woodstock, where he remained until 1863. During the latter year he resumed the foremanship of the "Beacon" office, and in 1866 purchased Mr. Bangs' interest, the publishing firm thereafter being Knickerbocker & Hodder. Mr. Hodder died in Aurora Dec. 5, 1902. He is survived by his wife and two children: Frank H., Professor of International Law and History in Lawrence (Kans.) University, and Mrs. Kittie B., wife of Harry R. Freeman, of Salt Lake City.

FREDERICK HODGES (deceased), pioneer settler; born in Castlewellen, County Down, Ireland, in 1799; grew to manhood in his native country, where he was educated under the guidance of his mother and in the parish schools; married Margaret Hutchinson and came to the United States in early manhood, locating in Chicago, Ill., in 1838, but shortly afterwards came to Dundee, Kane County, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying there in 1872; his wife dying in 1871. The surviving members of his family now residing in Dundee are: Mrs. Sheldon Dickinson, and the Misses Susanna and Charlotte Hodges.

DENNIS J. HOGAN, Geneva, Ill., Mayor, was born in Chicago, Dec. 7, 1856, and educated at Notre Dame University, South Bend, Ind., where he graduated in 1873. He studied law and graduated from the Union College of Law, Chicago, in 1875. For some years he practiced law in Chicago, but was not entirely engaged in professional labors until he opened his office in Geneva in 1888. Here he has been successful in a marked degree, and has been four times elected Mayor of the city, besides acting in that capacity for part of a term. He was President of the Board of Trustees of the Hospital for the Insane four years, and is now (1903) a member of the State Board of Arbitration. Mr. Hogan has long been one of the recognized leaders of the Democratic party in Illinois, being at the present time the senior member of the Democratic State Central Committee, on which he is serving his ninth term, and as Chairman of the Committee on Organization, completing his sixteenth year. In 1879 he was married to Miss Mary A. Deekig, of Adare, Ireland, at which place the marriage ceremony was solemnized. Mr. Hogan has traveled much abroad and spent much of his life in Europe.

EMANUEL HOLBROOK (deceased), merchant, Batavia, Kane County, Ill.; born in Manchester, England, July 3, 1840; grew to years of maturity and obtained his educational training in his native country; came to the United States in 1869, locating immediately after his arrival at Batavia, where he already had friends residing. Having been trained to a mercantile life in his native country, he was employed for a time as a clerk in the store of his uncle, Joseph Burton, at Batavia, afterwards became connected with the hardware establishment of Meredith Brothers, of which he finally became a proprietor, and which he conducted until his death, June 14, 1895. In political affiliations Mr. Holbrook was a Republican and served several years as a member of the Kane County Board of Supervisors, besides holding other local offices. Fraternally he was a member of the order of Odd Fellows, and did much to advance the interests of that order in Batavia. In 1877 he was married to Miss Emma Corbin, daughter of Elihu and Eliza (Fish) Corbin, of Plainfield, Ill. Three sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. Holbrook, all living, viz.: Tracy C. (who is a well-known and accomplished violinist), Leslie J. and E. Meredith.

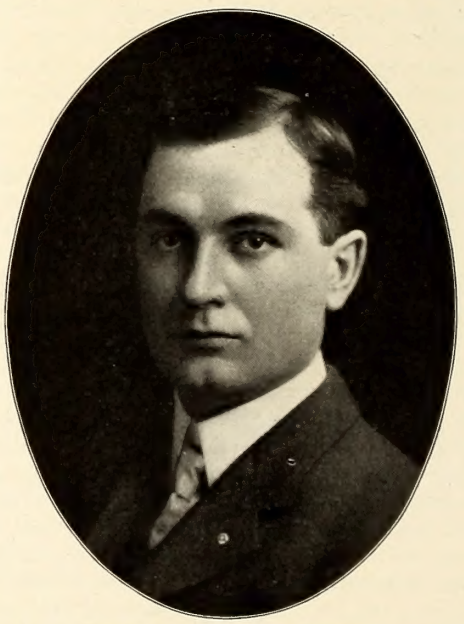
OSBORN HOLCOMB (deceased), clergyman, Aurora, Ill., born in West Granby, Conn., July 1, 1828, was educated at Springfield, Conn., and Danville, N. Y., and came to Illinois in 1848, making his home at Geneseo, where he engaged in teaching school for a year at Cambridge, and then entered the Rock River Conference Methodist Episcopal Church, having been licensed to preach by "Father" Sinclair. Mr. Holcomb was in the conference four years, serving charges at different points under the itinerary system. About 1854 his voice failed, when he retired from the regular ministry, but was closely identified with church work whenever occasion required as long as he lived. In 1854 he married Mary A. Higby, of Naperville, and two years later they removed to Aurora. Here he improved and sold city property, building in all some forty dwelling houses. For eleven years he spent considerable time in buying, improving and selling property in Nebraska. His last years were passed in Aurora, where he died Dec. 23, 1902. He was a trustee of the East Side Methodist Episcopal Church from its building until his death. While in Nebraska he also taught school. In connection with the church just noted he was especially active, was its class leader at different times, and did much to help it. Throughout this section, where Methodism is loved, his name is remembered. The surviving members of this family are Mrs. Holcomb, Robert H., Osborn A. and Elizabeth, of Aurora; Mary (Mrs. Plater), of Eau Claire, Wis.; Asa S. and Newton R., of Dawson, Yukon Territory, Canada.



TIMOTHY N. HOLDEN, ex-Mayor Aurora, was born in North Charlestown, N. H., March 21, 1839, son of Richard and Sophia (Allen) Holden, and grandson of Timothy Holden, a veteran of the Revolution. Richard Holden, a native of New Hampshire, removed to Rockton, Ill., where he lived until 1858, when he came to Aurora, where he died in 1893. Timothy N. Holden was educated in Charlestown, N. H., and Rockton, Ill., entered into the employment of Fuller & Fuller, druggists in Chicago, with whom he remained eleven years, when he engaged in business as a wholesale dealer in glassware. The great fire of 1871 swept away everything he had, and for seven years he was in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, with his home in Aurora, where he joined the firm of Kendall & Holden, and for fifteen years the two were engaged in the hardware business. Since 1895 he has been engaged in real-estate and loans. Much of his time for years has been given to public interests. For eighteen years he was a member of the Board of Education, and for fifteen years of the Kendall County Board of Supervisors, being President of the Board eight consecutive years. For three years (1897-99) he was Mayor of Aurora. In 1868 he married Marian Howell, a daughter of Dr. A. D. Howell, an old-time physician and banker of Aurora, of whom a sketch appears elsewhere in this work.

GEORGE M. HOLLENBACK, lawyer and legislator, Aurora, Ill., was born Dec. 1, 1831, in Fox Township, Kendall County, Ill., son of George and Sophia (Sidle) Hollenback, and was the first white child born in the county. His father, a noted pioneer of Kendall County, was a native of West Virginia, and a descendant of George Hollenback, who came from Wurtemburg, Germany, and settled in Pennsylvania some time before 1720. George Hollenback, the Illinois pioneer, was a soldier in the War of 1812, and in later life received a generous grant of land for his services. He came west by wagon with his family in 1829. For a few months he lived near Danville, Ill., later near Peru, and in 1831 settled in Fox Township, Kendall County. During the Blackhawk War he sought refuge with his family at Fort Beggs, now Plainfield, and then at Fort Dearborn, Chicago, and did not return to their home for a year. After this his residence was continuously in Kendall County until his death in 1864. His wife passed away two years earlier. The son, George M., grew up on the family estate, and, associated with his earlier memories, are many of the more noted pioneers of the region. His education was secured in the public schools and at a private school in Oswego. In his early manhood he took an active part in public affairs, In 1856 was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court of Kendall County, and being re-elected in 1860, filled that office consecutively eight years. From that period until 1888 he was entirely engaged in farming operations, living in an ideal country home near Millbrook, Ill. He was admitted to the bar in 1868, but never entered actively into general practice, though he was appointed Master in Chancery for the Circuit Court of Kendall County, and for more than twenty years exercised judicial functions in that connection. He has been an earnest Republican and prominent in the councils of the party. In 1872 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly, and has held numerous less important offices. Since the fall of 1892 he has lived in Aurora, occupied with the care of his estate. He was first married in 1859 to Miss Julia A. Woodworth, daughter of Daniel and Roxanna (Heath) Woodworth, who was born in Ashtabula County, Ohio. She died in Kendall County in 1886, leaving one daughter, now Mrs. Edward Welles, of Wilkesbarre, Penn. In 1888 Mr. Hollenback married Mrs. Frances F. Houghman, widow of Dr. Charles E. Houghman, of Milwaukee, Wis.

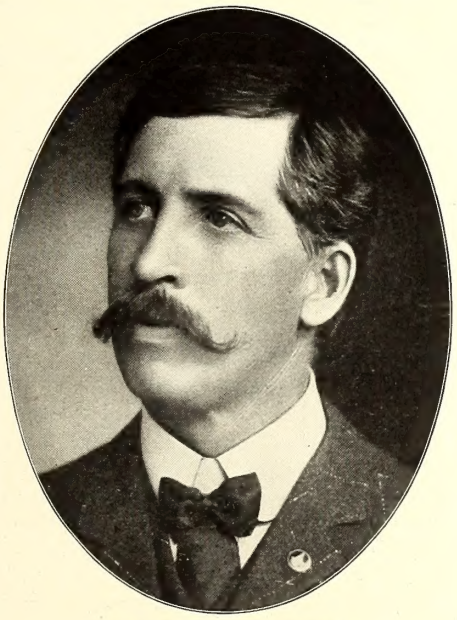
WILLIAM J. HOLLISTER, Batavia, Ill., retired farmer and honored veteran of the Civil War, was born in Berkshire County, Mass., Aug. 6, 1840, son of Gordon J. and Maria (Fuller) Hollister; came with his parents to Kane County, Ill., in 1846, and was educated in the common schools and in the academy at Batavia. In 1862 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for service during the Civil War. This regiment was under the command of Gen. John A. Logan, and Mr. Hollister served in it until the close of the war, being mustered out at Chicago in September, 1865. He participated in the siege of Vicksburg and after the fall of that rebel stronghold, his regiment was part of the garrison there for nearly six months. After this Mr. Hollister was on detached duty for some time, and in 1865 took part in the battles at Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely, which resulted in the fall of Mobile in the last days of the war. During the last six months of his service he was Orderly Sergeant for Gen. Eugene A. Carr. After the war he returned to Kane County, and was engaged in farming and stock-raising in Geneva Township until 1890, when he removed to Batavia and retired from active business. He has been one of the Directors of the Batavia Public Library, and has held various other local positions. He is a member of the G. A. R., and has been Commander of Batavia Post. In 1866 he married Miss Eva R. Carpenter, daughter of Abel E. Carpenter, of Warrenville, Ill.



ROBERT C. HOLLISTER, merchant, Batavia, Ill., born in Batavia Oct. 1, 1876, son of William J. and Eva (Carpenter) Hollister, and educated in the Batavia public schools and in Allen's business college, Aurora. In 1898 he engaged in the agricultural implement and feed trade, which he has continued to the present time. In 1902 he was elected a member of the Board of Aldermen and is the nominee for re-election to the same office, being the youngest member on the Board. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, the Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is a Republican.

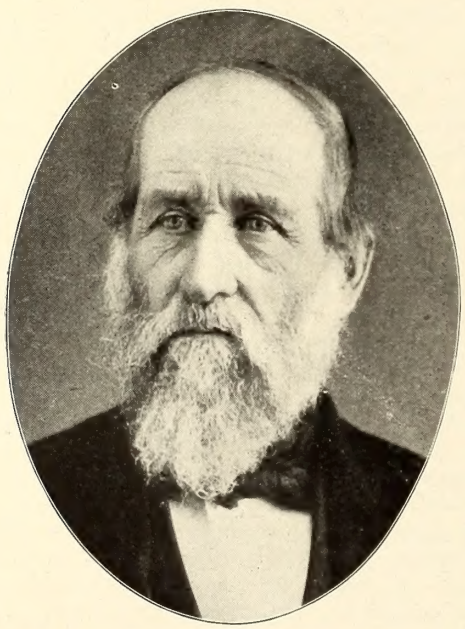
GUERDON J. HOLLISTER (deceased), pioneer farmer, Batavia, was born in Lenox, Mass., in 1802, where he was reared and educated in the local schools, and in early life became a wool manufacturer at Lynn. He came to Kane County in 1846, and settling on a farm in Geneva Township, there followed farming until his death in 1886. He married Miss Maria Fuller, who was born and reared in Burlington, Vt. Their descendants now living in Kane County are W. J. Hollister and Mrs. N. S. Young, both of Batavia.

FRANK J. HOOKER.



FRANK J. HOOKER, Mayor, Batavia, Ill., born in South Edmeston, Otsego County, N. Y., Sept. 14, 1858, son of Charles D. and Juline (Briggs) Hooker; was reared in his native State, and received a public school education, to which was added a course at New Berlin Academy, from which he graduated in 1875. For five years thereafter he engaged in teaching during the winter months, and in butter and cheese making during the rest of the year. In 1882 he came to Batavia, where he soon became engaged in the building trade on an extensive scale, in his time going as far as Atlanta, Ga., to do business. For two terms he was a member of the Batavia Board of Aldermen; for six months was Commissioner of Highways, and is now serving his second term on the Board of Supervisors. In the spring of 1903 he was elected Mayor of Batavia. He is a Mason, an Odd Fellow, and a Knight of Pythias. He was married April 2, 1899, to Miss Ella F. Parre, of Batavia.

SIMEON N. HOOVER, attorney, Aurora, Ill., born in Clermont County, Ohio, Dec. 27, 1867; came to Illinois in 1869 with his parents, who established their home at Bloomington; educated at the Illinois Wesleyan University, graduating from that institution in 1887; read law at Bloomington, and in 1889 went to Colorado, where he was admitted to the bar; established his home in Aurora in 1893, where he has since practiced his profession; is identified with the manufacturing interests of Aurora as Secretary of the McKay-Hoover Manufacturing Co.; married in 1901 to Miss Clara Luck, of Aurora.

ALBERT J. HOPKINS, United States Senator, born in De Kalb County, Ill., Aug. 15, 1846, and after graduating from Hillsdale College, Michigan, in 1870, studied law and began practice at Aurora. He rapidly attained prominence at the bar, and, in 1872, was elected State's Attorney for Kane County, serving in that capacity for four years. An ardent Republican, he was soon high in the party's councils, serving as Chairman of the State Central Committee from 1878 to 1880, and as a Presidential Elector on the Blaine and Logan ticket in 1884. The same year he was elected to the Forty-ninth Congress from the Fifth District (now the Eighth), and was continuously re-elected until 1902, receiving a clear majority in 1898 of more than 18,000 votes over two competitors. In 1898 he was Chairman of the Select House Committee on Census, and a member of the Committees on Ways and Means and Merchant Marine and Fisheries. In 1896, and again in 1900, he was strongly supported for the Republican nomination for Governor. In 1902 he was placed in nomination for United States Senator by the Republican State Convention of Illinois, and at the ensuing session of the General Assembly he was elected Senator for the term beginning March 4, 1903.

JAMES B. HORNE, manufacturer, St. Charles, Ill.; born in Wolverhampton, England, Feb. 10, 1863; came to America in 1871; came to Illinois in 1887, and from 1889 to 1891 was employed in the Elgin Watch factory; located at St. Charles in 1892, when he assisted in organizing the Crown Electrical Company, of which he became President; married in 1884 to Viola Rae Steil, of New Britain, Conn.

CHARLES F. HOWARD (deceased), farmer and merchant, Dundee, Ill.; born at Donaldsonville, La., July 2, 1839; came north in youth to attend the Chicago University, and when the war broke out enlisted in a cavalry regiment in connection with the Fifty-second Illinois, with which he served three years, and in 1865 enlisted in Company C, Ninth Illinois Cavalry. After the war he engaged in farming, and in 1874 became a partner with M. T. Barrows in the hardware business. He was first elected Justice of the Peace in the '80s, and served in that capacity until his death, Feb. 17, 1902. He was married in 1864 to Miss Mary Oatman.

LEONARD HOWARD.

LEONARD HOWARD (deceased), mason and bricklayer, St. Charles, Ill., was born Aug. 13, 1805, at Sharon, Windsor County, Vt., son of Aaron and Pamelia (Brown) Howard, and was taken by his parents to New York State in the fall of 1812. They were living at Hamburg, Erie County, in that State, when the father died in 1818. There were eight children in the family, and the widowed mother was compelled to bind out her children. Leonard fell into the hands of one Theodore Coburn, who treated him very harshly, and made his seven years of apprenticeship a period of cruelty. Leonard Howard was married Jan. 27, 1828, to Miss Caroline Esther, daughter of Isaac and Roxy (Morton) Smith. He began business for himself as a contractor and builder in Buffalo, and constructed the first cut-stone buildings of that city in 1828. In 1836 he went to Chicago, where he put up several notable buildings, the old Sherman Hotel being among them, and the following year removed to St. Charles, where he arrived March 9, 1837, after a three days' journey. Here he was employed as depot agent for the St. Charles branch of the Galena Railroad from December, 1849, for seven years, and also did a large amount of building, having charge of the construction of some of the largest structures of the time, the old Howard House being among them. He was proprietor of the Howard House for several years. In 1839 he was elected Justice of the Peace, and three years later Probate Judge. In 1848 he was appointed Deputy Sheriff, a position he held three years, and was repeatedly chosen Justice of the Peace, Township Assessor, Trustee and School Director. He was the father of fourteen children, six of whom were living in 1903. He was an active and prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, and died at his home in St. Charles, Feb. 21, 1884.

THEODORE HOWARD, contracting mason, Aurora, Ill.; born in Hudson City, Nov. 7, 1842; began learning the mason's trade when twelve years of age, following this occupation until 1861, when he enlisted in Company B, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he served three years, being mustered out of the service in June, 1864, when he returned to Aurora and has since been occupied at his trade; married Sept. 17, 1866, to Emma R. Graves, of Aurora.

WILLIAM HOWARTH, farmer, Batavia Township, Kane County, Ill.; born near Auburn, N. Y., March 22, 1840; came with his parents to St. Charles, Ill., in 1844, but lived in various localities until 1875, when he established his home in Batavia Township, and has since resided there continuously; purchased his present farm four miles west of Batavia in 1889; married in 1871 to Miss Cordelia Walker.

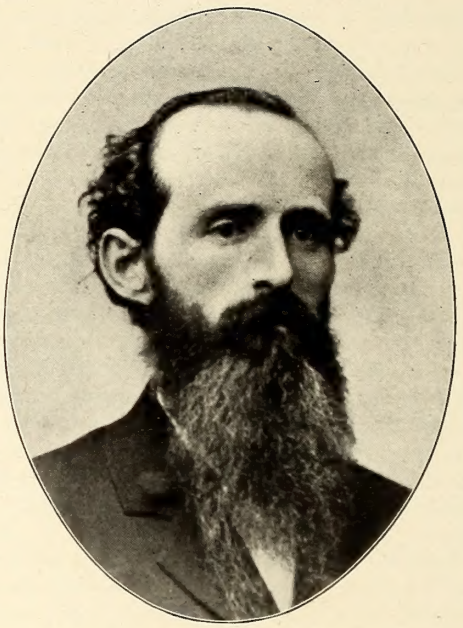
ERNEST G. HOWELL, Postmaster, Geneva, Ill., was born in Geneva, Ill., Nov. 26, 1868, son of Stephen and Julia (Bassett) Howell, and was reared and educated in his native town. His first business experience was with the Fermenich Manufacturing Company, of Marshalltown, Iowa, with which he was connected some three years. In 1892 he was appointed Assistant Postmaster of Geneva, and in 1897 he was put in full charge of the office as Postmaster, a position he has held to the present time (1904). For six years Mr. Howell has been a member of the Board of Education, during three of which he has been President of the Board. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of Pythias, being Chairman of the Committee on Warrants and Charters of the Illinois Grand Lodge, K. P., and Venerable Counsel of the Woodmen Camp at Geneva.

ROBERT HOWIE (deceased), farmer, Dundee Township, Kane County, born near Glasgow, Scotland, Sept. 4, 1818, was reared in his native land, and there learned farming from a class said to produce the best farmers in the world. In 1841 he came to Dundee, Ill., and four or five years later purchased from the Government the farm on which he now resides, three miles west of the City of Dundee. Mr. Howie soon turned his attention to sheep-raising, and for many years was one of the best known sheep-raisers in this part of the State. He was one of the few farmers in this region who continued sheep-growing up to the last few years. In the earlier years he was a breeder of merino sheep, but in his later years gave his attention to the Shropshire breed as best suited for the Chicago market. For more than sixty years Mr. Howie was a patriotic and devoted citizen of his adopted country. In 1853 he married Miss Ann Hood, who was born at Forfardshire, twenty-five miles from Dundee, Scotland. Of eleven children born to them, four are still living; John, in Chicago; and Robert, James and Anna M. on the old farm. Mr. Howie died July 3, 1903, retaining his interest in his business and the affairs of Kane County to the last.



CHARLES HOYT (deceased), pioneer, Aurora, Ill., was born in Danbury, Mass., Dec. 3, 1797, and died in Aurora, Ill., Feb. 29, 1876. Reared in Danbury, he was given a practical business education and trained to mercantile pursuits. In his early manhood he located in Geauga County, Ohio, where he was engaged in trade until 1839, when he came to Aurora, where he built the Black Hawk Mills, and was widely known both as a miller and a merchant. For many years he was the leading man of affairs on the "West Side," in Aurora, and exercised much local influence. In 1817 he was first married to Temperance Perry, of South Lee, Mass., who died in 1830. In 1832 he married Susanna Foot. By his first marriage were born two sons, and by his second, one daughter.

CHARLES L. HOYT (deceased), Aurora, Ill., was born May 10, 1824, in South Lee, Mass., son of Charles and Temperance (Perry) Hoyt, and when three years of age was taken by his parents to Madison, Ohio, whence they removed six years later to Ohio City, where he attended the public schools up to 1839. After two years at a preparatory school at Tunisburg, Ohio, he engaged in business when seventeen years of age, being employed in his father's store at Aurora in 1840. There he remained some nine years, and in 1852 went to California, where he spent some four years trading in the mining districts. Returning to Aurora in 1856, he was engaged there in trade until 1861, when he entered the Commissary Department of the Army of the Cumberland, but after two years' service returned to Aurora and opened a real-estate and insurance office. Mr. Hoyt purchased in 1869 an interest in the factory known as R. L. Carter & Company. The year following he and his brother bought out Mrs. Carter, and the firm became Hoyt Brothers. In 1873 it was incorporated as the Hoyt Brothers Manufacturing Company, the stock being owned by the brothers, Charles L. and L. P. and Willis, a son of Charles L. The firm dealt in all kinds of woodworking machinery, and soon gained a national reputation for their products. Mr. Hoyt was President, and carried on the business very successfully until his death, June 8, 1891. Willis Hoyt succeeded him, and the subsequent history of the plant appears in connection with the sketch of that gentleman. Mr. Charles L. Hoyt was married in September, 1847, to Miss Mary Gray, daughter of Nicholas and Catherine Gray, of Montgomery, Kane County, their only son being Willis, already mentioned. Mr. Hoyt served as Supervisor several years, and also as Alderman of the City of Aurora; was also very active in promoting manufacturing interests and a large stockholder in the Aurora cotton-mills. He helped organize the Second National Bank of Aurora, and was one of its Directors until his death.

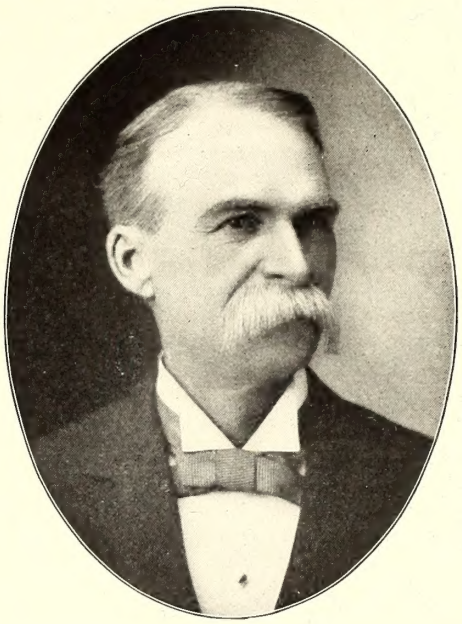
JACOB N. HOYT, farmer and dairyman, Kaneville Township, Kane County, was born in Concord, N. H., Dec. 15, 1831, and was quite thoroughly educated in the local schools, including a term in the Concord High School, and at Andover, Mass. He became a teacher and taught in Concord. In 1853 he went to Cleveland, Ohio, and in 1868 came to Macon County, Ill. In 1884 he removed to Kane County, where he bought a farm three miles southwest of Elburn. Here he has since made his home. In the Masonic fraternity he ranks high, having advanced to the rank of a Knight Templar degree, and being affiliated with the Commandery at Sycamore. The residence where he lives is quite a historic spot. The first school in the township was taught in the house in which he now lives, and here was located the first postoffice, known as Avon. Here Horace Greeley was a guest. Among the older settlers it is often spoken of as the "Livingston" farm, because one Livingston, who forged a check on one of the Vanderbilts for $75,000, had purchased it. Here he was arrested and taken back east.

LYMAN A. HOYT (deceased), was born in Aurora, Ill., June 12, 1859, the son of Lyman A. Hoyt, and grandson of Charles Hoyt, a pioneer settler of the county. His youth was passed on his father's farm, just west of the Aurora city limits, where he attended both the public schools and Jennings Academy, and was trained to a farming life, which he followed on the old homestead until his death, Oct. 13, 1894. A successful farmer and stock-raiser, and a capable man of affairs, he was highly esteemed by those among whom he lived, and filled various positions of trust and responsibility. In 1885 he was married to Miss Sophronia J. Smith, daughter of George F. Smith, of Batavia, Ill. Miss Smith was born in Wisconsin but descended from an old Vermont family, her father coming to Wisconsin in 1847. In 1864 he removed to Illinois, where he died on his farm near Batavia in 1878. After March, 1895, Mrs. Hoyt lived in Aurora. In November, 1903, she became the wife of Mr. A. W. Harbour.

OTIS HOYT.



CAPTAIN OTIS HOYT (deceased), Elgin, was born in Amesbury, Mass., April 8, 1838, son of Enoch and Elizabeth (Williams) Hoyt, where he was reared to manhood and educated in the local schools. In his early manhood he entered the employ of the Waltham Watch Factory, remaining with that concern until 1861. In April of that year he enlisted as Sergeant in Company H, Sixteenth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and departed for the front to do battle for the Union. He rose to the rank of Captain and was mustered out in 1864 with the expiration of his term of enlistment. He participated in all the great actions of the Army of the Potomac, numbering thirty-seven battles and skirmishes fought while he was in the service, and was severely wounded at the second battle of Bull Run. In October, 1864, he came west and established his home in Elgin, connecting himself with the Elgin National Watch Company, then in process of development, retaining his connection until 1868, when he went to California, and spent the following year on the Coast. Coming back to Illinois, he joined the working forces of the Springfield Watch Company, making that city his home for eight years. At the end of this time he became foreman of one of the departments of the National Watch Company, and returning to Elgin, made that city his home until his death, June 2, 1885. He was one of the directors of the Elgin Loan and Homestead Association, belonged to the G. A. R., and was a member of the Masonic fraternity. He was married in 1863 to Miss Mary E. Britton, daughter of Joel and Sarah (West) Britton, of Waltham, Mass. Mrs. Hoyt, and one son, Otis West, are at this date (1903) the surviving members of the family. Another son, William Britton, died in 1889.

ROLAND C. HOYT, retired farmer, Elburn, Ill.; born at Kaneville, Ill., Nov. 6, 1854; began his business career as a farmer in 1872, following that occupation until 1892, being interested in various enterprises for nine years since the latter date, but in 1901 he again turned his attention to agricultural pursuits. He was married Feb. 15, 1887, to Emma Watson.

WILLIS HOYT, manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., was born Aug. 25, 1848, in Aurora, and was there reared to manhood, receiving his education in the local schools and at the Military Academy, Fulton, Ill., from which he graduated about 1866. In 1864 he enlisted in the 100-day service, but was rejected at Cairo. Entering a drug store while still a youth, he worked his way up from a clerkship to the management of the establishment. In 1871 he secured an interest in the wood-working machinery plant of Hoyt & Brother, and the following year the company was incorporated under the name of "The Hoyt & Brother Manufacturing Company," Willis Hoyt being named as Secretary and Treasurer. In 1887 the style of the firm was changed to "Hoyt & Bro. Company," Mr. Hoyt still retaining his former position. When his father died in 1893 he became President of the Company, and continued in that position until 1897. The plant was then taken into the American Wood-working Machinery Company of New Jersey, but has since been reincorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania, Mr. Hoyt being advisory man for the Aurora branch. He is an active Mason, as he is also in the Knights of Pythias Order. In 1874 he married Miss Jennie L. Budlong, of Oswego, Ill.

AUGUSTINE H. HUBBARD, Mayor, Elgin, Ill., was born in Salem, Washtenaw County, Mich., March 17, 1843, son of Harvey and Emily (Hamilton) Hubbard. In 1855 he went with his father to Minnesota, where that gentleman had laid out part of Winona, and was an extensive real-estate operator in that State. He graduated from the Minnesota Normal School at Winona, and in 1861 went to St. Paul to enlist in the Union army, but was persuaded by General Sibley to enter his service as special messenger to carry communications between the military posts and forts of the Northwest during the Indian troubles of that period. For three years he was engaged in this service, almost day and night in the saddle, and facing every kind of danger. In 1864 he went to Chicago, and after a full course of study was graduated from Eastman's Business College, and for the next three years was engaged in dairy-farming in English Prairie, McHenry County, Ill. In 1871 he came to Elgin and entered the office of R. W. Padelford, City Clerk, and Clerk of the Court, forming a partnership with him in the insurance business; in 1877 was elected Magistrate, and has held that office continuously for twenty-six years. In April, 1903, he was elected Mayor of Elgin. His first marriage occurred in 1870, with Miss Martha L. Hatch, of English Prairie. After her death he married, in 1900, Miss Clara Pettis, of Elgin.

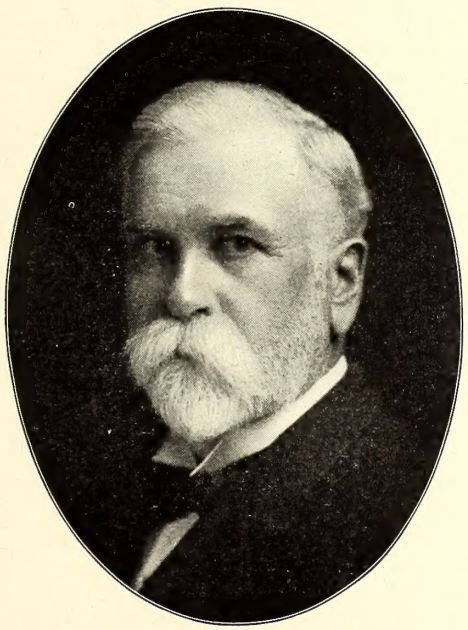
SPENCER B. HULS, St. Charles, merchant, was born in Seneca County, N. Y., June 16, 1828, and educated in the schools of his native county. In 1843 he arrived in St. Charles in company with his parents, and was there engaged in farming until 1866, in the meantime taking a trip to California in 1850 during the gold-mining period, and remaining there four years. In 1868 he established the retail grocery in which he is still engaged. Mr. Huls was the first City Treasurer, and has served as Alderman four terms. In 1854 he was married to Miss Mary J. Mallory, daughter of B. D. and Ann (Henderson) Mallory, both natives of Yates County, N. Y. One son, S. S. Huls, is a partner with his father in the grocery business.

CLARK M. HUMISTON (deceased), farmer, Kaneville, Kane County, was born in Connecticut in 1822, and came to Illinois in 1853, settling in De Kalb County, where he remained for twenty years, when he bought a farm in Kane County, on which he lived until his death, which occurred in November, 1884. For a number of years he was Supervisor of the town of Pierce, De Kalb County. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity. About 1851 he married Elizabeth Price, who bore him thirteen children, and died in the fall of 1898.



MAJ. B. T. HUNT, retired merchant, St. Charles, Ill.; born at Abington, Mass., Oct. 19, 1812; came to St. Charles, Ill., in 1836, where he engaged in the mercantile business in 1838, which he conducted until 1850, when he built a tannery. Mr. Hunt's tannery was destroyed by fire in 1861, and he then established a hardware store, which he conducted until 1890, when he retired from active business life. He was married Oct. 2, 1842, to Harriet H. Lathrop, and they have one son, F. B., who is now Mayor of St. Charles.

EDWARD L. HUNT, retired merchant, Batavia, was born in Princeton, N. J., July 22, 1817, son of William and Eleanor (Schenck) Hunt, both of whom came of Revolutionary ancestors. He was educated in the public schools of Princeton and trained to mercantile pursuits as a boy. In 1853 he came west and established his home in Batavia, Ill. He was engaged in merchandising there until 1837, when he sold out and removed to Sangamon County, Ill., where he farmed for five years thereafter. While there he became acquainted with some of the distinguished Illinoisans of that period, the most noted of whom was Abraham Lincoln. In 1862 he returned to Batavia and soon afterward enlisted in the Union Army for service in the War of the Rebellion. He was mustered into Company B, of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry Regiment and was mustered out in 1865, at the end of three full years of active service. In the course of this service he participated in the battles at Port Gibson, Raymond, Jackson, Champion Hills, the siege of Vicksburg, the siege of Spanish Fort, and two other sieges, and fourteen other engagements and skirmishes. In all he was under the fire of the enemy eighty-two days and sixty nights. At the close of the war he returned to Batavia and in 1871 became head of the mercantile firm of Hunt & Davis, with which he was identified until 1891, when he retired from business. Since then he has been called upon to settle a number of bankrupt estates in addition to looking after his property interests. He married in 1841 Miss Catherine F. Ross, daughter of Robert R. Ross, of Princeton, N. J.

F. B. HUNT, merchant, St. Charles, Ill.; born in the city where he now resides, June 1, 1848; educated in the public schools of St. Charles and Fulton Military Academy; engaged in the hardware business with his father in early manhood, and in the spring of 1886 removed to Iowa, where he purchased a ranch and raised horses; returned to St. Charles in 1897, where he has since been engaged in the hardware business. Mr. Hunt has served his city as School Director, Police Magistrate and Mayor. He married Miss Barritt Flint, and they have four children—F. C., Bertha L., Eva May and Effie W.

HENRY E. HUNT, pioneer merchant and banker, Dundee, Ill., born in Brandon, Vt., April 19, 1819, in the same house in which Stephen A. Douglas was born, went into Western New York with his father when a boy, and there grew to manhood. In the early history of that institution, he was a student at Oberlin College. In 1840 he married Miss Esther Ann Edwards in New York. Two years later the young married couple came to Illinois, and made their home at Dundee, where Mr. Hunt started a pioneer store. Winning success in this enterprise, he established the first banking house in the village of Dundee, the management of which he retained in his own hands until his retirement from business, when it was entrusted to his son-in-law, Edgar C. Hawley. He was also a large land-owner, and a thoroughly practical farmer. For fourteen years he was on the Kane County Board of Supervisors, and was a member of the State Board of Equalization from the Kane County District four years. To Mr. Hunt and Mrs. Hunt have been born nine children, of whom four were living in 1903, one of them (Mrs. E. C. Hawley) on the old homestead at Dundee.

GEORGE HUNTER.

GEORGE HUNTER, Consulting Superintendent National Watch Company, Elgin, Ill., was born in Wendell, Mass., Nov. 13, 1834, and educated in the public schools. He learned the machinist trade and came to Elgin in 1864 to install the machinery department of the National Watch Company. Mr. Hunter served as foreman of the machinery department until 1872, when he was appointed Superintendent of the plant, and which office he held until Jan. 1, 1903, when his present position was created for him. In politics he is a Republican. Mr. Hunter is a stockholder in the Elgin National Watch Company, the Home National and the Home Savings Banks, and a director of the last named corporation. He is a member of the Century and the Country Clubs of Elgin, and has long been active in Monitor Lodge, A. F. & A. M.

GEORGE E. HUNTER, Superintendent Elgin Watch Factory, Elgin, Ill., was born in Waltham, Mass., Nov. 29, 1859, son of George Hunter, and was brought by his parents to Elgin, Dec. 26, 1864, where he attended the public schools, graduating from the Elgin Academy in 1877. The same year he entered the Watch Factory as an apprentice in the machinery department to serve three years. He remained in this department six years, when he was appointed assistant foreman of the escapement department in 1883, and was made foreman of the same room in 1885. In 1888 he was made Assistant Superintendent in charge of the mechanical branch of the work, holding this position until Jan. 1, 1903, when he was appointed Superintendent with full charge, his father having been promoted on that day to the office of Consulting Superintendent. "The Watch Factory has grown from a capacity of but a few hundred in 1871, to a capacity of 2,000 a day under George and George E. Hunter." Mr Hunter is a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, and is now serving his second term on the Elgin Library Board. He was married in 1885 to Miss Belle M. Taylor, of New York, and is the father of two sons and a daughter by this union. Donald Taylor, the oldest son, was appointed to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., May 20, 1903; the other two children are Marjorie Bell and George Richard.

THOMAS M. HUNTER (deceased), Batavia, Ill., who was long identified with the stone-quarrying interests of Kane County, was born in Ida, Mich., Aug. 10, 1838, son of Benjamin and Anna (Miller) Hunter, where he was reared to manhood and educated in the local schools. In his early manhood he came to Illinois and was engaged in the railway service, and also in farming. In 1868 he established his home in Batavia, and entered the employ of Isaac S. Stevens, who was operating extensive stone-quarries at that place. For several years prior to his death, which occurred at Batavia, March 24, 1900, he was superintendent of these quarries, and was widely known among those engaged in the building trades. He served one term as a member of the Batavia Board of Aldermen. In 1871 he married Miss Elviza Tracey, of Raisinville, Mich. She died in Batavia, in 1883, and in 1888 he married Miss Elizabeth White, daughter of Charles White, of New York.

HARRY T. HUNTER.

HARRY T. HUNTER, lumber and coal merchant and stone-quarry operator, Batavia, was born in Batavia, Ill., Jan. 19, 1875, son of Thomas M. and Elviza (Tracy) Hunter, and obtained his education in the Batavia public schools. His first business engagement was with the legal firm of Alschuler & Murphy, Aurora, after which he was for a time with the Newton Wagon Company, at Batavia. When nineteen years of age he began his business career in the lumber and coal trade, in which he has continued to the present time. Some years since he was elected an Alderman of Batavia, and is the youngest man ever called to serve Batavia in that capacity. In 1898 he married Miss Katherine, daughter of Major H. K. Wolcott, of Batavia.

DAVID W. HURD (deceased), pioneer and merchant, Aurora, Ill., born in Londonderry, Ireland, Sept. 22, 1823, son of John Hurd, who first came to America as a British soldier during the War of 1812. The father emigrated with his family to America in 1832, locating at Utica, N. Y. David W. Hurd was a schoolmate of Thomas L. James, afterward Postmaster-General, and James H. Roberts, for some years later United States Senator. Later the family removed to Hamilton, Ont., where David W. grew to manhood with an education largely self-obtained. He was trained to business in the house of John Winer & Co., and at twenty-one years of age was sent to New York on the business for the firm, remaining there until 1860. During that year he came to Aurora, Ill., and bought a drug store from Gilbert Walker, which he carried on as long as he lived. In time he became wealthy, and "Hurd's chestnut store," so-called on account of its painting, was a land-mark in the business center. He did much to help in various business enterprises and contributed materially to the growth of Aurora. In politics he was a Democrat and in religion a member of the New England Congregational church. In 1847 he married Miss Maria Gibell, of New York City, who still lives in Aurora. Mr. Hurd died March 13, 1886. Besides his wife three sons and four daughters survive. With the exception of one son in Pittsburg and one in Philadelphia, all are living in Aurora (1903). The present homestead has been occupied by the family since 1865.

DANIEL HYDE (deceased), pioneer settler, Batavia Township, Kane County; born at Strafford, Orange County, Vt., March 30, 1819; obtained a common-school education, and was trained to farming; came west in 1838, locating at first in Michigan, but shortly afterwards removed to Kane County, Ill., and purchased a farm near Batavia, where he passed the remainder of his life. He died June 20, 1862. His wife, Ellen C. Hyde, was born in Brattleboro, Vt., June 11, 1825, and came to Kane County in 1844. She was reared and educated in New York State, where she taught school, and after coming to Kane County taught one of the pioneer private schools of the county at Mill Creek. She married Mr. Hyde in 1845 at the old homestead about one mile west of Batavia, where she still resides. She has been a continuous resident of Kane County for nearly sixty years, and is one of the most widely known of the pioneer women now living.

JOSEPH INGHAM.

JOSEPH INGHAM, farmer, stock-raiser and ex-Recorder of Kane County, born Oct. 18, 1839, son of Col. Samuel S. Ingham, above mentioned, was educated in the public schools and at Lombard University, Galesburg. He was a farmer until 1861, when he enlisted in the Thirty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry for service in the Civil War, was mustered in Sept. 21st, participated in the battle of Pea Ridge and in all the campaigns of the Army of the Cumberland, and was mustered out in October, 1864. After his return home he resumed farming and also helped to organize the Kane County Farmers' Institute. In 1892 he was elected Recorder of Kane County, serving four years. He had previously been Assessor of Sugar Grove Township for twelve years, and has long been a recognized leader of the Republican party in Kane County, frequently serving as delegate in political conventions. In 1869 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Strickland, daughter of George Strickland, an Aurora pioneer, and they have had three children: Samuel S., now of Clay County, Ill.; Mrs. Sarah Ingham Tarble, of Aurora, and Mildred, of Chicago. John Ingham, another son of Col. Samuel S., was born in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, Oct. 19, 1857, educated in the public schools, and in the Sugar Grove Academy, became a farmer and stock-raiser. In 1880 he associated himself with his brother in farming and stock-raising, and they have since carried on business together. In 1885 he married Miss Catherine Cook, daughter of Peter Cook, of Aurora.

COL. SAMUEL S. INGHAM (deceased), was born in New York City, May 24, 1801, son of Joseph and Sally (Starr) Ingham. His father was a sailor in early life, but later settled in Steuben, Oneida County, N. Y., on lands belonging to the Baron Steuben Grant, having several retired sea captains near him, and there spent the remainder of his life as a farmer. Here Samuel S. Ingham grew to manhood, following farming until 1839, when he came to Illinois and located on Government land in the Town of Sugar Grove, Kane County. In 1842, when these lands came into market, he bid in the entire township under an arrangement with the "Sugar Grove Claim Association," for the protection of the settlers. From his arrival here until his death, March 17, 1864, he held many positions of trust and responsibility, and was a leader in all movements for the promotion of the welfare of the people of Kane County. In 1838 he married Miss Nancy Owens, of Oneida County, N. Y., and their children who lived to maturity were: Joseph, Squire, John and Adaline (now Mrs. Spencer of Aurora). Joseph, John and Adaline were living in 1903; Squire died in 1895.

E. KINNEY ISBELL, retired railroad man, Aurora, was born at Lenox, Mass., Oct. 17, 1833, educated at Lenox Academy, and trained to a farming life. In 1854 he came west with his father, with whom he engaged in farming until the death of the latter placed upon the son the responsibility of providing for the support of the family. In 1860 Mr. Isbell entered the service of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company as a locomotive fireman, three years later becoming an engineer, and during his twenty-two years of service in this position, had the almost unique record of having never had a passenger killed and but one injured through his own fault. In 1885 he retired from railroading to devote his attention to his considerable real-estate interests; was one of the original stockholders in the Aurora Cotton Mills, of the old Second National Bank, and of the Aurora National Bank, besides being the owner of valuable farm property in Kane County. In 1869 he married Miss Alice C. Hitchcock, who was born in Connecticut, and accompanied her parents to Aurora in 1855.

JAMES ISBELL (deceased), pioneer, was born in Bloomfield, Ontario County, N. Y., May 10, 1779; grew up in that State and left there for the West in 1834, driving through to his destination with two yoke of oxen and reached Sugar Grove, May 10, of that year; became the first permanent white settler in the township. He passed the latter years of his life at Batavia, Ill., and died there some time after 1877.

CLINTON F. IRWIN, lawyer and Federal Judge of the Second District of Oklahoma, was born in Franklin Grove, Lee County, Ill., Jan. 1, 1854, removed with his parents to Maple Park, Kane County, in 1860; was educated in Maple Park public schools, at Wheaton College and Valparaiso (Ind.) Normal School; in 1872 began teaching, which he continued until 1879, when, having studied law, he was admitted to the bar. He began practice at Maple Park, but in 1883 opened an office at Elgin, becoming senior member of the firm of Irwin & Egan. In February, 1899, he was appointed by President McKinley Territorial Judge of the Second District of Oklahoma, and in 1903 was reappointed by President Roosevelt. He married Miss Julia Egan, of Elgin, in 1880.

RICHARD P. JACKMAN, manufacturer, Elgin, Ill., was born at Goffstown, N. H., Dec. 16, 1834, the son of Jonathan M. and Elvira (Chessman) Jackman, who were of New England ancestry. The son was educated in the public schools of his native State, and in his early manhood learned the trade of molder. In 1856 he removed to Iowa, where, for a time, he represented an Eastern mercantile house, but later returning to New Hampshire, he remained there until 1865, when he came to Illinois and established his home in Elgin. For many years he was head of the firm of R. P. Jackman & Son, iron founders and machinists, which he had established and built up, but later the plant was sold to the Elgin Manufacturing Company. Thereafter he lived a retired life until his death, which occurred in Denver, Colo., Nov. 16, 1900. He was one of the founders and the first President of the Elgin Loan and Homestead Association, and one of the organizers of the Elgin City Railway Company, serving on the first Board of Directors; was also identified with other Elgin corporations in an official capacity and as a stockholder. For four years he was a member of the Elgin Board of Aldermen, and his fraternal connections were with the Masonic Order, in which he had attained the degree of Knight Templar. In 1857 he married Miss Samantha Clark, daughter of George and Abigail (Berry) Clark, of Norwich, Vt., and their children are: George L. and Mrs. Isabel (Jackman) Joslyn. Their son, George L. Jackman, was born in Nashua, N. H., Nov. 20, 1860, and received his education in the Elgin Academy, graduating in the class of 1876. Soon after leaving school he became junior member of the firm of R. P. Jackman & Son, and was identified with the iron industry until 1892. He is a Thirty-second Degree Mason, affiliating with Oriental Consistory and Medinah Temple, Chicago, Bethel Commandery, Loyal Legion, and other organizations.

HERMAN N. JANES, merchant, Aurora, born in East Berkshire, Vt., Dec. 27, 1849, son of Nelson L. Janes, whose career is briefly noted elsewhere in this volume, was brought by his family in 1853 to Racine, Wis., where the son secured his early education. In 1865 the family removed to Aurora, and here Herman N. was graduated from the High School. Some years later he went to Elgin and was there connected with the National Watch Company for a year, but returning to Aurora bought a small furniture store, which proved the modest beginning of a large business. In 1880 he bought Newland block, which he increased to three times its original size, and now uses all the space it affords in his business. A natural mechanic, much of his leisure time is given to the finishing and decoration of his house in fine woodwork. In 1876 he married Miss Mary R. Weeks, only daughter of Charles Weeks, an old-time merchant of Aurora. Mr. and Mrs. Janes have traveled much throughout the United States and Canada. Their living children are: Charles N., Mabel H., Carrie B., Grace M. and Donald R.

NELSON L. JANES (deceased), pioneer, Aurora, Ill., was born in Berkshire, Vt., Aug. 26, 1816, and was reared on a farm, where he received a very fair education. In 1854 he came to the West as a representative of the Fairbanks Scale Company, and for many years traveled extensively throughout the Northwest in its interest. For about ten years he had his home at Racine, Wis., but in 1865 removed to Aurora, where his remaining years were spent. Here he proved himself a useful and public-spirited citizen. His private residence was a fine structure, and he built several handsome houses which added to the appearance of the city. He was a member of the old New England Congregational church, and one of its most liberal and reliable supporters. The American Bible Society, as well as other organizations looking to the public good, found in him a generous friend. His death occurred April 3, 1900, in his eighty-fourth year. His widow, who was Miss Harriet Hawley Stone, survived him until May 12, 1903. His living children are Mrs. C. W. Anthony and H. N. Janes, both of Aurora.

DENNISON R. JENCKS, pioneer and retired merchant, Elgin, Ill., was born Oct. 13, 1837, in Adams, Mass., son of Henry Jencks, and came with his parents to Illinois. His father obtained a farm near Barrington, Cook County, where he remained until 1855, when he sold out, and moving his family to Dundee, embarked in the grocery business at that point, which he continued for a few years. There Dennison R. Jencks obtained employment as a clerk when fifteen years old, first with a drug firm, with which he remained for eight years, when he went into the drug business for himself as the junior member of the firm of Oatman & Jencks. This firm remained unchanged for three years, when Mr. Jencks sold out, and became a partner with C. F. Hall in the dry-goods and grocery trade. Two years later Mr. Jencks disposed of his interest in this enterprise to Mr. Hall, and opened a clothing house and shoe store, which he conducted in Dundee until 1873. Then removing to Elgin, he carried on his business there for a year, when he retired to take up a general insurance business, in which he was engaged until 1893, during that year retiring in favor of his son. Mr. Jencks was Postmaster of Dundee for six years, and Assistant Supervisor four years. For thirteen years he was member of the City Council from the Second Ward. He was married Oct. 25, 1859, to Miss Elizabeth A., daughter of Allen S. Hollister, of Dundee. She died in Elgin Jan. 13, 1897.

FRED W. JENCKS.

FRED W. JENCKS, Insurance Agent and Manager Opera House, Elgin, Ill., was born July 6, 1861, in Dundee, Ill., a son of D. R. Jencks, and came with his parents to Elgin in 1872. His education was secured in the city schools and in Elgin Academy, and when only sixteen years old he entered upon the insurance business, doing a general fire and life-work, in which he was decidedly successful. In 1886 he became manager of the Elgin Opera House, and has continued in charge to the present time. At the same time he became city bill poster in connection with the opera house business. He served as Alderman from the Second Ward two terms—from 1895 to 1899—and from 1901 to 1903 was President of the Water Board; was also President of the Illinois State Bill-Posters' Association from 1890 to 1896, and is at present a Trustee of the Association. He is a member of the M. W. of A., and of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, being a trustee of the latter; is also a member of the Kane Lodge I. O. O. F. In 1884 Mr. Jencks married Miss Mary Ryne, of Elgin.

JOHN T. JENCKS, druggist, Elgin, Ill.; born at Barrington, Ill., Feb. 20, 1850; educated in the schools of his native village and Oberlin College (Ohio); employed by the North-Western Railroad Company from 1870 to 1892 as brakeman and conductor. Since 1898 he has conducted a drug store in Elgin, which is known as The Elks Drug Store. Mr. Jencks was married first in 1878 to Miss Hattie Morse, who died in 1896. In 1897 he married his second wife, Miss Cora B. Hammond, of Harvard, Ill.

WILLIAM F. JOBBINS (deceased), manufacturer and inventor, Aurora, Ill., was born in Worcester, Eng., June 29, 1836, where he was reared and given training as an accountant. In his young manhood he engaged in manufacturing in London, where he remained until 1865. He then came to the United States, establishing his home in New York City, where he became a member of the clothing manufacturing firm of Rogers, Peet & Co. While connected with this house he improved and brought into practical use the noted cloth-cutting machine, now so widely used by clothing manufacturers. Becoming half-owner of the patents taken out on this device and its improvements, he began the manufacture of the machine in New York. This machine has since been sold not only throughout this country and Canada but in England, and royalties are still paid the originators of the enterprise. About 1888 Mr. Jobbins ceased his connection with the management of the business, and shortly after came west for the purpose of making investments. As a result he purchased a tract of land in Aurora, where he established the Chemical Works, since become widely known, for the manufacture of machinery and chemicals used by all soap-makers in the making of glycerine. Mr. Jobbins continued his residence and general office in New York until 1896, when he removed with his family to Aurora. He built up a large industry here, which is still carried on under the old name, being now under the management of his son, F. Hedley Jobbins. Mr. Jobbins died March 16, 1901, in Greenwich, Conn., to which place he had gone for medical treatment. His widow, born Frances Hobson, a native of Worcester, Eng still resides in Aurora. Mr. Jobbins was long interested in the work of the Y. M. C. A., took an active part in promoting it and was a generous contributor to its funds. He was an elder in the Presbyterian church for many years while living in the East, but after coming West was one of the chief supporters of the New England Congregational church.

CHARLES B. JOHNSON, M. D., physician, Batavia, Ill.; born in Batavia, Jan. 25, 1867, son of Spencer and Sarah (Chaffee) Johnson—the father being a native of New York, and the mother, of Vermont. Charles B. Johnson was reared and educated in Batavia; read medicine in Chicago, graduated from Rush Medical College in 1892, and practiced medicine in Batavia in 1893 and 1894, and in Chicago from 1894 until 1900. The latter year he returned to Batavia to resume his medical practice there, which he has continued to the present time (1903). He is in general practice, which is growing quite steadily. He belongs to the American Medical Association, and the Fox River Valley Medical Society. In 1895 he married Miss Cora E. Leach, of Chicago.

PETER JOHNSON, farmer, Elburn, Kane County, was born Nov. 10, 1850, in Sweden, where he was educated. He came to the United States while still quite a young man, and in 1870 was employed in lumbering in Michigan. In 1877 he came to Kane County, where he has become a very successful farmer, having charge of one thousand acres of lands belonging to John Stewart. For the year 1902 he was Vice-President of the Swedish Republican League of Illinois. He is a member of the Swedish Lutheran church, and was married Sept. 20, 1882, to Johanna Mattison.

PETER H. JOHNSON (deceased), pioneer settler; born on Staten Island, N. Y., April 30, 1798; was one of the founders of Tompkinsville, N. Y., where he engaged in merchandising; came to Kane County, Ill., in 1842, and purchased 525 acres of land in Blackberry Township at what became known as Johnson's Mound. He was twice married, his first wife, whom he married in 1821, was Miss Ann Bogart, who died in 1867. In 1870 he married Mrs. F. B. Morehouse, who was born at Fowlerville, N. Y., in 1827. She survives her husband and now lives in Batavia. Mr. Johnson died in Batavia, March 29, 1892.

WILLIAM S. JOHNSON, physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill.; born in the city where he now resides, Nov. 9, 1859; entered Rush Medical College in 1879, receiving his degree of medicine from that institution in 1882; subsequently took a post-graduate course at the same institution, giving special attention to surgery and clinical work; began practicing his profession at Bellevue, Iowa, but since 1890 has made his home in Aurora, where he has conducted a successful practice. In 1882 the Doctor was married to Miss Rose Cobb, of Andrew, Jackson County, Iowa, who died in Aurora, Dec. 7, 1902.

ALBERT H. JONES (deceased), Batavia, Ill., born in Whitehall, N. Y., March 19, 1824, came with his parents to DuPage County, Ill., in 1838, and was reared on the farm which his father bought from the Government. He lived thirty-nine years on a farm in DuPage County, and then removed to Batavia, where he died Sept. 14, 1898. Fifty years before he had married Miss Susan Warne, daughter of John Warne, who settled in DuPage County in 1834, and was one of the widely known pioneers of that early day. Mrs. Jones survives her husband and is a resident of Batavia. Few now living have so broad a knowledge of the early history of this portion of the State, her recollections going back to the Pottawatomie period, and her descriptions of pioneer days and experiences are extremely interesting. Always devoted to the doing of good, she is noted for her kindness to her neighbors in time of sickness and distress, and her memory lingers like a benediction with the younger generation. She has frequently nursed in families where contagious diseases were prevailing, but has always escaped the contagion. Born in Warren County, N. J., in 1826, the twin sister of Mrs. Gates, the mother of John W. Gates, of Chicago, Mrs. Jones preserves in her family many historic relics, including a bowl and tea-pot made in the first china-ware factory established in the United States, and a pair of the first shears manufactured in this country. She has also gathered much valuable historical data, and is regarded as unquestioned authority on the early settlement and development of the country in which she has lived seventy years.

MAYER A. JOSHEL, merchant, Geneva, Ill., was born in Touraggen, Russia, April 24, 1870, and was educated in the private schools of his native country. He came to the United States in 1886, landing at Baltimore, Md., where he spent some six months. After this he came to Missouri, and spent two and a half years in St. Joseph. In 1891 he located in Chicago, where he engaged in business when just twenty-one years of age. The following year he came to Geneva, where for two years he was engaged in the dry-goods trade, when he sold out, and established a flour, feed and coal business, with which he is still connected. Mr. Joshel was married to Miss Anna Swanson, of Geneva, Ill., in 1895.

FRANK W. JOSLYN, lawyer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Elgin, April 27, 1860, the son of Col. Edward S. and Jennie (Padelford) Joslyn, received his educational training in the public schools and at the Elgin Academy, graduating from the latter institution in the class of 1881. He was admitted to the bar in 1884, and has since been in active practice in Elgin; was elected City Attorney of Elgin in 1885; appointed Master in Chancery for the City Court of Elgin in 1889; elected State's Attorney of Kane County in 1892, and re-elected in 1896, serving eight years. Mr. Joslyn has been prominent in the councils and campaigns of the Republican party, and has also taken a prominent part in most of the fraternal organizations, being affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Elks and Modern Woodmen of America, was organizer of the Lodge of Woodmen in Elgin, and for four years was consulting attorney of the order throughout its entire jurisdiction. In 1886 Mr. Joslyn married Miss Carrie A. Mead, daughter of Frank W. and Emma A. Mead, formerly of McHenry County, Ill. They have one son, Paul Mead Joslyn.

ROBERT W. JOSLYN, Secretary Elgin Loan & Homestead Association, Elgin, Ill.; born in Elgin, Sept. 25, 1864; educated in the public schools of his native city; began his business career as an employe in the Elgin Watch Factory; later became a clerk in the First National Bank, and has held his present position since 1888. Mr. Joslyn was married in 1888 to Miss Isabel E. Jackman, of Elgin.

DEXTER C. JUDD, Sr. (deceased), pioneer; was born in Connecticut of English ancestry, and early removed to New York, whence he came to Illinois about 1834. A blacksmith and an axe-maker by trade, he is said by an old settler to have been the first man "to pound iron" in Elgin, where he worked at his trade for a year or two. He soon went back to the East, and resumed his trade in New York, where he lived until his death in 1848. He was a brother of Thomas Judd, the well-known pioneer of Sugar Grove Township.

DEXTER C. JUDD (deceased), pioneer farmer, Sugar Grove, Kane County, Ill., was born in Charlemont, Mass., March 11, 1822, and at eight years of age removed with his parents to Warren County, N. Y., where he attained his majority. While a lad he learned the blacksmith trade, working at this trade and axe-making until he came west in 1850, settling in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, Ill., Here he purchased a farm, to which he thereafter gave most of his attention, though meanwhile working part of the time at his trade. The later years of his life he spent in Aurora, where he died in 1893. Twice Clerk of Sugar Grove Township, he held other local positions. His wife (born Eliza Brown) was a native of New York, where she was reared and educated. Her death occurred in 1892. The surviving members of this family are Asahel T. and Sarson L. Judd, of Sugar Grove, and Samuel B. and Charles D. Judd of Aurora.

ASAHEL T. JUDD, eldest of the four sons, was born in Warren County, N. Y., March 21, 1844, but was reared to manhood in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, and educated in the local schools. In the fall of 1862 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was in the Union service during three years of the Civil War. His regiment was assigned to the Western Army, and he saw much active service, participating in the battles of Champion Hills, the siege of Vicksburg and many minor engagements. After the war he returned to Kane County and resumed farming. In later years he has given special attention to stock feeding, in which he has been very successful. Mr. Judd is a Mason, and has been affiliated with Aurora Lodge No. 254 since 1865. In 1868 he married Miss Elizabeth Reynolds, daughter of Silas Reynolds, one of the pioneers of Kane County, a sketch of whom is found on another page. Their only child, Ira R., is now connected with a Batavia manufacturing firm.

PERCY G. JUDD, farmer and stock-raiser, Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, Ill.; born in the township where he now resides, Nov. 1, 1865, son of Thomas and Electa (Rice) Judd; was educated at the Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial Institute, founded by his father and others, and began his business career as a farmer. In 1886 he went to Sherman County, Kans., where he lived for ten years, and in the meantime was engaged in farming and teaching school. Returning to Illinois in 1896, he engaged in farming and stock-raising in Sugar Grove Township near the place of his birth, but later removed to the vicinity of Roland, Manitoba, where he invested in lands. He served for some time as a member of the Sugar Grove Township Board of School Trustees. Mr. Judd was married in 1889 to Miss Edith Williams, of Goodland, Kans.

PHILIP N. JUDD, farmer and stock-raiser, Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, Ill.; born at East Charlemont, Mass., Aug. 25, 1863, son of Thomas and Electa (Rice) Judd; grew to manhood on his father's farm in Sugar Grove Township, and obtained his education at the Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial Institute. After the death of his parents, he conducted a farm at Sugar Grove for one year, and then removed to Kansas, where he pre-empted a tract of government land. After living in Kansas several years, during which time he traveled extensively throughout the Rocky Mountain region, he returned to Sugar Grove, where he engaged in farming and stock-raising. Mr. Judd has served as Collector of his township. In 1897 he was married to Miss Maggie Booth, daughter of John W. Booth, of Chana, Ill., and they have two children—Charlotte and Wesley T. Judd.

SARSON L. JUDD (deceased), farmer and merchant, Sugar Grove, Kane County, Ill.; born in Warner County, N. Y., March 14, 1849, son of Dexter C. Judd, and grandson of Sarson L. Judd, a venerable pioneer of the county, who has been deceased many years; was reared in the town of Sugar Grove, where he received a public school education, and was trained to a farming life. Soon after his marriage he removed to Iroquois County, Ill., where he farmed six years, and then returned to Kane County to settle on his father's old homestead, which he purchased and owned up to the time of his death. While engaged in farming and stock-raising, Mr. Judd was for many years a large dealer in live stock, and after 1897 dealt in coal, lumber and agricultural implements on an extensive scale in Sugar Grove Village, to which he removed in 1896. He was a prominent Republican, and often served as delegate to County, Congressional and State Conventions of the party. For nine years he was a member of the Board of Supervisors. His first wife, born Mary Gillett, daughter of Lewis H. Gillett, pioneer, died in 1894, leaving two sons, Lewis D. and Clarence, now well-known young farmers of Sugar Grove Township. In 1895 Mr. Judd married Miss Susie Kauth, daughter of Michael Kauth, of Sugar Grove Township. Mr. Judd died at his home in Sugar Grove, Feb. 27, 1904, at the age of 53 years, 11 months and 24 days.

THOMAS JUDD (deceased), pioneer citizen; born in East Charlemont, Franklin County, Mass., Sept. 4, 1812, son of Asahel Judd, a descendant of Thomas Judd, who came from England and settled at Cambridge, Mass., in 1684. He grew to years of maturity on a farm in Massachusetts and after obtaining a practical English education, in the early '30s came to Illinois, remaining for a time in Chicago, but later removed to DuPage County; in 1835, came to Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, and, during the early years of his residence in the county, was connected with the government land surveys, afterwards purchasing a tract of government land near Sugar Grove Station, where he established his home. He later invested in other lands, and for many years was one of the extensive land-owners in that part of the county. Mr. Judd assisted in building the Chicago & Iowa Railroad through Sugar Grove Township, and erected the first buildings at Sugar Grove, where he became the first station agent. When the village was started, he built a fine three-story hotel with all modern improvements, and, as he was familiarly known throughout that region as "Uncle Tom," he called his place "Uncle Tom's Cabin." He also built the first store building in the village of Sugar Grove, and was the first merchant there. Always actively interested in educational matters, he was one of the founders of the Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial Institute, and at one time sought to have an agricultural experimental station established there, proposing to donate generously to the enterprise. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1847, served as one of the Supervisors of Kane County, and filled many positions of trust and responsibility. Throughout his life he was one of the most influential men of Kane County, and his death brought to his neighbors and friends a deep sense of personal bereavement. Mr. Judd was married in 1858 to Miss Electa S. Rice, of Charlemont, Mass., who met her death in a railway accident at Downers Grove, Ill., a few months after the death of her husband, which occurred Jan. 11, 1881. The living children of Mr. and Mrs. Judd are: Philip N., Percy G., Mrs. Ermina (Judd) Booth, Andrew T., Sugar Grove, Ill.; Frank L. of Los Angeles, Cal.; Roy D. Judd, of Gardner, Mass., and Charlotte M., of St. Louis, Mo.

LEWIS B. JUDSON, Sr. (deceased), pioneer, was born in Westfield, Mass., Nov. 13, 1806, and came of an old New England family. His grandfather, John J. Judson, was a Revolutionary veteran, and his father, Lucius B. Judson, participated in the war of 1812. Lewis B. Judson grew to manhood in his native town, when he came west to White Pigeon, Mich, where he bought land and brought under cultivation a large farm. He was one of the founders of the village of White Pigeon, and was influential in its development. During the Black Hawk war he served as Paymaster of the Michigan regiment commanded by Col. Stewart, and, while stationed in Chicago, he was sent out with a scouting expedition, which brought him for the first time into the Fox River country—particularly into what is now included in Kane and Kendall counties—his impression being so favorable that, in 1834, he sold his Michigan property and removed to what is now Kendall County. Here he made claim to 600 acres of land which he purchased from the Government as it came into the market. Part of this land is now in the village of Oswego, which was laid out by him, and the first house in that village was put up under his direction. His residence was maintained there until 1873, when he removed to Aurora. Although nearly seventy years of age at that time, he soon became prominent among the leading men of affairs, and aided in the establishment of the Aurora Silver Plate factory, the Aurora Cotton Mills Company, and other industrial enterprises. In banking circles he was equally helpful, and was connected with the First National, the Aurora National, and the Merchants' National Banks. Much of his means were invested in the improvement of property, and the old Sencenbaugh building, the Scott & Bease block, and other business blocks and fine residences showed his enterprise and public spirit. He was one of the early Coroners of Kendall County, a Justice of the Peace, and filled many other local offices. Catherine P. Mudgett, who was born in New York, became his first wife, in 1830, but died at Oswego in 1840. Three years later he married Diana E. Stafford, a native of Willoughby, Ohio, and a member of one of the early pioneer families of Kendall County. Of the first marriage were born six children, and eight by the second, and ten of these children were living in 1903. Mr. Judson died in Aurora in 1900, his wife passing away in 1897. Mr. Judson was acquainted with Abraham Lincoln. They became friends in the Black Hawk War, and in his later years Mr. Lincoln was several times a guest in the Judson home. Mr. Judson was a Republican, and voted with the party from its formation until his death.

LEWIS B. JUDSON, Jr., lawyer, Aurora, Ill., was born in Oswego, Ill., April 9, 1852, son of Lewis B. and Diana E. (Stafford) Judson, and educated in the local schools, Clark's Seminary, and the Aurora schools. In 1877 he went to Kansas and made his home in what is now Kingman County, when its entire population numbered forty-six people. He bought a section of government land and, for about five years, was engaged in farming and stock-raising. Later he leased the land he had brought under cultivation, and removed to Kingman, practically giving the town its start by putting up six buildings, the first two-story structures in the place. In 1889 he returned to his farm, where he spent his time until 1898, when the failing health of his father called him back to Aurora, which has since been his home. After going to Kansas he read law under the preceptorship of Hon. F. E. Gillett, of Hutchinson, Kan., now one of the Territorial Judges of Oklahoma, and was admitted to the Bar. For a time he was associated with Gov. Stanley at Wichita, and later with Judge Gillett at Kingman. Taking an active part in both State and local politics, for seven years he was Chairman of the Kingman County Republican Committee, and was associated with nearly all the prominent men of that day in the State. With the affairs of that State he still keeps in closest touch, and retains many important interests in Kansas. Mr. Judson was married in 1874 to Miss Lillie A. Hathaway, of Deansville, Oneida County, N. Y., daughter of W. S. Hathaway, a man of affairs, and a stanch friend of both Roscoe Conkling and Gov. Francis J. Kernan. The Governor was a strong old-line Democrat, and considered it a "mysterious dispensation of Providence" that his three daughters had all married prominent Republicans.

RICHARD JULIAN (deceased), pioneer farmer, Plato Township, Kane County, was born in Cornwall, Eng., March 30, 1825, left an orphan at seven years of age, and thereafter being dependent on his own resources, educated himself and learned farming in England. In 1849 he removed to Canada and the following year to Elgin, Ill. Here he learned the stone-mason's trade, at which he worked the most of the time until 1869. That year he purchased a fine farm in Plato Township, Kane County, where he was extensively engaged in dairy farming until 1897, when he retired to a small farm in that neighborhood. In 1902 he removed to Elgin and there died Jan. 29, 1903. Mr. Julian laid out the addition to Elgin, now known as Julian's re-subdivision, and a street in this subdivision is called Julian's Place. Mr. Julian was first married in 1850 to Eliza Thompson, a native of London, Eng.; his second marriage, contracted in 1883, was with Mrs. Louisa Harrison, of Plato Centre, a daughter of Pardon Tabor, who survives her husband.

FRANCIS KEENAN, retired farmer, Elburn, Ill.; born in County Westmeath, Ireland, in August, 1823; came to America when nineteen years of age, locating in Kane County, Ill., where he became an extensive land-owner, but in recent years divided about 495 acres of his holdings between his three sons. He was married on Dec. 3, 1853, to Fannie Horne, who died June 9, 1869.

PETER KEIFER, farmer and dairy manager, Virgil Township, Kane County, was born in Germany, Oct. 11, 1840, and in 1864 came to Kane County, Ill., where in 1876 he bought a farm one and a half miles south of Virgil Postoffice, on which he now resides. He has served as School Director one term. In religion he is connected with the local German Catholic church. October 11, 1869, he was married to Miss Barbara Cien, also German born. They have had eight children born to them—seven daughters and one son.

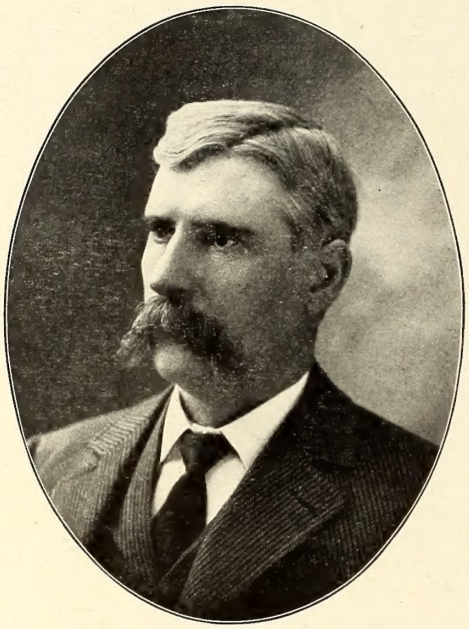
JAMES D. KELLEHER, Batavia, Ill.; born in Batavia, Ill., May 6, 1859, son of Michael Kelleher; was left an orphan when ten years of age, and from that time carried the burden of his own support. He attended the public school as circumstances permitted, and began work in Sperry's iron foundry when fourteen years of age. He has been continuously connected with these works up to the present time (1903), and for fourteen years was foreman of the shops. For eight years he has been a member of the Batavia Board of Aldermen, having served four terms. He belongs to the Catholic Order of Foresters and the Mystic Workers. In 1884 he married Miss Nellie Mulligan, of West Chicago.

JOHN KELLEY (deceased), lawyer; was born at Hampshire, Kane County, Oct. 15, 1853, son of John and Bridget (Dahoney) Kelley; natives of Ireland who came to Illinois in 1845, locating in Hampshire Township, Kane County. The subject of this sketch was admitted to the bar in 1890, and was thereafter engaged in the practice of his profession and the insurance business in Aurora until the time of his death, July 20, 1902. He served in several official positions, including that of County Sheriff, member of the Board of Supervisors of Aurora Township and West Aurora School Board, and Assistant State's Attorney. He was married to Miss Johanna Hogan, of Rutland Township, Kane County.

ELWOOD E. KENYON, lawyer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Coldwater, Mich., in 1862; was brought by his parents to Elgin in his early childhood, and was reared to manhood in the Illinois city. His literary education was obtained in the public schools, and his legal studies were conducted under the preceptorship of T. J. Rushton, of Elgin. He was admitted to the Bar of the Supreme Court of Illinois in 1895, and has since practiced in Elgin. In 1901 he was elected a member of the Elgin Board of Aldermen and re-elected to the same position in 1903. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., affiliating with Kane Lodge, No. 407. He was married in 1891 to Miss Lillie P. Sherwood, daughter of Nelson Sherwood (deceased), of Elgin.



JAMES KENDALL, farmer and Justice of the Peace, Plato Township, Kane County; born in Cornwall, Eng., Nov. 14, 1846; came to Canada with his parents a few months after birth and located in Kane County in 1871; has devoted his attention to farming in Plato Township since 1874; has held minor public offices, and at the present time is serving as Justice of the Peace; married Mary M. Pease, of Plato Township.

H. E. KERCH, M. D., Dundee, physician, born in Stephenson County, Ill., March 10, 1868; son of J. H. Kerch, was reared on his father's farm, and educated in the public school, and in the Normal School at Dixon, Ill. Before taking up the study of medicine he taught a country school for three years. He entered Chicago Homœopathic Medical College in 1889 and graduated there in 1892, after which for eighteen months he was interne in the Cook County Hospital. In the fall of 1893 he opened an office in Dundee, soon winning many friends and a large practice. Dr. Kerch is a member of the Illinois and the National Homœopathic Societies, is a Lecturer on Materia Medica at the Chicago Homœopathic College, and for five years has been a member of the Board of Trustees of the Village Library; for two years has also been Village Trustee. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic Order. He was married in June, 1896, to Miss Nellie Ireck, of Dundee.

G. OSBORN KERFOOT, dentist, Batavia, Ill.; born in the province of Ontario, Canada, Nov. 30, 1871; educated in the public schools and at Hamlin University (St. Paul, Minn.), graduated from the Northwestern College of Dental Surgery in the class of 1894, and the same year began practice at Batavia, where he has won an enviable reputation as one of the leading dentists of the Fox River Valley. He was married in 1898 to Miss Harriet Murchie, of Batavia.

ELISHA D. KETCHUM (deceased), farmer and stock-raiser; born at Clarksburg, Mass., Aug. 31, 1822; grew to maturity in his native State; educated in the public schools and was trained to farming; married in 1844 Betsy Hayden, and in 1849 removed to Illinois, locating on a farm near Palatine, where he farmed on a large scale for many years. He came to Kane County in 1879, and purchased a large farm near Dundee and engaged in dairying. Mr. Ketchum died Nov. 9, 1895, his widow surviving him until March, 1903.

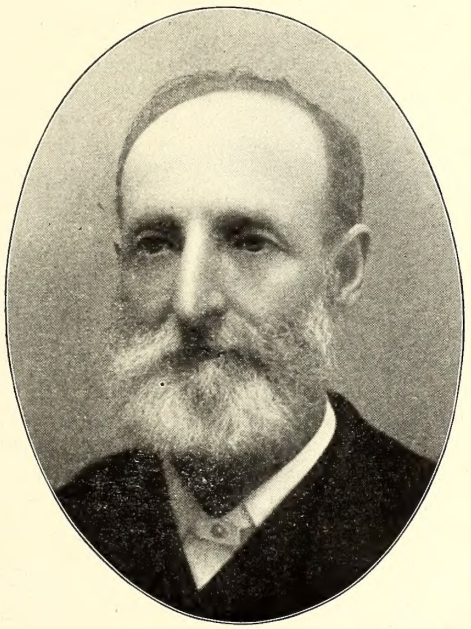
SEYMOUR E. KEYES.



SEYMOUR EDWIN KEYES, Superintendent Kane County Alms House, Geneva, Ill., was born in Berlin, Rensselaer County, N. Y., Dec. 16, 1850, and was brought by his parents to Hampshire, Kane County, Ill., in 1851. His education was acquired in the public schools, and in early life he engaged in farming. In politics he is a Republican, and in 1882 he was appointed Deputy Sheriff and Jailer, a position he held for four years. In 1888 he was named as Superintendent of the alms house, and is still active in that position (1903). He is a member of the Republican County Committee, and belongs to the Rock City Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America.

SEYMOUR A. KEYES (deceased), Hampshire, Ill., farmer, was born in Pownal, Mass., Nov. 1, 1822, and died Dec. 8, 1879. When a young man he taught school in Rensselaer County, N. Y., and coming to Hampshire, Ill., in 1851, bought an 80-acre tract of land, on which the east half of Hampshire is now located. When the line of the Chicago & Pacific Railway was being laid out he gave the right of way through the village. In politics he was a Republican, and in religion proved himself a very active factor. Mr. Keyes was married Jan. 27, 1842, to Miss Malvina D. Horton, and their children were as follows: Martha M. (Mrs Nathan S. Carlisle); Mary M. (Mrs. Lyman J. Carlisle); Harriet B. (Mrs. Samuel Hawley); Seymour E.; Willis H.; Eda L. (Mrs. Charles Hottgren); and Addie J. (Mrs. William Devine).

L. J. KIBLING, merchant and manager of the Chicago Telephone Company, Bald Mound, Kane County, Ill.; born in the village where he now resides, April 25, 1858; remained on his father's farm until twenty-one years of age, and established himeslf in the mercantile business at Bald Mound in 1893; was Postmaster at Bald Mound one term; married Lauretta Cronk.

CHARLES S. KILBOURNE, merchant and manufacturer, was born in Berkshire, Vt., Nov. 6, 1851; came with his parents to Illinois in 1858 and grew up in Kane County; was fitted for a business career in the West Aurora public schools, and in 1869 became an employe of the banking house of Cushman & Hardin, Chicago. After remaining there five years he became connected with the private banking house of Bosworth & Carpenter at Elgin, Ill., which was shortly afterwards merged into the First National Bank of Elgin. This connnection lasted from 1874 to 1878, and the methodical habits and precision in the conduct of affairs, which have been characteristic of Mr. Kilbourne in later years, are probably due in large measure to his bank training. In 1878 he severed his connection with the bank to become a junior member of the firm of Gould & Kilbourne, then established for the manufacture of butter and cheese, his associate being C. W. Gould, one of the pioneer butter makers of the Elgin district. This firm was in existence about three years, and during that time operated a number of creameries. It was dissolved in 1881 and Mr. Kilbourne continued the same line of manufacturing alone, operating creameries in Northern Illinois. In 1885 he organized and incorporated the now widely known Fox River Butter Company, which succeeded to the business he had previously conducted. The general offices of this corporation were established at Aurora in 1890, and it has since directed from this point manufacturing and merchandising operations which extend all over the United States, with branches in the more important cities of the country. Its manufacturing plants are located at different points in Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota. Mr. Kilbourne has been President, General Manager, and principal owner of the stock of the corporation since it came into existence, and in this connection is the largest producer of fancy creamery butter in the United States. His home has been in Aurora since 1890. He married, in 1878, Miss Mabel C. Newton of Cleveland, Ohio.

JAMES M. KIMBALL.

JAMES M. KIMBALL (deceased), Elgin, Ill., was born in Groton, N. H., Oct. 2, 1828, died April 19, 1898. He removed with his parents to Elgin, Ill., in 1834, his father being one of the first settlers of that city. From 1848 to 1857 he was Solicitor for the "Chicago Democrat" and in 1858 engaged in a general commission and auction business. Later in life he was a real-estate dealer, and in 1886 established the present furniture business of J. M. Kimball, with his sons, M. J. and William D., as partners. Politically he was a Democrat until the formation of the Republican party. For ten years he was Deputy Sheriff and eight years School Director. He was married Sept. 7, 1856, to Miss Ruth Tourtellot, a native of Providence, R. I. His widow and the following children survive him: Montony J., William D., and Clara G.

MONTONY J. KIMBALL, furniture merchant, Elgin, was born in Elgin, Ill., Sept. 15, 1863, received his education in the city schools, and entered the employ of his father, J. M. Kimball, as a clerk. In 1886 he was admitted to partnership, the firm name being J. M. Kimball. In politics he is a Republican, and socially is a member of the Century, the Country and the Bicycle Clubs of Elgin.

WILLIAM D. KIMBALL, furniture merchant, Elgin, was born in Elgin, Oct. 9, 1866, and educated in the public schools. In 1886 he entered the employ of his father, J. M. Kimball, and was admitted to partnership, the firm name being J. M. Kimball. He is a Republican, and is a director of the Elgin Business Men's Association. In religion he is a Baptist, and is the efficient Superintendent of the First Baptist Church Sunday School. For twelve years he was a director of the Young Men's Christian Association and was its Treasurer four years.

EUGENE C. KINCAID, publisher, Elgin, Ill., born Jan. 24, 1839, in Schenectady, N. Y., son of Elam H. and Rhoda (Cornell) Kincaid, grew to manhood in his native State, and receiving a public school education learned the printer's trade. In May, 1861, he enlisted in the Twenty-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry, and participated in all the great battles of the Army of the Potomac, being finally mustered out at the expiration of his term of enlistment in 1863. He took part in the battles of Bull Run, Chancellorsville, and in many minor engagements. After his return from the war he lived for a time at Albion, N. Y., and then removed to Elgin, which has since been his home. He has been engaged in the printing business almost continuously since 1865, when he became one of the publishers of the "Elgin Gazette;" later was owner of the "Watchman," and still later part owner of the "Advocate," predecessor to the "Elgin Daily News." For several years he was in the railway mail service, and in later years he has been connected with the Cook Publishing Company. He married Miss H. Isadore Padelford, daughter of Rodolphus W. Padelford, a noted pioneer of Elgin.

ALFRED H. KING (deceased), farmer, born near Rome, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1825; obtained a practical business education, and was trained to farming; came west in 1856, locating on a farm in Big Rock Township, Kane County, where he was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1871, when he retired from active business and removed to Aurora, where he died March 25, 1875. He was married in 1864 to Miss Marian E. Dean, who still survives and resides in Aurora. Their living children are: Della M., Minnie A. and Alfred D.

ANDREW KINMAN (deceased), pioneer farmer, Campton Township, Kane County, was born Sept. 1, 1816, in New Brunswick, and there was reared and educated; came with his family to Illinois in 1846, and settled on a large farm in Campton Township, Kane County, where he made his home until his death in 1867. He reared a family of sixteen children, all of whom lived in Illinois, reaching maturity. Three of his sons served in the Union Army during the Civil War. He married Elizabeth Kline, also a native of New Brunswick, who survives her husband, still living in St. Charles.

ISAAC B. KINNE, merchant, Minneapolis, Minn.; born in Syracuse, N. Y., March 26, 1829; engaged in agricultural pursuits in New York State and later in Illinois; located in Batavia, Ill., in 1872, and became interested in the Challenge Wind-mill Company; established the drug and grocery business in Batavia in 1874, which was the foundation of the present department store of Kinne & Jeffery, in which he was succeeded by his son, M. M. Kinne. In 1887 he removed to Minneapolis, Minn., and has since been engaged in business there as President of the Kinne Manufacturing Company.

MYRON M. KINNE, merchant, Batavia, Ill., born in Saratoga Township, Grundy County, Ill., May 1, 1856; engaged in the mercantile business in Batavia in 1876 as junior member of the firm of I. B. Kinne & Son; later purchased his father's interest in the business, and in 1887 became head of the firm of Kinne & Jeffery, which is one of the leading department stores of the Fox River Valley; is also interested in the Kinne Manufacturing Company of Minneapolis, Minn., manufacturers of sheet iron goods. He was married in 1876 to Miss Lillian F. Johnson, of Batavia.

JOSEPH KIRK, retired farmer, Geneva, born Aug. 24, 1843, in Lanarkshire, Scotland, son of Joseph and Charlotte (Scholes) Kirk; came to the United States in 1857, when about fourteen years old; lived at Northford, Conn., until 1860, when he came to Illinois and settled on a farm east of St. Charles, Kane County, remaining four years, when he located on a farm which he had bought north of St. Charles. He spent a year in Maple Park and about four years in what is now Lily Lake. In 1873 he moved to a farm of 160 acres which he now owns, and on which he lived until he retired from active work in 1900. The latter year he removed to Geneva, where he now (1903) resides, and rents his farm to his two sons. While a resident of District No. 6, near St. Charles, he served twelve years as School Director. Mr. Kirk was married March 17, 1865, to Miss Mary Ann, daughter of William Marshall, of St. Charles. In political belief he is a Republican.

PETER KLEIN, editor and publisher, Aurora, Kane County, Ill., born near Bingen-on-the-Rhine, in Rhenish Prussia, Sept. 1, 1849; obtained his elementary education in the schools of his native country, and completed his studies in Chicago, to which city his father came with his children in 1862—the mother having died in Germany. In 1864 they removed to Aurora, where Peter Klein grew to manhood, his first business experience being in the dry-goods trade, but later he engaged in the insurance business. In 1868, when only nineteen years of age, he established the "Aurora Volksfreund," the first German paper published in Central Illinois, which was conducted as a weekly until 1895, when a daily edition was issued and has been continued to the present time. Mr. Klein is the owner as well as editor and publisher of these papers, and, as a leader of Republicanism, has been prominently identified with the politics of Kane County since 1870. For nine years he was a member of the Aurora School Board; was a member of the Aurora Board of Public Works one term; served as City Treasurer two years, and, in 1902, was elected as the first Clerk of the Probate Court of Kane County, to serve four years. Mr. Klein was married in 1876 to Miss Harriet Wilson of Aurora.

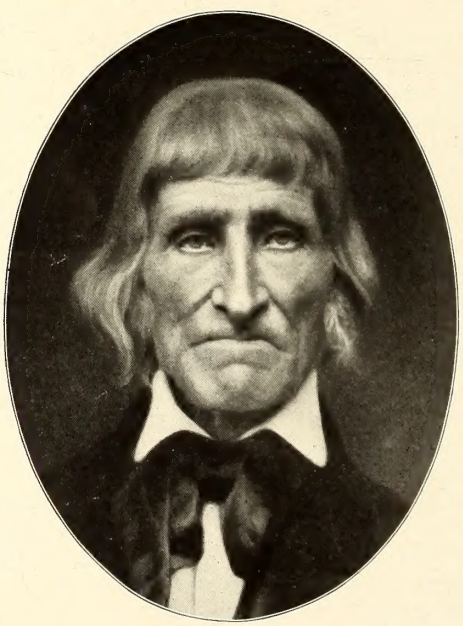
ASA B. KNAPP (deceased), farmer, Maple Park, Kane County, was born in Brattleboro, Vt., March 22, 1809, went to New York as a boy, and made his home at Sodus, Wayne County, until 1849, when he removed to a farm in Geneva Township, Kane County, Ill., living there until 1865. The latter year he located on a farm three miles south of Maple Park, where he lived until his death, July 16, 1882. He was twice married; first in 1836, to Miss Mary A. Storm, and, after her death, in 1847, to Miss Amanda McKee, who was born and reared in Vermont. Mrs. Knapp survives her husband and is now (1903) living in Batavia at the age of eighty-seven years.

L. HAMILTON KNAPP, railway engineer, Galesburg, Ill., born in Sodus, N. Y., Jan. 7, 1841, son of Asa B. and Mary (Storm) Knapp, was reared to manhood in Kane County, Ill., and in 1861 enlisted in the Union army, as a member of the Seventh Kansas Cavalry. After a four years' service at the front he returned to Kane County and entered the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, in which he has since been engaged, and for the past thirty years has made his home in Galesburg.

MILTON M. KNAPP, in Government service, Washington, D. C., born in 1856, near Batavia, Ill., is a son of Asa B. and Amanda (McKee) Knapp, and was educated in the public schools of Maple Park and at Clark Seminary, in Aurora. After leaving school he was engaged in the insurance business for some years at Batavia. In 1889 he secured an appointment in the Census Bureau at Washington, and for six years worked under that appointment. In 1899 he again became connected with the Census Department, and is still engaged in that capacity.



ROBERT LAKE, born in Aurora, Ill., Jan. 23, 1858, was reared in his native city, and there received his educational training. After leaving school he was connected for four years with the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad, meanwhile making his home in Kansas City. Returning to Aurora in 1883, he has since been engaged in the sand and gravel business of that city. In 1887 Mr. Lake was married to Miss Alice Lancaster, daughter of Lafayette Lancaster, of Aurora, and they have one child, Delos L. Fraternally Mr. Lake is a member of the Order of Elks.

RUSSELL LAKE was born in Aurora, Ill., Nov. 2, 1863, where he grew to maturity and obtained his education in the West Side (Aurora) city schools. He learned the machinist's trade in boyhood, and for several years worked at his trade with the Hoyt Brothers Company, of Aurora. Later he was engaged in the sand and gravel trade and sidewalk construction, and afterwards gave his attention to the plumbing and steam-fitting business, being at the same time interested in farming. Mr. Lake and his brother Robert have always been closely associated in business affairs, and they still own a considerable portion of the old Lake estate.

THEODORE LAKE (deceased), pioneer settler, born at East Bloomfield, N. Y., Feb. 14, 1801, son of Henry and Abigail (Spring) Lake, was reared and educated in Buffalo, N. Y., and Conneaut, Ohio, and in 1820 went to Detroit, Mich., where for a time he was in the employ of Capt. Sam Ward, who afterwards became a noted vessel-owner of that city. With his first savings he began trading with the Indians of the Lake region, continuing in this line of business for several years, and then, in company with his brother, Saphua Lake, was engaged in general merchandising at Conneaut, Ohio, for nine years. In 1834 Saphua Lake came to Illinois, visiting the site of Aurora, and as a result of his trip purchased for himself and his brother all of the McCarty claim on the west side of the Fox River. The following spring the brothers came to Aurora and opened the first store in that city. Saphua Lake returned to Ohio, but the subject of this sketch continued to be a prominent resident and property owner until his death, Feb. 16, 1876. Mr. Lake platted two additions to the city of Aurora, and Lake Street perpetuates his name in this connection. He substantially aided many pioneer enterprises and helped lay the foundation of many of the city's churches by his generous donations.

DELOS LAKE, son of the preceding and pioneer citizen, was born at Conneaut, Ohio, April 18, 1828, came to Aurora with his father in 1835, and there grew to manhood, receiving his educational training in the old-time schools. He was associated with his father in business, but later lived several years on the Pacific Coast, also spending some time in Michigan and Wisconsin. The care of his estate occupied his attention in later years. In 1857 he was married to Miss Susan M. Richardson, of Watertown, N. Y., and the living representatives of this pioneer Aurora family are two sons, Robert and Russell Lake, of Aurora. Mr. Delos Lake died April 29, 1890.

LAFAYETTE LANCASTER, retired, Aurora, Ill.; born in Kenton County, Ky., in 1827; came to Illinois when a boy, locating with his father's family in Fulton County; located in Aurora in 1878, where he has since resided. He was married in 1854 to Miss Jane Mead, who died in 1903. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Lancaster are: Mrs. Robert Lake, Mrs. Ed. Hanna and Charles, all living in Aurora.

WILLIAM LANCE.

WILLIAM LANCE (deceased), pioneer settler and farmer, Kane County, Ill., was born in the Colony of New Jersey, April 19, 1771, and died in Blackberry Township, Kane County, Ill. —which had been his home for nearly forty years—Sept. 17, 1873, at the age of over 102 years. His life, in some respects, was one of the most eventful of any citizen of Illinois. Besides living over a full century, he had lived under the rule of George III. of England and the American Republic, and through two of the greatest wars in history—that which resulted in the establishment of the American Union, and that which preserved the Union from overthrow at the hands of the pro-slavery rebellion. Mr. Lance began pioneer life at an early period, first coming to Indiana, where he remained until 1833, in the following spring (1834) coming to the Fox River Valley, accompanied by a part of his family and bringing eight yoke of oxen. Arriving at the Big Woods in Kane County, he was detained there for a time by sickness; but his son John, leaving his father and his sister Mary (now Mrs. Souders, of Blackberry Township), crossed Fox River and proceeded westward past Nelson's Grove, selecting a claim upon lands now owned by Charles Souders. Then returning to the place where he had left his father and sister, he guided the party to the place where he had located his claim, and here the Lance family finally became claimant to seven or eight thousand acres. Being first in the field and without competitors, they were practically able to locate their claims without restriction. In the fall of 1834 Mr. Lance and his son John, leaving the daughter Mary and another son (Charles), who had accompanied them to Illinois, at the home of Peter Dodds, a brother-in-law, in DuPage County, returned to Indiana for the rest of the family. Here John Lance and his sister Margaret were married—the latter to David Beeler —when the party came to Illinois, arriving at the end of their journey on Christmas Day, and finally settling on what is now known as Johnson's Mound. The Lances and the Beelers thus became, during the winter of 1834-5, the first settlers in Blackberry Township. During the following spring (1835) John Souders, at that time a bachelor accustomed to work for the farmers in that region, arrived, and between Christmas and New Year's of the next winter was married to Mary Lance, who had come to Illinois with her father a year previous, and during the same fall Martha Beeler, daughter of David and Margaret (Lance) Beeler, was born—being the first child born in the township. Martha Beeler became the wife of

Mr. Cooledge, of Oregon, Ogle County, where they now (1904) reside. (See sketch of John Souders in another part of this volume.) William Lance, who was a man of great force of character and a conspicuous figure in this section of the State, finally died, as already stated, Sept. 17, 1873, his death—notwithstanding his great age—being hastened by cancer, but retaining his memory to the last. His wife, Margaret A. Lance, died Sept. 27, 1856, aged seventy-one years.

ELIJAH LATHROP (deceased), pioneer, Udina, Kane County, Ill., born in Jay, Oxford County, Me., May 10, 1821, son of Elijah and Eunice (Philbrick) Lathrop. Elijah Lathrop, Sr., born in Bridgewater, Mass., removed in 1800 to the District of Maine, where he was married, and there lived until 1828, when he removed to Onondaga County, N. Y.; four years later went to Lorain County, Ohio, where the son Elijah grew to manhood, securing his education in the public schools and at Amherst High School in Lorain. Elijah Lathrop, Jr., learned the carpenter trade, which he followed for several years in Wisconsin. In 1851 he purchased of the late Major Adin Mann a tract of land near Udina, which is still in possession of the family, and where he spent the remainder of his life. Later on his father and two brothers came to Udina, and for some years the four of them lived in a row of farm-houses just outside the village, on the State road toward Elgin. Four generations of the family have lived in this neighborhood, and three generations have lived on the old homestead, now occupied by Mrs. Lathrop and her son. She was born in Oswego, N. Y., in 1831, and grew up in Cleveland, Ohio. She and Mr. Lathrop were married in Sandusky, Ohio, Jan. 8, 1851, and immediately settled in Kane County, where all the years of their wedded life were passed. Elijah Lathrop died Jan. 25, 1898. Mrs. Lathrop still survives, making her home with their only living son, Ellis H. Lathrop, who is a farmer and stock-raiser, born at Udina, Dec. 31, 1853. His education was secured in the district schools and in Elgin Academy. He began farming on the old homestead, and took his father's place in its conduct and management. He was married in 1877 to Miss Alice Schultz, of Elgin, who died March 31, 1901, leaving five children: Edith, Sutherland L., Arthur, Florence and Blanche.

EDWARD LAWRENCE (deceased), pioneer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Lancastershire, England, Jan. 15, 1819, and reared and educated in his English home, early becoming associated with his father in operating canal boats. In 1850 he came to the United States, first making his home at St. Charles, Ill., but after living for a time in DeKalb County, about 1854 located on a farm in Burlington, Kane County. Here he continued to reside until 1882, when he returned to Genoa, DeKalb County, but thirteen years later he removed to Elgin, where he died April 3, 1902. Mr. Lawrence was married in 1856 to Miss Lissy Marshall, daughter of William and Mary Marshall, who came from Nottinghamshire, England, and settled in DeKalb County, Ill., in 1853. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence have four children: Marshall, residing in Burlington, Ill.; Jennie, Robert E. and Mary E. (now Mrs. E. W. Lawson), all living in Elgin.

ROBERT E. LAWRENCE, merchant, Elgin, Ill., was born in Burlington, Kane County, Ill., April 7, 1863, the son of Edward and Lissey (Marshall) Lawrence. He grew to manhood under the parental roof-tree, and was educated in the local schools. He followed agricultural pursuits until 1891, when two years later he engaged in a grocery business in which he has continued successfully up to the present time (1903). He still retains the ownership of the DeKalb County farm. In 1886 he married Miss Emma, daughter of Aaron and Sarah (Lanphier) Allen, of Elgin.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE (deceased), merchant, was born in the town of Weston, Vt., Jan. 17, 1826, and when seventeen years of age left his native town to go to Shushan, N. Y., where he became a clerk in the store of Daniel Volentine, who later lived in Aurora, Ill. Here he was trained as a merchant, and when he reached his majority entered into partnership with Mr. Volentine. Mr. Lawrence continued in business several years after Mr. Volentine had gone west, and then removed to Albany, N. Y., where he was engaged in the commission and produce trade until 1861. During that year he removed to Aurora, Ill., and again entered into partnership relations with Mr. Volentine, the firm engaging in a general mercantile business, with a special and extensive trade in wool and pork. Later on Mr. Volentine withdrew from the firm, Mr. Lawrence becoming the head of the firm of Lawrence, Baldwin & Higgins, known as one of the leading commercial houses of Aurora. Mr. Lawrence had also much to do with the Second National Bank of Aurora, being one of the Directors and its Vice-President. The Aurora Silver Plate Company counted him among its earlier promoters, and he had much to do with various other business enterprises. As President of the West Aurora School Board for several years he did much to help the schools. He served as Treasurer of Jennings Seminary for some years, and was also Treasurer of the Mercantile Association. Various other positions of trust and responsibility were filled by him, and his memory is that of an honorable and upright business man. Mr. Lawrence was married in 1849 to Miss Mary A., daughter of Peter Brown, of Shushan, N. Y. Her father came west and died in Aurora at the age of 91 years. She survives her husband, who died July 26, 1879. Their only living child is George J., of San Jose, Cal.

ABIJAH A. LEE, retired farmer, Elgin, Ill.; born in Plato Township, Kane County, Sept. 4, 1838, son of John S. and Nancy (Perry) Lee, and the first white child born in Plato Township; reared on his father's farm; educated in the pioneer schools, and trained to agricultural pursuits; entered the Union army in 1861 as a member of Company B, Thirty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, which in 1863 became a part of the Fifteenth Illinois Cavalry, and during his long term of service, covering the entire period of the war, he participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Peach Tree Creek, Siege of Atlanta, and many minor engagements. After the close of the war he resumed farming in Plato Township, where he resided until 1885, when he removed to Elgin, which has since been his home. He was married in 1866 to Miss Eliza C. McArthur.

BRAINARD A. LEE, farmer, Kaneville, was born in Kaneville, Ill., May 7, 1865, and received his education in the public schools. His business in life has been farming, in which he is still engaged, and has been since he started for himself, with the exception of one year when he was engaged as a clerk in a store in Missouri. He was married in April, 1890, to Miss Bertha Smith, by whom he has had one child, a daughter. He was married a second time, May 13, 1900, to Miss Ettie Logan, and of this union have been born two sons.

CHAUNCEY W. LEE, pioneer, Aurora, Ill., born in Albany, Vt., Aug. 25, 1820, grew to manhood in his native State, receiving his education in the public schools, and learned the harness-maker's trade. In 1844 he removed to Ticonderoga, N. Y., where he followed his trade for ten years. In 1854 he came west, and shortly after went into a partnership in the jewelry business with his brother at Aurora. His brother having entered the army as Captain, Mr. Lee sold out their partnership business, for ten years thereafter he was in the insurance business, and later entered the employ of the Burlington Road as car accountant, a position which he filled for eighteen years, retiring in 1892. He has been prominent in Masonic circles, having taken all the degrees of the order up to the Thirty-second; for twenty-four years he has been Prelate of Aurora Commandery Knights Templar, and within that time has knighted 210 candidates, a record not surpassed in the Masonic annals of Illinois. He was a Mason in 1856, and is now affiliated with Jerusalem Temple, Aurora Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Aurora Council, Royal Arch Select Masons; Aurora Commandery, K. T.; Oriental Consistory, Scottish Rite Masons; and the Masonic Veteran Associations. In 1849 he married Miss Mary Tobias, who died in 1884.

GEORGE P. LEE, retired farmer, Elgin, Ill.; born in Plato Township, Kane County, Dec. 25, 1843, son of John S. and Nancy (Perry) Lee; brought up on the farm and obtained his education in the district schools and Elgin Academy; began his business career, when he attained his majority, as a farmer and stock-raiser, following this occupation until 1890, when he retired and removed to Elgin. He was married in 1871 to Miss Sarah A. Sherwood, daughter of Seth Sherwood, of Plato Township, a pioneer settler of Kane County.

JOHN S. LEE, lawyer and farmer, Elgin, Ill.; born in Plato Township, Kane County, Sept. 8, 1848, son of John S. and Nancy (Perry) Lee; educated at Clark's Seminary (Aurora), Kimball Academy (Meriden, N. H.), and Beloit College (Beloit, Wis.); graduated from the law department of the University of Michigan in 1871 and afterwards practiced his profession in Chicago and later at Tecumseh, Neb.; afterwards returned to Kane County to look after his father's land interests, and later purchased the old homestead; removed to Elgin in 1899, and has since resided in that city. He was married in 1876 to Miss Emma Sherwood.

LUTHER C. LEE, pioneer, Aurora, born in Craftsburg, Vt., March 4, 1827, son of Maj. Theodore D. Lee, who saw service under Gen. Sam Houston in Texas; grew up in Vermont, was educated in the public schools, and learned the jeweler's trade. In 1847 he and his brother went to Texas, later locating in Aurora, Ill., where they were together in the jeweler trade until the breaking out of the Civil War, when he aided in the organization of the Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he was commissioned First Lieutenant, and promoted to Captain. He was in active service during the fall of 1864, when greatly impaired health made it necessary for him to resign. After his partial recovery of health he was in business for several years in Aurora, for some time lived in Virginia City, Mont., but, returning to Aurora, died there in 1886. Mr. Lee married Miss Martha Cross, and, after her death, Miss Fannie Jackson, both of Aurora.

RUSSELL W. LEE (deceased), farmer, Kaneville, Ill., was born in Middletown, Conn., June 20, 1822, received his education in the home schools, and in 1844 came to Kane County, Ill., where he bought a quarter-section of Government land, which he converted into one of the choice farms of the county. For several winters after his arrival in the State he taught school, and soon won more than local prominence. He served at different times as Constable, Justice of the Peace, Supervisor, Assessor, Commissioner of Highways, and for sixteen years was President of the Board of School Directors. For two terms he was Postmaster. In 1848 he married Sophronia C. Spencer, a native of Connecticut, and of this marriage were born three daughters and two sons. One daughter died in Kaneville April 24, 1896.

WARREN S. LEE, farmer and stock-raiser, Kaneville, Kane County, was born in Kaneville March 24, 1860, son of Russell W. and Sophronia C. (Spencer) Lee, was educated in the local schools, and when he reached the age of twenty-one, starting out for himself, began life as a farmer, which has been his vocation to the present time. He has purchased land in considerable amounts, and has dealt in it speculatively with much success. He has been Assessor and Justice of the Peace, holding each office two terms. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

G. KELLER LEET, land-owner, Aurora, Ill., born in Bradford, Stark County, Ill., Dec. 21, 1873, son of William A. Leet, was educated in his native town and joined his father in business when he was sixteen years of age. While the family remained at Bradford he gave his attention to the study of farming and grain interests, gaining a thoroughly practical knowledge of both lines. In 1890 he came to Aurora, where he has since given his attention to the management of large property interests. Mr. Leet is a large land-owner in both Kane and Bureau Counties, and until 1903 was associated with his brother in many banking enterprises. In 1898 he married Miss Maude Gray, daughter of John Gray, of Sandwich, Ill.

WILLIAM LEET.

WILLIAM LEET (deceased), merchant and banker, Aurora, Ill., was born in Chester, Conn., Oct. 20, 1827, son of Samuel and Anna Leet, both of New England ancestry, the father being descended from William Leete, who came from England in 1639, was Governor of New Haven Colony and later of Connecticut Colony. His parents having but limited means, William Leet had difficulty in securing an education equal to his ambition, and what he did obtain was largely won in the school of experience. In 1841 he removed to Illinois with his uncle, a Mr. James, and worked on a farm in Peoria County some four or five years, after which he spent a short time in his native State. Soon returning to Illinois, he was employed for a time in Bureau County, where he purchased eighty acres of wild land. Later on he purchased and operated a much larger farm in the same neighborhood, known in after years as the Leet homestead. Some years before the Civil War he entered the grain trade at Henry, Marshall County, and for years controlled the markets at Bradford, Castleburg, Duncan and Lombardville, all stations on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway. Removing to Bradford, he purchased the Bradford Exchange Bank in 1875, of which he was owner and manager until his death. Later in life he established a bank at Audubon, Iowa, of which his son Frank W. Leet became manager. He was one of the largest land-owners in Illinois at one time, having over 5,000 acres in Stark County alone, beside extensive holdings in Iowa and other States. His grain business brought him to Chicago in 1888, where he made his home two years. In 1890 he removed to Aurora, where he lived until his death, Sept 5, 1896. Mr. Leet was married in 1854 to Miss Helen Spear, who survives him, and lives in Aurora. She is a native of England. She has remarried, and is the wife of Matthew T. Chapman, President of the American Well Works Company. Mrs. Chapman and her children have kept the large Leet estate intact, and have managed it as a copartnership affair. The children are: Mrs. Jonathan C. Stoughton, widow of the Rev. Dr. Stoughton; Frank W. Leet, of Audubon, Iowa, President of four banks in that State; Mrs. Rose Thompson, of Bradford, Ill., who has the unique distinction of being President of two banks; Mrs. Anna Boysen, wife of a large land-owner near Manning, Iowa; and Keller Leet, an extensive land-owner of Aurora, Ill.

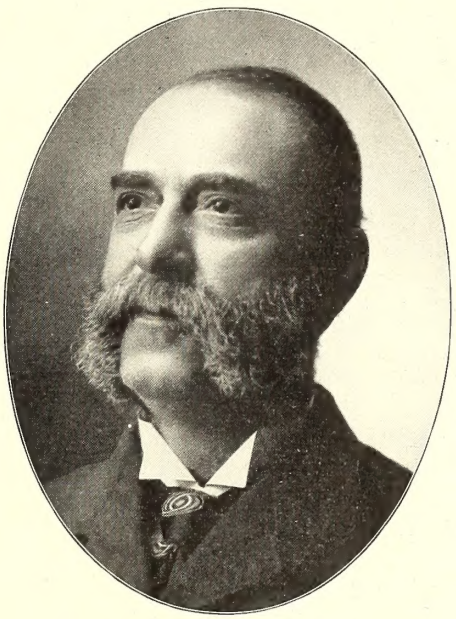
CHARLES W. LEHMANN, attorney, Elgin, Ill.; born in Roxbury, Mass., Dec. 3, 1874; educated in the public schools, Elgin Academy, Lake Forest Academy, and obtained his legal education at Kent College (Chicago), afterwards taking a special course at Harvard and Heidelberg University. He was admitted to the Bar in 1896, and began practice in Elgin in 1900. Mr. Lehmann was married Dec. 14, 1899, to Miss Janet N. Ranstead, daughter of Judge John W. Ranstead, of Elgin.

WILLIAM LEMKE, retired farmer, Dundee, Ill.; born in Germany Nov. 21, 1832; came to Dundee, Ill., in 1859, and for more than thirty years was identified with agricultural interests in that locality. He was married in 1858 to Miss Christina Sternberg, who was also a native of Germany.

ALPHONSO B. LEMON, farmer and stock-raiser, Campton Township, Kane County; born in the township where he now resides, Sept. 8, 1858; educated in the public schools; located on his present 260-acre farm in 1882; married, in 1880, Adeline J. Addie.

FRANK J. LENNARTZ.



FRANK J. LENNARTZ, merchant and City Treasurer, Geneva, Ill., was born in Kenosha Wis., March 19, 1876, son of Frank and Caroline (Enter) Lennartz, and was taken by his parents to Geneva, Ill., in 1879, where he was reared to manhood and educated in the city schools. In 1896 he became junior member of the grocery firm of Lennartz & Lennartz, now one of the leading business houses of the city. In 1901 he was elected City Treasurer of Geneva, and in 1903 is still holding that office. He is an active Republican, and is influential in local politics. Fraternally he belongs to the order of the Knights of Pythias. In 1900 he married Miss Grace Gould, of Geneva.

CHARLES E. LEWIS, manufacturer, Carpentersville, Ill., was born in Sharon, Littlefield County, Conn., in 1847, and was reared to manhood in the State of New York. He received his education in the public schools, and came to Illinois in 1865, establishing his home in Elgin. In 1870 he went to Kansas, where he spent six years as a pioneer. At the end of that period he returned to New York State, but later entered the employment of the Borden Condensed Milk Company, with which he has been continuously connected to the present time (1903). For the last fifteen years he has been superintendent of the company's extensive plant at Carpentersville, Ill., and is recognized throughout the country as one of the best informed and most thoroughly practical men engaged in the business, being frequently called upon to aid in establishing and putting in operation the company's plants in different parts of the United States and Canada, and has traded largely in the company's interest. He is a Mason and a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

CLARK A. LEWIS, editor and publisher, Batavia, Ill., born in Fort Wayne, Ind., May 5, 1841, there reared and educated in the city schools, and there learned the printer's trade. In 1860 he began publishing a paper at Kendallville, Ind., but soon enlisted in the Twelfth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, his regiment being mustered in at Indianapolis in May, 1861, and soon sent to the front. He served in Maryland and Virginia thirteen months, when his command was discharged on account of expiration of service. He worked at his trade in Fort Wayne until 1868, when he went to Peoria, Ill., and worked on "The Daily Transcript" of that city until the following spring, when he came to Batavia and established the "Batavia News," of which he is still the editor and publisher. He is a Mason, a Modern Woodman, and is conspicuous in the Grand Army of the Republic. In 1865 he married, at Fort Wayne, Ind., Miss Laura A. Barker, of Jefferson County, N. Y.

JAMES K. LEWIS, retired physician, St. Charles, Ill.; born in Onondaga County, N. Y., June 23, 1822; received his medical training in the Geneva Medical College (New York), graduating from that institution in 1846; came to St. Charles in 1852, where he remained in active practice until 1892; married, in 1847, Louise M. Ferguson, who died Feb. 14, 1903, leaving two children—Genevieve (who resides with her father) and John H., of DeKalb County, Ill.

D. B. LINCOLN.

D. B. LINCOLN, Superintendent Aurora Silver Plate Company, Aurora, born at Taunton, Mass., Jan. 26, 1844, son of Horatio and Lucinda (Field) Lincoln, received his education in the Taunton city schools, where he was studying when the Civil War broke out. He enlisted in August, 1862, in Company K, Thirty-third Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry. This was his third enlistment, his father having twice taken him out of the service on account of his extreme youth. He served to the end of the war, being mustered out at Readville, Mass., in June, 1865. He was married Sept. 6, 1865, and immediately went into the Taunton Silver Plate

Company to thoroughly learn its business, remaining with that concern until 1869, when he went to Brooklyn, N. Y., to take charge of the Adams & Hallock Factory, where he remained until 1875. The latter year he was engaged by I. J. Steane & Co., successors to the Taunton Silver Plate Company, to open up the business in that city. After a successful year the plant was removed from Taunton to New York, where his employers kept him in charge until 1886, in the meantime buying the Albany Silver Plate Factory, which they removed to New York to take the place of their first plant destroyed by fire. In September, 1886, Mr. Lincoln came west and took charge of the Silver Plate Company at Aurora, acting as its Superintendent, a position which he has held to the present time. Mr. Lincoln is a member of the G. A. R., and is Past Commander of Post No. 20, Aurora. He is now serving his third term as Chancellor of the local lodge, K. P., and is Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fifth Illinois Regiment of the order. He served as Alderman from the First Ward from 1892 to 1896, and was President of the Board of Public Works under Mayor Howard. Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln have three children: Percy G., born in Taunton, now in business in Aurora; Carrie, the wife of Dr. A. H. McLaughlin, of Aurora; and Emma V., the wife of Dr. M. D. Jones, of Chicago.

JOHN LINDEN, manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., born in Luxemburg, Germany, June 12, 1848, came with his parents to the United States in 1862, arriving in Aurora, Ill., on April 12 of the same year, and four days later began work in the J. G. Stolp Woolen Mill of that city. Mr. Linden was connected with this enterprise in various capacities until 1884, being promoted to boss carder in 1867, assistant superintendent in 1870 and superintendent in 1879, filling the latter position for five years, when he resigned and engaged in the plumbing and gas-fitting business at 36 Fox Street, Aurora. He was the first plumber on the Island, and on May 12, 1886, made the first tap to the city water-mains, the city water-works having been installed in 1884-5. Continuing in the plumbing and gas-fitting business until 1892, he then sold his establishment to Lake, Judd & Gillette, and on June 22, 1894, was appointed by Mayor J. C. Murphy first Superintendent of Sewers, Plumbing and Buildings of Aurora, a position he is holding at the present time (1904). Mr. Linden is also interested in the Aurora Iron Works and the Linden Manufacturing Company, and was the organizer of the last named corporation. As a stock-holder he is identified with three Aurora banks, and was one of the organizers of and a stock-holder in the first street railway company of that city. Mr. Linden has been a leading spirit in promoting many manufacturing and business enterprises which have contributed largely to the building up of Aurora. He has taken an active part in politics as a member of the Republican party. On June 22, 1870, he was married to Miss Lena Reckinger, and they live in a modern home at 102 Downer Place, one of the handsomest streets of the city.

JOHN W. LINDEN, merchant and member of the General Assembly, Aurora, Ill., was born in Luxemburg, Germany, Jan. 26, 1859, and was brought to this country by his parents in 1862. The family settled in Aurora, and there Mr. Linden was reared to manhood and educated in the local schools. Becoming connected as an apprentice with Stolp's Woolen Mills in Aurora when only eleven years of age, during the earlier years of his business career he had charge of the carding and spinning department of the mill. Since 1885 he has been engaged in the wholesale and retail liquor trade, and for a number of years has been one of the leaders of the Democratic party in Kane County. In 1891 he was elected a member of the Aurora Board of Aldermen, and has served continuously in that body up to the present time (1904). In 1902 he was elected a member of the Forty-third General Assembly, and is still a member of that body. As Chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Committee his services to the party have been highly appreciated. In 1885 he married Miss Katherine Winkle, of Aurora.

ALEXANDER C. LITTLE, lawyer, Aurora, Ill., born in Rome, N. Y., Jan. 18, 1838, son of John and Nancy (Ray) Little, was educated in the home schools and at Antioch College, and came with his parents to Illinois in 1851, the family locating at Big Rock, Kane County. He studied medicine in Joliet and Aurora, graduating from the medical department of the University of Iowa in 1858, then engaged in medical practice until 1862, when he enlisted as a private in Company K, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was a participant in the battles of Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, Missionary Ridge, Kenesaw Mountain, the siege of Vicksburg, and of Atlanta, Resaca and Decatur, Ga., as well as in many less important engagements. At the close of the war he was mustered out as Captain, and returning to Kane County began the study of law with Hon. Charles Wheaton, of Aurora, as his preceptor. He graduated from the law department of the University of Michigan, and was admitted to the bar in 1867. In 1875 he was elected City Attorney, was re-elected in 1877, in 1874-5 was Mayor of Aurora, and for more than thirty-five years has held a high position at the Kane County bar. In 1875 he married Miss Bonnie Snow, of Aurora.

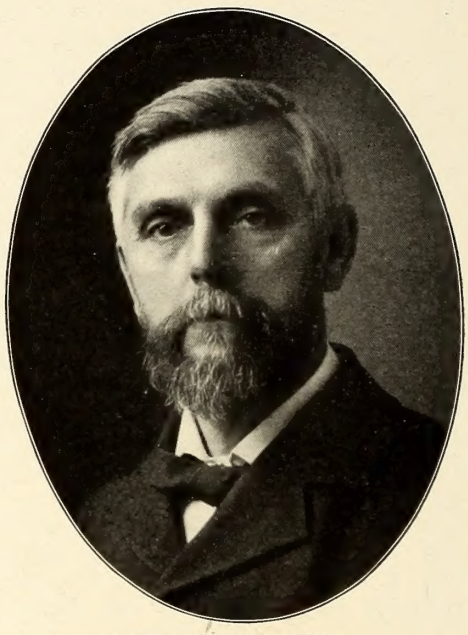
JAMES C. LONG, merchant, Geneva, Ill., was born at Surry, Me., in 1845, a son of Robert and Betsy (Carr) Long, and was brought by his parents to Illinois in 1855, receiving his education chiefly in the Geneva public schools, and beginning work early in life in his father's store. In 1862, when only seventeen years of age, he enlisted in the Sixty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and put in three months' service in the war for the Union. In 1869 he became the junior member of the firm of R. Long & Son, of Geneva, and succeeded to the business which his father had established in 1880, and with which he has been connected, as boy and man, for over forty years. Mr. Long is actively connected with the Geneva Unitarian church, of which his father was a liberal supporter. Mr. Long was married in 1889 to Miss Medora Welch, daughter of Rodney Welch, of Chicago.

ROBERT LONG (deceased), merchant, Geneva, Ill., born in Hallowell, Me., in 1803, was reared and educated in his native place. In 1828 he engaged in mercantile pursuits in Bangor, Me., where he lived for some years, when he removed to Ellsworth, in the same State, where he continued in trade until about 1853. In the latter year he received an appointment in the United States Treasury, which he filled under the administrations of Presidents Pierce and Buchanan. In 1855 his family removed to Geneva, Ill., and in 1860 Mr. Long established what is now the oldest store in that city, which he conducted until his death in 1888, in the meantime establishing a reputation as an upright merchant, and in all respects a worthy citizen. In 1838 he was married to Miss Betsy S. Carr, of Ellsworth, Me.

SILAS LONG (deceased), physician; born at Shelburne, Franklin County, Mass., in 1783, obtained his education in the East and came to Big Rock Township, Kane County, where he began practice in 1840 and became one of the most widely known pioneers. He died Oct. 27, 1857; his wife, who was Matilda Stebbins, died in 1845. Mr. and Mrs. Long reared a family of ten children. Their son, Silas O. Long, physician, was born in Shelburne, Mass., June 3, 1814; was a farmer in early life, and was the first of the family to come to Illinois. He visited Kane County in 1839 and selected the claims on which the family afterward located. After coming to Kane County he studied medicine and had a large practice for many years, succeeding his father in the profession. He died July 3, 1874. His wife was Miss Sarah Severance, who died in 1899. The second son of Dr. Long, Sr., was Edward R., born in Greenfield, Mass., Sept. 21, 1827; came with the family to Kane County in 1840 and settled on Government land, where he passed the remaining years of his life as a successful farmer and stock-raiser. Modest and retiring, he never sought public office, but aided in advancing educational interests and in the conduct of local affairs. For many years he was leader of the Baptist choir at Big Rock. He was married in 1854 to Miss Emma Dale, of Aurora.



GEORGE P. LORD, real-estate and loans, Elgin, Ill., was born in Le Roy, Genesee County, N. Y., March 26, 1819, son of William and Emily (Ely) Lord. His early boyhood passed on the farm, where he secured a public school education. He entered upon mercantile pursuits in Palmyra, N. Y., in his youth, and in 1839 went to New York City, where he was clerk for Arthur Tappen. Before coming west he was a partner in the mercantile house of Alfred Edwards & Co., of New York. Coming to Chicago in 1855 he was for ten years engaged in the grocery trade with Reynolds, Ely & Co., of that city; in 1866 became purchasing agent for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, a position he held for about a year, when he became business manager of the Elgin National Watch Company, remaining nine years during the formative period of that great corporation, which was then, as it is now, one of the great manufactories of its kind in the world, turning out in 1903 more than ten million watches. Since retiring from the Watch Company, Mr. Lord has given his time to his private business, though still officially connected with several great institutions, such as the First National Bank of Elgin, and the Illinois Iron & Bolt Company of Carpentersville, of each of which he is the President. The City of Elgin has an enduring monument of Mr. and Mrs. Lord's public spirit in Lord's Park, a sixty-acre tract, admirably adapted by nature for park purposes, which had been fitted up as a pleasure ground for the people. He is still giving it much care and attention. Mr. Lord has served the city as Mayor and the State as Trustee and Treasurer of the Illinois Hospital for the Insane, besides in the course of his long and busy life, having filled many other official positions.

CHARLES S. LOVELL.

CHARLES S. LOVELL, farmer and stock-raiser, Kaneville Ill., was born in Kaneville, Dec. 21, 1864, son of Sherman and Eliza (Elliott) Lovell. His education was secured in the public schools, with the addition of four terms at Sugar Grove High School. He was employed on the farm until 1888, when he was put in charge of the Kaneville County Line Creamery, retaining this position until 1894, when he bought a farm adjoining the town limits of Kaneville on the southwest. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Royal Neighbors. He was married Oct. 20, 1897, to Sarah Van Arsdale, and they have one daughter.

He has devoted his life to farming, and about 1893, purchased a farm a half mile west of the village of Kaneville. He was married Feb. 28, 1859, to Miss Eliza Elliott, by whom he has had four children—three daughters and one son.

EDWIN W. LOUNSBURY, D. D., clergyman, Aurora, Ill., was born Oct. 22, 1841, at Rensselaerville, N. Y., and was educated at Rochester in that State. His ordination took place in 1862, and he has held notable pastorates in Medina, N. Y., Battle Creek, Mich., twice at the First Church in Aurora, and at Canton and Dayton, Ohio. He is now Secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union for Illinois, Indiana and Michigan. The honorary degree of D. D. was conferred upon him by Dennison University (Ohio), in 1893.

JOSIAH LYKE, farmer and stock-raiser, Kaneville, Ill., was born in Avoca, Steuben County, N. Y., March 18, 1842, and was educated in the local schools. In 1871 he came to Kane County, where he began farming on a place which he bought three miles west of the village of Kaneville. Mr. Lyke is an honored veteran of the Civil War, having enlisted Aug. 25, 1862, in the One Hundred Sixty-first New York Volunteer Infantry, and served three years, two months and two days, being mustered out Oct. 27, 1865. He participated in many of the severe battles of the war, and now belongs to the Aurora Post, G. A. R. He was married Dec. 31, 1868, to Miss Caroline Gray, and six children—three sons and three daughters—have been the fruit of this union.

WILLIAM F. LYNCH, County Clerk, Elgin, Kane County, Ill., was born in Elgin, Ill., Nov. 20, 1865, where he was reared and educated in the city schools. His first experience as a business man was in the grocery trade, in which he was engaged in early manhood. In 1888 he was elected Town Collector, also served in the postoffice for twelve years, and in 1902 was chosen County Clerk of Kane County on the Republican ticket. From the first he has taken an active part in political affairs, and is regarded as one of the influential young Republicans of the County.

JAMES MAIR (deceased), merchant, Batavia, Ill., was born in Devonshire, Eng., July 3, 1835, a son of James and Ann (Snow) Mair. He came to the United States in 1857, and was engaged in the boot and shoe trade in Batavia, Ill., until the time of his death, Dec. 17, 1900. During the later years of his life he was engaged in manufacturing, and for some years was Vice-President of the Challenge Wind Mill Company. He was a Director of the First National Bank of Batavia, and for several years was a member of the Batavia Board of Aldermen, and also held other local positions. In 1860 he married Miss Susan Buckingham, also of English birth and training, who still survives, living in Batavia.

WILLIAM MAIR.

ADIN MANN (deceased), soldier and public official, was born in Orford, N. H., Oct. 14, 1816, and died in Elgin, April 2, 1903. He was educated in Meriden College, Meriden, N. H. from which he was graduated with the degree of Civil Engineer. In 1836 he came to Illinois, and established himself as the pioneer surveyor of Kane County, having his office and home at Udina, surveying lands for settlers in all parts of the county. In 1842 he was elected County Surveyor, and for forty years occupied that position continuously. From 1860 to 1862 he was Treasurer of Kane County. At the time of his death he had been a resident of Elgin for twenty years. When he died he was serving as City Engineer and as Deputy County Surveyor, and his knowledge of boundary lines and land marks was regarded as invaluable. He made many surveys in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Nebraska and Kansas, and maps of the entire States of Nebraska and Kansas were made from his surveys and notes. In 1842 he moved from Udina to Elgin, which was his home for the greater part of his life, though he lived for some years at Batavia, in Vicksburg, Miss., for a short time, and later in Kansas. In 1862 he was commissioned Captain of Company B, One Hundred Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and bore a prominent part in the organization of that regiment. He rose to the rank of Major, and was mustered out in 1865, at the end of three years of hard and dangerous service. At the end of the war he engaged in the lumber business near Vicksburg, Miss., but he could not then stem the current of local ill-will against the "wearer of the blue," and he returned to Elgin, and resumed the practice of his calling. He was a member of the Grand Army, and for many years was an interesting and conspicuous figure at the various gatherings of the veterans of the war. In 1842 Major Mann was married in Illinois to Miss Lydia P., daughter of W. F. Wright, of Orford, N. H. They had a family of six sons and two daughters, of whom four sons and two daughters are now living. Mrs. E. B. Shearman and Mrs. H. M. Armstrong reside in Kane County, and one son, Eugene, has his home in Batavia. Four of the sons served in the Union Army during the Civil War.

ALFRED J. MANN, retired merchant, Elgin, Ill., was born in the town of Java, Wyoming County, N. Y., Nov. 8, 1835, son of James and Lucy (Shearman) Mann, and coming with his parents to Kane County, Ill., when nine years of age, was reared to manhood on a farm in Burlington Township, that county. His education was secured in the local schools, and at seventeen years of age he became clerk in the store of the Hon. S. S. Mann, who was the first merchant at Burlington. In 1856 he entered into partnership with his brother, and they continued in business at that point until 1879, in the meantime extending their operations to Hampshire, where they built the first store and the first butter and cheese factory. In 1879 Alfred J. Mann removed to Elgin and became interested in a Chicago store in company with his brother, who had so long been his partner. In 1881 he practically retired from business, and has since devoted his attention to family interests. He still owns a portion of the old farm which his father purchased from the Government, and gives considerable attention to that. For many years he was a member of the Board of Supervisors from Burlington Township, and later from Elgin. He has also served on the Elgin Board of Aldermen, filling other offices as well. The settlement of estates and other like duties have occupied much of his time during these later years. Mr. Mann was married in 1858 to Miss Elsie Terwilliger, a native of Chenango County, N. Y., and daughter of Philip Terwilliger. Their children are Effie Clare and Edith May.

JAMES MANN (deceased), pioneer, Burlington Township, Kane County, was born in the town of Blanford, Hampden County, Mass., Jan. 1, 1794, son of William Mann, a veteran of the Revolution, and was reared and educated in his native State, and in Java, Wyoming County, N. Y., to which point his parents removed in 1810. In 1844 he left New York for Kane County, Ill., where he purchased 1,200 acres of Government land in Burlington Township, and soon made himself known as one of the leading farmers of that county. He continued to reside on this farm until his death, Sept. 12, 1878. His wife, Lucy Shearman, was born in Connecticut in 1798, and died Sept 24, 1870. They reared a family of five sons and four daughters, of whom three sons and one daughter were living in 1903.

SYLVESTER S. MANN (deceased), was born in North Java, Wyoming County, N. Y., May 31, 1826, son of James and Lucy (Shearman) Mann; came west with his father's family in May, 1844, locating in Burlington Township, Kane County, where his father purchased 1,200 acres of land. In 1846 Sylvester S. Mann opened a store at Burlington under the name of Mann & Brown, Mr. Mann being engaged in farming at the same time. Later the firm became Mann, Hapgood & Company, who also established the creamery at Hampshire and also the first store at that village. In 1874 he engaged in buying and selling butter and cheese, operating extensively in the line until 1883. Mr. Mann was also interested in breeding Holstein cattle and imported two large herds of this excellent stock from Holland. He took an active part in politics and served several terms in the Illinois State Legislature, meanwhile being instrumental in securing the passage of many beneficent and local measures, among them being the incorporation of the Northern State Hospital for the Insane, and locating the institution at Elgin. In 1850 he was married to Caroline Young, and they became the parents of four children, viz.: Elvina J. (Mrs. C. H. Potter), Alice, John S. and Nellie B. (Mrs. Dr. O. A. Chappell), all of whom are now living (1903). Mrs. Mann still survives and resides at Burlington.

ROBERT W. MARKLEY, physician and surgeon, Elgin, Ill., was born in Fulton County, Ohio, Jan. 26, 1872, was reared a farmer and educated at Beloit College, Beloit, Wis.; entered the medical department of the Northwestern University (Chicago) in 1894, and graduated from that institution four years later, during the last two years of this course being assistant to Dr. John E. Owens, Chief Surgeon of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Company. In 1890 he began medical practice at Huntley, McHenry County, Ill.; in 1900 he was on the medical staff of the Mexican Railway Company for several months, and since his return he has been located in Elgin. In 1901 Dr. Markley was married to Miss Myrtle Weltzein, daughter of John Weltzein, of Huntley, Ill., and they have one daughter.

FRANKLIN E. MARLEY.

FRANKLIN E. MARLEY, newspaper publisher, Batavia, Ill., born in Randolph County, N. C., son of Jacob and Louisa (Guthridge) Marley; was brought to Iowa as a child and educated in the local schools of that State and at the Normal in Valparaiso, Ind., and at Omaha, Neb. He learned the printing trade at Red Oak, Iowa, where he was first engaged in newspaper work; at a later period was on the reportorial staff of the Chicago "Inter-Ocean." He has studied both medicine and law, but the newspaper work drew him powerfully, and he has now devoted to it some twenty-two years. In 1882 he established the "Kendall County News," which he published for twelve years; after this he went to Sandwich, Ill., where he published the "Sandwich Free Press" until 1892. The latter year he established the "Batavia Herald," of which he is still editor and publisher (1903). He married Miss Effie Lincoln, of Kendall County, a lady of superior literary attainments, a talented elocutionist and Delsarte teacher.

MASON M. MARSH (deceased), Elgin, Ill., born in Delphi, N. Y., Aug. 5, 1816, was reared and educated in his native county, where he was trained for a mercantile career. In 1849 he came to Elgin, Ill., where he became connected with the old-time establishment of William C. Kimball, and soon became prominent in pioneer circles. He continued to reside in Elgin as long as he lived, his death occurring in 1881. His wife, Esther Gardner, was a native of New York. She married a second time, and is now the widow of Benjamin Cox, late of Elgin.

FANCIS M. MARSTILLER, physician and surgeon, Geneva, Ill., born at Palatine, W. Va., April 9, 1866; educated in the schools of Ohio, Michigan and Illinois; graduated from the Chicago Homœopathic Medical College in the class of 1895; located in Geneva in the fall of the latter year, and has built up a large practice in that city and the surrounding country. He was married in 1889 to Miss Ada May Fields, of Austin, Ill.

JACOB MARX, merchant and ex-Postmaster, Aurora, Ill., born in Aurora, March 19, 1857, son of Peter Marx, an early German settler, was educated in public schools, and trained as a merchant; in 1878 he engaged in the grocery trade, which has been his business to the present time, excepting four years during which he served as Postmaster of Aurora. In 1886 he erected the Marx Block, and in 1894 was appointed Postmaster by President Cleveland; has also served as a member of the Kane County Board of Supervisors and of the Aurora City Council, and for many years has been a Democratic leader in Kane County. In 1880 he married Miss Antoinette Zack, of Aurora.

CHARLES D. MARTIN (deceased), Chicago, was born in DuPage County, Ill., April 10, 1845, and reared in Geneva, where he attended the local schools, being also a student at the University of Michigan. His first business experience was had in the office of Pindar Ward, in the abstract business at Geneva. About 1868 he went to Chicago, where he was appointed Deputy Recorder by Norman T. Gassette, then

CHARLES D. MARTIN.

Recorder of Cook County. After the great fire of 1871 he was employed in the office of Handy & Company, pioneers in the abstract title business, and predecessors of the Chicago Title & Trust Company. While in this business he became known as a most excellent judge of land values, and his judicious investments in real estate brought him rich returns. About 1887 he retired from the abstract business and subsequently devoted his attention to his private affairs. His death occurred March 25, 1892. In 1884 Mr. Martin married Miss Emma L. Tripp, daughter of Rev. G. C. Tripp, of Chicago.

DAVID MARTIN, Geneva, Ill., pioneer, born in Lancaster County, Pa., April 3, 1820, son of David and Fannie (Frick) Martin, and at the age of nine years was taken by his parents to the State of New York, where they founded a town, which they named after their native town in Pennsylvania, Lancaster. The father and mother came to Illinois in 1848, and established their home in DuPage County, living to be more than ninety years old. David Martin was engaged in farming there from 1843 to 1848, after which he removed to Geneva, where he engaged in the furniture and undertaking business until 1885, when he retired from active business. He was one of the first members of the Geneva Town Council, served as City Treasurer of Geneva, and for twenty-four years he was Commissioner of Highways. From the organization of the Republican party he has been connected with it. Mr. Martin was married to Miss Julia Buck, of Lancaster, N. Y., Feb. 24, 1842. Four sons were born of this union, of whom all are now deceased. The only descendants of this family now living are two grandsons, Charles Chester and Edwin Daniel Martin. Mr. Martin died Feb. 19, 1904, Mrs. Martin still surviving him.

DAVID MASON (deceased), pioneer farmer, Dundee Township, Kane County, Ill., born in Savoy, Berkshire County, Mass., June 28, 1818, son of Edward and Mary (Pierce) Mason, was reared on a New England farm, and obtained his education in the common schools of his native State, which he attended during the winter months of each year. In 1838 he married Miss Eliza Colson, who was born in Windsor, Mass., and shortly after marriage they started for Illinois. After visiting the southern part of this State, they came to Dundee Township, Kane County, where Mr. Mason bought the claim to a tract of land about three miles west of Dundee village, receiving title to the same from the Government in 1840. Mrs. Mason died in 1891. Mr. Mason resided on the home farm sixty-three years, and in 1901, removed to Elgin and thereafter made his home with his daughter. For many years he was widely known as a sheep raiser. He was a man of kindly disposition, and a thrifty, sagacious and intelligent farmer. The old David Mason homestead is one of the land-marks in this part of Kane County. Mr. and Mrs. Mason reared a family of five children: J. Rollin and Maria H. (deceased), Mrs. Jean M. White, of Elgin; J. Leland Mason, and Mrs. Ada M. Teeple, who resides in Dundee. Mr. Mason died June 14, 1903.

J. LELAND MASON, farmer and stock-breeder, was born in Dundee Township, Kane County, Ill., June 30, 1847, son of David and Eliza (Colson) Mason, educated in the district schools and trained to farming. In 1871 he engaged in the milk business in Chicago, and for one year in a cheese factory at Cameron, Mo. Returning to Dundee in 1875, he embarked in dairy farming, in which he has since been engaged on an extensive scale. In later years he has also been largely interested in breeding Holstein-Fresian cattle, and giving special attention to fattening hogs for the Chicago market. Mr. Mason has always been interested in farmers' organizations, and keeps in touch with all that tends to improvement in practical farming. His fine stock and well-cultivated fields demonstrate what a young man, unaided, may acquire by perseverance and intelligence. J. L. Mason was married in 1870 to Jeannette Fraser, daughter of Thomas and Ann Fraser, of Rutland Township, Kane County, Ill. Beside the material success they have achieved, they have reared and educated the following named children who reside in Dundee: Edith R., Rollin E., Anna E., Irving F., Mildred M., Elizabeth A., David A., Thomas L., and Josephine J.—a family of which they may justly be proud.

JAMES O. MASON, manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., born in Fort Ann, Washington County, N. Y., Feb. 6, 1846, was reared on a farm and educated in the local schools. In 1868 he came to Aurora, and at first was clerk in a grocery store, but soon began traveling for the J. P. Fogg Seed Company, in which occupation he continued until 1874, when he and his brother O. T. bought out the Hattery Bros. steam bakery at Aurora, continuing it as the Mason Bros.' Bakery. In 1890 they sold out to the American Biscuit Company, the business being taken over seven years later by the National Biscuit Company, Mr. J. O. Mason being General Manager under both corporations until 1900. He is still a stockholder in the last named corporation. In 1895 he assisted in the formation of the Aurora Corset Company of which he is now Treasurer and a Director. He is also Vice-President of the Fox River Light, Heat and Power Company, a Director of the German-American Bank at Aurora, a member of the Kane County Board of Supervisors and Treasurer of the City of Aurora. He married in 1895 Miss Roma L., daughter of Charles A. Adams, of Aurora, and at one time of Fort Ann, N. Y.

JOHN MASON (deceased), pioneer farmer, Dundee Township, Kane County, Ill., was born in Savoy, Mass., in 1816, where he was reared and trained in the blacksmith's trade. In 1839 he came to Dundee, Ill., and for a time worked at his trade among the pioneer settlers, but very soon purchased a tract of land four miles southwest of Dundee, and about the same distance from Elgin. He received the title to this land from the Government, and he here made his home until his death, which occurred in 1876. He was widely known and highly esteemed. Mr. Mason was twice married, his first wife being Diantha Kelsey, who bore him two sons and two daughters: Mrs. Eleanor Sherman, Judson P., Mrs. Mary Beverly and Emerson (deceased). After her death he married Malinda Bradley, who survived him for several years and died in California.

JUDSON P. MASON, dairy farmer and stock-feeder, Dundee Township, Kane County, Ill., was born in the Township where he now resides, March 31, 1850, son of John and Diantha (Kelsey) Mason. His education was obtained in the public schools, and Eastman's Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. After leaving school he became connected with a cheese factory at Cameron, Mo., the first in that State. After remaining there seven years he came back to Dundee, Ill., to take up dairy farming, following the business to the present time (1903); is also quite extensively engaged in feeding cattle and hogs. Mr. Mason is a member of the Farmers' Institute and has been among the most active in promoting its interests; is also a Director of the Farmers' Institute for the Eleventh Congressional District. In 1872 he was married to Miss Annie S. Fraser, daughter of Thomas and Anne Fraser, pioneer settlers of Rutland, Kane County, Ill., who emigrated from Livingston County, N. Y., in 1839. Mr. and Mrs. Mason's family consists of five sons and one daughter: John T., Frank S., Richard, Raymond, Mark J. and Mary Edna.

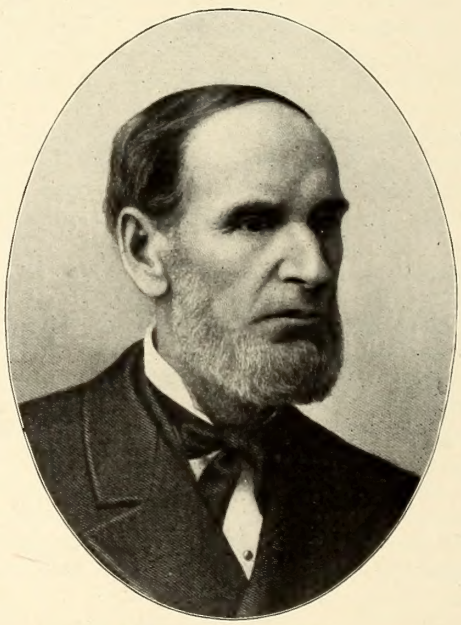
ORVIN T. MASON, retired merchant and manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., was born at Fort Ann, N. Y., Aug. 29, 1851, and was there reared and educated, learning the wagon-makers' trade in his father's manufactory. In 1872 he came west and connected himself with the wholesale seed house of J. P. Fogg & Son, traveling in their interest some four years. In 1875, in company with his brother, J. O. Mason, he engaged in the retail baking business, which they finally developed into a wholesale trade, and in 1891 sold out to the American Biscuit Company. With the Aurora branch of this large enterprise Mr. Mason remained in association, as he did with its successor, the National Biscuit Company, until 1901, when he retired from active business. He is still a stockholder in the National Biscuit Company, and is closely connected with the banking interests of Aurora, as a stockholder and Director of the Aurora National Bank, and stockholder in other banks. Mr. Mason was married in 1881 to Miss Georgia Ingersoll, of Madison, Ohio, a relative of Robert G. Ingersoll, and reared near the old church where Mr. Ingersoll's father used to preach.

EDWARD C. MASTERS, manufacturer, Carpentersville, Kane County, was born in Carpentersville, Ill., Nov. 5, 1864, son of Thomas Masters, who was born in England and came to this country in the early '50s. For three years he had his home at Brewster, N. Y., and established himself in Carpentersville about 1856, where he died in 1890. Edward C. Masters grew to manhood in Carpentersville, where he secured his education in the public schools, and was trained to a mercantile life. In 1887 he became connected with the Star Manufacturing Company as office man and bookkeeper, later became interested in the Star Works, and since June, 1896, has been Secretary of the corporation, and a member of the Board of Directors. For several years he was clerk of the village of Carpentersville, has been President of the Village Trustees, and is now President of the Carpentersville Literary and Library Association. He is a member of the Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen and the Court of Honor. In 1888 he married Miss Fannie Gorom, daughter of David and Lucia Gorom, of Carpentersville.

ADELBERT MATHEWSON, assistant cashier Kane County Bank, Elburn, Ill., born at Campton, Ill., August 19, 1857; educated in the public schools; began his business career as a clerk in a drug and grocery store at Elburn, and engaged in the same business as a partner with J. C. F. Clark in 1878; purchased an interest in the Kane County Bank in 1895, and has since served as assistant cashier of that institution. He was married Oct. 24, 1883, to DeEtte Warren.

LEMUEL McALPINE (deceased), physician, Aurora, Ill., born at Winsted, Conn., in 1808; read medicine in his native State and practiced in New York State before coming to Illinois; came to Illinois in 1853, locating on a farm in DeKalb County, and afterwards gave his attention to agricultural pursuits until 1869 when he removed to Aurora, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying May 24, 1894. His wife, who was Miss Sarah Price before her marriage, died in 1892. Their surviving children are: Hulburt, Thomas, William and Mrs. Edwin Tenny.



DAVID S. McBRIDE, real-estate operator, Elgin, Ill., born in County Monaghan, Ireland, March 2, 1848, son of Thomas and Rebecca (Robinson) McBride, was educated at Elgin Academy, joined his father in grain and warehouse business, and later was associated with his brother Thomas in the firm of McBride Bros., engaged in the coal and building material trade. In 1891 he sold his interest in this business, and has since confined his attention mainly to real estate. He and his brother Thomas built the McBride Block, long the leading business block of the city, and it is still in possession of the family.

THOMAS McBRIDE (deceased), merchant, Elgin, Ill., born in County Monaghan, Ireland, in 1808, was educated and prepared for a mercantile life in his native land; came to the United States in 1850, with the intention of making his home as far west as the railroads would carry him. This located him at Elgin, at that time the terminus of the Chicago & Galena Union Railroad. His first business was selling osage orange hedge plants to farmers, at that timely widely used for hedges; later bought grain and other farm produce very extensively for the Chicago markets, and still later became a dealer in coal and lumber, and operated a large farm, becoming one of the early dairymen and shippers of milk to Chicago. His wife, Rebecca (Robinson) McBride, was born in County Tyrone, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and (1903) is still living. Mr. McBride died in 1888.

ALEXANDER McCARNACK (deceased), pioneer settler, born in Newton Stewart, Wigtonshire, Scotland, Nov. 11, 1811; obtained a good education in the public schools, and was trained to agricultural pursuits on a Scotch sheep farm; came with his father's family to the United States in 1838, locating with them in Rutland Township, Kane County. Mr. McCarnack was an intelligent and successful farmer, who passed all the years of his mature life in Kane County. He was at various times a member of the Kane County Board of Supervisors and held other local offices. He died Feb. 1, 1887. His wife, whose maiden name was Margaret E. Eakin, was born in Londonderry, Ireland.

EDWIN A. McCARNACK, physician and surgeon, Elgin, Ill., born in Rutland Township, Kane County, Feb. 8, 1854; educated in the public schools and Elgin Academy; graduated from Bennett Medical College in 1881, and from the medical department of the University of Illinois in 1889; took a post-graduate course at the New York Polyclinic in 1890; located in Elgin in the latter year, where he has built up an extensive practice. He was married in 1883 to Miss Rhoda E. Harrison, daughter of William R. Harrison, of Bethlehem, Conn.

JOSEPH McCARTY (deceased), Aurora, pioneer, was born in Morristown, N. J., in 1808, son of Charles and Mary (Scudder) McCarty, and was reared in the State of New York, his parents having located on a farm near Elmira, while he was still a small boy. His education was secured in the public schools, and he was trained to a farming career. In the fall of 1833 he started for Illinois, and after a tedious and eventful journey, he arrived in Kane County the following spring, where he filed a claim on a tract of land containing about three hundred acres on the Fox River. In company with his brother, Samuel McCarty, who had soon followed him to the West, he founded the city of Aurora in 1835. Active in promoting the growth of the town, he displayed those business qualities that make for large success, and had promise of a brilliant future. However, all this went for naught, as his health failed in a short time, and he passed away in Aurora in 1839.

SAMUEL McCARTY.

SAMUEL McCARTY (deceased), pioneer, Aurora, was born in Morristown, N. J., March 9, 1810, son of Charles and Mary (Scudder) McCarty, and when two years old was taken by them to a farm near Elmira, N. Y. where he was reared and educated in the public schools. He learned the trade of millwright, and in 1834 came to the West to join his older brother, who had preceded him a few months, and had taken up a land claim of 300 acres on which the city of Aurora was afterward located. His journey was made via the Erie Canal to Buffalo, by lake and river to Detroit, and by stage the rest of the way. Prior to his arrival his brother had secured for him a squatter's claim of 400 acres near his own, for which he had paid $60. When Mr. McCarty arrived, he found seven people on the site of the present city. A half-interest in his brother's claim was purchased by him, and in the fall of 1836 they surveyed and laid out the town of Aurora. The same year they built the first bridge across the east channel of the Fox River, and when it had to be replaced in 1838 they were the principal contributors to its rebuilding. In 1836 they erected the first grist-mill in Aurora, and they also built the first saw-mill in Big Rock Township. When the State Line Road was located from Chicago to Galena in 1836, Samuel McCarty secured the opening of an intersecting road that reached Aurora, making close stage connections also with Naperville. In 1838 the death of the elder McCarty put Samuel McCarty at the head of the McCarty interests in Aurora, and for many years thereafter he was the leading property owner and the dominant spirit in the making of the city. It is worthy of note that during these years Mr. McCarty always refused to sell land to any man intending to engage in the sale of intoxicating liquor, and it was long before the traffic secured a foot-hold in the city. He gave the land on which is located the First Methodist church, and also the land on which the Congregational church formerly stood. Mr. McCarty was a member of the Methodist church, in which he held many official positions, and was a most active worker. For many years he was President of the Board of Trustees of Jennings Seminary, and he gave to the city Lincoln Park. His earlier years were devoted largely to the milling business, but later his real-estate interests in Aurora and Chicago became so extensive as to demand all his attention. His was the first brick residence erected in Kane County, and he built the first substantial frame building in Aurora. The Tremont Hotel, as well as other pioneer structures, were built by him. He died March 30, 1889, mourned by the public as the founder of the city of Aurora, and as a citizen most active in promoting its welfare. Mr. McCarty was married in 1837 to Miss Phoebe Stolp, of New York, who died in 1839. In 1847 he married Miss Emily Wheeler, of Chicago, who died in 1850. Three years later he married Mrs. Emily (Swayze) Davis, of Chicago, who survives him, and still lives in the old homestead at Aurora. The only surviving children of Mr. McCarty were born of his last marriage. They are: Mrs. Eva Dent Johnson, of Aurora; Sidney G., of Oakland, Cal., and Charles S., of Chicago. Besides Mrs. McCarty, the only representatives of this pioneer family now living in Aurora are Mrs. Johnson and her children, Helen M., Edwin N., and Lucy Gladys. Robert and Kenneth are sons of Sidney McCarty, the California representative of the family. Mrs. McCarty has a daughter born of her first marriage, now Mrs. Charles Roe, of Evanston. Her two daughters are Mrs. A. C. McCord, of Chicago and Mrs. B. W. Lord, of Burnside, Ky. Her two sons are Edgar C. and Samuel D. Roe, both of Evanston, Ill.

GEORGE McCOLLUM (deceased), manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., born at Montrose, Penn., in 1804, came to Kane County, Ill., in 1836, locating first at Aurora, where he engaged in blacksmithing and later established a wagon and carriage manufactory, which he operated during his active business career and which is still operated by his sons, George S. and Orlando J. McCollum. Mr. McCollum died in 1893.

JOHN McCOY, implement dealer and farmer, St. Charles, Ill., born in Limerick, Ireland, July 8, 1848, son of John and Bridget (O'Brien) McCoy, natives of the same noted Irish city. The family came to America in 1857, and after spending a few weeks in Chicago, in June of that year went to St. Charles, Kane County. In 1867 the elder McCoy bought a farm in the north part of the township, where he spent the remainder of his life. John McCoy, Jr., lived with his parents working the farm as long as they lived, when it fell to him by inheritance. He was actively engaged in farm work until 1900, when having leased his land he started in the agricultural implement trade in St. Charles, and in this business is still actively engaged. In politics he is independent. In May, 1864, although then only seventeen years of age, Mr. McCoy enlisted in Company K, One Hundred Forty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry and bore arms until his time of service expired. His parents were both long-lived, his father dying April 26, 1899, at the age of eighty-seven, and his mother, Dec. 29, 1897, at the age of eighty-four.

ELLSWORTH W. McCULLOUGH, manufacturer, Batavia, Ill., born at Brockville, Canada, June 28, 1864; in 1882 he became connected with the wagon manufacturing establishment of Henry Weber in Chicago, retaining this connection until 1886, when he became a stock-holder and Secretary of the Newton Wagon Company at Batavia; has since been identified with the manufacturing interests of Batavia, and also to some extent with the conduct of municipal affairs. He was married in 1889 to Miss Clara J. Moore, daughter of William Moore, of Chicago.

JAMES McGOUGH, farmer, Burlington Township, Kane County, Ill., born in Dublin, Ireland, about 1835; came to Canada in 1851 removing to Kane County, Ill., the following year. Mr. McGough lived in DeKalb County for some time, where he was engaged in the manufacture of brick, but since 1870 has been interested in dairy farming in Burlington Township, and is still actively engaged in that industry. He has four sons and one daughter who reside in Burlington Township, viz.: Henry, John, Fred, Harry and Ida (Mrs. Ward).

ARDSLEY H. McLAUGHLIN, physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., was born at Hinsdale, Kans., Sept. 15, 1868; educated in the public schools of Illinois and at Kewanee Academy; studied medicine at the Eclectic Medical Institute at Cincinnati, Ohio, graduating from that institution in the class of 1890. In the latter year he began practice in Aurora, Ill., and has since gained prominence in the profession in that city. Dr. McLaughlin was married in 1892 to Miss Carrie L. Lincoln, daughter of D. B. Lincoln, of Aurora.

JOEL McKEE (deceased), pioneer settler, Batavia, Ill., born in Belfast, Ireland, in 1807; came to the United States as a boy and grew to manhood in Albany, N. Y.; removed to Kane County, Ill., in 1834, locating on a section of land at Batavia, where he engaged in farming; later purchased other tracts of land and became one of the largest land owners in the county, much of the present city of Batavia being built on land originally owned by him; also operated one of the pioneer flouring-mills of Batavia, besides being interested in paper and saw-mills. He was married in Albany, N. Y., to Jane Risk. Mr. McKee died in Batavia in 1873.

JOHN McKEE (deceased), pioneer settler, Batavia, Ill., born in Belfast, Ireland, and came to New York State with his elder brother; removed to Kane County in the '30s and became the owner of lands, a portion of which he subdivided into early additions to the original town of Batavia. He was one of the first, if not the first station agents at Batavia on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, the first railroad built to Batavia. He lived a bachelor and died in 1859.

DANIEL McKELLAR (deceased), pioneer settler, Plato, Ill., was born in Argyleshire, Scotland, June 12, 1813, died March 16, 1889. In 1836 he came to New York, and ten years later settled in Elgin, Ill. Mr. McKellar came to Plato Corners in 1853, and engaged in farming, which he followed until his death. He was married to Miss Emily Sovereign in 1850, and their surviving children are as follows: Sarah, who is Mrs. John Sherwood; John; Mary, Mrs. Thomas Dadswell; Anna B., Mrs. Robert Shedden; Ruby, Mrs. Arthur J. Durand; Richard H. and James G.

JOHN McKELLAR, County Clerk, Kane County, residence, Plato, was born in Plato, Ill., Jan. 11, 1857; was educated in the public schools; has spent his life chiefly as a farmer, at the same time dealing extensively in cattle. Politically Mr. McKellar is a Republican, and was elected County Clerk in 1898 serving four years. He is a member of the Republican County Committee, on which he has served since 1890. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias.

JAMES T. McMASTER (deceased), contractor, Batavia, Ill., born in Mariaville, Schenectady County, N. Y., April 28, 1831, grew up in his native locality, and learned the carpenter's trade. He came to Batavia, Ill., in 1860, and the following year enlisted in the Union army, serving three years in the One Hundred Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. After the war he returned to Batavia, and was engaged in contracting and building during his entire business life. He was appointed Postmaster of Batavia by President Harrison, and held that position until his death, May 25, 1896. He had also held various municipal offices. Mr. McMaster was married in 1853 to Miss Kaness Gibson, of Utica, N. Y.

FRANCIS M. McNAIR, Sugar Grove, physician and surgeon, is a native of Mauston, Wis., where he was born June 14, 1860, son of Dr. Robert McNair, whose professional career is sketched in this volume. The son was reared to manhood in Maple Park, Ill., where he secured his education in the public schools, and began the study of medicine with his father. He was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Keokuk, Iowa, in 1893, and at once opened an office for professional labor at Sugar Grove, where he has built up what is probably the largest country practice in Kane County. In 1892 he took a course of lectures at the Post-Graduate Medical College in Chicago, and is regarded as highly fitted for his calling. The Doctor gives special attention to surgery, and has attained more than local distinction in that branch of his calling. He contributes to medical journals as the spirit moves, and is a popular member of the State Medical Society and the Fox River Valley Medical Association. In 1890 he married Miss Nina Inez Vandeventer, of Versailles, Ill. Their children are Francis and Donald McNair.

FRED G. McNAIR, farmer, Blackberry Township, Kane County; born in the township where he now resides, Nov. 15, 1858; educated in the district schools; remained on his father's homestead until thirty years of age, when he began farming for himself, and has since been engaged in dairy farming and stock-raising; married on March 16, 1897, Carrie E. Gramley.

HARVEY McNAIR, farmer and merchant, Batavia, Ill.; born in Pennsylvania in 1829; came to Illinois in early manhood and settled on a farm in Kaneville Township, Kane County; later engaged in the mercantile business in Elburn and still later in the drug trade at Batavia. He died in Batavia in 1893.

OLIVER P. McNAIR, physician, Batavia, Ill., born in Maple Park, Kane County, Ill., Nov. 14, 1866, son of Dr. Robert and Mary (Larkin) McNair, received his academic education at the Maple Park high school, read medicine under the preceptorship of his father, and graduated from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1892. He has since taken post-graduate courses at the Chicago Clinical School and the Post-Graduate Medical School of Chicago. He began practice at Maple Park, Ill., but in 1893 removed to Batavia, where he has since built up a successful practice. While his practice has been of a general character, he has given special attention to surgery and bacteriological work, and his post-graduate work has been largely along these lines. He was married in 1892 to Miss Blanche Minium, daughter of George Minium, of Maple Park, and their only child, Mary, was born Nov. 3, 1896.

ROBERT McNAIR (deceased), physician, was born in Venango, Crawford County, Penn., Nov. 27, 1814, son of David McNair, who came to this country from the North of Ireland and came of distinguished Scotch ancestry. The elder McNair served under General W. H. Harrison on the frontier in the War of 1812. The subject of this sketch grew up in his native State and educated himself mainly by his own efforts. He studied medicine in Buffalo and began practicing his profession at Venango. From there he came west and for a few years practiced in Wisconsin, but later located in Maple Park, Kane County, Ill., where he continued his professional labors until a few years before his death, which occurred in Batavia, Ill., Jan. 19, 1901. He was married in 1844 to Miss Mary A. Lakin, who died in 1876.

SAMUEL McNAIR (deceased) was born at Venango, Crawford County, Penn., Feb. 8, 1823, and died in Kalamazoo, Mich., June 30, 1898. He was the son of David McNair, and a brother of Dr. Robert McNair, mentioned elsewhere in this volume; came west in 1844 and began the study of medicine in 1850, receiving his degree of medicine from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1859. For many years he was one of the leading physicians of the northern part of Kane County, his practice extending also into De Kalb County. His home was first at Kaneville, and later at Elburn, until he retired from practice and went to live with his son at Kalamazoo, Mich.

THOMAS McNAIR (deceased), farmer, born in Erie County, Penn., March 6, 1817; came to Illinois in 1837, locating in Kane County, where he took up a claim of government land on which he resided until his death, which occurred May 5, 1891. He was married on March 8, 1846, to Sarah Cochran.

JOHN McNEIL, merchant, Elgin, Ill., born at Airdrie (near Glasgow), Scotland, May 22, 1839, and came with his mother to the United States in 1848, locating with the family on a farm in Dundee Township, Kane County. He obtained his education chiefly at the Elgin Academy, and in boyhood was trained to farming. In 1862 he engaged in merchandising in Elgin as junior member of the the firm of Todd & McNeil, and later became a member of the firm of M. &. J. McNeil, dealers in dry goods and groceries. In 1872, after the Chicago fire, the brothers McNeil formed a partnership with Charles Higgins and founded the wholesale grocery business of the McNeil & Higgins Company, one of the oldest wholesale grocery establishments in Chicago. Mr. McNeil has resided in Elgin since 1862 with the exception of three years spent in Chicago. He has been a Director of the Home Savings Bank of Elgin since its organization, and a Director of the Home National Bank for many years; is also largely interested in the West Elgin Improvement Company. Mr. McNeil was married in 1864 to Miss Janet Crichton, daughter of Robert Crichton, a pioneer settler of Dundee Township. Mr. and Mrs. McNeil are the parents of four children, viz.: John L., Walter W. and Howard C. (all graduates of Harvard College and now associated with their father in business) and an only daughter, Miss Maude McNeil, educated at Ogantz Seminary, Philadelphia.

MALCOLM McNEIL, merchant, Chicago, was born near Glasgow, Scotland, Sept. 12, 1832, and educated in the home schools; came to the United States in 1848, and with his mother and family, established a home three and a half miles from Dundee, in the township of that name in Kane County. In 1858 he engaged in the retail grocery trade in Elgin, but later became a member of the wholesale firm of M. & J. McNeil, in which his brother John was junior partner. In 1872 Mr. McNeil removed to Chicago and founded the McNeil & Higgins wholesale grocery house, one of the largest in the West. Mr. McNeil has long given his personal attention to the business, having been President of the company since its beginning. For many years, including the period of its most successful operations, he was President of the Chemical National Bank of Chicago, and lately has managed several extensive farms, one being his own beautiful country home three miles northwest of Elgin. He has frequently revisited his old home in Scotland and is an extensive traveler in Europe. In 1859 Mr. McNeil married Miss Catherine Dempster, daughter of Alexander Dempster, a pioneer settler of Dundee. Mrs. McNeil died in 1870, and the following year Mr. McNeil married Miss Orel Martin, of Wayne, Ill. His sons, Gordon and Marvin, are associated with him in business in Chicago.

CHARLES I. McNETT, lawyer, Aurora, Ill.; born in DeKalb County, Ill., Jan. 10, 1860; read law under the preceptorship of E. B. Snow; admitted to the bar in 1882; began practicing law in Aurora in 1883, and has since been actively engaged in professional work in that city; has served as City Attorney of Aurora, and in 1893 was appointed Master in Chancery for the Circuit Court of Kane County by Judge Henry B. Willis, and has since filled that position. He was married in 1889 to Miss Clara Salem, of Aurora.

CHARLES B. MEAD, publisher, Geneva, Ill., born in Beloit, Wis., Aug. 17, 1856; when seven years old went with his parents to Iowa, settling at New Oregon, where he learned the printer's trade in the office of the Cresco "Plain-Dealer." In 1881 he established the "Journal" at Waterloo, Wis., and nine years later, the "Daily Citizen," at Beloit. In June, 1891, Mr. Mead came to Geneva, bought the "Geneva Republican," which he has since conducted as a tri-weekly publication. He is Coroner of Kane County, and President of the District Republican Editorial Association. At Cresco, Iowa, in 1881, he was married to Miss Anna Bungard, and they have three sons: Cadwell P., Ernest J. and Leonard C., all living at home.

JULIA MEIKLEJOHN, physician, Elgin, Ill., a native of Fond du Lac, Wis., was born in 1867, the daughter of John Meiklejohn. Her academic education was obtained in the Merrill Institute at Fond du Lac, Wis., and in the State Normal School at Oshkosh, Wis. For four years she taught school, in the meantime reading medicine, and graduated from the Women's Medical Department of the Northwestern University, at Chicago, in 1895. For the ensuing six months she was interne at the Women and Children's Hospital in Chicago, and in 1896 came to Elgin, where she established herself and has since remained, taking high rank in the medical circles of the city. In 1902 she took a post-graduate course in the medical department of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md., and belongs to the Fox River Valley Medical Association, and the Physicians' Club of Elgin.

EDWIN MEREDITH, retired hardware merchant, Batavia, Ill., born in Montgomeryshire, Wales, in 1840, was brought by his parents to this country in 1843, but was returned to his native land the following year, and there remained until he reached the age of seventeen years. His education was secured in the schools of his native land and in Clark's Seminary, at Aurora. In his early manhood he was engaged in farming, and spent two years in the lumber business in California. In 1869 he engaged in company with his brother, Thomas Meredith, in the hardware trade at Batavia, continuing in this business until his retirement from active mercantile life in 1892. Mr. Meredith was one of the founders of the First National Bank of Batavia, and was a member of its first Board of Directors. He has been much interested in several manufacturing enterprises of Aurora, and has led an honorable and useful career. In 1874 he was married to Miss Emma L. Wheeler, of Batavia. Mr. Meredith has twice revisited his native land since his first return as a boy.

EDWIN K. MEREDITH, electrician, Batavia, Ill., born in Batavia, May 24, 1860, son of Thomas and Harriet (Kemp) Meredith, received his education in the Batavia public schools, and early turned his attention to engineering and electricity. In 1889 he was appointed Superintendent of the Electric Light and Water Plants of Batavia, and has held that position for fourteen years. In 1903 he became Superintendent of Motive Power for the Batavia Supply Company. He has been the inventor of various mechanical and electrical devices of great value. In 1887 he married Miss Mary Anderson, of Batavia.

GEORGE MEREDITH (deceased), merchant, Aurora, Ill., was born in Montgomeryshire, Wales, in 1842, and died at Boulder, Colo., July 20, 1898. He was one of six sons born to Thomas Meredith, Sr. (whose sketch appears elsewhere in this connection), and was reared to manhood on his father's farm, receiving an academic education. In early manhood he began his mercantile career as senior member of the firm of Meredith & Morgan. This firm had a history of nearly forty years, and its immediate successors are still in the clothing trade. Mr. Meredith was one of the organizers of the Merchants' National Bank, and served as one of its Directors until his death. He was one of the builders of the Aurora cotton-mills, and in his later years was President of the company; was also a Director of the Aurora Bleaching and Dye-Works, and was one of the principal founders of this industry. Mr. Meredith was a public-spirited man, served many terms as a member of the Aurora Board of Aldermen and was chosen Mayor of the city in 1887. During his administration he won the name of "Father of the City Water Works," this important enterprise being put through very largely by his persistent efforts. His later years were largely spent in traveling, his health being very poor and a change of climate being thought beneficial.

JAMES MEREDITH, farmer and stock-dealer, Kaneville Township, was born Sept. 6, 1853, in Montgomeryshire, Wales; received his education in England, and came to the United States in 1871. For a time he was uncertain where to locate, and spent several years in Maryland, Michigan and North Carolina. In 1874 he located in Kane County, Ill., and four years later bought a farm in Kaneville Township, where he lives, and handles real-estate in addition to his other business, as noted above; has also served as Assessor for three terms. Fraternally he is associated with the Masonic Order and the Modern Woodmen of America. His marriage to Miss Ella L. Osborn occurred April 24, 1878. She is the daughter of George L. and Orinda (Bunker) Osborn, and of her six children, five are now living.

JOHN MEREDITH (retired), Aurora, Ill., was born in Montgomeryshire, Wales, Aug. 24, 1838, son of Thomas Meredith, Sr., who came to the United States in 1843, and the same year settled in Big Rock Township, Kane County, Ill. John Meredith was reared on his father's farm, educated in the local schools, and was a student at Clark's Seminary, Aurora, the year of its opening, the principal at that time being Frank P. Crandon, now General Land Agent of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company. After leaving school Mr. Meredith was engaged in the construction of the Chicago & Iowa branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, and for fifteen years was an engineer on that line. After his retirement from railroad work he was employed for two years as Superintendent of the street railway lines of Aurora, and since then has been engaged in the real-estate and insurance business in that city, for two years filling the position of claim agent for the Elgin, Aurora and Southern Traction Company. Mr. Meredith established his home in Aurora in 1869, which he has maintained here to the present time. The Meredith flat building, one of the handsomest apartment houses in Aurora, was constructed by him. For two terms he officiated as a member of the Aurora City Council, and for many years he has been a member of the Aurora East Side School Board. In 1861 he was married to Miss Eliza Rhodes, daughter of Joshua Rhodes, one of the first settlers of Big Rock Township, Kane County.

THOMAS MEREDITH, SR. (deceased), pioneer, Aurora, Ill.; born in 1812 in Montgomeryshire, Wales, where he was reared, educated and married, his wife being Miss Sarah Thomas. In 1843 he came to Illinois, locating in Kane County, where he purchased several thousand acres of land. Much of this land he sold to desirable parties, and soon surrounded his home with fine neighbors, putting Big Rock Township in the front as an advanced and progressive community. For some thirty years he carried on extensive farming operations, and was widely known as a man of character and ability. His death occurred suddenly at Manatee, Fla., in 1882. Mr. Meredith was known in Wales as a strong protestant against the tithing system of that country, and he did much to start a sentiment that has since assumed large proportions. The title to some of the lands which he purchased in his native country dated back to William the Conqueror. In Illinois he became associated with the anti-slavery movement, and bore himself stoutly in defense of human rights. For many years he was a warm personal friend of the Hon. John Wentworth, of Chicago, and a regular contributor to his paper, the "Chicago Democrat." Although deeply interested in politics, he steadfastly refused to accept any office.

THOMAS MEREDITH (deceased), merchant, Batavia, Ill.; born at the "Park," Montgomeryshire, North Wales, May 24, 1835; came with his parents to Illinois in 1843. The father settled in Big Rock Township, Kane County, where he acquired a large tract of land. The son grew to manhood on the farm, receiving his education at the Aurora Seminary and the Batavia Institute. After leaving the Institute he taught school in Batavia for a year, and then engaged in the hardware trade in the same city until 1879, when he disposed of his goods to his brother. That year he was elected County Clerk of Kane County, a position he held two terms. During his earlier life he had been called to several local positions, and took an active part in politics and public affairs. He was one of the earliest and stoutest friends of the present United States Senator, A. J. Hopkins, and did much to further his aspirations. During the Civil War he served one year in the regimental band of the Forty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and in after years was associated with veteran organizations in Batavia and Chicago. At the time of his death, Feb. 28, 1888, he was Master of Batavia Lodge, No. 404, A. F. & A. M., and had attained the Thirty-second Degree in Masonry. He was married March 1, 1857, to Miss Harriet M. Kemp, daughter of Milo M. and Julia (Root) Kemp, her parents being among the older settlers of Batavia, where they settled in the fall of 1837.

WYNN MEREDITH, electrical engineer, San Francisco, Cal., was born in Big Rock Township, Kane County, Ill., March 12, 1864, the youngest son of Thomas Meredith, Sr., and acquired his education in the public schools of his native county and at the University of Illinois. After leaving the University, in company with Edward Frazier, he installed the first commercial incandescent electric-lighting plant in Aurora, and was the first electrician of the Aurora Street Railway Company, after its electrical equipment in 1890. Two years later he was called to Chicago to take the position of Assistant Superintendent of Electricity at the World's Fair, and when it closed was appointed Superintendent of Electricity at the San Francisco Mid-Winter Fair. Since then he has resided in San Francisco, and has superintended the construction of seven great plants for the transmission of electric power generated by water power. The most famous of these—probably also the most noted of the world—is the Yuba River plant, which carries electricity to San Francisco two hundred miles away. Mr. Meredith was engaged in 1903 in equipping a plant costing $2,000,000, at Vancouver, B. C. He is the inventor of several valuable electrical appliances, and is a man of much note in the engineering world. His wife was Miss Marie Haeni, of Aurora, before her marriage.

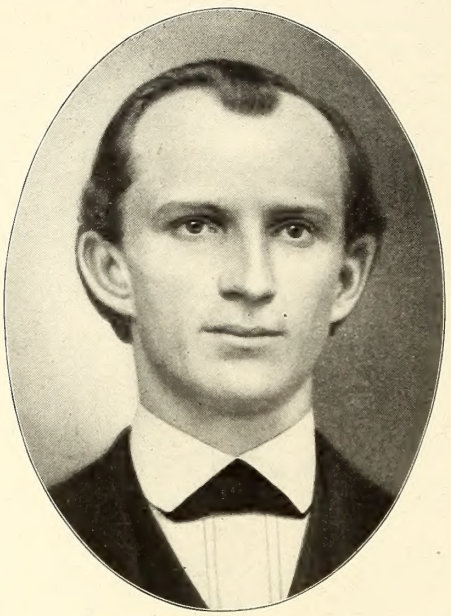
EDWARD MERRILL, farmer, Batavia Township, Kane County; born in Cambridgeshire, England, May 2, 1861; reared and educated in his native country, and was trained to farming; came to Kane County, Ill., in 1881, locating near Batavia, where he has since been successfully engaged in dairy farming. He was married in 1883 to Miss Navern Kirchen, of Cambridgeshire, England.

FRANK W. MERRILL.



FRANK W. MERRILL, farmer and stock-raiser, Kaneville, Kane County, born Feb. 28, 1853, in Grafton County, N. H., son of Thomas W. and Harriet T. Merrill, came with his parents to Kane County, where he was educated in the public schools. He began farming when a young man, and added to it a creamery business on the death of his brother in 1890. The creamery he sold in 1891. He is also interested as President and Director in the Elburn Coal and Lumber Company. He is a Republican, and has been School Director for the last six years. Religiously he is associated with the Baptist church, of which he has long been a faithful and devoted member. Mr. Merrill was married March 20, 1882, to Addie J. Lovell, daughter of Sherman and Eliza (Elliot) Lovell. To this marriage have come a son and a daughter. Mr. Merrill has served four years as a member of the Farmers' National Congress, and having been appointed to a four years' membership is now entitled to life membership.

THOMAS W. MERRILL.

THOMAS W. MERRILL (deceased), formerly of Kaneville, Ill., was born in 1825, in Thornton, Grafton County, N. H., and came to Kane County, Ill., at an early day, where, during his lifetime, he was a man of more than local importance. For seven years he was a School Director, and also Township Trustee for a number of years. In 1848 he married Harriet Thornton, who was a daughter of W. S. and M. (Walker) Thornton. They came to Kane County in 1854. They had a family of two sons and four daughters, of whom one boy and two girls are now dead. Mrs. Merrill's father, William S. Thornton, was grandson of Matthew Thornton, who was one of the signers of the "Declaration of Independence" in 1776. Mr. Merrill died Jan. 9, 1887, and his widow, July 12, 1893.

CHARLES J. METZNER.

CHARLES J. METZNER (deceased), lawyer, Aurora, Ill., was born in 1834, in Dresden, Germany, where he grew to manhood and received a college education. While still a young man he came to the United States, and for a time lived in Erie, Penn., but accompanied the family to Wisconsin, where he learned a trade. When he settled in Aurora, it was with the intention of engaging in manufacturing, and he gave his attention to manual labor until he met with an accident that confined him to his room for several months. After his recovery he read law with Judge B. F. Parks, and was admitted to the bar in Aurora. For some time Judge Parks and Mr. Metzner were associated together in their practice, but after that, except for a short time, Mr. Metzner was alone in his practice for the rest of his life. For eight years he was State's Attorney, but with this exception held no official position, preferring to devote his entire time to his professional labors. He died in 1876, at the age of forty-two years, recognized alike by his contemporaries at the bar and the general public as one of the leading lawyers in this part of the State. An ardent Republican, he took an active part in various campaigns, speaking in both English and German. In the Presidential campaign of 1872 he made nearly one hundred speeches in nine different States. In 1861 he married Miss Susan Pinney, daughter of Columbus Pinney, a pioneer settler of Aurora. Their children are Carl E. and Arthur W., of Chicago, and Mrs. William H. Holmes, of Aurora.

ALBERT W. MIGHELL (deceased), son of Ezekiel and Lucinda (Todd) Mighell, was born at Dryden, Tompkins County, N. Y., July 30, 1832, and came with his parents to Illinois in early childhood and grew to manhood in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County. The environments of his youth were those of the pioneers, and his education was obtained in the old-time country schools. He engaged in farming in early manhood, and followed that occupation until 1870, when he removed to Aurora, where he passed the remainder of his life. During the later years of his life he was not engaged in business other than the care of his estate. He died May 23, 1896. In 1863 he married Ellen Curry, daughter of Thomas Curry, who settled in Sugar Grove Township in 1853. Mrs. Mighell was born at Peekskill, N. Y., and lived there until she was fifteen years of age. She survives her husband and still resides in Aurora. Their living children are: Ida, of Chicago; Lee, of Aurora; Wynn, of Sugar Grove, and Jessie, of Aurora. The eldest of the children, Mrs. Olive (Mighell) Powers, wife of Rev. P. W. Powers, of Elburn, died in 1899.

EZEKIEL MIGHELL (deceased), pioneer settler; born in Rutland County, Vt., Dec. 24, 1799; reared on a farm in his native State, and followed agricultural pursuits in that locality until about 1831, when he removed to Tompkins County, N. Y., where he resided until 1837; came to Illinois in the latter year, making the entire trip—except from Buffalo to Detroit—by wagon. He first settled near the site of Plano, Ill., and a year later removed to Sugar Grove Township, Kane County. This was before the public lands came into market, but Mr. Mighell purchased a land claim and later acquired title from the Government. He was one of the first to bring lands under cultivation in this region, and became a large land owner and a remarkably successful agriculturist. He was a pioneer of excellent character, carrying great influence among his contemporaries; his fairness, good judgment and right-mindedness often causing him to be selected as an arbitrator in settling differences which arose between those living in the community. In the early stages of the slavery controversy he took an uncompromising stand in favor of its abolishment, and was long known as one of three abolitionists in Sugar Grove Township. About 1870 he removed to Aurora, where he died in 1884. His wife was Lucinda Todd before her marriage, and was born in Vermont, in the same county as her husband and belonged to a family who also settled in Kane County at an early date. Of the six children born to Mr. and Mrs. Mighell only Silas H., of Sugar Grove, and Franklin P., of Aurora, are living in 1903

LEE MIGHELL, son of Albert W. and Ellen (Curry) Mighell, was born in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, Dec. 1, 1870; educated in the public schools of Aurora and at the University of Michigan (Ann Arbor), graduating from the latter institution in the class of 1892; graduated from Kent Law College (Chicago) in 1893, and was admitted to the bar the same year; has since practiced in Aurora, and has served as Assistant State's Attorney. He was married in 1902 to Miss Gertrude Edwards, of Adrian, Mich.

SILAS H. MIGHELL, pioneer settler, Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, Ill., was born in Rutland County, Vt., Dec. 12, 1829, son of Ezekiel Mighell; came with his parents to Illinois in 1837, and grew up among the pioneers of Sugar Grove Township. He engaged in farming in his early manhood, and has since followed that vocation; has lived in the neighborhood in which he was brought up for sixty-six years and is the oldest of the early settlers in Sugar Grove, now living in that township. He was married in 1854 to Miss Delaney Calkins, of Aurora, and their living children are Mrs. Emma D. Egglington, of Aurora; Mrs. Fannie L. Potter, of Sugar Grove, and Dr. Ina (Mighell) Pierce, of Chicago.

HERMAN MILBACHER, physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., obtained his professional education in the Universities at Munich, Bavaria, and at Vienna, Austria, and was graduated from the University of Munich in 1881, receiving his degree in medicine from that institution. The following year he passed at the University of Vienna, attending clinics and pursuing a post-graduate course. In 1882 he came to the United States and began practice in New York City as House Physician in the German Hospital. In the fall of the latter year he came west and established his home in Aurora, Ill., where he engaged in general practice, which he continued uninterruptedly to the present time (1903). Dr. Milbacher soon took rank among the leading practitioners of Northern Illinois, and his practice has constantly increased as the years have gone by. He is a member of the Aurora Free Public Library Board, and has taken an active interest in the upbuilding of that institution.

ALEXANDER C. MILLER.

ALEXANDER C. MILLER, banker and manufacturer, Aurora, was born in Marion County, Ohio, Jan. 24, 1852, and was educated in the schools of his native county. In 1873 he came to Aurora to take a position as train dispatcher on the Burlington Road, which he held until Jan. 1, 1902. He resigned from the service of the company to engage in a manufacturing business in Aurora and Chicago. In December, 1902, in company with others, he organized the Aurora Trust and Savings Bank, of which he is President. In January, 1880, Mr. Miller married Julia Ann Austin, daughter of Job Austin, of Kendall County.

CHAS. A. MILLER, attorney, St. Charles, Ill., was born in Dundee, Scotland, in January, 1842, son of James and Isabella Miller, who were also born in Scotland. The year of his birth Mr. Miller was brought to America by his parents, who immediately located in St. Charles, Kane County. Here the subject of this sketch received his educational training in the public schools, and has been a continuous resident of St. Charles since his parents located in the village in 1842. On November 8, 1870, Mr. Miller was married to Miss Marion E. Tuck, who was born at Brentwood, N. H., and is now deceased. The children of this union are Marian I., Charles A., Jessie I., Frederick G., Helen Mar, Warren and Clarron. In political sentiment Mr. Miller is a Republican and served his fellow-citizens as a member of the Board of Supervisors for St. Charles Township for seven years (1875-82), being Chairman of the Board during three years of his incumbency; was also Circuit Clerk and Recorder of Kane County eight years (1884-92), and Clerk of the Circuit Court from 1892 to 1896. In religious belief Mr. Miller is a Congregationalist, and fraternally belongs to the Masonic Order, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Grand Army of the Republic.

HOWARD MILLER, educator and editor, Elgin, was born at Lewisburg, Penn., where he was educated in private schools, received the honorary degree of Master of Arts from Mount Morris College, and the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from McPherson College. He taught in private schools during his earlier manhood, for several years was Professor of English Literature at McPherson College, and later was identified with railroad management. In 1900 he established "The Inglenook," a magazine published under the authority of the Brethren church at Elgin, and has been its editor to the present time (1903). For several years prior to 1900 he was engaged in the service of the Mexican Government, spending his time in that country. His purely literary work, in addition to his journalistic labors, has covered a wide field.

JACOB MILLER, retired manufacturer, Aurora, Kane County, Ill.; born in Hessen, Germany, Dec. 3, 1826; grew to years of maturity at Frankfort-on-the-Main, where he also received his educational training and learned the piano-maker's trade, at which he was employed during his early manhood. In 1854 he came to the United States, establishing his home in Elgin, where he engaged in the manufacture of cigars, being one of the pioneers in this line in Illinois, and at the present time (1904) the oldest cigar-maker in the State. Mr. Miller conducted a small but successful trade in Elgin for a short time, and later opened another store at Aurora, but in 1857 removed his entire stock to the latter city, where, within a few years, he built up an extensive cigar-manufacturing business, which extended throughout Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin. His factory was one of the largest and most widely known in the West for many years prior to 1897, when he retired from active business life other than attending to his realty interests and other investments. For several years Mr. Miller owned a large farm in DeKalb County, Ill., and took much pride in its management. Coming to this country when the question of slavery was the dominating issue in American politics, he became identified with the Republican party, and has voted the Republican ticket for more than forty years. In 1855 he married Miss Sophia Busse, who was born and brought up in Germany.

JOHN S. MILLER, merchant and stock-feeder, Sugar Grove, Ill.; born at Becket, Mass., March 20, 1847, a son of Frank and Mary (Russell) Miller, was reared and educated in his native State, where he was trained to farming. When he engaged in business for himself, he went into a store at South Hadley Falls, which he conducted for about six years, at the end of that period selling out and removing to Illinois. In 1876 he established a general store at Sugar Grove, Kane County, a village just laid out, and had for his partner Thomas Judd, one of the first settlers of Sugar Grove Township. Their first store building was a cabin, but after about a year they dissolved partnership, and Mr. Miller erected a new building, in which he has continued the mercantile business up to the present time (1904). Mr. Miller has also dealt extensively in live stock, and in 1898, in connection with Frank Catlin, organized the firm of Miller & Catlin, which soon became noted as one of the largest sheep-feeding firms in Northern Illinois, having brought from the South and West, in one year, more than 20,000 head of sheep, which they fattened for market. Mr. Miller is a large land renter and carries on extensive farming operations. He has served as Treasurer of the town of Sugar Grove, and has filled other local positions. In 1875 he married Mary E. Hale, daughter of Stephen B. Hale, of Deerfield, Mass. Their children are: Stephen B., Mrs. Annie Miller Lye, Mrs. Hattie Miller Catlin, John E. and Frank—all of Sugar Grove.

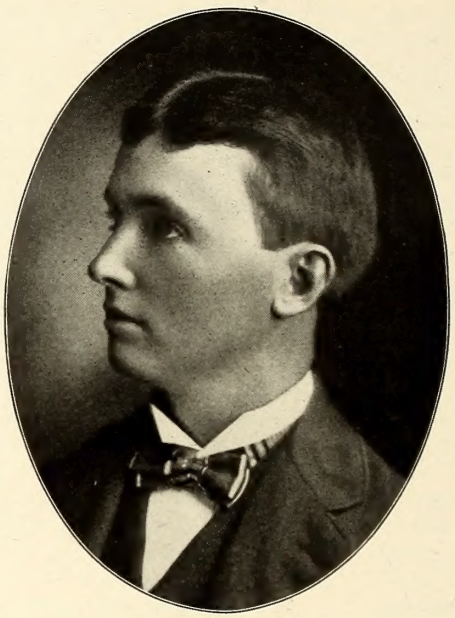
JOHN S. MILLER, M. D., physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., was born near Freeport, Ill., in 1858; was educated in the State University of Missouri, receiving his medical degree from that institution in 1879, and from the American Medical College, in St. Louis, the following year. Subsequently he attended clinics at various times in the larger cities of the United States and Europe, taking in the course of his study special instruction in osteopathy. For several years he practiced in Iowa, filling for a time the chair of Children's Diseases in the Medical Department of Drake University, at Des Moines. After this Dr. Miller went to Helena, Mont., where for some years he was engaged in banking, mining and other enterprises. In 1898 he returned to Illinois, and resumed the practice of his profession at Aurora, where he has since gained celebrity through his modern methods of practice, and his scientific use of the most approved mechanical aids to surgery and medicine. He married Miss Abbie M. Kellogg, of Iowa. His children are Zula E., Stella A., McKinley (a daughter), Merrill A., Edith, John S., Jr., and Sarah K.

IRA MINARD (deceased), merchant, St. Charles, Ill.; born at Rockingham, Vt., Nov. 11, 1809; came to Chicago, Sept. 3, 1833, and to St. Charles, Kane County, in 1834, building the first dam and mill and establishing the first store in that village; elected to the State Senate in 1842; married in 1834 to Sarah P. Wheeler. Mr. Minard died Jan. 22, 1876; his wife surviving him until March 30, 1893. Three of Mr. and Mrs. Minard's children are now living—George W., Charles I. and Mrs. Helen Barber.

WESLEY O. MINER, merchant, Kaneville, Kane County, Ill., born in Kaneville, April 17, 1845, son of Amos and Amanda (Rose) Miner, was educated in the local public schools, and began farming for his father when twenty-three years old, on the farm which has since fallen to him by inheritance. He has since added several acres to it by purchase, and he continued its cultivation until 1898, when he removed to the village of Kaneville. The following year he embarked upon a mercantile career, and in 1902 he built the first brick block, with modern improvements, that had been erected in Kaneville. He was married Oct. 1, 1867, to Miss Mary Harkness, by whom he has had six children—three sons and three daughters. Two of the girls are now deceased.

GEORGE H. MINIUM (deceased), farmer, Maple Park, Kane County, Ill., was born in Erie County, Penn., Jan. 25, 1833, the son of John and Maria (Emerson) Minium, and came with his parents to Kane County, Ill., in 1836, where he was reared on a farm in Kaneville Township. In 1852 he left the farm and went to California, where for ten years he was engaged in freighting between Marysville and Sacramento. In 1862 he returned to his old home in Kane County, and for thirty years thereafter was engaged in farming. He held various local offices in Kaneville. He married Ellen A. Newton, of Sycamore, and died April 29, 1893.



MARGARET D. MITCHELL, M. D., physician and surgeon, Aurora, was born in Princeton, Ill., March 28, 1866, and graduated from the high school of that city in 1884. Under the preceptorship of Dr. Charles Spencer, of Plainfield, Ill., she began the study of medicine, entering Bennett Medical College, Chicago, in 1894, receiving her doctor's degree in 1897. Opening an office the same year in Aurora, she entered upon her professional labors with zeal and ability, and soon won an enviable standing among her co-laborers. She is much interested in surgery, and enjoys more than local distinction in that line of her profession in Northern Illinois. A capable business woman, her financial success has been somewhat commensurate with her large and growing practice. Thoroughly progressive and practical, she has kept abreast of all the latest developments of medical science, and plans a private hospital at Aurora at a very early day. Her home has been in Aurora since 1887, the year she became the wife of Dr. William F. Mitchell, who has long been a noted dentist of this city. In this State she has taken a prominent part in the work of the Rathbone Sisters, and in 1889 was elected Grand Chief of the Order for Illinois, being twice re-elected, and serving in all three years. At the present time she is Supreme Representative from Illinois in the Supreme Session of the Order for the United States.

E. B. MIX, banker, Aurora, Ill.; born in Aurora, June 27, 1845; educated in the Aurora public schools; began working in the bank of Mix & Miller in boyhood; has been connected with the First National Bank of Aurora in various capacities since 1875, being President of that institution at the present time (1903), a position he has held since 1899. Mr. Mix was married July 7, 1881, to Miss Fanny E. Woodworth, of Aurora.

ALEXANDER B. MOORE (deceased), Geneva., pioneer and banker, born in Clinton, N. Y., Aug. 8, 1818, was reared in his native State and completed his education in Hamilton College. When about twenty years of age he was sent by his older brother to Michigan to sell out a stock of goods, making the journey thither by wagon. After he had sold the goods and secured the money, which he carried in a belt around him, he took the steamer "Erie" for the East. The steamer burned to the water's edge, and Mr. Moore was rescued after being four hours in the water, sustaining himself on wreckage. About 1843 he came to Kane County, Ill., there taking an interest in the milling business, which he made his occupation for many years. Still later he was a member of the ship-building firm of Ballentine, Lawrence & Co., at Bay City, Mich. He was largely interested, and this business required much of his attention in later years. His home was continued at Geneva, where he died, March 6, 1878. His widow, who was born March 30, 1821, in Batavia, N. Y., is still living in Geneva, which has been her home since 1846, with the exception of a brief residence in Bay City, Mich. She is an intelligent, refined and highly respected pioneer lady of Kane County.

EMERY T. MOORE, prominent real-estate operator, farmer and man of general affairs, Geneva, Ill., was born in Lisbon, Grundy County, Ill., May 18, 1870, the son of John B. and Lucy (Sterling) Moore, and was educated in the public schools of Geneva, where his parents located in 1878. Mr. Moore was trained to the life of a farmer, meanwhile preparing for a larger business career, so that when, in early manhood, he came into possession of the Bliss and Parkins farms, the improvements which he introduced in the management of these estates resulted in the winning of a number of prizes in contests involving matters of interest and importance to agriculturists. Several years ago he discovered upon his lands a deposit of molding sand, for which he has since found a large market and which has proved a source of considerable profit. Extensive quarries of fine building stone also exist upon his lands, and, as a result of his familiarity with the stone and the sand trade, he has engaged in contracting and building on a large scale, and it is claimed has made more improvements on his own account than any other citizen of Geneva. Being the owner of much of the land on both sides of the beautiful Fox River between Geneva and St. Charles, he has erected many cottages and other buildings which practically connect the two cities, and which he has sold to home-seekers on the easy-payment plan, thus attracting many new-comers and promoting the increase of business and population in that portion of Kane County. He still retains a number of these buildings, to which he continues to make additions as the demands for country homes seem to require. He has thus done much to beautify and promote the development and prosperity of the city of Geneva and vicinity. Mr. Moore is also extensively interested in western farm-lands and owns a handsome winter home at Los Angeles, Cal.

JAMES MOORE, farmer and stock-raiser, Kaneville Township, Kane County, was born in County Cork, Ireland, Aug. 15, 1848. He came to this country from Ireland in 1860, and, locating in Kane County, began farming. In 1876 he bought a farm in the Township of Blackberry, which he soon sold to his brother, only to purchase for himself a place two and three-fourths miles east of Maple Park. He has attained a very creditable local standing, and has served two years as Collector of Blackberry Township, and was Road Commissioner of Kaneville fifteen years. He is a member of the Catholic church, and was married Jan. 2, 1880, to Miss Elizabeth Conway, and they became the parents of ten children—four sons and six daughters—two of the latter now being deceased.

JOHN B. MOORE (deceased), was born at College Hill, Oneida County, N. Y., July 26, 1815, son of Shubel and Betsy (Watson) Moore, who were natives of New England and pioneer settlers of New York State. The mother was a daughter of Alexander Watson, who was a patriot soldier in the Revolutionary War, entering the service in July, 1776, when a lad of sixteen years. John B. Moore was but five years of age when his father died. He remained on the parental homestead until seventeen years of age, and assisted in the cultivation of the home farm. He learned the carpenter's trade in early manhood, and on March 12, 1839, was married to Miss Sophia Todd, who died Nov. 25, 1851, leaving one son and one daughter—Albert B. and Adelaide. On April 25, 1852, he married his second wife, Miss Lucy Sterling, and to them nine children were born, viz.: Sterling, who died in infancy; George, died aged twelve years; Shubel, of Jackson County, Kans.; Arabella (Mrs. Heiko Felkamp), of Great Bend, Kans.; Frederick, of Great Bend, Kans.; Mrs. Maria Fellows, of Jackson County, Kans.; Della (Mrs. John Strader), of Geneva, Ill.; Emery T., of St. Charles Township, Kane County; and John, who resides on the old homestead. Mr. Moore came to Illinois in 1844, locating first in Grundy County, but removed to Geneva Township, Kane County, where for several years he was engaged in the management of his three farms comprising about 700 acres. He was one of the prime factors in the establishment of the Geneva-Rock Springs Creamery, also of one located at St. Charles, and every enterprise calculated to advance the material interest of his community received his support. Politically he was a life-long Democrat, casting his first vote for Martin Van Buren. While not a member, he and his wife attended the Baptist church and contributed liberally to its support. Mr. Moore died Oct. 9, 1900; his wife surviving until Dec. 29, 1902.

THOMAS C. MOORE (deceased), pioneer lawyer; born near Shelbyville, Bedford County, Tenn., Nov. 26, 1817; came with his parents to Clark County, Ill., in 1821; later the family removed to Coles County, where Thomas C. grew to manhood; admitted to the bar in 1843, and located in Batavia in 1848, practicing his profession continuously in that city until 1892, in the meantime being identified with many famous cases and much important Kane County litigation. He married in Kane County in 1843, Miss Delia A. Vanderveer, and their children are William A., Joseph R., and Mrs. Cassie Hickox. Mr. Moore died in Washington, D. C., July 11, 1895. His widow survives and is now living in Springfield, Ill.

EDWARD M. MORGAN, lawyer, Aurora, Ill., born in Aurora, Aug. 15, 1868, son of Morris and Ellen (McQueery) Morgan; was reared and educated in Aurora; in boyhood mastered the machinist's trade, which he followed for fifteen years in the Burlington car shops, and while working at his trade studied law. In 1898 he was elected Police Justice in Aurora; later completed his law studies under the preceptorship of Hon. S. Alschuler and John C. Murphy, graduated from the law department of Aurora College in 1900, and was admitted to the bar in June of that year. In 1901 he resigned the Police Justiceship to accept the position of City Attorney of Aurora; was re-elected in 1903, and has rendered the city much valuable service on questions connected with local affairs. In 1902 Mr. Morgan was married to Miss Lillian Thorne, of Aurora.

C. E. MORRILL, retired cashier of the Bank of Elburn, Elburn, Ill.; born at Kaneville, Ill., May 18, 1850; was variously employed until 1879, when he entered the Bank of Elburn as cashier, holding that position until 1900, when the bank was purchased by the Kane County Bank, and Mr. Morrill has since lived retired. He was married March 7, 1883, to Anna S. Hughes.

JED S. MORRILL, milk inspector, Elburn, Ill.; born in the village where he now resides, Oct. 5, 1864; educated in the public schools of his native village; commenced work in a creamery at Elburn when sixteen years of age, following that occupation eight years; conducted a meat market for twelve years, and for the past two years has been milk inspector for the Elburn Bottling Works; politically a Republican and has served in several local offices; married Nov. 5, 1887, to Etta O. Fifield.

EDGAR T. MORRIS, farmer and stock-raiser, Elburn, Ill.; born March 17, 1854, in Monmouth County, N. J.; came to Kane County, Ill., in 1864, and here made his home until 1887, when he bought a farm in Iowa, on which he made his home for five years. He then came back to Kane County, and bought the old homestead on which he lived until 1900. That year he moved to Elburn, but continued to conduct the farm until 1903. He was elected Road Commissioner, a position he filled for six years, was Assessor four years, and Judge of Elections three years. He has been a Mason for twenty-five years. He was married Feb. 9, 1882, to Miss Augusta Weynt, daughter of Solomon and Caroline (Adams) Weynt, both natives of Ohio. The parents of Mr. Morris were John W. and Rebecca (Youmans) Morris, natives of New Jersey. Edgar T. Morris gave the address at the Farmers' Institute in 1892 on the subject, "The Past, Present and Future," which was well received.

JOSEPH M. MORRIS, dealer in coal and lumber, Elburn, Ill.; born in Monmouth County, N. J., March 23, 1857; engaged in farming in early manhood in Kane County, continuing until 1887, and has since been in business at Elburn, the firm of which he is a member being known as the Elburn Coal & Lumber Co. He was married No. 6, 1885, to Emma Guant.

JAMES W. MORSE, merchant, Dundee, Ill.; born in Madison County, N. Y., Oct. 5, 1838; came west in 1863 and taught school in the vicinity of Dundee for two winters; purchased a farm east of Dundee in 1872, where he remained until 1883, when he removed to the village, where he has since been identified with the hardware business. He was married in March, 1864, to Miss Anna Salisbury, of Elgin.

FREDERICK J. MOSEDALE, manufacturer, St. Charles, Ill.; born at Coventry, England, in 1859; educated in his native country, and came to America in 1877, locating first at Elgin, Ill., where he was engaged in the Elgin Watch factory. In 1892 he founded the Crown Electrical Company, at St. Charles, of which he is now Secretary and Treasurer. He was married in 1883 to Anna Mitchell, of Elgin.

WILLIAM B. MUELLER, merchant, Dundee, Ill.; born in Chicago, March 8, 1868; came with his parents to Dundee in 1875; began his mercantile career in 1884 as a clerk in the store of Schroeder & Ruse, where he remained four years; became a partner in the firm of E. C. Hawley Company, Dundee, in 1891, which is at the present time (1903) Schultz, Mueller & Co. Mr. Mueller was married Aug. 4, 1890, to Miss Emma Lemke, of Dundee, Ill.

DANIEL H. MURPHY, farmer, St. Charles Township, Kane County, Ill.; born in Winfield Township, Du Page County, Ill., Sept. 13, 1855, son of Thomas and Mary (Heffernan) Murphy, and educated in the local schools. The father arrived in St. Charles in 1850, having come direct from Ireland, and for about three years was engaged in teaming. In 1854 he removed to Campton Township, Kane County, where he remained until the spring of 1855, when he went to Winfield, Du Page County. Daniel H. Murphy was reared in Du Page County, and came to St. Charles Township with his father, when the latter bought the farm on which the son is now living. This farm is located in Section 18, St. Charles Township, four miles northwest of the City of St. Charles. It was worked by father and son together until the death of the father in 1886, when it fell to the latter as the only son. Here he has since lived, and has been chiefly engaged in dairy farming. The widow of Thomas Murphy lives with her son Daniel. Thomas Murphy left one daughter, who is the wife of Philip Kehoe, of St. Charles. In politics Daniel H. Murphy is a Democrat.

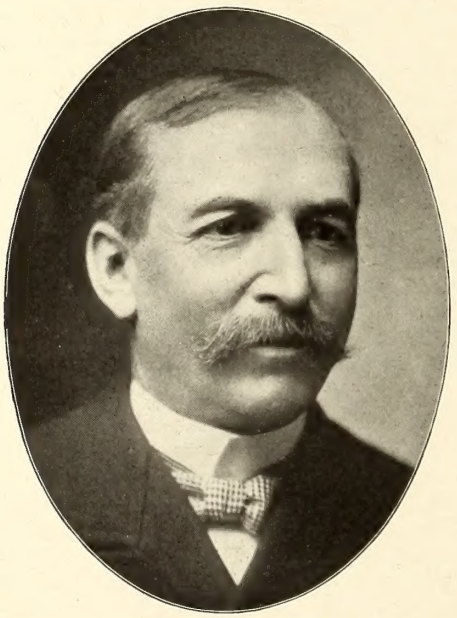
JAMES MURPHY, carpenter and Police Magistrate, Aurora, Ill.; born near Belfast, Ireland, May 14, 1824; came to America in 1835; located in Aurora in 1864, where he was actively engaged in contracting and building until 1878, when he was elected Police Magistrate and served in that capacity for twenty years. He was married in 1848 to Ann Corlett. Mr. Murphy died May 30, 1900; his wife dying Aug. 20, 1890. Two of their children still survive, viz.: John C. and Mary E.

JOHN C. MURPHY, attorney, Aurora, Ill.; born in Grundy County, Ill., Feb. 27, 1858; came to Aurora with his parents when six years of age; obtained his preliminary education in the public schools of Aurora and later studied law with Judge Southworth; admitted to the bar in 1882; was United States Attorney for Dakota Territory several years, but since 1890 has practiced his profession in Aurora; served as Mayor of Aurora one term; married in 1891 to Miss Jessie MacArthur, of Ottawa, Ill.

DANIEL J. MYERS, pioneer farmer, Big Rock, Kane County, was born in Chenango County, N. Y., April 26, 1823, and was there reared on a farm and educated in the public schools. In 1845 he came west and purchased a tract of Government land in Blackberry Township, Kane County, Ill., about a mile southwest of the present village of LaFox, on which he made his home for two years. At the end of that period he sold this farm, and bought a second tract of land in Sugar Grove Township, where he resided three years, then moving to a third farm in Big Rock Township, which became his residence until 1896. In the latter year he moved into the village of Big Rock, where he has lived to the present time. A practical farmer and prominent man in agricultural circles, he has been long recognized as a leading citizen of the community. His investments in real estate have been fortunate in the main, and he has become one of the extensive land-owners of Kane County. In later years he has dealt extensively in South Dakota lands. He is also identified with the banking interests of Kane County as a stock-holder in the First National Bank of Aurora. Mr. Myers was first married in 1846 to Miss Sarah West, who was born in Chenango County, N. Y., Sept. 18, 1824, and died in Big Rock, in 1884. In 1895 he married Mrs. Ellen Crouse, of Big Rock. Mr. Myers' children are three sons, Williams W., Lucian P. and Charles D., all successful farmers of Sugar Grove Township, Kane County.



JOHN O. MYERS, Elgin, Ill.; born in Reading, Penn., Jan. 5, 1864; came to Chicago in 1880, where he was engaged in the dry goods business for four years; removed to Elgin in 1884 and was employed in the Elgin Watch Factory for fifteen years; conducted a news and stationery business on Grove Avenue for a short time, and July 1, 1900, was appointed to the position he now holds—Secretary and Cashier of the Elgin Watch Supply Company. Mr. Myers was married in October, 1888, to Miss Lizzie B. Moch, of Fredonia, N. Y.

LUCIAN P. MYERS, farmer, stock-raiser and dairyman, Sugar Grove, Kane County, was born in Big Rock, Kane County, Ill., July 24, 1853, son of Daniel J. Myers, one of the old and much respected early settlers of this part of the county. He was reared on the farm and educated in the public schools and the Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial Institute. In the spring of 1877 he engaged in farming and stock-raising on his own account, following the business with enthusiasm and success. His farm near the village of Sugar Grove was brought to a high state of cultivation by the most approved methods, and is regarded as one of the model farms of the county. About 1880 he turned his attention largely to dairying, in which he has been equally successful. Mr. Myers is now serving his second term as a Director of Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial Institute, in the success of which he has taken a deep interest. He belongs to the Sugar Grove Board of Road Commissioners, and from the early days of the Order has been affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America. In 1877 he married Miss Melissa Crosser, of Hardin County, Iowa, and their children are Daniel C., Alonzo W. and Earl L. Another member of their family is Ida Thomas, whom they are rearing and educating as an adopted daughter.

F. WYLIE NASH, physician and surgeon, Big Rock, Ill.; born in Genesee County, N. Y., Aug. 31, 1851; came with his father's family to Michigan in 1856, and later removed to Rockford, Ill.; studied medicine in New York City, and received his degree of medicine from the medical department of the University of New York City in 1886; began practice at Big Rock, Ill., in 1890, and has since been a leading practitioner in this portion of Kane County. Doctor Nash was married in 1891 to Miss Mary Watson, of Rockford, Ill.

NEWHALL, attorney, Aurora, Kane County, Ill., was born at Crab Orchard, Neb., Aug. 13, 1874, obtained his elementary education in the public schools of Aurora, Ill., and afterwards attended the University of Iowa, Iowa City; read law under the preceptorship of Hon. Samuel Alschuler and John C. Murphy, of Aurora,. and was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of Illinois in 1899, when he began practicing his profession in Aurora. In 1901 he became a member of the firm of Murphy, Alschuler & Newhall, and in December, 1902, became junior member of the firm of Raymond & Newhall, one of the leading law firms of Kane County, with which he is still associated.

JOHN NEWMAN.

JOHN NEWMAN, banker and manufacturer, Elgin, Ill., born at Bishop Stortford, Herefordshire, Eng., March 11, 1842, received his education in the public schools, and removed to Chicago in October, 1859, where he was employed by Potter Palmer, and Ross & Foster as a clerk. In 1864 he purchased the dry-goods business of M. & J. McNeil, of Elgin, and in 1877 established the Spring Brook Creamery, which in 1893 passed into the hands of the John Newman Company. Mr. Newman is President of the Elgin Board of Trade, the Elgin City Banking Company, and a Director in the First National Bank of Elgin, is President of the Century Club, and Vice-President of the W. S. Moore Company. In political matters he is a Democrat, and has been a member of the Board of Education for twelve years, one-half this time being President of the Board. Mr. Newman has also served as a Trustee of the Northern Illinois Hospital for the Insane.

JOHN NEWMAN, Jr., manufacturer, Elgin, Ill., born in Elgin, Nov. 1, 1870, son of John and Harriet (Beaty) Newman, educated in the Elgin public schools and the University of Notre Dame, and graduated from the Law Department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, in 1894, with the degree of LL. B. He was immediately admitted to the bar in Illinois, but has never practiced law. Between his courses at Notre Dame and the University of Michigan he began his business career as a clerk in his father's store and creameries, and after completing his law studies he spent three years in the First National Bank of Elgin. In 1897 he was made inspector of creameries for the John Newman Company, and in May, 1900, he became Secretary of the W. S. Moore Company, of Chicago, of which his father was Vice-President. He is Superintendent and Inspector of creameries for the Moore Company, representing the Newman interests in this corporation. Mr. Newman is Secretary of the Elgin Opera House, and fraternally belongs to the M. W. of A. He was married, Jan. 31, 1900, to Jennie M., daughter of Franklin and Helen J. Shepherd, and one child, Harriet Virginia, has blessed their union.

JOSEPH NEWMAN, President State Dairymen's Association, Elgin, Ill., born at Bishop Stortford, Herefordshire, England, May, 10, 1854, educated in the public schools, and removed to Chicago in 1869, where he was employed by Morton & Company. In 1872 he came to Elgin, and entered the employ of the First National Bank as a bookkeeper. In 1880 he engaged in the creamery business, and in 1893 became junior member of the John Newman Company. Two years later he was elected Treasurer of the State Dairymen's Association, and in 1900 was chosen its President, in which position he is still serving. He is a member of the Century Club, and a trustee of the Universalist church. The John Newman Company became the firm of Newman & Hawkins, and still later is known as Nolting & Newman.

sketch was married to Miss Mary Prindle, daughter of Abijah and Caroline (McPearl) Prindle, natives of New York. Capt. Newton located in Batavia Ill., in 1854, and in company with his brother, established the widely-known wagon manufactory in Batavia, which has since been operated by the Newton Wagon Company, and with which he was identified until his death, being meanwhile interested in various other business enterprises. In 1861 he was commissioned Captain of Company D, Fifty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served over three years in the war for the preservation of the Union.

EARL C. NEWTON.

EARL C. NEWTON (deceased), manufacturer, was born in Wyoming County, N. Y., Oct. 24, 1838, son of Levi and Rachel (Cooley) Newton, and there was reared and educated, gaining a practical knowledge of the wagon-making business in his father's factory. In 1854 he came with his parents and family to Batavia, Ill., where he was made a partner in the business established by his father and brother in 1865, and contributed his full share in building up the great manufactory, now known as the Newton Wagon Company. He was Vice-President of the corporation many years and held that position at the time of his death, which occurred Jan. 31, 1891. He was also interested in banking and other enterprises in Batavia. He was married in 1864 to Miss Mary E., daughter of Samuel and Lydia (Shaw) Wilson, pioneers of Batavia.

LEVI NEWTON (deceased), pioneer manufacturer, born in Darien, N. Y., April 12, 1810, son of Lemuel and Nancy (Taggart) Newton, and was reared on a farm. He received a common school education and learned the trade of cabinet-maker, first engaging in that business in New York, but later establishing a wagon-factory at Attica, N. Y. In 1854 he came to Batavia and laid the foundation of one of the largest wagon factories in the United States, of which he was the head until his death, June 29, 1879. In 1831 he married Rachel Cooley, daughter of Thomas and Rachel (Hubbard) Cooley, of Attica, N. Y., and a sister of Judge Thomas M. Cooley, of Michigan.

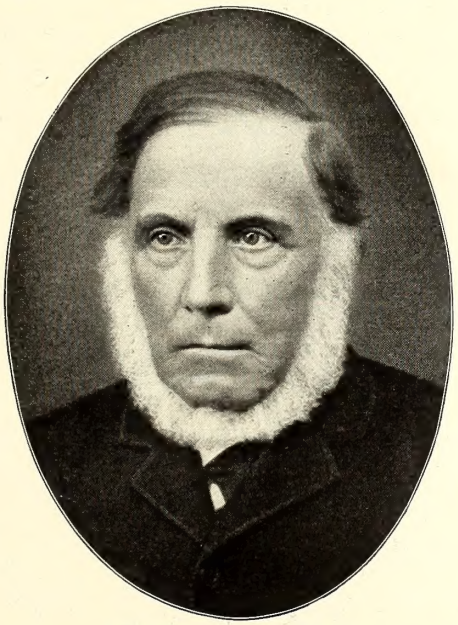
NEWELL F. NICHOLS, lawyer, Aurora, Ill., born at Rome, N. Y., March 5, 1831, educated at Wesleyan College, graduating from that institution in the class of 1857, came west in the latter year and engaged in teaching school, later serving as County Superintendent, read law under the preceptorship of Major Mayborne, of Geneva, and was admitted to the bar in 1865; began practicing at Aurora in the latter year and rapidly gained prominence in his profession. Mr. Nichols was first married in 1861 to Miss Emma L. Jenks, who died in 1865. In 1869 he married Miss Olinda M. Johnson, and the surviving members of the family are: Mrs. Nichols; one son, Allen J., and two daughters, Edith and Helen H.

LEON D. He was married in 1884 to Miss Mabel L. Barnes of Elgin.

AUGUST NOLTING, manufacturer, Elgin, Ill., born in Germany, Oct. 11, 1834; educated in the public schools of the Fatherland and trained to a mercantile life in the city of Hamburg; came to the United States in 1865, locating first in Chicago; removed to Hanover, Kane County, in 1868, where he was engaged in the manufacture of dairy products until 1884, when he removed to Elgin where he continued in the same line of business. He has become known as one of the leading butter manufacturers of the Elgin District, and his products are shipped to all parts of the United States. He was married in 1870 to Miss Sophia Volberding, of Bensonville, Ill.

GARRETT A. NORTON, physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., born in Campton Township, Kane County, Sept. 19, 1859; reared on his father's farm and graduated from the West St. Charles high school in the class of 1880; attended the University of Michigan (Medical Department) two years, and graduated from the Rush Medical College (Chicago) in the class of '84; practiced medicine first at St. Charles, Ill., but since 1890 has resided in Aurora, where he has occupied a prominent place in the profession. He was married in 1885 to Miss Cora F. Orr, of Junction City, Kansas, and their children are: Edith and Florence Norton.



WILLIAM W. NORTON, machinist and inventor, Dundee, Kane County, Ill., born in Herkimer County, N. Y., Dec. 31, 1826; obtained a common school education in his native State, and removed to Illinois in 1861, establishing his home at Carpentersville, where he took charge of a machine shop which afterwards developed into the Illinois Iron & Bolt Works, remaining with this enterprise as foreman until 1881, when he engaged in farming to which he has since devoted his attention. Mr. Norton was married in 1849, to Miss Catherine Hendricks of Wheeling, W. Va.

GEORGE L. OATMAN, merchant and manufacturer, Dundee, Kane County, Ill., born in the township where he now resides, June 15, 1851, son of Jesse and Lucy Curtis (Mowrey) Oatman; educated in the public schools and trained to merchandising. He and his brother established one of the pioneer creameries at Dundee, Ill., and later became the owners and operators of a large number of creameries in Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin. The partnership between Mr. Oatman and his brother was dissolved in 1903, Mr. Oatman becoming sole owner of the enterprise at that time. He was married in 1874 to Miss Louisa J. Torrence, and their children are: Erle, William Frank and Mary Belle.

JESSE OATMAN (deceased), pioneer merchant, Dundee, Ill., born at New Albany, Ind., Nov. 24, 1811, and died Oct. 1, 1883; came to Kane County, Ill., in 1836, and in 1838 platted the town of Dundee; served in the Black Hawk War, and established the first store at Dundee, becoming closely identified with the mercantile trade until his retirement from active business in 1880. He served as Postmaster of Dundee for eight years and was a Justice of the Peace as early as 1844. He was married in 1836 to Miss Lucy Curtis Mowrey.

DENNIS P. O'BRIEN, Catholic Clergyman, Aurora, Ill., was born in County Limerick, Ireland, in 1860; educated at Mount Millirey Seminary, Waterford, Ireland, studied theology at St. John's Seminary in the latter city, graduating from that institution in 1883; was ordained priest in the latter year, and for two years thereafter traveled and studied in Europe; came to the United States in 1885, and was Assistant Rector of St. Mary's Parish, Chicago; later was appointed Assistant Rector of St. Columbkills Parish for ten years; came to Aurora in 1897 to take charge of Holy Angel's Parish, and remained there three years; has since been Rector of St. Mary's Parish, Aurora.

DOMINICK O'MALLEY.

DOMINICK O'MALLEY, retired farmer, Maple Park, Kane County, Ill., born Jan. 1, 1812, in County Mayo, Ireland, and came to the United States in 1849, settling at St. Charles, Ill. He was largely employed for some years in and around Joliet at railroad-grading work, and in 1857 bought a farm in the town of Virgil. He was a general farmer until 1893, when his eye-sight became seriously impaired. Since 1900 he has been entirely blind. In 1893 he moved to Maple Park, where he has since made his home with his daughter. He has been Road Commissioner, and has filled other local positions. Mr. O'Malley was married Dec. 31, 1840, to Miss Judith Duffy, who died March 12, 1902. She became the mother of ten children, four of whom died in Ireland. Two of the daughters and four of the sons of this marriage are still living.

ERNEST WRAY ONEAL, clergyman and lecturer, Aurora, Ill., born at Glenwood, Iowa, August 29, 1863, the son of Rev. H. H. Oneal, D. D., one of the pioneer Methodist ministers of that State; was educated in the public schools and at Simpson College, Indianola, Iowa, graduating from that institution in 1885. He then took a course in Garrett Biblical Institute, at Evanston, Ill., graduating there in 1889, when he was ordained to the ministry in the Methodist Episcopal Church and admitted to the Rock River Conference the same year, being assigned to the pastorate of the church at River Forest, a suburb of Chicago. He has since had charges at Woodlawn Park, Chicago; Plato Center and Ashton, Ill., and in 1899 was appointed to the pastorate of the Galena Street Methodist church, Aurora, which (1904) he still occupies. Mr. Oneal has gained distinction as a pulpit orator and lecturer. In 1887 he was married to Grace Ellinwood, of Rochelle, Ill., and they have one daughter, Janet Oneal.

RENALVIN OUTHOUSE (deceased), farmer, Lily Lake, Ill., born near Lily Lake, April 22, 1852; obtained his education in the public schools and at Jennings Seminary and Business College, Aurora, and later engaged in farming on his father's homestead, which was deeded to him previous to the latter's death; married Addie Leighton. Mr. Outhouse died Nov. 4, 1892.

WILLIAM W. ORMSBEE, dentist, Geneva, Ill., was born in Shoreham, Vt., March 8, 1832, son of John M. and Polly (Wilson) Ormsbee, where he was reared on the farm and educated in the local schools, and Brandon Seminary. In 1853 he began the study of dentistry at Middlebury, Vt., with Dr. Josephus Brockway, with whom he practiced for two years before setting up for himself in Brandon, Vt. In the spring of 1859 Dr. Ormsbee came to Geneva, Ill., where he located himself, and has since been in continuous practice. He is undoubtedly the oldest dentist in Kane County, if not in the State. He was one of the original members of the Illinois Dental Society with which he has been connected more than forty years. For many years Dr. Ormsbee was actively connected with the drug business in Geneva, and has held various official positions in the city. Feb. 21, 1859, he was married in Miss Amanda C. Powers, daughter of Deacon Jacob Powers, of Brandon, Vt. She died in 1876, and two years later Dr. Ormsbee married Mrs. Frances Willard Smith, of Oberlin, Ohio, who died in 1895.

GEORGE WHEELER OSGOOD, retired merchant, St. Charles, Ill., born at Cambridgeport, Vt., Oct. 2, 1853; came to St. Charles, Kane County, in January, 1865; engaged in the grocery business at St. Charles in 1872, which he conducted until 1890; married in 1875 Charlotte P. Hall, of St. Charles.

JAMES F. PADELFORD (deceased), pioneer farmer, Dundee Township, Kane County, Ill., born at Savoy, Mass., June 17, 1814; came to Illinois in 1845, locating in Dundee Township, Kane County, where he purchased 160 acres of land to which he made subsequent additions until his holding embraced 300 acres. He was engaged quite extensively in dairy farming, and personally conducted his farm up to the time of his death, June 15, 1883. Mr. Padelford was married in 1840 to Miss Prudence Pound of Canada, and they were the parents of eleven children, five of whom are now living, viz.: Mrs. Amanda Peck, Mrs. Phoebe Chaffee, W. H., Mrs. Ida M. Gilbert, and Mrs. Jennie P. Kerr. Mrs. Padelford died April 9, 1903.

RODOLPHUS WILLIAM PADELFORD (deceased), pioneer, Elgin, Ill., born in Savoy, Berkshire County, Mass., July 21, 1806, son of Manly and Thankful (Crapo) Padelford, descended from colonial families of combined English and French ancestry, Mr. Padelford being descended in a direct line from the famous Roger Williams and John Rogers families, whose names are so prominent in colonial history. In Massachusetts he had the benefit of a school education. In 1828 Mr. Padelford established himself in Buffalo, N. Y., and was there interested in several enterprises. While living there he married Mary Wilber, a descendant of Samuel Wilber, who settled in Boston in 1634. In 1842 the family moved to Elgin, Ill., where Mr. Padelford engaged in trade for a time and then opened a daguerreotype gallery, one of the first of its kind in Northern Illinois. In 1847 he was elected City Clerk of Elgin, filling the position until 1875. In 1857 he was elected Clerk of the City Court, holding the position until 1892; was also Secretary of the Northern Hospital for the Insane from its establishment until 1893. Mr. Padelford was one of the founders of the First Baptist church of Elgin, and served as clerk and deacon for more that fifty years; for the same time was Secretary of the Fox River Valley and Chicago Baptist Association, which increased in that period from five to seventy churches. Mr. Padelford was an active anti-slavery man, and an earnest, intelligent Baptist, who secured and kept the good will and respect of all who knew him. Mr. and Mrs. Padelford were renowned for hospitality and generosity. To them were born six children, four of whom are still living.

WILLIAM J. PARKER, retired merchant, Dundee, Ill., born at Warren, Mass., March 3, 1819; grew to manhood in his native State, and came west in 1852, locating in Dundee, Ill., October first of that year. He first engaged in carpenter work, but later established a furniture store, which he conducted until 1888 when he retired from active business life, and has since devoted his time to looking after his realty interests. Mr. Parker was married Sept. 3, 1842, to Miss Ruth Litchfield, of Florida, Mass.

EDWIN C. PARRY, retired farmer, Elgin, Ill., born in Shropshire, England, August 28, 1843; came to the United States in 1871, locating in Elgin about 1873, and became connected with John Newman's mercantile establishment; later he engaged in agricultural pursuits in Plato Township, Kane County, following that occupation until the spring of 1901, when he removed to Elgin, which has since been his home. He was married in 1878 to Miss Sarah A. Pickering, and their children are: Maurice B., Edwin C., and Carl F.—another son, Kenneth, died when seven years of age.

CHARLES PATTEN (deceased), merchant, Geneva, Ill., born in Roxbury, Mass., in 1814, came to Illinois in 1837, and the same year opened a store in the first frame building erected in Geneva, where he carried on business until his death in 1887. He was one of the founders of the Geneva Unitarian church, and did much to build it up. He married Harriet F. Clarke, daughter of Scotto Clark. She died a few years after her husband, leaving no children.

GEORGE D. PATTEN (deceased), grain dealer and lumber merchant, Geneva, was born in Roxbury (now a part of Boston), Mass., July 24, 1811, the son of William and Sally (Williams) Patten. He was educated in the home schools, and trained to mercantile pursuits in Philadelphia. He remained in that city until 1854, when he came west and settled in Geneva, Ill., whither his brother Charles had preceded him. There he engaged in the lumber and grain trade for many years, dying there in 1887. Mr. Patten was one of the early members of the Geneva Unitarian church, the second body of that denomination to be established in Illinois, and did much to promote its interests. During the years of anti-slavery agitation he belonged to the freedom-loving New England element in the State, and helped forward the movement that finally resulted in the abolition of human slavery. Two of his sons wore the Union blue, and one laid down his life for his country. Mr. Patten was married in 1840 to Miss Eliza Kellum, of Bordentown, N. J.

JOHN C. PATTERSON, physician, Batavia, Ill., was born in Indianapolis, Ind., in 1849, son of Dr. Richard J. Patterson, a widely-known specialist in the treatment of nervous diseases and the founder of Bellevue Place Sanitarium. The subject of this sketch was educated in private and public schools, and graduated from the Chicago Medical College in the class of 1872. He began medical practice at Bellevue Place Sanitarium, being assistant to his father until the latter retired from active practice. Doctor Patterson is still interested in the institution in a proprietary way.

RICHARD J. PATTERSON, M. D. (deceased), founder of Bellevue Place Sanitarium, Batavia, Ill., was born in Berkshire County, Mass., in 1816, a descendant of Andrew Patterson who settled at Stratford, Conn., in 1686; graduated from Berkshire Medical College in 1842, after which he served five years as Superintendent of the State Asylum for the Insane at Columbus, Ohio; still later spent a like period as Medical Superintendent of the Hospital for the Insane at Indianapolis, Ind., and five years more in a similar capacity in connection with the Iowa State Hospital for the Insane. With this long experience in the treatment of nervous and mental diseases, Dr. Patterson came to Batavia, and in 1867 founded at that place the Bellevue Place Sanitarium, of which he continued to be proprietor and Superintendent up to the date of his death, which occurred in 1892.

CHARLES F. PAULL, retired farmer, Aurora, Ill., born in Medina County, Ohio, July 12, 1822, son of Richard and Clarinda (Gooding) Paull, was reared on the farm and educated in the local schools, and accompanied the family on its removal to Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, Ill., in 1841. Here he began life for himself on an 80-acre tract of Government land which has since been increased by later purchases to an entire section. For forty years he had been engaged in farming and stock-raising when he retired from active business in 1881 to make his home in Aurora. Here he has been identified for some years with the banking interests of the city, being a director of the Aurora National Bank. For six years he was Assessor of Sugar Grove Township, and has also filled other important local offices. Miss Lavina Brooks, who became his wife in 1846, died leaving three daughters and two sons, and his second wife, Jane Abbey, born in New York, was a resident of Kane County from her girlhood. She was killed in a street car accident in Aurora in 1902. Mr. Paull's living children are: Mrs. Ann Waite, of Sugar Grove; Lewis F., Aurora; Mrs. Ella Doty, Sugar Grove; Mrs. Alice Newcomb, of Nebraska; and Charles E., Aurora.

STEPHEN G. PAULL (deceased), pioneer, was born at Bristol, Ontario County, N. Y., Sept. 1, 1812; grew to manhood in Medina County, Ohio, and came to Illinois in 1840, establishing his home in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, where he resided until his death, which occurred April 26, 1875. He was a thoroughly progressive farmer, and was one of the pioneer breeders of fine cattle in Illinois, as well as the first breeder of Durham cattle in the southern part of Kane County. His wife, who survived him until 1894, was Roxy A. Barker, of Royalton, Ohio. Their surviving children at the present time (1903) are: J. B. Paull, of Lake City, Iowa; Mrs. Mary (Paull) Thompson, and Mrs. Florence (Paull) Wing, of Aurora.

BENJAMIN S. PEARSALL, manufacturer, Elgin, Ill., born in Otsego County, N. Y., July 29, 1866; educated in the public schools of Illinois; in 1891 became connected with the S. E. Wood Butter Company of Elgin, with which he is still identified. In 1898, when this company was incorporated, he became Secretary and Treasurer and also General Manager, positions he has since filled efficiently. He was married in 1893 to Miss Leah J. Calkins.

JOHN W. PEARSON (deceased), born at Witersham, Kent County, England, May 14, 1831; came to the United States in 1850, locating first in New York State, where he learned the carpenter's trade; came west and first resided in Elgin and then at Belvidere, Ill., and later in Wisconsin; returned to Kane County in 1878, residing here the remainder of his days, dying February 23, 1903. Mr. Pearson was first married to Miss Cordelia Hayes and after her death, Miss Mary Coeller, who died in 1874. In 1875 he married his third wife, Mrs. Emma (Plant) Weller, who, with their four sons and three daughters, survives him.

J. H. PEASE, pioneer merchant and financier, Aurora, Ill., born at Sardis, Ohio, August 8, 1834; came to Aurora with his parents in 1835; in company with L. O. Hill established the first electric light plant in the world, Aurora being the first city in the world lighted with electricity; was President for a time of the Wilcox Manufacturing Company; is now President of the Richards Manufacturing Company, organized in January, 1903, and is also Vice-President of the First National Bank of Aurora. Mr. Pease was married January 1, 1867, to Miss Helen M. Forsyth, of Canada.

ELI PECK, pioneer citizen, Geneva Township, Kane County, Ill., was born at Sandgate, Vt., in June 1816, and reared in his native State, where he also obtained his education in the public schools; came to Kane County, Ill., in the fall of 1843 and purchased a farm about three and a half miles southwest of Geneva, upon which he resided until his death in February, 1892. Mr. Peck added to his holdings from time to time until he owned one of the largest estates in Kane County; was also interested in sheep-raising, being well known in connection with this branch of industry. He was married in 1839 to Miss Jerusha Sherman, of Sandgate, Vt., and they reared a family of eight children—four sons and four daughters.

GEORGE E. PECK, farmer and stock-raiser, Geneva Township, Kane County, Ill., born at Sandgate, Vt., Jan. 18, 1842, son of Eli and Jerusha (Sherman) Peck; came with his parents to Kane County in 1843, where he grew to maturity and obtained his education in the public schools. In early manhood he joined his father in farming and stock-raising, but since the latter's death he and his brothers—Albert S., Frank and Seth E.—have conducted the estate as a whole, other members of the family also retaining their interests. The Peck estate embraces 2,200 acres, which is carried on in the most approved manner. Their dairy interests are extensive, and as breeders of Spanish merino sheep, the Peck Brothers are among the most famous in the United States, making shipments to Australia, South Africa and Mexico, as well as to all parts of this country. They are members of the Vermont Sheep Breeders' Association, the New York Sheep Breeders' Association, and the National Sheep Breeders' Association; are also interested in registered trotting horses, and have gained considerable prominence in this branch of stock-raising. Mr. George E. Peck is a member of the Board of Supervisors of Kane County, having served in this capacity nearly ten years.

GEORGE H. PECK, Elgin, retired farmer and wholesale milk-dealer, was born Sept. 21, 1839, in New Berlin, Chenango County, N. Y. His father, William R. Peck, was born in Rhode Island and the mother, Mary A. (Hays) Peck, in New Berlin, N. Y. The family came west in April, 1852, to Dundee, Ill., where the father bought a farm. George H. Peck remained with his parents until he was of age, and then rented a farm for himself, which he held only six months, when, in September, 1861, he enlisted in Company K, Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry. After the battle of Corinth he received an honorable discharge, and returning to Dundee, bought a farm of 120 acres, which he devoted to the cultivation of small fruits, selling great quantities of raspberries and strawberries in Elgin for many years. Mr. Peck was one of the original promoters of the Elgin Packing Company, now one of the best paying institutions of the kind in the country. In 1874 Mr. Peck sold his farm and removed to Chicago, where he engaged in the wholesale milk business, and soon was commanding an immense trade on the west side of the city. After twenty-two years of unbroken success, in 1896 he sold out and removed to Savanna, Ill., where he bought a farm of 680 acres, and has since lived retired from active business. Mr. Peck was married Jan. 11, 1860, to Miss Amanda, daughter of James F. Padelford, formerly of Dundee Township, Kane County, and they have two sons—Frank I. and W. R.—both of whom are residents of Elgin.

GEORGE M. PECK, merchant, Elgin, Ill., born at Dundee, Ill., August 14, 1843, obtained his elementary education in the public schools of his native village, and later took a commercial course in Bryant & Stratton's Business College (Chicago). In 1861 he enlisted in the Fifty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he became Commissary Sergeant and served until 1864, when his term of enlistment expired. Beginning his business career as clerk in a dry goods store in Elgin, he has been actively engaged in the mercantile business in that city since 1868. Mr. Peck is a Director of the Elgin City Banking Company, and President of the Elgin Wind Power & Pump Company. He was married in 1877 to Miss Julia C. Chapman, of Elgin.

ORVILLE PECKHAM, lawyer, Geneva, Ill., was born in Newport, R. I., Oct. 30, 1846, and was graduated from Brown University in 1867. In the spring of 1872 he removed to Chicago, where he has been engaged in the practice of law. Since 1892 he has made his home in Geneva.

ORA L. PELTON, physician and surgeon, Elgin, Ill., born at Sherman, Chautauqua County, N. Y., in 1851; educated in the public schools and at the University of Michigan, graduating from the medical department of the latter institution in the class of 1872; graduated from Bellevue Hospital Medical College (New York) in 1874; studied at the University of Edinburg, Scotland, during the year 1875; practiced ten years at Elburn, Ill.; has since been one of the leading practitioners of Elgin.

HOSEA E. PERKINS.

HOSEA E. PERKINS (deceased), retired farmer, Elgin Township, Kane County, was born Nov. 8, 1819, in Jefferson County, N. Y., but received his education in Lorain County, Ohio, whither his parents removed when he was seven years old. His residence was maintained in Ohio until 1841, when he removed to Kane County, Ill., where he worked on a farm and taught school for some three years. At the end of that period he bought a farm about three miles south of Elgin, which continued to be his home for the remainder of his life. In 1894 his health failed, and he afterward lived a retired and quiet life. For a number of years Mr. Perkins served as Supervisor and Assistant Supervisor of his Township, and for twenty years was School Trustee. In 1849 he married Mary A. Bishop, who died in 1850, and three years later he married Elizabeth Hale, who became the mother of six children: Edson A., Harvey W., William M., Zilpha E., Albert G., and Mary E. Mrs. Elizabeth (Hale) Perkins died Jan. 11, 1868, and on June 6, 1869, Mr. Perkins contracted a third marriage, Anna J.

Marshall becoming his wife. She was the mother of seven children: Louis A., Charles F., Anna E., Frederick E., Harry B., Chester M., and Eugene R. Mr. Perkins died February 25, 1904.

REV. ANDREW PINGREE (deceased), minister Universalist church, Pingree Grove, Ill., born at Ware, N. H., July 16, 1803, and died at Pingree Grove, Ill., August 18, 1879; came to Kane County, Ill., in 1838, and in 1846, located on a farm near Pingree Grove, where he passed the remainder of his life; served as Postmaster at Pingree several years, and was County Surveyor for Kane County eighteen years; married Jan. 1, 1844, Hannah M. Curtis, of Massachusetts.

DANIEL PINGREE (deceased), physician and farmer, Pingree Grove, Ill., born at Springfield, N. H., Jan. 26, 1819; came to Kane County in 1838; graduated from the Indiana Medical College in 1849; resided at different times in Memphis, Tenn.; Placerville, Cal.; Pingree Grove, Ill., and Hico, Texas. He died at the place last mentioned, Dec. 25, 1900. He was married Nov. 10, 1859, to Jane Havenhill, of Newark, Ill.

COLUMBUS PINNEY (deceased), pioneer, was born in Springfield, Vt., in 1797, where his early life was passed. He was of an old New England family, and closely related to that from which Admiral Dewey descends. In his young manhood he went to Watertown, N. Y., where he was engaged in manufacturing until he came to Illinois in 1835. Among the noted pioneers who came in his company or about the same time were Judge John Dean Caton, afterward Chief Justice of Illinois; John Calhoun, who became founder of the first newspaper in Chicago—the "Chicago Democrat;" Gov. Joel A. Matteson, and Charles Follansbee. Mr. Pinney was at first a resident of Ottawa, but soon removed to Marseilles, and in 1838, settled in Aurora. He was a man of means and made many investments. Much of his time and attention were given to the care of his property in his later years, and almost exclusively so at the time of his death, March 17, 1874. For many years he was Collector of town taxes, and served one term as Deputy under an early Sheriff of Kane County. In 1835 he married Miss Susan McAllister, who was born in Springfield, Vt., in 1809. She died March 10, 1903. Mrs. Charles J. Metzner and Emerson D. Pinney are the only representatives of this family who are now living in Aurora.

JOHN PLAIN, banker, Aurora, Ill., born in Germany Jan. 17, 1830; educated in his native country and came to America in 1852; located in Aurora in 1853, where he has since resided and has been identified with the banking interests of that city since the early '70s, serving at the present time as President of the German American National Bank of that city. Mr. Plain was married February 12, 1857, to Susanna Leis, of Aurora.

WILLIAM B. PLATO (deceased), lawyer and legislator, was born in Genesee County, N. Y., in 1810, and was trained to a mercantile life in his native State. About 1840 he came west, establishing his home in Aurora where he read law. About 1850, with a knowledge of law largely self-acquired, he removed to Geneva, where he made his home until his death in 1873. As a lawyer Mr. Plato met with marked success. His earliest interest in politics was in the days of the Free-Soil movement, and he was elected to the State Senate on that issue in 1850, and by re-election served in the Senate until 1856—in all six years. In 1857, after the accession of Gov. William H. Bissell, Senator Plato was appointed on the Board of Commissioners to erect the State Penitentiary at Joliet. In the year 1858 he was again elected to the General Assembly as Representative from Kane County, serving one term. In 1860 he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket, and assisted in casting the vote of Illinois for Abraham Lincoln for President at his first election. While serving in the State Senate during the session of 1853, Mr. Plato was the author of the bill limiting the responsibility of railroads to $5,000 for causing death by wrongful act, neglect or default. He and Hon. Henry W. Blodgett, of Lake County, afterwards Judge of the United States District Court, while serving at the same time, alternately the one in the House and the other in the Senate, were conspicuous as the only avowed Free-Soilers in their respective Houses. Judge Plato's notable characteristics as a legislator and politician were an open candor, a sturdy integrity and a lofty patriotism, which, coupled with his well-known ability, commanded the respect of all classes—his opponents and his friends alike. He held no public office during the latter years of his life, but was recognized as an able and judicious leader in political matters, and continued practice as an attorney, as his health would permit, until his death in 1873. Plato Township, in Kane County, was named in his honor.

SAMUEL PLATT (deceased), farmer, Blackberry Township, Kane County, born in the State of New York, August 28, 1805; came to Illinois Sept. 30, 1836, locating on a farm in Blackberry Township, Kane County, the original Platt homestead still being in possession of members of the family. On March 24, 1824, he was married to Nancy McNair, and the only surviving members of their family are: Mrs. Mary Outhouse and Mrs. Sophia P. Swaine. Mr. Platt died April 13, 1850; his wife surviving until March 6, 1888.

WILLIAM VAN NEST PLUM (deceased), pioneer merchant, Aurora, Kane County, Ill., was born in New York City, Jan. 18, 1814, and died in Aurora, Ill., June 24, 1890. Mr. Plum came to Aurora about Christmas, 1840, and in 1845 was married to Helen M. Phillips, a school teacher of that city. In 1855 he formed a partnership with a Mr. Mix under the firm name of Mix & Plum, dealers in grain, coal, etc. Mr. Plum served as Mayor of Aurora one term, was a prominent member of the Masonic Order, and had the distinction of having built the first brick building on Fox River. Mr. and Mrs. Plum were the parents of three children: Kate (Mrs. George R. Wilcox), Jenny L. Plum and William V. Plum, Jr., all of whom survive and reside in Aurora.

CHARLES POPE, manufacturer, Geneva, Ill.; born in Cambridgeshire, England, in 1840; came with his parents to the United States in 1846, and was reared and educated in Chicago. In 1880 he became interested in the Geneva Grape Sugar Company, which was established in Geneva, Ill., by Mr. John Burton, and developed into an extensive industry, employing approximately 300 persons. In 1887 a much larger plant was established at Venice, Ill., near East St. Louis, Mr. Pope and his associates operating both plants until 1902, when they were transferred to the Corn Products Company. Besides building up one of the great industries of the West, Mr. Pope has been the inventor of a number of devices used in the manufacture of starch, glucose, etc.

JOSEPH C. PORTER (deceased), Civil War veteran, Aurora, Ill.; born at Charlotte, Me., July 30, 1837, son of Joel and Anna (Ells) Porter; came with his parents to Galesburg, Ill., when twelve years of age; enlisted in 1861 in the Eleventh Iowa Volunteer Infantry Regiment, serving four years and in the meantime participating in many notable engagements, including the battle of Shiloh and the siege of Vicksburg. After the war he was in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company until 1888, when he embarked in the hardware business in Aurora, and later was, for some years, in the shoe business in that city. At the time of his death, which occurred Dec. 6, 1900, he was connected with the city waterworks department of Aurora. He was married in 1867 to Miss Emma Kerr, of Galesburg.

CHARLES H. POTTER, merchant and manufacturer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Plato Township, Kane County, Sept. 14, 1851, a son of Harry E. and Mary (Griggs) Potter, and is a lineal descendant, in the paternal line, from Robert Potter, who came from Coventry, Eng., in 1634, and first settled in Roxbury, Mass., and removed in 1638 to Rhode Island, settling permanently at Warwick, where he died in 1655. The line of his ancestry is also traced through the Winsor family to Roger Williams, of Rhode Island. Mr. Potter was brought up on his father's farm, and educated in the public school and the Marengo Business College. In 1872 he came to Elgin and engaged in the grocery trade, in which he continued until 1883. That year he turned his attention to real estate and the creamery business, and is now President and Manager of the Excelsior Creamery Company, operating creameries in Illinois and Wisconsin, and in addition doing a wholesale and jobbing business in creamery products. Mr. Potter is also closely identified with the agricultural interests of Kane County as an extensive farm-owner. In 1882, in company with W. H. Hintze, he laid out what is now known as Hintze & Potter's Addition to the City of Elgin. He is an active and public-spirited citizen of Elgin, and was Water Commissioner from 1897 to 1900. He married in 1873, Elvira J. Mann, daughter of the Hon. S. S. and Caroline (Young) Mann, and they have one daughter, Alice, who is the wife of John F. Tetzner, residing in Elgin.

HARRY EDDY POTTER (deceased), pioneer Plato Township, Kane County, was born in Monroe County, N. Y., July 12, 1815, and died in Plato, Ill., Feb. 12, 1865. He was the son of Winsor and Deborah (Eddy) Potter, and grew to manhood on a farm near Java Village, N. Y. When a young man he learned the carpenter trade, and coming to Illinois in 1836, worked at his trade for a time in St. Charles, where he helped to put up some of the first buildings erected in that place. In 1840 he married Miss Mary A. Griggs, daughter of John and Ruth (Dibble) Griggs, of Plato, Ill. Her parents, who were natives of Berkshire County, Mass., came to Illinois from Ashtabula County, Ohio, in 1834. After his marriage Mr. Potter settled on a farm in Plato Township, on which he lived until his death. He had a family of six children, of whom three (1903) are now living, all residing in Elgin. The youngest son, John F., born in Plato, Dec. 1, 1861, inherited his father's mechanical gift, and became an expert carpenter and designer. He was educated in the district school of the native town and the Elgin Academy. He died April 11, 1903, leaving a widow, Grace (Dolph) Potter, and two daugh-

JOHN H. POSSON, dealer in farming implements, coal, and a practical farmer, Maple Park, Kane County, Ill., was born in Pierce Township, DeKalb County, Ill., April 25, 1875, and received his educational training in the public schools of his native locality, including a year and a half in the Hinckley High School. When he reached the age of eighteen years, on account of his father's failing health he assumed the management of the home farm. In 1896 the father sold this farm, and bought another northwest of DeKalb, to which the family removed the same year. The father died in May, 1897, and two years later John H. Posson, with his mother, sister and brother, made their home in Maple Park. In the spring of 1900 the mother died. The same year Mr. Posson started in the coal business, and the following year took on agricultural implements. Mr. Posson has served two years as Village Trustee, and has extensive fraternal connections, being associated with the Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen and the Court of Honor. Politically he is a Republican.

SAMUEL POULEY (deceased), farmer, Blackberry Township, Kane County, Ill., was born in Nottinghamshire, Eng., April 17, 1808, the son of Robert and Hannah (Godfrey) Pouley. Samuel Pouley came to Illinois in 1840, entered land in Blackberry Township, Kane County, and engaged in farming and stock-raising. He was a pioneer Baptist minister, and held meetings in school houses and private dwellings before there was a church in his township. He was one of the founders of the Free-Will Baptist church at Elburn, and through his long life one of its stanch supporters. During the last ten years of his life he lived with his son, Samuel E. He died Dec. 16, 1892, aged nearly eighty-seven years, while his widow passed away in 1902.

SAMUEL E. POULEY, dealer in coal, lumber and agricultural implements, Elburn, Ill., was born at Blackberry, Kane County, Ill., Nov. 27, 1851, and received his education in the district schools of Blackberry Township. When about thirty years old he left his father's farm, and went to Wheaton, where he was engaged in carpenter work for about four years. In 1885 he bought the old home farm, where he did general farming and dairying until 1892, when he removed to Elburn, where, after devoting about a year to carpenter work, he bought an interest in a drug-store in company with A. T. Matthewson, with whom he was associated for some five years. In 1898 he bought the agricultural implement business of H. C. Read, but a year later (1899) Mr. Read bought back a half-interest in the concern, to which, during the same year, they added the coal and lumber trade. In 1900 Mr. Read sold out to H. A. Bartlett, and the firm has built up a flourishing trade. Mr. Pouley was married March 28, 1878, to Miss Emma Humphrey, daughter of John Milton and Minerva (Miller) Humphrey, and they have had the following named children: Edna M., Edwin A., Avis, Mary Verna, Vida, Edith and Margie—all living. Mrs. Pouley is an active member of the Congregational church. (See sketch of Mr. Pouley's parents, Samuel and Almira (Hitchcock) Pouley, elsewhere in this volume.)

ORRIN D. POWELL, banker, Aurora, Ill., born at Roxbury, Delaware County, N. Y., Aug. 23, 1829, was educated in the schools of his native State, and when sixteen years of age began teaching. He was engaged in farming and merchandising in New York until 1864, when he came west and established his home in Aurora, where he was interested in mercantile pursuits and the lumber trade until 1880. In the latter year, in company with other gentlemen, he organized the Aurora National Bank, of which he became a Director and Vice-President. In 1888 he succeeded Dr. O. D. Howell, who died in that year, as President of the bank, and is still at the head of that admirably conducted financial institution. Mr. Powell was married in 1852 to Dianthe E. Maynard, of Delaware County, N. Y. Of this marriage there are two children: Mrs. Carrie E. Grant and Charles E. Powell, Cashier of the Aurora National Bank. Mrs. Powell died in 1869, subsequently Mr. Powell married Mary Donaldson, of Aurora, who died in 1873. His third marriage occurred Sept. 30, 1875, with Helen Maynard, of Delaware County, N. Y.

JOHN R. POWERS, lawyer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Elgin, April 24, 1876, son of John and Josephine (Sutton) Powers. He secured his education in the city schools, the High School and Elgin Academy, read law with Messrs. Botsford & Wayne, of Elgin, and was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court in 1897. Since that event he has practiced his profession very successfully with the exception of the period of the Spanish-American War. He enlisted in May, 1898, in the First United States Volunteer Infantry (Texas Immunes), in which he served until the close of the war, being mustered out at Galveston, Texas. He is a member of the organization of the Spanish War Veterans and the Knights of Pythias.

WILLIAM B. PLATO (deceased), lawyer and legislator, was born in Genesee County, N. Y., in 1810, and was trained to a mercantile life in his native State. About 1840 he came west, establishing his home in Aurora where he read law. About 1850, with a knowledge of law largely self-acquired, he removed to Geneva, where he made his home until his death in 1873. As a lawyer Mr. Plato met with marked success. His earliest interest in politics was in the days of the Free-Soil movement, and he was elected to the State Senate on that issue in 1850, and by re-election served in the Senate until 1856—in all six years. In 1857, after the accession of Gov. William H. Bissell, Senator Plato was appointed on the Board of Commissioners to erect the State Penitentiary at Joliet. In the year 1858 he was again elected to the General Assembly as Representative from Kane County, serving one term. In 1860 he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket, and assisted in casting the vote of Illinois for Abraham Lincoln for President at his first election. While serving in the State Senate during the session of 1853, Mr. Plato was the author of the bill limiting the responsibility of railroads to $5,000 for causing death by wrongful act, neglect or default. He and Hon. Henry W. Blodgett, of Lake County, afterwards Judge of the United States District Court, while serving at the same time, alternately the one in the House and the other in the Senate, were conspicuous as the only avowed Free-Soilers in their respective Houses. Judge Plato's notable characteristics as a legislator and politician were an open candor, a sturdy integrity and a lofty patriotism, which, coupled with his well-known ability, commanded the respect of all classes—his opponents and his friends alike. He held no public office during the latter years of his life, but was recognized as an able and judicious leader in political matters, and continued practice as an attorney, as his health would permit, until his death in 1873. Plato Township, in Kane County, was named in his honor.

SAMUEL PLATT (deceased), farmer, Blackberry Township, Kane County, born in the State of New York, August 28, 1805; came to Illinois Sept. 30, 1836, locating on a farm in Blackberry Township, Kane County, the original Platt homestead still being in possession of members of the family. On March 24, 1824, he was married to Nancy McNair, and the only surviving members of their family are: Mrs. Mary Outhouse and Mrs. Sophia P. Swaine. Mr. Platt died April 13, 1850; his wife surviving until March 6, 1888.

WILLIAM VAN NEST PLUM (deceased), pioneer merchant, Aurora, Kane County, Ill., was born in New York City, Jan. 18, 1814, and died in Aurora, Ill., June 24, 1890. Mr. Plum came to Aurora about Christmas, 1840, and in 1845 was married to Helen M. Phillips, a school teacher of that city. In 1855 he formed a partnership with a Mr. Mix under the firm name of Mix & Plum, dealers in grain, coal, etc. Mr. Plum served as Mayor of Aurora one term, was a prominent member of the Masonic Order, and had the distinction of having built the first brick building on Fox River. Mr. and Mrs. Plum were the parents of three children: Kate (Mrs. George R. Wilcox), Jenny L. Plum and William V. Plum, Jr., all of whom survive and reside in Aurora.

CHARLES POPE, manufacturer, Geneva, Ill.; born in Cambridgeshire, England, in 1840; came with his parents to the United States in 1846, and was reared and educated in Chicago. In 1880 he became interested in the Geneva Grape Sugar Company, which was established in Geneva, Ill., by Mr. John Burton, and developed into an extensive industry, employing approximately 300 persons. In 1887 a much larger plant was established at Venice, Ill., near East St. Louis, Mr. Pope and his associates operating both plants until 1902, when they were transferred to the Corn Products Company. Besides building up one of the great industries of the West, Mr. Pope has been the inventor of a number of devices used in the manufacture of starch, glucose, etc.

JOSEPH C. PORTER (deceased), Civil War veteran, Aurora, Ill.; born at Charlotte, Me., July 30, 1837, son of Joel and Anna (Ells) Porter; came with his parents to Galesburg, Ill., when twelve years of age; enlisted in 1861 in the Eleventh Iowa Volunteer Infantry Regiment, serving four years and in the meantime participating in many notable engagements, including the battle of Shiloh and the siege of Vicksburg. After the war he was in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company until 1888, when he embarked in the hardware business in Aurora, and later was, for some years, in the shoe business in that city. At the time of his death, which occurred Dec. 6, 1900, he was connected with the city waterworks department of Aurora. He was married in 1867 to Miss Emma Kerr, of Galesburg.

CHARLES H. POTTER, merchant and manufacturer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Plato Township, Kane County, Sept. 14, 1851, a son of Harry E. and Mary (Griggs) Potter, and is a lineal descendant, in the paternal line, from Robert Potter, who came from Coventry, Eng., in 1634, and first settled in Roxbury, Mass., and removed in 1638 to Rhode Island, settling permanently at Warwick, where he died in 1655. The line of his ancestry is also traced through the Winsor family to Roger Williams, of Rhode Island. Mr. Potter was brought up on his father's farm, and educated in the public school and the Marengo Business College. In 1872 he came to Elgin and engaged in the grocery trade, in which he continued until 1883. That year he turned his attention to real estate and the creamery business, and is now President and Manager of the Excelsior Creamery Company, operating creameries in Illinois and Wisconsin, and in addition doing a wholesale and jobbing business in creamery products. Mr. Potter is also closely identified with the agricultural interests of Kane County as an extensive farm-owner. In 1882, in company with W. H. Hintze, he laid out what is now known as Hintze & Potter's Addition to the City of Elgin. He is an active and public-spirited citizen of Elgin, and was Water Commissioner from 1897 to 1900. He married in 1873, Elvira J. Mann, daughter of the Hon. S. S. and Caroline (Young) Mann, and they have one daughter, Alice, who is the wife of John F. Tetzner, residing in Elgin.

HARRY EDDY POTTER (deceased), pioneer Plato Township, Kane County, was born in Monroe County, N. Y., July 12, 1815, and died in Plato, Ill., Feb. 12, 1865. He was the son of Winsor and Deborah (Eddy) Potter, and grew to manhood on a farm near Java Village, N. Y. When a young man he learned the carpenter trade, and coming to Illinois in 1836, worked at his trade for a time in St. Charles, where he helped to put up some of the first buildings erected in that place. In 1840 he married Miss Mary A. Griggs, daughter of John and Ruth (Dibble) Griggs, of Plato, Ill. Her parents, who were natives of Berkshire County, Mass., came to Illinois from Ashtabula County, Ohio, in 1834. After his marriage Mr. Potter settled on a farm in Plato Township, on which he lived until his death. He had a family of six children, of whom three (1903) are now living, all residing in Elgin. The youngest son, John F., born in Plato, Dec. 1, 1861, inherited his father's mechanical gift, and became an expert carpenter and designer. He was educated in the district school of the native town and the Elgin Academy. He died April 11, 1903, leaving a widow, Grace (Dolph) Potter, and two daugh-

JOHN H. POSSON, dealer in farming implements, coal, and a practical farmer, Maple Park, Kane County, Ill., was born in Pierce Township, DeKalb County, Ill., April 25, 1875, and received his educational training in the public schools of his native locality, including a year and a half in the Hinckley High School. When he reached the age of eighteen years, on account of his father's failing health he assumed the management of the home farm. In 1896 the father sold this farm, and bought another northwest of DeKalb, to which the family removed the same year. The father died in May, 1897, and two years later John H. Posson, with his mother, sister and brother, made their home in Maple Park. In the spring of 1900 the mother died. The same year Mr. Posson started in the coal business, and the following year took on agricultural implements. Mr. Posson has served two years as Village Trustee, and has extensive fraternal connections, being associated with the Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen and the Court of Honor. Politically he is a Republican.

SAMUEL POULEY (deceased), farmer, Blackberry Township, Kane County, Ill., was born in Nottinghamshire, Eng., April 17, 1808, the son of Robert and Hannah (Godfrey) Pouley. Samuel Pouley came to Illinois in 1840, entered land in Blackberry Township, Kane County, and engaged in farming and stock-raising. He was a pioneer Baptist minister, and held meetings in school houses and private dwellings before there was a church in his township. He was one of the founders of the Free-Will Baptist church at Elburn, and through his long life one of its stanch supporters. During the last ten years of his life he lived with his son, Samuel E. He died Dec. 16, 1892, aged nearly eighty-seven years, while his widow passed away in 1902.

SAMUEL E. POULEY, dealer in coal, lumber and agricultural implements, Elburn, Ill., was born at Blackberry, Kane County, Ill., Nov. 27, 1851, and received his education in the district schools of Blackberry Township. When about thirty years old he left his father's farm, and went to Wheaton, where he was engaged in carpenter work for about four years. In 1885 he bought the old home farm, where he did general farming and dairying until 1892, when he removed to Elburn, where, after devoting about a year to carpenter work, he bought an interest in a drug-store in company with A. T. Matthewson, with whom he was associated for some five years. In 1898 he bought the agricultural implement business of H. C. Read, but a year later (1899) Mr. Read bought back a half-interest in the concern, to which, during the same year, they added the coal and lumber trade. In 1900 Mr. Read sold out to H. A. Bartlett, and the firm has built up a flourishing trade. Mr. Pouley was married March 28, 1878, to Miss Emma Humphrey, daughter of John Milton and Minerva (Miller) Humphrey, and they have had the following named children: Edna M., Edwin A., Avis, Mary Verna, Vida, Edith and Margie—all living. Mrs. Pouley is an active member of the Congregational church. (See sketch of Mr. Pouley's parents, Samuel and Almira (Hitchcock) Pouley, elsewhere in this volume.)

ORRIN D. POWELL, banker, Aurora, Ill., born at Roxbury, Delaware County, N. Y., Aug. 23, 1829, was educated in the schools of his native State, and when sixteen years of age began teaching. He was engaged in farming and merchandising in New York until 1864, when he came west and established his home in Aurora, where he was interested in mercantile pursuits and the lumber trade until 1880. In the latter year, in company with other gentlemen, he organized the Aurora National Bank, of which he became a Director and Vice-President. In 1888 he succeeded Dr. O. D. Howell, who died in that year, as President of the bank, and is still at the head of that admirably conducted financial institution. Mr. Powell was married in 1852 to Dianthe E. Maynard, of Delaware County, N. Y. Of this marriage there are two children: Mrs. Carrie E. Grant and Charles E. Powell, Cashier of the Aurora National Bank. Mrs. Powell died in 1869, subsequently Mr. Powell married Mary Donaldson, of Aurora, who died in 1873. His third marriage occurred Sept. 30, 1875, with Helen Maynard, of Delaware County, N. Y.

JOHN R. POWERS, lawyer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Elgin, April 24, 1876, son of John and Josephine (Sutton) Powers. He secured his education in the city schools, the High School and Elgin Academy, read law with Messrs. Botsford & Wayne, of Elgin, and was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court in 1897. Since that event he has practiced his profession very successfully with the exception of the period of the Spanish-American War. He enlisted in May, 1898, in the First United States Volunteer Infantry (Texas Immunes), in which he served until the close of the war, being mustered out at Galveston, Texas. He is a member of the organization of the Spanish War Veterans and the Knights of Pythias.

DEWITT C. PRATT (deceased), photographer, born in New York State, and died in Aurora, Ill., Aug. 24, 1903; came west in 1845, and in the fall of 1849 opened a daguerreotype gallery at St. Charles, Ill.; established a gallery in Aurora in 1851, and removed to Geneva in 1853. In later years he became widely known as a photographer, and the business which he founded is still in existence, being conducted by his son, Edmund C. Pratt.

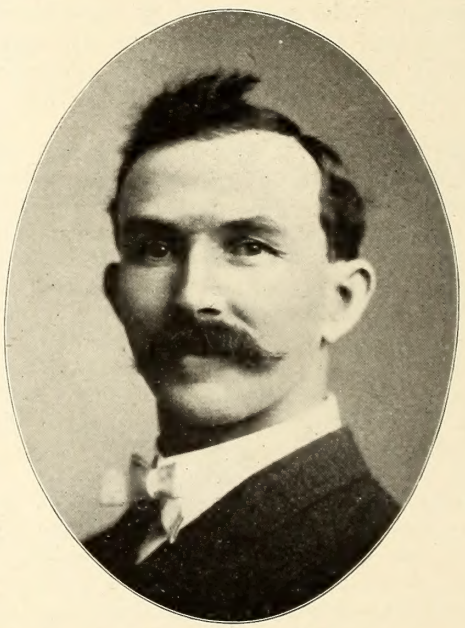
HENRY M. PRATT, editor, Dundee, Ill., born in Washington County, N. Y., Dec. 17, 1864; came west with his parents when seven years of age and located first in Michigan; acquired his first newspaper experience in Hanover, Mich.; came to Dundee, Ill., in 1890, where he has since been identified with the "Carpentersville News." Mr. Pratt was married Nov. 15, 1892, to Miss Minnie Kruse, of Elgin.

MAURICE PRICE, pioneer settler, Big Rock, Ill., born in Wales, Nov. 15, 1810; came to the United States in 1830, locating first in New York; came to Chicago in 1835, where he helped to build some of the first streets of that city; removed to Kane County in the spring of 1836, settling on land in Big Rock Township, where he still resides (1903) on the farm he originally purchased from the Government, it being one of the first pieces of land improved in Big Rock Township; was one of the founders and builders of the first church in Big Rock; married first Hannah Livingston, and after her death, Maria Davis, both of Big Rock.

WILLIAM PRICE (deceased), pioneer settler, born in the County of Westmeath, Ireland, July 4, 1814; came with an older brother to Canada in 1831, removing to Kane County, Ill., in 1841, where he became well known as a progressive farmer and successful manager of affairs; married in 1843, Miss Mary Smith, who died Aug. 23, 1900, and their living children are: M. Minnie, George W., William W., Mrs. Nancy Berry, Mrs. Janet Benton, Hugh, and Mrs. Jessie Cornell. Mr. Price died Aug. 27, 1903.

ISAAC W. PRICHARD, physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., was born in Oneida County, N. Y., educated at Rome, N. Y., and graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Michigan in 1868; later made special study in the Long Island Medical Hospital at Brooklyn and the City Hospital of New York, beginning the practice of his profession at Kaneville, Kane County, Ill. For thirty-five years he has been a hard and faithful worker in his chosen calling, has been a contributor to the medical press, and since 1899 has been Supreme Medical Examiner for the Yeomen of America, also officiates in a similar capacity in several other orders, including the Maccabees and the Odd Fellows. Dr. Prichard was married in 1870 to Miss Effie I. Coy, daughter of B. A. Coy, of Kaneville, Ill. Mrs. Prichard died in 1875, leaving one child, Mrs. Charles Smith, of Sac City, Iowa. In 1878 Dr. Prichard married Miss Annie Waterbury, daughter of James S. Waterbury, of Neosha Falls, Kans. Their children are Lillie M., James E. (the latter a student of medicine at the present time—1903), and Perry Anita June.



ALBRO B. PRINDLE, manufacturer, Batavia, Ill., born in Chicago, April 22, 1869, son of James P. and Mary (Cornell) Prindle; came with his parents in 1874 to Batavia, Ill., where he was reared and educated, graduating from the West Batavia High School in 1887. He attended Jennings Seminary in Aurora, and then became connected with the Chicago office of the Plano Manufacturing Company, where he was employed until 1892. That year he returned to Batavia and entered the employ of the Newton Wagon Company, of which he became Superintendent in 1897, a position he still retains. He is a member of the Garden City Council, No. 202, R. A., of Chicago. In 1894 he married Miss Bertha M., daughter of W. J. Hollister, of Batavia.

EDWARD T. PRINDLE (deceased), manufacturer and inventor, Aurora, Ill., was born in Litchfield County, Conn., Nov. 26, 1826, and died in Aurora, Jan. 30, 1900. His father, Philemon Prindle, was of an old Connecticut family; his mother's maiden name was Sybil M. Root. Mr. Prindle was bred a machinist at Skeneateles, N. Y., in 1850 came to Detroit, Mich., and found employment in a factory operated by Col. F. G. Hammond, which he afterward leased and operated until he entered the employ of the Michigan Central Railroad Company. When Colonel Hammond became General Superintendent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, Mr. Prindle was put in charge of the Galesburg shops; in 1859 was transferred to Aurora as foreman of the locomotive department, later became Division Master Mechanic, but in 1873 resigned to become General Superintendent of the Machinery Department of Crane Brothers Elevator Works in Chicago. At the end of a year and a half he gave up this position to become a patent solicitor at Washington, D. C.; in 1876 he came back to Aurora to form the Wilcox Manufacturing Works, in company with W. Wilcox, then master mechanic of the Burlington Car Shops; later he established the Prindle Manufacturing Company, and was its Vice-President and Superintendent until his retirement from business. He invented several articles of merit, among them a carpet-sweeper widely known, and also a door-hanger now much used. He belonged to the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, and was one of the organizers of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Aid Association. He married Miss Louisa Clay, who was born and reared in Detroit, Mich., and who survives her husband, still living in Aurora. Their living children are: William E., Elgin; Fred J., of Cleveland, Ohio; and Frank, George F. and Winslow W., of Aurora, Ill.

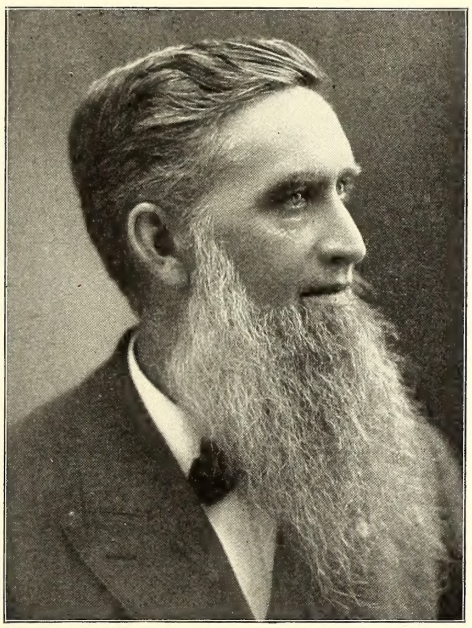
JAMES P. PRINDLE, retired manufacturer, Batavia, Kane County, Ill.; born at Bennington, Wyoming County, N. Y., March 9, 1841, son of Abijah L. and Miriam (Pearl) Prindle; educated in the schools of his native State, Clark Seminary (Aurora, Ill.) and the Seminary at Batavia, Ill. In September, 1861, he enlisted in Company D, Fifty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and, on account of physical disability, was mustered out of the service in 1862. Returning to his home in Batavia, he taught school for a while, and in 1864 entered the employ of Easter & Gammon, Chicago, dealers in agricultural implements. In 1866 he became junior member of the firm of Gammon & Prindle, dealers in agricultural implements, Chicago, and manufacturers of the Marsh Harvester, at Plano, Ill. This partnership was dissolved in 1868, and Mr. Prindle became a member of the firm of Bishop & Prindle, manufacturers of wagons, Chicago. In 1874 he became interested in the Newton Wagon Company, of Batavia, Ill., where he established his home. Mr. Prindle was superintendent of this enterprise for twenty years, and is now its Vice-President; was also Vice-President of the Plano Manufacturing Company from 1892 to 1902, and still retains an interest in that well-known establishment. The settlement of the estate of Elijah H. Gammon, the noted manufacturer and public benefactor, has occupied a large portion of his time in later years. In 1866 he married Miss Mary Bishop Cornell, who was born in Pennsylvania but reared in Chicago. Mrs. Prindle's father was Dr. S. S. Cornell, and his early home in Chicago adjoined the historic First Methodist church, corner of Clark and Washington Streets. After her father's death, Mrs. Prindle's mother married A. E. Bishop, widely known as a Chicago wagon manufacturer.



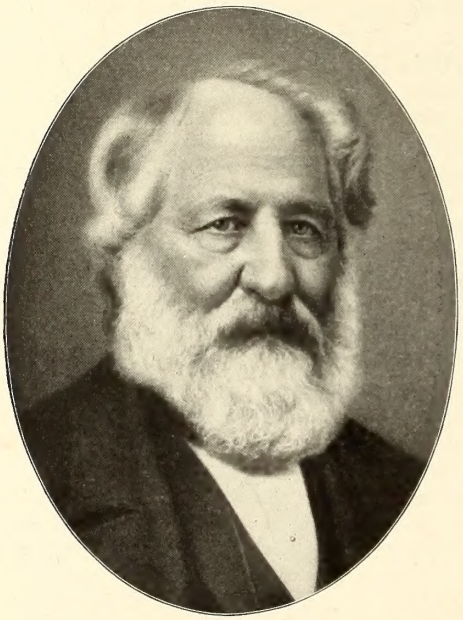
JAMES P. PRINDLE, JR., Batavia, Kane County, Ill., born in the city where he now resides, June 27, 1876, son of James P. and Mary (Cornell) Prindle; was reared in his native city, where he obtained his preparatory education, and afterwards attended Allegheny College, Meadville, Penn., graduating from that institution in the class of 1898. After traveling in Europe for several months, he returned to Batavia and entered the employ of the United States Wind Engine & Pump Company, with which he holds a responsible position. In 1901 Mr. Prindle married Miss Elizabeth Patton of Hartstown, Penn.

JOHN M. PURDUM.

JOHN M. PURDUM, merchant, Batavia, Ill.; born in Chillicothe, Ohio, May 22, 1864, son of John and Christina (Campbell) Purdum; was reared and educated in Ohio, and in early life was engaged in farming in that State. In 1894

he came from Ohio to Batavia, Ill., where he established himself in the boot and shoe trade the following year, which he is still conducting. He is the inventor of a patented stool for fitting shoes, which is widely known and used by the trade. In 1901 he was elected a member of the Batavia Board of Aldermen, and in 1903 was the "no license" candidate for Mayor. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, a Mason, a Modern Woodman and a member of the Knights of the Globe. In 1895 he married Miss Ada Niles, a teacher in the West Batavia public schools. Mr. Purdum was left an orphan at the age of eleven years. His father, while serving in the War of the Rebellion, contracted a disease from which he never recovered.

MARVIN QUACKENBUSH.

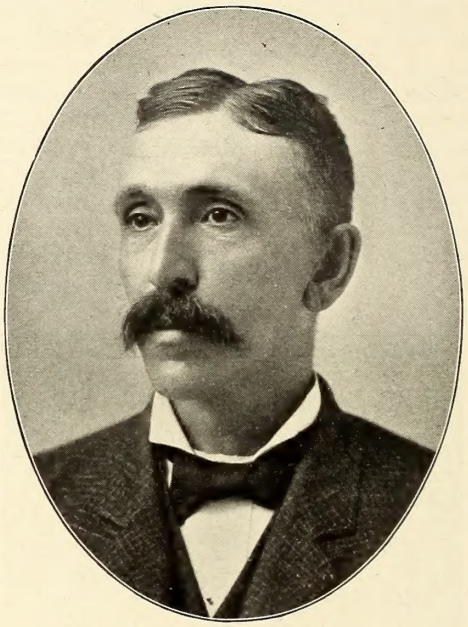


MARVIN QUACKENBUSH, Superintendent Public Schools, Kane County, Dundee, Ill., was born in Hartwick, Otsego County, N. Y., Nov. 25, 1842, and came with his parents on their removal to Kane County in 1849, where he received his education in the public schools and Clark Seminary at Aurora, finishing at Bryant & Stratton Business College, Chicago. He was employed in teaching until 1865, when he enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Fifty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was discharged July 31, 1865, at Murfreesboro, Tenn., on account of disability. For twenty years from 1866 he was actively engaged in teaching, and in 1886 was elected Superintendent of the Kane County Public Schools, in which position he served until his death, April 18, 1903. In politics he was a Republican, and fraternally was a member of the Dundee Post, G. A. R., was also a Director of the Modern Woodmen of America, and a Knight Templar.

GEORGE W. QUEREAU (deceased), educator, born at Stanford, N. Y., June 9, 1827; came to Aurora in 1859 and accepted the position of Principal of Jennings (then Clark) Seminary, serving in that capacity until 1873, and the prosperity of this institution is largely due to his successful management; was general manager of the Aurora Silver Plate Company for several years. Mr. Quereau died April 11, 1900.

JAMES G. RALPH, contractor and inventor, Aurora, Kane County, Ill., was born in Philadelphia, Penn., Aug. 29, 1831, and in early childhood removed with his father's family to Wilmington, Del., where he received his educational training. Returning to Philadelphia when seventeen years of age, he there learned the carpenter's trade, and came west in 1855, locating at Mendota, Ill., where he first engaged in the carriage manufacturing business; later became a contractor and builder, and also conducted a farm. In 1862 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served in the Union ranks until after the battle of Atlanta in 1864, when, having sustained a severe wound in that engagement, he was shortly afterwards discharged on account of physical disability. He then returned to Illinois, and for two or three years afterward was employed in the shops of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company at Aurora, meanwhile serving one term as Collector of that city. In 1870 he engaged in contracting and building, and for more than thirty years was one of the most prominent men identified with that line of business in this section of the State. Many of the most notable public buildings, business blocks and residences in Aurora are monuments to Mr. Ralph's enterprise and ability, and his operations have extended over much adjacent territory. He retired from active business life in 1901. Mr.

Ralph is the inventor of a combined fly-screen and a storm construction for doors and windows, which promises to be largely adopted by building trades. In 1857 he was married to Miss Mary Amanda Beck, sister of the late Judge Beck of the Supreme Court of Colorado. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Ralph, now living, are: Mrs. C. W. Marshall, Frank H. and Grace A.—all of Aurora. One daughter, formerly the wife of Judge R. P. Goodwin, of Aurora, died in 1888.



JOHN RANSTEAD (deceased), pioneer farmer and legislator, born in Westmoreland, N. H., in 1803, grew to manhood in his native State, where he obtained a superior education for those days. He married Mercy West, who was a native of Vermont, and came with his family to Illinois in 1837. Mr. Ranstead was ton, Vt. Reared on the farm, he was educated in the old-time subscription school of Kane County; later attended Elgin Academy, and in 1863 graduated from Lombard University, Galesburg, Ill. In 1866 he graduated from the Law Department, University of Michigan, and two years later began legal practice in Elgin. In 1873 he was elected Judge, serving in that capacity nine successive years, by which time his clientage had so increased that he retired from public life to devote his entire attention to its demands. For many years he has been associated with the banking interests of Elgin, and is now (1903) President of the Home National Bank, and a Director of the Home Savings Bank. In 1867 he was married to Miss Eugenia A. Fuller, daughter of Rev. J. P. and Adeline (Cady) Fuller, of Galesburg, Ill.

NATHANIEL RATLIFFE, retired, Batavia, Ill., was born in England, March 14, 1840, where he was reared and educated; mastering the shoemaker's trade, he located in Batavia, Ill., and two years later enlisted in the Union army, being re-enlisted Aug. 10, 1862, in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. His regiment became part of the Western Army, and with it he participated in many fierce and bloody struggles, being in the siege of Vicksburg, the Black River campaign, the battles of Champion Hills, Port Gibson, Ringgold, Jackson, Spanish Fort, and others less important. He was mustered out at Chicago in August, 1865, and after three years of devoted service for his adopted country, he returned to Batavia, at once resuming his trade, and making that city his home to the present time. In 1866 he married Miss Anna Perry, of Batavia.

GEORGE RATHZ, Catholic clergyman, Batavia, Ill., was born in the City of New York, July 19, 1851. His parents came to Illinois in 1856, where the son received his early education, graduating from the High School at the age of sixteen. He then took a classical course at St. Francis' Seminary in Milwaukee, Wis., and was later graduated from the theological department of that institution. He was ordained a priest by Bishop Foley, of Chicago, June 26, 1877, and appointed curate of St. Jarlath's church in Chicago, where he remained until he was appointed first pastor of St. John's church at Savanna, Ill. While on this charge he built two churches and one pastoral residence. From there he was transferred to South Chicago, and became pastor of St. Peter and St. Paul's church. He paid off a part of the debt on this church, built a Sisters' residence and enlarged the schools. In 1893 he was sent to the Holy Cross church at Batavia, and it has prospered greatly under his administration. He began the building of the present handsome church in Batavia in 1896, and it was dedicated the following year. Gothic in style, and of solid stone, it is one of the noblest structures in the Fox River Valley.

NEEDHAM N. RAVLIN (deceased), farmer, Kaneville, Ill., born March 8, 1823, in Shoreham, Vt., came to Kane County, Ill., with his parents in 1845, where his father secured one hundred acres of public land, on a portion of which the village of Kaneville now stands. After the death of the father, Needham N. Ravlin bought out the other heirs, and during his active years added other tracts to it until he became an extensive land-owner. He was the first postmaster at Kaneville, and in 1868 was elected to the Illinois House of Representatives. For twenty-seven years he was Supervisor for Kaneville Township. He served as School Director, Town Clerk and Trustee, and was a man of much influence in the councils of the Republican party, of which he was an active and devoted member. He was married in 1849 to Miss Frances A. West, who was born in England, and came to the United States in 1831. They have had a family of three boys and two girls. Mr. Ravlin was a member of the Baptist church and the Masonic fraternity. He died Dec. 8, 1899.

CHARLES W. RAYMOND, Elgin, Ill., born in the city where he now resides, Oct. 21, 1852, son of George B. and Mary (Weston) Raymond; educated in the public schools of Elgin and St. Anthony Military Academy (St. Anthony, Minn.); was engaged in the lumber trade in Elgin until 1893; elected County Clerk of Kane County in 1894 and filled that office until 1898; was President of the Board of Water Commissioners of Elgin. Since 1898 he has been in the hardwood lumber trade in Chicago. Mr. Raymond was married in 1875 to Miss Agnes R. Graham, daughter of Charles and Isabella (Campbell) Graham, of Elgin.

FRED H. RAYMOND, lawyer, Elgin, Ill., born in Philadelphia, Penn., March 29, 1867, and when one year old came west with his mother, who first established her home in Elgin, but later in Woodstock. Here the son attended public school and, until sixteen years of age, lived on a farm. He very justly regards himself a self-educated man. In 1884 he went to Kansas, where he remained two years, making extensive trips in the meantime into Colorado, New Mexico and other portions of the Southwest. In the spring of 1886 he came back to Elgin, where he took a place with the National Watch Factory, which he held until 1892. For a time he devoted his attention to the oil business in Elgin, and was later engaged in business in Chicago. From 1893 to 1895 he was the traveling representative of a Chicago piano house, when he began the study of law with Frank W. Joslyn, of Elgin, and, after three years' study, was admitted to the bar in 1898, and soon became junior partner in the firm of Joslyn & Raymond. In 1902 Mr. Raymond opened an office in Chicago, and the following year (May 1, 1903) terminated his partnership with Mr. Joslyn at Elgin. He is now alone in his practice, maintaining offices in both cities. His practice is general in character and has grown rapidly. Mr. Raymond is a Director in the Smoke Preventing Company, of Chicago, and is closely associated with several other corporations as attorney and counselor. He is a member of the Order of Elks and in March, 1903, was elected Exalted Ruler of Elgin Lodge, No. 737, and in August, 1903, was elected Treasurer of the Illinois Elks Association. In 1880 Mr. Raymond married Mary B. McQueeny, daughter of John and Ellen McQueeny, of Elgin.

JOHN M. RAYMOND.

JOHN M. RAYMOND, lawyer and Mayor, Aurora, Ill., was born in Bristol, Kendall County, Ill., Dec. 24, 1858, a son of C. H. Raymond, a pioneer settler and a prominent citizen of that county, and descendant of an old New England family. John M. obtained his early education in the local schools, and later was a student at the Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial School, and the State University of Iowa, graduating from the Law Department of the latter in 1884. For several years he taught school, for four years being principal at St. Charles, Ill. Mr. Raymond began the practice of law in Aurora in 1889 as an associate of Judge M. O. Southworth. In 1890 he retired from this partnership, and for thirteen years was alone in practice, after which he became senior member of the firm of Raymond & Newhall, which soon became one of the leading firms of the city Mr. Raymond is actively interested in local and county politics, and is recognized as one of the leaders among the younger Republicans of the State. Until 1903 he declined all offers of political preferment, but that year accepted the nomination for Mayor, and after a sharp contest was elected over two competitors. Mr. Raymond is a member of the West Side Board of Education, is a Thirty-second-degree Mason, and a noble of the Mystic Shrine. He was one of the founders of the Aurora lodge of Elks, which is noted as one of the strongest in the State. He is a Director of the First National Bank, a large land-owner and practical farmer. LUKE E. REILLY, farmer, Kaneville Township, Kane County, was born in Elburn, Kane County, Nov. 13, 1859, and was educated in the public schools of that locality. Farming has been his life business, with the exception of one year spent in the railroad business, being then in the employ of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway. He has bought a farm three miles southeast of Maple Park. Mr. Reilly belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and Geneva Lodge of Knights of Pythias. He was married Dec. 30, 1884, to Miss Kate Simons, by whom he has had seven children—five sons and two daughters.

FRED A. REIS, merchant, Batavia, Ill., born in Heidelberg, Germany, May 30, 1850; educated in the famous schools of his native city, where he was also trained to mercantile pursuits; came to the United States in 1871, and established his present business enterprise in Batavia in 1884; was also interested in manufacturing in Batavia for a time, but of late has devoted his attention entirely to his mercantile establishment. He was married in 1893 to Miss Jessie Baer, of Whitewater, Wis.

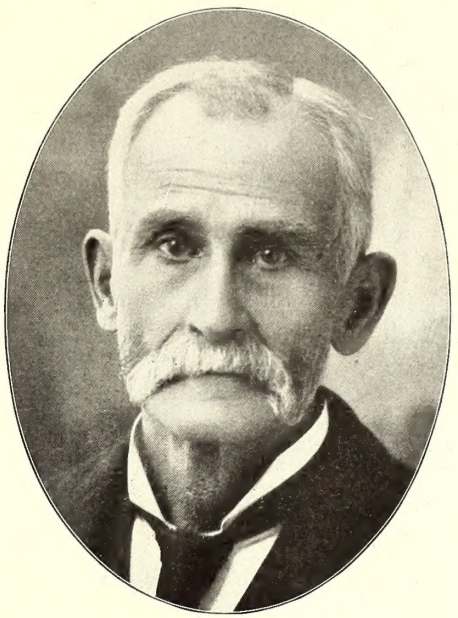
JOHN REISING, merchant and manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., born in Germany, Nov. 13, 1831; came to America in 1848, locating in Chicago the following year, where he worked as a carpenter and builder; crossed the plains to California in 1850, and worked in the placer mines until 1854, when he returned to Aurora, Ill., and engaged in carpenter work for one year, and in 1856 established himself in the grocery business, which he conducted until 1862, changing to the hardware trade in the latter year and continuing in that capacity until 1882. Since the latter date he has conducted a crockery store. He is a Director of the Aurora Silver Plate Company; is interested in the Aurora Cotton Mills, and is a Director of the First National Bank; was married in 1854 to Miss Susan Leis, of Aurora.

JOSEPH REISING.

JOSEPH REISING (deceased), merchant, Aurora, was born in Watenheim, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, Sept. 28, 1829, where he was educated in the local schools. In 1845 he came to the United States when only sixteen years of age, and apprenticed himself to a boot and shoemaker in Cleveland, Ohio, where he spent five years in learning the trade. In 1850 he located in Aurora, but the following year he joined a party of gold-hunters, and made the overland trip to Portland, Oregon, where for four years he was engaged in mining. In 1855 he returned to Aurora with capital enough to embark in the boot and shoe trade, and until his death, in 1893, he was one of the leading merchants of the city in that line. A man of enterprise and public spirit, he took part in many important industrial enterprises of the city, being largely interested in the Aurora cotton mills, of which he was a Director and stockholder. For several years he served on the Kane County Board of Supervisors, and helped give the county its splendid system of public highways. In 1855 he married Miss Maria M. Schmidt, who was born in Alsace, Germany. Their only living child is Mrs. Anna R. Hartz, of Aurora. Another daughter, Mrs. Jacob Eye, of Aurora, died in 1902.

In his early manhood he was employed on the Erie Canal, and in 1843 removed to Illinois, settling on a farm in Plato Township, Kane County. For eighteen years he made his home on this farm, and then removed to Dundee, where (1903) he is now living at the age of eighty-seven years. For many years he was a member of the Methodist church, but is now connected with the Congregational church. He was married in 1837 to Miss Phylecta Soule, of a noted New England ancestry, and of their nine children, all but one were living in 1903.

EBENEZER RETAN, Elgin, Ill.; born in New Jersey, in 1825; reared in New York State and came to Illinois in 1857, locating in Elgin, where he engaged in the business of loaning money, which he has continued up to the present time. He married, in 1854, Miss Phoebe Miller, of New York State.



SILAS REYNOLDS (deceased), pioneer, Sugar Grove, Kane County, Ill., was born in Sullivan County, N. Y., in 1810, and brought up in his native State, where he was trained to agricultural pursuits; came west in the spring of 1836, establishing his home in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, his family being among the first to locate in that community. Mr. Reynolds purchased his first land from the Government, and subsequently added to his original tract until he became one of the most extensive land-owners of the county. He had various interests in addition to his land holdings, and was active in promoting the material prosperity of the county from the time of his settlement among the pioneers until his death, which occurred in 1889. He was married in 1835 to Miss Jane Van Dover, of Ulster County, N. Y., who died in 1885. In 1903 the living children of this pioneer family were Joseph, Isaac, Mrs. Elizabeth (Reynolds) Judd, Mrs. Olive (Reynolds) Hess, Miss Grace Reynolds, and Mrs. Minnie (Reynolds) Owens.

JOSHUA RHODES, pioneer farmer, Big Rock Township, Kane County, was born in Oldham, Eng., in 1800, and died in Aurora in 1891. He came to the United States in 1818, and for a time was employed in a woolen mill in Boston, Mass., coming thence to Illinois, and making his home in Big Rock Township, Kane County, in 1838. Purchasing land from the Government, he converted it into the fine farm on which he lived until about 1885, when he removed to Aurora. The old farm is still in possession of his son, Joshua H. Rhodes, of Aurora. Mr. Rhodes was Town Clerk and Postmaster at Big Rock Center for many years, and was conspicuous among the pioneers of that early day for his sterling character and genuine worth. His wife, who was born in Wales, bore the name of Martha Powell before her marriage. She died in 1876.

RUSSELL RICHARDSON (deceased), manufacturer, born at Watertown, N. Y., March 20, 1835; came with his parents to Aurora, Ill., in 1843; in 1862 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until the close of the war. Returning to Aurora after the close of the war, he engaged in contracting and building, which had previously been his occupation. He later engaged in the lumber trade and established a sash, door and blind factory at Aurora and Little Rock, Ark. Mr. Richardson was married in 1859 to Miss Eliza Akers, and their living children are: Charles R., William A. and Harry H. Mr. Richardson died June 12, 1894; his wife still survives.

JOHN D. RICE (deceased), in his life-time a prominent merchant of Aurora, born in Western New York, Dec. 16, 1825, was educated in the local schools, and was trained a decorator and painter. For twenty years he followed his trade in Kalamazoo, Mich., and for four years in Chicago; in 1869 he established the firm of J. D. Rice & Son in Aurora, a firm that is still in existence. For more than thirty years Mr.

JOHN D. RICE.

Rice was conspicuous among the business men of Aurora, where he died Nov. 2, 1902. Miss Charlotte Howland became his first wife, and died leaving one son, W. H. S. Rice, who joined his father in business after leaving school, and is now the head of the firm. In 1862 Mr. Rice married Miss Mary A. Collins, also of Kalamazoo. The only child of this union, Helen, died when twelve and a half years old. Mrs. Mary A. Rice died Jan. 3, 1904. Mr. Rice was an elder in the Presbyterian church in Aurora for many years, and was always active in its behalf.

BRADFORD G. RICHMOND, Cashier Kane County Bank, Elburn, Ill., was born April 19, 1850, at Campton, Kane County, and educated in the home schools. He was reared a farmer but was engaged in the grocery business for two years at DeKalb, which he disposed of because his wife's failing health necessitated a change of climate. They went to Southern California, where he carried on a contracting and building business for two years, then returning to Elburn, for the next five years he was in the coal and fuel business with G. W. Robinson. He took an active part in the inauguration of the Kane County Bank, and became its Cashier, a position which he still holds. He was married March 6, 1872, to Miss May L., daughter of William H. and Myron Robinson. Mr. Richmond has been President of the village of Elburn for some years and was a member of the Board of Aldermen several years. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

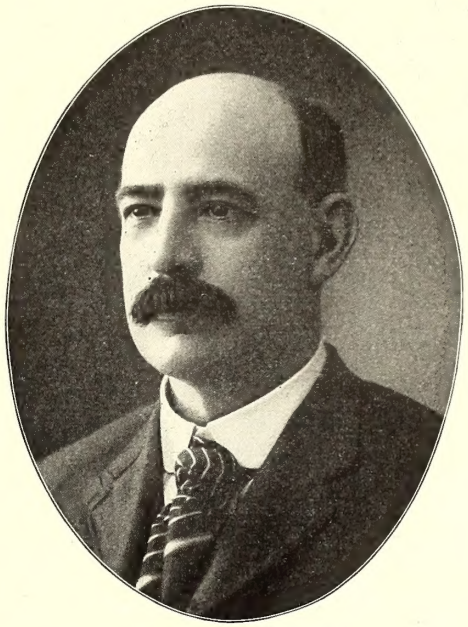
CAPT. JAMES F. RICHMOND, attorney, St. Charles, Ill., born at South Lee, Mass., Nov. 9, 1839; obtained his preliminary education in his native State and Appleton, Wis., and later attended the University of Michigan (Ann Arbor); admitted to the bar in July, 1868; came to St. Charles with his parents in 1856; served in Company E, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, during the Civil War, being first elected First Lieutenant of his company, and in July, 1864, was promoted to Captain. Captain Richmond has practiced his profession since 1868. He was married Sept. 14, 1871, to Miss Ellen Ferson, of St. Charles.

DENNIS W. RIORDAN (deceased), manufacturer, Elburn, Kane County, Ill., born in Bradford, Eng., April 8, 1853, and in childhood came with his father's family to Chicago, where he received his educational training in the public schools and Jesuit College. Mr. Riordan was trained in the manufacturing business as an employe of the United States Rolling Stock Company and with Armour & Company. In 1888 he engaged in the manufacture of refrigerator cars, continuing the business until his death, which occurred April 9, 1897. In 1883 he was married to Miss Helen Donovan, and in the same year established his home in Elburn, where Mrs. Riordan still resides.

FRANK H. ROBINSON, dental surgeon, Aurora, Ill., born in Aurora, Dec. 6, 1851, son of James Robinson, an early settler of Kane County, was educated in Aurora and Philadelphia schools, studied dentistry under Dr. O. Wilson as preceptor in 1869, and later in both Philadelphia and Chicago, receiving the degree of D. D. S. from Chicago Dental College, as a post-graduate student. He began his dental practice in Aurora in 1874, and has come to be a leader in his profession in Northern Illinois; is a member of the Northern Illinois Dental Society. In 1875 he married Miss Delia L. Clayton, daughter of O. D. Clayton, an old-time jeweler of Aurora.

GEORGE W. ROBINSON, merchant, Elburn, Ill.; born in Virgil Township, Kane County, Ill., Aug. 18, 1857; educated in the public schools of Virgil Township, and began his business career in the gents' furnishing goods business; in 1884 engaged in the coal and agricultural implement trade at Elburn in partnership with B. G. Richmond, and in 1891, in partnership with L. D. Kendall, succeeded H. B. Jay & Co. in the mercantile business. He was married on Oct. 3, 1877, to Emma T. Kendall.



FRANK ROCKWELL, Postmaster and educator, St. Charles, Ill., was born in Plato Township, Kane County, Nov. 20, 1861, son of H. T. and Mary (Stone) Rockwell; was brought to St. Charles by his parents when an infant. He graduated from the local High School, and was a student of the Northern Indiana Normal School, at Valparaiso, Ind. For twelve years, after leaving college in 1882, he taught school, in the meantime having purchased an interest in a drug-store in company with his father-in-law, J. S. Van Patten, which he still retains. He was appointed Postmaster at St. Charles by President McKinley in 1898, and reappointed by President Roosevelt in 1902. Mr. Rockwell was married in March, 1885, to Mabel, daughter of J. S. and Jane Van Patten, of St. Charles.

HENRY T. ROCKWELL, insurance agent, St. Charles, Ill., was born in Clarendon, Orleans County, N. Y., Sept. 13, 1835, the son of David J. and Ruth (Keeler) Rockwell, the former born in Bethel, Conn., in 1803, and the latter a native of Saratoga, N. Y., where she was reared to womanhood. Mr. Rockwell grew to manhood in his native State, and was educated at Akron, N. Y., after which, removing to Illinois in 1855, he there engaged in teaching for about ten years. He carried on his profession as a teacher in conjunction with farming during a part of the year until 1862, when he turned his attention to the insurance business, which he has continued to the present time, although maintaining his interest in farming operations. At the present time he is one of the oldest and most experienced insurance agents in Kane County. Mr. Rockwell has held a number of public offices, including those of Circuit Clerk and ex-officio Recorder of Deeds for Kane County for one term (1872-76); Township Supervisor for five years, for one year of that period being Chairman of the Board, and Mayor of the city of St. Charles two terms. During President Benjamin Harrison's administration he served as Postmaster of St. Charles. An ardent Republican in politics, for twenty years he has been the Kane County representative on the Central Committee for his Congressional District (now the Eleventh), upon which he has served several years as Chairman, and of which he is still a member. The importance of this position is indicated by the fact that Kane County is the most populous and strongest Republican County in the Eleventh Congressional District. Mr. Rockwell was married in 1860 to Miss Mary Stone, who died in 1871, leaving two children, Frank and Hattie. The latter is now Mrs. Baker, while the son, Frank Rockwell, is the present Postmaster at St. Charles, Ill. In 1872 Mr. Rockwell was married to his present wife, who, previous to her marriage was Miss Emma Osgood. In his fraternal associations Mr. Rockwell is connected with the Odd Fellows and Masonic Order. Though not a member, he is an attendant upon the services of the Congregational church, of which he is a trustee.

JAMES ROCKWELL (deceased), pioneer settler, Batavia, Kane County, Ill.; born at Ridgefield, Conn., Nov. 9, 1812, and died in Batavia, Ill., July 25, 1899; received his educational training in the schools of his native village, where he also learned the cabinet-maker's trade; came to Chicago in 1834, and was one of the earliest furniture manufacturers of that city, employing a force of twelve men for a time, which was considered a large number in those days; in 1838, came to Batavia, where he was engaged in the furniture trade and merchandising until 1885, when he retired from business. Mr. Rockwell assisted in organizing the first Methodist church in Chicago, and also the first church of that denomination in Batavia. He was twice married, his first union being with Miss Margaret Van Nortwick, of New York State, in 1838, and, after her death, to Miss Susan Grow, who was also a native of the Empire State.

EUGENE F. ROGERS, Elgin, Circuit Clerk and journalist, was born Dec. 19, 1859, in Plato Township, Kane County, Ill., son of Nelson and Sarah (Pruden) Rogers. The father and mother were both pioneers, the father having come from New York in 1853, and the mother in 1843. Eugene F. was reared in Elgin, where he was educated in the city schools and Elgin Academy, and became connected with the newspaper press in 1877. Since that time he has been engaged on Elgin and Chicago papers. He was appointed Deputy Circuit Clerk Dec. 1, 1900, and succeeded Benjamin F. Gould as Circuit Clerk Jan. 1, 1904. Mr. Rogers is connected with the Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen and Archæan Union, the Elks, the Maccabees and the Knights of Pythias fraternities, and is one of the most active of the younger Republicans of Kane County. In 1895 he married Miss Josephine Mulroney, of Elgin.

THOMAS E. ROLLINS (deceased), machinist, Carpentersville, Ill., was born in Oneida County, N. Y., where he lived until he was nine years old. When an infant he lost his mother, and his father, leaving him in New York, came on to Illinois, whither he was brought when nine years old, and lived with his father for some years in Palatine, Cook County. The family was later located in Iowa, where Thomas E.

Rollins enlisted in Company B, Seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, at the outbreak of the Civil War. He served four years in the Union Army, and was in at the ending of the war. At the battle of Corinth he was severely wounded. After the war he came to Carpentersville, and learned the machinist's trade. For more than thirty-five years thereafter, and up to the time of his death, Dec. 10, 1902, he was connected with the Illinois Iron and Bolt Company. He was interested at one time in the Star Manufacturing Company, and was always a thrifty and industrious man. For four years he was a member of the Board of Trustees of Carpentersville. He was a Master Mason, and a member of the Order of Maccabees. In 1869 he married Miss Ellen Healey, a native also of Oneida County, N. Y., and only two of the nine children born to them are now living: Mrs. Jesse Juletts and Eugene B. Rollins. Mr. Rollins died at his home in Carpentersville.

GARRETT ROSENCRANS.

GARRETT ROSENCRANS (deceased), pioneer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Sussex County, N. J., April 1, 1820, a son of Asa and Jane (Cole) Rosencrans, whom he accompanied on their removal to Kane County, Ill., in 1837. The father secured a tract of 300 acres near Elgin, and when he died in 1844, Garrett Rosencrans took charge of the farm. In 1847 he leased the farm, and later sold it. By wise and careful investments he became possessed of much property in Kane County, Southern Illinois and the West, and in his later life became prominent in financial and commercial circles. He was a Director in the Home National Bank, served as City Surveyor, and was Assessor of the town several years. An active part in any matter that looked to the welfare of the community was always taken by him, and he did much to aid the progress of the city. Fraternally he belonged to Lodge No. 47, I. O. O. F., and was one of the leaders in the organization of the Young Men's Christian Association Library and Lecture course in 1850. Some of the most noted men in America, such as Wendell Phillips, Horace Greeley, and others, have appeared in Elgin on this platform. Mr. Rosencrans was engaged in the lumber business at various times in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Chicago. He died in Elgin,, Sept. 10, 1890, and is now survived by one brother, Hiram D., of Mt. Carmel, Utah, and a sister, Mrs. M. W. Hawes, of Elgin.

FRED ROYSTON, merchant, Aurora, Ill.; born at Churchill, N. Y., April 3, 1854; came to Chicago in 1872, where he became connected with the well-known grocery house of Sprague, Warner & Co., remaining with that establishment twenty-five years; established the wholesale grocery house of F. E. Royston & Co., in Aurora in 1894, and has since been at the head of this enterprise; has been a resident of Aurora since 1874; married in 1876 to Miss Anna Sanford, of Churchill, N. Y.

HENRY G. RUE, real estate operator, Elgin, Ill.; born in Steuben County, N. Y., Aug. 15, 1851; came with his parents to Illinois in 1856, and grew to manhood on his father's farm in Plato Township, Kane County; in later years he purchased his father's homestead and was successfully engaged in farming in Plato Township until 1898, when he disposed of his farm and engaged in the real estate and loan business in Elgin. Mr. Rue was married in 1873 to Miss Cora A. Skinner, of Plato Township.

SCHUYLER RUE (deceased), pioneer farmer, Plato Township, Kane County; born in Steuben County, N. Y., in 1816; married in New York State to Hannah G. Roth, and came with his family to Illinois in 1856, locating on a farm in Plato Township, Kane County, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying there in 1882; his wife dying in 1881. Mr. and Mrs. Rue reared a family of eight sons and three daughters, seven of whom are living in 1903.

THOMAS J. RUSHTON, attorney-at-law, Elgin, Ill., was born April 2, 1854, in Walworth County, Wis., educated in the Sharon and Walworth Academies and in the law department of the University of Iowa, from which he graduated in 1880. Prior to his University course he was engaged in farming and in teaching, devoting his leisure hours to the study of law, in which he ranked high, and was admitted to the bar the year of his graduation at the University. His active practice, however, did not begin until 1882, when he opened an office in Elgin and became a partner of John H. Williams. For five years the two continued together, since which time Mr. Rushton has been by himself. From 1890 to 1898 he served as Police Magistrate at Elgin, and for one term was Assistant Supervisor. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow. Mr. Rushton is an attorney of general practice and does business in all State and National Courts. He was married in 1884 to Miss Clara Croker, of Chicago, and is the father of four interesting children. Grace, Frances Emily and John C. are students in the Elgin High School. George C., the youngest, is seven years old.

JOHN A. RUSSELL, lawyer, Elgin, Ill., was born in St. Charles, Ill., Oct. 4, 1854, of Scotch parentage. Being left an orphan in early childhood, he was brought up by relatives in Kane County and received his educational training in the public schools and Elgin Academy. He read law in the office of Botsford & Barry, Elgin, and was admitted to the bar in the Supreme Court of Illinois in 1879. He began practicing his profession in Elgin, and except a brief interval, when he was in the service of the United States Government in Porto Rico, he has been continuously engaged in practice in that city, where he has taken rank among the leading attorneys of Northern Illinois and has been identified with much of the most important litigation which has occupied the attention of the courts of Kane County in later years. For three years he was City Attorney of Elgin, and for four years State's Attorney of Kane County. After the Spanish-American War he was appointed Attorney General of Porto Rico and filled that position with credit to himself and the Insular Government until climatic conditions became injurious to his health and private business interests at home caused him to tender his resignation. Prominent in the councils of the Republican party, he has been officially identified with the conduct of many campaigns and has gained much more than local distinction as an eloquent and effective public speaker. He is a Scottish Rite Mason and affiliates with the subordinate Masonic orders. He is identified with the manufacturing interests of Kane County as President of the W. H. Howell Company, an important industry at Geneva, Ill. In 1888 he was married to Clara Mair, daughter of James Mair, one of the pioneer merchants of Batavia, Ill.

HENRY RYAN, merchant and manufacturer, Aurora, Ill., born at Dorset, Vt., Jan. 25, 1843, was reared in his native town, educated in its schools, and trained to the hardware business and the tinner's trade while still a boy. In 1867 he came west to Aurora, and entered the hardware store of R. T. Hurd & Company, with which he was connected until 1870, when he established himself in the hardware trade as the junior member of the firm of Stoddard & Ryan. Some years later Mr. Ryan purchased his partner's interest and the business is still continued on River Street, where it has been carried on for a third of a century. Mr. Ryan was the original maker of the "Aurora dinner pail," which is used all over the country. He is still the largest manufacturer and wholesale dealer in this specialty. In 1873 he married Miss Susan Sheffler, of Plainfield, Ill.

GEORGE E. SAWYER (deceased), pioneer farmer, Dundee Township, Kane County, Ill., was born in Orford, N. H., Oct. 16, 1815, and reared at Bradford, Vt., coming from there to Kane County, Ill., in 1837. He began the journey in April by wagon, and reached the present site of Elgin the following October. Shortly after he bought a farm near the present location of Dundee, being numbered among the very first settlers of Dundee Township. He followed agricultural pursuits until he retired from active business life, and was one of the most prosperous of the pioneer dairy farmers. He spent the later years of his life in Carpentersville, where he died May 22, 1894. Mr. Sawyer married Abigail P. Blake, who was born and reared in New Hampshire. She died Aug. 31, 1891. Their only living children are: William G., now of Elgin, Ill., and Henry G., of Carpentersville.

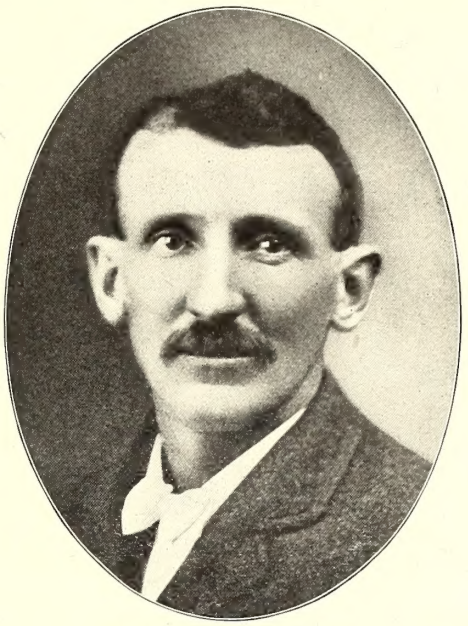
HENRY G. SAWYER, manufacturer, Carpentersville, Ill., was born in Elgin, Ill., March 21, 1844, son of George E. and Abigail (Blake) Sawyer, grew to manhood on his father's farm near Carpentersville, and obtained his education in the public schools of that place and at the Elgin Academy. In 1866, in connection with his brother, William G., he bought a general store in Carpentersville, which they conducted successfully for several years. In 1873 he organized the Star Manufacturing Company, and at first engaged in a small way in the manufacture of agricultural implements. This plant has since been expanded into one of the leading industries of the Fox River Valley. Mr. Sawyer has been general manager of the factory almost continuously from the beginning, and has been President of the corporation since 1892. He is also interested in other manufacturing enterprises, and in a cattle ranch in Nebraska. Fraternally he belongs to the I. O. O. F., the K. O. T. M., the M. W. A., and the K. O. T. G. Nov. 7, 1867, he married Miss Ella Brown, daughter of True Brown. She died Nov. 10, 1868, and in 1871 he was married to Miss Mary Kingsley, daughter of S. W. Kingsley, of Barrington, Ill. Mr. Sawyer's second wife died March 25, 1879, and he married Miss Lillian M. Burkill, of Dundee, Dec. 25, 1880. Five children were born of the first marriage, and three of the last. Three sons and three daughters were living in 1903. Lora, the oldest daughter, is now Mrs. Charles F. Harvey, Superintendent of the Borden Condensed Milk Factory, at Auburn, Washington; Clara is now Mrs. Henry J. Mickelson, of Los Angeles, Cal.; George K. has charge of the stock ranch owned by himself and brother in Nebraska; Clarence E. is in the office of the Star Manufacturing Company; Ethel M. and Howard C. are at home; Bertha E. married Robert Nightengale, of Barrington, Ill., and died Dec. 7, 1894; Addie K. died in infancy. Mr. Sawyer, together with his brother, W. G., owns a 285-acre dairy farm two miles northwest of Carpentersville, where they keep from 90 to 100 cows each year.



GEORGE J. SCHNEIDER, physician and surgeon, Elgin, Ill.; born in Germany, March 10, 1866; came to America with his parents in 1867, locating first in Woodstock, Ill., where he was reared and educated; graduated from the medical department of the University of Michigan in 1889, and held the position of Resident Physician of that institution for one year thereafter; located in Elgin in 1890. The Doctor was married in 1892 to Miss Eva L. Schryver, of Woodstock, Ill.

REV. GEORGE SCHORB, familiarly known as the Blind Orator, Author and Philosopher, was born on a farm in the great woods of Wisconsin in 1850. He was born blind, and at the age of eleven years was placed in the Wisconsin School for the Blind, where he was under the tuition of Thomas H. Little, an accomplished scholar and thorough educator from Bowdoin, and Mrs. Little, a graduate of Oberlin. Here he studied all the branches taught in the school, read all the best books, besides taking private instruction in rhetoric, Latin and philosophy. He finally became a teacher in the school, but later resigned his position to take a special course of study at Evanston, Ill., where he was the only blind student, but by employing a reader was enabled to recite in class with seeing men, and graduated from that institution with high honor and won some important prizes. He has maintained himself by lecturing, preaching and writing for the past twenty-six years, and has traveled without a guide eastward to Boston and westward to the plains. Mr. Schorb is the author of several books, the most successful of them being "Poems and Proverbs," "Nuts to Crack, or Four Hundred Riddles," and "The Golden Rule and the Rule of Gold." He was married Dec. 24, 1901, to Mrs. Ann Gray Dennison, of Aurora, and has since made his home in that city.

JOHN H. SCOTT, retired merchant, Aurora, was born in Oneida County, N. Y., Oct. 26, 1834, son of John and Mary (Atkinson) Scott; his father being born in County Derry, Ireland, and his mother in Leeds, Eng., the latter coming with her parents to Chicago, Ill., where her father was employed in 1837 on the Illinois and Michigan Canal. January 1, 1838, the family removed to Kane County, and the following spring lived in St. Charles. In 1839 they settled on a 400-acre tract in Virgil Township, and there John H. Scott obtained his education in the public schools, in a select school at St. Charles and in Miss Lord's Academy at Elgin. He was trained as a farmer until 1856, when he engaged in merchandising with his father at what was then Blackberry Station, now Elburn, their store being the third in that place. In 1858 John H. Scott became the sole owner, but a year later he traded the store for a farm in Kaneville Township, the ownership of which he has since retained. From 1859 to 1867 he was engaged in farming and stock-raising in Kaneville, where he continued to reside until 1896, when he removed to Aurora, which has since been his home. For many years he was a merchant at Kaneville, and for sixteen Postmaster; for eight years was a Magistrate, and has also served as Town Treasurer, Assessor and member of the School Board at various times. His first vote was cast for John C. Fremont for President and he has been a Republican to date. In 1838 he married Miss Martha J. Astracher, born in Erie County, Penn., who died in Kaneville, in 1896. Their children are: Lizzie (Mrs. Hanchett), and Robert R., the latter, like his brother-in-law, a prominent attorney.

RAYMOND G. SCOTT, M. D., physician and surgeon, Geneva, Ill.; born in Little Rock, Ill., May 30, 1875; spent his boyhood and youth mainly at Sandwich, Ill., where he attended the local schools and later graduated from the East Aurora High School. He entered Rush Medical College in 1894, receiving his degree in medicine and surgery in 1897. For a time he was an assistant in the Chicago Lying-in Hospital, after which he succeeded to the practice of Dr. George B. Lester, at Oswego, Ill. In 1899 he removed to Geneva, to enter into association with Dr. Francis H. Blakeman, long the leading practitioner of the community. He is a member of the Fox River Valley, Illinois State, and American Medical Societies, and a contributor to their medical publications. He has given much attention to surgery, and is surgeon for the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, and the Cannon Box Company, and consulting surgeon of the State Home for Female Juvenile Offenders at Geneva; is also examiner for the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of Milwaukee; The Pennsylvania Mutual Life; The Phoenix Mutual; The Union Central of Cincinnati; The Provident Savings Life Assurance Society; Home Life of New York; New York Life; Security Trust and Life; National Life of Vermont; Aetna Life, and the Metropolitan of New York. Dr. Scott was married in 1898 to Miss Mabel G. Wagner, of Chicago.

GEORGE C. SCOTT.

GEORGE C. SCOTT, farmer and auctioneer, LaFox, Kane County, Ill., born Feb. 13, 1868, in Campton Township, Kane County, and educated in the district school, spending one term in the Sugar Grove High School. He conducts an extensive business as farmer and stock-raiser, and is an auctioneer of high standing. Fraternally he belongs to the M. W. A. He was married Dec. 23, 1890, to Miss Della, daughter of John C. and Mary (Nash) Johnson. L. B. Scott, father of George C., died Dec. 2, 1889, at the age of fifty-six years. His mother, Eliza (Blackman) Scott, is still living, and has her home with her daughter, Mrs. C. L. White, at Wasco, Ill.

WALTER SCOTT (deceased), merchant, Hampshire, Ill.; born in Ramsjet, Eng., Feb. 10, 1836; came to America in 1850 and was employed at different times in various capacities until 1862, when he engaged in the mercantile business at Burlington, Ill., later removing to Hampshire, where he remained in business until his death, Jan. 12, 1897. Mr. Scott was married on July 11, 1859, to Charlotte A. Scott, and of this union there are three sons now living—Lincoln, Henry and Webster.

WILLIAM SCOTT, retired farmer, St. Charles, Kane County, Ill.; born in Virgil Township, Kane County, Feb. 1, 1844, son of John and Mary (Atkinson) Scott. The father, John Scott, was born in North of Ireland in 1809, came to the United States with his parents in 1820, and passed the early years of his manhood in New York State. Coming to Illinois in 1836, he spent a few months in Chicago, then came to St. Charles, Kane County, afterwards bought a settler's claim in Virgil Township, and still later located on land which he purchased from the Government. He was one of the earliest settlers of Kane County, and, as farmer and merchant, was identified with the history of the county until his death on Oct. 17, 1877, his wife surviving until Sept. 11, 1882. William Scott was trained to the business of farming and stock-raising, and obtained his education in the public schools at Elburn and Sycamore, Ill. For several years he was engaged in buying and shipping cattle and horses to western markets, and in this connection traded extensively throughout the Western States. He was the owner of the old family homestead in Virgil Township from 1865 until 1874, but in later years has devoted his time mainly to the improvement of his property in St. Charles. Mr. Scott has been identified with the Methodist church since early manhood, and is one of the oldest members of the church at St. Charles. In 1874 he was married to Miss Hattie E. Pike, daughter of Cornelius Pike, who came to Illinois from New York State, the old home of the Pike family having previously been at Fort Edward in that State. Mr. and Mrs. Scott have one daughter, Jennie M., born Sept. 22, 1879, and married to J. George Ainsworth Aug. 14, 1901.

ROBERT SCOVILLE, former Assistant General Agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, Batavia, Ill.; born in Fort Edward, N. Y., May 1, 1813, was early left an orphan and obtained a fair school education. His first work was on a packet on the Champlain Canal, where he was employed for several years. He became prominent and was elected to the Legislature for three terms. In 1851 he removed to Chicago, and ten years later to Batavia, where he served three terms as Village Trustee, in association with Major Wolcott and others. For twenty years he was Assistant General Agent for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. He died in 1888, at the age of seventy-five years.

LOUIS N. SEAMAN, banker, Elgin, Ill.; born at Castile, Wyoming County, N. Y., Sept. 30, 1853; educated at the State Normal School (Albany, N. Y.) and Williams College (Williamstown, Mass.); came west in 1878, locating first at Belvidere, Ill., where he engaged in the mercantile business; established the Mitchell National Bank, of Mitchell, South Dakota, in 1886; came to Elgin in 1892 and with others organized the Elgin National Bank, of which he has since been cashier.

ALONZO E. SEARLES (deceased), lawyer, Aurora, Ill.; born in the town of Broom, Canada East, Nov. 30, 1820; admitted to the bar in Vermont in 1842; came to Aurora, Ill., in 1858, where he practiced his profession continuously with the exception of one year spent in Chicago. He was married in 1850 to Miss Caroline A. Rice, of Swanton Falls, Vt., and the surviving members of the family are Mrs. Searles and her son, Albert E., who reside in Aurora. Mr. Searles died Oct. 9, 1891.

JOHN S. SEARS, lawyer, Aurora, Ill.; born in Niagara County, N. Y., March 21, 1867, was brought up in his native State, and graduated from the High School at Lockport, N. Y.; attended the law department of the University of Michigan (Ann Arbor), and afterward finished his law studies at Worcester, Mass., where he was admitted to the bar in 1892. In 1894 he came to Aurora, Ill., and formed a partnership with the late Newell F. Nichols, then one of the oldest and most prominent members of the Kane County bar. The firm of Nichols & Sears existed until January, 1900, when Mr. Nichols died, and since that time Mr. Sears has been head of the firm of Sears & Smith. He was married in 1900 to Miss Edith M. Crane, daughter of E. G. Crane, of Aurora, Ill.

ALBERT T. SEAVEY, farmer, Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, born in Sugar Grove Township, May 30, 1856, son of Mark and Ruth H. (Thompson) Seavey, acquired his education in the local district school and in the High School of Aurora. He helped his father on the farm until eighteen years of age, when he went to Wyoming, where he was engaged in the cattle business for about a year. At the expiration of this time he came back to Illinois, and has since managed the old homestead farm. He is one of the founders of the creamery at Sugar Grove, and is President of the Sugar Grove Supply Company, in which he holds stock. Fraternally he belongs to the Order of the Yeomen of America. Mr. Seavey was married Jan. 12, 1881, to Miss Millie Crego, daughter of George M. and Jane (Reynolds) Crego. Mrs. Seavey died April 29, 1895, at the age of thirty-one years, leaving a daughter and a son.

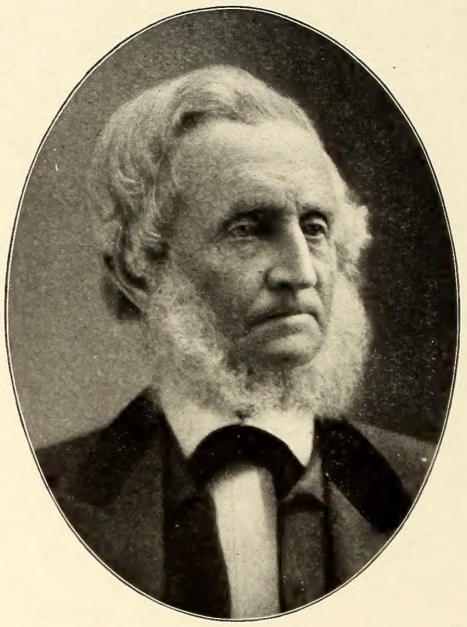
FRANK W. SEAVEY, farmer, Bald Mound, Ill.; born at Sugar Grove, Ill., Sept. 20, 1862; educated in the public schools and the Sugar Grove Industrial Institute; began his business career as a farmer in 1882, and has since followed that occupation; married on Dec. 2, 1886, to Mattie Snook.

JAMES SELKIRK, physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., born in Albany, N. Y., Dec. 20, 1859, was educated in the local schools and in Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., from which he graduated in 1880. Reading medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Albert Vandever and Dr. J. Reid Davidson, of Albany, he completed his medical studies in the medical department of Union College, from which he graduated in 1884. In 1888 he took the first graduate course that was offered at the Roosevelt Hospital in New York. He came west in June, 1884, and began the practice of his profession at Aurora, Ill., where he has given special attention to surgery, winning a prominent place among the practitioners of the day. Dr. Selkirk is a Trustee of the Aurora Hospital and a member of its medical staff, as well as a lecturer to its corps of trained nurses. He belongs to the Chicago Medical Society and the Fox River Medical Society. In 1885 he married Miss Mary C. Terwilliger, whose home was at Voorheesville, N. Y.

SAMUEL S. SENCENBAUGH, merchant, Aurora, Ill., was born near Akron, Ohio, and when ten years of age came to Illinois with his parents, who located in Tazewell County; educated in the public schools and Northwestern College at Naperville, Ill.; came to Aurora in 1864 and was connected as a salesman with the old-time merchandising establishments of John S. Hawley, Brady & Perry and L. D. Brady & Co. In 1870 he became a partner in the firm of L. D. Brady & Co. and two years later became junior partner in the firm of Hattery & Sencenbaugh, parent of the present dry-goods house of S. S. Sencenbaugh & Co. Since 1891 he has been President of the Richards-Sencenbaugh Mfg. Co.; is also identified with the banking interests of Aurora as a stock-holder in the First National Bank.

JOHN W. SEYMOUR, retired farmer and banker, Elgin, Ill.; born in Yates County, N. Y., March 3, 1833; came west with his parents in the spring of 1842, locating in Barrington Township, Cook County, where his father purchased 120 acres of land; came to Elgin in 1873, where he has since resided, but still owns 350 acres of land in Cook County, which is devoted to dairy farming. Mr. Seymour was first married in 1856 to Emily L. Wood, who died in 1897. October 26, 1898, he married his second wife, Mrs. Eliza Corron, widow of Wesley Corron, of Elgin.

CHARLES F. SHARPE, retired farmer, Elgin, Ill.; born at Ripley, N. Y., May 1, 1839; educated in the public schools of the Empire State, and came with his parents to Illinois in 1858; purchased a farm in Campton Township, Kane County, in 1889, and has since been interested in agriculture in that vicinity; married, Feb. 21, 1866, Mary Hickock.



EBEN B. SHEARMAN, Elgin, was born in Oneida, N. Y., Oct. 13, 1843, the son of Willett H. Shearman, who was prominent at one time in the politics of that State, and who served as Speaker of the National House of Representatives. He was educated in the schools of Oneida, and trained to an agricultural life. In 1870 he came to Elgin and established his home there. Since then he has been connected with the National Watch Company, and is now serving his third term as Alderman of the City of Elgin. He belongs to the A. O. U. W., and has been Trustee of the local lodge for several years. In 1872 he married Miss Mary Mann, daughter of Major Adin and Lydia (Wright) Mann, of Elgin, and their only child is Willette H. Shearman, of Belvidere.

CHARLES SHELDON (deceased), early settler of Aurora, was born in Steuben County, N. Y., where he passed the early years of his life; later removed to New Hampshire, where for several years he was engaged in the manufacture of lumber on Lake Champlain. He married in Brattleboro, Vt., Sallie Sawyer, and removed to Canada after his children—one son and six daughters—were born. In 1836 he came with his family from Canada to Aurora, where he devoted his attention to farming and became the owner of a large tract of land on the western border of Aurora, much of his farm now being within the city limits. Mr. Sheldon died in the early '60s, his wife surviving until 1871. There are no members of this pioneer family living at the present writing (1903).

SAMUEL SHEDDEN, County Treasurer, Elgin, Ill.; born in Plato Township, Kane County, Ill., May 8, 1865, son of John B. and Margaret (Rosborough) Shedden, who were of Scotch ancestry. Samuel Shedden obtained his education in the public schools and a seminary at Pingree Grove, Kane County. He remained on his father's farm until 1882, when he accepted a position as clerk with M. W. Dubois, one of the leading merchants of Elgin. During 1890 and 1891 he was in charge of a banking and general merchandising business in Texas, but with the exception of those two years his entire business life has been spent in Elgin. Mr. Shedden is a Republican in political sentiment, and was appointed Deputy County Treasurer in 1894, serving in that capacity until 1902, when he was elected County Treasurer. In religious faith he is a Congregationalist, and is a member of the First Congregational church of Elgin. He was married in 1892 to Miss Mattie I. Norton, of St. Charles, Ill.

FRANK W. SHEPHERD, lawyer, Elgin, Ill., born in Dundee Township, Kane County, Feb. 28, 1876; graduated from the law department of the University of Michigan in the class of 1899; admitted to the bar in the latter year and began practice in Chicago, where he remained until 1900, when he removed to Elgin; has since practiced his profession in the latter city. He was married in 1903 to Miss Louise Strobridge, daughter of Rev. T. R. Strobridge, formerly of Elgin, Ill., but now of Harvard, Ill.

HENRY SHERMAN (deceased), Elgin, Ill., was born at Amenia, Dutchess County, N. Y., Nov. 28, 1805, son of Hugh and Cornelia (Sutherland) Sherman, who had long been residents of that locality. His father dying during the youth of the son, the responsibility of caring for the family fell largely upon the latter, and by farming on shares, he discharged his duty in an effective manner. On account of impaired health, he removed to Schenectady, where he was employed in an auction store for a time, and still later successively conducted a temperance restaurant, a store at Cold Spring and spent three years at the mouth of Monocacy Creek near Washington, D. C. He was then engaged for two years in the grocery trade in New York City, and still later in the dry-goods and grocery trade with a Baptist minister named Marshall, at Milo, N. Y. The firm having been broken up by the panic of 1837, he brought a $500-stock of goods by wagon to Elgin, Ill., which he sold out in the fall of 1838 at Mineral Point, Wis., and entered a tract of land which was later developed into a valuable farm. He also engaged in general trading to some extent, and finally bringing out his family from New York, he lived for some time on his farm of 300 acres, upon which he made substantial improvements. In 1851 he removed to Elgin, Ill., where he engaged in the drug business and made investments in real-estate. He also erected here the first important butter factory in the State, and was an influential factor in securing the location of the National Watch Factory at Elgin, being one of four men who purchased the farm upon which the factory was erected and contributing thirty-five acres to the enterprise. Another enterprise to the success of which he materially contributed was the Elgin Packing Factory. Mr. Sherman was a liberal contributor to charitable purposes, and his name was usually among the first on subscription lists of this character. One of his benevolent enterprises was the erection of a Home for Superannuated Ministers of the Methodist church, which he presented to the Conference. For several years he was Supervisor of Elgin Township, and was the first Assessor after the organization of the township; was also a Trustee of the Northern Illinois Hospital for the Insane and one of the members of the Board entrusted with superintending the erection of buildings, in this capacity and as resident Trustee, having charge of the awarding of contracts, the auditing of accounts, etc. A shrewd and capable business man, he possessed a dry humor and ready wit which made him a delightful companion. Scrupulously honest, he despised deceit, trickery and shallow pretense. Mr. Sherman was married in Starkey, Yates County, N. Y., April 15, 1836, to Jeannette S. Hurd, daughter of Timothy and Mabel Hurd, born in Yates County, N. Y., Sept. 6, 1819, and they became parents of the following named children: George De Forrest, Cornelia Mabel (now Mrs. R. M. Martin), and Henrietta Julia. Mr. Sherman's last years were spent in Elgin, where he died Sept. 18, 1892; his wife dying Feb. 21, 1894.

MARSHALL SHERMAN (deceased), farmer, Dundee Township, Kane County, born in New Berlin, N. Y., June 7, 1841, son of Buel and Nancy (Brown) Sherman, and in 1848, came to Illinois with his parents, who settled on a farm four miles northwest of Elgin, where they spent their lives in the cultivation of the soil. Mrs. Nancy Sherman died March 20, 1873, and her husband only seven days later. Buel Sherman had a family of seven children: Arnold, Julia A., Ruth A., William H., Edward L., Oscar and Marshall. Marshall grew up on this farm, and was educated in the district school near his home. He began farming on the old homestead, and was one of the leading dairymen of this locality prior to his death, July 10, 1893. He was a progressive farmer and a man much esteemed in all the relations of life. In 1871 he married Miss Eleanor Mason, daughter of John and Diantha (Kelsey) Mason. Her father came from Massachusetts, and her mother from New York to Illinois. Marshall Mason Sherman is the only living child of Marshall and Eleanor Sherman. Ruth Mary, their only daughter, was born and died in 1879.

WILLIAM P. SHERMAN, physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., born at Newark, Wis., July 22, 1862; graduated from Rush Medical College in the class of 1889; began practice at Leland, Ill., remaining there until 1893; located in Aurora in 1897, where he has since taken a prominent place among the practitioners of the city; married in 1892 Miss Belle V. Misner, who died in 1896. In 1898 he married his second wife, Miss Addie B. Solfisberg, of Aurora.

W. W. SHERWIN, manufacturer, Elgin, Ill., born in Milwaukee, Wis., March 2, 1855; came to Elgin in 1868 where he received his elementary education and graduated from the University of Michigan in 1876; has been interested in the creamery business in Elgin since 1877, and was one of the organizers of the Creamery Package Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, being for several years general manager of the enterprise. He was married in 1880 to Miss Carrie M. Town, of Elgin.

A. P. SHERWOOD, retired farmer, Elgin, Ill., born in Erie County, N. Y., July 5, 1827; came west with his parents in 1846, locating in Plato Township, Kane County; began his business career in 1850, when he rented a farm which he conducted for three years. In 1853 Mr. Sherwood purchased forty acres of land to which he has made subsequent additions until his estate now embraces about 800 acres, which has been conducted by his four sons since 1891, at which time the father retired from active farm life and has since resided in Elgin. He was married Dec. 13, 1852, to Miss Phoebe Wright, and they have four living children: G. W., L. H., John B., and B. A.,—all of Plato Township. One daughter, Mrs. A. M. Chapman, died in 1901.

DAVID B. SHERWOOD, lawyer, Elgin, Ill., born in Algonquin, McHenry County, Ill., March 14, 1849, acquired his education in the public schools and in Elgin Academy, and removed to Galveston, Texas, in 1869, where he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1870. Mr. Sher-

DAVID B. SHERWOOD.

Wood practiced law for the ensuing six years in Galveston, but returned to the north in 1876, and engaged in his professional labors at Elgin, where he has met with a large measure of success. In politics he is a Democrat, and was elected County Judge in 1890, serving four years on the bench. He is attorney for the Illinois Central Railway Company, and served as director of Elgin City Railway Company from 1890 to 1901; is also a director of the Home National Bank.

MARTIN O. SHOOP, Sugar Grove, Ill., born at Kaneville, Kane County, April 15, 1870; began his business career at Kaneville, later at Sugar Grove, but since 1901 has been connected with the Plano Manufacturing Company. Mr. Shoop was married in 1889 to Miss Rachel May Gillett, and their children are Vernie May and Irene Bessie. Mr. and Mrs. Shoop live at the old Gillett homestead where Mrs. Shoop was born and brought up.

PHILIP SHULZ (deceased), farmer, Hampshire, Ill., born in Baden, Germany, May 25, 1838; came with his parents to America in 1846; located on a farm in Kane County in 1866; retired from active business life in 1882; politically a Democrat. In 1896 Mr. Shulz, with his wife, made a visit to California, where he was suddenly taken sick and died July 1, 1896. On Sept. 15, 1862, he was married to Miss Caroline Delles of Chicago. Mrs. Shulz and their nine children are still living (1903).

CHARLES W. SHUMWAY, merchant and manufacturer, Batavia, Ill., was born in West Granville, Washington County, N. Y., Sept. 9, 1827, son of Duty and Eunice (Kinney) Shumway; was educated in the district school and the academy at West Granville, and learned the tinner's trade at Plattsburgh, N. Y. In 1849 he came west, locating in Batavia, Kane County, Ill., and there opened the first hardware store in the village. This business he carried on for twenty-three years, during which time he became associated with a number of Batavia's most prominent industrial and business enterprises. In 1872 Mr. Shumway disposed of his hardware store and built the iron foundry, of which he is still the head. He was one of the first subscribers to the stock of the First National Bank of Batavia and its President for eight years. On January 25, 1865, he was married to Mrs. Mary D. Brown, also a native of Washington County, N. Y., born March 12, 1839, the daughter of John W. and Desire (Millard) Wood, and to them were born seven children, four of whom are living—two sons (Horatio G. and Robert M.), associated with their father in business, and two daughters, Lizzie M. and Helen O.

NATHAN C. SIMMONS, merchant and banker, Aurora, Ill., a native of Bridgewater, Penn., where he was born Jan. 31, 1838, son of Solomon and Ann (Patterson) Simmons, his father a native of Pennsylvania, and his mother of New York. Reared at Montrose, Penn., by his aunt, Mrs. George Keeler, he obtained his education while learning the shoemaker's trade. In 1857 he removed to Aurora, Ill., where he worked at his trade, the most of the time as shop foreman, until 1864, when he became junior member of the old-time firm of Reising & Simmons, Leonard Reising being his partner. Two years later he formed a partnership with Joseph Reising in the same line, and this firm became one of the leading mercantile houses of the city. In February, 1890, he bought the interest of Mr. Reising, and for two years carried on the business alone, but in 1892 admitted Joseph Reising, Jr., and George W. Swanson to the firm, and put the burden of management on younger shoulders. In 1900 he sold out his mercantile interests to his partners. In the Aurora Cotton Mills Company he holds the office of director and Vice-President and is Secretary of Aurora Bleaching and Dye-works Company, and is a director in the Aurora Automatic Machinery Company. For eighteen years he has been a member of the Aurora West Side School Board, and for fifteen years President of the Board. Mr. Simmons was married in 1874 to Miss Hortense Mix, daughter of Russell C. Mix, for many years one of the leading citizens of Aurora.

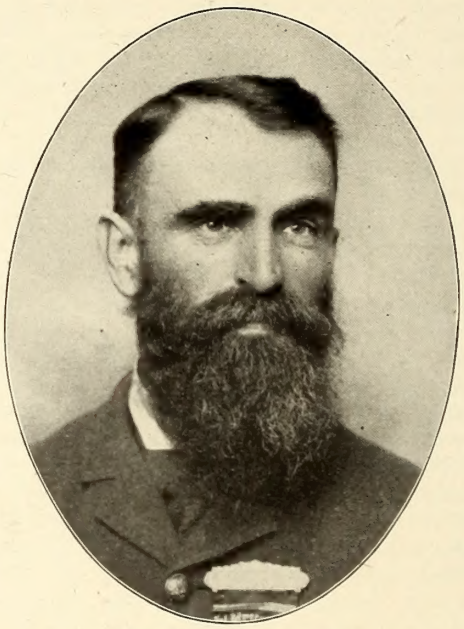
DEWITT SIMPSON, manufacturer, was born Jan. 8, 1845, in Jackson County, N. Y., and grew up and received his education in the schools of that State. He came to Illinois in 1869 and established his home in Aurora, where he was employed for a few years as a salesman by the pioneer merchant, Daniel Volentine. Later he was for a time junior member of the boot and shoe firm of Brown & Simpson in Aurora, and still later traveled for ten years as the Western representative of Eastern boot and shoe manufacturers. About 1882 he became interested in manufacturing in Aurora in connection with the Wilcox Manufacturing Company, in which he has held successively the positions of salesman, Vice-President, Manager, and President. When he first became interested in this institution, which is one of the pioneer manufactories of Aurora, it employed five men. Its growth and the business capacity of its management is evidenced by the fact that it now employs two hundred men. Mr. Simpson has also been interested in other enterprises, and is now (1903) one of the Directors of the Old Second National Bank. During a residence of a third of a century in Aurora he has been brought into intimate relations with many of the men who have been most prominent in building up the city, and he himself has taken a deep interest in promoting its welfare. He has also taken a prominent part in church work as a member of the Baptist denomination, and has been generous in his aid of charitable and benevolent enterprises.

BAXTER O. SKINNER, farmer, Plato Township, Kane County, born in Westport, Essex County, N. Y., Nov. 15, 1834, son of Oren and Charlotte (Cady) Skinner; grew up and was educated in his native community; in 1853 came to Illinois with his father's family, who settled near Plato Center, Plato Township, Kane County, where the elder Skinner lived until his death in 1861. His widow, who survived until 1881, also died on the old Skinner homestead. Baxter O. Skinner took his father's place as manager of the family interests, and, until his recent retirement from active business, has been engaged in farming and stock-raising. He still owns the old homestead, which has been in family possession for more that a half a century. For sixteen years he served as Deputy Sheriff of Kane County, and has held various town offices. Besides Mr. Skinner, the only member of this family surviving in 1903 was Mrs. A. W. Hall, whose farm adjoins that of her brother.

PROF. GEORGE N. SLEIGHT, educator, Elgin, Ill., born in Newark, N. Y., Oct. 17, 1869; educated in the Newark Union High School, Williams College (Williamstown, Mass.), the Albany State Normal School (Albany, N. Y.) and the University of Chicago. Mr. Sleight came to Elgin in 1898, where he has since filled the position of principal of the Elgin Academy. He was married in 1894 to Miss Ada M. Collins, of Chicago.

BENJAMIN SMITH (deceased), inventor and manufacturer, was born in Ridgefield, Fairfield County, Conn., Jan. 12, 1815, and in October, 1837, removed to Chicago, where for a time he was engaged in the grocery and provision business. In 1838 he was married to Miss Rachel Van Nortwick, of Batavia, Ill. In 1846 he purchased a patent for a reaper and built his first machines in Chicago, but soon removed to Batavia, where he manufactured machines for several years, in the meanwhile making some valuable improvements. In 1857 he suffered financial loss, and in 1865 he returned to Chicago and there resided until his death in 1891, at the age of seventy-six years.



B. F. SMITH, banker, Aurora, was born in Reading, Penn., Feb. 16, 1850, and when four years old was brought to Freeport, Ill., where he grew to manhood and received his education in the city schools. He began his business career as clerk in a Freeport drug-store, but was later employed in a patent medicine house, where he became shipping clerk. In 1879 he came to Aurora to enter the service of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, where he became head of a department. In 1902 he retired from employment with the railroad to become Vice-President of the Aurora Trust and Savings Bank, of which he was one of the organizers. In 1881 Mr. Smith was married to Miss Carrie Waterman, daughter of George G. and Mary Waterman, of Aurora.

DAVID SMITH, pioneer, farmer and veteran of the Civil War, Sugar Grove, Kane County, Ill., born in Rutland County, Vt., Aug. 5, 1839; when only five years of age was brought to Illinois by his parents, who made their home on a farm in Sugar Grove, Kane County. His father, Ephraim Smith, a millwright by trade, followed farming in Illinois, and in his day was well known throughout the southern part of the county. His death occurred about 1880. David Smith was reared to maturity in Sugar Grove Township, educated in the local schools, and became a carpenter and joiner. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the One Hundred Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered into service on Sept. 10th, following. His regiment became a part of the Western army, and he participated in all the campaigns of the Army of the Tennessee, including the siege of Vicksburg, where he lost his right arm, and was consequently discharged from the service. Mr. Smith returned to Kane County, and was elected Sheriff in 1866. After the expiration of his term of office he engaged in farming, and has been active to the present time (1904). He has served as Assessor and Collector of Taxes in Sugar Grove Township, and is now a member of the Board of School Trustees. In 1871 he married Miss Harriet L. Van Dervolgan, of Winfield, DuPage County, Ill. Their living children are: Lucinda P., Allen L., Harry V., and Hallam C.

EDWARD M. SMITH, in real-estate, loan and insurance business, Batavia, Ill., born in Batavia, Dec. 14, 1867, son of Edward S. and Jane (Mallory) Smith; trained to the banking business, but later established his present business in Batavia.

Y., March 20, 1832; educated in the public schools and academy of his native village, and was trained to mercantile pursuits; came to Batavia in 1853, and first engaged in the grain and produce trade and later conducted a cooperage business; appointed Postmaster of Batavia in 1861 by President Lincoln, and through successive reappointments held that position for twenty-five years, in the meantime becoming one of the best known men in the postal service in Illinois. He was married in 1861 to Miss Jane Mallory of New York State, who died in Batavia in 1902.

GEORGE D. SMITH.

GEORGE D. SMITH, farmer and dairyman, Virgil Township, Kane County, born Nov. 25, 1842, in Virgil Township, Kane County, Ill., son of Daniel and Eliza (Dearborn) Smith, and received his education in the district school. Sept. 18, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, Eighth Illinois Volunteer Cavalry and during his service in the Union army participated in over one hundred engagements, was three times severely wounded and finally discharged Sept. 8, 1864. In 1872 he bought a store at DeKalb, which he conducted until 1879, when he sold it and returned to his farm, where he still resides. As may be presumed from his record as a soldier, Mr. Smith is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He was married, June 5, 1867, to Miss Henrietta Richmond, daughter of Moses C. and Susan H. (Garfield) Richmond, and their union has been blessed by the birth of three children—two girls and one boy. One daughter is now deceased.

JAMES R. SMITH, retired merchant, Dundee, Ill., born in Dundee, July 4, 1839, son of John M. and Mary (Rayner) Smith, was educated in the local schools and trained to mercantile pursuits. In 1858 he opened a business establishment in his own name and was in trade in Dundee for about twenty years. Since his retirement from active business he has given much attention to real-estate and other interests in Kane County. He has been a member of the Kane County Board of Supervisors continuously since 1883, and at the present time (1903) is serving as its President, having filled that position since 1898. He has also been President of the Board of Trustees of Dundee, and has filled other important local positions. In Masonry he is prominent, being a member of the Dundee Lodge, No. 190.

ORAMEL H. SMITH (deceased), contractor and merchant, Carpentersville, Ill., was born March 31, 1848, at Cabot, Vt., and came to Kane County, Ill., in 1874, where he remained until his death, March 20, 1903. Descended from poor and hard-working parents, his boyhood was one of few pleasures and much hard work. Leaving home at the age of thirteen years, he drifted westward, and, after two or three years spent in working on farms in New York, came to Illinois, where, after teaching school for a time, he learned the carpenter's trade, and became a contractor and builder. In 1878, in company with J. A. Carpenter, he engaged in the lumber and coal business at Carpentersville, which he followed until his death. Successful in all his undertakings, the legacy of material things left to his family was not large, his entire life having been spent for others; and this, continued unfalteringly through years of intense bodily suffering such as few men would have patiently endured, stamped him as a man of high character and genuine nobility.

ORVILLE A. SMITH, merchant, Geneva, Ill., born in Orange County, N. Y., August 15, 1845, reared and educated in the Empire State, and came west in 1874; located in Kane County in 1876 and conducted a farm until 1889, when he bought the furniture and undertaking business of S. N. Cooper, to which he added a stock of hardware in 1900, and has since been engaged in this business. He was married in 1881 to Miss Mary McFarland, of St. Charles, and their children are: Helen (who died in infancy) and A. Warren, who is now (1903) a student at Lewis Institute, Chicago.

P. Y. SMITH, lawyer, Aurora, Ill., was born on a farm in Batavia Township, Kane County, March 20, 1873, son of George F. and Mary (Loverin) Smith. The family removed to Aurora in 1882, and Mr. Smith secured his early education in the schools of that city, graduating from the West Aurora High School in 1891, and finishing his academic studies at the University of Wisconsin. After reading law under the preceptorship of Newell F. Nichols, of Aurora, and taking a course in the Chicago College of Law, he was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of Illinois in February, 1897. Shortly after this he became a member of the law firm of Nichols & Sears, which then became Nichols, Sears & Smith. Since the death of Mr. Nichols in 1899, the firm has continued as Sears & Smith, with a recognized standing as one of the leading law firms of Aurora. Mr. Smith was married in 1898 to Miss Alice M. Allen, daughter of Edward C. Allen, and granddaughter of Edward R. Allen, one of the old pioneer settlers of Aurora, and a very prominent citizen in his day.

WILLIAM J. SMITH, merchant, Batavia, Ill., born in Chowan County, N. C., July 21, 1831; learned the shoemaker's and carpenter's trades in his boyhood, and came to Batavia, Ill., in 1882, where he became senior member of the pioneer furniture and undertaking firm of Smith & Crane. He was married in 1857 to Miss Laura A. Doing, of Westville, Ind.

WILLIAM R. SMITH, merchant, Geneva, Ill., was born in Norfolk, Conn., Jan. 25, 1832, son of Rufus and Hannah (Lucas) Smith and grandson of Corkins Smith, a veteran of the Revolutionary War. The first eight years of his life were spent in Connecticut, when the family removed to New York, and his education was received chiefly in the public schools of that State. He mastered the jeweler's trade, which he followed in New York until 1878, then came to Illinois, and for thirteen years was engaged as traveling salesman for the jewelry house of Trask & Plain, of Aurora. In 1891 he established a jewelry house in Geneva, and has since been in business in that city. Mr. Smith has been a member of the Mason fraternity since 1863, and with his wife belongs to the Eastern Star, and also to the Episcopal church. Mr. Smith was married Nov. 27, 1898, to Miss Dema Reser, whose parents were pioneer settlers in Plato Township, Kane County.

EPHRAIM SNOOKS, merchant, Carpentersville, Kane County, Ill., born at Algonquin, Ill., July 26, 1861, son of Judson and Martha (Seymour) Snooks; obtained his education in the public schools of Algonquin; established a hardware and grocery store at Carpentersville in 1883, and has conducted a successful business to the present time (1903). He is a member of the Masonic Order and affiliated with Dundee Lodge No. 190; married in 1896 Miss Annie Schwable, of Carpentersville.

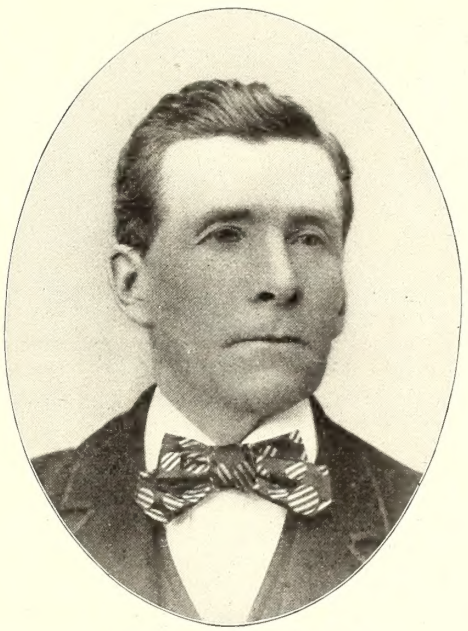
CHAUNCEY SNOW (deceased), pioneer settler, born in Keene, N. H., in 1812, and died in Sugar Grove, Kane County, Ill., Dec. 28, 1861; came west in early manhood and located on a farm in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, where he spent the remainder of his life; married in 1851 Miss Ruth Thompson, who survived him until 1887. Mrs. Snow was one of the noted pioneer women of Sugar Grove Township, and aided materially in founding the Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial Institute, and took an active part in charitable and benevolent work.

FRANK W. SNOW, Sugar Grove, Ill., born in the town where he now resides, Jan 18, 1854; began his business career in the village of Sugar Grove in 1884 and has since operated a general repair shop in that village, also being interested to some extent in the carriage and wagon trade. He was married in 1891 to Miss Elizabeth Petty, who was well known in this portion of Kane County as an educator prior to her marriage, being at one time principal of Sugar Grove Normal and Industrial Institute.

FRANCIS C. SNOW, pioneer settler, Batavia, Ill., born in Devonshire, Eng., June 25, 1826; came to the United States in 1853, locating in Batavia in 1854, which has since been his home; engaged in contracting and building for several years, and then became interested in manufacturing; since 1870 he has given his attention to investments; has been a member of the Baptist church of Batavia for over forty years; married in 1850 Miss Eliza Davie, who died in 1853, their only living child being Thomas Snow, one of the leading manufacturers of the Fox River Valley.

GILBERT B. SNOW, manufacturer, Elgin, Ill., born at Sugar Grove, Ill., March 5, 1856; educated in the Aurora schools, and obtained his first business experience with the Deering Harvester Company, Chicago, where he was employed for some time in the experimental department. Returning to Sugar Grove in 1887, he devoted five years to experimental work of a mechanical nature, and in 1892 became Superintendent of the Elgin Wind Power & Pump Company, and in 1897 was made Secretary and Treasurer of that enterprise, a position he still holds. Mr. Snow is the inventor of all the patents issued to the latter company. He was married in 1893 to Mrs. Mae (Hunter) Yarwood, of Elgin.

PERLEY B. SNOW (deceased), pioneer of Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, born in Keene, N. H., Dec. 31, 1800, son of Deacon John and Esther (Balch) Snow, was reared and educated in his native place. Having given his attention chiefly to farming, in 1839 he came west, and purchasing Government land in Sugar Grove Township, became one of the very early settlers in that region. His farming operations were successfully carried on. A Democrat in early life, he became a Free-Soiler, and later a Republican. After retiring from active farming in 1868, for two years he lived in Aurora, when he removed to DeKalb, where he died in 1876. In 1832 he married Lois H. Gurler, in Keene, N. H., and their children were: Mrs. Esther Peirce, Grinnell, Iowa; Cynthia O., DeKalb, Ill.; Mrs. G. Terwilliger, DeKalb, Ill.; and Mrs. Melissa Hatch, Aurora, Ill. Their only son, Byron, served in the Union Army during the Civil War, and died in DeKalb, in 1897.

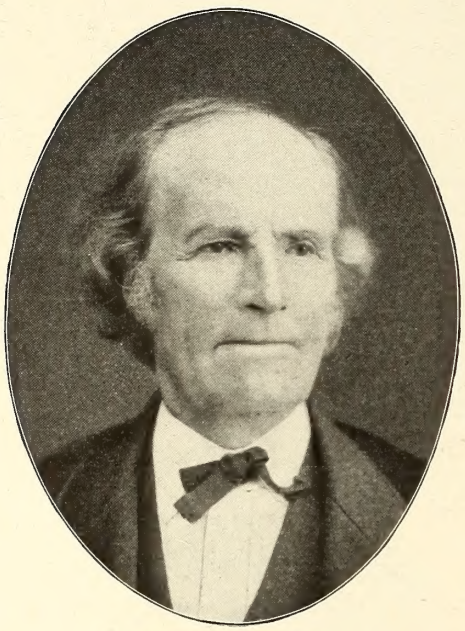


THOMAS SNOW (deceased), manufacturer, Batavia, Ill., was born in Devonshire, England, Jan. 19, 1851, the son of F. C. Snow, who sailed for the United States with his family in 1853.

The death of Mrs. Snow, which occurred during the voyage, caused young Thomas to be sent back to England shortly afterward, and he obtained his early education in the public schools of his native country. In 1865 he returned to this country, rejoined his father at Batavia, Ill., and completed his education in the public schools of Aurora and at the Jennings Seminary. In 1882 he was made Secretary and Treasurer of the Challenge Wind-Mill Company, a newly organized Batavia corporation, and in 1887 became President and Treasurer of the Company, finally becoming the head of one of the largest manufacturing industries in the Fox River Valley. In 1896 Mr. Snow was made President and Treasurer of the W. H. Howell Company, Geneva, manufacturers of sad-irons; and was also President and Treasurer of the Snow Manufacturing Company, Batavia, manufacturers of stump pullers; was also President and Treasurer of the Batavia Wind-Mill Company, and President of the First National Bank of Batavia. In 1901 he was elected Mayor of the city of Batavia, serving one term. In 1878 Mr. Snow was married to Miss Mary Thomle, born in Batavia, and to them four sons were born: Ralph L. (deceased), Thomas, Jr., who became President and Treasurer of the Challenge Wind-Mill Company at the time of his father's death, Frank and Albert E. Mr. Snow died April 25, 1903.

THOMAS SOLOMON, farmer, Burlington Township, Kane County, born in Cornwall, England, August 27, 1823; came to America in 1850, and located in Burlington Township in 1854, where he purchased a farm which he personally conducted until 1893; served as Justice of the Peace, School Trustee and Assessor; married in March, 1845, Miss Emma Pierce, of England.

C. SPALDING, merchant, Elburn, Ill., born Nov. 12, 1836, at Ypsilanti, Mich., son of Caldwell and Beulah (Lynn) Spalding, came with his parents to Kane County in 1844, where he secured his education in the public schools, supplemented by a year's attendance at the academy. He owns the family homestead, two and a half miles southeast of Elburn, and was engaged in farming until 1890, giving much attention meanwhile to dairying. In 1890 he bought the interest of Mr. Eldin in the firm of Eldin & Cline, merchants, at Elburn, and the firm has since been Spalding & Cline. He was married Jan. 1, 1863, to Helen M. Barker, daughter of Jabez and Sarah (White) Barker. Mr. Spalding is a Mason, belonging to the Commandery at Sycamore, and is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. For ten years he was Township School Treasurer, for five years Town Assessor and for fifteen years Supervisor—being still in the latter office.



JOSEPH A. SPALDING (deceased), born at Pomfret, Windsor County, Vt., Nov. 9, 1800, was taken by his father to Hartland, Vt., in 1803, where he resided until 1849, when he moved to the West, settling on a farm at Udina, Kane County, Ill. After living there some years he finally sold his farm to remove to Aurora, where he lived until the death of his wife, when he went to live with his son, Charles W., at Topeka, Kan., dying there Feb. 20, 1887.

CHARLES SOUDERS.

CHARLES SOUDERS, farmer, Blackberry Township, Kane County, was born Nov. 30, 1848, the son of John and Mary (Lance) Souders, who were among the first white settlers in their section of the State—the latter being the first white woman to locate in Blackberry Township. Charles Souders obtained his education in the district schools of his native township and has been a life-long farmer. He has served his township as Road Commissioner, and is one of its most highly respected citizens. (See sketch of John Souders.)

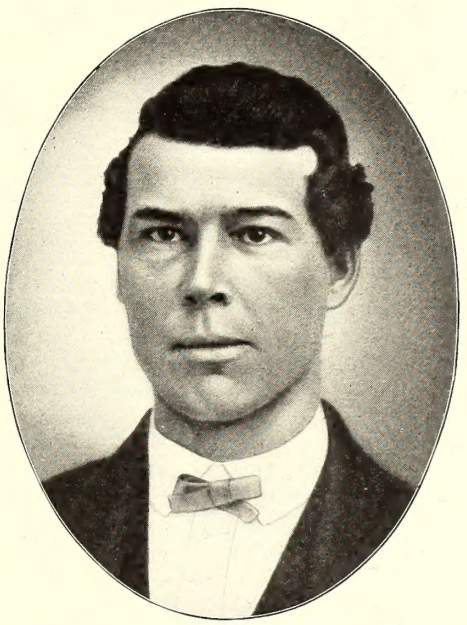
JOHN N. STAUDT (deceased), pioneer merchant and druggist, Aurora, Ill., born near Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, June 27, 1827, was left an orphan at an early age, and was reared and educated by an uncle, who gave him thorough training as a druggist. Mr. Staudt came to the United States while still a young man, and was employed at his profession in Buffalo until early in the '50s, when he went to Chicago to take a position in a drug store of that city. After a time he was employed by the same firm at Naperville, and in 1859, in company with J. H. Karl, opened a drug store in Aurora. The two remained together for twelve years, when Mr. Staudt assumed sole charge, while he trained his two sons as competent druggists. They have succeeded to the business under the firm name of Staudt Brothers, and for more than forty years their establishment has been located on Broadway. Mr. Staudt died Aug. 1, 1885, and is remembered as one of the honorable and earnest business men who did much to promote the growth of Aurora as a solid and conservative business place. Mr. Staudt married Nellie Carpenter Guild in 1859. Her father, Rockwell Guild, was one of the very early settlers of Downers Grove. To this marriage were born four children now living: Louis C., Aurora; Albert J., Philadelphia; Nellie M. and Fred H., Aurora.

LOUIS C. STAUDT, merchant, Aurora, Ill., was born in the city where he now resides, May 5, 1861, son of John N. Staudt, whose sketch appears in this volume, was educated in the Aurora city schools and the Chicago College of Pharmacy; engaged in the drug business with his father in Aurora in 1885, and succeeded to the business in company with his brother, Alfred J. Staudt, as head of the firm of Staudt Brothers. He is identified with the banking interests of Aurora as a director of the Old Second National Bank, and is President of the Improvement Building & Loan Association. He married in 1893 Miss Anna Allen, daughter of Edward R. Allen, a pioneer merchant and banker.

HENRY STEARNS, farmer, Blackberry Township, Kane County, born in Brattleboro, Vt., in 1795; reared and educated in the Green Mountain State; came to Kane County, Ill., in 1844, where he resided for many years, later removing to Iowa, but afterwards returned to Batavia, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying in 1878. His wife, whose maiden name was Emily Church, was also a native of Vermont and died in Batavia in 1884.

REV. C. STEEGE, Evangelical Lutheran minister, Dundee, Ill., born in Germany, August 14, 1841; came to America with his parents when five years of age, locating first at Elk Grove, Cook County, Ill., graduated from the Concordia Seminary (St. Louis) in 1863, and entered the ministry the same year; came to Dundee in 1870. Rev. Steege was married Aug. 2, 1864, to Miss Mary Wagner, of Adrian, Mich.



JACOB STEFFES, farmer, Virgil, Kane County, was born in Germany in February, 1843, and came to Kane County, Ill., in 1866, where he bought a farm two miles southwest of Virgil postoffice. He has devoted himself mainly to the cultivation of oats and corn. Mr. Steffes belongs to the German Catholic church. He was married April 12, 1872, to Miss Mary Reuland and of this union have been born nine children—five boys and four girls. Two sons and one daughter are now deceased.

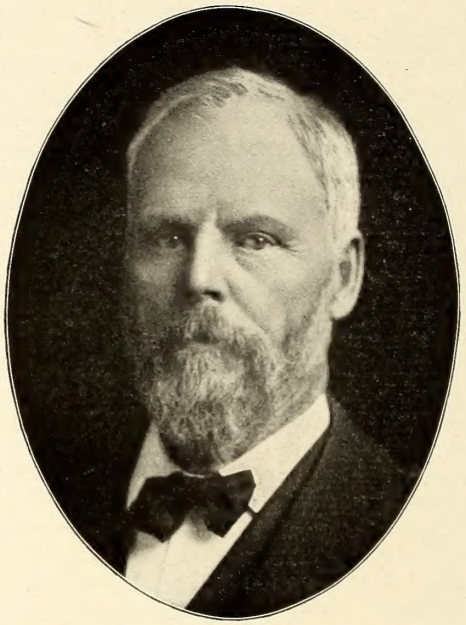
WILEY W. STEPHENS, President Stephens-Adamson Manufacturing Company, Aurora, Kane County, Ill., born at Altona, Ill., Oct. 12, 1867, and, when two years of age, removed with his parents to Gowrie, Iowa, where he attended school until 1880. His first business engagement was with William Claus, in a general store at Gowrie, where he remained until 1886, when he removed to Chicago to accept a position with the Webster Manufacturing Company of that city, remaining with this establishment in various capacities until 1896, having charge of the city sales department for five years previous to the latter date. Severing his connection with this company in the latter year, he engaged in the machinery business under the firm name of W. W. Stephens & Co., the venture proving very successful. In 1898 the Webster Manufacturing Company purchased his entire business, and he returned to that company as stockholder, Vice-President and Director. In 1901 he removed to Aurora, and with Frederick G. Adamson of Chicago established the Stephens-Adamson Manufacturing Company, of which he is now President. This company manufactures a complete line of power-transmitting, elevating and conveying machinery, and their plant is one of the most complete in the United States for the manufacture of this class of machinery. Mr. Stephens is Secretary of the Fox River Valley Manufacturing Association, having headquarters at Aurora, and is also a member of the Union League Club of Chicago. In 1892 he was married to Frances S. Salisbury, daughter of Leroy Salisbury, a merchant of Chicago.

SAMUEL STERLING (deceased), pioneer, Geneva, Ill., born in Connecticut; was reared and educated in his native State, and removed to New York, where he married Cornelia Latbruf, also Connecticut born. They became pioneers in Michigan as well as Illinois, settling in the former State prior to 1830, and removing to Kane County, Ill., four years later. The farm, which was their home near Geneva for many years and where they died, is now the home of their grandson, John S. Moore. It was bought directly from the Government by Mr. Sterling, and there he erected the first house in Geneva, and constructed the first dam across Fox River for water-power. Mrs. Sterling was the first teacher in Geneva. Their farm was a notable country home in their day, and they there reared a family of three children. Mr. Sterling died August 30, 1871, at the home of his son-in-law, J. B. Moore, Sr., in Grundy County, Ill.

THOMAS STERRICKER (deceased), farmer, Elgin, Township, Kane County, was born May 20, 1818, in Yorkshire, Eng., came to Canada, where he lived for five years, and then moved to Otsego County, N. Y., and made his home there until the spring of 1852. The latter year he sought a home in Illinois, and purchased a farm two and a half miles southwest of Elgin. He was married Dec. 25, 1840, to Elizabeth Fitzgerald, born in Otsego County, N. Y., Oct. 24, 1821, and who became the mother of four children: Irving W., Mary E., William H. H., and Alice J.—the latter the only child now living. Mr. Sterricker died March 2, 1900.

WILLIAM H. STERRICKER.



WILLIAM H. STERRICKER, farmer, Elgin Township, Kane County, was born Nov. 16, 1846, in Otsego County, N. Y., and was brought by his parents to Kane County, Ill., when six years of age. His education was secured in the public schools and Elgin Academy, and in his manhood he worked at farm labor. From 1889 until the time of his death he was Highway Commissioner and greatly improved the roads in his district; from 1890 he was Supervisor. He died Feb. 2, 1898.

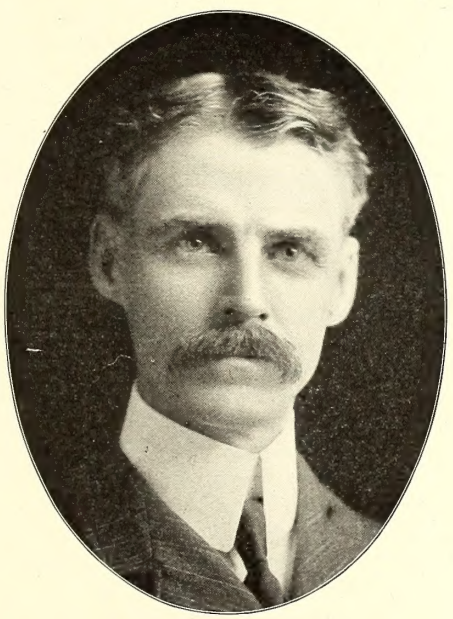
CHARLES C. STEVENS (deceased), former druggist, Batavia, Ill., was born at Beatyestown, N. J., Nov. 18, 1828, the son of Robert and Clarissa (Carter) Stevens, was reared and educated in his native State, and in 1855 came west locating at Geneva, Ill., where he was engaged in the hardware trade up to the date of the Civil War. In September, 1861, he enlisted in the Thirty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, which was organized at Camp Hammond near Aurora, but later was transferred to the Fifty-second Illinois, also a Kane County regiment, in which he served during its period of enlistment up to 1864, when he entered the Commissary Department, remaining until the close of the war. He then engaged in the drug business at Batavia, in which he continued until his death, which occurred Feb. 4, 1903. Mr. Stevens was united in marriage in 1858 to Miss Mary S. Wells, daughter of Capt. C. B. Wells, of Geneva.

THOMAS STEWART, miller, St. Charles, Ill., is a native of Montreal, Canada, where he was born April 8, 1838, and where he received his early education. In 1862 he came to Rockford, Ill., and was engaged there as a miller for some six years. In 1868 he assisted in the establishment of the firm of Stewart Brothers, millers, at Elgin, Ill., and remained in that city until 1884; then removed to St. Charles, where he had bought the old Fredenhagens Mill, and carried it on until its destruction by fire in 1895. The mill was rebuilt, and is now leased to the Crown Electrical Company. For a number of years Mr. Stewart has leased and operated the old Hains Mills, one of St. Charles' oldest landmarks. In Elgin he served as Alderman four years. He was reared a Presbyterian, but is now a member of the Methodist Church. He was married Jan. 22, 1867, to Miss Martha McClenathan, of Montreal.



HON. JOHN STEWART, farmer, lumber dealer and legislator, Elburn, Ill., was born in Fredericton, New Brunswick, Aug. 10, 1825, son of Thomas and Jane Stewart. The father, Thomas Stewart, was a native of Inverkip, Renfrewshire, Scotland, born Dec. 22, 1797, and coming to Illinois in 1851, located on a farm in Kane County, where he passed the remainder of his life. John Stewart, the subject of this sketch, remained under the parental roof until twenty-two years of age, meanwhile enjoying such educational advantages as the schools of those early days afforded. In 1848 he located at St. Charles, Ill., but shortly afterwards removed to Wausau, Marathon County, Wis., where he engaged in the lumber trade with his brother, Alexander Stewart, and where he is still largely interested in the same business, as well as in California, though making his home in Illinois. Some years ago Mr. Stewart purchased land near Elburn, in Campton Township, where he has since resided, and his estate at the present time embraces a farm of 1,000 acres of excellent land. He is also a stockholder in the Bank of John Stewart & Co., at St. Charles, Ill., and the owner of banking interests at Wausau, Wis., and Gering, Neb. In 1884 Mr. Stewart was elected Representative in the Illinois Legislature, was re-elected in 1886, and again in 1898, serving three terms. During his term of service, he was Chairman of the Committee on Claims; also a member of the Committee of Appropriations to Public Charities, and the Penitentiary Committee. Mr. Stewart was an earnest Republican, and his period of service in the General Assembly embraced some of the most vigorously contested struggles that have ever occurred in that body, including the long contest which resulted in the election of Gen. John A. Logan to the United States Senate, for a third term during the session of 1885, and the election of the late Charles B. Farwell as Logan's successor, two years later. On Oct. 20, 1857, Mr. Stewart was married to Martha A. Thomas, daughter of William and Eliza (Burt) Thomas, natives of Massachusetts. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart have been the parents of five children, viz.: Thomas B., born Sept. 28, 1858; Eliza, born Feb. 14, 1861; Mary E., born Dec. 30, 1864, died Dec. 17, 1866; Mattie, born Jan. 4, 1867; and Nellie L., born May. 22, 1873. About May 1, 1904, Mr. Stewart returned from an extended tour around the world, then being in his 79th year. For many years he has been an extensive traveler, both in his own country and abroad.

THOMAS B. STEWART.

THOMAS B. STEWART, leading business man and banker, Aurora, Kane County, Ill., was born in Campton Township, Kane County, Sept. 28, 1858, the son of John and Martha (Thomas) Stewart, who were respectively of Scotch and New England ancestry. His father, who was a native of New Brunswick, came to Kane County in 1848, and here the son received his educational training in the schools of Elburn and Geneva, being meanwhile trained to life as a farmer. He gave his attention mainly to this business and to stock-raising until 1899, when, in company with his father and E. F. Goodell, he bought out the banking house of Bowman, Warne & Stewart, at St. Charles, an institution in which his father had been interested for many years. The name of the firm then became John Stewart & Co., and Thomas B. Stewart became principal manager of the business, although for several years previous he had been connected with the management of the St. Charles bank as representative of his father's interest. The Stewart banking house, although not the oldest in Kane County, is one of those most widely known for its stability and approved business methods. In 1900 Mr. Stewart removed to Aurora, which has since been his home. He is closely identified with important business interests throughout Kane County. In 1884 he was united in marriage with Miss Abbie Vanderhoof, daughter of Levi and Esther (Terry) Vanderhoof, of Campton Township, Kane County, and they have two children, Esther and John. Mr. Stewart's political affiliations have for many years been with the Republican party, and for twenty years he has been a member of the County Central Committee.

WILLIAM STEWART, veteran of the Civil War, Batavia, Ill., born in Tompkins County, N. Y., in 1836; came to Geneva, Ill., in 1854, where he lived until 1862, when he enlisted in the Union army and was mustered into the Eighty-ninth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until July 25, 1865; located at Batavia in 1867, where he has since resided. He was married in 1867 to Miss Viola Gasper, of Geneva, Ill.

REV. JONATHAN C. STOUGHTON, clergyman, lecturer and educator, Aurora, Ill., was born in Ashtabula County, Ohio, Nov. 3, 1820, son of Henry and Almira (Clapp) Stoughton. Reared on a farm, he secured his education in the early district schools of Ohio. After coming to Illinois in 1838, he worked his way through Knox College, at Galesburg, graduating from that institution in 1846. The same year he joined the Rock River Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, and began his long and useful career as a minister of the gospel. In 1864 he first came to Aurora, and two years later, under authority of the Conference, he built Jennings Seminary, one of the noted educational institutions of the State. From 1858 to 1860 he was pastor at Freeport, and in 1860 served as Delegate to the General Conference of the church at Buffalo, N. Y. Later he was located at Champaign, where he erected a building and founded the Champaign and Urbana Seminary, which was afterwards absorbed by the University of Illinois. During the Civil War he was a strong worker for the cause of the Union, doing much in recruiting troops and inspiring the people. Gov. Yates issued him a Captain's commission, but he never commanded a company. As Chaplain of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Volunteer Infantry he found an appropriate field of labor. After the war he was pastor of Grace church, Chicago, and then devoted several years to the agency work of the Rock River Conference devoting much time to temperance lectures and the editing of a temperance paper. For a time he traveled in Europe, and afterward filled pastorates in Aurora, Rock Falls, Rochelle and Wyanet. At Santa Fe, N. M., he had charge of the old English Mission. Returning to Chicago he was successively pastor of the Asbury, the Winter Street, the State Street and the 54th Street churches, Chicago, and the church at Sugar Grove. He died in Aurora, March 18, 1900. In 1870 he was an independent candidate for Congress against Gen. Farnsworth. Dr. Stoughton was first married in 1847, to Miss Amanda Cheritre, of New York State, and in 1881, as his second wife, to Miss Mary J. Leet, of Bradford, Ill., who is still living in Aurora. His only surviving child is Mrs. Stella Ament, of Ross, Ind.

JOHN C. STRADER, druggist, Geneva, Ill., born in West Martinsburg, Lewis County, N. Y., Aug. 28, 1840, removed to the west ten years later with his parents, who made their home in St. Charles, Ill. There he received a good private school education, was employed as clerk in a dry-goods store for a time, and then learned the drug business, in which he has been engaged almost continuously to the present time. In 1881 he became connected with a drug store in Geneva, and in 1885 was appointed Postmaster by President Cleveland, retaining the office until 1899. For two years afterward he was in the employ of the Glucose Works at Geneva, when he again entered the drug trade as an employe of the pioneer druggist, F. K. Eddowes. In 1897 he bought out his employer, and has continued the business up to the present time. Mr. Strader has been prominent in the local councils of the Democracy, and was the Democratic candidate for Treasurer in 1894. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. His first wife was Miss Jennie Fritts, of St. Charles, and after her death he married Miss Delia S. Moore, daughter of John B. Moore. Bessie Strader was born of the first marriage, and Ruth Moore Strader was born of the second marriage.

ABRAHAM STRAUSS (deceased), merchant, born in Rappenau, Baden, Germany, Jan. 23, 1850, was reared to manhood and educated in his native country. He prepared himself as a teacher, but on coming to Elgin in 1869, entered the employment of his cousin, L. Adler, as a clothing salesman, retaining that connection for ten years. In 1879 he engaged in the clothing business for himself. He soon became one of the leading merchants of Elgin, and was very highly regarded. To meet the demands of his growing business in 1890 he completed the Strauss Block, one of the principal business buildings of Elgin. He maintained a high standing in the Masonic fraternity. On March 29, 1882, he married Bertha Adler, who was a daughter of Leopold and Rose Adler, and to them were born two children: Edgar Leon and Louis Saran. Mr. Strauss died Sept. 16, 1902.

GEORGE STRICKLAND (deceased), pioneer settler, Aurora, Kane County, Ill., born in Widmore, near Bristol, England, in 1816; came to the United States when a boy fourteen years of age, and was apprenticed to the wagon-makers' trade at Skeneateles, N. Y.; in 1835 came west, locating first in Chicago, and, in 1838, removed to Aurora, where, for a time, he was engaged in the wagon-making business as a junior member of the firm of Hall & Strickland. Later he became connected with George McCollum, the pioneer wagon-maker of Aurora, remaining in his employ for many years. In 1857 Mr. Strickland removed to Iowa and settled on a farm in Chickasaw County, where he died in 1860. His wife, whose maiden name was Olive Sheldon, died at their Iowa home in 1883.

SUGAR GROVE MANUAL AND TRAINING SCHOOL, an educational institution founded by Prof. F. H. Hall, Thomas Judah, L. H. Gillett, Mrs. Ruth Snow, and others, in 1875, for the purpose of training students in the elements of agriculture, teaching, practical work in the various departments of the school, and to fit them for similar work in other schools. Prof. Hall, an educator of note and author of several valuable text-books, was its principal for eleven years, leaving it well established in 1887. Miss M. E. Petty, now Mrs. Frank Snow, of Sugar Grove, conducted it for several years, and, in 1899, Prof. E. M. Harris, of Aurora, became its head. Under his management it has gained in every way, especially as a fitting school for college and university life, its students being freely admitted to the higher institutions upon his recommendation. Prof. Harris has introduced a business school, which is receiving much patronage. The school has a library of 500 volumes.

DAVID W. SUTFIN, farmer, Dundee Township, Kane County, Ill.; born at Tully, Onondaga County, N. Y., Aug. 29, 1836; came with his parents to Dundee in 1837, where he grew up and obtained his education in the public schools; served from September, 1861, to April, 1862, in the Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War, being discharged on the latter date on account of disability. Mr. Sutfin was married in 1863 to Isabella Grant.

WILLIAM SUTFIN, pioneer settler, Batavia, Ill., born at Northumberland, Saratoga County, N. Y.; obtained a limited common-school education, and came to Dundee, Ill., in 1837, removing with his family to Batavia in 1838. He was a millwright by trade, and was one of the pioneer mill-builders of the Fox River Valley. Mr. Sutfin was twice married, his first union being with Lucy Ann Wilson in 1829, and after her death, Abigail D. Wescott, of Naperville, Ill., became his wife. He died at Dundee in 1896.

EDGAR D. SWAIN, dentist, Batavia, Ill., born in Westford, Vt., Aug. 14, 1836, son of Dr. Marcus and Charlotte (Woodbury) Swain, descends on his father's side from Richard Swain, who came from England in 1635, and settled at Hampton, N. H., and on the maternal side from the family which gave to the United States Levi Woodbury, the distinguished jurist and statesman. Edgar D. Swain received a public school and academic education in Vermont, and studied dentistry at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. In 1857 he went to Oshkosh, Wis., where he practiced dentistry for about a year, when he removed to Aurora, Ill., spending there a short time before opening his office in Batavia. Soon after the breaking out of the Civil War he raised a company for service, which became Company I, Forty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being mustered in Sept. 17, 1861, with him as Captain. On September 21 the regiment went to Benton Barracks, St. Louis, Mo., and participated during that fall in the campaigns under Generals Fremont and Hunter, and during the winter of 1861-2 was transferred to the Army of the Mississippi, and the following summer to the Army of the Cumberland. Captain Swain was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel Oct. 10, 1863, and April 13, 1864, was commissioned Colonel, though he was never mustered in as such. He was in command of the regiment from November, 1863, until July, 1865, when by orders he assumed command of the Third Brigade, Second Division, Fourth Army Corps, which command he retained till Dec. 16, 1865, when he joined his regiment for final muster out at Springfield, Ill., Jan. 12, 1866. That the regiment saw hard service is shown by the fact that 1,824 men, all told, were mustered into its companies, and only 250 men remained to be mustered out. Colonel Swain participated in fifty-one battles, and was wounded at New Hope Church, Ga., June 3, 1864. After the war he made his home in Chicago, where he practiced dentistry until 1898, when he retired, removing to Seneca Falls, N. Y., but in 1902 he again returned to Batavia. As a microscopist and histologist Colonel Swain has been well known throughout the West for many years. He was one of the organizers of the Chicago College of Dentistry, being its first Secretary and Treasurer. In 1885 he became Dean of the reorganized faculty of the Northwestern Dental College, and filled that position about four years. He has filled the positions of President in the following Societies connected with his profession: Chicago Dental Society, Odontological Society of Chicago, and Illinois State Dental Society. Colonel Swain was Commander of the Department of Illinois, G. A. R., for two terms, and served one term as Senior Vice Commander-in-Chief of the National Encampment, G. A. R., and for two terms was Commander of Geo. H. Thomas Post, No. 5, Chicago. His interest in military affairs has continued since the war, and he has served four years six months as Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel of the First Regiment, Illinois National Guard. He is a member of the Loyal Legion, and was appointed by Governor Altgeld a member of the Commission to locate the position of the Illinois regiments on the battlefield of Chattanooga and vicinity. Colonel Swain was married, in 1869, to Miss Clara Smith, daughter of Benjamin Smith, an early settler of Chicago.

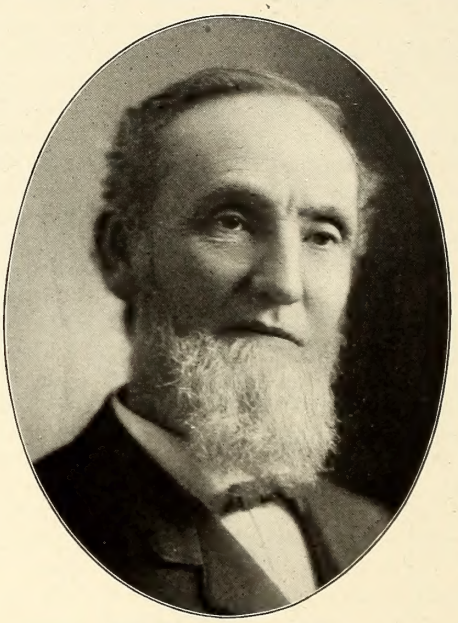
JOHN W. SWAINE, farmer and stock-dealer, Elburn, Ill., born in Saratoga, N. Y., Dec. 22, 1832; came to Kane County, Ill., in 1844 and in 1861 enlisted in Company I, Eighth Illinois Cavalry, for service in the Union army; discharged on account of disability in August, 1862, when he returned to Kane County, where he has since resided. On Nov. 24, 1868, he was married to Sophia Platt.

JOSEPH E. SWITZER, lumber and coal merchant, St. Charles, Ill., was born in Palatine, Cook County, Ill., Sept. 20, 1857, son of Samuel and Harriet (Towner) Switzer, and was brought by his parents to St. Charles when he was ten years old. His education was obtained in the local schools of Palatine and St. Charles, and Elgin Academy. His first business experience was farming, which he followed for four years in St. Charles Township; from 1885 until 1893, he was engaged in contracting and building in Elgin, and was in the same business in St. Charles from 1893 to 1900. In the latter year he bought an interest in the West Side Lumber Company of St. Charles, of which he is Secretary and Manager. In 1880 he was married to Miss Carrie Seaman, of Cortland Township, Kane County, who died Dec. 17, 1898. Mr. Switzer was married a second time in January, 1900, to Miss Belle Townsend, daughter of W. H. Townsend, of Sycamore.

JOSEPH M. SWITZER (deceased), farmer, Rutland Township, Kane County, Ill., born in Toronto, Canada, May 21, 1822; came with his mother to Kane County in 1838, and in 1844 purchased a 120-acre farm in Rutland Township, where he resided until his death, Feb. 28, 1882; politically a Republican and served as Justice of the Peace twelve years. On Feb. 13, 1851, he married Miss Alice Smith, who, with their three children, is still living.

SAMUEL SWITZER, retired farmer, St. Charles, Ill., was born in Toronto, Canada, May 8, 1829, son of Joseph Switzer, and was educated in the schools of his native city. In 1849 he came to St. Charles, Ill., with his father, who bought a large farm near that place, where the father and son lived together until the former's death in 1853. The son retained his interest in the farm until 1856, when he sold out and removed to Cook County, where he continued farming. In 1868 he returned to Kane County, and bought a farm which he actively cultivated until 1901, when he rented it, though still living there retired. He was married in St. Charles Township, Kane County, on June 16, 1853, to Harriet Turner, daughter of Alexander Turner, of St. Charles Township.



PHILO SYLLA (deceased), inventor and manufacturer, was born in Pembroke, N. H., Oct. 12, 1806; his father was Benjamin Cilley and his mother Mary Morey. Left an orphan at the age of about eight years, he was taken to Massachusetts by a Mr. Green, who died a few years later, when the boy was sent back to his former home and bound out, being allowed only six months in school during his servitude. At the age of eighteen, in company with four cousins—all Cilleys—he started for the Far West and reached the Western Reserve in Ohio, where they all changed the style of their names, the subject of this sketch adopting Sylla as his name. After remaining in Ohio about two years, he returned to New Hampshire and was soon thereafter appointed Captain of a militia company, which office he held for many years. In 1831 he was married to Lavina Huntoon, of Salisbury, N. H., and of this union there were four children. James Sylla, of this family, was educated in Elgin public schools, Knox College and graduated at Rochester University, N. Y.; in 1856 taught in Raymond Collegiate Institute, N. Y.; was Principal of Elgin Academy (1858-9) and a Professor in Chicago University (1860-61), dying at Friendship, N. Y., in January, 1865. Sarah Jane (Sylla) Smith attended the public schools in Elgin and taught there and in Elgin Academy; married Edwin J. Smith in 1859, died in 1881. Wm. F. Sylla (sketch elsewhere). Edwin Sylla, educated in the public schools of Elgin and Elgin Academy, served as Captain of Company H, Tenth Illinois Infantry, in War of the Rebellion, was Chief of Elgin Fire Department, a Republican in politics, and died at Elgin, June 28, 1875. Among the earliest manufacturers in Elgin, Ill., was Capt. Philo Sylla, who came from Wilmot Flat, N. H., in July, 1837, and located a claim just west of the present city of Elgin. Mr. Sylla was both an inventor and a mechanic. He had a shop on his farm where he built fanning mills and about the year 1839 constructed a thrashing machine. The latter had an entirely new feature, consisting of a fan for cleaning the grain as it passed through the machine instead of winnowing by hand. Oscar and Edward Lawrence, who are now living in Elgin, both assisted in thus thrashing grain on Mr. Sylla's farm, and William G. Todd says that he also well remembers the first thrashing machine that Mr. Sylla built. "After he had thrashed his own grain with this experimental machine and made some minor improvements, he moved it to my father's (James Todd's) farm, and thrashed the first crop of grain raised there. Having finished, he moved on to the place now known as the William Wing farm, on Highland Avenue, where thrashing went on until noon; but while the men were absent at dinner, the straw took fire and the machine was destroyed." Mr. Sylla built a second thrasher which was used on several farms in the neighboring towns. Of this machine Mr. Robert Corron, who is still living on the same land he entered in 1835, says: "In the year 1840 I bought a thrashing machine built by Philo Sylla at Elgin. It was named the 'Prairie Queen,' and was the first machine that both thrashed and cleaned grain ever used in this country. Two hundred bushels of wheat, or four hundred bushels of oats, could be thrashed and cleaned in a day; this was wonderful in those times!" In 1842 Mr. Sylla left his farm and moved into a house of his own construction on the corner of North State and Washington streets, Elgin, building a shop on the opposite side of the street, where, together with Charles Webster, he continued to manufacture hand fanning mills, thrashing machines and horse-power tread-mills. Alfred Hadlock was soon after taken into the firm, and improvements were made in the machines and horse-power by using a "tumbling rod" instead of a belt to convey power. Mr. Sylla soon left the manufacture of thrashers, etc., to Alfred Hadlock and George W. Renwick, while he devoted all his energies to the improvement and manufacture of reaping machines. He bought a patent and built machines, but his first efforts, which were "headers," proved failures, and he found that he had risked and lost his farm on the venture. In the year 1850 Mr. Sylla built a reaping machine upon which the grain was raked and bound by hand. In 1851 improvements were made, and combined for cutting grain or grass, and a hinged cutting bar was used. Three or four machines were built. In 1852 further improvements were made, and the hinged cutting bar and a reel without a continuous shaft was later adopted. The raking and binding were done by four men who rode upon the machine under a canopy which covered the entire platform, and the bundles of grain were carried upon the machine for each shock and dumped in place for setting up in the field. A copartnership was formed and these machines were manufactured by Sylla & Adams, Augustus Adams, for several years a member of the State Legislature from Kane County, being the partner. The first patent secured was issued to Philo Sylla and Augustus Adams on reaping and mowing machines, being granted Sept. 20, 1853. In 1855 Philo Sylla obtained additional patents for improvements on reaping and mowing machines. A double-hinge folding sickle-bar and a reel, without a continuous shaft, for reaping and mowing machines, were strictly Philo Sylla's inventions, and these have since proved to be of the greatest value to the entire world, having been generally adopted and being still in use on all the leading mowers and reapers manufactured in this country, and throughout the world. The invention of a hinge for attaching a sickle or cutter-bar to a reaping and mowing-machine was revealed to Mr. Sylla in a dream, and he was enabled at once to complete the machine he had worked upon for several years. Machines utilizing these inventions were manufactured in Elgin by Sylla & Adams during 1852-4; by Sylla, Seward & Co., in 1855-6; and by Sylla & Adams in 1857. The great financial crash of 1857 brought misfortune, and the valuable patents were sold to C. Aultman & Co., of Canton, Ohio, to whom they were reissued and proved to be of great money value and an immense source of revenue.

Mr. Sylla was a Baptist and a Deacon in the Elgin church for nearly twenty years. In politics he was a Free-Soiler, Whig and Republican. He was elected the first President of the village and town of Elgin in 1846, and always took a lively interest in all public matters. About 1845 he and four other citizens of Elgin erected at their own cost the first school house built in Elgin, and the building is still standing in West Elgin. Philo Sylla died at Elgin, May 12, 1870.

WILLIAM F. SYLLA, City and Town Clerk, Elgin, Ill., was born in Elgin Aug. 6, 1840, the son of Philo and Lavina (Huntoon) Sylla, natives of New Hampshire, and was educated in the public schools of that city and at the Elgin Academy. While a student in Elgin Academy he gave instruction to classes to defray expenses, and also taught a district school for a time. In July, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, Thirty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and was detailed as a clerk for the Regimental Quartermaster. The regiment arrived at Rolla, Mo., Sept. 29, 1861. Here he was taken with typhoid fever and, after several weeks, was detailed as one of a guard of honor which accompanied the remains of his First Lieutenant to Elgin, Ill., for burial—Private Sylla being conveyed during the entire journey by his friends on a cot. He was honorably discharged upon the medical certificate of Surgeon

WILLIAM F. SYLLA.

H. M. Crawford, of Camp Douglas, Chicago, Dec. 25, 1861. June 25, 1862, he re-enlisted in Company D, Sixty-seventh Illinois (a three-months' regiment) and was appointed Quartermaster Sergeant of the Post at Camp Douglas, serving until discharged by reason of expiration of service, Sept. 25, 1862. Early in October he was employed as clerk by the Commissary of General Quimby's Division at Corinth, and was with General Grant's army during the Tallahatchie campaign. Suffering much of the time from malaria and typhoid fever, he was sent north from the Foundry Hospital at Memphis, Tenn., by Surgeon A. L. Clark, in January, 1862. In the summer of 1863 he was with General White's expedition on the Big Sandy River, Ky., and in August was appointed clerk for James C. Rankin, Division Commissary of General Hascall's Division, Twenty-third Army Corps, and was with General Burnside's expedition to East Tennessee in August and September, 1863; was at Knoxville during the siege of that city by rebel General Longstreet and, in December, 1863, was sent on a special mission over the Cumberland Mountains on horseback to Danville, Ky., and to Chicago. Upon his return to Knoxville he found that Commissary Rankin had resigned and returned to Chicago. He at once was tendered a position and served as clerk for Post Commissary Capt. James Miller, of the Sixty-fifth Illinois, at Knoxville, Tenn., until the reorganization of the Army of the Ohio, Twenty-third Army Corps, preparatory to the Atlanta campaign. In February, 1864, he was promoted to the position of Chief Clerk to Col. R. B. Treat, Chief Commissary on the staff of Gen. J. M. Schofield, for the Army of the Ohio, Twenty-third Army Corps, remaining in this position nearly two years, when, in April, 1865, he was recommended by General Schofield for appointment as Commissary of Subsistence, with the rank of Major, for assignment as Disbursing Commissary, but a general order from the War Department, Washington, made further appointments impossible. Mr. Sylla was connected with the Atlanta campaigns and accompanied the Twenty-third Army Corps to Pulaski, Tenn.; was at the battles of Columbia, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville, went with the Corps via Washington, D. C., to Wilmington, N. C.; was at the battle of Kinston, and was present at the meeting of Sherman's and Schofield's armies at Goldsboro, and remained at Raleigh, N. C., until the latter part of September, 1865, returning with General Schofield's headquarters to Cincinnati in October, and to his home in Elgin in November, 1865, making a service in connection with the Union army of four years and four months. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and Secretary of the Thirty-sixth Regiment, Illinois Volunteers' Association. After more than four years' service in the War of the Rebellion, having returned to his home in Elgin, he was a partner of his former Captain, M. B. Baldwin, in the drug business for a year, but finding this occupation too confining, in company with his father and brother he engaged in the foundry business. In the spring of 1874 he was solicited to be a candidate for Alderman in the new Fifth Ward of Elgin, and was elected over his opponent, Joslyn, being re-elected the following spring over Arwin E. Price. In March, 1875, upon his resignation as Alderman, he was appointed City Clerk of Elgin, a position which by successive appointments he held for five years. In 1880 the city having organized under the General State Law, he was elected City Clerk for the term of two years, and has been re-elected consecutively since that date. In 1875 he was also elected Town Clerk, and has held that office since that date, making a record of holding the offices of City Clerk and Town Clerk, at the same time, for the term of twenty-eight years. He was also elected Secretary of the Board of Education in 1877; was elected a member of the Board of Education and Secretary the following year, and held these positions for sixteen years, consecutively. He has been a deacon in the Baptist church of Elgin for twenty-four years. No man holding office under the present city regime is more deserving of success and esteem, having made a record in his present official position of which any citizen might feel proud. Mr. Sylla was married Dec. 5, 1871, to Kate E. Raymond, only daughter of George B. Raymond, and they have had four children: Mary E. (now Mrs. Edward R. Davery), Daisy A., George B. R., and Marguerite K. Sylla. Mr. Sylla and family are members of the First Baptist church, Elgin, and he is a Deacon and Clerk of the church. In politics he is a Republican.

W. A. TANNER, pioneer farmer and merchant, Aurora, Ill.; born at Watertown, Jefferson County, N. Y., Feb. 17, 1815; came to Kane County, Ill., in September, 1835, locating on a tract of government land, and eventually became the owner of a large estate in Kane County, as well as land in Kansas and Minnesota; became interested in the hardware business in 1855, conducting a successful trade until the time of his death, Dec. 29, 1892. He was married July 9, 1840, to Miss Anna Makepeace, who died Oct. 1, 1900, leaving eight living children, viz.: Eugene, Henry R., Mrs. Florence Pattison, Mrs. Amy Johnson, Imogene, Mrs. Mary Hopkins, Mrs. Martha Thornton and George W.

RALPH C. TAYLOR, physician and surgeon, Lily Lake, Ill.; born at Milburn, Lake County, Ill., Nov. 12, 1869; obtained his preliminary education in the public schools of his native village, Hillsdale (Michigan) College, the Northern Indiana Normal School (department of pharmacy), and received his medical training in the College of Physicians and Surgeons (Chicago); began practicing at Lily Lake in 1897; married on May 23, 1900, Irene L. Stewart.

FRANK B. TAZEWELL, farmer, Plato Township, Kane County, born in Rutland Township, Kane County, Jan. 23, 1866, son of James B. and Mary J. (Moore) Tazewell, was reared on the farm and educated in the public school, Elgin Academy and Drew's Business College at Elgin; purchased a farm at East Plato in 1895, where he has since maintained his home, and where he engaged in dairy farming and stock-feeding. He has held local offices, and has taken a keen interest in the welfare of the public schools of his neighborhood. He was married in 1895 to Miss Lulu Doty, daughter of Edward Doty, of Hampshire Township, Kane County, who died in August, 1900. Their only child is Lynn E.

JAMES B. TAZEWELL.

JAMES B. TAZEWELL (deceased), late of 579 Orange Street, Elgin, retired farmer for many years, was born in England, Jan. 12, 1838, came to Kane County, Ill., when six years old, in company with his parents, and here was his home until his death, Oct. 6, 1902. His education was secured in the public schools, after which he engaged in farming with his father on a place southwest of Gilbert's, Kane County. In 1865 he purchased a farm on which he made his home until 1899. That year he bought a home in Elgin, to which he retired, giving up active labor on account of the infirmities of age. In public life he served as School Director and pathmaster, and was always deeply interested in the public welfare. He was well liked by his neighbors. He was married, April 13, 1859, to Miss Mary J. Moore, in Will County, Ill., who was born Jan. 28, 1838, and of this union were born six children: James M.; Elizabeth; Margaret E.; Frank B.; David D., who died March 11, 1903; and William H.

LESTER TEEPLE, farmer and stock-raiser, Dundee Township, Kane County, was born in Woodstock, Canada, in 1851, son of Pellum C. Teeple. The father was reared in Canada, and, in his early years, took part in the Canadian Rebellion of 1837, and on this account was compelled to seek refuge in the United States. For a time he worked on the old Illinois and Michigan Canal, then in process of construction, and later secured employment at the milling trade, in Newburg, Rockford and elsewhere in Illinois. He married at Newburg, Mary A. Gleason, daughter of one of the pioneers of that region, and having received a full pardon for his participation in the rebellion, he went back to Canada to care for his father and mother. After a residence in Canada of twelve years, he returned to Illinois and established his home at Woodstock, where the son, Lester Teeple, received his education in the public schools, and in Todd's Academy. Lester Teeple engaged in the lumber and coal trade in Marengo, Ill., in 1874, and continued this business there and at other points for several years. In 1881 he came to Dundee Township, Kane County, and entered into the business of dairy-farming and breeding thoroughbred stock, which he continued until 1903. The latter year he turned his attention to stock-feeding, in which he is now largely engaged. In 1875 Mr. Teeple married Miss Ada Mason, daughter of David Mason, one of the oldest settlers of Dundee Township, who died in June, 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Teeple are the parents of six children: David P., Hugh M., L. Lynn and Kenneth G. (both deceased), Constance W., and Collson. The living members of the family still reside in Dundee.

JOSEPH TEFFT (deceased), physician and surgeon, Elgin, Ill., was born at Lebanon, N. Y., Aug. 29, 1812, and died in Elgin, Ill., Aug. 26, 1888. He obtained a good academic education, and studied medicine at Great Barrington, Vt.; came west with his father's family, Jonathan Tefft, who settled on a farm in Cook County, near Elgin, in 1826. Later the elder Tefft removed to a farm in Elgin Township, where he died in 1866. Dr. Tefft was the first resident physician in Elgin, and was also the owner of a farm, part of which is now in Lord's Park in Elgin. He continued in practice in Elgin until 1875, and during this time was interested in many important business and social enterprises in this city, and especially was active in developing its growth as a great dairy center. He was the first Mayor of Elgin, and for five terms in succession held that office.

LESLIE E. TEFFT (deceased), physician and surgeon, Elgin, Ill., was born in Elgin, Aug. 26, 1848, the son of Dr. Joseph Tefft, whose home was then located on what is now the site of the City Hall. His education was obtained at the Elgin Academy, and Notre Dame University, of South Bend, Ind. In 1887 he graduated from Rush Medical College, of Chicago, and opened an office for the practice of his profession in Elgin. Here he continued until within a few years prior to his death, when failing health compelled him to curtail his professional labors. He was a member of the American Medical Association, the Fox River Valley Association, and the Chicago Medical Society, and stood high as a practitioner. An active interest was taken by him in the development of the Elgin Park system, and he served four years as a member of the Elgin Park Board. In Masonic matters he stood high, being a Knight Templar and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. He died Dec. 29, 1899. In 1872 he was married to Miss Susan Belyea, who was born and reared in St. Charles, Ill. Mrs. Tefft still resides at the old homestead in Elgin. Their children are Mrs. Sherman C. Spitzer, of Oak Park, a graduate of the University of Chicago, and Leslie J., who graduated from the University of Michigan in 1902.

EDWIN L. TENNY, Aurora, Ill.; born near Rochester, N. Y., in 1829; reared on a farm and educated in the public schools; came west in 1863 and established his home in Ottawa, Ill., where he opened a photograph gallery; came to Aurora in 1874, where he resided until his death, Jan. 3, 1903. He was married in 1886 to Miss Ellen McAlpine, of Aurora.

THE AURORA HOSPITAL is an institution founded in 1886 by an association composed of fifteen public-spirited men and women of Aurora. The following were the incorporators and first Board of Trustees for the management and control of the hospital: G. W. Quereau, Mary S. Holbrook, J. B. Arnold, Eliza S. Brigham, G. W. Rhodes, C. L. Hoyt, Holmes Miller, Fred O. White, L. E. Johnson, A. Somarindyck, A. K. Perry, H. H. Evans, George F. Ruggles, C. M. Liew, Nellie E. Higgins, Eb. Denny, William McKinney, Joseph Rising and Thomas O'Donnel. The institution was opened for the reception of patients in a rented building on Fourth Street, in October, 1886. Two years later the present building on Lincoln Avenue was erected, and greatly enlarged in 1903. The Hospital was founded to afford medical aid for the sick and injured, and it was expressly provided in the charter that no person should be refused aid on account of inability to pay the usual fees. The sick and injured received into the hospital are cared for by a corps of physicians drawn from the ranks of the practicing physicians of Aurora. Its seventeen years of history are creditable as a record of unselfish good, and it is a model institution of the kind. A school for the practical instruction and training of nurses is conducted in connection with the hospital.

THE CARPENTERSVILLE LITERARY AND LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.—In 1871, while serving as a member of the Illinois Legislature, the Hon. J. A. Carpenter secured a charter for the above-named organization, the incorporators being George Marshall, W. W. Norton, William G. Sawyer, Henry G. Sawyer, Delos Dunton and others. The charter set forth the purposes of the organization, as the establishment of a library and reading room, and the formation of a society for mutual improvement in Carpentersville. Some time later a pioneer organization known as the "Hand in Hand Division," transferred a few books which it had secured to the new organization, and this was the foundation of its large and well-selected library. The first home of the library was the old school house in Carpentersville, which had been abandoned when the new school building was erected. This building was occupied until 1897. In that year the library was moved into a fine new building, erected for its special use by Mrs. Mary Carpenter. It is maintained by contributions from the people of Carpentersville, and from its benefactress, Mrs. Carpenter.

THE ELGIN SILVER PLATE COMPANY, Elgin, Ill., capital stock, $100,000, was incorporated in 1890 as the Griffin Silver Plate Company, of Chicago, with John T. Richards, of Chicago, as President; Louis G. Koegal, of St. Louis, as Vice-President, and John M. Blackburn, of Chicago, as Secretary and Treasurer. In 1892 the present factory was completed at a cost of $25,000, and the business removed to Elgin, the corporate name being changed to Elgin Silver Plate Company. They are manufacturers of coffin and casket hardware, and are the largest producers of this class of material in the world. From one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty hands are employed with an annual output of about a quarter of a million dollars. From 1892 the business shows an increase of sixty hands and $75,000 in volume of business. The officers (1892) are: President, Joseph Shaw, of Zanesville, Ohio; Vice-President, T. J. Pringle, of Milwaukee; Secretary and Treasurer, John M. Blackburn, who as resident official has charge of the entire business.

THE HOLY CROSS CATHOLIC CHURCH, of Batavia, had its origin in a mission established there in 1852. For several years thereafter the mission was attended alternately by priests from St. Charles and Aurora. The mission was established in April, 1870, as a parish by Rev. Michael Prendergast, who was transferred from St. Charles and became the first resident pastor of the Batavia church, where he died March 3, 1875, his remains being interred in Calvary Cemetery in Chicago. He was instrumental in securing the property on which the church and parish house now stand, and shortly before his death began making preparations for the building of a new church. He is remembered as one of the most devout rectors of the parish, and also as most active and energetic in advancing its interests. He was succeeded by Rev. James O'Connor, who remained in charge but a few months. His successor, Rev. Dominick Spellman, was pastor of the Batavia church for seventeen years, and proved himself in every way an exemplary man and pastor. His popularity was unbounded with all the city, and it was a matter of general regret when he was transferred to Braidwood in 1893. He is still at work in that important Catholic post. Rev. George Rathz was next assigned to the Batavia church, and, beginning his work Nov. 12, 1893, is still in charge (1903). Within that time the parish has erected one of the finest church buildings in Kane County, the cornerstone of which was laid Aug. 2, 1896. Its dedication occurred June 1, 1897. It is a Gothic structure, built of native stone, at a cost of $15,000. One hundred families make up the membership of the parish at the present time.

THE WEST AURORA FARMERS' CLUB, an association of farmers and their families, formed in 1892, in the town of Aurora, Kane County, its object being to bring together the farmers of that vicinity for social intercourse and mutual improvement, is one of the noted organizations of Kane County. Its founders were Miss Eva Marlett, the Hardy and Angell families and the Misses Clark. Monthly meetings are held throughout the year, except in July and August, and at these meetings regular programs, combining instruction, discussion and entertainments, are presented. In 1903 the Club numbered thirty members.

THE YEOMEN OF AMERICA, a mutual benefit fraternal association, organized at Aurora, Ill., by William A. Colledge, Isaac W. Prichard, Charles E. Corlett, Charles D. Judd, Charles M. Coats, William H. Griswold, J. M. Kennedy, Roy S. Kennedy, W. F. Shambo and Earnest S. Judd, under an act of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois entitled: "An act to provide for the organization and management of fraternal beneficiary societies, for the purpose of furnishing life indemnity or pecuniary benefits to beneficiaries of deceased members, of accident or permanent indemnity disability to members thereof, and to control such societies of this State and of other States doing business in this State and providing and fixing the punishment of violation of the provisions thereof." The object of the association was to create a corporation empowered to issue mutual benefit life insurance policies to its members. On the 28th of June, 1898, the certificate of incorporation was received from James R. B. VanCleave, Insurance Commissioner of the State of Illinois, and the first policy was written August 16 of that year. For a time the work of "The Yeomen of America" was confined to the State of Illinois; but on May 9, 1902, the society extended its business to the State of Wisconsin and, in August of the same year, to the State of Minnesota. Aug. 1, 1903, the association had written 13,365 policies. The plan of this progressive and fast-growing society is new to the insurance world, inasmuch as each member is compelled to pay the cost price of his insurance, regardless of the date of death. The past five years' work of the society has afforded evidence that, in the coming years, "The Yeomen of America" will rank with the foremost insurance institutions of the land.

WILLIAM T. THOMAS, farmer, Big Rock, Ill., born in Pembrokeshire, South Wales, in 1833; removed to Canada in 1851, and in the fall of the same year came to Chicago, where he learned the carpenter's trade; located in Big Rock Township in 1858, where he devoted his attention to farming until 1882, when he retired from active business, and in the same year he and Mrs. Thomas visited England and Wales; has long been one of the leaders of the Baptist church in Big Rock; married in 1857 Miss Mary Morris, who died May 31, 1903.

BURT H. THOMPSON, farmer and manufacturer; born in the town of Sugar Grove, Kane County, Sept. 25, 1858, and grew to years of maturity on his father's farm; educated in the public schools of Sugar Grove; trained to farming in his boyhood, and followed that occupation from the time he engaged in business for himself until 1901, when he retired and has since resided in Aurora, but still owns the old farm in Sugar Grove Township, which has been in the family since 1845. He was married in 1880 to Miss Arville H. Van Arsdale.

EDWIN W. THOMPSON, Aurora, Ill., born at East Dorset, Vt., June 7, 1845; came to Illinois with his father's family in infancy, and grew to manhood on the farm in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, and received his educational training in the public schools and Bryant & Stratton's Business College (Chicago); was engaged in farming and stock-raising in Sugar Grove Township until 1885, when he removed to the village of Sugar Grove, where he engaged in the coal and lumber trade for five years; came to Aurora in 1890, and has since been a resident of that city. He was married in 1866 to Miss Mary E. Paull, and they have one child, Clarence S.; another son, J. Paull, died in 1893.

GEORGE R. THOMPSON, Justice of the Peace, Elgin, Ill.; born in Warren County, Ohio, Feb. 24, 1850; came to Elgin in 1890, when he opened the Elgin City electric street car lines, having in charge the electrical construction and repairs of the lines and cars. Mr. Thompson now has charge of the construction of the lines of the Inter-State Telephone Company, of Dundee, Ill. He was married in 1875 to Miss Matilda Stoughton, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

JOHN THOMPSON (deceased), pioneer settler; born in the town of Grafton, Vt., Sept. 8, 1814; reared and educated in his native State, where he followed agricultural pursuits until 1845; came to Illinois in 1848, establishing his home in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying in 1892. Mr. Thompson was a successful farmer and stock-raiser, and was highly esteemed by his acquaintances for his many good qualities. He was married to Julia A. Colson, who died Sept. 4, 1891. The only living members of this pioneer family are Edwin W. and Burt H. Thompson, both of Aurora.

JOSEPH WALKER THOMPSON, Sugar Grove, farmer, and veteran of the Civil War, was born Feb. 20, 1846, in Sugar Grove, Kane County, Ill., son of Edward and Sarah (Fargue) Thompson. His parents came from New York City into Illinois in 1836 and made their home in Ottawa. Three years later they removed to Kane County and settled on a tract of government land near what is now the village of Sugar Grove. The elder Thompson conducted a store in Aurora six years, and spent the remainder of his life in Sugar Grove. When he first passed through Aurora it had but eleven houses, and building lots were then worth a dollar and a half each. His residence in Kane County covered a period of sixty years, his death occurring in Hinckley, Ill., where he died in 1890, and his widow in 1892. Walker Thompson, as he was familiarly known, was reared on the farm, and attended the local schools. In 1862 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served throughout the Civil War as part of the Army of the Tennessee, participating in all its historic battles, and being mustered out in August, 1865, after more than three years of active military service. Returning to his home in Sugar Grove Township, he resumed his farming career, and has resided there to the present time. He has served two terms as Tax Collector of Sugar Grove Township, and is well regarded in the community where his useful life is passing. He belongs to Aurora Post, No. 20, G. A. R., where his creditable military record gives him a good standing. Mr. Thompson was married in 1883 to Miss Lillian B., daughter of Benjamin Ward, of Aurora. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are Glynn F., and Hazel A. The living representatives of the Thompson family at this time (1904) are Joseph W.; Edward, of Sandwich, Ill.; Mrs. Jane (Thompson) Taylor, of Hinckley, Ill.; and Mrs. Eliza (Thompson) Price, of Woodstock, Ill.

CHARLES P. TODD, retired farmer and stock-dealer, Dundee, Ill.; born in Tompkins County, N. Y., Aug. 14, 1848; came west with his parents in 1854, who located on a 100-acre farm east of Dundee, in 1865; purchased his father's farm in 1877, but since 1900 has lived retired in the village. Mr. Todd was married in January, 1869, to Miss Elizabeth Burns, of New York.

LEVI TODD (deceased), pioneer, was born in Mt. Holly, Vt., in 1815, where he grew to manhood and was given a common school education. In 1854 he removed to Illinois, and made his home in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County, where he secured land and was engaged in farming until 1868. During that year he retired from farming and settled in the city of Aurora, where he spent his remaining years, being long engaged in the agricultural implement trade. Some years before his death he gave up all active business cares, and enjoyed that rest and peace that should attend the closing of a well-spent and useful life. His death occurred April 10, 1891. In 1836 Mr. Todd married Miss Rachel Walker Gibson, who was born in Shrewsbury, Vt., in 1818, and died in Aurora, Jan. 13, 1874. Their children were Mrs. Olivia (Todd) White, Lucius Merrill, Eleazer, Laura R., Emma J., George Henry, Mary A., and Elmer E. Lucius M., Eleazer and Laura R. are deceased. The others still reside in Aurora.

LUCIUS M. TODD (deceased), lumber merchant, Aurora, Kane County, Ill.; born at East Wallingford, Vt., April 6, 1839, son of Levi and Rachel (Gibson) Todd, and obtained his education in the public schools of Vermont and Kane County, Ill., his parents having removed to the latter place in 1854. In boyhood he was trained to farming, but later removed to Aurora, where he purchased a half-interest in the lumber business of Loomis & White, the firm then becoming White & Todd, and so continued until Mr. Todd's death, which occurred Feb. 16, 1899. After Mr. Todd's death his interest in the business was purchased by Mrs. O. T. White, his sister and the widow of his former partner. Mr. Todd was married in 1860 to Miss Mary Bruce of Ithaca, N. Y., who died in Aurora in 1892.

RENEL TODD (deceased), farmer, Dundee, Ill.; born in Tompkins County, N. Y., Aug. 6, 1818; came west in 1854, first locating on a farm in Barrington Township, Cook County, Ill.; removed to Kane County in 1865, and settled on a farm east of Dundee, where he remained until 1877. Retiring from active farm life in the latter year, he removed to the village of Dundee, where he died Jan. 16, 1885. Mr. Todd was married in 1843 to Miss Gertrude Brokaw.

ROBERT TODD, pioneer settler, Dundee, Ill.; born near Courtbridge (eight miles from Glasgow), Scotland, Feb. 1, 1821; came to the United States in 1835, locating first in Chicago, where he was employed on the old Illinois and Michigan Canal; came to Kane County with his father in 1836, and they located on a tract of Government land about four miles northwest of Dundee. Here Robert Todd resided until 1903, when he removed to his present home in the village of Dundee. He was married in 1848 to Grace Crichton, born in Glasgow, Scotland, daughter of John Crichton, and is the only survivor of a family of five sons and four daughters, all of whom were early settlers in the vicinity of Dundee. Mr. and Mrs. Todd are the parents of eight children, six of whom reside in Kane County.

SYLVESTER H. TODD, farmer, Geneva, Ill.; born in Homer, N. Y., Jan. 11, 1815; came to Illinois in 1840, locating on a farm near Geneva, Kane County, where he resided until 1866, when he retired from business and has since given much of his time to travel. He was married in 1836 to Clarissa D. Stephans, of Geneva, N. Y., and their living children are: Mrs. C. M. Blackman, of Chicago; Mrs. H. D. Whitehead, of Batavia; and Mrs. E. E. West, of St. Joseph, Mo.

THOMAS TODD, retired farmer, Elgin, Ill.; born in Scotland, Jan. 31, 1824, and received his educational training in his native country; came with his parents to American in 1836, locating on a farm near Dundee, Kane County, Ill.; operated a farm for several years, and still owns 340 acres of land near Elgin, but of recent years he has lived retired; married in March, 1854, Anna McNeil, of Dundee.

A. M. C. TODSON, manufacturer, Elgin, Ill.; born in Germany, Oct. 25, 1833; came to America in 1853, locating in Elgin, Ill., where he was first engaged as a farm-hand. He was variously occupied until 1869, when, in partnership with C. J. Schultz, he established a general store in Elgin. Mr. Todson has been interested in the creamery business since 1881, to which he added the manufacture of novelties in 1900. He was married in 1864 to Miss Ann A. Sedgwick.

MORRIS C. TOWN (deceased), banker, Elgin, was born in Granville, Washington County, N. Y., Feb. 7, 1818, son of Bester and Betsy (Martin) Town, the father being a native of New York, and the mother of Vermont. His parents gave him a public school education, and he was taught the hatter's trade in his father's factory. His business career as a merchant was begun in North East, Erie County, Penn., but in 1847 he came west and established himself at Elgin, Ill., where he continued his mercantile life. Shortly after he opened a banking house, which received a State charter in 1851. Seven years later he removed to Chicago, where he remained until 1860. That year he resumed merchandising in Elgin where, two years later, he became manager of the banking house of Lawrence, Pease & Town, an institution succeeded by the First National Bank of Elgin, of which Mr. Town was Cashier for eighteen years, later becoming its President—a position which he held until his death, July 31, 1892. He was one of the founders of Elgin Academy and served on its Board of Trustees for many years. As one of the first stockholders of the National Watch Company, he was a resident director from 1873 until his death. The Town block and other public improvements evidence his public spirit. Twice married, his first wife was Hannah S. Oviatt. After her death he married Miss Maria Selkregg, of North East, Penn. The surviving members of his family are: Mrs. William O. DeLong, of Titusville, Penn.; Mrs. L. B. Hamlin and Mrs. W. W. Sherwin, of Elgin, and Mrs. T. H. Volk, of Chicago, Ill.

CHESTER P. TRASK (deceased), pioneer citizen, Aurora, Kane County, Ill.; born in 1818, in Toledo, Ohio, where he resided until nineteen years of age, when he came to Aurora and operated for Charles Hoyt one of the first sawmills in that city. Later he became a farmer, and his farm, which was on the western border of Aurora village in early days, is now entirely within the limits of that city. Mr. Trask lived on his farm until his death in 1888. His wife, who was Fannie Sheldon before her marriage, was the daughter of Charles Sheldon. Mrs. Trask died in 1856, and the only surviving member of this family living in Aurora in 1903 is Mrs. Nelson Barsley.

WILLIAM H. TUPPER, retired farmer, Elburn, Ill., born at Burford, Canada, March 6, 1830; came to Kane County, Ill., in 1854, and purchased a farm in Kaneville Township, where he has since resided and has been prominently identified with farming interests and church affairs. Mr. Tupper has been twice married, his first wife, whom he married April 9, 1848, was Catherine Edmonds, who died July 31, 1889, and on Feb. 18, 1891, he married Phylura Joslin, who died Jan. 15, 1902.

GILBERT N. TURNBULL, architect, Elgin, Ill.; born in Iowa City, Iowa, April 23, 1856; educated in the schools of his native city and the Iowa State University; came to Elgin in 1874, where he worked at the carpenter's trade for several years, when he began contracting, remaining in that line of business until the fall of 1891, since which time he has conducted a successful business as an architectural draftsman. Mr. Turnbull was married in 1888 to Miss Edith M. Kinney, of Bloomingdale, Ill.

WALTER D. TURNER, manufacturer, Geneva, Ill., was born in Duxbury, Mass., July 27, 1838. In 1862 he came to Chicago, and in 1868 located in Geneva. He was married in 1875 to Miss Maria C. Le Baron, daughter of the late William Le Baron, M. D., State Entomologist of Illinois. Mr. Turner has been identified with the leading business enterprises of Geneva since 1862, was connected with William H. Howell until 1882, and since 1872 has been associated with the United States Wind Engine & Pump Company, of which, for the past two years, he has been the President.

WILLIAM J. TYERS.

WILLIAM J. TYERS, Aurora, State's Attorney of Kane County, was born in Aurora, Ill., Feb. 13, 1869, and was educated in the public schools. He read law in the office of Alschuler & Murphy, and was admitted to the Bar in 1894. A Republican, he was elected City Attorney of Aurora in 1897, and re-elected two years later. In 1900 he was elected State's Attorney, and is still serving in that capacity. Fraternally and socially he is a member of the City Club of Aurora, the Elks, Knights of Pythias, and Modern Woodmen of America.

DANIEL J. TYLER, farmer, St. Charles, Ill.; born on the farm where he now resides, April 9, 1845. In 1893 he bought his father's homestead. On March 6, 1875, he was married to Martha Bosworth, of St. Charles, and they have one son—Fred J. Tyler, who now resides at Hamilton, Ohio.

WILLIAM B. ULLMANN, manufacturer, St. Charles, Ill.; born in Racine, Wis., Oct. 7, 1850, son of Henry J. Ullmann, of Chicago; received his education in Racine College, and engaged in the iron and hardware business in Chicago in 1877. In 1880 he took up the malleable iron business, and in 1884 established the Malleable Iron Company at Moline. The factory was burned in 1893, when the works were located at St. Charles, and are still in operation there with Mr. Ullmann as President of the Company. He is also President of the DeKalb & Sycamore Electric Company.

LEVI UPDIKE (deceased), pioneer farmer, Geneva, Ill.; born in New Jersey, in 1819; in 1836 came to Illinois with his father, who took up government land about one and a fourth miles east of the present town of Geneva. Here the son attended the old-time common schools, and was engaged in farming during his active life, but spent his last years in the town of Geneva, where he died in 1889. He married Miss Caroline Hotchkiss, and they reared a family of three children, all of whom still reside in Geneva. The family is one of the oldest in Kane County, five generations being represented in it.

WILLIAM URCH, retired farmer, Batavia, Ill.; born in Somersetshire, Eng., in 1850; reared and educated in England and came to the United States in 1871; located on a farm at Mill Creek, Kane County, in 1872, but three years later purchased a farm on the edge of Batavia City, where he carried on dairy farming until 1902, retiring from active business in the latter year. He was married in 1876 to Miss Sophia Quire, of Somersetshire, Eng.

J. J. VAIL, attorney, Elgin, Ill.; born in the city where he now resides, Nov. 15, 1872; obtained his preliminary education in the Elgin schools, graduating from the Elgin Academy in 1892, and afterwards attended the Northwestern University, completing the law course in that institution in 1899; admitted to the bar in the fall of 1900, and in the same year began practicing his profession in Elgin, where he is still located as a partner with Fred H. Raymond.

WILLIAM HENRY VAN ARSDALE, mining engineer, Aurora, born in New York City, Jan. 18, 1846, graduated from the New York Free Academy and the Columbia School of Mines; in company with E. F. Eurich, John A. Knapp and J. B. Arnold organized the Aurora Smelting & Refining Company in 1882, and was Vice-President of this company, as well as of its successor, the Chicago & Aurora Smelting & Refining Company. He was also instrumental in reviving the Aurora Young Men's Christian Association, and was its President for about fifteen years.

FRANK VANDERHORF, dairy farmer, Campton Township, Kane County, Ill.; born in Washtenaw County, Mich., Jan. 6, 1856; came to Kane County with his parents when an infant; remained on his father's farm until the latter's death, when he took charge of the homestead. His father, Levi Vanderhorf, died in 1870; his mother surviving until 1896. Mr. Vanderhorf was married Jan. 3, 1895, to Katie A. Hawley.

AMENZO W. VAN DERVOLGAN (deceased), Batavia, Ill., was born in Schoharie County, N. Y., Jan. 8, 1852, and was brought by his parents into Illinois at an early age. He grew to manhood in DuPage County, where he secured his education in the public schools. In 1875 he married Miss Belle Frydendale, who was born and reared near Batavia, and established his home in that city where (with the exception of one year) they lived until his death. His widow still has her home in Batavia. In early life Mr. Van Dervolgan was a farmer, but in later years he followed the business of putting down tubular wells, in which he was engaged at the time of his death, which occurred Jan. 6, 1902. He served as a member of the Batavia Board of Aldermen, and had held other local offices. He belonged to the Odd-Fellows and the Modern Woodmen. Mrs. Van Dervolgan and one son, Arthur J., survive.

JOHN VAN NORTWICK (deceased), civil engineer, manufacturer and Railway President, Batavia, Ill., was born in Washington County N. Y., April 5, 1809, a son of William and Martha (Flack) Van Nortwick. He received an academic education, and was fitted for the profession of civil engineer. In 1828 he became connected with the engineering department in charge of the canals of New York, and gained distinction as a civil engineer while thus employed. He remained in the State service until 1845, when he was employed by the United States Government as a civil engineer on the construction of the dry dock at Brooklyn. In 1846 he removed to Batavia with his family, having already accepted an engagement as Chief Engineer of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad. Under his management the lines running from Chicago to Freeport, and from West Chicago to Fulton on the Mississippi River, were constructed, as was the line from West Chicago to Aurora. For eight years he was President of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway. After his retirement from the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad he became largely interested in the manufacture of paper, both at Batavia and in Wisconsin, and also in water power property in the lower Fox River Valley, Wis., also had large investments in railroads, banks and in other manufacturing industries. He died in Batavia, April 15, 1890. His wife, who was Patty Maria Mallory before her marriage, was born at Penn Yan, N. Y., and died in Batavia, Aug. 25, 1893.

JOHN VAN NORTWICK, City Treasurer of Batavia; born in Batavia, Ill., Nov. 30, 1870; educated at the Michigan University (Ann Arbor) and Princeton College (New Jersey), graduating from the latter institution in the class of 1894; joined his father and associates in business the same year, and has since been identified with those interests; was elected City Treasurer of Batavia in 1901.

JOHN S. VAN NORTWICK, manufacturer, Appleton, Wis.; born in Batavia, Ill., March 26, 1847, son of John and Patty (Mallory) Van Nortwick; was educated at Jennings Seminary, Aurora, Fort Edward Institute, New York, and Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College in Chicago. He was successively merchant, farmer and stock-raiser, and then became interested in the manufacturing enterprises of which his father was the leader in Batavia. He was officially connected with various corporations in Batavia, where he resided until 1891. That year he removed to Appleton, Wis., to take charge of the large paper manufacture and water power interests still owned by the Van Nortwicks at that point. He married Miss Bina Totman, of Batavia, in 1875.

JOSEPH S. VAN PATTEN, druggist, St. Charles, Ill.; born in Cortland County, N. Y., July 12, 1823; came to Illinois in 1854 and purchased an interest in the pioneer drug-store of which he is now the owner. Mr. Van Patten was first married in New York in 1846, his wife dying in 1853, and in 1857 he married his second wife—Jane A. Clark, of Michigan.

WILLIAM VAN NORTWICK, pioneer manufacturer, Batavia, Ill. (now deceased), was born in New Jersey in 1778, and died in Batavia, Ill., Sept. 19, 1854. He removed from his native State to New York in early manhood, and there aided in the construction of some of the noted public works of the latter State, at one time being State Superintendent of Canals for Northern New York. He came to Kane County, Ill., in 1835, and made his home on the site of the present city of Batavia. Here he built a dam across Fox River, acquired valuable water-power, and engaged actively in milling and manufacturing. He was widely known among the pioneers of this region, and was prominent in the laying of the foundations of Batavia. His wife's maiden name was Martha Flack. She died in Chicago in 1879 at the advanced age of ninety-three years.

WILLIAM M. VAN NORTWICK, civil engineer and manufacturer, Batavia, Ill., was born Nov. 8, 1836, in Hammondsport, N. Y., a son of John and Patty (Mallory) Van Nortwick, and ten years later was brought by his parents to Illinois. Here he was educated in Rock River Seminary at Mount Morris. He became a civil engineer, and in his earlier years was connected with the Galena Air Line Railway Company and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway. In 1870 he became interested in the Batavia Paper Company, and later became associated with other large paper-manufacturing enterprises in Wisconsin, and it was said that the Van Nortwicks were for a long time the largest manufacturers of paper in the West. As a result of the consolidation of paper-making interests a few years since, Mr. Van Nortwick embraced the opportunity to retire from active business, although retaining his interests. He married Miss Louise J. Towner, of Geneva, Ill., in 1861.

GEORGE C. VAN OSDEL, lawyer, Aurora, Ill., was born at Hughsonville, Dutchess County, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1842, son of James M. and Margaret (Bates) Van Osdel, and coming west with his parents in 1864 settled near Sandwich, Ill. He was educated in public and private schools, and when twenty-one, intending to turn his attention from farming to commercial business, he became a student in Bryant & Stratton's Business College, Chicago. In June, 1864, he enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry for the 100-days' service, the regiment being mustered out October 10th following. He arrived in Aurora in 1865, and for a time clerked in a dry-goods store and later taught school in La Salle and Kendall Counties. For two years he was in charge of the Commercial Department of Fowler Institute at Newark, Ill., and for ten years officiated as a Baptist minister, but failing health having compelled his retirement, for the next twelve years was in business as a photographer at Toulon, Ill., meanwhile serving for eight years as a Justice of the Peace. These associations turned his mind to the law, for which he prepared under Hon. B. F. Thompson as his preceptor, and was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of the State in 1888. Two years later he established an office in Aurora, where since 1895 he has been Justice of the Peace, and also Public Administrator of Kane County. Mr. Van Osdel was married in 1868 to Miss Clara A. Bibbins, of Newark, Ill., who died in 1883. The children of this marriage are Winifred W. and G. Ernest (both in New York) and Mrs. Grace (Van Osdel) Cook, of Kendall County, Ill. Miss Isabel Stuckey, of Washington C. H., Ohio, became Mr. Van Osdel's second wife in the fall of 1884.

ARTHUR P. VAUGHAN, Civil War veteran, was born in Essex, Chittenden County, Vt., son of Philander and Harriet (Perry) Vaughan; obtained a practical education in the schools of his native State and began his business career as clerk in a general store; came west in 1856, and was a merchant at Fulton, Ill., until 1859. In the latter year he joined the gold hunters who went to Pike's Peak and spent one year in the mines of Colorado. In 1861 he enlisted in the Union Army, on November 19 of that year being mustered into Company F, Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, as Sergeant. He was promoted to Second Lieutenant just before the battle of Shiloh, and served in that capacity until Dec. 20, 1864, when he was mustered out at the end of three years and one month of active military service, during which time he participated in all the campaigns of the Western Army. In 1865 he entered the service of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company, and since 1888 has been Station Agent at Aurora. For several years he was a stockholder in the Aurora National Bank, and was identified with the starting of the Aurora Watch factory and the Aurora Cotton Mills as a stockholder. Mr. Vaughan was married in 1888 to Mrs. Harriet A. Hollister, of Batavia.

DANIEL VOLINTINE, merchant and banker, Aurora, Ill.; born in Washington County, N. Y., July 30, 1813; began his business career in the lumber trade when twenty years of age; in 1835 established himself in the mercantile business, which he conducted successfully for twenty years; removed to Aurora, Ill., in 1854, where he built up one of the largest mercantile establishments in Northern Illinois; founded the private banking house of Volintine & Williams in 1868, which finally became the Second National Bank of Aurora; married in 1841 Miss Sarah J. Ruste, who survives her husband. Their living children are: Mrs. William S. Benninger and William J. Volintine. Mr. Volintine died Feb. 9, 1888.

HENRY NAZER WADE, manufacturer, Batavia, Ill., born in Debenham, County Suffolk, Eng., Sept. 19, 1848, son of Mark and Louisa (nee Nazer) Wade; received his education in private and grammar schools at Clare, Stowmarket and Ipswich, Eng.; in 1868 came to the United States, and the following year established his home in Batavia, Ill., having become connected with the United States Wind Engine & Pump Company, the oldest factory of its kind in the country. After mastering every detail of its business, he became Secretary of the Company in 1879, and later its Treasurer. In March, 1901, he severed his connection with this company, but in September, 1902, became its General Manager. Since then a change in organization has made him Secretary and Treasurer in general charge of its affairs. In 1892 he was elected a Director and Vice-President of the First National Bank of Batavia, and was chiefly instrumental in bringing about its consolidation with the Citizens' Bank of Batavia, in 1901. He is President of the Mill Owners' Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Chicago. In 1872 he married Miss Sophia L. Carr, daughter of Leonard J. Carr, of Batavia.

JOEL WAGNER, retired farmer, Big Rock, Kane County, was born in Montgomery County, N. Y., Nov. 11, 1834, and when sixteen years old came to Kane County. His education, begun in the public schools of Montgomery County, was finished in Batavia Institute. He was engaged in farming when the Civil War began, and in August, 1861, enlisted in Company E, Thirty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He was shot in the face at the battle of Stone River, and was discharged in March, 1863, on account of disability. In April, 1865, he married Miss Anna Leyson, who bore him two sons. She died June 9, 1879, and he was married Nov. 15, 1880, to Miss Elizabeth Diedrich, by whom he has had two sons. He retired in 1895, moving to the village of Big Rock. For fifteen years, twelve of these years being continuous, he has been Justice of the Peace. He has also been Township Assessor, Trustee and Treasurer of the School Board.

FRANCIS B. WAIGH, cashier First National Bank, Dundee, Ill.; born at Goshen, Orange County, N. Y.; educated in the public schools and Goshen Academy; removed to Illinois in 1889; organized the First National Bank of Dundee in 1900, and is Cashier and a Director of that institution. He was married in 1896 to Miss Florence Edwards, daughter of Henry C. Edwards, of Dundee.

WILLIAM A. WALCOTT, merchant, Batavia, Ill.; born in Attica, N. Y., April 10, 1849, son of Nelson and Alvina (Wright) Walcott, was educated in the schools of Batavia, Ill., and the University of Michigan. He became a druggist, and engaging in that trade in Batavia, has continued in it from 1867 to the present time (1903). He was married in 1871 to Miss Ada M., daughter of Capt. Walter Emerson, of Bucksport, Me.

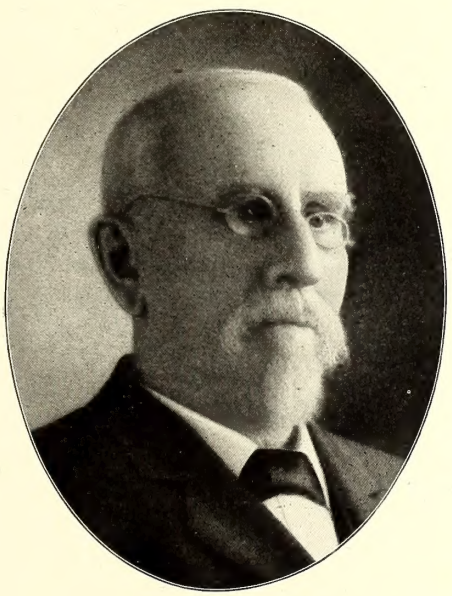
ANDREW J. WALDRON, pioneer lawyer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Hartland, Vt., Feb. 12, 1816, where he received his early education. Wyoming County, N. Y., where he had his first His youth and early manhood were passed in business experience as clerk in a general store. In 1844 he came to Kane County, Ill., and, after living a year in Batavia, established his home in Elgin. While in Batavia he began reading law and his last studies were completed with one of the pioneer practitioners of Elgin. He was admitted to the Bar about 1846 and practiced in Elgin thereafter until his death, which occurred April 2, 1866. He was Mayor of Elgin 1859 and 1860. He also served as Justice of the Peace and filled other minor offices. He was one of the promoters of Elgin's greatest industry, the National Watch Factory, and one of the first subscribers to the stock of that now famous corporation. Oct. 22, 1840, he married in New York State, Miss Calista Smith, who died in Elgin in 1888. The children born to them and living at the present time (1903) are E. Dunbar Waldron and Mrs. Martha W. Voller, of Elgin, and Mrs. Bertha W. Stone, of Montclair, N. J.

E. DUNBAR WALDRON, banker, Elgin, born in Elgin, Ill., Jan. 27, 1848, son of Andrew J. and Calista (Smith) Waldron, was educated in Elgin Academy and gained his first business experience as an employe in Lansing Morgan's Lumber Yards at Elgin. Early in 1869, in company with I. S. Bartlett, he became interested in a book and news stand in Elgin, but sold out his interest in this business before the close of the following year. Soon afterward he engaged in the wholesale wooden-ware and willow-ware trade in Chicago, and prospered until the great fire of 1871 destroyed botn his business and his prospects. Returning then to Elgin he became connected with the Old Home Bank as bookkeeper, in 1872. In July following he assisted in organizing the Home National Bank, which succeeded to the commercial business of the Home Bank. He entered the new bank as bookkeeper, was promoted to Assistant Cashier in 1873, and to Cashier in 1877. He was Cashier and Chief Executive Officer of the bank until 1891, when he resigned on account of his health having become impaired to such an extent that it was imperative that he should seek rest and recreation. He has since been Vice-President of the Home National Bank, and President of the Home Savings Bank since its organization in 1892. He is also President of the Elgin Lumber Company and Treasurer of the Elgin Loan & Homestead Association, and is identified (as a stockholder) with various manufacturing enterprises. He has served several terms as City Treasurer of Elgin and on the Board of Trustees of the Public Library. He married in 1873 Miss Louise Town, daughter of J. J. Town, a prominent citizen of Des Moines, Iowa.



JOHN WALLACE (deceased), farmer, Burlington Township, Kane County, was born in County Limerick, Ireland, in 1795, and in 1856 came to the United States. Coming to Illinois he first located in Rutland Township, Kane County, but in 1861 removed to a small farm of forty acres which he had bought in Burlington Township, to which he made additions by subsequent purchases. Here he was engaged in active farming until the time of his death, March 11, 1879. Mr. Wallace belonged to a historic family, his grandfather, known as "Staker Wallace," being one of the patriots who suffered in the cause of Irish liberty at an early day. Two sons and two daughters of John Wallace still survive: The sons, Thomas and P. H., and the daughters, Mrs. Mary Long and Miss Kate Wallace. One son, John, was a Union soldier, who served in the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was killed in battle during the Civil War.

HENRY WALT, merchant, Batavia, Ill.; born in Limerick Square, Penn., Nov. 24, 1837; reared and educated in his native State and trained to a mercantile life; came to Illinois in 1868 and established his home at Batavia, where he first engaged in the clothing trade; later conducted a coal and grain business and retired from active business life in 1896; married in 1880 Miss Laura Olson, of Elgin, Ill.

GIDEON W. WARNE, retired farmer, Elburn, Ill.; born July 5, 1838, at Campton, Kane County, Ill., and received his education in the public schools of Franklin and Virgil Townships, and at Wheaton, Ill. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and has been affiliated with the Sycamore Commandery since 1860. He was married Feb. 11, 1864, to Miss Ann, daughter of Horace and Amy (Miller) Willis. He inherited a portion of the family estate, which extended into four townships—Virgil, Kaneville, Campton and Blackberry.

HENRY WARNE (deceased), farmer, Elburn, Ill.; born in Hunterdon County, N. J., Feb. 8, 1791, and educated in the local schools. He learned the harness-making and tanners' trade, and coming to Kane County at a very early day, took up a section of land. He was a farmer and carried on a mercantile business with the settlers. His wife, Charity (Stires) Warne, died Feb. 26, 1864, and he passed away at Campton, Ill., March 29, 1865.

JOHN WARNE.

JOHN WARNE, lumberman and banker, Elburn, Ill., was born in Mt. Pleasant, N. J., Sept. 6, 1821, son of Henry and Charity (Stires) Warne, and received his early education in the schools of New York, whither his family had removed in 1831. Six years later the family came to Illinois and settled on a farm in Campton Township, Kane County. The father was the first postmaster at Avon, which was the first postoffice in the township. John Warne spent his earlier manhood in farming, and in later life became one of the large land-owners of the county. He was also engaged in trade as a member of the firm of Gray & Warne at Elburn. For many years he was largely interested in lumbering in Wisconsin, and was one of the incorporators of the Kane County National Bank at St. Charles, and was its Vice-President. It was succeeded by the banking house of John Stewart & Co., and Mr. Warne organized the Kane County Bank of Elburn in company with Messrs. Willis and Richmond, of which he was President up to the time of his death, Aug. 19, 1903. He was one of the founders of the Aurora Cotton Company. Mr. Warne was married in 1847 to Miss Olive S., daughter of Atwell and Betsy (Wheeler) Burr, who came from New York to Kane County in 1836. Mr. and Mrs. Warne celebrated their golden wedding in 1897. She died Oct. 4, 1898.

ISAAC WARREN, lawyer, Elgin, Ill.; born in Boone County, Ill., March 8, 1851, son of John and Anna (Church) Warren; educated in the public schools and Beloit College (Beloit, Wis.); admitted to the bar in the Supreme Court of Illinois in 1891, and has since practiced in Elgin; has given much attention to patents and patent law, and is one of the patentees of an improved process for clarifying petroleum oil; is interested in agricultural interests as a land owner and still has in his possession the old Warren homestead in Boone County. He was married in 1882 to Miss Viola McAllister, daughter of S. McAllister, of Elgin, Ill.

D. B. WATERMAN, merchant and railroad builder, Aurora, Ill.; born in Rochester, N. Y., April 21, 1821; came west in 1842, locating first in Indiana, and the following year removed to Aurora, Ill., where in partnership with his brother, George G. Waterman, he engaged in the hardware business, which he conducted for over twenty years; organized the Chicago & Iowa Railroad Company in 1869-70, with which he was connected for ten years. He afterwards built the Chicago, Rockford & Northern Railroad, extending from Rochelle to Rockford, and was later employed by the Chicago & North-Western Railway Company. He served as City Alderman ten years and Mayor one term; fraternally was a prominent Mason. Mr. Waterman was married Feb. 17, 1852, to Miss Anna White, of Blackberry Township.

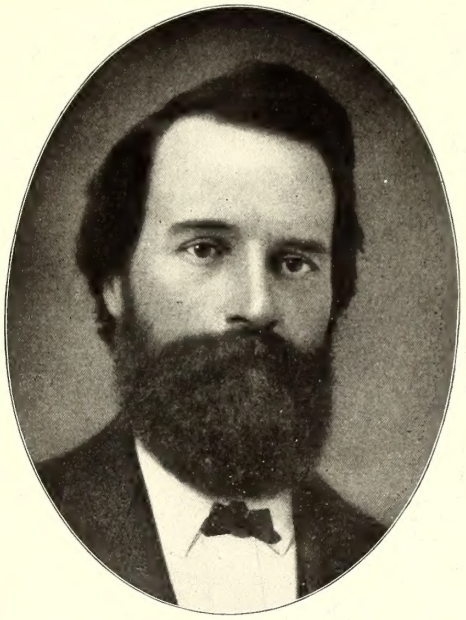
JAMES S. WATSON, physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., was born at Beatyestown, N. J., Oct. 10, 1851; came with his parents to Kane County, Ill., in 1852, locating four miles northwest of Kaneville, in Kaneville Township; grew to maturity on a farm and obtained his early education in the public schools; later attended the University of Michigan (Ann Arbor), graduating from the medical department of that institution in 1881; spent the following year taking a post-graduate course in the University of Edinburgh, Scotland. In 1893-94 he took a second post-graduate course in the medical department of Columbia College. In 1883 he began practicing his profession at Elburn, Ill., remaining until 1889, and in the meantime established a large country practice. Locating at Aurora in the latter year, he has since been one of the leading practitioners of that city. As a Republican the Doctor has always taken an active interest in politics, but declined to accept public office. He married in 1884 Miss Eliza Stewart, daughter of Hon. John Stewart, mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this volume. Doctor and Mrs. Watson have four children: Helen, Stewart, Margaret and Dean Watson.

WILLIAM WATSON (deceased), born at Princeton, Mass., May 19, 1828, the son of John Watson, and descendant of an old New England family, was reared at home, receiving a good education and being trained to farm life. Coming west in 1853, he located near Bristol, Kendall County, Ill., turning his attention to farming. After two years spent in Kendall County, he bought wild land six miles south of DeKalb, where for many years he engaged in dealing in stock. His old homestead is still in the possession of the family. He and his wife were pioneers in building up the Advent church at Afton, and the church building there was mainly the result of their generous gifts. Subsequently they moved to Aurora, where Mr. Watson retired from active business dying there in 1885. Mr. Watson was married in 1853 to Miss Joanna M. Curtis, born in Douglas, Mass., of Puritan ancestry, her great-grandfather being an Englishman who purchased the land on which several generations of his descendants have since lived. Since the death of her husband, Mrs. Watson has continued to make her home in Aurora. To Mr. and Mrs. Watson have been born the following named children: Mrs. Ella M. Davis, of Jackson County, Kan.; Mrs. Abbie L. Shatto, of Tustin City, Cal.; Lincoln J., DeKalb County, Ill., and William J., of Aurora.



CHARLES WEEKS (deceased), pioneer merchant, Aurora, Ill., born in England, at Dracott, near Cheddar, Oct. 14, 1829, where his early life was spent and his education acquired. When sixteen years of age he came to the United States, living first at Skeneateles, N. Y., where he learned the carpenter's trade, and where he married Miss Matilda H. Peacock in 1854. After his wedding he immediately came west, locating at Mendota, Ill., where he was long successfully engaged in business as a contractor and builder. Ten years later he removed to Kentland, where he was in the grain trade for about three years. From Kentland he went to Aurora, and for twenty years was there engaged in the same business and the hardware trade. About 1890 failing health compelled him to retire, and in 1895 he went to the Pacific Coast, where he traveled quite extensively, but finally died in Tacoma, Wash., in 1899. Mrs. Weeks survives her husband, and now lives in California. The only other surviving member of the family besides Mrs. Weeks, is Mrs. Herman N. Janes, of Aurora.

GEORGE WELCH, builder and contractor, St. Charles, Ill., born in County Wexford, Ireland, Oct. 7, 1845, son of James and Bridget (Fardy) Welch, when only two years old was brought to the United States, his parents arriving in St. Charles in June, 1847, where his father died only two weeks after reaching the village. George Welch was reared a farmer, and was engaged in tilling the soil until he was twenty-three years old. In 1869 he learned the mason trade, which has since been his occupation. At the present time he is engaged upon large contracts in mason work and building. He has been connected with the construction of a number of noted buildings, including the Insane Asylum at Elgin, being engaged there three years; the Dunham House, the new Haines Block, and in 1903, was employed on the buildings of the new St. Charles Home for Delinquent Boys, and the Kane County Court House. Fraternally he is connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America, and in politics is a Democrat. For sixteen years he has been an Alderman of St. Charles, twelve of which were consecutive terms. He was married Feb. 25, 1865, to Miss Julia, daughter of Martin Lawler, of Burlington, Iowa.

RODNEY WELCH (deceased), educator and journalist, Chicago, was born in Monmouth, Me. Nov. 19, 1828, and died in Chicago, May 29, 1897. The farm on which he was born was granted to the family by Lady Temple, sister of the founder of Bowdoin College, and is still in possession of the Welch family. Rodney Welch graduated from Bowdoin College and became a school teacher. Coming to Illinois in 1855, he became the first principal of the Geneva High School; later he was Professor of Chemistry in the old Chicago University, and still later occupied the same chair in Hahnemann Medical College. He became associated with the Chicago press as one of the editors of the "Prairie Farmer," and subsequently was an editorial associate with Wilbur F. Story on the Chicago "Times," a connection that existed many years after the death of Mr. Story. Mr. Welch was one of the founders of the Chicago Press Club, and acted as its President for many years. He was also one of the founders of the Chicago Philosophical Society and the Saracen Club, the latter at one time the leading literary club of Chicago. In 1853 he married Miss Abbie Frances Stevens, of New Portland, Me.

OWEN B. WELD (deceased), Elgin, was born in Orford, N. H., Oct. 24, 1831, son of Francis and Harriet (Mann) Weld, and was brought by his parents into Kane County, Ill., in 1837. His early experiences were those of a boy on an Indian-ridden frontier, and in a country so sparsely settled that, when the settlers held their first Fourth of July picnic, but thirteen adult persons were present. Mr. Weld was educated in the schools of the district, and his natural studiousness and wide reading made him a man of broad intelligence in later years. Reared to farming, he purchased the old homestead which his father had secured from the Government, and as opportunity offered added to his real estate holdings until he became a very extensive land owner. Until 1884 he continued to live on the old place which is still in the possession of the family, and Mount Weld, as it is called, is one of the land-marks of the country adjacent to Elgin. In 1884 Mr. Weld removed to Elgin, where he purchased the finest home in the city, and there he lived until his death, Dec. 1, 1899. Mr. Weld was married Jan. 11, 1853, to Miss Elizabeth Kelley, daughter of John H. and Eliza (Mansfield) Kelley, born in Schenectady, N. Y., of which city her father was at one time Mayor. Her mother came of a noted English family. Mr. and Mrs. Kelley came to Illinois in 1844, and settled in Rutland Township, Kane County, where they were among the most noted of the early pioneers. They had a family of four sons and two daughters, all of whom have been prominent and prosperous. Mrs. Weld, who is the younger daughter, is a lady of literary attainments and marked business ability. The surviving members of Mr. Weld's family, other than his widow, are Mrs. Hattie (Weld) Wing, of Elgin, and Mrs. Mary (Weld) Page, of Chicago.

SALEM E. WELD, merchant and operator in real estate, Elgin, Ill., was born in Elgin, Aug. 3, 1842, son of Francis and Harriet (Mann) Weld. Francis Weld was born in Charlton, Mass., Dec. 31, 1797, and in 1825 was married to Harriet Mann, at Orfordville, N. H. They came to Illinois in 1837, where she died in 1865, and he in 1869. They reared a family of five boys and two girls, on a farm which the senior Weld had improved on land bought from the Government. Three of the chilren are still living—two in Elgin and one in Chicago. Salem E. Weld was educated in the public schools of Elgin and Batavia, and trained to a farmer's life. Later, however, he studied medicine and engaged in the drug trade in Elgin, in which for twenty-three years he was engaged as a member of the firm of R. & S. E. Weld, one of the most noted in this part of the State They began business in 1867 and continued it until 1890, when they retired from the drug trade, and Salem E. Weld turned his attention to real estate, dealing largely in Northern Illinois and Wisconsin lands. He has been a member of the Board of Directors of Gail Borden Public Library of Elgin, and has served as Coroner of Kane County, and as Alderman of Elgin. In 1862 he enlisted, and was mustered into the One Hundred Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, during the first year of his service was Hospital Steward, and for two years following was in charge of the field hospital of the Second Division of the Fifteenth Army Corps, and for his marked ability in that position was honorably mentioned by the Surgeon-General. Mr. Weld was mustered out in June, 1865, in Washington, his experiences in the army having much to do with his subsequent successful business career. He has taken much interest in preserving the early history of Kane County, and is Secretary of the Kane County Old Settlers' Association. In 1885 he was married to Miss Mary E. Hoag, daughter of James and Mary (Bradford) Hoag, of St. Charles Township, Kane County.

ANDREW WELSH, merchant, Aurora, Ill., born at Iroquois, Province of Ontario, Canada, July 9, 1844; enlisted in the One Hundred Forty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry in 1864, and was mustered out of the service in January, 1866, when he returned to Yorkville, Ill., where he had resided previous to his enlistment. He engaged in the sale of carriages, wagons and agricultural implements at the latter place, and followed this occupation for thirty-nine years, but since 1886 has conducted the business in Aurora. Mr. Welsh served two terms in the State Legislature, and in 1885 was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Second Illinois District by President Cleveland. He was married in 1872 to Miss Lizzie E. Sheppard, of Yorkville, Ill.

HARRY F. WERLE, Geneva, City Clerk of Geneva, was born in Sterling, Ill., June 15, 1877, and was reared and educated in his native city, where he added to the educational training received in the public schools a special course of study in the Sterling Business College. For a time he was employed as stenographer in Chicago, and then came to Geneva, to take a position with the Appleton Manufacturing Company, then one of the leading industries of that city. In 1899 Mr. Werle opened a gentlemen's furnishing goods store in Geneva, which he conducted until Feb. 1, 1903. In April, 1901, he was elected City Clerk of Geneva, and in 1903 was still serving in that position. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic and the Odd Fellow fraternities. Politically he is an active Republican.

CHARLES WHEATON.

CHARLES WHEATON, attorney, Aurora, born in Warren, R. I., May 29, 1829, graduated from the literary department of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., in 1849, and studied law in the office of B. F. Thomas, Worcester, Mass., being admitted to the bar Sept. 7, 1851. He began his practice in Worcester, but came to Batavia, Ill., in 1854, and five years later located at Aurora. In 1904 he is actively engaged in his legal practice. He was elected Mayor of Aurora on the Prohibition ticket in 1864, and was a member of the Illinois Constitutional Convention of 1870. He has always been a Republican.

GEORGE C. WEST, farmer, Blackberry Township, Kane County, Ill., born in Chenango County, N. Y., May 9, 1841; obtained his education in the public schools of Blackberry Township, Jennings Seminary (Aurora) and the West Aurora High School; has resided on his present farm—which he inherited—since a child two years of age; married March 5, 1863, Nancy McDole.

JACOB WESTERMAN, merchant, Dundee, Ill., born at Rome, N. Y., March 19, 1844; came west with his parents in 1855, locating first at Greenwood, McHenry County, Ill. In 1864 he enlisted in Company H, Ninety-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; established a general store in Dundee in 1874, which he conducted for nineteen years. Since 1893 he has been a member of the firm of Borden, Westerman & Co., dealers in coal, lumber, flour and feed. Mr. Westerman was married Sept. 13, 1866, to Miss Emily Hathaway, of Greenwood, Ill.

JAMES T. WHEELER (deceased), farmer, St. Charles, Ill., born in New Brunswick, B. A., Sept. 20, 1808; came to the United States in 1834, locating on a claim in St. Charles, Kane County, in the fall of that year; was a stanch Abolitionist in the ante-bellum days and an earnest supporter of Abraham Lincoln. He strongly advocated the necessity of good schools, and established one of the first free schools in the State. Mr. Wheeler was married Jan. 25, 1835, to Jerusha Young, and they became the parents of eight children, six of whom are now living. He died April 22, 1890.

J. B. T. WHEELER, farmer, St. Charles, Ill., born in the town where he now resides, April 25, 1842; grew to manhood on his father's farm, which he later worked on shares for twenty-four years (1866-1890), and at the time of his father's death (1890), bought the interests of the other heirs and has since owned the estate. Mr. Wheeler served in the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War. He was married Nov. 5, 1870, to Miss Anna Baker of Geneva, Ill., and they have four children now living.

JOHN WHEELER, lumber dealer and general contractor, Geneva, Ill., was born in Geneva, Jan. 18, 1866, son of Michael Wheeler, who is still living. He was graduated from the Geneva High School in 1883, and the following year engaged in the livery business in Geneva, in which he continued for twelve years. In 1897 he entered into the lumber trade in Geneva, with which he undertook a general contracting business. In 1902 he established a factory in Geneva for the manufacture of all kinds of packing boxes, which has since become the Cannon Box Company, with over a hundred employes. His career as a contractor practically began with the building of the East Side School, in Geneva, in 1899, and since that time he has done much of the building connected with the "State Home for Girls" at Geneva. At present (1903) he is engaged in the erection of the first two cottages for the St. Charles "Home for Boys," an institution that is expected to equal or surpass anything of the kind in the United States. When fully completed it will have over forty buildings, and will have cost more than $1,500,000. Mr. Wheeler was married in 1892 to Miss Mary Cannon, daughter of Daniel Cannon, of Geneva.

EDWARD C. WHILDIN, retired farmer, Big Rock, Ill., born in Sugar Grove, Kane County, Ill., Dec. 26, 1844; was educated in the public schools, and began farming in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County. In 1879 he purchased a farm two miles north of the village of Big Rock, which he cultivated until 1893, when he retired from active labor. Mr. Whildin has occupied various important official positions during his active years. He was Assessor for four years, and was elected Supervisor in 1887, a position which he has filled continuously to the present time. For the last six years he has been Justice of the Peace. Mr. Whildin was married May 28, 1873, to Mary G. Taylor.

JOHN C. WHILDIN, farmer, Big Rock, was born July 12, 1843, in Cambria County, Penn., and came with his parents to Kane County in his early boyhood. Here he was educated in the public schools, and then began farming. He bought out the heirs to the old homestead in 1881, where he is now living. For over thirty years he has been a member of the School Board, and in 1903 was elected Highway Commissioner for the third term. In politics he is a Republican, and takes an active interest in local affairs. In 1864 he married Harriet S. Potter, and of this union have been born three boys and two girls.

JOHN R. WHILDIN (deceased), farmer, born in Big Rock Township, Jan. 28, 1850; educated in what was known as the "Old Center School," then located on his father's farm; followed farming all his life, and was well known as a successful manager and a high-minded gentleman; married in 1877 Miss Mary E. Davis.

JOSEPH H. WHIPPLE, pioneer settler, Batavia, Ill., born in Springfield, Otsego County, N. Y., Dec. 12, 1816; came to Illinois in 1846, locating in Batavia, where, during his business career, he was interested in the stone quarries of that place, in milling and other pursuits; served in numerous county and municipal offices.

AMASA L. WHITE (deceased), Geneva, Ill., born in Windham County, Vt., Sept. 10, 1825; came with his parents to Illinois in 1839, and grew to manhood in Geneva Township, Kane County; trained to farming and followed that occupation until 1860; engaged in the coal, grain and agricultural implement trade in the latter year in Geneva, and later was engaged in the United States Railway Mail service for five years. He was married in 1863 to Catherine E. Curtis, who still survives her husband, and resides on a part of the old Curtis homestead on Batavia Avenue. Of the five children born to Mr. and Mrs. White, Frank C., Mrs. Ellen King, and Mary E. Grenier, are living in 1903—Kate E. (White) Curtis died in 1895, and Frederick S. White died in 1900.

FRED O. WHITE (deceased), was born in Wrentham, Mass., Sept. 30, 1839, son of Frederick W. and Catherine (Ford) White, whose remote ancestors came from England and were among the first settlers of New England. The parents removed to Illinois in 1856, and settled in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County. Fred O. completed his schooling in the public schools and in Jennings Seminary, a well known Aurora institution. On the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted in Company A, Thirty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until November, 1863. In 1866 he became junior member of the lumber firm of Loomis & White, of Aurora. Mr. White continued in this business until 1870, when he became the head of the lumber firm of White & Todd. In 1881 he was one of the organizers of the Aurora Creamery Company, and was also one of the original stockholders and a director of the Aurora National Bank. The lumber firm of White & Todd is still in existence, though Mr. White and Mr. Todd are both deceased. Mr. White was a member of the building committee that erected the Aurora Cotton Mills, a charter member of the Home Building & Loan Association, and was for a time Director and Secretary of the Aurora Slate Mantel Company. He was Chairman of the Republican County Central Committee for four years, City Treasurer in 1869-70, and Mayor in 1885. The same year in which he was Mayor he was appointed a member of the State Commission to locate a Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, and did much to secure the erection of the Soldiers' Memorial and Library Building in Aurora. For twenty years he was on the West Side Board of Education. A marked and ready writer, he was a frequent contributor to the "Chicago Inter-Ocean." He died May 30, 1892, in Aurora, and a public meeting in the Opera House, presided over by Senator H. H. Evans, gave expression to the public feeling as to the loss of the community and to the general sense of his worth. In 1864 he married Miss Olivia M. Todd, daughter of Levi Todd, of Aurora.

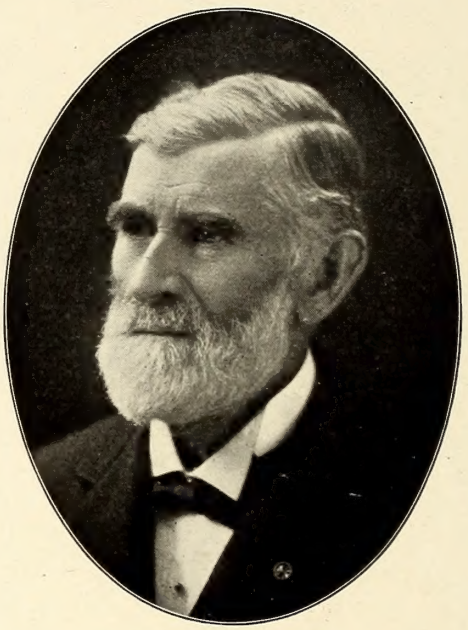
WINFIELD S. WHITE, retired farmer, Batavia, Ill., was born in Geneva, Ill., Jan. 13, 1845, son of Mr. and Mrs. Amasa White, who settled in Geneva in 1839. He obtained his education in the public schools of Geneva and Batavia, and was engaged in farming in Blackberry Township, Kane County, and on the old White homestead (Geneva) until 1885, when he removed to Batavia, where he has since resided. Mr. White was married in 1871 to Miss Elizabeth C. Conde, daughter of Cornelius B. Conde, one of the pioneer settlers of Batavia.

FRANK S. WHITMAN, Superintendent Illinois Northern Hospital for the Insane, was born in Belvidere, Ill., Sept. 27, 1849, was educated in the Belvidere city schools and in the old Chicago University, and in 1872 graduated from Hahnemann Medical College, receiving an honorary degree from the Chicago Homœopathic Medical College in 1878. He practiced medicine at Belvidere from 1872 until Jan. 12, 1899, when he was appointed Superintendent of the Illinois Northern Hospital for the Insane at Elgin, and at the present time (1904) is filling that position. Dr. Whitman is a member of the Illinois Homœopathic Association, the American Institute of Homœopathy, and the American Medico-Psychological Association. He is Professor of Mental Diseases at the Chicago Homœopathic Medical College.

AARON WHITNEY, retired farmer, Elburn, Ill., born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., April 30, 1828; educated in the public schools and came to Kane County, Ill., in 1854, where he was engaged in farming until 1903, when he retired.

WILLIAM N. WHITNEY, legislator, Geneva Lake, Wis., born in Ontario County, N. Y., Sept. 23, 1828, and received his education in the public schools and the West Walworth and Macedon Academies. For ten years he taught school, then came to DuPage County, Ill., in 1858, and two years later was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court and ex-officio County Recorder, being re-elected to the same position four years later, serving in all eight years. In 1868 he was admitted to the bar, but never engaged in practice. In 1870 he was elected to the General Assembly from DuPage County; in 1872 was chosen a member of the State Board of Equalization, and in 1879 became connected with the Eastern Illinois Asylum for the Insane, having charge of the accounts of the institution for eight years. Later he lived at Batavia, but now maintains his home in Geneva Lake, Wis.



DANIEL WHITNEY, dairy farmer, Campton Township, Kane County, was born in the township where he now resides, Jan. 3, 1840; educated in the district schools; remained on the parental homestead until 1870, when he purchased a farm near Wasco, where he has since resided; has held several township offices; married Feb. 16, 1863, Althea M. Babbitt.

WILLIAM C. WIDMAYER, farmer, Hampshire Township, Kane County, Ill., born in Wurtemburg, Germany, Dec. 31, 1844; came with his parents to America in 1851 and located in Kane County about 1854. In 1861 he enlisted in Company K, Fifty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry and served in the Union army during the War of the Rebellion. About 1869 he purchased a farm in Hampshire Township. Mr. Widmayer has been three times married, his first wife being Miss Marguerite Huber, his second wife Louisa Gerling, and his present wife, whom he married March 10, 1886, was Mrs. Sarah (Shuler) Wink, of Chicago.

GEN. ELIJAH WILCOX, son of Gen. Silvanus Wilcox, who was a private in the Revolutionary War, and son of Silvanus Wilcox, a Captain in the same war, was born in the town of Glen, County of Montgomery, State of New York, May 10, 1792. He was married in the town of Florida in said county, on August 26, 1813, to Miss Sally Shuler, and eight sons (two of whom died in childhood) and two daughters were born of this union. The military title came to Gen. Elijah Wilcox, as well as to his father, by commission from the Governor of New York through service in the State Militia. Heavy financial losses following the panic of 1837 turned him toward the Far West, to seek homes for his children. With his eldest daughter and her husband, John Hill, and his three eldest sons, Silvanus, Daniel S. and Calvin E., he came to Elgin, Ill., in the summer of 1839, where they purchased two large "claims," when he returned to the East. In May, 1844, the mother with the four younger children, Edward S., Hannah M. (Mrs. C. R. Collin), John S. and William H., came west, and the father, having adjusted his business affairs in his New York home, came the following winter. He at once became a prominent worker in the community. March 10, 1843, he was elected a Trustee of the Elgin Academy, and was almost constantly kept upon some local or State Commission, locating roads, establishing schools and churches, and developing the new country. He represented the Kane County District as State Senator in the General Assembly of 1846-48. An ardent Universalist, his good wife was a Congregationalist, and he aided all churches. He was a Democrat in politics and a warm personal friend of Stephen A. Douglas, the great patriotic leader of that party. At the outbreak of the rebellion in 1861, General Wilcox patriotically encouraged his three youngest sons to enlist for the war in maintenance of the Union; and widely respected and greatly beloved, he died at his pioneer farm home in Kane County, on December 11, 1862. His excellent wife, who in her different sphere was equally and tenderly loved, died also in Elgin, at the home of her youngest daughter, April 2, 1875.

GEORGE R. WILCOX, merchant, Aurora, Kane County, Ill., was born in Otsego County, N. Y., Oct. 14, 1845, son of R. A. and Caroline (Wells) Wilcox, who brought their family to Aurora in 1856. George R. Wilcox obtained his education in the schools of his native State and at Aurora. He was trained to a mercantile life, and in 1863, joined his father in a grocery store, and two years later engaged in the dry-goods business with T. M. Fulton under the name of Fulton & Co., later becoming sole proprietor of the business. During Mr. Wilcox's career of the past forty years, he has been eminently successful as manager of the dry-goods business, which has continuously increased in volume from the date of its establishment to the present time (1903). Fraternally he is a charter member of the City Club of Aurora, and served as President of that organization for two terms. In 1872 he was married to Miss Kate P. Plum, daughter of William V. Plum, mention of whom is made elsewhere in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox are the parents of five children: William Arnold, of Aurora; Jennie P., wife of C. C. Higgins, of McCook, Neb.; Georgia, Irene and Helen.

JOHN S. WILCOX.

JOHN SHULER WILCOX, born at Fultonville, Montgomery County, N. Y., March 18, 1833, the seventh son of Gen. Elijah and Sally (Shuler) Wilcox, came with his parents to Illinois in May, 1842, and grew to manhood upon the farm homestead on the southeast quarter of Section 4 in Elgin Township. He acquired his education by attendance upon the public schools during the winter, and about a year and a half spent at the "Liberal Institute," Galesburg, after which he studied law with his brother Silvanus and was admitted to the bar in 1855. On Sept. 3, 1856, he was married to Miss Lois A. Conger, who was born Feb. 8, 1838, the daughter of Uzziah and Hannah (West) Conger, of Galesburg, Ill. Soon after the breaking out of the War of the Rebellion, Mr. Wilcox, in company with his brothers—afterwards Adjutant Edward S. and Captain William H. Wilcox—enlisted in the Fifty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he was successively promoted to the positions of Captain, Lieutenant-Colonel, Colonel and Brevet Brigadier-General. During its term of service of over three years, this regiment took part in some of the most memorable battles of the war, including those of Shiloh, Corinth (siege and second battle), Iuka, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro and the "March to the Sea" with Sherman. General Wilcox is a member of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee, and he and his two brothers just named are comrades of the Illinois Commandery of the Grand Army of the Republic and companions of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States. His residence has been at Elgin, and in his civil and business life he has held numerous positions, including those of member of the Elgin Academy and Library Boards; Mayor of Elgin in 1867, and Postmaster of that city, appointed in 1876; Director of the First National Bank and the Elgin City Banking Company, of the Loan & Homestead Company, of the Packing Company of the Kane County Agricultural Society, and of the Chicago & Pacific Railway Company, in connection with the latter also holding the position of General Solicitor. In religious belief General Wilcox is a Universalist, and in his political affiliations a stalwart Republican. His latest public service has been in connection with the preparation of the History of the Early Settlement of Kane County, preceding the Biographical Department of this work, to which he has devoted much faithful and laborious research with gratifying results. General Wilcox and wife have been the parents of four children, of whom three are still living, viz.: Dwight Conger, now of Pine Bluff, Ark.; Marie W., now Mrs. Fits, of Reading, Mass.; and Miss Marguerite, at home with her parents, their second son, John Hill, having died, August 3, 1892. They have six grandchildren.

JOHN W. WILCOX, retired farmer, St. Charles, Ill., born at Colebrook, Conn., April 2, 1811; came to Kane County, Ill., in April, 1850 locating on a farm in Plato Township, removed to St. Charles Township in 1883, remaining there, on the farm he still owns, until 1901. Since the latter date he has lived retired in St. Charles village. Mr. Wilcox has been twice married, his first wife, whom he married Nov. 22, 1835, being Sallie Stowell, who died Dec. 29, 1865. June 4, 1867, he married for his second wife Mary McFaggart Marble.

SILVANUS WILCOX, eldest son of Gen. Elijah Wilcox, was born September 30, 1818, in Glen Township, Montgomery County, N. Y. At the age of fifteen years his father obtained his appointment to the West Point Military Academy. Among his classmates were Generals W. T. Sherman, George H. Thomas and Stewart Van Vleit, and his room-mates were Generals H. W. Halleck and Schuyler Hamilton. For years these close friends held their delightful annual reunions, until one by one they were mustered from their exceptionally honored earthly careers into the higher spiritual life. Mr. Wilcox was married August 27, 1840, at Amsterdam, N. Y., to Miss Jane Mallery, and they had one son, also named Silvanus, who died unmarried. The father was a man of fearless and unwavering integrity of thought, speech, and action, and a very able and conscientious lawyer. Although averse to holding public office, he was twice elected Judge of the Circuit Court, discharging his duties intelligently and with high integrity. He was an independent Union Democrat, and an active Universalist. He died January 15, 1902, holding in a marked degree the confidence and respect of the community.

WILLIAM H. WILCOX, lawyer and real-estate operator, Elgin, Ill., was born in Tiltonville, Montgomery County, N. Y., Jan. 13, 1836, came with his parents to Kane County in 1842, and grew to manhood on his father's farm, receiving his education in the public schools and at Lombard University Galesburg. In 1859 he went to Missouri where he was conducting a plantation in Dade County when the Civil War broke out. In the spring of 1861 he returned to Elgin, where he helped organize Company G, of the Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, of which he was commissioned First Lieutenant. Shortly after the battle of Pittsburg Landing he became Captain of his company, and continued as its commander until mustered out at Savannah, Ga., after three years and four months of active and laborious service. During this period he participated in all the campaigns of the Army of the Tennessee, except the movement against Vicksburg, taking part in the battles of Pittsburg Landing, Iuka, Corinth, Chickamauga, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain, Lovejoy Station and many others. In 1865 Captain Wilcox returned to Elgin, studied law, and was admitted to the bar. He devoted himself exclusively to his profession until 1881, when he turned his attention to real-estate operations, and has made four additions to Elgin and one each to St. Charles and Geneva. He was the promoter and builder of the Crown Electric Works at St. Charles, and was appointed Postmaster at Elgin in 1886 by President Cleveland, holding the position one term. He is a member of the military orders of the Loyal Legion, the Grand Army of the Republic and the Society of the Army of the Tennessee. In 1857 he was married to Mary A. Green, of Galesburg, Ill., who died in 1878. The following year he married Helen E. Green, of Rockford, Mo.

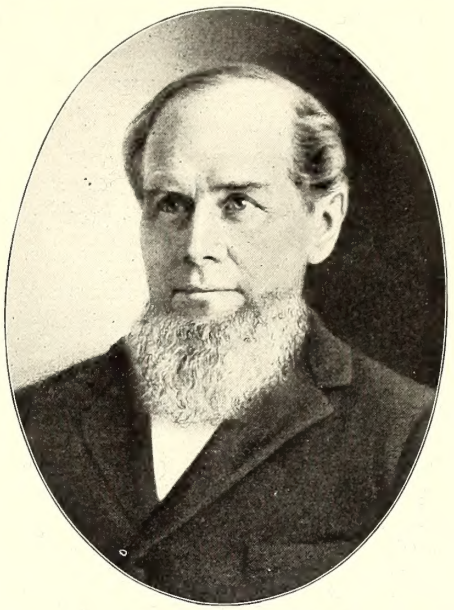
CLARK WILDER (deceased), pioneer settler, Aurora, Ill., born in New Hampshire, in 1801; came to Illinois in 1837, locating on 160 acres of land which is now within the city limits of Aurora, and was known as one of the leading farmers of that locality; married in 1833 Miss Hannah Lord, and the living representatives of this pioneer family are: George W. Bert S., Mrs. Mary Lossing, Lewis and Joel M. Mr. Wilder died in 1870; his wife surviving until March, 1901, having reached the venerable age of over ninety years.

GEORGE WILDER, surveyor and civil engineer, Aurora, Ill., born in New York State, Dec. 14, 1833; came west with his parents in 1837; his first experience was with an engineering party engaged in the construction of the branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad running from Aurora, Batavia and Turner Junction, remaining with that company until 1853, since which time he has been employed at different times by the Wabash, Minnesota Midland, and Santa Fe Railways in construction work. Mr. Wilder was married in 1858 to Miss Anitta Perry, of Aurora, and they have five children now living: Perry, Wallace, A. K., Maud and Mabel.

SARDIS WILLEY (deceased), pioneer settler; born in Jefferson County, N. Y., in 1811; came to Illinois in the '30s, locating on land which he purchased from the Government in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County; became a prosperous farmer and at different times owned several tracts of land in Sugar Grove Township. He was married in 1847 to Miss Abi R. Brown, and their children are Mrs. Charlotte Barnes, Frank, Mrs. Mary Thompson, and George. Mr. Willey died in 1896; his wife dying in 1865.

JOHN H. WILLIAMS, lawyer and Probate Judge Kane County, Elgin, Ill., was born in Waushara County, Wis., in 1857, son of Rev. Richard Williams, a Welsh Congregational minister, and with his parents when ten years old came to Kane County, Ill. He is a graduate of the West Aurora (Ill.) High School, class of 1876, and of the Law Department of the University of Iowa. In the meantime he taught school three years, and was known as a very capable teacher. He was admitted to the bar in 1880, and two years later became a resident of Elgin, where he was elected City Treasurer in 1891 and 1892. He served six years in the Elgin City Council, and in 1902 was elected Probate Judge of Kane County.

HENRY B. WILLIS.



HENRY B. WILLIS, lawyer and jurist, Elgin, Ill., was born in Brattleboro, Vt., May 8, 1849, and reared to manhood in DeKalb County, Ill., whither his parents removed in the early '50s. His education was secured in the country schools, Clark's Seminary at Aurora, and Hillsdale College, at Hillsdale, Mich. He read law with Judge Ranstead and Judge Kellum, both of Elgin, and graduated from the Law College, at Albany, N. Y., in 1871. Two years later he began practice at Elgin, Ill., where he was elected State's Attorney in 1876. He also served as Mayor of Elgin in 1885 and 1886. In 1890 and 1891 he was Corporation Counsel of the city, and in 1891 was chosen Circuit Judge, an office to which he was re-elected to 1897 and again in 1903. He was married in 1874 to Miss Lucy E. Waite, of Elgin.

MILES W. WILLIS, retired farmer and grain-dealer, Elburn, Ill., born in Erie County, Penn., March 22, 1836, son of Horace and Amy (Miller) Willis, came with his parents to Illinois in 1844. They made their home in Blackberry Township, Kane County, where he completed his education, and became a farmer. He was married, Nov. 13, 1868, to Isabella Warne, daughter of Henry and Charity (Stone) Warne. Mr. Willis continued farming until 1863, when, in connection with his half-brother, J. W. Swain, he went into the hay and grain business. The following year he disposed of his interests in this connection, and bought largely of western lands. He is a Mason, and is a stockholder in the Kane County Bank. He has done much traveling, in Texas caring for his stock and in Kansas looking after his land investments. At the present time his main business is looking after a farm which he has put into the hands of a renter.

JOHN W. WILSON (deceased), early settler of Sugar Grove Township, was born in New York, Nov. 30, 1812, son of John Wilson, a native of Acworth, N. H., and a descendant of Rev. John Wilson, a Puritan clergyman, who came to Boston in 1830. John W. Wilson, the Illinois pioneer, was reared to manhood in his native place, where he was trained to farming. Coming to Illinois in 1835 he purchased Government land in Sugar Grove Township, for which he paid $1.25 an acre, and which he brought under cultivation, making it one of the finer farms of Kane County. A man of intelligence, character and integrity, he was well and favorably known. In 1844 he married Eliza Lamb, born in New York in 1820. His death occurred July 21, 1866, in Sugar Grove, and that of his wife, Feb. 9, 1871. In 1903 their living children were: Theophilus, Aurora, Ill.; Grace (now Mrs. Howard); Jesse, of Colorado; William W. and Joseph, of Sugar Grove.

IRA C. WILSON (deceased), Chicago, was born Jan. 29, 1837, near Batavia, Ill., son of Samuel Wilson, of whom a sketch appears on another page, and was reared and educated in his native town. As a young man he was engaged in the dry-goods business there, but sold out in 1860, and with his young wife, located in Golden, Colo., becoming one of the pioneer farmers of the Rocky Mountain region. After five years spent in the new Territory, he returned to Chicago, where he engaged in teaming business, which he conducted until his retirement from business in 1896. In the course of his long career he had many contracts for the handling of heavy machinery and the erection of monuments, but he was proud of the fact that he never had an accident resulting in the injury of one of his employes. Among the important works which devolved upon him during this period was the placing in position of the immense machinery used at the North Chicago water-works and installing the plants of the Chicago City Railway. His personal standing was of the very highest character, and he was regarded as the soul of business integrity. While in Colorado he and his wife had many thrilling experiences: once having to flee from the Indians, at another time having a tornado sweep away their home, and once barely escaping death from the spring floods, for which that mountain region is famous. As an Assessor at Golden, he had to cover more territory than would be included in an Illinois county. At different times he made six different trips across the plains before the coming of the railroad. He died March 9, 1903, at his home in Douglas Park, Chicago, on the anniversary of the death of his father, and, like his father, of pneumonia. In 1860 he married Miss Mary Conde, daughter of Cornelius B. Conde, of Batavia, a sketch of whose life will be found elsewhere in this work. The surviving members of the family are: Mrs. Wilson, and her daughter, Mrs. Minnie Wilson Hickok, of Berwyn, Ill.

WILLIAM W. WILSON, farmer and stock-raiser, Sugar Grove Township, was born in that township, March 17, 1856, and grew to manhood on his father's farm. His education was received in the local schools, and an academy at Forestville, N. Y., and he has become widely known as a representative Kane County farmer. For several years he has been a Trustee of the Sugar Grove Manual and Industrial Institute. In 1882 he married Miss Mattie J., daughter of Thomas and Eliza (Benton) Smith, born in Kansas, but reared to womanhood in the home of her aunt, Mrs. Ruth Snow, of Sugar Grove Township. Their only child, Glidden S., is at home with his parents. Joseph Wilson, the youngest son of John W., born in Sugar Grove Township, Dec. 3, 1859, and educated in the home schools, has joined his brother, William W., in those extensive operations that have made their farm one of the most noted in Kane County. They give much attention to blooded stock, and handle very extensively high-grade Aberdeen-Angus cattle and Poland-China swine. William W. belongs to the Modern Woodmen.

SAMUEL WILSON (deceased), pioneer citizen, Batavia, Kane County, Ill., was born in Vermont, March 1, 1805, son of Samuel Wilson, who was of New England ancestry, grew to manhood on a farm and became one of the early farmers in Kane County, having established his home at Nelson's Grove when the first settlement was made there. Later he removed to Batavia, where he became one of the first manufacturers, establishing the manufacture of fanning-mills and agricultural implements for which that city has since become famous. When gold was discovered in California, his attention was attracted to the demand for cattle and horses on the Pacific Coast, and he made two trips overland to that region, taking live-stock to market at that point. He returned each time by way of the Isthmus of Panama, thence by sea to New York and by rail to Batavia. Mr. Wilson was also engaged in gold-mining in California for several years prior to his death, which occurred at Batavia March 9, 1855. He married Lydia Shaw, who died in Batavia June 28, 1885.

ROBERT A. WINDETT, physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., was born in Bristol, Kendall County, Ill., Oct. 5, 1860, and received his academic education at the Sugar Grove Normal Institute and Jennings Seminary, Aurora. He read medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. S. C. Gillett, of Aurora, and was a graduate of Rush Medical College, of Chicago, in 1887, at once beginning his practice in Aurora, where he has continued to the present time. Manifesting a special aptitude for surgery, he has given that branch of his profession much attention, and has won a high standing as a skilled and scientific surgeon. Dr. Windett holds membership in the American Medical Association, the Illinois State Medical Society, the Fox River Valley Medical Association and the Aurora Medical Society. In the Aurora Hospital staff of physicians and surgeons he is prominent, and has been long regarded as one of its most reliable members. The Doctor is a member of the West Side Board of Education, and is much interested in educational affairs. He was married in 1886 to Miss Evelyn S. West, of Chicago. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, the Knights of the Globe, the Sons of St. George and all the Masonic bodies of Aurora, being also a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, Medinah Temple, Chicago, and the Oriental Consistory (thirty-second degree), of the same city.

CLINTON D. WING, real-estate dealer, St Charles, Ill., was born at St. Johnsbury, Vt., Feb. 4, 1835, the son of David and Cynthia (Demick) Wing. David Wing, the father, was born at Rochester, Vt., Jan. 26, 1806, son of Isaac and Betsey (Allen) Wing, the former born at Hardwick, Mass., in 1770, and the latter a native of Pomfret, Vt. The maternal grandparents of Clinton D. Wing were Keys and Annis (Samson) Demick, both natives of Massachusetts, while his mother, Cynthia Demick, was born at Williston, Vt., in 1805. The paternal great-grandparents were James and Rebecca (Willis) Wing, natives of Hardwick, Mass., the former born Nov. 18, 1733, and the latter in 1735. The subject of this sketch received his educational training in St. Lawrence County, N. Y., and on Sept. 20, 1857, was married to Margaret Wyne, born at Massena, N. Y., and educated in the schools of St. Lawrence County, same State. Mr. and Mrs. Wing have had a family of nine children, of whom three are now living. Their names in order of birth are as follows: Viletta E, died April 29, 1865; Hortense M. and Clinton D, Jr., still living; Adelia J., died Sept. 30, 1865; Nettie, died Jan. 1, 1866; Hattie A., living; Minnie L., died August 18, 1884; Fred M., died August 27, 1884; Charles A., died August 26, 1884. Mr. Wing has occupied several official positions, including that of President of the Board of Town Trustees, Mayor of St. Charles and member of the School Board. In politics he is a Democrat, and in religious faith a Congregationalist.

EDWIN W. WING, lawyer, Elgin, Ill., was born in the city where he now resides, July 18, 1859, son of the Hon. Washington and Adeline (Willetts) Wing; was a student in the public schools and Elgin Academy, and graduated from the Northwestern University Law School (Chicago) in 1900; was admitted to the bar the year of his graduation. He has since practiced his profession in Elgin, though more or less closely identified with the farming interests of Kane County, owning land and formerly having been actively engaged in farming. He was married in 1886 to Miss Esther Pierce, daughter of James T. and Sarah Pierce, of the town of Wayne, DuPage County, Ill.

WILLIAM H. WING (deceased), lawyer, Elgin, Ill., was born in Washtenaw County, Mich., Jan. 3, 1836, the son of Washington and Catharine (Himes) Wing, and died at Elgin in 1902. His parents were natives of New York, and became pioneer settlers in Michigan. His father represented Livingston County in the New York Legislature in 1845-46. The elder Wing came to Kane County, Ill., in 1846, and was a farmer near Elgin until his death, in 1888. The son was educated in the schools of Michigan, in Elgin, and at Lombard University, Galesburg, Ill. He read law with Judge Sylvanus Wilcox, of Elgin, and attended the law department of the University of Michigan, from which he graduated and was admitted to the bar in 1868. He began his practice at Elgin, where he continued with marked success until his death. He was prominently identified with the banking interests of Elgin as attorney for the First National Bank, and one of its directors. He was a stockholder in the Elgin National Bank. He had extensive farm holdings, and was the Treasurer of the Northern Illinois Hospital for the Insane for five years. He served also as Attorney for the city of Elgin, and in his will he left the city that beautiful tract of land now known as Wing Park. During his life his hand was ever open to the Sherman Hospital, the Abbie C. Wing School, the Young Men's Christian Association and the Universalist church. His wife, Abbie C. Wing, educator, was born in New Hampshire, daughter of Henry and Martha Saunders, and was educated in the schools of her native State. She came to Kane County as a teacher in 1854, and was married to Mr. Wing in 1861,, but continued teaching in Elgin for some time and gained much distinction as Principal of the Elgin High School. In later years she was interested in various educational movements, and is remembered as one of the most accomplished instructors connected with school work in Kane County. The Abbie C. Wing School, of Elgin, was named in her honor. She lost her life in a fire which consumed her house on Highland Avenue, in Elgin, March 20, 1897.

LAWSON A. WINSLOW (deceased), physician, was born in Coleraine, Mass., December 3, 1821, son of Dr. George Winslow, grew to manhood in his native State, and received his academic education in the schools of Charlemont and Pittsfield, Mass. In 1846 he came west and first lived in Big Rock Township, Kane County, Ill., where his father also lived and practiced medicine in the later years of his life. He was graduated from the Iowa Medical College at Keokuk, Iowa, and began the active practice of his profession in Sugar Grove, Ill. From there he came to Aurora in 1857 and practiced continuously in that city until failing health compelled him to retire from professional work. This was about 1888, and at that time his professional career in Aurora had covered a period of more than thirty years, and for more than forty years he had been a leading member of his profession in Kane County. Although he had a conscientious and chivalrous regard for all the duties of the medical practitioner and allowed nothing to interfere with its requirements, he was also prominent for many years in Aurora as a man of affairs. He was one of the founders of the Second National Bank of Aurora and of the Aurora Silver Plate Manufacturing Company, in both of which corporations he was a director. An ardent member of the Republican party from the date of its foundation until his death, he took an active part in many political campaigns, but never as a candidate for office. It is of interest to note, in this connection, that the first Republican convention held in the State of Illinois met in Geneva, Kane County, and of this convention Dr. Winslow was Secretary and his father-in-law, Jethro Hatch, was President. He married in 1851 Mercella Prudence Hatch, daughter of Jethro Hatch, a pioneer settler in Sugar Grove Township, Kane County. Dr. Winslow died March 27, 1891 in Albuquerque, New Mexico, to which place he had gone in the hope of benefitting his health. Mrs. Winslow died January 24, 1902, in Pasadena, California.—CHARLES E. WINSLOW, physician, eldest son of the preceding, was born in Sugar Grove, Ill., Aug. 19, 1855; was educated at Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, studied medicine under the preceptorship of his father and graduated from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in the class of 1881. For some time thereafter he was Assistant Physician and Surgeon at the Marine Hospital, Chicago, and later practiced several years in Aurora. Since 1900 he has been resident physician at Bartlett Springs, Cal., a noted health resort. He married in 1883, Miss Louise N. Tracy of Mansfield, Ohio. —FAYETTE D. WINSLOW, lawyer, second living son of Dr. Lawson A. Winslow, was born in Sugar Grove, Ill., Aug. 26, 1857. He grew up in Aurora and, after graduating from the Aurora High School, finished his academic studies at Beloit College, Beloit, Wis., graduating from that institution in the class of 1879. In 1883 he was graduated from the law department of Columbia University, New York, and was admitted to the bar in the Supreme Court of Illinois in 1885. He has since practiced his profession and given attention to various business interests in Aurora, and is the only representative of this pioneer family now residing in the city. He married in 1891 Miss Jennie Waldo Tracy, of Mansfield, Ohio.—MARTHA M. WINSLOW, daughter of Dr. Lawson A. Winslow, was born in Aurora, obtained her early education in the schools of that city and was graduated from Oberlin College in the class of 1879. She began teaching school under the auspices of the New West Education Commission, in Utah and New Mexico, and has since devoted herself to that profession. After teaching some years she took a special course in Botany at Chicago University, Chicago, and still later pursued a course of study at Leland Stanford University, Palo Alto, Cal., which institution conferred upon her the degree of Master of Arts in 1898. She is now teacher of Botany and Zoology in the high school at Pasadena, Cal.

MARTIN A. WITHEY, farmer and threshing-machine operator, was born June 14, 1853, in Alleghany County, N. Y., and began his education in the public schools of his native State, continuing it in the schools of Kane County, whither his parents removed when he was eleven years old. He began life for himself as a farmer, which he has continued to the present time. For seven years he lived in Iowa, and on returning to Kane County he bought a farm one-half mile northwest of Kaneville. He is a member of the Mystic Workers of Kaneville. He was married Feb. 14, 1878, to Miss Emma L. Powley, a native of Kane County, and they are the parents of three sons and one daughters.

WILLARD WISWELL.

WILLARD WISWELL (deceased), farmer, St. Charles, Ill., was born in Mallet Bay, Vt., a son of Darius Wiswell, of the same State. Mr. Wiswell came to Blackberry, Ill., in 1848, bringing with him his family, there bought a farm and was engaged in its cultivation twenty years. In 1868 he removed to St. Charles, where he lived retired from active business still owning a large farm, which he rented to a trusty tenant, at Mellen's Lake, near Bald Mound. Mr. Wiswell was twice married, first to Miss Rebecca Chiever, of Syracuse, N. Y., July 26, 1829, who died Feb. 13, 1874; and as his second wife to Mrs. William Barnes, formerly Mrs. Andrew Krimmer, whose husband was an early settler of Kane County. Mr. Wiswell died at his home in St. Charles, Aug. 12, 1890.

NELSON WOLCOTT, pioneer, Batavia, Ill., born in Sandisfield, Berkshire County, Mass., Jan. 4, 1806, and was reared in his native town, receiving his education in the local schools and Lenox Academy. In 1826 he engaged in a store in Livingston County, N. Y., with an elder brother, and went from there to Java, Wyoming County, whence he removed to Attica in 1847. When Wyoming County was organized in 1841, he was elected the first Clerk of the County, and while a resident of Java, filled various municipal offices. In 1855 he removed from Attica, N. Y., to Batavia, Ill., and engaged in mercantile pursuits, which he followed until 1863. Since that time he has lived retired, and is now a resident of Batavia, at the advanced age of ninety-eight years. In 1836 he married Miss Alvina Wright, of Middlebury, N. Y., who died in Batavia in 1893. Eight children born to Mr. and Mrs. Wolcott, were all living in 1903, the youngest being then fifty-two years of age.

HENRY K. WOLCOTT.

HENRY K. WOLCOTT, manufacturer, Batavia, Ill., born in Java, Wyoming County, N. Y., April 14, 1840, removed to Attica in 1848, where he was educated in the public schools. In 1856 he located with his father in Batavia, Ill., where they engaged in mercantile business, but in 1861 this connection was broken by his enlistment in the Union Army, as First Sergeant of Company I, Forty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He made a good record as a soldier, and was mustered out in 1866 with the rank of Major. In 1866 and '67, Major Wolcott was engaged in the drug and grocery business, and the following year became a member of the Newton Wagon Company. When the company was incorporated in 1873, he became its Secretary and Treasurer, and twenty years later was elected President and Treasurer, in which position (1903) he is still serving. In politics he is a Republican and fraternally is a member of the Loyal Legion.

SEYMOUR A. WOLCOTT, Secretary and Treasurer Bellevue Place Sanitarium, Batavia, Ill., born in Java, N. Y., March 8, 1847, son of Nelson and Alvina (Wright) Wolcott, was educated in the public schools and at Batavia Institute, Batavia, Ill., and was trained to the druggist's trade in which he was engaged in Batavia for fifteen years. He then became connected with the management of the Bellevue Place Sanitarium, which has continued to the present time (1903) covering a period of twenty years. Mr. Wolcott was married in 1871 to Miss Olivia Patterson, daughter of Dr. Richard J. Patterson, Batavia, but who died in 1892. In 1894 he was married to his present wife, Miss Mary L. Emerson, who was born and reared in the State of Maine.

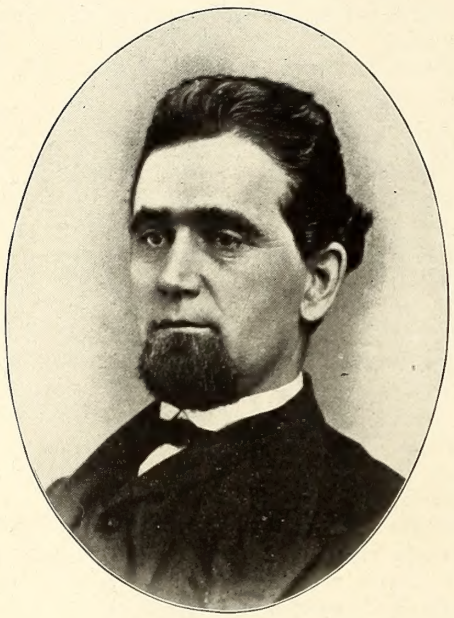
CLARK WOOD (deceased), Batavia, Ill., born in Kane County, June 11, 1844, son of Samuel and Eveline (Pierce) Wood. His parents came from Jefferson County, N. Y., and settled on what was known as the "Bald Mound" farm, and were among the first settlers of Kane County. In 1864 he enlisted in the Union Army, and served until the close of the war in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; appointed superintendent of the County Alms House in 1870, filling that office until the time of his death which occurred Feb. 2, 1888. He was married in 1859 to Miss Celia S. Young, of Batavia.

D. E. WOOD, manufacturer of butter and cheese, Elgin, Ill., born at West Winfield, Herkimer County, N. Y., Dec. 16, 1846; came to Illinois in 1866, locating first at Richmond, where he established a butter and cheese factory; came to Elgin in 1874 and has since been identified with the butter and cheese industry in that locality. He is President of the D. E. Wood Butter Company, President of the Elgin National Bank, and Vice-President and Treasurer of the Creamery Package Manufacturing Company, of Chicago.; was one of the organizers of the Elgin Board of Trade in March, 1872.

THEODORE WOOD, coal merchant, Batavia, Ill., born in Jefferson County, N. Y., May 17, 1840, son of Samuel and Mary (Pierce) Wood; came with his parents to Illinois in 1842, locating in Blackberry Township, Kane County, where he obtained his education in the pioneer schools and worked on the farm; in 1862 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until 1866; located in Batavia after the war, where he has since resided and has been continuously engaged in the coal and grain trade; served as Mayor of Batavia, besides holding other municipal offices; married in 1866 Miss Lizzie B. Dolson, of Detroit, Mich.

L. E. WOODWARD, banker, Aurora, Ill., born in Plano, Kendall County, Ill., Jan. 31, 1873, son of O. K. Woodward, of Washington, began his business career when eighteen years old as a clerk in a store in Big Rock. After remaining there two years, he came to Aurora in 1893 to accept a position as bookkeeper in the old Second National Bank, which he retained for nine years. When the Aurora Trust and Savings Bank was organized, he was chosen Cashier, and is now officiating in that capacity.

JAMES WRIGHT, farmer, East Plato, Kane County, Ill., was born in East Plato, Kane County, Ill., March 6, 1859, son of William and Sylvia (Seward) Wright, reared on the farm and educated in the public schools. He began life with little capital, but by industry and economy was able to buy the family homestead, and thus became owner of one of the very finest farm properties in Kane County. Here he was engaged in dairy farming and horse breeding until his death, which occurred Jan. 23, 1900. He was a member of the M. W. A., and was very active in its behalf. In 1885 he was married in Miss Harriet Tucker, daughter of Charles and Clara (Andrews) Tucker, residents of Plato Township. The living children of this couple are: Merrill Elmer, Ida May, Lester Leroy, Orris L. and Dora Effie Irene.



WILLIAM WRIGHT (deceased), pioneer, East Plato, Kane County, born in London, England, in 1813, came to the United States in 1836, and shortly afterward settled in Plato Township, Kane County, where he purchased Government land and engaged in farming, continuing this occupation until his death in 1872. A worthy gentleman and an estimable pioneer in all respects, he was highly regarded by all who had to do with him in the early days. His wife, Miss Sylvia Seward, was born in Binghamton, N. Y., a daughter of Levi and Harriet (Spencer) Seward, pioneer settlers in Kane County, where they reared a family of ten children, six of whom were living in 1903.

GEORGE R. YARWOOD, Assessor, Elgin, Ill., was born in Elgin Oct. 26, 1859, son of James R. and Sarah (Walter) Yarwood, and grandson of R. L. Yarwood, who came to Elgin in 1844. R. L. Yarwood came from Oriskany, N. Y., as the representative of the woolen manufacturing and merchandising interests of the Dexters, Eastern capitalists who operated largely in the West at an early day. Later the Yarwoods were prominent among the merchants of Elgin for many years. The elder Yarwood died in Elgin in 1864, and the son, James R., in Merced, Cal., in 1878. The maternal grandfather of George R. Yarwood came to Elgin in 1844, so that in both lines his ancestors were pioneers in that locality. George R. Yarwood was reared in Elgin, where he has spent the whole of his life; was educated in the public schools and Elgin Academy; and was for three years, while a young man, junior partner in the firm of Sherman & Yarwood, photographers, George H. Sherman being the senior member. After this he was engaged in the live-stock trade from 1880 to 1883, and from 1883 until 1892 was senior partner of the firm of Yarwood Brothers, who were engaged in dairy-farming and breeding horses near Elgin. In 1892 he was elected Tax Collector for Elgin, and the same year was appointed Deputy Assessor, holding the first-named office one year, and the latter for four years. In 1896 he was elected Assessor for Elgin, and is now filling his ninth consecutive term in that position. For several months prior to making the assessment for 1898, he was Deputy County Clerk, acting as Clerk of the Probate and County Courts of Kane County. Farming and other business matters have occupied his attention when not engaged in the discharge of official duties. Mr. Yarwood was married in 1891 to Miss Hattie Stewart, daughter of George A. Stewart, a merchant of Belvidere, Ill., but later connected with the famous Stewart contracting firm of St. Louis. Mr. Stewart was a brother of the head of this firm, and came of the family well known throughout England, Canada and the United States, as builders of great public works in these countries. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Yarwood is Stuart K. Yarwood, born Feb. 20, 1893.

LOUIS H. YARWOOD, artist, Elgin, Ill., born at Oriskany, Oneida County, N. Y., Nov. 15, 1827, son of Henry and Katie (Wiggins) Yarwood; educated in the public schools of his native village, and at Whitestown Academy (Whitestown, N. Y.); came west in 1851 and lived in Chicago two years; removed to Elgin in 1853, where he became bookkeeper for the Elgin Woolen Manufacturing Company; later was engaged in the drug business as successor to Allen C. Lewis, founder of Lewis Institute, Chicago. Retiring from the drug trade some years later, he found himself free to give his attention to art, for which he had always had a fondness and for which he had shown talent in early boyhood. He has since devoted himself to this profession, and has painted many pictures of superior merit; was the first librarian of the Elgin Public Library and filled that position for several years; was one of the early members of the Board of Trustees of Elgin Academy. He married Caroline J. Drummond, born in Sherbrook, Canada, and their children are: Marc D., a leading musician of Elgin; and Mrs. Katie (Yarwood) Parsons, of Cleveland, Ohio, who is prominent both in Elgin and Cleveland as a soprano singer.

DELOS W. YOUNG (deceased), physician and surgeon, Aurora, Ill., was born at Jamestown, N. Y., Jan. 30, 1829, son of Richard and Eleanor (Pryne) Young, and when about twelve years of age, came with his parents to Illinois, the family settling in the vicinity of Bristol, Kendall County. Here the son grew up on a farm, receiving his education in the common schools of that locality. He early appears to have developed a natural capacity for surgery when, having dislocated his own wrist, he set it himself, treating it with such skill as to attract the attention of Dr. Nicholas Hard, a prominent physician then practicing at Aurora. Through the influence of Dr. Hard he was induced to undertake the study of medicine, leaving home with a small stock of clothing against the protest of his parents. Aided by Dr. Hard, who furnished him employment enabling him to pay his board, he finally graduated at the Medical College at Keokuk, Iowa, establishing himself in his profession at Little Rock, Kendall County, where he remained a short time. Then removing to Aurora, he succeeded there to the practice of his preceptor who had recently died, and this continued to be his home during the rest of his life, except while serving in the Thirty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, during the Civil War, in which he was commissioned as Surgeon in the fall of 1861. The severe strain to which he was subjected during the first few months of the war made such inroads upon his health that, after the battle of Pea Ridge in March, 1862, he was compelled to tender his resignation and return to Aurora, where he resumed his home practice. In this position he became widely known throughout Northern Illinois, both by his success as a practical physician and his contributions to medical journals. He was regarded as a leading surgeon and fine type of the family physician, and his death, which occurred Sept. 8, 1874, brought to a large proportion of the people of Aurora a deep sense of personal bereavement. Dr. Young was married June 20, 1852, at Aurora, Ill., to Miss Ellen Barr, who was born at North East, Penn., Sept. 18, 1834, the daughter of Dr. Alonzo S. and Julia A. (Griffin) Barr. Dr. Barr was a physician at Plainfield, Ill., where he practiced many years, and where he finally died. A remarkable co-incidence in the history of Dr. Young is traced to the fact that, while the marriage of himself and wife in 1852 was the first to be celebrated in the old First Methodist church at Aurora, his funeral was the first to take place in the new church edifice of the same organization, a little more than twenty-two years later. Dr. Young and wife had one daughter, now Mrs. Ricker, wife of Dr. A. J. Ricker, of Aurora. Mrs. Young also survives in the city which has been her residence for more than fifty years. Dr. Young's prominence in public affairs is indicated by the fact that he served three terms as Mayor of the City of Aurora, for several years was a member of the Board of Aldermen of that city, and also served at different times on the Board of Supervisors of Kane County. He was President at the date of his death of the Aurora School Board, and the "Young School" of that city was named in his honor. He was also prominently identified with va-various medical organizations, including the Illinois Medical Society, in which he held the office of President, and the American Medical Association.

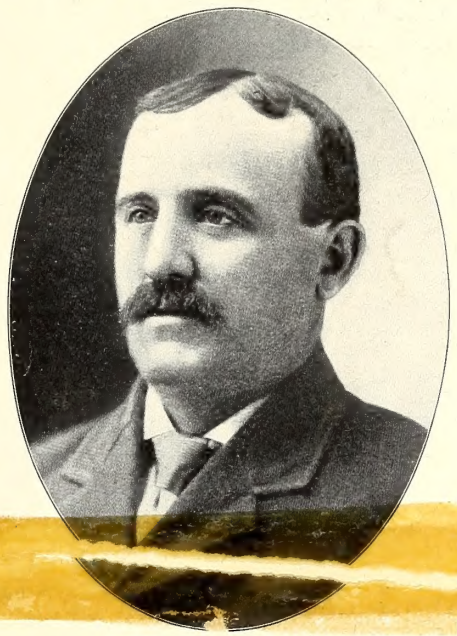
HENRY M. YOUNG, mechanical engineer, St. Charles, Ill., born in Lowell, Mass., June 27, 1848; came to Elgin, Ill., March 11, 1867; was employed in engineering work in Ohio and Minneapolis, Minn.; entered the United States Engineering Corps in 1878, with which he remained two years; came to St. Charles in 1893, and in 1900 became manager of the Garden City Sand Company; married May 22, 1872 Rose E. White of St. Charles, and they have one son, Richard N.

FRANCIS L. YOUNG, Manager of Kaneville and County Line Creamery, Kaneville, Kane County, was born in Strafford, Orange County, Vt., Dec. 1, 1828, came with his parents to Kane County, Ill., in 1843, and lived with his parents in the Township of Blackberry seven years.



He then bought land from the Government, which he still retains. Until his retirement from active business life in 1871 he continued farming as his chief work. In 1879 Mr. Young was elected on the Republican ticket as County Treasurer, filling that position seven years. He also held the office of Supervisor of the town for two years, and for several years has been Highway Commissioner and Justice of the Peace. In February, 1891, he became manager of the Kaneville and County Line Creameries, a duty which occupied about all of his time, [illegible] and in which he is still engaged. Mr. Young was married in March, 1857, to Miss Bettie Patterson, who died in November, 1871. His second marriage occurred in May, 1873, with Mrs. Ann E. (Patterson) Annis. Of his first marriage were born a son and a daughter, there being no children by the second marriage.

SMITH YOUNGES, stock-dealer, Elgin Township, Kane County, was born in Schoharie County, N. Y., Oct. 17, 1852, and came with his parents to Elgin Township when eight years old. His education was acquired in the public schools, and he was reared to manhood on the old homestead farm at East Plato. When about twenty years old he worked for his brother-in-law, W. W. McDonald, for about a year and a half, then rented half of the old homestead for four years, after which he rented what was known as the Edson Kimball place for three years. By this time he had become forehanded enough to purchase land for himself, his first purchase being the Kimball place, which he was already operating. In 1874 he purchased seventeen acres of Mrs. Freeland, and thirty acres of Mr. Loomis, also purchased 154 acres of Martin Switzer, and other real-estate investments brought his entire farm property in 1903 up to 470 acres. He deals in horses and mules as well as cattle, and has been Postmaster of Youngesdale since the establishment of the office in 1889; has also served as School Director and is a prominent Mason. Mr. Younges was married in St.

SMITH YOUNGES.

Charles, Ill., Dec. 24, 1874, to Miss Carrie Ferson, and they have four children: Clyde, Nellie, Maude and Lizzie. It is said of him that he ships more milk cows to Chicago and Mexico than does any other dealer in this part of the State. In 1897, in company with his brother-in-law, Mr. McDonald, he opened a general store in East Plato, and for three years the two were together, when Mr. McDonald died. After his death Mr. Younges carried on the store for a time alone, when it was burned and never rebuilt.

NATHAN S. YOUNG, retired, Batavia, Ill., born in Strafford, Orange County, Vt., Aug. 20, 1818, son of Nathan and Hannah (Smith) Young, was reared to manhood in his native town, where he was trained to mercantile pursuits. In 1843 he was sent to Chicago to get three children and bring them back to their guardian in Vermont. This mission he accomplished in August, and in September he again came west with his father's family and settled in Blackberry Township, Kane County, on land which his brother, P. S. Young, had purchased from the Government. He continued farming in Blackberry Township until 1852, when he sold out and made some investments in Iowa, and the following year bought a farm near Batavia. On this he lived until 1857, when he removed to Batavia, engaging in the grain and lumber trade, and helping found the First National Bank of that city. He was a director and stockholder of this institution during its existence, and thereafter was cashier of the banking house of Gammon & Newton until 189[illegible] Since that time he has given his attention the care of his real-estate interests.
